This service will evaluate your idea for a cost of $295. They also provide counseling services and can assist you with your patent search. They are part of the local Small Business Development Center.

2. Wisconsin Innovation Service Center

402 McCutchan Hall

University of Wisconsin - Whitewater

Whitewater, WI 53190 414-472-1365

The only service that is guaranteed is the evaluation. However, efforts are made to match inventors with exceptional high evaluation scores with manufacturers seeking new product ideas. (Do not offer direct invention development or marketing services). WISC charges a $165 flat fee for an evaluation. The goal is to keep research as affordable as possible to the average independent inventor. Most evaluations are completed within 60 - 90 days. Those inventions from specialized fields may require more time. WISC also provides preliminary patent searches via online databases to clients.

3. Inventure Program

Inventure Program

Drake Business Center

2507 University

Des Moines, IA 50311-4505

515-271-2655

INVENTURE is a program of the Drake University Business Development and Research Institute designed to encourage the development of valid ideas through the various steps to becoming marketable items. INVENTURE has no paid staff. The entire panel is made up of volunteers. The administration of the program is handled by existing staff from the Small Business Development Center and the College of Business and Public Administration. They will review items from any person regardless of their place of residence. They will review a product idea and check it for market feasibility. INVENTURE may link individuals with business and/or financial partners, whenever possible.

I Wanna Be an Inventor

INVENTURE screens every product submitted, but will not consider toy/game or food items. Products are evaluated on 33 different criteria, (factors related to legality, safety, business risk, and demand analysis, to market acceptance/ competition). It normally takes up to 6 weeks to receive results of the evaluation. Evaluators are experienced in manufacturing, marketing, accounting, production, finance, and investments.

INVENTURE acts in a responsible manner to maintain confidence of an idea, but cannot guarantee confidentiality.

For assistance with business plans, financial projections, and marketing help, you're encouraged to contact your Small Business Development Center (SBDC).

To submit an idea to INVENTURE, follow the following directions:

1. Fill out a disclosure document.
 2. Return to the INVENTURE office with a check for $100 made payable to Drake University (INVENTURE).
 3. If an idea does not pass the initial screening, your check will be returned.
4. The Wal-Mart Innovation Network (WIN)
Center for Business Research and Development
College of Business Administration
Southwest Missouri State University
901 S. National Avenue
Springfield, MO 65804 417-836-5667/5680
- The WIN program is essentially an innovation evaluation service designed to provide inventors with an honest and objective third party analysis of the risks and potential of their ideas and inventions. If the invention or new product idea passes the tough screening process, the Center will automatically send your idea to Wal-Mart for an Assessment of Marketability. Their expertise provides qualified inventors with a second analysis of the marketability of their invention/new product idea. A WIN endorsement will increase the chances that others will be willing to listen. If the invention/ product idea receives a "Fully recommended" market assessment, WIN will not take the development or commercialization of your invention or idea. But, if the invention has a reasonable chance of success, WIN will supply information about the Innovation Network (IN) resources in a particular state, (Do not assume their services are free). The only advance payment charged by WIN is the $150 evaluation fee. A "fully recommended" WIN Assessment of Marketability does not obligate Wal-Mart in any way. The WIN program is limited to consumer related ideas and inventions. The only promise is an honest and objective preliminary evaluation of a product or invention.

Washington, DC 20585 Fax: 202-586-1605
- Innovative Concepts Program: InnCon operates in cycles of roughly 1-2 years. For each cycle, the InnCon Program chooses an energy related topic and invites innovators to submit proposals for funding of projects that relate to that topic. As many as 15 innovators are awarded seed money to explore the feasibility of their concepts. The program also seeks funding from other federal organizations in order to increase the potential to yield commercial products.

The Innovative Concepts Program funds novel ideas for energy efficiency that are significantly different from existing technologies. Anyone who has an innovative concept that addresses the current InnCon topic is invited to apply. The InnCon Program has a mailing list of potential contributors, who are notified of opportunities to apply for. To add your name, contact: Raymond L. Watts, K6-54, Pacific Northwest Laboratory, Box 999, Richland, WA 99352; 202-586-1605, Fax: 509-376-8054

Energy-Related Inventions Program (ERIP):

The National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) works with the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) to conduct ERIP. Anyone can submit an invention at any stage of development for a free evaluation from NIST. An average grant/contract award has been about $83,000, with the maximum award being just under $100,000. Any invention that could save/produce energy from nonnuclear sources can qualify. An invention is classified energy related if it results in reducing consumption, increasing industry productivity, or helping in energy production. To submit an energy related invention, write to: Office of Technology Evaluation and Assessment, National Institute of Standards and Technology, Gaithersburg, MD 20899. Ask for Evaluation Request (form 1019). Complete the form with a detailed written description with illustrations/drawings, if possible. One should point out how the invention will benefit the nation in terms of energy use. There is no fee/obligation, financial or otherwise, on submitting an invention. The types of support an inventor will get from ERIP is a NIST evaluation attesting that the concept is technically sound; an opportunity to attend the Commercialization Planning Workshops; an assessment of the market potential for the technology; consideration of his/her proposal for grant funding. (ERIP grants are one time only awards).

6. U.S. Environmental Protection Agency
Center for Environmental Research Information

Directory Description: Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Research and Development, 401 M Street, SW, Washington, DC 20460; 202-260-7676, Fax: 202-260-9761

The Office of Research and Development conducts an Agency wide integrated program of research and development relevant to pollution sources and control, transport and fate processes, health/ecological effects, measurement/monitoring, and risk assessment. The office provides technical reviews, expert consultations, technical assistance, and advice to environmental decision makers in federal, state, local, and foreign governments.

Center for Environmental Research Information

26 W. ML King Drive, Cincinnati, OH 45268, Calvin O. Lawrence, Director; 513-569-7391, Fax: 513-569-7566

A focal point for the exchange of scientific/ technical information both within the federal government and to the public.

The Technology Transfer Branch

Works with laboratories, program offices, regions, academia, and the private sector to produce technology transfer products (i.e. reports, summaries, journal articles, design manuals, handbooks, seminars, workshops, and training courses) that aid states, local governments and the regulated community in complying with Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) regulations. Topics include groundwater remediation, pollution prevention, solid, hazardous wastes, sludge, small community water treatment, municipal wastewater treatment, air pollution.

The Research Communication Branch

Is responsible for working with laboratories, program offices, regions to produce information products that summarize research, technical, regulatory enforcement information that will assist nontechnical audiences in understanding environmental issues.

The Document Management Branch

Is responsible for the production and distribution of scientific and technical reports, responding to requests for publications, and quality control of information products through the application of standardized procedures for the production of documents.

Office of Exploratory Research

Robert Menzer, Acting Director, 401 M Street, SW, Washington, DC 20460; 202-260-5750, Fax: 202-260-0450

The Office of Exploratory Research (OER) plans, administers, manages, and evaluates the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) extramural grant research. It supports research in developing a better understanding of the environment and its problems. Main goals are: to support the academic community in environmental research; maintain scientific/technical personnel in environmental science/ technology; to support research for the identification/solution of emerging environmental problems.

Goals are accomplished through four core programs:

1. The Research Grants Program:

Supports research initiated by individual investigators in areas of interest to the agency.

2. The Environmental Research Centers Program:

Has two components: The Academic Research Center Program (ARC) and the Hazardous Substance Research Centers Program (HSRC).

3. The Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) Program:

Program supports small businesses for the development of ideas relevant to EPA's mission. Focuses on projects in pollution control development. Also receives 1.5% of the Agency's resources devoted to extramural Superfund research.

4. The Visiting Scientists Program:

Components are an Environmental Science and Engineering Fellows Program and a Resident Research Associateship Program. The Fellows Program supports ten mid-career post-doctoral scientists and engineers at EPA headquarters and regional offices. The Research Associateship Program attracts national and international scientists and engineers at EPA research laboratories for up to 3 years to collaborate with Agency researchers on important environmental issues.

Other programs available are:

A Minority Fellowship Program

A Minority Summer Intern Program

Maine Inventors Network (MIN): A collaboration between the University of Maine and the University of Southern Maine. The network provides comprehensive services to guide new products from invention to marketplace, from concept to commercialization. The goal is to encourage and stimulate new business startups and add-on products for existing Maine manufacturers. MIN provides invention screening/evaluations. This process encourages the inventor to focus resources on sound ideas and avoid the costs of developing less feasible inventions. MIN will assist in identifying the technical needs of the inventor. They educate inventors about the various types of protection available such as patents, copyrights, and trademarks, and will then refer the inventor to proper legal counsel for a full assessment of their needs. MIN can guide the inventor or entrepreneur to the proper resources at the University of Southern Maine's Small Business Development Center and Small Business Development Center (SBDC) sub-centers for help in identifying the marketing needs of their invention. Advice on current or planned business ventures is also available. MIN and SBDC can refer the inventor to a variety of financing sources. MIN maintains up-to-date information on the needs and abilities of companies and manufacturers located in Maine. MIN is a public service offered to the residents of Maine.

Inventrepreneurs Forum of Maine, Inc.: (Co-sponsored by the University of Maine, Department of Industrial Cooperation and the Maine Small Business Development Center. For more information contact: Don Forester at 797-3985 or Jake Ward at 581-1488).

On March 15, 1984, the Inventrepreneurs Forum of Maine, Inc (IFM), was formed and became a nonprofit incorporation in the state of Maine. It was organized to stimulate inventiveness and entrepreneurship, and to help innovators and entrepreneurs develop and promote their ideas. It allows inventors and entrepreneurs to join together, share ideas, and improve their chance for success. It gives encouragement, professional expertise, evaluation assistance, confidentiality, and moral support from the University of Maine's Network, and the University of Southern Maine's Small Business Development Center. The Inventrepreneurs Forum of Maine, Inc. can help inventors find the answers to important questions and solutions to almost any problem. The Inventrepreneurs Forum of Maine, Inc. meets on the first Tuesday of each month from 6:30-9:00 PM at the University of Southern Maine, Campus Center, Rooms A, B and C on Bedford Street in Portland.

Minnesota Inventors Congress (MIC)
1030 East Bridge St.

State Sources for Inventors

P.O. Box 71

Redwood Falls, MN 56283

507-637-2344

The Minnesota Inventors Congress (MIC) is a nonprofit organization established in 1958 to promote creativity, innovation, and entrepreneurship by assisting the inventor and entrepreneur with education, promotion, and referral. It is a professional organization composed of private individuals and corporations interested in creating and developing useful technologies. MIC is for inventors at every development stage — the novice and experienced; male or female; young and old; and supporters of invention and innovation. Workshops are also available: for individuals with ideas or inventions not yet successfully on the market; for companies and entrepreneurs looking for such inventions or new products.

"World's Oldest Annual Invention Convention", promotes the spirit of invention and innovation. Each year a three day convention presents more than 200 inventions and attracts some 10,000 visitors from around the world. The MIC provides a meeting place for:

- 1) Inventors to showcase their new products, connect with manufacturers/investors, product test market experts, educational seminars, publicity, inventors network, and $1,500 in cash awards.
- 2) Manufacturers, marketers, investors, and licensees seeking new products.
- 3) Inventors, viewers and exhibitors, seeking free counsel and literature on the invention development process.
- 4) Public to view the latest inventions, by adults and students, purchase MarketPlace products and meet global inventors.

Inventors Assistance Program
Oklahoma Department of Commerce
P.O. Box 26980
6601 Broadway Extension
Oklahoma City, OK 73126-0980 405-841-5143

The program objective is to increase the number of new products manufactured in Oklahoma by assisting inventors, innovators, and entrepreneurs through the commercialization process. The program can best be described as having two components: a referral/consulting service and a new product commercialization service. The referral and consulting service is offered at no charge. The new product commercialization service is currently free of charge, but this policy may change at any time. There are many facets to the commercialization process. The goal of the staff is to determine technical feasibility, patentability, and commercial feasibility. The analysis takes into consideration the type of new product, its present stage of development, and the skills and experience of the innovator. The staff will assist the innovator in deciding whether to manufacture or license the product. Business and marketing plan assistance is available. Licensee location and help with the negotiation process is also available, and if the product is licensed, the staff works with the licensee to develop a thorough marketing strategy.

Government Buys Bright Ideas From Inventors: Small Business Innovative Research Programs (SBIR)

The Small Business Innovative Research Program (SBIR) stimulates technological innovation, encourages small science and technology based firms to participate in government funded research, and provides incentives for converting research results into commercial applications. The program is designed to stimulate technological innovation in this country by providing qualified U.S. small business concerns with competitive opportunities to propose innovative concepts to meet the research and development needs of the Federal government. Eleven federal agencies with research and development budgets greater than $100 million are required by law to participate: The Departments of Defense, Health and Human Services, Energy, Agriculture, Commerce, Transportation, and Education; the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; the National Science Foundation; the Nuclear Regulatory Commission; and the Environmental Protection Agency.

Businesses of 500 or fewer employees that are organized for profit are eligible to compete for SBIR funding. Nonprofit organizations and foreign owned firms are not eligible to receive awards, and the research must be carried out in the U.S. All areas of research and development solicit for proposals, and the 1995 budget for SBIR is $900 million. There are three phases of the program: Phase I determines whether the research idea, often on high risk advanced concepts, is technically feasible; whether the firm can do high quality research; and whether sufficient progress has been made to justify a larger Phase II effort. This phase is usually funded for 6 months with awards up to $50,000. Phase II is the principal research effort, and is usually limited to a maximum of $500,000 for up to two years. The third phase, which is to pursue potential commercial applications of the research funded under the first two phases, is supported solely by nonfederal funding, usually from third party, venture capital, or large industrial firms. SBIR is one of the most competitive research and development programs in the government today. About one proposal out of ten received is funded in Phase I. Generally, about half of these receive support in Phase II. Solicitations for proposals are released once a year (in a few cases twice a year). To assist the small business community in its SBIR efforts, the U.S. Small Business Administration publishes the Pre-Solicitation Announcement (PSA) in December, March, June, and September of each year. Every issue of the PSA contains pertinent information on the SBIR Program along with details on SBIR solicitations that are about to be released. This publication eliminates the need for small business concerns to track the activities of all of the federal agencies participating in the SBIR Program. In recognition of the difficulties encountered by many small firms in their efforts to locate sources of funding essential to finalization of their innovative products, SBA has developed the Commercialization Matching System. This system contains information on all SBIR awardees, as well as financing sources that have indicated an interest in investing in SBIR innovations. Firms interested in obtaining more information on the SBIR Program or receiving the PSA, should contact the Office of Technology, Small Business Administration, 409 3rd St., SW, MC/6470, Washington, DC 20416, 202-205-6450.

I Wanna Start My Own Nonprofit

I Wanna Start My Own Nonprofit

You say you're committed to a particular social issue, and would like to set up a nonprofit to further your cause? But you're afraid that the paperwork involved makes it much too complicated and time consuming? Contrary to popular belief, you don't have to hire a lawyer and have thousands of dollars in the bank to consider starting your own nonprofit. With as little as $35 and 30 minutes of paperwork that you can complete sitting at your kitchen table, you can be well on your way to raising funds and raising the consciousness of the country.

Try The Easy, Cheap Way - First!

Dan Meeks of Columbus, Ohio had a dream of starting his own nonprofit that could be staffed by Vietnam veterans who would help local kids tackle various personal and community-related problems. He called a lawyer to investigate the costs associated with becoming a nonprofit. He was astounded to hear that it would cost $800, and that it would take several months to complete the lengthy process. Since theirs was a new and fledgling organization, Dan and the other interested participants didn't have that kind of money. Through a friend, Dan heard of a special IRS office that does nothing but assist people in starting nonprofits. They sent Dan the necessary forms and instructions which were easily completed in a few hours, after clarifying a few points over the telephone with the IRS office. A letter soon followed notifying Dan that his organization had qualified as a nonprofit, and the entire process cost him less than $20.00! Within a few months, Dan had raised $5,000 through a fundraiser and donated the money to several other nonprofit organizations, including the local Ronald McDonald House. Success stories like Dan's don't necessarily take lots of time and effort — just the right information.

Tamara Gates is another individual determined to make a difference. She wanted to start a chapter of V-COPS (Veteran-Civilian Observation Patrol) in Cleveland, to tackle the dual problem of a high crime rate coupled with a high number of homeless veterans residing on the city's streets. The V-COPS program offers shelter for homeless veterans in exchange for their services patrolling the streets at night, acting as the eyes and ears of the police. Ms. Gates contacted the special IRS office to find out how to apply for nonprofit status, and was sent the appropriate forms. It took her a little over a week to complete the forms, and several months later she received her confirmation as a nonprofit. Because of the budget for her organization, Ms. Gates was required to pay a fee of several hundred dollars, but it was still much less than the $50,000 that a consultant estimated that she would be required to pay. Thanks to her commitment to forge ahead and get the right information, Ms. Gates can point to the very tangible shelter services that her V-COPS program offers to Cleveland's homeless veterans, in exchange for the valuable services that they provide to the local community.

If you are thinking about establishing a nonprofit, check out this FREE source of valuable information before you decide that the obstacles are too great. Just like Dan and Tamara, you may find yourself pleasantly surprised and able to achieve your goal, without handing over a ton of your hard earned money to someone just to figure it out for you!

Your Local IRS Office

Listed in the government section of your telephone book

To help you determine if your organization may qualify for tax exempt status or to find out what you will need to do to qualify, request Publication 557, Tax-Exempt Status For Your Organization. This publication takes you step-by-step through the filing process, and contains instructions and checklists to help you provide all of the necessary information required to process your application correctly the first time around.

Most organizations seeking tax exempt status from the Federal government must use either: Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption Under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, or Form 1024, Application for Recognition of Exemption Under Section 501(a) or for Determination Under Section 120. The forms will ask you to provide:

- a description of the purposes and the activities of your organization,
- financial information, and if you have not yet begun operation, a proposed budget, along with a statement of assets and liabilities (if you have any),
- information on how you intend to finance your activities, through fundraisers, grants, etc.

Examples of who qualifies under each of the laws and samples of forms are provided in these publications. If the necessary forms have been properly completed and all goes well, a ruling or determination letter should be on its way to you in no time.

If the first person that you speak with in that office cannot answer your question completely, they can put you in touch with a specialist who will discuss your question in detail. The Exempt Organization Technical Division is not set up to handle every question that might arise in completing forms, but it can serve as a good backup when all else fails. This is the office that will actually process your application.

 Filing With The State Government

See page 467 for a state by state listing

You will also be required to file as a nonprofit organization with your state government. This is normally done at the same time that you file with the IRS. Although it is the IRS who gives you the authority to raise money as a tax-exempt organization, your state government will also want to know about the proposed activities of your organization. Relevant information that they will be interested in includes:

- the name and address of registrant,
- the purpose of the nonprofit,
- any articles of incorporation,
- and the names and addresses of any Board of Directors.

The charge for filing this information with the state is minimal, usually from $30.00 to $50.00. Contact the appropriate state listed on page 467 to obtain the necessary forms.

"When I wanted to start a nonprofit organization of veterans to help young people, an attorney suggested it would cost between $800 and $1,500. Using references provided in Matthew Lesko's book, I did it myself for free!"

If you are part of a nonprofit organization ministering to the homeless, the government is now taking applications for eligible groups to receive excess or unused federal buildings or land for homeless people. Homeless organizations pay operating and repair costs on the surplus properties that are leased rent-free and in "as is" condition. The program is administered by a combination of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), which screens applications, the General Services Administration (GSA), which makes the properties available, and the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), which reviews applications. In accordance with Title V of the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, HUD publishes a list of properties available in the Federal Register. Additional information regarding the properties (as well as the Title V process) can be obtained by calling 800-927-7588, a toll-free number established by HUD. After a property is published, homeless providers must submit expressions of interest by providing a written notice to the Division of Health Facilities Planning at HHS within 60 days of publication. You will then receive an application packet containing complete instructions on how to apply for the property. You can also request the following helpful publications:

- How To Acquire Federal Surplus Real Property for Public Health Purposes
- Obtaining Federal Property for the Homeless
- Questions and Answers About Federal Property Programs
- HHS/HUD/GSA joint regulation covering specific information on Title V process

 Government Property And Land If You Use It For Education Or Training

Federal Real Property Assistance Program
Office of the Administrator for Management Services
U.S. Department of Education
400 Maryland Ave., SW.
Room 1175
Washington, DC 20202 202-401-0500

No need to put a bond issue on the ballot. The Federal government is giving away surplus buildings and properties for educational use, including higher education, elementary and secondary education, libraries, educational television and radio, and more. The buildings are free, but recipients must cover all expenses for improvement, renovation, repair, maintenance, and operation of the program and facilities. Some of the properties range from improved or unimproved land in rural and urban settings (such as former Nike missile sites), to complete military bases (such as former Air Force stations). For information on properties available, contact the Federal Real Property Assistance Program.

 Money For Nonprofit Radio and TV Stations

National Telecommunications and Information Administration
Room 4889
U.S. Department of Commerce
14th and Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20230 202-482-5802

If you always wanted to operate or appear on public or noncommercial television or radio, the Federal government can help you get started or improve your existing facilities. There are grants for planning and construction of facilities, and matching grants for equipment necessary for production. For information on application procedures, contact the office listed above.

 Donations Or Loan Of Military Equipment For

Museums And Towns

OASD (PA) DCR

The Pentagon

Room 1E776

Washington, DC 20301-1400

Veterans' groups and museums should take note: the Federal government donates or lends obsolete combat materials to veterans' organizations, libraries, museums, and municipalities. Items include books, manuscripts, works of art, drawings, plans, models, and other specified items to be used only for historical, ceremonial or display purposes. It's no joke — you can even get a Navy vessel! Contact your nearest military installation for general information on this program, or write to the office listed above.

Is the equipment in your college's laboratories broken, outdated, or just worn out? The U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) will send your school energy-related lab equipment that they no longer need for no charge, other than shipping and handling. The following free publications explain the program and outline the equipment available: Energy-Related Laboratory Equipment Catalog, and Instruction and Information On Used Energy-Related Equipment Grants for Educational Institutions of Higher Learning. This information is also accessible on the Federal Information Exchange (FEDIX) online database of government information, and is entitled Eligible Equipment Grant Access Data System (EEGADS).

Help those in your community become homeowners through the HOPE 3 Program. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) administers the HOPE 3 Program which provides federal grant funds to eligible organizations that, in turn, select eligible families to purchase single-family properties at affordable prices. All single-family properties used in the program were previously owned by federal, state, or local governments. The funds can be used for financial assistance in mortgage financing, reductions in the sale price of homes, counseling in personal financial management, home maintenance training, or job training. For information on how your nonprofit organization can compete for HOPE 3 funds, contact the number listed above.

The government has surplus property that they want to lease, sell, exchange, or donate. These properties can be used for public parks or other recreational uses, public health or educational purposes, public airports, wildlife conservation areas, correctional facilities, replacement housing, and for historic monument purposes. State and local government agencies are eligible to apply for any of the above reasons, and tax-supported and nonprofit medical and educational institutions can apply for property to be used for health, educational, and homeless uses. For more information regarding the application process, as well as appropriate use and restrictions of the properties, contact the office listed above.

See page 469 for state by state listing.

Need some desks, chairs, or even hospital beds for your nonprofit? Here's how you can. Nonprofits (which include medical institutions, clinics, schools, museums, libraries and others), can receive free furniture, clothing, and equipment from Uncle Sam through their state surplus property agency which receives items for distribution from the Federal government. To find out about the office nearest you, request the brochure Federal Surplus Personal Property Donation Programs from the address listed above, or contact your state agency listed on page 469.

 Access $200 Million Products

Gifts In Kind America
The Agency Partner Program
333 North Fairfax St.
Alexandria, VA 22314 703-836-2121

Nonprofits now have a way to tap into the resources and donations from companies across the country. Through Gifts In Kind America, nonprofits can register for The Agency Partnership program. This program entitles you to receive monthly catalogues of donated goods including computers, office equipment, software, children's items, personal care items, building materials, and clothing. Each year over 200 million dollars worth of products become available. Your nonprofit can then apply to receive these goods. Gifts In Kind America also has a Transportation and Logistics Center to help reduce the costs of shipping and handling. There is a minimal registration fee based upon the revenue of the nonprofit (under $1 million costs $125; over $1 million costs $250). Some states require State Charitable Solicitation Registration. Contact Gifts in Kind America to learn if your state requires certification and where you need to apply.

"The secret in the search for meaning is to find your passion and pursue it."

I Wanna Be a Volunteer

I Wanna Be a Volunteer

Volunteers are the backbone of almost every community service or public organization: Meals would not be delivered to seniors; children would not have scout masters; our parks would not be maintained. Volunteerism is also a great way to get the experience you may need to get a job. You can even try out a profession before you spend four years in college pursuing that career. You can meet people whose life experiences are different from yours and from whom you may learn a new way to look at an old problem. Being a volunteer also gets your foot in the door with potential new employers. They can see how you could fit into their organization and learn your work habits, skills, and abilities (at no real risk to them) before they might employ you on a full time basis. The Federal government has also provided an added onus for those who join the AmeriCorp program. Every volunteer earns $4,250 which is targeted for college or job training tuition. While you are an AmeriCorp volunteer, you also receive child care funds and health care coverage. Now, who says it doesn't pay to be a volunteer?

Below are some programs sponsored by the Federal government, but let these be a starting point for you. Your church, school, library, and other service organizations can provide you with other examples and opportunities to dedicate your free time towards helping to improve your own little corner of the world.

 AmeriCorps*VISTA

Corporation for National Service
AmeriCorp Programs
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-942-2677

For more than 30 years, AmeriCorps*VISTA members have been serving disadvantaged communities. The program increases the capability of people to improve their lives. Members of AmeriCorps*VISTA work and live in the communities they serve, creating programs that can continue after they complete their service. Members must be at least 18 years old, and there is no upper age limit.

 Community Based Programs

Learn and Serve Programs
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 202-606-5000, ext. 117

In Learn and Serve's Community Based Programs, state offices and nonprofit organizations implement, expand, and replicate service learning programs in local communities. Participants are between the ages of 5 and 17 and include students and youth who are not in school.

Would you like to spend some time banding birds at a national wildlife refuge, feeding fish at a national fish hatchery, or doing research in a laboratory? Then consider volunteering with the

I Wanna Be a Volunteer

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. There are no age requirements; however, anyone under 18 must have written parental approval. Young people under 16 years of age are encouraged to volunteer as part of a supervised group, such as a Boy Scout troop, Girl Scout troop, or 4H Club. Contact one of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife regional offices for possible volunteer programs in your area.

 Forest Service Volunteers

Public Affairs Office
U.S. Department of Agriculture
P.O. Box 96090
Washington, DC 20090-6090 202-205-1760

The Forest Service has a volunteer program for almost everyone--retirees, professionals, housewives, students, teenagers, and youngsters. Typical jobs include working with specialists in resource protection and management, cooperative forestry, or research. You may also work at a Visitor Information Center by conducting interpretive natural history walks.

 Foster Grandparents Program

Corporation for National Service
National Senior Service Corps
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-833-3722

Since 1965, the Foster Grandparents Program has provided valuable aid to children and youth with exceptional needs. Foster Grandparents serve 20 hours a week in schools, hospitals, drug treatment centers, correctional institutions, and Head Start and day care centers — helping children who have been abused or neglected, mentoring troubled teenagers and young mothers, and caring for premature infants and children with physical disabilities.

 Health Research Volunteers

Normal Volunteer Program
Clinical Center
Quarter 15 D-2
4 West Dr.
Bethesda, MD 20892 301-496-4763

Many of the research programs at National Institutes of Health require normal volunteers who can provide clinicians with indices of normal body functions. There is a small compensation for their participation.

 Higher Education

Corporation for National Service
Learn and Serve Programs
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 202-606-5000, ext. 117

Learn and Serve America: Higher Education helps create and strengthen community service and service learning initiatives at colleges and universities, which involve a wide array of students and organizations working together to address community needs. Grants also support technical assistance for expanding the field of service learning.

 National Archives and Genealogy

National Archives and Records Administration
8th St. and Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Room G-8
Washington, DC 20408 202-501-5402

Volunteers are needed to lead tours, welcome visitors at the information desk, assist staff with information and administrative services, and to become genealogical staff aides to assist new genealogical researchers.

 National Civilian Community Corp.

Corporation for National Service
AmeriCorp Programs
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-942-2677

A full time residential service program, AmeriCorps*NCCC (the National Civilian Community Corps) combines the best practices of civilian service with the best aspects of military service, including leadership and team building. Men and women, ages 18-24, serve full time and are based at one of the four AmeriCorps*NCCC campuses — in Perry Point, MD; Charleston, SC; Denver, CO, and San Diego, CA.

 National Park Service

Office of Interpretation
National Park Service
U.S. Department of the Interior
18th and C Sts., NW
Washington, DC 20240 202-523-0582

The National Park Service provides many opportunities for volunteers to help at their many parks and historic sites. Contact the National Park nearest you for more information.

 Retired Business Executives

Service Corps of Retired Executives (SCORE)
National SCORE Office
U.S. Small Business Administration
409 Third St., SW, 4th Floor 800-634-0245
Washington, DC 20024 800-827-5722

Retired business executives volunteer their time and services to help small business solve their operating and management problems. Assigned SCORE counselors visit the owners in their places of business to analyze the problems and offer guidance. In addition to learning more about the SCORE program by calling the toll-free SBA Answer Desk, also refer to your local telephone directory to contact the community-based SCORE center.

 Peace Corps Volunteers

Office of Private Sector Relations
Peace Corps
1990 K. St., NW, Room 8400
Washington, DC 20526 202-606-3406

Here is your chance to travel to a distant land to offer a much needed helping hand. The Peace Corps' purpose is to promote world peace and friendship. Volunteers serve for two years, living among the people with whom they work. Volunteers are expected to become a part of the community. Projects are designed to match the skills of the volunteers to help solve specific development problems.

 Retired and Senior Volunteer Program

National Senior Service Corps
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-833-3722

One of the largest volunteer efforts in the nation, the Retired and Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) matches local problems with older Americans who are willing to help. RSVP members choose how and where they want to serve — and determine how many hours a week they can serve. They organize neighborhood watch programs, tutor teenagers, renovate homes, teach English to immigrants, program computers, help people recover from natural disasters — whatever their skills and interest lead them to do.

 School Based Programs

Corporation for National Service
Learn and Serve America Programs
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 202-606-5000, ext. 117

In Learn and Serve's School Based Programs, schools plan, implement, and expand service activities for elementary and secondary students. Schools also use Learn and Serve grants for adult volunteer programs and teacher training.

 Senior Companion Program

Corporation for National Service
National Senior Service Corps
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-833-3722

Providing assistance and friendship to seniors who have difficulties with daily living tasks, members of the Senior Companion Program help other seniors retain their dignity and independence. In their 20 hours of service each week, Senior Companions help clients with chores such as paying bills, buying groceries, and finding transportation to medical appointments. Senior Companions receive training in topics such as Alzheimer's Disease, stroke, diabetes, and mental health — and alert doctors and family members of potential health problems.

 Smithsonian Curatorial-Aides

Visitor Information and Associates' Reception Center
Smithsonian Institution
1000 Jefferson Drive S.W.
Washington, DC 20560 202-357-2700

Volunteers can participate in an independent program in which their educational and professional backgrounds are matched with curatorial or research requests from within the Smithsonian Institution.

 Smithsonian Museums Tour Guides

I Wanna Be a Volunteer

Visitor Information and Associates' Reception Center
Smithsonian Institution
1000 Jefferson Drive S.W.
Washington, DC 20560 202-357-2700

Volunteers are needed and welcomed at the Smithsonian Institution to serve as information volunteers or tour guides at many of the museums and Smithsonian programs and activities.

 Smithsonian Research Expeditions

Smithsonian National Associates
Smithsonian Institution
490 L'Enfant Plaza SW
Room 4210
Washington, DC 20560 202-357-4800

The Smithsonian Research Expeditions Program gives volunteers an opportunity to provide assistance to Smithsonian researchers and scholars. Expedition participants contribute their labor and financial support to projects led by Smithsonian scientists, curators, and research associates that result in exhibitions, publications, and collections for the Smithsonian Institution. Collaborating with staff, expedition volunteers work in field settings, laboratories, and archives to collect, organize, and interpret data. Expeditions cover a range of topics from archaeological digs to photographing radios. Financial support contributed by participants is used for direct project expenses and follow-up work related to these projects.

 Speakers for Community Groups

See all other Chapters.

Every federal department and many government agencies have a speakers bureau to inform interested organizations and citizen groups about many of the major community concerns. Many resources are available on medical issues such as health fairs and cholesterol screening. Public education, space programs, housing programs, weapons systems are some of the other areas where federal experts might be available to come to speak.

 Veterans Voluntary Service

Chief of Voluntary Services
Veterans Administration Medical Center

Refer to your local telephone directory for the nearest VA hospital or medical center. Many opportunities exist for volunteers to help veterans.

"Margaret Mead once remarked, 'If you look closely, you will see that almost anything that really matters to us, anything that embodies our deepest commitment to the way human life should be lived and cared for, depends on some form - often many forms - of volunteerism.'"

Free On-The-Job Training Apprenticeship Skills Programs

Program: Apprenticeship Training — 17.201

Description: Getting a good job does not always mean that you must attend college or trade school, but no one will readily admit that. There are apprenticeship programs all over the country that will provide free on-the-job training — and you'll learn while you earn. Take that, frat rats.

Why would a company offer to train you for free? Simple - they get a skilled worker that they've trained themselves. And if they hire you after you complete your apprenticeship, they'll know exactly what they're getting.

Apprentices learn each skill of a job by carrying it out step by step under the close supervision of a skilled craftworker. An apprenticeship involves planned, day-by-day supervised training on the job, combined with technical instruction. Training may also include taking courses outside of working hours in such subjects as math, blueprint reading, applied English, and other technical courses.

Length of training varies depending on the job and is determined by standards adopted by a particular industry. For example, to learn welding may take you four years, while learning to paint houses may take only one or two years. The minimum term of apprenticeship is one year.

Who Is Eligible: An apprentice usually has a high school diploma or GED, and is at least 18 years or older, with manual dexterity and other characteristics directly related to the apprenticeable job to be learned. For the most part, there is no maximum age limit, although some construction area and industrial shop trades do have specific age limits.

Also, there are no income requirements: you can be rich, middle class, or poor, as long as you're willing to put in the time and work for the current apprenticeship rate. Remember, apprenticeships are not just for men: women comprise between 5% to 10% of apprentices in the country, depending on the state, and the number is growing.

Wages Or Costs: You don't have to pay anything for the training. You may, however, be required to buy your own tools. Because an apprentice is technically a company employee, you will be paid an hourly wage by the company determined by how long you're in the program — therefore, the more you learn, the more you'll earn.

Wages begin at about half of what fully trained craftworkers make, and pay usually advances at six month intervals until you complete training. Then you too will be paid the full craftworker wage.

In Alabama, for example, apprentices can make up to $9 per hour to start (depending on the trade), and up to $18 per hour within a year or two. In North Carolina, the average starting pay for an apprentice is about $5 per hour, and the starting salary for a graduate apprentice can be as high as $20 per hour. Now, try to find those kind of pay increases anywhere else.

Apprenticeship Training Program

Types Of Jobs: Apprenticeable occupations can be found in such industries as construction, service, metal working, public administration, and the medical and health care fields. There are approximately 800 apprenticeable occupations currently recognized by the U.S. Department of Labor and the State Apprenticeship Agencies.

Programs may be sponsored by an employer, a group of employers, or a union. Often employers and unions form joint apprenticeship committees that determine industry needs for particular skills, the kind of training required, and then set the standards for acceptance into the programs.

Money Available: The Apprenticeship Training program receives $17,531,000 in annual funds from the Federal government.

Free Training or $6,000 For College If You're Laid Off Or Can't Get A Job

Program: Employment and Training Assistance - Dislocated Workers 17.246

Description: If you've found yourself on the losing end of a plant closing or mass layoff, apply for money and re-training under the Economic Dislocation and Worker Adjustment Assistance Act (EDWAA). The program is administered by each state, and because of that, the program differs from state to state. Some even offer help to out-of-work cowboys and displaced housewives. The program's goal is to help workers find unsubsidized jobs through re-training and other employment services. Some states will even lend you money to help you pay bills until you're back at work in a new job.

What You Can Get: Workers can receive classroom, occupational and on-the-job training in skills currently in demand — such as entry level positions in health care or training to work with computers. Basic and remedial training, as well as entrepreneurial training is also available. So if you need to brush up on your math or want to start a business, this could be the place to start. Programs also include literacy classes and courses in English as a second language.

The programs also provide testing and counseling, development of personal service plans (including child care and transportation allowances), and help with relocation expenses once you have a solid job offer out of state. It is also possible to receive some pre-layoff assistance, but remember, services vary by state.

Workers in the program who have exhausted state unemployment benefits can apply for "needs related" allowances, up to the amount they formerly received from that state, while they complete their training.

Many states let you chart your own career course. If you know what you want to do, say to open a pet store, you can apply to the state for the appropriate training.

Who Is Eligible: While the program is intended to help workers affected by plant closings and layoffs on a grand scale, others are not necessarily excluded. Most benefits are also available to long-term unemployed workers with limited prospects of ever finding another job in that field. For example, farmers and ranchers who have fallen on hard times, and other self-employed people who have lost their income due to general economic conditions, including displaced "homemakers" are eligible.

Money Available: The Federal government gives each state an annual allotment, depending on how many unemployed workers live there. It spends over a billion dollars each year to help workers get back on track. In 1994 alone, half a million workers received help through this program.

Free Training For Those Who Lose Their Jobs Because of Increased Trade With Mexico or Canada

Program: NAFTA Transitional Adjustment Assistance Program

Description: NAFTA is not a dirty word, but a lot of U.S. workers swear it is a plan to put them out of work and ship their jobs where labor costs are cheaper — Canada, but more significantly, to Mexico and other Latin American countries. In a dog-eat-dog global economy there are no real borders — read the label on the shirt you're wearing or check the "made in" stamps on every toy you buy your kids for Christmas.

Who Is Eligible: If you were laid off or lost your job because of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the government wants to help you find a new one, and probably one that pays you more than your last job. The NAFTA Transitional Adjustment Assistance Program is like a job skills and retraining SWAT team geared to provide rapid and early response to the threat of unemployment. It is an opportunity to engage in long term job retraining while receiving income assistance from Uncle Sam.

The program includes:

- on-site services to let workers know if they are eligible
- assessment of individual skills and abilities
- financial and personal counseling to prepare for job transition
- career counseling
- job placement assistance
- child care
- transportation
- occupation skills training
- basic and remedial education
- entrepreneurial training
- English as a second language
- income support for up to 52 weeks after worker has exhausted unemployment compensation while the worker is enrolled in training
- job search allowances to pay expenses for workers who search for work beyond their normal commuting area
- relocation allowances

Free Training If You Lose Your Job From Increased Imports From Other Countries

Program: Trade Adjustment Assistance — Workers - 17.245

Description: Ever notice how so many products have gotten less expensive over the last ten years? Shirts that once cost $30 are now sold for $15. Televisions and VCRs — not to mention computers — have never been cheaper. Visit any shopping mall, and you'll see bargains galore! So what's the deal? Simple, almost everything we now buy in the U.S. is being made overseas. But the downside to bargain hunting is that each of these products has cost Americans jobs. "Made in Japan" was a joke in the 1950s —it meant really cheapo products — but now it's a sign of quality. And U.S. workers have suffered in the long run because of these dramatic changes.

Ever the diplomat, Uncle Sam doesn't get angry, he gets even. And the government is willing to train anyone displaced by foreign imports to learn new job skills.

If you lost your job because of imports, you can get $800 in travel expenses to look for a new job, and 90% of your moving costs will be paid if you get a solid offer. Or stay at home and let the government pay you to learn a new marketable job skill. Computer programming, anyone?

Since 1974, the Employment and Training Administration at the Department of Labor has given away several billion dollars helping workers who have lost jobs because of imports. This year alone, the Trade Adjustment Assistance (TAA) program will spend $96.6 million to help workers learn more marketable job skills and to move to greener employment pastures. An additional $183 million will be spent on weekly allowances to help program participants pay their bills if they have exhausted state unemployment benefits.

What You Can Get: If you qualify, there are a number of career counseling and retraining opportunities, all free. Again, the program will pay some workers to learn new skills, then help pay travel expenses while they search for a new job. Opportunities include remedial education, vocational and technical retraining, as well as on-the-job training. If you qualify for a Trade Readjustment Allowance (TRA), you can receive a weekly allowance equal to state unemployment benefits, for up to two years.

The program will reimburse you up to $800 for travel expenses if there is a lack of good jobs in your area and you have to look elsewhere. If you find a job and need to relocate, the program will pay 90 percent of your moving costs and a lump sum payment of three times your former average weekly paycheck (up to $800) to help you get settled in.

Who Is Eligible: Any worker, no matter what their prior income level, can apply for assistance. Go to your local State Employment Security Agency, to the unemployment insurance office, and fill out an "application for determination" to learn whether you qualify under the program. They will investigate your case and determine to what degree imports caused your layoff. If your hours were cut back by at least 80 percent, or you have lost at least 80 percent of your prior income, you may qualify.

To qualify for an allowance while you participate in the program, you must have worked at least 26 weeks — and earned more than $30 a week — for one year prior to losing a job

due to imports. You also must have exhausted all other unemployment benefits; you must meet the same weekly job search requirements as you did when receiving state unemployment benefits, including actively looking for work and accepting any offers. In addition, you must be enrolled in, or have completed, an approved job training program, but sometimes states waive this last requirement.

To be eligible for a relocation allowance, you have to find a job with the possibility of it being long term employment or an offer somewhere in the U.S. You cannot receive moving expenses if you have received a relocation allowance in the past, and you must be entirely unemployed or have had your hours cut back substantially in anticipation of a total layoff.

You must file for relocation funds within 452 days after you receive TAA certification or 182 days after completing a TAA retraining program. To file for a Trade Readjustment Allowance, you must wait 60 days after certification. But even if your application is rejected, you can qualify for reemployment help, retraining, relocation expenses and other job search allowances.

In general, the readjustment allowance is the same as your state unemployment benefits. Remember, all unemployment benefits must be exhausted in order to qualify. The amount will be reduced by any other earnings or income. The allowance continues for two years, starting your first week off the job, once you are certified. You can receive an additional 26 weeks of TRA if you apply for retraining within 210 days of a layoff and need the additional benefits to complete the program. Maximum benefits are capped at 52 times your weekly allowance, unless an extension is approved.

So what happens if you find a job during the 104-week allowance period but imports cost you that job too? As long as you are still within the certification period, the 104-week allowance period is recalculated, starting the first week of your second layoff.

Money Available: In fiscal year 1996, the program will spend $183 million in TRA payments and another $96.6 million to retrain workers and help them search for new jobs, and to relocate, if necessary.

Free Training for Teens and Low-Income Unemployed Adults

Program: Job Training Partnership Act - 17.250

Description: Under the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA), your state receives millions of dollars each year to train teenagers, unskilled adults, the elderly, and others who have special needs to overcome in order to find and keep good jobs.

Free services can include an assessment of an unemployed individual's needs and abilities and a strategy of services such as classroom training, on-the-job training, job search assistance, work experience, counseling, basic skills training, and support services, such as transportation and child care.

What You Can Get: For young people, JTPA offers jobs and training during the summer that could include basic and remedial education, work-experience programs, and support services such as transportation. JTPA also provides year-round training and employment programs for youth, both in and out of school. Program services may include limited internships, school-to-work transition services, and alternative high school services.

Who Is Eligible: Those eligible to take advantage of JTPA services include economically disadvantaged adults and youth (ages 14-21), dislocated workers, and others who face significant employment barriers.

Money Available: The goal of JTPA is to move jobless individuals into permanent self-sustaining employment. The federal budget for this program is $1,054,813,000. For more information, contact one of the JTPA sites listed below, or contact the Office of Employment and Training Programs, U.S. Department of Labor, 200 Constitution Ave., NW, Room N4469, Washington, DC 20210; 202-219-6236.

Free Job Training and Education For Kids and High School Dropouts

Program: Job Corps

Description: Just because you dropped out of high school or barely made it through doesn't mean you'll have to survive on a bare-bones income digging ditches, flipping burgers or pumping gas for the rest of your life. Uncle Sam never even went to school. But he pays almost $800 million each year on the Job Corps program to help people like you learn skills that can later translate into better paying jobs and a rosy future.

What You Can Get: The Job Corps is a free job training and basic education program for high school dropouts and disadvantaged youth. Once accepted, students usually live at one of 108 program centers across the country. They live in dorms - just like college - and have their room, meals, and medical expenses paid for. It's a great deal! While there, participants become full time students and get the basic education they missed, along with job training in an area of their choice.

Each year over 40,000 kids participate in the Job Corps. About 66.5% of the students leaving the Job Corps find meaningful jobs, while another 16.4% go on to further their education or get additional training. Others join the military services. Job placement and other support services are provided to all students leaving the program.

Students in the program receive the following free services:

- basic education
- General Educational Development (GED)
- occupational exploration programs
- vocational skills training
- social skills training
- work experience programs
- counseling
- leadership training
- residential living programs, including meals, lodging, and clothing
- health care
- substance abuse programs
- incentive-based allowances

Currently, Job Corps conducts training and education at three types of facilities:

Civilian Conservation Centers

There are 30 residential centers located in national parks, forests, and wildlife refuges, and on other public lands owned and operated by the U.S. Departments of the Agriculture and Interior for the U.S. Department of Labor.

Contract Centers

There are 82 residential and nonresidential centers operated by major corporations and nonprofit organizations under contractual agreements with the U.S. Department of Labor,

Jobs Corps Program

selected through open competition.

Extension Programs

These programs offer advanced training and education at Job Corps centers, special training sites, and other locations such as community colleges under contract with unions and public and private institutions. Examples are advanced food service training operated by the National Maritime Union (NMU), advanced clerical training programs operated by the Transportation-Communication International Union, and Advanced Career Training programs operated by various community colleges in conjunction with nearby Job Corps centers.

Who Is Eligible: Job Corps enrolls young people who are between 16 and 24 years of age. In addition, applicants must:

- Be economically disadvantaged
- Be a high school dropout, or if graduated, in need of additional education or training to get a meaningful job
- Be a U.S. citizen, national, legal resident, permanent resident alien, or lawfully admitted alien
- Not be on probation or parole, unless court does not require personal supervision
- Be living in an environment that is so disruptive that the prospects of participating in a non-residential program are impaired
- Have signed consent from a parent or guardian, if under 18
- Be free of serious medical or behavioral problems
- Have the motivation and capability to succeed in Job Corps

The typical Job Corps student is an 18-year-old high school dropout who reads at the 7th grade level, comes from an economically disadvantaged family, belongs to a minority group, and has never held a full time job.

Depending on the trade they want to learn, students can enroll in any Job Corps Center with openings in their state and within their Job Corps region, of which there are ten throughout the country.

If the skill you would like to learn is not available in your region, you will need to petition with your region to transfer elsewhere.

Wages Or Costs: Job Corps students don't pay anything. Tuition, room, and meals are all free of charge. The government picks up the entire bill, which runs over $22,000 per year per student — that's comparable to what you might spend for a year at Harvard or Yale.

Students are also given a cash clothing allowance every six months for up to two years. And to cover personal expenses, they also receive a $40 per month living allowance to start, which can increase to as much as $100 per month if they stay in the program the entire two years. At some centers, free child care is provided for Job Corps student/parents.

Free Training for Workers Who Are Laid Off Because Their Factories Complied With Air Pollution Laws

Program: Clean Air Employment Transition Assistance Program

Description: First, federal air pollution laws currently on the books are certainly better than none at all. Look at Mexico City, where they are laying the groundwork for respiratory fatalities due to industrial smoke — laying them in the ground, in fact. Second, even though the government may have shut down your factory here in the U.S. — because of pollution or environmental problems, Uncle Sam will help you get back on your feet with free training programs and unemployment services.

What You Can Get: Under the Clean Air Employment Transition Assistance Program, workers who have lost jobs due to a company complying with air pollution laws can receive the following free services:

- classroom studies
- job skills
- on-the-job training
- remedial education
- entrepreneurial training
- English as a second language
- job search and placement
- child care
- transportation allowances
- relocation assistance
- additional unemployment benefits so you can complete your retraining or education

Who Is Eligible: Those eligible for this program include dislocated workers who are unlikely to return to their previous industries or occupations, and who have been terminated or laid off due to a decision to reduce employment as a result of a company's compliance with the requirements of the Clean Air Act.

Money Available: The current budget for this program is $50,000,000 per year.

National Office:

Office of Worker Retraining and Adjustment Programs
Employment and Training Administration
U.S. Department of Labor
Room N5426, 200 Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20210
202-219-5577

Or, contact the Dislocated Worker Unit contact for your state (see page 491).

Free Training If You Are Laid Off Due To Defense Cutbacks

Program: Defense Conversion Adjustment (DCA) Program

Description: Thousands of communities around the country have felt the fallout of the end of the Cold War. And the fallout has been economic, not nuclear. Base closings mean no jobs - pure and simple. Fortunately, the Defense Conversion Adjustment (DCA) Program provides retraining and other assistance for workers hurt by defense cutbacks.

What You Can Get: The DCA Program offers retraining and readjustment services, tailored to meet each individual participant. Long term training, including educational and occupational, is encouraged to enable the dislocated worker to become competitive in the future workforce. Some of the services available include:

- classroom and occupational skills
- on-the-job training
- basic and remedial education
- entrepreneurial training
- English as a second language
- job development
- job search and placement
- child care
- transportation allowances
- relocation assistance
- needs-related payments for those who have exhausted their unemployment benefits

Who Is Eligible: Those eligible include workers who lose their jobs because of plant closings or mass layoffs due to reduced U.S. defense expenditures or closed military facilities.

National Office:

Office of Worker Retraining and Adjustment Programs

Local Offices:

For more information contact your local employment service office, or the Dislocated Worker Unit contact for your state (see page 491).

Free Training If You Were Laid Off By A Defense Contractor

Program: Defense Diversification Program (DDP)

Description: If you have been laid off or fired because the company you worked for was on the wrong end of cutbacks at the U.S. Department of Defense, you may qualify to be retrained for another job. The Defense Diversification Program (DDP) provides retraining and readjustment assistance to workers and military personnel dislocated by defense cutbacks and base closings, as well as career planning support and assistance.

What You Can Get: The DDP offers a variety of retraining and readjustment services tailored to meet each participants' needs. The program offers long term training (both education and occupational) that will help you to be more competitive in the workforce of the future. Services include:

- classroom, job skills, and on-the-job training
- remedial education
- entrepreneurial training
- job development
- job search and placement
- child care and transportation allowance and relocation assistance
- needs-related payments for those who have exhausted their unemployment insurance

Additional support includes assistance in converting facilities to prevent closure or mass layoff and retraining workers to new technologies.

Who Is Eligible: Those eligible for the program include civilian employees of the Department of Defense, Department of Energy, and defense contractors who have been terminated or laid off, or have a notice of termination or layoff.

National Office:

How To Make A High School Diploma Worth More Than The Paper It's Written On

Program: School-To-Work

Description: Each year millions of young people across the country are faced with making the difficult transition from being in school for 12 straight years, to being out in the real world and making it on their own. How do you go about translating a high school education into a good paying job that allows young people to take responsibility for their lives? For too many students, this just doesn't happen. And this is where the government thinks it can help.

What You Can Get: The School-To-Work approach to learning is based on the fact that individuals learn best by doing and by relating what they learn in school to their experiences as workers. The approach has come to be accepted as a better way to educate all young people. Instead of traditional general track and vocational education programs that were based on the theory that students who didn't go to college needed to be taught a skill they could use to make a living for the rest of their lives, the school-to-careers approach is based on the concept that education for all should be made more relevant and useful to multiple future career and lifelong learning. School-To-Work sets up partnerships between schools, employers, educators, students, and others to help students make the connection between what they learn in school and what will be required of them out in the working world. Developed with the input of business, education, labor, and community-based organizations that have a strong interest in how American students prepare for careers, the effort to create a national school-to-work system contains three fundamental elements:

- School-based learning: school-to-work programs restructure the educational experience so that students learn how academic subjects relate to the world of work. Teachers work together with employers to develop broad-based curricula that help students understand the skills needed in the workplace. Students actively develop projects and work in teams, much like the modern workplace.
- Work-based learning: employers provide learning experiences for students that develop broad, transferable skills. Work-based learning provides students with opportunities to study complex subject matter as well as vital workplace skills in a hands-on, "real life" environment.
- Connecting activities: connecting schools and workplaces does not happen naturally. It requires a range of activities to integrate the worlds of school and work to ensure that the student is not the slender thread that connects the two. Connecting activities provide program coordination and administration, integrate the worlds of school and work through school and business staff exchanges, and provide student support, such as career counseling and college placements.

Who is Eligible: The program is open to any young person, including high school students, out-of-school youth, and at-risk youth.

Money Available: The federal budget for the program is currently $58.9 million.

Free Job Training For Food Stamp Recipients

Program: Food Stamps - 10.551

Description: Food stamps do more than offset grocery bills, in many cases they'll even qualify you for free job training. Under the Food Stamp Employment and Training Program, you can learn skills to get a better paying job. As a condition of receiving food stamps, applicants are required to "work register" when they apply for benefits. There are exceptions for anyone under age 16 or over 60, for the physically or mentally handicapped, for a parent responsible for the care of a child under six years of age, for students, and for those already participating in other job training programs.

What You Can Get: All states offer some type of training program through their Food Stamp Division, but funding for these programs is much more limited than for other training programs, so you'll have to see what's available in your area. Most Food Stamp employment programs offer job search, job search training, self-employment activities, and vocational training and basic education. There may be funds to cover such expenses as transportation and child care when you are in the training program. Remember, all states may not offer all types of help.

There are a few states where in order to receive your food stamp benefits, you have to perform some type of work for a certain number of hours each month. This is normally done through a nonprofit organization or a state government agency. Administrators hope that by working for your food stamps, you'll not only gain work experience, but you'll also develop the self confidence that will allow you to become self supporting in the future.

States that require Workfare:

- California
- Indiana
- Mississippi
- North Carolina (Catawba county)
- Pennsylvania
- Washington

States that have Optional Workfare:

- Arkansas (Izard, Lonoke, and Stone counties)
- Colorado (El Paso county)
- Florida (Escambia and Walton counties)
- North Carolina (Alamance, Davie, Mitchell, Surry, and Yadkin counties)
- Wisconsin (Florence county)

Who Is Eligible: All Food Stamp recipients are eligible for this training program. To learn what is available near you, contact your local Food Stamp office.

Money Available: The annual funds available for the training programs is $134,000,000.

Free Job Training for Dead Beat Dads

Program: Child Support Enforcement Research - 93.564

Description: No one likes a dead beat dad, but Uncle Sam understands that many fathers fall behind in child support not because they're evil, wicked, mean or nasty. Some just don't have a job and have never been trained to make them qualified for many jobs. The Parents Fair Share Program helps these parents get the training they need to get a paycheck that will help them set things straight with their children. According to the latest data, almost two-thirds of custodial mothers receive no child support from the fathers of their children.

What You Can Get: Fair Share provides fathers with training on how to:

- get ready for a job
- search for a job
- build job skill levels

Since it is important to get participants earning paychecks fast, sites are encouraged to offer on-the-job training, paid work experience, and other activities that mix skills training or education with part time employment. The program also forms and directs support groups to help participants learn about their rights and obligations to their children, and to help them to become better parents. Mediation programs help parents discuss disagreements regarding visitation, household expenditures, child care and other issues that arise between divorced parents.

Who Is Eligible: Any non-custodial parent whose children are on welfare is eligible for job training. Many participants are court ordered to participate, but others are accepted, provided there is space.

Free Job Training and More For Foster Care Teens

Program: Independent Living - 93.674

Description: All kinds of free help is out there for teenagers in foster care — and young adults who have been raised in foster homes — to get the job skills they need to make a good life on their own. The Independent Living program provides help for foster care youth between the ages of 16 and 21, help in getting a GED or a driving permit, even assistance in filling out college applications. Those who live out in the country can even get free transportation to job training programs that can assure them of a good paying career track. The goal of the program is to ease the transition from foster care to independent living.

What You Can Get: Job training is only part of the program. Kids are also given lessons on handling day to day problems, such as:

- budgeting money
- opening checking accounts
- looking for an apartment
- parenting skills
- finding health care
- training in social skills
- independent or group counseling

Independent Living programs will point you to the free programs you'll need to get ahead in the world, including:

- GED preparation
- job placement
- on-the-job training
- job interviewing skills
- career planning

Who Is Eligible: If you are in foster care or have recently left a foster home, and are between the ages of 16 and 21, this program could be a gold mine for you. To apply, contact your foster care worker or your state contact from the list below.

Money Available: The Independent Living program receives $70,000,000 each year from the government.

Triple Your Salary With Job Training for Migrant and Farmworkers

Program: Migrant and Seasonal Farmworkers - 17.247

Description: Migrant workers and seasonal laborers are some of the hardest working people in America. Yet when the crops are all picked or the economy sags, they are some of the first to be out of a job. And most of these people live just at the poverty level to begin with. Fortunately, the government has a special job training program to help them find less backbreaking work, jobs that last past the harvest — and can mean an actual shot at the American Dream.

The Department of Labor's Employment and Training Administration pays public agencies and nonprofit groups almost $80 million a year to provide free job training, job search, and support services for migrant workers living at or below the poverty line. The program is offered in every state except Alaska, Rhode Island, and the District of Columbia.

What You Can Get: Participants can receive a weekly allowance at the current minimum wage and learn new work skills in classroom and on-the-job training programs, work experience in new employment areas, job development and placement services, relocation and education assistance — and even some health care. In some states where the poverty level is relatively high, a family with two children could take advantage of the program even if they earned $20,000 or more the year before and only worked six months.

Who Is Eligible: Any seasonal worker and their dependents are eligible if they worked for any consecutive 12-month period in the two years prior to applying to the program. Applicants must have earned at least half of their income — or worked at least 50 percent of their time — in seasonal farmwork in the 12 months before they apply for aid. Families must be receiving some type of public assistance, and their annual income must be at either the poverty level or at 70 percent of the state's lower-living-standard income level.

Money Available: Uncle Sam provides these funds based on grant applications from public and nonprofit groups. In 1995, $79 million was spent and more than one-third of participants received some job retraining. Of those who finish the program, almost 65 percent found new work in higher paying jobs.

Free Job Training, GED Courses, and Guaranteed Jobs For High School Kids and Poverty Zone Drop Outs

Program: Youth Fair Chance

Description: Growing up in poverty today isn't what it was earlier this century. In years past, a life of poverty was much harder. There was no government assistance, no food stamps, no volunteer organizations willing to spend time helping anyone out. But many people who grew up in the rough-and-tumble, hand-to-mouth reality of the Great Depression — not to mention immigrants who arrived here with nothing more than a dream and a coat on their back — made good. Some even went on to become millionaires, professors, doctors, lawyers and political leaders. This is what America was all about. Guess what? It still is.

Youth Fair Chance is a new community based program that gives money directly to areas where problems for kids are greatest — high poverty zones. And not just in inner cities. There are more kids living in poverty in rural parts of our country than in our cities. They've never seen crack dealers, and never heard the pop-pop-pop of gunfire in the night, but they are poor, and their chances of rising from poverty are slim. Fortunately, there is help available for them.

What You Can Get: The purpose of Youth Fair Chance is to serve kids who just aren't getting what they need from traditional job training and placement programs. Here are some of the special kinds of help they give kids who participate:

- employment and training
- help staying in school
- ways to curb teen pregnancy
- assistance in dealing with drug and gang involvement
- participation in sports and recreation
- family support
- child development and health

Who Is Eligible: Kids and young adults between 14-30 years of age who reside in rural and urban communities are eligible to take part in the program. It focuses on small neighborhoods of communities with populations of no more than 25,000 that have the highest concentration of poverty, based on the latest Bureau of the Census estimates. These communities even include migrant or seasonal farmworker communities, native Alaskan villages, or Indian reservations.

Youth Fair Chance serves these kids, both in and out of school. For those still in school, the program offers:

- school to work help
- broad-based education improvement
- training and employment opportunities
- work-based learning
- school-based learning

Youth Fair Chance Program

- student-employer matching

For kids and young adults who are out of school, Youth Fair Chance offers centers for continuing education and training. These centers offer:

- remedial education
- GED preparation
- occupational training
- English as a Second Language classes
- job search assistance
- support services
- recreation and sports programs

A number of the Youth Fair Chance projects will guarantee jobs to kids who participate and meet prior school attendance and performance standards. To be eligible for a guaranteed job, kids must be between 16-19 years of age and must make a commitment to complete high school.

Money Available: Some of the Youth Fair Chance projects will actually pay employers to hire participants in the program — up to 50% of the kids' wages on the job.

Free Jobs And Training For Dropouts Interested In Careers In The Construction Industry

Program: Youthbuild - 12.243

Description: Bottom line: most construction jobs pay really well. If you like the work, training in the construction industry can fatten the paycheck even further. If you get the itch, you might even want to become an engineer — or better yet — become someone who gets to use the wrecking ball to tear down old houses and buildings. What a job! But how do you get started?

What You Can Get: Young men and women can get experience in the construction trades while helping to build housing for the homeless under the Youthbuild program. It's a win-win deal for everyone involved. High school dropouts and other disadvantaged young adults can get a boost in life by enrolling in Youthbuild. Participants get hands-on training in the rehabilitation and construction of housing, as well as valuable off-site education. Youthbuild teaches participants how to tear down or rehabilitate old houses and how to build new houses from the ground up. Other benefits include:

- living allowances
- job development activities
- job placement services
- job seeking skills
- on-the-job training
- driver's education courses

Who Is Eligible: Low income kids between the ages of 16 and 24 are eligible to participate.

Money Available: The federal budget for the program is currently $50 million.

State Employment Agencies

You don't have to look to Washington to get help finding a new job, because the answer is probably in your own back yard — or at least down the street. Every state offers programs to get people the training and job counseling they need to earn a steady paycheck, and overlooking these programs can really minimize your chances for advancement. Utilize your state program and soon you'll be laughing — all the way to the bank.

What's next is a state-by-state listing of State Employment Agencies for you to contact to find out about specific programs in your state. Each entry will give you the following information:

- state employment agency address and phone number
- local employment office in state capital
- whether career counseling is available
- what vocational testing is offered
- what special services and publications are available

Examples of special training and job services offered by individual states include:

- free job retraining if you're injured on the job (WA)
- translation assistance for Hispanic workers (NY)
- tuition waivers for courses at community colleges (RI)
- special training for welfare mothers (CT)
- free child care and transportation during job search (HI)
- job networking for laid off professionals (KY)
- job training and help for laid off timber workers (OR, WA)
- list of federal contractors with hiring preferences (VA)

State Funded Job Training Assistance

A priority in all states is job training and education because a well trained, employed work force is a prime asset. Programs that assist businesses with the costs involved in training or upgrading job skills of new or existing workers are available in all states except New Hampshire, Montana, and Wyoming. These states choose to use only the federal programs available for this purpose. All states have a wide variety of federally funded programs and services for job seekers and employers. State money is used in many of these programs, also. For instance, in Oregon the JOBS Program, which provides welfare recipients with a variety of education, training, and job placement services is comprised of 35% federal funds and 65% state funds. State funded programs tend to target small individual groups, so each state must consider its own unique economic, social, demographic and political issues when deciding on the state budget. The advantage of a state funding its own program is that the state can decide (with federal approval) what restrictions are required to be eligible for some programs. As an example, the state of Washington has no income restrictions for the Displaced Homemaker program, allowing individuals to receive assistance before they reach poverty level.

There are programs like New York's Green Thumb Program for seniors and Youth Conservation Corps programs in Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin and Ohio which not only help the people who are involved in these programs but the state benefits as well. While these individuals are learning job skills, earning an income, and improving their self esteem, the state benefits from the results of their labor by improving the appearances of state highways, parks, and other recreational areas. Other programs that have had positive results at a minimal cost are: Arkansas's Educators-in-Industry program which provides educators the opportunity to learn about employers needs, and allows employers to express their views on the types of employees needed in the workforce; the Kansas Parole Job Fair which had a total cost of approximately $200 in 1996, and provided information regarding the job skills of offenders to the attention of local employers who were often unaware of the skills learned, developed and practiced by inmates; Maine's Professionals in Transition program, an organized support group for professionals to meet and make positive changes in their careers; and Hawaii's Career Kokua, a computerized library of occupational and educational information.

The following chapter will give you an idea of what types of programs each state offers. Some of them, although operated with state funds, are administered through federal agencies.

 State Training and Employment Program (STEP)

Katherine A. Brown, Grants Administrator

Division of Community and Rural Development

Department of Community and Regional Affairs

P.O. Box 112100 (150 Third St., Room 111)

Juneau, AK 99811-2100 907-465-4863

Fax: 907-465-3212

The State Training and Employment Program (STEP) attempts to prevent future claims against unemployment benefits by: attracting new business due to an available skilled labor force and lower employer unemployment insurance costs; training or retraining workers for new or emerging industries and technologies; and promoting local hire. STEP is funded by 1/10% of employee contributions to the Unemployment Insurance (UI) Trust Fund. These contributions are deposited in a special account within the state general fund. Persons are eligible who are unemployed and receiving unemployment insurance benefits, or who have exhausted their UI benefits; are employed but likely to lose their job within 6 months due to the job's elimination; or due to obsolescence of their job skills; or have worked in a job covered by unemployment insurance during the last 3 years but are ineligible for benefits because the job was seasonal, temporary, part-time, or wage contributions were insufficient, or due to underemployment. These programs are typically conducted in classrooms or other institutional settings; foster economic development in high growth industry; and are tailored to meet specific needs of a particular employer or group of employers. The employer must commit to hiring those who successfully complete training.

Arizona Department of Commerce
3800 North Central, Suite 1500 602-280-1352
Phoenix, AZ 85012 Fax: 602-280-1301

This state funded program provides business with grants for short-term customized, job and business specific training for new employees. The Department administers the program but works with training providers such as community colleges, private post-secondary institutions, and trade schools. Businesses must maintain or exceed current level of training expenditures and attempt to leverage other training resources. Eligible costs include: recruitment, screening, intake, assessment, interviewing, training design, materials design and accession, trainer costs, equipment, management and administration of training project and travel (not to exceed 10% of project). Ineligible costs are trainee wages and fringe benefits, and basic skills training. Selection is based on: number of new jobs created, location of business, average wages for new employees, total cost of training, training cost per employee, amount of business matching funds, use of local labor force, use of target groups, employee benefit package, financial well-being of business, and community support for the project. Start-up financing for new business ventures is not available. Eligible companies must have a profitable operating history of at least 2 years.

Arkansas Department of Education
Three Capitol Mall
Luther Hardin Building 501-682-1505
Little Rock, AR 72201-1083

Fax: 501-682-1509

This program was developed out of research and in-depth analysis conducted by the Vocational, Adult and Technical Education Division. The network of 14 Coordinators act as training brokers with specific responsibilities for: developing and maintaining direct contact with business and industry within a multi-county area; promoting, developing and coordinating specialized training programs; keeping industry informed of the training available from public and state supported secondary and post-secondary educational and training institutions; and maintaining economical and industrial data to serve as a basis for long-range planning.

 Arkansas Industry Training Program

Arkansas Industrial Development Commission
Arkansas Industry Training Program
One Capitol Mall 501-682-1302
Little Rock, AR 72201

Fax: 501-682-1188

The primary function of the Arkansas Industry Training Program (AITP) is to offer pre-employment training, free of charge, to companies and to underemployed and unemployed persons in Arkansas. Trainees are not paid while in training. On-the-job training is offered if the equipment is too large, unique, or proprietary to set up in a training area. Training takes place in the community in which the company locates. Classes may be held in an educational institution, at the company site, in a donated community site, or a leased AITP facility. Classes are normally conducted at night, 3 to 4 hours a night, 3 to 4 nights a week, for 3 to 15 weeks. AITP provides training for possible jobs; it does not subsidize companies or trainees. All AITP funds are expended for direct training costs. Trainees voluntarily enroll in the classes so they are not obligated to accept employment, nor are they assured of employment and may accept or reject any job offered.

 Educators-in-Industry

Arkansas Industrial Development Commission
One State Capitol Mall 501-692-7327
Little Rock, AR 72201

Fax: 501-682-7341

This program provides educators the opportunity to visit a variety of local employers and hear directly from them about how the subjects taught in the classroom relate to the "real world", learn about current employment requirements, as well as future trends; develop ideas, materials, and lists of resource people for the classroom; and receive three hours of graduate or undergraduate credit. Employers are given the opportunity to teach local educators at a three-hour session at their place of business; communicate directly with educators about the types of employees needed in the workforce; conduct a tour of their place of business and explain current operations and future trends; and provide information packets to be shared with students. Educator-in-Industry provides unique opportunities for educators to play a vital role in the economic development of Arkansas by learning how to better prepare students for the workplace and for employers to play a vital role in the education of Arkansas' young people by giving the curriculum in schools an added dimension of reality.

State Funded Job Training Assistance

 Existing Workforce Training Program

Arkansas Industrial Development Commission
One State Capitol Mall
Little Rock, AR 72201 501-682-7232

The focus of this program is skills upgrade training, specific to a company's current workforce at any level. Skills upgrade training is defined as instruction conducted in a classroom environment at a worksite, an education institution, or a neutral location, that provides an existing, full-time employee with the new skills necessary to enhance productivity, improve performance, and/or retain employment. Skills upgrade training programs provide skills development to help a company and its employees adapt to new or altered technologies, management/supervisory systems, continuous quality improvement initiatives, or production methods or the new skills needed by the company to remain competitive, productive, and economically viable. To be considered for financial assistance, a manufacturing industry must: submit an application prior to the beginning of training; provide assurance that the participants involved in the proposed training program possess the prerequisite literacy skills; and clearly tie the proposed training to specific business goals and performance objectives. The Existing Workforce Training Program will pay a portion of the costs for the approved training program; grants will range from 20-70% of allowable training costs, depending upon a series of scoring criteria; and the maximum funding for any one company site cannot exceed $50,000 per year.

 State Highway and Transportation Programs

Arkansas State Highway and Transportation Department
P.O. Box 2261 501-569-2227
Little Rock, AR 72203-2261 Fax: 501-569-2698

The following programs are available to students:

Cooperative Office Education (COE) is a cooperative work and training program for high school students who have completed the necessary prerequisites and are preparing for employment in office occupations. The student receives academic, vocational instruction, on-the-job training related to their career goals, and receive school credit for the employment.

Summer Employment Program: The Department hires students to work during the summer months in positions ranging from clerical to statewide travel crews. Two new programs were added in 1992. The Association of Black Engineers in Arkansas (ABEA) requested summer intern positions for young minority students who are pursuing an engineering career, and New Futures coordinated the placement of at-risk youth as part of the organizations effort to aid students with meaningful summer employment.

Engineering Interns: provides employment for civil engineering students during the summer months. An Orientation Program was added in an effort to better inform students about career possibilities within the Department and to encourage them to consider full-time employment upon graduation.

Career Development: emphasizes the importance of math, science, and English and encourages students to pursue careers in the highway and transportation field. An engineer from the Department highlights the satisfaction obtained from planning, designing and construction long-lasting projects which have positive impacts on education, economic development and the quality of life.

 Workforce Development Initiatives

Governor's Commission on Adult Literacy
221 West Second St.
Suite 408
Little Rock, AR 72201

501-324-9400

Fax: 501-324-9405

As the only state entity designated as the hub of a statewide network for literacy, the Governor's Commission on Adult Literacy is working to build capacity and quality of services in the area of adult learning. During 1995, the adult education/literacy community provided workplace literacy programs to 300 employers which served the education needs of over 10,000 workers. Programs available include: the Workforce Alliance for Growth in Economy (WAGE) program, a partnership between local employers as an adult collaborative effort to address the need to improve the basic skills of the unemployed and underemployed workforce. The Family-to-Work Support Center enables educators to provide workplace relevant instruction tied to employment goals of learners while meeting the employability requirements of employers. In the Workers Involved in Skills Education (WISE) program, team members develop education programs for workplaces by visiting the work site and conducting a deductive analysis of the work process. By watching workers do their jobs, the team can develop assessments and curriculum to teach essential skills in terms of the job itself.

 Youth Apprenticeship/Work Based Learning

Consortia Project

Ron Schertzer, Program Manager
Apprenticeship and Technical Education
Vocational and Technical Education Division
Department of Education
Luther S. Hardin Building
Three Capitol Mall
Little Rock, AR 72201-1083

501-682-1360

Fax: 501-682-1509

The primary objective of the program is to link resources of business and industry, education and the community to bridge the gap between the classroom and the workplace. It gives high school students an opportunity to develop career skills, evaluate their own potential for success, establish personal goals, earn paid apprenticeships, obtain college-level experience and gain personal contact within a specific occupation. All consortia are funded with state funds and other individually acquired sources.

Florida laws relating to veterans are intended to provide selected veterans with an advantage in employment as a recognition of their sacrifices in the service of the nation, and also as compensation for deferring their civilian careers. There are 4 Veterans' Preference categories: 1) Persons with a service connected disability which is compensable under public laws, 2) the spouse of any person who has a total and permanent service disability and who, because of this disability cannot qualify for employment; 3) any veteran of any war who served one day on active duty during a wartime period; 4) the unremarried widow or widower of a veteran who died as a result of a service connected disability. Specific questions regarding preference eligibility, including required documentation, should be referred to the office listed above.

Alu Like Inc.
1427 Dillingham Blvd., #205B 808-848-8255
Honolulu, HI 96817 Fax: 808-842-3717

The Project will complete an in-depth assessment on the capabilities, needs, and vocational potential of the ex-offenders seeking services from the project. A determination on the course of training, work, and services most appropriate to address each individual's employment goals and needs will be jointly agreed to by the ex-offender and the project's Employment Specialist. The service plan will identify employment goals and projected timetable of services. The Project will assist with referrals to Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) programs to provide classroom training in basic education and/or vocational skills, worksite experience, on-the-job and other training designed to enhance the employment potential of participants. On-the-job training sites will be developed by the project prior to referral to a JTPA program. Referrals to JTPA programs will be initiated due to the project not having training monies for participants. Due to recent budget cuts, this program is currently available only on the island of Oahu.

The Iowa General Assembly established the Iowa Jobs Training Program by combining the Small Business New Jobs Training Program and the Iowa Retraining Program. The program consists of the following two components:

I Wanna Be Trained

1) Small Business New Jobs Training Services: This program provides repayable loans up to $50,000 or grants of less than $5,000 to train new employees of small businesses (500 or fewer employees) that are either new, expanding, or relocating to Iowa. Loans are repaid through the diversion of increased payroll receipts or through the diversion of increased property taxes. Training services that are customized to meet the individual needs of each business range from adult basic education to highly technical training. Methods of training include classroom and on-the-job training.

2) Retraining Services: This component provides forgivable loans up to $50,000 or grants of less than $5,000 for businesses that are retooling and, must retrain their existing employees. A loan is forgiven if a business completes its training program and retrains at least the number of employees agreed to prior to funding. Training services, customized to meet the individual needs of each business, range from adult basic education to highly technical training. On-the-job training is not available for this component. All other training methods are utilized. Unlike the new jobs training component, retraining assistance is available to a business of any size.

 Job Developers

State Funded Job Training Assistance

Topeka, KS 66603-3712

Fax: 913-296-3490

TDD: 913-296-3487

This program is a job retention tool which assists employees of restructuring industries who are likely to be displaced because of obsolete or inadequate job skills and knowledge. Eligible industries include basic enterprises that are restructuring their operations through incorporation of existing technology, development and incorporation of existing diversification of production, or the development and implementation of new production activities. At least five existing employees must be trained to qualify for assistance. The program may be used to assist firms involved in both pre-employment and on-the-job training. Pre-employment training may be used to allow the company and prospective employees an opportunity to evaluate one another before making any employment commitments. Prospective employees are given the knowledge and specific skills necessary for job entry. Trainees usually attend classes on their own time and without pay. On-the-job training is conducted after hiring. Trainees may receive instruction on the company's own production equipment on the plant floor or on similar machinery in a classroom setting.

 Parole Job Fair

Mike Hammond, Parole Officer II

Technical Advisor, Job Fair

Department of Corrections

London State Office Building

Topeka, KS 66612-1284 913-296-8069

The Job Fair was designed to provide offenders with additional information regarding the kinds of job skills local employers need, and the types of jobs which are available. Employers who have taken part in the fair indicated that they had been previously unaware of the job skills of some of the offenders. Some of those skills were learned, developed, and practiced during the offender's incarceration. The Corrections Department believes the types of opportunities which are made available during such events are beneficial to all involved, and intends to cooperate with other state and local agencies to promote these activities. The total cost to conduct the most recent Job Fair was approximately $200.

The SKILL program may be utilized by individual business or consortiums of companies adding new jobs. Like the KIT program, SKILL is intended to help companies offset the costs of training employees for new jobs. SKILL's funding capacity, however, is substantially larger because the number and average wages of the new employees determine the project funding limit. Training projects costs are financed through tax exempt, public purpose bonds issued on an as needed basis by the Kansas Development Finance Authority. The maximum amount of assistance for which a company qualifies is directly tied to the number of new jobs created and the taxable wages of those jobs over 10 years. If a company is unable to create jobs in sufficient numbers to generate withholding tax revenue according to its annual projections, the business may be required to repay a portion of the training funds on a shared basis with the state. If a company leaves the state before the bonds are retired, the full cost must be repaid, less any withholding tax contributions collected prior to the company's departure.

BSSC provides grants for the customized skills training of workers for new, expanding, and existing industries in Kentucky. Grants are awarded for portions of an employer's eligible costs of training Kentucky residents in job skills ranging from entry level to advanced, including retraining and skills upgrading of existing employees. BSSC works with other employment, job training resources, and financial incentive agencies to design a training program customized to meet the specific needs of a company. Approved training can be provided by an educational institution, private training specialists, or by the company's own trainers. Funds can be used for curriculum design and customization, instructor salaries and instructional materials. BSSC also can help to cover a portion of the travel costs for the employees of new and expanding Kentucky industries that must be sent outside of Kentucky or the USA for training as company instructors. The instructor must return to the company and train other employees on similar equipment, processes, and procedures. BSSC can reimburse the company partially for the instructor/trainer's out-of-state travel, food, and lodging expenses.

The Ohio Industrial Training Program (OITP) is designed to provide financial assistance and resources for customized training involving employees of new and expanding Ohio manufacturing businesses and will consider other industries creating a large number of new jobs. The program links Ohio's public educational system (vocational, technical, and universities) to the needs of industry by acting as a brokering source of specialized training services. Financial assistance may be provided for business and industry where there is manufacture and/or assembly of goods or information production, for verifiable retention of jobs, expansion of industry through capital investments, or for new industry. Funding is conducted through the regional OITP Office on reimbursement basis, for a portion of training expenses incurred, including (but not limited to): instructor costs, materials, special needs, such as assessment, curriculum development and software rentals. Companies that are requesting up to $10,000 in training funds may apply for the OITP Mini-Grant. Regardless of the size of the company, the training proposals are evaluated on the same criteria as the standards competitive proposals (number of new or retained jobs, number trained, etc) and are subject to the same guidelines as the standard grants.

JOBS Plus is an added component of the existing federal JOBS Program in six Oregon counties. Use of $2.7 million in lottery funding was approved to cover start-up costs of the three-year demonstration project. JOBS Plus participants are placed in limited duration, on the job training in private businesses, where they earn at least the minimum wage. Participants are paid by employers, who are then reimbursed by the state for minimum wages and payroll taxes. The employer assigns a workplace mentor to help participants learn job skills and good work habits. Participants do not lose any benefits and in most cases brings an increase. Each participant has an Individual Education Account established, into which the employer contributes $1 for each hour worked. These funds will be available to the participant for further education after the worker finds unsubsidized employment.

Special Programs Unit
Department of Labor and Industry
Bureau of Employment Services and Training 717-787-6915
Harrisburg, PA 17121 Fax: 717-787-5785

The New Directions Program focuses on the extensive use of education, skill training, employment services and supportive services such as child care, transportation, extended medical coverage, etc., to increase the potential for clients to secure and maintain long-term employment that will enable them to be self-supporting. The program builds on the strengths of previous employment and training activities while redirecting resources and efforts to provide a wider range of services to all welfare clients who can most benefit from these services. New Directions is driven fundamentally by client needs. Because the aspiration and needs of individual welfare clients vary depending upon their educational background, prior work history and family circumstances, a wide range of employment and training services are needed to help these welfare clients achieve self-sufficiency.

The Governor's Office of Economic Development coordinates all employee training programs for the Department of Labor and the four Technical Institutes located in the state. The Customized Industrial Training program allows training to be customized to meet the needs of any new or expanding South Dakota employer. Training is normally done in a classroom setting with a qualified instructor coordinated through one of the four Technical Institutes. Companies help design curriculum content and participant screening requirements, and commit to hire trained participants. Funding is available to train eligible participants for entry level employment. The payment made to the employer is considered compensation for extraordinary training costs. Employers who commit to a post training wage or $8 per hour are eligible for this program.

 Skills Development Fund

Texas Workforce Commission
101 East 15th St. 512-475-2216
Austin, TX 78778 Fax: 512-475-2321

The Skills Development fund (SDF) is intended to aid public community and technical colleges in meeting industry and workforce training needs. SDF will award grants to businesses and labor unions for training programs designed for their specific needs and carried out through contracts with public community and technical colleges throughout the state. In regions without a community or technical college, businesses may request a non-local college to provide training. SDF grants are designed to cover the costs of program design, actual instruction, texts, and reusable equipment. Businesses or labor unions that need equipment specialized to their operations will be expected to supply it. SDF has two distinct goals: the creation of new jobs, whether through business start-ups or the expansion or relocation of existing businesses in Texas; and the creation of a highly trained and competitive Texas workforce.

Virginia Tech
205 West Roanoke St. In VA: 800-542-5780
Blacksburg, VA 24061-0527 540-231-7571

The Commonwealth of Virginia funds Virginia VIEW as its Career Information Delivery Service. Virginia VIEW is a state project operated through Virginia Tech. The project provides information on specific occupations and other relevant labor force information that is updated annually. Occupation Search generates a list of occupations matching users personal preferences in including preferences in the area of work, interests, and education. College Search matches users preferences with Virginia community colleges and 2 & 4 year public and private institutions. This information is available in an interactive computer program, in tabloid form and on microfiche. Each fall, 25 workshops are conducted across the state to distribute the updated products and train clients in their use. Users are typically counselors at schools, colleges, in private practice and rehabilitative services, or employment services professions. Virginia VIEW also operates a toll free Career information Hotline (800-542-5870) that people may call with career questions.

Each of the 32 community and technical colleges across the state offers workforce skills training and management classes and seminars for business. Customized training can range from basic skills for the workplace, new employee training, upgrade training, and management training. Community and technical colleges can assess the training needs of business or set of businesses and fashion customized training programs for the membership. Both small and large businesses can be served. Fees depend upon the type of training to be offered and the number of people to be trained. In addition to customized training that is open to any worker, colleges offer the state funded training programs for dislocated workers. An association might consider this option if member businesses wish to hire and train dislocated workers.

 Wisconsin Conservation Corps

30 West Mifflin , Suite 406

Madison, WI 53703 608-266-7730

The Wisconsin Conservation Corps was created to employ young adults in all regions of the state; conserve the state's natural resources through the implementation of projects with long-term beneficial effects; develop work skills, discipline, cooperation, meaningful work experiences, and training and education opportunities for corps enrollees; and promote social well-being through implementation of projects that include human services activities. The Corps provides basic skills instruction, classroom training, work experience, and career development classes to participants. In addition, a participant who satisfactorily completes the program is eligible for an incentive grant of $500 or an education voucher worth between $1,000 and $1,950.

Madison, WI 53707-7874 Fax: 608-266-1690

This state grant program funds adult education programs that provide courses below the post-secondary level, and is designed to improve the occupational skill level of educationally disadvantaged working adults. Courses provided through this program include adult basic education and English as a Second Language, provided by Wisconsin technical colleges in the workplace. This program is available to adults who are functioning below the 12th grade level in Wisconsin businesses, with priority given to small businesses.

Wyoming

 Light-Duty Work Program

The Division of Workers' Safety and Compensation has a light-duty work provision which allows injured workers to go back to work for their previous employer in a light-duty capacity if they meet the medical requirements as set forth by law. This encourages injured workers to go to work rather than continuing to receive benefits through the program. Injured workers can actually earn more money than they would on the Workers' Compensation program by going back to light-duty work.

 Vocational Rehabilitation

The Wyoming Division of Workers' Safety and Compensation has a provision that allows injured workers that qualify the option of receiving a disability award or opting for enrollment in a vocational rehabilitation program. This vocational rehabilitation program is designed to get injured workers back to work by retraining and job placement. An individually written rehabilitation program outlines the specific steps necessary for the injured worker to achieve a vocational goal.

"The percent of the U.S. working population working in Fortune 500 firms rose from 14.6% in 1954 to 19.4% in 1974. Since then, the movement has been away from these large industrial companies. In 1992, only 10.9% of the working population were in Fortune 500 firms."

Federal Government Jobs, Internships, and Student Educational Employment Programs

Have you ever dreamed of:

- Making $2,000 a month during the summer learning how Congress really works?
- Spending the summer earning $550 a week tracking endangered species for the Department of the Interior?
- Taking a semester off to help the Environmental Protection Agency crack down on illegal polluters?
- Going to school and getting a part time job making $10 an hour helping NASA prepare for the next manned space flight?

No one but the Federal government can provide students with full and part time jobs helping the victims of floods, hurricanes or earthquakes; helping in the fight against homelessness; understanding the inner workings of volcanoes; or learning about the reshaping of the USSR.

The U.S. government is the world's LARGEST single employer with over 3 million people on its payroll. Students should not miss out on the opportunity available for full time or part time employment, as well as cooperative education programs. Remember only about 13% of those U.S. government employees actually work in Washington, DC. So if you want to find opportunities in your own community, you can still take advantage of these wonderful programs.

Utilizing one of these student programs is also one of the surest ways of landing a full time job with the government after graduation. Many agencies view these programs as a "win/win" situation for everyone. An agency acquires an employee that is enthusiastic and hardworking, while the student acquires good experience and the opportunity for possible employment after graduation.

Increase your chances of success by matching up your area of interest with the mission of an agency you are interested in. For example, business majors may find a better match at the U.S. Department of Commerce than at the U.S. Fish And Wildlife Service. On the other hand, if you're a business major with an interest in nature, you may find work in the accounting department at the Fish and Wildlife Service. You can get information about an agency's mission by requesting a copy of their annual report (which will be sent to you free), or by taking a look at the U.S. Government Manual available in most libraries. It is printed by the U.S. Government Printing Office, and is a powerhouse of important information in your search for the best programs and the best employment opportunities.

The Federal government is the largest employer of students in the United States. By working for the government, students gain valuable work experience while still in school and get paid for it. The U.S. Office of Personnel Management has consolidated the previous programs (e.g., Cooperative Education, Stay-in-School, Federal Junior Fellowship, and Summer Aid Programs) into the new Student Educational Employment Program. The new program combines key features of the old program along with added flexibilities to provide a more effective and streamlined program. The Federal government has always looked to educational institutions to find people who have the skills needed to meet its future employment needs. Students who are U.S. citizens or national residents of American Samoa or Swains Island, non-citizens may be eligible for employment if permitted by a federal agency's appropriation act or are eligible to work under U.S. immigration laws. Students must be enrolled or accepted for enrollment as a degree-seeking student (diploma, certificate, etc.), and taking at least a half-time academic or vocational and technical course load in an accredited high school, technical or vocational school, two year or four year college or university, graduate or professional school. The schedule is flexible and would depend on the needs of the agency you are interested in. Positions are paid and salary is based on education, work experience, and assignment. Thousands of students at different academic levels have participated in this program. Most federal agencies throughout the United States use this program as well as developing additional student, intern or fellowship programs to meet their specific business needs. Every agency of the government requires that you submit a resume and/or an Optional Form 612 which you can get from the Office of Personnel Management or the agency of interest. To apply, contact your school guidance office, career planning and placement office, or federal agency employment office where you are interested in working. To get more information about the program, you may also contact the Office of Personnel Management at the office listed above or call the Career America Connection.

 Internships and Volunteers

(Volunteer Service Program)

The Volunteer Service Program gives students the opportunity to gain career-related work experience while attending school. The program allows one to develop personal and professional skills and enhance their knowledge of public service. The Volunteer Service Program has also been equated to the Internship Program, and in some instances is referred to as the Volunteer Internship Program. In a few agencies there might be the possibility of payment to the student, but this is very limited. There are opportunities in many different government agencies throughout the United States. Students will be doing a variety of functions ranging from policy to research oriented tasks and projects. The assignments are always very rewarding. Students must be enrolled on at least a part-time basis in an accredited high school or trade school, a technical or vocational institution, a college or university, or any other accredited educational institution. Volunteers usually work three to four months on a part-time basis. Volunteers are not permitted to be compensated. There are thousands of students throughout the different agencies who have participated. Students work all over the United States in various agencies. Every agency of the government requires that you submit a resume or OPT. 612 (optional form). This form can be obtained from the office you wish to work for, the Office of Personnel Management listed below, or from the Personnel Office of a government office anywhere in the United States. Most agencies will request letters of recommendation and a copy of your school or college transcript. For official internships, you must also contact your school's career counseling center internship office, as well as the agency of interest. Although most agencies do offer this program, budget constraints may force some offices not to participate each and every year. The list of agency contacts at the end of this section identifies the contact person at the time of publication. If the agency listed does not contain a contact person for the Student Educational Employment Program, you can write or call one of the other contacts listed to see if a program will soon begin at that agency.

The Presidential Management Intern Program (PMI) is an entry level career development and training program designed to attract to the federal service outstanding men and women who are interested in a career in public service. Applicants must be nominated by their graduate school dean, director, or chairperson. Individuals must have management and leadership potential. There is a very rigorous and competitive screening process. Once chosen, the two-year program will have PMIs rotate to federal agencies where they will participate in training conferences, seminars, and Congressional briefings. Recent PMIs have worked on issues related to government reinvention, health care, criminal justice, and the environment. There are opportunities throughout the United States. To obtain an application, you may call or write the Office of Personnel Management or the Career Connection. Graduate degree recipients will have been nominated by their graduate school dean, director, or chairperson. PMIs work full time for two years. Starting salary is a GS-9 ($30,658) plus benefits, with salaries 8% higher in San Francisco, New York City, and Los Angeles. Applicants must first obtain an application and be nominated. Be sure to complete and submit all of the required information to the appropriate address. The number of positions varies based on need, but in the past there have been as many as 400 appointments annually. PMIs work all over the United States in various agencies, departments, and bureaus. Applicants can obtain an application and nomination information from the above address.

State Government Internships For Students

Much like Federal government programs, almost every state offers many opportunities for students to earn money and college credits while they learn about their own unique state government. Unlike some other programs, eligibility for these state programs does not depend upon financial need.

Did you know that:

- States like Arizona offer a Governor's Internship program that hires several interns each year to work on issues such as education, women's issues, and public administration?
- If you are a college student in the state of Hawaii, you can earn a decent hourly wage as an intern assisting a state agency that is working on issues of special interest to you?
- If you are a student and resident of Maine, you can earn a cash stipend and academic credit to work in a state agency of your choice?

Whether you are looking for part time or full time employment, during the school year or just for the summer, the agencies we have listed will give you the information you need to find the job that suits you best.

Many state agencies offer exciting internships, work/study programs, or other special positions designed exclusively for students. Unfortunately, most states lack a central clearinghouse to easily keep track of the numerous positions, let alone the specific qualifications and application procedures for each position. We have provided an up-to-date listing of offices in each state that can assist you in your search for the program that fits your interests, needs, and schedule.

While it is possible to "earn while you learn" in almost every state in this country, you have to know where to look, and that's where this book can help you.

Alabama

* Capital Intern Program

Fax: 205-348-8411

The Alabama Law Institute has announced a new program known as the Capital Intern Program. It was established to train student interns in state government by allowing them to observe and participate in the process of the legislative and executive branches of government.

- One intern will be assigned to work with the Governor and will attend functions with him, as well as participate in the day to day functions of the office.
- There will also be an intern assigned to work with the Lieutenant Governor doing similar work.

I Wanna Get Experience to Get a Better Job

- The House of Representatives will also have an intern that will learn every aspect of the Legislature.

Applicants must be residents of Alabama and be at least a junior at a college or university. Preference is given to students with a keen interest in government. Students work full time for the legislative session. Interns are paid $2,730 for their participation. Send application to the office listed. There are three positions available for the legislative session.

In the state of Alabama, there is a Student Aid Program for students of Alabama schools. The program is similar to an internship, but students must contact the agencies they are interested in to find out if the program is available at that agency. If one needs assistance in locating a number, state personnel will help.

Alaska

 Alaska State Internship

Students need to contact the agency of interest directly, but assistance is available through the following:

Division of Personnel

P.O. Box F

907-465-4430

Juneau, AK 99811

Fax: 907-465-2576

The Alaska State Internship Program provides an opportunity for a student to have planned, productive experience directly related to their field of interest. Interns work throughout the state, including opportunities in the Office of the Governor. The tasks that the student will perform will be based on the student's level of education. At the high school level, student interns will do basic tasks. College interns will be involved in the professional knowledge and skills of an area. Graduate interns solve problems and actively manage a department with some assistance. High school, undergraduate, and graduate students that are residents of Alaska may apply. Full time and part time are options for employment, depending on agency requirements. Funding is limited and wages may vary from agency to agency. Send resume and cover letter to the office listed. The number of positions varies based on need.

The Governor's Internship Program gives students insight into working within the executive branch of government. Interns will be assigned projects based on their respective areas of interest, and will also spend time with the Governor attending meetings and receptions. Other exciting opportunities include but are not limited to the following:

- working in the Press Office, interns will be able to participate in research, press clipping, and monitoring news stories from around the state;
- learning about and participating in the discussion of health care issues by working in the Health and Human Services Department;
- finding out what happens at the local and county level by working in the area of city, county, and local affairs.

Undergraduate and graduate students who are residents of Arkansas may apply. Hours are flexible allowing students to work full time or part time for a semester. These are unpaid positions, but the program will work with the student's university or college to provide academic credit. Four to six positions are available per semester. Send application with resume, two letters of recommendation, and a brief essay to the office listed.

There are two different Internship Programs available in Pennsylvania: the Management Intern Program and the Capital Semester Internship Program. Both programs offer different types of learning experiences and have different requirements. The Management Internship Program is a one-year training experience designed to accelerate the intern's understanding of state government. Interns will get on-the-job training in budgetary operations, employee relations, financial management, management information systems, policy, and program management. The Capital Semester Internship Program offers students the opportunity to earn money and credit while getting practical experience in their area of interest. Job responsibilities will vary, based upon assigned projects.

Management Intern Program

Applicants must be residents of Pennsylvania, and be candidates for master's degrees or have had an advanced degree conferred within 12 months of the starting date. Pennsylvania residents who attend a college or university in Pennsylvania are given preference. The schedule is full time for 18 months. Interns are paid approximately $27,000 per year, plus benefits. The number of positions varies based on need. Applicants must fill out a Management Intern Program application and supplement application and return those materials to a college liaison, where applicants must then be recommended.

Capital Semester Internship Program

Junior, senior, or graduate students who are residents of Pennsylvania attending a four-year college or university and have a 3.0 GPA may apply. Students work full time for 16 weeks, either in the spring or fall. Interns are paid $7.45 per hour. The number of positions varies based on need. Send application, resume, transcript, and one letter of recommendation to the office listed.

Smithsonian Institution Internships and Fellowships

If you have always dreamed of working in a museum, or would like to actually touch a work of art, maybe an internship or fellowship with one of the Smithsonian Museums might be just what you need to fulfill your dream. There are interns and fellows working and studying at all of the various Smithsonian Institution museums and offices. These are not limited in any way to art majors. The fields of interest are wide and varied, and include anthropology, science and technology, linguistics, biology, geological science, astrophysics, conservation, music, and more. Many of the internships do not provide a stipend, but the experience you receive is invaluable. When stipends are offered, they generally are in the range of $300 per week. Internships are for high school, undergraduate, and graduate students to provide them with the experience of working at the Smithsonian, and helping the museum with their shows, exhibits, and other services. Fellowships are usually for predoctoral and post doctoral candidates who would like to use the facilities and services of the Smithsonian to further their research or work.

U.S. Department of State Internships

Anyone who's interested in getting some valuable work experience in fields ranging from accounting and African studies to print making and political science should consider doing an internship with the U.S. Department of State.

The State Department administers U.S. foreign policy and maintains diplomatic relations throughout the world, with 250 Embassies and Consulates abroad, in over 150 countries. In fact, some interns may qualify to be posted to one of these far off, exotic places.

Each year the State Department sponsors various internships in which highly qualified college juniors, seniors, and graduate students have the opportunity to get first-hand knowledge of American foreign affairs. These internships are open only to currently enrolled students who are taking at least one-half of a full time course load, but the types of students they are open to are widely varied, including students studying the following disciplines:

- Accounting
- African Studies
- Architecture
- Art History
- Business
- Communications
- Computer Science
- Criminal Justice
- Economics
- Engineering
- Finance
- Government
- History
- Information Systems
- International Relations
- Journalism
- Latin American Studies
- Law
- Linguistics
- Mathematics
- Natural Sciences
- Personnel Management
- Political Science
- Print Making
- Public Administration
- Public Relations

The State Department hires two types of interns: paid and unpaid. Most internships are in Washington, D.C., but some openings occur each year for interns to serve abroad. Depending on what the Department needs at the time, interns are assigned junior-level professional duties, which may include research, report writing, correspondence, computer science, analysis of issues, and more. Women and minorities are particularly encouraged to apply for these internships.

Unpaid Internships

These interns usually serve for one semester or quarter during the academic year, or approximately 10 weeks during the summer, and are expected to work a 40 hour week. The Government will not defray any expenses associated with unpaid internships; however, many colleges give academic credit for completing an internship.

Paid Internships

Paid internships are limited and available during the summer only. Interns serve for a minimum of ten weeks.

Candidates selected for the program will be appointed at the GS-4 through GS-7 grade levels, depending on their specific qualifications. The salary range is from $18,000 - $25,000 annually. Paid interns also receive paid leave and retirement credit. Competition for paid internships is intense; only 10% of the internships offered by the Department are paid.

How To Apply

All applicants must submit:

- Computer scannable application form DS-1950
- Statement of Interest that should include your objective and motivation in seeking an internship and how your academic courses and other experiences relate to the Bureau or office to which you are applying
- College transcripts
- Employment Data Form

For more complete application procedures and copies of any of the necessary forms, write:

The Under Secretary coordinates U.S. foreign relations on a variety of global issues, including democracy and human rights, population and the environment, narcotics control, migration, and refugees, and oversees activities for four Bureaus: Democracy, Human Rights and Labor; International Narcotics and Crime; Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs; and Population, Refugees, and Migration.

Selections will be made from applicants with demonstrable knowledge of, and interest in, one or more global issues. Unpaid internships are available in Washington, DC.

 Policy Planning Staff

This Staff coordinates different policy decisions between Bureaus and recommends alternatives on prospective policy issues when necessary.

Unpaid internships area available in Washington, D.C., year-round.

 United States Mission to the United Nations

The United States Mission to the United Nations was established to assist the President and the Department of State in conducting U.S. policy at the United Nations. It carries out our nation's participation in the world body, and recommends what course of action the U.S. should pursue in the world organization.

Internships may be in: political affairs, economic and social affairs, UN resource management, military staff committee, research and reference, legal section, host country affairs, press and public affairs, and regional security office.

Unpaid internships are available in New York City.

Millions in Fellowships and Training Opportunities for Students Interested in a Career in Health Care

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) offer students from high school and above who are interested in pursuing a career in health care all kinds of research training and career development programs. One of the best things about these programs is that they actually pay students during their training period.

Here's just a sample of the money offered by NIH:

For High School Students

- $13,000 per year to work full-time while they study
- $1,600 per month over the summer to study neurosciences
- $800 per month to study cancer
- $800 per month over the summer to study biomedicine

For High School Teachers

- $5,750 for the summer to study physiology

For College Students

- $1,000 to attend a conference on physiology research
- $1,100 per month to study cancer
- $1,400 per month over the summer to do biomedical research
- $1,400 per month to study the neurosciences
- $700 per month to study heart disease

For Graduate Students

- $8,000 per year to study cancer
- $2,400 per summer for research
- $60,000 over six years to earn a PhD/MD degree

For Postdoctoral Students

- $42,000 per year to study your specialty
- $30,000 to study biomedicine in Finland for a year
- $45,000 to study your specialty overseas
- $2,500 plus travel, housing, and allowances to study for two months in Japan

These programs aren't just for students who are able to get to the Washington, D.C. area. NIH has made it possible for students all over the U.S. to participate by having two kinds of programs:

Extramural: these programs are located throughout the country at different research institutions, colleges, and universities

Intramural: these programs are located at NIH in the Washington, D.C., area

The assistance and training programs covered are designed to attract students into research careers from all levels of school, including:

- high school
- college
- graduate schools
- medical school
- dental school
- health-professional schools
- postdoctoral trainees
- independent researchers

There are hundreds of fellowships and internships available from NIH. To find out more about them you can request the publication, "Research, Training and Career Development Programs" from the ASK NIH hotline at Ask NIH, Extramural Outreach and Information Resources Office, Division of Research Grants, National Institutes of Health, 6701 Rockledge Dr., Room 1040 MSC 7710, Bethesda, MD 20892-7710; 301-435-0714. This publication is also available online. To access this information, start at the NIH homepage at <http://www.nih.gov/> Next click on Grants and Contracts, then click on Grants page, then Funding Opportunities, then Research Training. You can then select the appropriate level of schooling to discover the fellowships and internships available. Both the book and the online service include: information about eligibility, other programs that may be of interest, the expected funding rates during the current fiscal year, and how to apply. Remember that these programs are not conducted exclusively in Washington, DC, but throughout the world.

I Wanna Government Job

Looking For a Job With the Federal Government

You may hear about the downsizing of the government in the news every day, but did you know that the Federal government hires 432,000 new employees every year? In fact, counting the Postal Service, the federal branch of the government has approximately 2,868,588 loyal workers. The benefits are great, and the average full time salary (excluding postal workers) is $42,610. Not a bad day at the office. These jobs are not just located in Washington, DC, but throughout the U.S. and the world. This could be great way to see the country or live overseas while supporting yourself with a stable government job. Jobs in every profession are represented in the Federal government. There is even a listing later in the chapter of jobs by occupation available and the kind of college majors that may fit the bill. Roughly a third of all government employees have college degrees.

The government has made your task of finding employment a little easier. They have done away with the cumbersome Form SF-171. Now you can send your resume directly to many agencies. You can perform your personal job search by using your telephone, your personal computer, or by visiting a touch screen computer kiosk located in various locations nationwide (a listing is provided on page 675). In addition, there are several automated systems available on the Federal Employment Information Superhighway which are noted below.

The Office of Personnel Management's (OPM) Career America Connection at 912-757-3000 and TDD Service at 912-744-2299 is a telephone-based system that provides current worldwide federal job opportunities, salaries, employee benefits information, special recruitment messages, and much more. You can also record your request to have application packages, forms, and other related information sent to you. This service is available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. There are also local telephone numbers for this nationwide network listed below.

Keep in mind that your state government also hires workers. We have included addresses and e-mail addresses (where available) to help you on your search.

"A study of lottery winners, comparing them with people not involved in lotteries, shows that the winners are not happier than the others now, nor do they expect to be in the future. In fact, the winners rated seven ordinary activities as less enjoyable now, such as talking with a friend, eating breakfast, getting a compliment, reading a magazine, or buying clothes."

Federal Jobs by College Major

To help you choose the right career field, we have prepared the following table that groups federal jobs that are often filled by college graduates with appropriate academic majors. As you study the table, please keep these facts in mind: 1) The jobs listed under each major are usually examples, not an all-inclusive list. 2) Many jobs do not require a college degree; job-related experience is just as good. And 3), you can qualify for a large number of administrative jobs with a degree in any academic major. To illustrate this third point, we are leading off the table with a list of some of the most popular jobs for which any major is qualified.

Federal Occupational Groups

The U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has established occupational groups and series that are used to classify the work of positions. This classification is made in terms of the kind or subject matter of the work, the level of difficulty and responsibility, and the qualification requirements of the work. The classification is made to ensure similar treatment for positions within a class in personnel and pay administration.

Occupational groups have been established for both white and blue collar positions. The following is a list of occupational groups (bold type) and the specific series in each group. Use series "9999" for summer jobs.

White Collar (general schedule)

State Government Jobs

Basic Information

Applying for state government jobs takes time and a lot of follow-up. Below are a few pointers to keep in mind when applying:

- The majority of states require applications which must be filled out properly and in detail. Never assume that the personnel reviewing applications know what you do based on the position title. Even if you are attaching a resume, always complete the application.
- Detailed information will make a difference in your ranking and could make a difference in whether or not you are granted an interview.
- Make sure that applications are sent before the deadline on the announcement.
- If a job has specific qualifications and you have them, be sure to emphasize those qualifications.
- Always send the application to the appropriate agency or department.
- If you send a resume, most states will simply send it back to you along with an application that must be completed.
- Grade levels are used for salary determination which takes education, position, and experience into consideration.
- All states give veterans and those with disabilities preference.
- State employees who have been laid off are hired back before new people are hired.
- If testing is required for the position, be sure to follow up and take the appropriate examination.

I Wanna Get Money And I'm Out of Work

I Wanna Get Money and I'm Out of Work

If you have been laid off or downsized from your job through no fault of your own, then help is out there for you. Unemployment compensation is the government's first line of defense against the ripple effects of unemployment. By cash payments made directly to laid off workers, the program ensures that at least a significant proportion of the necessities of life, such as food, shelter, and clothing, can be met while a search for work takes place. This program is unique in that it is almost totally funded by employer taxes - only three states collect taxes from employees.

Originally, most states paid benefits for a maximum duration of 13 to 16 weeks; most now pay a maximum of 26 weeks, and a few extend them somewhat further. In periods of very high unemployment, individual states may extend the benefits up to 13 additional weeks. Almost all wage and salary workers are now covered by this system.

There are no federal standards for benefits, in terms of qualifying requirements, benefit amounts, or duration of the regular benefits. Which means that every state operates this program somewhat differently. All states do require that a person must have worked a certain amount of time or earned a specified amount of wages to qualify for the program. This is to ensure that the unemployment benefits go to workers who are genuinely attached to the work force. You also must be able and available to work. You would be disqualified for benefits if you voluntarily left a job without good cause, were fired for misconduct, or you refused to take a suitable job.

Your weekly benefit amount depends upon your past wages within certain minimum and maximum limits. The period of past wages used and the formulas for computing benefits from these past wages vary greatly among the states. The number of dependents you have also affects your benefit amount.

If you want to move to another state and still collect unemployment benefits, you can. What happens is that the state you move to will file an Interstate Claim. Your benefits and the length of benefits are determined by the rules set in the state in which you earned your previous wages. In other words, you can't move from Colorado to Connecticut just to get a higher unemployment benefit. You will just get what you would have gotten while living in Colorado, and that's it.

You are allowed to receive benefits if you are participating in a job retraining program. In fact, many of the programs such as the Trade Adjustment Assistance program, will continue to provide you benefits once your unemployment runs out if you still haven't found a job or are participating in a retraining program.

Disaster Unemployment Assistance is provided to any individual who is unemployed as a result of a major natural disaster. In general, people living or working in areas affected by a disaster are eligible for assistance if they are not eligible for unemployment benefits or other wage replacement payments.

As stated earlier, the weekly unemployment benefit amounts varies greatly. In Hawaii, you can earn as little as $5 per week to a high of $347. The length you can receive benefits also varies from a low of four weeks to a high of 26 weeks in Oregon. What follows is a listing of state contacts for unemployment benefits. These offices can tell you the rules for receiving the benefits, as well as the formula used to calculate the amount you would receive. Also included is the general range of weekly payments and the duration of the payments. Remember, certain things such as the number of dependents can affect the amount you receive, and states can extend the duration under certain conditions. Obviously your first point of contact should be your local unemployment office which can be found by looking in the blue pages of your phone book. If you need more information, you may also contact the main office at Unemployment Insurance Service, Employment and Training Administration, 200 Constitution Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20210; 202-219-5200.

I Wanna Get My GED
Or More Adult Education

I Wanna Get My GED

People drop out of or fail to complete high school for many different reasons. But one thing is clear; getting your high school diploma or GED is the key to advancement. You can join the privileged ranks of people like Bill Cosby, Mary Lou Retton, and 10 million other people famous and not so famous who have obtained their GED.

What is a GED and how do you get one? GED stands for General Educational Development. When you take a GED test, it tests your knowledge and ability in five different areas: writing skills, social studies, science, interpreting literature and the arts, and mathematics. This is a way for you to earn your GED diploma which you can then use to apply for jobs, enter training programs, or even attend college!

GED tests are given at sites all across the United States. There are several ways to learn where the nearest GED test site is located. You can contact your local Board of Education, your State Department of Adult Education, or the GED Information Hotline at 800-62-MY-GED. This hotline is operated by the American Council on Education (P.O. Box 81826, Lincoln, NE 68501) which administers the GED tests.

You can take the GED without studying if you feel prepared. However, many people who have been out of school for awhile may need a little time to study. There are different ways to do this. Your local library or bookstore offer a variety of GED study books, many of which come with practice tests. The GED hotline listed above can also provide you with information on how to purchase a practice test. Many local school boards, community organizations, and community colleges offer adult education courses. Your local public television station may also run programs to help you study for the test.

Another wonderful resource is the National Literacy Hotline at 800-228-8813 (Contact Center, P.O. Box 81826, Lincoln, NE 68501). This hotline maintains a database of resources and organizations that focus on literacy and can connect you to literacy resources and contacts in your area.

State Directors of Adult Education

Most of us learned the basics — reading, writing, and math — in school. But there are millions of Americans who never learned how to read, much less mastered any of the other fundamental skills necessary to survive in the world today. Without the ability to read, one can't check the want ads, fill out a job application, or attempt to take a job placement test. The road to literacy is never easy, but it's even more difficult as you get older. It takes a great deal of time and effort to achieve your goal of literacy, but reading is the only way to get ahead.

There are many ways to learn what you missed in high school. Nonprofits across this country have been established to deal with illiteracy. They have programs throughout the United States where volunteers work one on one with participants to improve their reading and math skills. The National Literacy Hotline at 800-228-8813 is designed to put callers in touch with literacy programs close by. You may also contact some of the nonprofits listed below to help a loved one learn to read and enjoy a more satisfying life.

Free Adult Education Training On-The-Job

Program: Workplace Literacy - 84.198

Description: America's workers need to be able to compete in a global economy using high technology and cutting edge production techniques. Unfortunately for both U.S. businesses and workers, much of the available workforce lacks the basic education and skills needed to move ahead into this new type of economy that is tied globally to other countries through advanced computer, telecommunications, and other information systems.

The National Workplace Literacy Program's aim is to create new partnerships among businesses, workers, and educators that will make this transition easier for everyone. Since 1988, almost 68,000 workers in more than 360 different businesses have received free literacy training through this program.

What You Can Get: Many of these programs offer:

- literacy and basic skills training
- English as a second language training
- training in speaking effectively
- training in listening effectively
- training in reasoning and problem solving

Who Is Eligible: If you are a worker or employer and would like to start a literacy program in your workplace, contact your State Department of Adult Education (see page 730). In many cases, they can refer you to organizations which provide adult literacy programs, and who may be willing to establish a program at your workplace. You may also contact the Clearinghouse on Adult Education and Literacy, Division of Adult Education and Literacy, 600 Independence Ave., SW, Washington, DC 20202; 202-205-9996. The Clearinghouse links communities with existing resources in adult education and provides information which deals with programs funded by the Department of Education.

Money Available: The National Workplace Literacy Program does award grants to programs which are innovative, demonstration projects, that deal with workplace literacy. The annual budget for this program is $37,516,000.

National Office:

If you would like to apply for a grant or learn more about existing funding programs, contact:

Local Offices:

Listed below you'll find a state-by-state listing of National Workplace Literacy Programs that are currently funded by the U.S. Department of Education. Each entry includes the project title, contact person, address, phone, and participating companies. Keep in mind that you might try to get a job with one of these companies, if you also want to get educated at the same time.

Workplace Literacy Program

Free Help For Migrant Workers Who Want To Get Their GEDs

Program: Migrant Education — High School Equivalency Program - 84.141

Description: Migrant farmworkers who missed out completing high school because of the demands of seasonal work schedules now qualify for a little known program called the Migrant Education High School Equivalency Program. Over 25 different nonprofit groups across the country receive money under this program to offer free help to migrant workers who want to earn their GEDs, enabling them to get better jobs and perhaps go on to college.

What You Can Get: This program provides:

- transportation to and from classes
- weekly stipend
- GED preparation and classroom instruction
- housing for those in the residential programs
- tutorial assistance
- academic and vocational counseling
- career advisement
- assistance in applying to universities, colleges, junior colleges, vocational institutions, military services

Many programs will pay expenses to get students to their sites. Some of the programs are residential programs, where you can live while you are studying to complete your GED. They even give you meals there. Other programs offer satellite sites, which may be within driving range. Your commuting costs can be covered. Remember, these programs are free, so take advantage of them and get your GED.

Who Is Eligible: To be eligible you must be a migrant or seasonally employed worker or their children who, within the last 24 months, has worked a minimum of 75 days in farmwork.

Money Available: The annual budget for this program is $8,161,000.

Free Tutors and Other Services To Help Low-Income School Dropouts Reach College

Program: Talent Search - 84.044

Description: Talent Search is a special program that provides funding to help youth from disadvantaged backgrounds re-enter the educational system, complete high school and go on to the college of their choice.

What You Can Get: Program services include academic, financial and personal counseling on re-entering the school system; career exploration and aptitude testing; tutorial services; information on post-secondary education; exposure to life on college campuses; help in completing college admission and financial aid applications; assistance in preparing for college entrance exams; mentoring programs; special activities for sixth, seventh and eighth grade students; and workshops for the parents of participants.

Who is Eligible: Talent Search programs are sponsored by colleges, public or private agencies or organizations, and, in some cases, secondary schools. Candidates for participation must be between the ages of 11 and 27 years and have completed at least the 5th grade. Two-thirds of participants in any program must be potential first-generation college students from low-income homes.

Money Available: Talent Search awards grants to schools and other agencies to provide services for participants. While students do not receive any direct funds, they can receive help in locating and applying for financial aid. In 1996, $78 million was awarded and over a quarter of a million students were helped. The minimum institutional grant award is $180,000.

Free Help in Getting a College Degree If You Are a Low Income High School Student

Program: Upward Bound - 84.047

Description: Upward Bound helps disadvantaged high school students prepare for college entrance by helping them improve pre-college performance, locating financial aid and other services, including preparation for entrance exams. It also provides these services for students from families where neither parent holds a college degree and for first-generation military veterans.

What You Can Get: Program services include instruction in reading, writing and study skills; academic, financial and personal counseling; exposure to academic and cultural events; tutorial services; information on postsecondary education opportunities; assistance in completing college entrance and financial aid applications; and help preparing for college entrance exams.

Who Is Eligible: Students must have completed the 8th grade and be between the ages of 13 and 19 (except veterans) and demonstrate a need for support. Students must apply before entering 12th grade, however exceptions are made. Students must be from low income families or be potential first-generation college students. Like Talent Search, the program requires that two-thirds of program participants be both from low-income households and be potential first-generation college students. Candidates are chosen on recommendations from local educators, clergy, or social workers.

Money Available: No direct financial help is made available through the program for students, however counselors will help participants locate and apply for aid from other sources. In 1994, $146 million was awarded, and almost 42,000 students received help.

Free Training for Parents To Make Them Better at Doing Homework

Program: Even Start - 84.213

Description: We all want to be better parents, and the U.S. Department of Education wants that, too. It gives money to hundreds of programs across the country that show parents how to become more involved in their children's education. The idea here is that the more involved parents become, the better education their kids will get — more reading at home, more attention to homework assignments, etc. The program is called Even Start, and it focuses on parents of children up through seven years old.

What You Can Get: Even Start is a family literacy program that integrates early childhood education and adult literacy training. It provides adult basic education, including helping parents learn to read or teach English as a second language. It also integrates parenting education with early childhood education. The goal is for parents to become full partners in their child's education and help kids reach their full potential.

Who Is Eligible: The programs are run year round and are open to families eligible for adult basic education, which includes English as a second language and those who have limited reading and writing skills. Child care is provided when parents are taking separate classes. Even Start programs are located in Chapter 1 school districts, which are areas that have predominately low income residents.

Money Available: Even Start has a budget of $102,024,000.

I Wanna Fix Up My Neighborhood

Federal Empowerment Zones Offer Jobs, Job Training and Small Business Help

Each year, the Federal government awards billions of dollars in grant money and low interest loans to communities and nonprofit groups that want to rebuild their neighborhoods. And what makes it even better, if your community falls within a federally designated Empowerment Zone (EZ), your community will actually receive a special preference when you apply for any grant money.

What exactly is an Empowerment or Enterprise Zone? They are specific geographic areas that typically have high unemployment, low incomes, and show a great need for financial and technical help in tackling chronic economic problems. In the case of Empowerment Zones, the Federal government has designated over 100 such areas that require large amounts of money to get things moving in a positive direction.

Entrepreneurs Can Use Empowerment/Enterprise Zones

If you want to start a business, look at starting one in these zones. Just by committing a business to one of these zones, you can get special breaks from the Federal government such as:

- $3,000 tax credit for hiring or training Empowerment Zone employees
- $20,000 additional write offs for tangible property expenses
- low rate tax exempt bond financing

Job Seekers Can Take Advantage of Empowerment/Enterprise Zones

If a business is going to get $3,000 in tax breaks just to train you, job seekers should look at businesses in these zones for ready and available employment. If you don't have the skills employers want to hire you, you can show them where they can get money to train you for free.

There are also a number of employment training programs that will give special consideration if the job seeker lives in one of these zones. The programs that fit this category and are described in detail in this chapter include:

- Money to Provide Poor Kids with Special Job Training
- Money to Train Poor Adults for New Jobs
- Money for Summer Jobs for Poor Kids
- Money to Train Poor Kids in New Job Skills
- Money to Set Up Job Information Centers
- Money to Train High School Dropouts

Fix Up Your Neighborhood

In addition to helping yourself and your business, you can also help your neighborhood. Remember, that's the main reason for the programs. Be sure that your elected officials and local organizations know how to take full advantage of these programs. You might even be able to educate a politician about money he didn't even know existed!

Federal Empowerment Zones

Once an area has been designated by the Federal government as an Empowerment Zone, it becomes eligible to receive special preferences when applying for federal money to help rebuild the area. The federal funding programs outlined in this section provide communities with money to achieve hundreds of different goals, including:

- job training
- summer jobs for kids
- making schools safer
- child care for the poor
- rebuilding public utilities
- drug reduction programs
- environmental cleanup
- low income housing loans
- lead poisoning reduction
- community bank investment
- getting rid of noisy airplanes
- keeping kids out of gangs
- building a local health information database
- helping the homeless

Empowerment/Enterprise Zone Programs

For each program, you'll find the following information:

- Program title: this is the official title of the grant program used by officials in Washington, D.C.
- Contact person: this is the person designated by a particular agency to handle questions about a specific program.
- Telephone number: use this number to get more information on how to apply for these money programs.
- Program description: offers a brief explanation of what the money is used for.
- Type of preference: describes what kind of special consideration Empowerment Zone communities receive when applying for programs.
- Program amount: gives amount federal government has to spend each year on a program.

Individual states have their own Enterprise Zone programs, and among all 50 states, there are over 1,000 areas that have been targeted to receive special financial awards to help in their redevelopment efforts. Following this section of the federal redevelopment programs for Empowerment Zones, you will find a state-by-state listing of programs designed to help communities redevelop. But first, see what's available from the Federal government:

Annual formula grants to entitled metropolitan cities and urban counties and to states for distribution to nonentitled communities. The program allows these entities to carry out a wide range of community development activities directed toward neighborhood revitalization, economic development, and improved community facilities and services.

Type of Preference: States may give priority for Empowerment Zone/Enterprise Community small cities. Entitlement communities may also target funds received to designated areas.

Program Amount: $4.6 billion.

* Money for Drug and Violence Prevention

Programs in Schools

(Safe and Drug-Free Schools and Communities)

Bill Modzeleski

4000 Portals Building

600 Independence Ave., SW

Washington, DC 20202-6123

202-260-3954

The current Drug Free Schools and Communities Program is the Federal government's major effort in the area of drug and violence and education and prevention. The program targets resources where they are most needed. States will receive 50 percent of their funds based on the Title I formula; the other 50 percent will be based on their school age population and states will determine criteria for selecting high need local educational agencies (LEAs) and target funds to these districts. States and local communities continue to have the primary role in developing and implementing drug and violence prevention and education programming. The Department of Education will provide national leadership in the areas of drug and violence prevention through information, technical assistance evaluation efforts, and direct loans.

In addition, the Safe and Drug Free Schools Communities Act authorizes state grants for Drug and Violence Prevention Programs which provide funding to state and local educational agencies as well as governors. The new program authorizes a broader range of prevention activities. Newly authorized activities include mentoring, comprehensive health education, community service and character education, acquisition of metal detectors, and hiring of security personnel. States and local educational agencies will still be required to assess needs and measure program outcomes and use this information to formulate policies and program initiatives. A new national evaluation system will be established to assess the impact of the program.

Type of Preference: none

Program Amount: Estimated to be $565 million for the entire program.

 Money for Urban Colleges to Help in

Redevelopment

(Urban Community Service Program)

Sarah Babson

Center for International Education

U.S. Department of Education

Education and Training Programs

 Money for Low-Income Education Programs

(Title I of the Improving America's Schools Act)

Mary Jean LeTendre

600 Independence Ave., SW

Room 4400 Portals

Washington, DC 20202-6132

202-260-0826

Chapter 1 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act provides extra instruction to help low-achieving students in low-income areas reach high academic standards. Chapter 1 funds, which are distributed to local educational agencies on a formula basis, can be used for a variety of purposes including coordination of services, mentoring and tutoring programs, and after-school and summer educational activities. Empowerment Zones and Enterprise Communities are encouraged to incorporate these pre-existing Chapter 1 resources in their strategic plans. In addition, pending legislation would create a new authority under this program to carry out demonstration projects that show the most promise of enabling children served under the program to meet challenging state standards. Among the projects that could be funded would be those that demonstrate promising strategies of integration of education services with each other and with health, family and other social services, particularly in Empowerment Zones and Enterprise Communities. State and local educational agencies, other public agencies, nonprofit agencies and consortia of those bodies would be eligible for discretionary grants.

Type of Preference: Pending

Program Amount: $7.2 billion for entire Chapter 1 program.

 Money for Gifted and Talented Student Programs

Caroline Warren, OERI

555 New Jersey Ave., NW

Washington, DC 20202 202-219-2206

Under pending legislation, this program would demonstrate that programs and strategies for gifted and talented students can be used to help all students in a school to achieve their potential and to meet challenging state performance standards. The program would target discretionary grants to schoolwide efforts to provide challenging curricula and enriching instruction (often offered in gifted and talented programs) to all students. At least half of the awards will be given to high poverty schools.

Type of Preference: Competitive preference to Empowerment Zones/Enterprise Communities.

Program Amount: Estimated to be $3 million.

 Access To Training and Education Programs

John Fiegle

1250 Maryland Ave., SW

Room 4000 Portals Building

Washington, DC 20024 202-260-2671

Pending legislation would create a new authority to fund the planning and start up of public charter schools in states that have passed legislation approving charter school experiments. In these states, most regulatory requirements have been removed, leaving schools free to sharpen their focus, mission and identity. Charter schools are operated by key stakeholders such as teachers and parents. Under the proposal, state educational agencies or local educational agencies would be able to apply for a single grant of up to three years, in partnership with the teachers, parents, or others developing the public charter school. An application could cover any combination of one or more schools.

Type of Preference: Competitive preference

Program Amount: Estimated to be $6 million.

Chris Ashley

National Park Service

Recreation Grants Division

800 N. Capitol St., NW, Suite 400

Washington, DC 20020 202-343-3700

Under this program, federal grants are provided to local governments for the rehabilitation of recreation areas and facilities, demonstration of innovative approaches to improve park system management and recreation opportunities, and development of improved recreation planning. Eligible activities include resource and needs assessments, coordination, citizen involvement and planning, and program development activities to encourage public definition of goals.

Recovery Action Program grants have a 50 percent local match requirement to local governments for the development of local park and recreation system recovery plans. They assist local efforts to develop priorities and strategies for overall recreation recovery. State, local and private funds may be used as the nonfederal share of project costs. U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development CDBG funds are the type of federal funds used for local match. All properties assisted through this program must be open to the public.

State Enterprise Zones

Rehabilitation grants are matching capital grants (70% federal and 30% local) to local governments for purpose of rebuilding, remodeling, or expanding existing facilities.

Innovative grants are matching (70% federal and 30% local) to local governments to cover costs of personnel, facilities, equipment, supplies or services designed to demonstrate innovative and cost effective ways to enhance park and recreation opportunities at the neighborhood level. Innovative grant funds may be used to address common problems related to facility operations and the delivery of recreation services.

Type of Preference: Priority to applicants located in Empowerment Zones and Enterprise Communities.

State Enterprise Zones Offer Jobs and Small Business Help

Like the Federal Empowerment Zone programs, each state has its own benefit programs for designated areas in need of economic rebuilding. As designated Enterprise Zones, thousands of economically depressed communities all across the country have been earmarked to receive billions of dollars in economic stimulation packages.

Entrepreneurs Can Use Empowerment/Enterprise Zones

If you want to start a business, look at starting it in one in these zones. By simply locating a business in one of these zones, you can receive all kinds of benefits. For example:

- California will pay up to 50% of a new employee's wages in the form of a tax credit.
- In Kansas, if your small town retail store creates two new jobs, you won't have to pay sales tax to the state.
- New Jersey businesses receive a $1,500 tax credit for hiring an employee who lives in the enterprise zone where the business operates.
- New York offers businesses lower utility rates in enterprise zones.
- Texas offers special tax reductions for franchises in enterprise zones.
- Arizona offers women business owners an 80 percent reduction on property taxes.
- Florida offers a $50,000 corporate income tax credit.

By using these generous tax credits, states hope to lure businesses into these economically depressed Enterprise Zones and bring jobs to the area. These efforts to stimulate economic growth in depressed areas will ultimately prove beneficial for hundreds of thousands of citizens.

Job Seekers Can Take Advantage of Empowerment/Enterprise Zones

If you're out of work, try to locate businesses that you'd like to work for in a state-designated Enterprise Zone. Let the business know that they'll receive a big tax break if they hire you. For example:

- Alabama will give an employer $2500 of tax credit for every new employee (they get $2500 for hiring you).
- California will give half the cost of an employee's salary in tax credits (they can hire you at $50,000, but it only costs them $25,000).

I Wanna Fix Up My Neighborhood

- Colorado gives employers $200 toward health insurance for an employee.
- Connecticut gives $500 grants for every job created.
- Indiana gives $7,500 of tax credit per employee (they can pay you $25,000, but it really only costs them $17,500).
- Louisiana gives $5000 if a business hires an ex-aerospace employee.

How to Find Your State Empowerment/Enterprise Zones

If you are not sure where the enterprise zones are located in your state, contact the office listed in the state-by-state listing below.

State by State Listing of Programs

Below you will find a state-by-state listing of Enterprise Zone Programs. The following states have programs in place: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

For each state entry, you will find the number of zones in the state, the incentives available to businesses in those zones, eligibility requirements, and a contact for more information. The state contact is usually located in the Department of Commerce or the Department of Economic Development for the state, and can provide you with a listing of credits, incentives, and zones for the state.

Alabama

Number of Zones: 27 enterprise zones, 8 employment incentive areas. Trade or business must be conducted within the zone.

State Enterprise Zones

In 1985, California legislation was passed enabling the designation of Enterprise Zones and Employment Incentive or "Program" Areas. Both of these programs are collectively known as "Enterprise Zones." The amounts and types of tax credits are the same for both programs. However, enterprise zone companies earn tax credits by hiring participants in Job Training Partnership Act, Targeted Jobs Tax Credit and Greater Avenues for Independence training programs. Program Area businesses earn tax credits by hiring unemployed residents of High Density Unemployment Areas.

Zone and Tax Incentives:

- Sales and Use Tax Credits: 100% for the purchase of qualifying machinery and parts. Limits: Individuals--$1 million; Corporations--$20 million
- Hiring Tax Credit: Up to 50% (declines by 10% each year) of wages paid to each qualified employee
- Business Expense Deduction: Tangible personal property may be deducted as a business expense in the first year it is placed in service. Limit: $10,000.
- Interest Expense Deduction: Deduction from income is allowed on the amount of "net interest" earned on loans made to a trade or business in an enterprise zone.
- Net Operating Loss Carryover: Net operating losses of individuals or corporations doing business in an enterprise zone may be carried over to future years to reduce the amount of taxable enterprise zone income for those years.
- Local enterprise zone incentives include the expeditious processing of plans and permits.
- Reduced utility rates
- Low-interest revolving loans
- Expeditious processing of plans and permits

Eligibility Requirements:

Qualified businesses must:

- Employ at least 50% of its program area employees who are residents of high density unemployment areas; or
- Employ at least 30% of its program area employees who are residents of high density unemployment areas, and contributes to an approved community service program; or
- Have at least 30% of its owners who are residents of high density unemployment areas facility" located in an enterprise zone may claim a tax credit against state income taxes of $500 for each new employee, subject to limitations.

- Double Job Tax Credit for Agricultural Processing. An additional credit of $500 per new business facility employee may be claimed by businesses which add value to agricultural commodities through manufacturing or processing.
- $200 Job Tax Credit for Employer Health Insurance. A taxpayer with a qualifying new business facility is allowed a two-year $200 tax credit for each new facility employee who is insured under a qualifying employer-sponsored health insurance program.
- R&D Tax Credit. Taxpayers who make private expenditures on research and experimental activities (as defined by federal tax law) conducted in an enterprise zone qualify for an income tax credit of 3 percent, subject to limitations.
- Credit to Rehabilitate Vacant Buildings. Owners or tenants of commercial buildings in an enterprise zone which are at least 20 years old and which have been vacant for at least two years may claim a credit of 25% of the cost of rehabilitating each building. The credit is limited to $50,000.
- Credit for Contribution to Zones. There is a 25% credit, up to $100,000 for private contributions to local administrators for enterprise zone development projects and for promoting child care in zones.
- Exemption from state sales and use tax for manufacturing, mining, and aircraft equipment. Purchases of manufacturing machinery, machine tools, and parts are exempt from the 3% sales and use tax statewide.
- Local Government Tax Incentives. Any city or county within an enterprise zone is authorized to negotiate with individual taxpayers who have qualifying new business facilities: (a) an incentive payment equal to not more than the amount of the increase in property tax liability over pre-enterprise zone levels; and (b) a refund of local sales taxes on purchases of equipment, machinery, machine tools, or supplies used in the taxpayer's business in the enterprise zone.

Eligibility Criteria:

South Carolina

Number of Zones: No official zones. In addition to the Jobs Tax Credit Program passed in 1987, the state passed a constitutional amendment in 1988 that allowed counties to enter into joint venture agreements to form multi-county industrial parks. These parks more closely resemble "traditional" Enterprise Zones in that they are created by governments action; encompass a pre-determined geographic area and offer special tax incentives.

Two or more counties create a park by local ordinance and joint agreement (contract). The counties share in the property tax records.

Incentives: There is no longer a credit associated with Enterprise Zones

Job Tax Credits: For firms engaged in manufacturing, processing, warehousing, wholesaling, research and development and service related industries there is a credit against corporate income tax of:

- $4,500 per job in less developed counties;
- $2,500 per job in moderately developed counties
- $1,500 per job in developed counties and
- $3,500 per job in underdeveloped counties

The four classifications have a 10 job minimum to qualify.

Business enterprises locating in a business or industrial park jointly established and developed by two or more counties:

- may qualify for the dollar credit of the participating county which has the greatest dollar credit, regardless the participating county in which the business is located
- are permitted additional job tax credits, for each new full-time job created, of $500 annually for five years, beginning with year two through six after the creation of the job

Expansions which occur within the five-year certification period are also eligible to receive job tax credits. Credits may be applied against corporate income taxes.

I Wanna Fix Up My Neighborhood

- The number of jobs must meet the minimum criteria of 10
- Credits are $300, $600, or $1,000, depending upon the county of location
- Credits are for a five year period for each full-time job created

Multi-County Industrial Park Incentives:

- Special income tax credit
- Businesses are entitled to the greater jobs tax credit allowed for the most disadvantaged county within the multi-county compact at the least job creation threshold; and, the dollar amount of the credit is increased by $500 per year for each employee during the five year tax credit window

Eligibility Criteria:

- The Tax Commission classifies each county as "less developed," "moderately developed," "developed," or "underdeveloped" and may offer tax incentives to qualified businesses throughout the county according to designation
- Classification is determined annually by the county's relative ranking in the state for levels of average unemployment and average per capital income

Legislation was enacted in 1988. Program was expanded in 1993. Legislation authorizes the designation of up to 14 zones. Designation period is seven years. Up to three one-year extensions may be authorized.

Number of Zones: 12

Zone and Tax Incentives:

State tax credits of $21 million are available with 10% held in a reserve fund. The remaining credits are allocated to each zone based on population within the zone with minimums established depending on the size of community. Businesses must be certified by the state before they can incur eligible expenses or claim tax credits. The development zone tax credits include:

- Non-refundable sales tax credit for the amount of sales tax paid on building materials and equipment used in a trade or business.
- A non-refundable 2.5% location credit for the costs of acquiring, constructing, rehabilitating, remodeling, or repairing real property that is used in a trade or business.
- A non-refundable jobs credit for hiring certain target groups equal to 20% of the first $13,000 in qualified wages for the first and second years of employment.
- A non-refundable 2.5 percent investment credit on depreciable tangible personal property used in a trade or business.
- A non-refundable 5% additional research credit on increased expenditures.
- Non-refundable resident credit for employees who are residents of the zone of 10% of the first 2 years wages up to $6,000; a maximum of $600 per employee.
- Non-refundable dependent care credit up to $1,200 per child, per year for the first 2 years of employment.

Eligibility Criteria

Cities, towns, villages, Indian reservations, and, in some cases, counties may apply to designate areas within their jurisdictions as development zones. In order to be considered, the area must meet at least two of the following six criteria:

- The unemployment rate is at least 150% of the state average over the last 18 months
- At least 40% of those residing in the area are members of households that have household income levels at or below 80% of the statewide median household income
- The area is Urban Development Action Grant program eligible
- The property value of the last assessment is lower than the assessment two years earlier
- The percentage of households receiving Aid for Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) in the area is at least 150% of the percentage of households receiving AFDC in the state
- At least 5% of the work force of the locality submitting the application was permanently laid off within the last 18 months

State Enterprise Zones

Areas must also meet the following criteria:

- Continuous border following natural or man-made boundaries
- Contiguous blocks, census tracts, or similar units
- If located within an MSA (Metropolitan Statistical Area), the zone must:
 - Contain less than 5% of the valuation of the property of the city, village, or town
- If located, within an MSA, the zone must:
 - Contain less than 5% of the valuation of the property of the city, village, or town
 - If located in a city or the first class, the population of the area is not less than 4,000 nor greater than 5% of the city's population
- If located in a village, town, or city other than a first class city, the population cannot be less than 4,000
- If not part of a MSA, the population must be at least 1,000 but not more than 5,000
- If located within the boundaries of an Indian reservation, the population must be 5,000 or less

Designation is competitive and based on:

- The degree of distress
- Economic development strategy
- Expansion of employment opportunities for the target population
- Coordination of employment and training programs
- Organizational capacity
- Other impacts

Highlights:

I Wanna New Career
And I'm a Woman

Money and Help For Women Entrepreneurs

Did you know that the recent surge in economic growth is actually being driven by small businesses that are in large part owned by women? That's right — women are starting businesses at twice the rate of men, and it's probably because women are finding that their dual careers as businesswomen and mothers are not being accommodated by big business very well at all. An increasing number of women are finding that rigid corporate structures fail to make allowances for their roles as executives, wives, and mothers. Because of this inflexibility, more and more women are striking out on their own or with a partner that shares a similar philosophy, and these women are finding success on their own terms. Corporate America has held women as a group back long enough, and for that reason, women are launching their own businesses in unprecedented numbers.

When someone mentions the word "entrepreneur", most people conjure up an image of someone like Donald Trump smiling on the cover of some glossy business trade magazine. But these days, chances are that smiling face will be decidedly more feminine looking than Donald's — it might be Donna's face, as in Donna Karan, who grew her apparel business into a million dollar money maker in just a few short years. As with men, hard work and commitment to make a business work are the ingredients women are using to create their own success, and not waiting for others to hand it to them. Just look at some of these incredible statistics that the U.S. Small Business Administration has gathered on women business owners:

- Over the last 15 years, the number of women-owned businesses has almost doubled.
- In that same amount of time, the percentage of women-owned businesses increased by 10%, while those owned by men decreased by as much.
- Over one-third of all businesses are now owned by women.
- Women-owned businesses were awarded over $2 billion in federal prime contracts last year, compared to only $180 million ten years ago, an increase of over ten fold.
- 75% of new businesses started by women succeed, compared to only 25% of those started by men.

Since most people in the U.S. actually work for small businesses, the government has been forced to take notice of this ever-increasing trend toward women-owned businesses. Chances are your new boss or CEO is going to be a woman, not someone like Lee Iacocca. Why else would the Small Business Administration (SBA) put a women's business ownership specialist at over 100 SBA offices across the country? You don't see the Small Business Administration bending over to help men out with special programs — anyone who reads the statistics can see who's going to be the most powerful group of emerging business owners over the next couple of decades.

As you'll see in this chapter, both the Federal and state governments have created special programs to help women business owners compete and succeed like never before.

 Small Business Administration Pilot Program

The Women's Pre-Qualified Loan Program is being tested for a year in Charlotte, North Carolina, and nine other cities nationwide. This program will give the Small Business Administration greater influence on the number of loans extended to women.

This program began on June 1, 1994. Through the program, women business owners can go directly to the Small Business Administration (SBA) for a loan guarantee review, instead of being required to go to a bank first. If the woman business owner qualifies, the SBA will issue a commitment letter that she can present as part of her loan application to a bank. If the bank approves the loan, the application is returned to the SBA for final review. The SBA's decision will be based on the ability of the woman business owner to pay back the loan.

Businesses must be 51% owned and operated by women to qualify for the lending program. Only Mecklenburg County businesses qualify for Charlotte's pilot program. The pilot women's program backs loans up to $250,000. The women's program backs loans up to $250,000, and will guarantee 90% of loans up to $155,000. Bigger loans will be backed 85%. There is no cap on the number of loans that will be processed through the pilot program.

Following the guidelines for the pilot program, women applicants will go to a "facilitator", who will screen applications for the SBA for a small fee. These fees have not been established as of this printing. The program is also being tested in Albuquerque, New Mexico; Chicago, Illinois; Columbus, Ohio; Helena, Montana; Montgomery, Alabama; Louisville, Kentucky; New Orleans, Louisiana; Salt Lake City, Utah; and San Francisco, California. While there is no way to monitor the number of women applicants who are rejected at the bank level under the existing system, the pilot program will work to improve that situation.

For more information, contact the Charlotte SBA office during business hours at 200 N. College St., Suite A2015, Charlotte, NC 28202; 704-344-6463.

 Fight Suppliers Who Won't Give You Credit

Public Reference Branch
Federal Trade Commission (FTC)
Washington, DC 20580 202-326-2222

Often women who have been divorced have trouble establishing credit. And you need credit if you're going to run a business. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) enforces the laws that prohibit creditors and credit bureaus from discriminating against women because of their sex or marital status, and they can send you the free publication, Women and Credit Histories. This pamphlet explains your credit rights under the law, how to get help in establishing your own credit, and what to do if you feel your credit application has been unfairly denied.

 Grants, Loans and Loan Guarantees for Women-Owned Businesses

Contact your state office of Economic Development located in your state capital.

All federal money programs aimed at small business do not discriminate between women and non-women-owned businesses. However, at the state level there are a number of specific money programs that are set aside only for women-owned businesses. The programs vary from state to state and are changing all the time so it is best to check with your State Office of Economic Development in your state capital to insure you have the latest available information. Here is a listing of what a few states offer specifically for women entrepreneurs:

- Illinois has low interest loans up to $50,000
- Iowa has grants up to $25,000 and loan guarantees up to $40,000
- Louisiana has loans and loan guarantee programs up to $250,000
- Minnesota offers low interest loans for up to 50% of your project
- New York offers low interest loans from $20,000 to $500,000
- Wisconsin offers low interest loans for women-owned businesses under $500,000 in sales

 Federal Government Set-Asides For Women Entrepreneurs

Contact your state office of Economic Development located in your state capital

or

Superintendent of Documents

Government Printing Office

Washington, DC 20402 202-512-1800

Many Federal government contracting offices are trying to insure that a certain percentage of their contracts go to women entrepreneurs. Most even have special offices that will help women entrepreneurs sell to their agencies. For help in selling your product or service to the government, contact your State Economic Development Office in your state capital and obtain a copy of Women Business Owners: Selling to the Federal Government. It is available for $3.75 from the Government Printing Office.

 15% Set-Aside for Women Entrepreneurs

Contact your state office of Economic Development located in your state capital.

Not only is the Federal government active in insuring that women get a fair share of government contracts, but many state governments are becoming involved. Some states, like California for example, have passed laws that force their state agencies to give at least 15% of their contracts to women and minority-owned firms. Other states like Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Minnesota, Montana, New Jersey, Oregon, and Washington are among those who are active in insuring that women obtain a fair share of state government contracts. Contact your State Office of Economic Development to see how your business can take advantage of set-asides in your state.

 28 States Offer Free Consulting To Women Only

Contact your state office of Economic Development located in your state capital.

Although every state offers free help to any person wishing to start or expand a business in their state, there are 28 states that have set up special offices just for women entrepreneurs. As an example, Colorado established a women's clearinghouse which provides hands-on assistance with business planning, marketing, financing, and government contracts. They also hold seminars at 16 locations throughout the state. Ohio offers a wide range of free services including loan packaging and marketing research. Contact your State Office of Economic Development to see what your state has to offer. If they don't have a "Women Only" office, don't let that stop you. It just means you'll have to share the help available with the men in your state.

 What To Do If You Suspect Your Bank Denied You Credit Because You Are a Woman or Divorced

Money and Help for Women Entrepreneurs

Credit Practices Division
Federal Trade Commission
Washington, DC 20580 202-326-3758

Women looking for money to start up and run their businesses might run into lenders that discriminate against them simply because they are women or divorced. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) enforces the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, which prohibits any creditor from denying credit to a consumer on the basis of sex or marital status. If you think you've been discriminated against by a lender, contact the Federal Trade Commission. While the Federal Trade Commission won't act on individual complaints, a number of complaints against the same lender may force them to investigate. If necessary, the Federal Trade Commission can take violators to court to get them to stop their illegal practices. If you want your complaint investigated and action taken immediately, contact one of the following agencies, depending on the type of lending institution involved:

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC)

Washington, DC 20570 800-669-3362 (publications)

More people would quit what they're doing and start their own business if they had a small windfall of money to get them started. Here are two government programs that may turn a bad experience into the capital needed to begin a business.

As a business owner, there are times you may come across unscrupulous wholesalers who try to sell you some counterfeit products at cut-rate prices. Instead of risking your business by buying and reselling the bogus products, report the fraud to the U.S. Customs Service. If your complaint, which will be kept completely anonymous, leads to the seizure of counterfeit goods, you could receive a reward of up to $250,000, depending on the size of the case. What small business couldn't use some extra operating capital like that to keep it going?

So you want to start your own business because you've just been fired because you were pregnant, or wouldn't sleep with your boss to get a promotion? Before you go taking out any business loan, contact the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) and report how you think your former boss discriminated against you. The EEOC will investigate your complaint, and if they think there are grounds for prosecuting your former boss, they'll proceed with the case. If they prove the case, you could end up with enough money in back pay and other remedies to finance your own company.

 Health Insurance for Divorcees Who Start Their Own Business

Women Work
1625 K St. NW, #300
Washington, DC 20006 202-467-6346

Under the new law, divorced and separated women and their children can continue to receive the same health insurance coverage they had before they were divorced or separated from their husbands at the group rate. The only difference is that they must pay the premium. This law applies to all private businesses that employ more than 20 people and to federal, state, and local government plans. Depending on the reason for displacement, you may be eligible to continue coverage for up to 36 months. You must contact the health plan within 60 days of the divorce or separation to indicate that you're electing to continue coverage. If the plan refuses to honor the law, contact your state's Insurance Commissioner, and they will investigate your complaint and get you the coverage to which you're entitled. For more information on this law, contact the Women Work at the above address.

 Meet Women Entrepreneurs In Your Neighborhood For Lunch

Office of Women's Business Ownership
U.S. Small Business Administration
409 3rd St., SW
Washington, DC 20416 202-205-6673

One of the biggest problems women entrepreneurs face is breaking into the "old boys" network of successful businessmen, and important opportunities can be lost without access to these kinds of connections. To help women interested in networking with other successful business people, the U.S. Small Business Administration has a new program that pairs up a woman who is just starting out with an experienced female Chief Executive Officer running the same kind of company. This business mentor can help the novice businesswoman make connections that might otherwise take her years to make on her own. Those interested in networking should also think about joining relevant professional associations, such as the National Association of Women Business Owners at 212-922-0465 or the National Association for Female Executives at 212-645-0770, or by contacting their local Chamber of Commerce.

 Seminars On How Women Can Sell to the Government

Office of Women's Business
U.S. Small Business Administration
409 3rd St., SW
Washington, DC 20416 202-205-6673

If you're not sure how to start doing business with the government, you might consider taking a seminar sponsored by the U.S. Small Business Administration on the procurement process. These seminars will give you a complete overview on what you'll need to know and do to get involved in bidding on and landing government business contracts. For information on when these seminars are scheduled in your area, contact the office above, or the Women's Business Ownership Representative nearest you listed elsewhere in this chapter.

 Creative Financing for Women Entrepreneurs

Office of Women's Business Ownership

409 3rd St., SW
Washington, DC 20416 202-205-6673

One of the toughest parts of running a business is finding the capital resources to do it: MONEY. The Women's Business Ownership Office runs seminars on how women can use creative ways to locate financing if they've been turned down for loans by regular banks. For more information about these seminars, contact the office above or the Women's Business Ownership Representative nearest you listed elsewhere in this chapter.

 Free Mentors for New Women Entrepreneurs

Office of Women's Business Ownership

U.S. Small Business Administration

409 3rd St., SW

Washington, DC 20416 202-205-6673

How valuable would it be to your business to find a successful role model who's already gone through what's facing you as a female entrepreneur and who's willing to share her expertise with you at no charge? Through the Small Business Administration's Women's Network for Entrepreneurial Training (WNET) you can be paired up with a successful mentor who will meet with you at least once a week for an entire year, allowing you to learn from her experience and begin networking with other successful business people. If you've had your business going for at least a year and have gross receipts of at least $50,000, you can qualify for the WNET program. For more information, contact the office above or the Women's Business Ownership Representative nearest you listed elsewhere in this chapter.

 Changing Laws to Help Women Business

Owners

Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues

2471 Rayburn Building

Washington, DC 20515 202-225-6740

If you think that the climate for women business owners could be improved by passing a new law, you might think of sending your ideas to the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues. This group keeps track of the issues most important to women across the country and introduces new legislation that can help meet those needs, including those of the community of women entrepreneurs. Recently, a new law was passed that allowed federal funding for U.S. Small Business Administration Demonstration Centers that specialize in offering counseling to women interested in starting and expanding businesses. Contact this office if you have any new ideas or would simply like them to send you information about the most recent legislation currently before Congress that concerns women business owners.

Women's Business Ownership Representatives

Women entrepreneurs have special needs, and the U.S. Small Business Administration recognizes those needs. That's why they've added staff members who specialize in promoting women-owned businesses in the U.S. These Women's Business Ownership (WBO) reps can help solve your unique business problems, such as how to network with other women business owners, where to find financial assistance on the state level, or how to get in on the lucrative government procurement programs, especially the ones that offer preferences to women-owned businesses. The WBO rep serving your area is your best ally in helping you cut through the red tape and direct you to free counseling and other valuable information sources.

"More than twelve hundred women aged 50 to 64 are currently studying in the United States for their first professional degrees, seriously applying themselves to law, dentistry, pharmacy or social psychology, or increasingly, coming out of divinity schools."

Local Woman-To-Woman Entrepreneur Help Centers

The U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) has co-funded 19 Demonstration Centers across the country to assist women interested in starting up and expanding small businesses. What is unique about these programs is that most offer woman-to-woman, one-on-one counseling in all aspects of business, from employee relations, budgeting, and dealing with lenders, to legal, marketing, and accounting assistance. Unlike the help you might receive at an SBA office, these centers offer help by women exclusively for women. These nonprofit centers are public/private-funded ventures, which means they will charge nominal fees for their services, although much less than you'd expect to pay for your own private business advisor.

State Women Business Assistance Programs

The feds aren't the only ones noticing the emerging importance of female entrepreneurship in the U.S. business economy. Many states now have special programs to help new and expanding women-owned businesses get the special assistance they need to succeed. So far, almost half the states offer some kind of assistance to women business owners, from special set-aside programs to help women compete for lucrative government contracts, to nuts-and-bolts, one-on-one counseling, to special low interest loan programs, such as the ones offered by Iowa and Louisiana.

It's important to keep in mind that just because your state doesn't currently have any special programs for women entrepreneurs, that doesn't mean that they won't in the near future. In fact, many states, like Florida and Utah, now have special women's business advocates in the state capital to help bring the needs of women business owners to the attention of their legislators. We all know that many newly elected legislators happen to be women, too. This could mean new business programs for women offered in the future, so keep in touch with your state capital to keep informed on the current status of these programs.

Separated, Divorced, Widowed Women Get Free Help From 1200 Offices

Single mothers deserve respect, as does any woman who suddenly needs to become a principal breadwinner for her family. It's a leap of faith, but looking for career opportunities has never been easier for women than it is today. There are over 1,200 offices across the country that provide job training for single moms and other women who need to start making money because of dramatic changes in their lives due to:

- separation
- divorce
- widowhood
- loss of public assistance
- a husband's long term unemployment or disability

Women Work! is a national network of over 1500 programs sponsored by the National Network for Women's Employment. Services are available to all women, but especially those who are widowed, divorced, homeless, battered, or abandoned. Most programs provide career training, job search, and counseling services. What else? Other types of assistance include:

- safe havens
- support networks
- ways to become self-sufficient
- improved self esteem
- connections to employers
- financial management skills
- counseling
- workshops
- skills training
- job placement assistance
- internships
- tuition assistance

Funded by federal and state money, community resources, and private contributions, these programs are often located in women's centers, local YWCAs, community colleges, universities, and vocational education institutions. Women Work! maintains the most up-to-date catalog of programs in your area.

Some of the programs have included:

Learn Computers in New York City

In New York, the YWCA Reentry Employment Program — in Manhattan — is only one of a number of locations throughout the state where women can receive comprehensive computer and business training. Not just learning to finger a keyboard, but acquiring real marketable skills, such as accounting principles, Lotus 1 2 3, business English, problem solving, and job interviewing techniques. They also sponsor a number of seminars designed to help women find jobs in today's complex job market.

Women Auto Mechanics in Rochester, NY

Women, ranging in age from the late teens to 40 something, have enrolled in the Automotive Technology for Women Program at Monroe Community College in Rochester, NY, a two or three year program — depending on whether you are enrolled on a part or full time basis. Whichever route you choose, you'll spend a lot of time under the hood of an automobile. Ford, GM, Nissan and Toyota dealerships in the Rochester area participate by offering paid summer job opportunities to participants of the program. Upon successful completion of this program, you will have an Associates Degree in Automotive Technology and be eligible to take the eight tests required to become a certified master automotive technician.

Women Construction Workers in Illinois

In Illinois, several Building Opportunity Programs are available around the state to help qualified participants enter vocational training programs and explore non-traditional career paths. They may not always be the glamour jobs, but they certainly pay better. Participants get help registering for classes, and can attend self esteem workshops, hear guest speaker programs, or get expert advice on finding study time as a single parent. Above all, the program offers valuable job development and placement services. For those who need it, financial assistance may be available to help pay for transportation, child care, and books.

Truck Driving in Arizona

The Arizona Women Employment and Education (AWEE) Program trains women to develop job skills that emphasize and expand on their natural talents. Existing skills and personal interests are assessed, then women are placed in programs for which they are most suited. They are encouraged to explore non-traditional careers for women — such as truck driving — or to become electricians, plumbers, or construction workers. These jobs often pay four or more times what a woman might earn as a secretary, and that's an important consideration to women who are the sole wage earner in their family.

Not only can women receive employment and career training, but they can also attend "Fresh Start" days at the Sheraton Ritz Hair Consultants and learn how to look professional on a limited budget.

AWEE sponsors lectures by guest speakers, lunch, and hands-on sessions at the salon. One 19-year-old displaced mother of three young boys received a haircut, highlighting, and makeover through this program.

AWEE also helped a 42-year-old divorced mother of four children, two of which are still at home, pursue her lifelong ambition of becoming a nurse. She was awarded Scholar of the Year.

Women Work! has a number of publications to help displaced homemakers and other women seeking job training dollars. In addition to individual publications on such topics as career options for younger women and programs for displaced homemakers, members can order special discount packages on multiple books and booklets that explain various state and federal targeted employment programs for women.

Separated, Divorced, Widowed Women Get Free Help

Free Training in Transportation Jobs for Women and Minorities

The Federal Transit Administration wants more women and minorities to pursue careers in the transportation field. Each year, the agency awards grants to organizations that provide such specialized training.

For instance, the National Transportation Consortium, in Washington, D.C., offers internships, on-the-job training, and other assistance for women and minorities who are seeking transportation jobs. United Cerebral Palsy, located in Bowie, Maryland, offers disabled high school kids a chance to get hands-on training right at the U.S. Department of Transportation.

In general, the department's Human Resources Program offers:

- employment training programs for women and minorities
- help finding transportation jobs
- help determining where the best jobs are located

Under the program, numerous organizations have received money to help women-owned businesses get started in the transportation field by offering:

- advice on venture capital
- help with surety bonding
- management and technical services
- help contracting with public agencies

Examples of projects in the past include:

- Training programs for inner city youths and entry level female employees to obtain training in skills they'll need to successfully pursue a career in the transit industry.
- Programs for Native American tribes to provide training in bus maintenance and more reliable transit service on their reservations.

If you're interested in a possible career in transportation, the best place to start is with your local transit authority and unemployment office. Grant money is available in each state for organizations and community groups to provide training to women and minorities interested in careers in transportation. Each year new projects receive money to provide training to women and minorities, and the local offices will know of new and existing programs in your area.

Commissions, Committees, and Councils On the Status of Women

Because women so often put the needs of others before their own, they are oftentimes reluctant to seek help for themselves. Feelings of guilt, low self esteem, depression, anger, and stress often accompany the changes that can occur during a woman's life — changes like divorce, separation, job termination or change, abuse, or sexual harassment. Never before have there been more options for women seeking help, whether it is in learning new career skills or finding a support group of other women coping with life's ups and downs that affect all of us at one time or another.

In almost every state, there are Women's Commissions and similar groups that provide direction or assistance to women. Missions and programs vary, but these groups all share the goal of working toward eliminating the inequities that affect women at home and in the workplace. Some commissions are simply advocacy groups, bringing attention to issues that affect women and working to bring about legislative changes that would improve situations that women face. Others provide information and referrals to help women get ahead — some even provide direct services to help women get the training, education, and financial help they need to succeed.

Through research, education, legislative action and special projects, the commissions are a strong voice for women's rights. Areas of interest and support include, but are not limited to:

- Child support laws
- Advancement in non-traditional jobs
- Sexual harassment
- Child care and dependent care programs
- Violence against women
- Housing
- Insurance
- Credit
- Legal rights
- Education
- Employment
- Economic equity
- Appointment of qualified women for all positions of government

Some also provide other services such as:

- Referrals and information on women's issues
- Seminars
- Workshops and/or workshop leaders
- Conferences
- Speakers bureaus
- Public forums
- Publications
- Audio-visual libraries
- Resource directories

Special One-on-One Business Training For Women Only

Are you a woman who wants to start your own business, expand an existing one or move up the corporate ladder? Consider joining AWED (American Woman's Economic Development). Since 1976, AWED has helped over 100,000 women get ahead through formal training, one-on-one business counseling, seminars, and peer support groups. Their volunteer staff of experts (entrepreneurs and professionals) is ready to serve you — no matter who you are, where you live, or what your background might be. Women of all ages, socioeconomic, and ethnic backgrounds and marital statuses have received assistance through the AWED programs.

In 1984, Ebony Kirkland, an African-American woman originally from Costa Rica, decided to start her own business. She had worked as the Assistant Director to the Dean at a local college and had also been a door-to-door interviewer on a part time basis. After knocking on several doors, she soon saw the need for an ethnic marketing research company. With no real training or educational background in this field, she formed Ebony Marketing Research, Inc.

After about a year of working on her own she felt as though she needed some guidance and assistance to help her business grow. She turned to the New York office of American Women's Economic Development (AWED) and enrolled in their business program. According to Ebony, this program "propelled me most to get to the level where I am today."

With their support she has been able to turn a "one person, kitchen table" business into one that generates over a million dollars in revenues each year.

Ebony says that "AWED allows you to build self confidence. Women know that they can be wives and mothers, but they don't know that they can be good businesswomen". At AWED, women are encouraged to take skills such as budgeting, scheduling, and time management that they have developed through running households and transfer them to their own businesses.

Across the country AWED offers:

- structured training and networking for beginners with ideas for home-based businesses to multi-million dollar business owners
- business counseling
- technical assistance and membership support services
- an annual conference that brings together 6,000 women in business

Course offerings include:

- Starting Your Own Business
- Managing Your Own Business
- Business Development Roundtable
- Chief Executive Roundtable and Finance

Entrepreneurial training is available to insure the success of your business at any stage of development. If you are unable to participate in these programs, assistance is available through telephone counseling and a hotline. Fees range from $10 for up to 15 minutes of quick answers to urgent questions, to $35 for an hour and a half of counseling, whether it be in-house or over the telephone.

Business Training For Women Only

For members, course offerings range from $225 for a 10-session program on Starting Your Own Business to $400 for a 26-session course on Managing Your Own Business.

Over 23,000 women have received individual business counseling through AWED, including 90-minute telephone counseling by experts in whatever business they are starting. Almost 5,000 women planning to start or just starting a business have participated in AWED's 10-day, Starting Your Own Business training program.

$10 Million Available to Train Women In the Construction Industry (So why isn't it being used?)

Scholarships are available for women who want jobs in the high paying transportation construction industry — jobs like heavy equipment operators, carpenters, cement masons, electrical specialists, teamsters, and ironworkers. For instance, Portland Community College in Oregon is just one school that offers such scholarships to women. In addition, many programs provide emergency loans for students and graduates, as well as job search and child care referral resources.

These programs are provided through a little known provision in the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991 (ISTEA -"iced tea" to insiders). Through 1997, $10 million has been made available annually for training programs for women in highway construction jobs. Unfortunately, the law also allows states to use these funds for highway construction projects if the training programs don't utilize it first. You can guess where most of the money goes.

In 1993, only $800,000 of the $10 million was used to train women throughout the country. Since the money for women's training programs is already in your state's highway construction fund, you might have to go the extra mile to get the funds for training. Believe me, the payoff is worth the effort. Just remember, you can earn as much in one day in a construction job as you would working an entire week at minimum wage.

Skills Training and On-the-Job Training

ISTEA offers women and minorities help to get highway construction jobs by providing:

- recruitment
- training
- job referral
- child care

You can receive training to become:

- an equipment operator
- a laborer
- a painter
- a steelworker
- a pipelayer
- a plant operator
- a mechanical maintenance worker

Your State Department of Transportation must request permission from the Federal Highway Division Office to use its allocated funds for this training program.

If you live in a state that does not use these funds, you will have to lobby for them. For a small fee, Women Work! The National Network for Women's Employment in Washington, D.C., will send you a guide called ISTEA on Tap that will help you lobby your state for these funds (call 800-235-2732).

Vermont

Women and Minorities in Highway Construction
NNETW
RR 2 Box 66-17
St. Johnsbury, VT 05819

802-476-4040

In Vermont, the Northern New England Tradeswomen (NNETW) has established a Women and Minorities in Highway Construction (WMHC) project to increase the number of women and minorities working in heavy construction and highway occupations. This program provides basic supportive services in outreach and recruitment, screening, referral, placement, followup and support to both men and women who are interested in working in highway construction.

Maine

Women Unlimited

Augusta, ME 04330

207-623-7576

Women Unlimited, a community-based women's employment program in Maine, developed the Women in Transportation program to maximize the economic development potential of ISTEA for women. The program recruited, trained, and placed women in entry-level transportation industry skills, engineering technology, and construction inspection. They even offered a Non-Traditional Occupations (NTO) Camp for girls during the summer of 1993.

Oregon

Portland Community College
Education to Work Program
P.O. Box 19000
Portland, OR 97280

503-244-6111, ext. 7473

Along with the Oregon Department of Transportation, Portland Community College offers an Education-to-Work program for women and minorities through the Building and Construction Program at the college. This program is designed to assist minorities and women in obtaining the necessary pre-apprenticeship education so that they can get highway construction jobs. In addition to providing advocacy and mentoring, the Education to Work Program provides job placement assistance and followup to ensure successful program completion for its participants. Students participating in the program will receive a scholarship to offset tuition costs and materials supplies. For a period of up to two years after completing the program, students can also receive emergency loan assistance.

Landing Construction Contracts

Maybe you don't want to stop at just working in the construction field — you're thinking of owning your own construction company. First enroll in the Disadvantaged Business Enterprises (DBE) program. To make sure that your company is successful and well-run, the DBE program offers support services for women and minorities, such as training and consultants in business management. By participating in this program, you also get a big boost in becoming eligible for large federal contracts — its goal is to use 10% of woman- and minority-owned subcontractors on all highway construction projects.

Money to Train Women In the Construction Industry

To participate in the DBE program, you must be certified in each state in which your company will do business. Certification confirms that you are socially and economically disadvantaged, and that you own at least 51% of the business. You should apply for certification through the Office of Civil Rights within your State Department of Transportation. To learn more, contact the Office of Civil Rights, U.S. Department of Transportation, 400 Seventh St., SW, Washington, DC 20590; 202-366-0471.

Free Training and Jobs for Women Who Want to Work in a "Man's" World

Every day, women are entering the workforce in traditionally "male" jobs, such as welders, construction workers, plumbers, electricians - even garbage collectors. And they're making much more money than they would as secretaries, nurses, receptionists or teachers. How are they getting the training to do this? Many are using little known training programs funded by Uncle Sam.

Women are being trained to be firefighters in California, pipefitters in Massachusetts, and welders in Maine. The training is often free, especially for women who are displaced homemakers or economically disadvantaged in other ways. So why aren't more women taking advantage of these programs? Because most of these training opportunities just aren't advertised or widely publicized.

What you'll find in this section are scores of programs that are available to women who need the training, encouragement, and financial support to pursue a career in a "man's" world. Many programs even provide child care, tuition, and transportation expenses.

Find the programs in your state by using the following list and by contacting local employment and national women's groups — most have gotten money from Uncle Sam to help you compete with men. And many of the training services they offer are free. What's to lose except a low paying job and long hours?

A nationally recognized conference, "Expanding Your Horizons" has the following goals: to foster awareness of the career opportunities available in math and science related jobs among females in grades 5-12; to increase the proportion of young women interested in math, science, technology, and engineering; and to provide an opportunity for young women to meet professional and technical women working in nontraditional occupations.

Eligibility: Targets all females in grades 5-12, their parents, teachers, and counselors. Special emphasis is placed on disadvantaged and minority students.

"Most modern complex societies are rich in possible sources of support when we are making a change. There has been an unprecedented emergence of social groups designed to provide support to those who are seeking change. Over 15,000,000 Americans of all kinds are involved in nearly 500,000 organized groups of this nature."

Millions Set Aside For Welfare Moms To Start Their Own Businesses

If you are on public assistance, you're in luck. Uncle Sam wants to give you the start-up capital necessary to get your business off the ground and keep it flying. The Job Opportunities for Low Income Individuals (JOLI) program can turn any good idea into a money making powerhouse, and it won't cost you a cent. Of all the business startup programs the government offers, this has got to be one of the best.

Under the JOLI program, grants are awarded each year to nonprofit organizations that, in turn, work to create permanent jobs for people who are interested in running their own successful small businesses. As a collaborative partnership, the JOLI projects bring together community support services to lend a hand to those who want to climb that tough ladder of success.

Depending on your state, you can receive:

- loan guarantees
- help getting restrictive asset rules waived
- free child care and transportation
- business skills training
- help with business plans and loan applications
- personal and family development assistance
- ongoing technical advice and feedback

For federal information on grants in your area, contact the federal JOLI office at the Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Community Services, 370 L'Enfant Promenade, SW, Fifth Floor, Washington, DC 20417; 202-401-5282. They have a complete list.

What follows is a listing of the community development organizations that have received federal grant money over the last three years to run JOLI self-employment programs for low-income people. Call the one nearest you for more information on what services are available.

Free Help For Girls and Women Interested in Math and Science

Traditionally, from the time they are in elementary school, and then all the way through college, women have been subtly discouraged from pursuing careers in math, science, and technical fields. Young women were directed to the fields of nursing, teaching, and office management and encouraged to pursue limited careers in these areas. Well, finally the government has taken notice of this bias and started to do something about it.

Under the Women's Educational Equity Act Program, each year the U.S. Department of Education awards a number of local school districts and other nonprofit groups and individuals money to study this problem and develop programs that will help change the climate to be more female friendly in math and science classes across the country.

Many of these projects offer kids and adults alike free training in school and out of school — in math, science, and vocational and technical fields. Check the project in your state for what's going on to change the way math and science are taught in your schools.

Listed below are the current projects that are now receiving funding. To learn more, contact School Improvement Programs, U.S. Department of Education, 400 Maryland Ave., SW, Washington, DC 20202; 202-260-2670.

I Wanna New Career And I'm Over 50

Special Programs to Help the Elderly Get Jobs

America's population is aging and aging fast. By the year 2000, the number of Americans over the age of 65 will exceed the entire population of Canada. Upon retirement, many of these people will discover that their Social Security benefits and pension income just aren't enough to make ends meet.

All across the country there are free job training programs set up just for the elderly who need help in getting the job skills they need even if they:

- haven't worked in a long time
- have never worked outside the home
- have limitations on their ability to work
- live in a small town or in the country
- receive Social Security income
- do not have a high school education

In most states free training and employment services are offered through the Senior Community Service Employment Program and the Job Training Partnership Act Program. This is how the programs work:

Senior Community Service Employment (Title V - 17.235)

Title V of the Older Americans Act offers a special program for the elderly who are in search of employment. This program offers part-time training and employment opportunities for low-income persons 55 years of age and older in a variety of public or private nonprofit community service settings, such as senior centers, nutrition programs, social service agencies, libraries, environmental projects, and many others.

The program provides older persons with minimum wage income and with the opportunity to acquire new skills or upgrade the ones they already have. The program also helps enrollees make an easier transition to the private job market through training, job finding, support, and counseling.

Typical program participants work at jobs such as:

activities coordinator bookkeeper cashier clerk typist custodian data entry clerk day care worker driver food service worker
grounds keeper

Special Programs to Help the Elderly Get Jobs

janitor mechanic museum guard park ranger receptionist salesperson school aide security guard teacher's aide

You can be making up to $30,000 a year and still be eligible for this program. In 1996, 67,000 jobs were subsidized with $410,500,000 obligated exclusively for this program. For more information about the Senior Community Service Employment Program, look at the state listings below or contact Office of Special Targeted Programs, Employment and Training Administration, U.S. Department of Labor, Room N4641, 200 Constitution Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20210; 202-219-5500.

Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA - 17.250)

The Job Training Partnership program trains and places older workers in full- and part-time jobs with private businesses. Program participants not only receive experience on a job, but also an opportunity to develop valuable employment skills and good work habits.

Additional services available to older workers in this program include employment counseling, resume writing help, job searches, and classroom training. Participating businesses who hire JTPA graduates receive financial and tax incentives for doing so. To be eligible for employment assistance, you just need to be facing some obstacles in finding adequate employment.

Over 420,000 total participants will be served with $1,054,813,000 set aside to fund the program. To learn more about JTPA, contact your state office listed below or contact the Office of Job Training Programs, Employment and Training Administration, U.S. Department of Labor, 200 Constitution Ave., NW, Room N4459, Washington, DC 20210; 202-219-6236.

Jobs With the Federal Government

The Federal government is obviously an equal employment opportunity employer, but two agencies make a special effort to employ seniors 55 and over in part time to full time positions. These jobs are not only in Washington, DC, but throughout the United States at Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and Forest Service regional offices. There are a couple of differences between the programs. The EPA hires people at all skill and professional levels and recruits people through six senior citizen organizations. The Forest Service takes part in the Senior Community Service Employment Program described earlier in this chapter. Seniors must be 55 or older and meet income eligibility guidelines. This program is designed to help seniors receive training or skill upgrading, and pays at least minimum wage. Read on to learn more about these important programs for seniors.

* JOBS With The EPA

Senior Environmental Employment Program (SEE)

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency

Office of Research and Development of Exploratory Research

Washington, DC 20460 202-260-2574

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has a special program for hiring senior citizens 55 years and over. When an EPA regional office has a shortage of workers, they notify one of the organizations listed below, which in turn recruit workers. Senior citizens get involved in all kinds of activities from conducting national surveys to fulfilling general administrative tasks. The jobs carry national unemployment, workmen's compensation, Social Security, and health benefits. There are four levels of pay:

Level 1- Xerox operators, messengers, telephone assistants: $6-8/hour

Level 2- secretaries, administrative assistance; $7.25-10/hour

Level 3- writers and editors: $8.50-11/hour

Level 4- professionals with relevant degrees: $10.50-15/hour

For general information, contact the Senior Environmental Employment Program office at the address listed above.

U.S. Forest Service
U.S. Department of Agriculture
Human Resource Programs
P.O. Box 96090
Washington, DC 20090 703-235-8855.

If you are over 55 years of age and meet some income eligibility guidelines, you may be a candidate for the Senior Community Service Employment Program (SCSEP).

This program provides part-time outdoor and indoor employment and training opportunities, while providing community services to the general public. Employees work an average of 20 hours per week at a nearby Forest Service Office in their local community. They are paid at least the federal or state minimum wage, receive training and skill upgrading, health programs, and more.

SCSEP supplements the permanent Forest Service workforce. You can be assigned a variety of jobs including visitor information, receptionist, computer aide, carpenter, researcher, or more.

Over 5,600 seniors are employed through this program with $26,100,000 set aside for their salaries. To learn about the program, contact your local Forest Service office or the office listed above.

Senior Volunteer Opportunities

Shuffleboard, dominoes, bridge, and golf...Excited yet? Wouldn't you rather improve your neighborhood, lead nature walks or teach children to read? Being retired doesn't have to mean spending your afternoons idling chasing a little white ball. And just because now you might find yourself on a fixed income, it doesn't mean that you can't take that trip to Africa that you've always dreamed about. The government has hundreds of ways to help you get excited about your new found free time. Some of these can even pay you a small stipend. Read on to learn more about these opportunities to give a part of yourself to help others. What a satisfying way to spend some of your retirement time and give something back to your community?

 Keep A Fellow Senior Out Of A Nursing Home

(Senior Companion Program - 94.016)
National Senior Service Corps
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-424-8867

Nursing homes have got to be one of the last places people want to spend the remaining years of their lives. Through the Senior Companion Program, you can be matched up with someone who needs just a little help to stay in the comfortable surroundings of their own home, and you can gain a friend in the bargain. As a participant, you will give individual care to other seniors who need help with transportation and shopping, or just sharing their reminiscences with someone that shows interest.

Volunteers must be 60 years of age or older and have a low income. Volunteers usually provide 20 hours a week of service and receive a small paycheck and other benefits. Nearly 14,000 Senior Companions provide 13 million hours of service annually to help more than 36,000 frail elderly stay independent. The federal budget for the program is $43,090,000. For more information, contact the office listed above.

 $3,000 To Help The Kids

(Foster Grandparent Program - 94.011)
National Senior Service Corps
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-424-8867

The Foster Grandparent Program matches low income seniors with young people who need various kinds of special help. Volunteers serve as mentors, tutors, and caregivers for children and young kids with special needs, and can also work in schools, hospitals, and recreation centers in their communities.

To be eligible, Foster Grandparents must be 60 years of age or over, with a low income, and interested in serving infants, children, and youth with special or exceptional needs. Volunteers work twenty hours per week, and receive a small paycheck and other benefits such as transportation costs or uniforms. 80,000 children, teenagers and their families are supported by the services of nearly 24,000 Foster Grandparents each year. The funds allocated from the federal budget for this program is $78,810,000. For more information, contact the office listed above.

 Share Your Know-How

(Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) - 94.002)
National Senior Service Corps
1201 New York Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20525 800-424-8867

You've got 40 years of business experience out there with you on the golf course during your retirement. There are hundreds of businesses and even nonprofit groups starting up each day, run by people who have the energy, but not the experience that you possess. You can lend your expertise to those who need your help the most.

The Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) gives retired people a chance to continue using their professional experience by working with local service organizations doing such things as conducting employment workshops and acting as consultants to nonprofit organizations. You can even work in schools, libraries, hospitals, and other community service centers. RSVP participants can serve from one to forty hours a week, providing assistance to hundreds of services and organizations. Participants are not restricted in income and are not compensated for their service.

450,000 RSVP members serve through more than 60,000 public and nonprofit community agencies. RSVP's annual budget is $44,500,000. For more information, contact the office listed above.

 Be A Big Shot Executive

(Service Corps of Retired Executives - 59.026)
SCORE
409 Third St., SW, Fourth Floor
Washington, DC 20024 800-634-0245

Your spouse may want you to slow down now that you're retired, but every time you walk into a business, you have this sudden urge to help. Instead of getting kicked out of every place you shop, try volunteering with SCORE, Service Corps of Retired Executives. SCORE volunteers are usually retired business professionals who want to share their expertise with the next generation of business owners. You won't get paid as a volunteer, although you may get reimbursed for certain out-of-pocket expenses. SCORE even conducts seminars and workshops covering major considerations for running a business.

Since it began, SCORE has responded to over 3 million requests for assistance and has an annual budget of $3,250,000. If you are interested in becoming one of over 13,000 SCORE members nationwide, contact SCORE at the office listed above.

 Travel The World At Government Expense

Peace Corps
1990 K St., NW
Washington, DC 20526 800-424-8580

The average roundtrip ticket to Nepal will cost you $2,800, Poland is $1,800, and Sudan is $2,100. Who can afford those prices on a fixed income? Become one of the senior Peace Corps volunteers and see the world.

As a volunteer, you will serve for two years, living among the native people, and becoming part of the local community. The Peace Corps sends volunteers throughout Latin America, Africa, the Near East, Asia, the Pacific, and Eastern Europe to share their expertise in education, agriculture, health, economic development, urban development, and the environment. Volunteers receive a stipend and health benefits. Currently over 6,500 volunteers are serving with an annual budget of $231,300,000. For more information, contact the office listed above.

Free or Cheap College Tuition For Seniors

You are never too old if you choose to be young and your education is never finished if you choose to continue. Tuition and basic fees are based on the lowest fees (in-state, in-district, in-county, non-degree seeking, undergraduate etc.). Special fees may apply to some classes. Generally, lab, books and materials are additional, and vary depending upon class. Some other additional fees include parking, health insurance, and a fee for degree seeking and graduate students.

An interested individual should contact the school they wish to attend to find out how to apply for a discount or waiver. Qualifications vary from school to school. Some limitations and restrictions apply such as an income limit, residency, and space availability.

I Wanna New Career And I'm Disabled

Free Job Training, Help and Money for the Disabled

Over 43 million Americans have disabilities of one kind or another. Many of them dream of supporting themselves with good paying jobs but can't make this dream come true because of their disabilities or because their lack of job skills stand in the way of leading independent lives. It's the kind of discouragement felt by many, regardless of their age, ambition, or economic status.

The Federal government has stepped in and funded programs across the country to help the disabled and handicapped reach their goals by providing them with all kinds of services to get them on their way. The help available ranges from free information services, self help groups (for specific disabilities and disabilities in general), free legal aid, and independent living programs, to free money for education, job training, living expenses, transportation, equipment, and mobility aids. You can even get money to have your home retrofitted to make it more accessible to you, given your specific handicap. And if you're denied any of these programs or services, there are several free sources of legal help that can get you what you're legally entitled to.

Typical of the free services available in your state:

- medical examinations and treatment
- vocational evaluation, training, and placement
- disability counseling
- assistive devices
- transportation
- occupational equipment
- rehabilitation engineering
- postemployment services
- independent living training
- student services
- financial assistance
- supported employment
- deaf services

Your state Vocational Rehabilitation office will evaluate your skills, needs, and goals, and work with you to keep you a productive member of society. As their client, they will assist you in getting the equipment you need to do your job, and sometimes even help you with transportation to work. College is also an option. We know of a massage therapist who developed carpal tunnel syndrome, and got a four year college degree paid for so she could be trained for a new profession.

Terri Handshoe was the youngest member of her family, and was the only one who was deaf. In 1977, she dropped out of high school with no plans for the future. Sitting at home soon grew old, so she decided to work on getting her GED. She studied and passed, and a friend suggested that she contact the vocational rehabilitation office to see about furthering her education or vocational training. After working with her counselor, Terri attended a local college for a quarter. Her counselor was able to persuade Terri to transfer to Gallaudet University in Washington, DC, the world renowned school for students who are deaf. During school, vocational rehabilitation provided a much needed interpreter and books. "It was great! I had to study hard, but I didn't have to worry about those things,"

Free Job Training For The Disabled

said Terri, referring to the assistance that she was provided that made getting her education so much easier. Terri went on to complete a graduate degree and is now a program coordinator for the deaf.

Sandy Smith lost her sight in high school because of an operation to treat a brain tumor. She worked with vocational rehabilitation upon her return to school. She liked office work and was very motivated to find a job that would put her new skills to good use. Sandy was hired as a switchboard operator for a major hotel. Because she couldn't see the blinking lights on the multi-line telephone keypad, Sandy couldn't determine which line was ringing. Vocational rehabilitation was able to custom design a plastic overlay which allows pins to pop out whenever a line is ringing. The device cost $3,000 which vocational rehabilitation paid for. They were also able to supply Sandy with a computer so she could put through calls on her own. Sandy is very satisfied with her job, and says, "If you don't try, you'll never know if you could do it."

The three best places where you should begin your search for information about services and money programs for the disabled and handicapped are:

- The Social Security Administration
- your State Office of Vocational Rehabilitation
- Client Assistance Programs

In this section, you'll find descriptions and listings of contacts for these three programs, along with several additional best places for self help and aid for handicapped or disabled individuals.

 Free Money for the Disabled Who Have Worked in the Past

Social Security Administration

800-772-1213

If you're disabled and expect to be so for at least one year, and have worked long enough and recently enough under Social Security, you may be eligible for Social Security Disability Insurance Benefits (DIB). If you are found entitled to DIB, you will receive a monthly check in an amount based on your prior earnings.

If you start back to work after receiving DIB, you have nine months (not necessarily consecutive) to earn as much as you can without affecting your benefits. (The nine months of work must fall within a five-year period before your trial work period can end.) After your trial work period ends, your work is evaluated to see if it is "substantial." This means that your earnings are more than $500. For 36 months after a successful trial work period, if you are still disabled, you will be eligible to receive a monthly benefit without a new application for any month your earnings drop below $500.

Your Medicare coverage will continue for 39 months beyond the trial work period. If your Medicare coverage stops because of your work, you may purchase it for a monthly premium. For more information on "quarters of coverage" and the trial work period, contact the Social Security Administration at the above listed number.

 Free and Low Cost Medical Insurance For the Disabled Who Have Worked In the Past

Medicare Hotline

800-638-6833

If you qualify for the Disability Insurance Benefits (DIB) described above, and have been receiving these payments for at least two years, you will also qualify to receive Medicare Part A for free which provides insurance coverage for hospitalization. You can also receive Medicare Part B for a monthly premium of $46.10. This provides insurance coverage for your doctor visits and testing services. This is the same Medicare coverage those over 65 receive. Remember, there are deductibles and limits of coverage. For instance, doctor visits are covered after you meet the $100 deductible for the year, after which Medicare will pay 80% of the approved rate, and you are responsible for the other 20%. To apply for this medical insurance or to receive the Medicare Handbook which provides detailed information on coverage, contact the hotline listed above.

 Cash For Dependents Of the Disabled

Social Security Administration Hotline 800-772-1213

If you are eligible for Disability Insurance Benefits (DIB) described above, your dependents (wife, husband, children, or and in some cases, grandchildren) may also be eligible for payments on your record. To find out if your dependent is eligible, contact the hotline listed above.

 Money For The Disabled Who Have Not Worked

In The Past

Social Security Administration 800-772-1213

If you are disabled but do not have enough work under Social Security for Disability Insurance Benefits (DIB), you may still be eligible to receive Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits if your income and resources are low enough. To see if you are eligible for SSI, contact the number listed above.

 What To Do When Benefits Are Denied

If you are denied any of the above mentioned Social Security cash benefits — which often happens regardless of the disability or its severity — you can get free legal help to appeal the Social Security Administration's decision on your application. Contact your state or local Department of Welfare and request the name and address of the nearest Legal Services Corporation (LSC) program, and also contact your nearest State Client Assistance Program (CAP) office. Both programs offer low income individuals free legal help and representation in appealing application decisions. The CAP program will either provide you with free legal help and representation for your appeal or they will help you find such aid. Unlike legal help offered under the Legal Services Corporation, CAP services are not determined by your income. On the chance that neither of these agencies are able to help you, contact the Disability Rights Education and Defense Fund (DREDF) at 415-644-2555 or 415-841-8645.

 Free Information for Employers Who Hire the Handicapped

Job Accommodation Network (JAN)

Suite 1

918 Chestnut Ridge Rd.

800-526-7234

Morgantown, WV 26506-6080

800-526-2262 (Canada)

The Job Accommodation Network (JAN) brings together free information about practical ways employers can make accommodations for employees and job applicants with disabilities. The Network offers comprehensive information on methods and available equipment that have proven effective for a wide range of accommodations, including names, addresses, and phone numbers of appropriate resources.

 Free Money for Education and Job Training

If your disability stops you from being able to keep a full time job or from being able to competitively look for a job, your state's Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR) can help. OVR can give you up to $6,000 each year for job training or education. You can use this grant money, which you do not have to pay back, to cover any expenses related to your training or education, including tuition and fees, travel expenses, books, supplies, equipment (computers, motorized wheelchairs, etc.), food allowances, tutoring fees, photocopies, and so on. For more information, contact your state's Office of Vocational Rehabilitation listed at the end of this section.

 Help For the Handicapped to Find Or Create a Job

Your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR) also acts as an employment agency for the disabled and can contact employers for you who have looked favorably on hiring the disabled in the past. OVR will act as a liaison between you and a prospective employer and help them create a job for you by providing needed disability-related job equipment, provide needed transportation or other mobility equipment, or by providing any other help you might need to be able to work at a job for which you're qualified. For example, OVR has provided books in braille and braille-to-speech conversion equipment, and computer-robotics equipment that have allowed disabled individuals to work at a variety of jobs. For more information, contact your state's Office of Vocational Rehabilitation listed at the end of this section.

 Help For the Handicapped Already On the Job

If you are working and become disabled or handicapped, your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR) can provide you with the equipment, transportation, education, training and other help you might need to keep your job. For example, many times an unexpected disability can put someone in a wheelchair. OVR may be able to provide you with a motorized wheelchair so you can continue in your current job. Contact your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation listed at the end of this section for more information.

 Medical Help For the Disabled/Handicapped

Your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation can pay for (or help you pay for) any medical testing or treatment that is expected to help you, as a handicapped or disabled individual, have a more healthy, prosperous and independent life. Contact your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation listed at the end of this section for more information.

 What To Do When OVR Benefits Are Denied

The first place to start when your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation denies you handicap or disability benefits is your nearest state Client Assistance Program (CAP) office. CAP is a free information, referral, and legal service that helps disabled or handicapped individuals appeal a denial by OVR (or another agency). For a variety of reasons, it is not uncommon for a disabled individual to be turned down for services by OVR even when he/she is in fact eligible to receive them. It is often helpful to get a photocopy of section 103 of Chapter 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations of the U.S. Department of Education from your local or county library. These are the federal guidelines that each state OVR must follow when determining eligibility. This part of the code is only a few pages in length and can help you explain to the Client Assistance Program officer why you believe you are eligible even though you've been denied. CAP can take your appeal process from the first stages and all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary — and it won't cost you a penny.

It is also sometimes helpful to contact the state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR) itself and make the executive director aware of your circumstances. When it appears that progress via CAP is stalled or has been dragging on for months, it can also be very helpful to contact the regional commissioner of the Rehabilitation Services Administration (RSA), a branch of the Office of Special Education Programs of the U.S. Department of Education. RSA is responsible for overseeing and funding the state OVR agencies and is generally receptive to a short explanatory phone call and letter from those who believe they can clearly show that they have been wrongly denied OVR services. If they think you've got a case, they'll contact the OVR in question and make sure that they review your application more favorably.

To get in touch with a Rehabilitation Services Administration official, contact the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services, RSA, Washington, DC 20202: 202-205-8870 or 202-205-5482, and ask for the address and phone number of the regional commissioner for the ED-OSERS-RSA office serving your area.

 Three Important Tips When Appealing an OVR

Denial Of Services

1. If your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR) denies you services based on other similar cases in which they have denied other prospective clients, it is important and effective to argue that such reasons for denial are not allowable under federal regulations. The 34 Code of Federal Regulations Chapter III section 361.31(b)(1) states clearly that the barriers faced by a disabled individual are unique to each individual and to each individual set of circumstances.
2. If you have previously been accepted by your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR) as a client and you have gained employment but your disability has not improved and you lose employment due to no fault of your own, then OVR can again provide you with their services to help you regain employment. For more specifics consult again the 34 Code of Federal Regulations, Chapter III and check under the Post-Employment Services sections and Supported Employment sections.
3. If you're currently receiving Social Security Disability (SSD), make sure that your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation (OVR) and Client Assistance Program (CAP) are aware of this fact. Because of the more restrictive SSD definition of what it means to be disabled (compared to OVR), being on SSD almost always automatically qualifies an SSD recipient for OVR services. It is very difficult for OVR to argue otherwise.

 Free Legal Help and Information Services For the Handicapped

If you think you've been wrongly denied benefits or discriminated against because of a disability or handicap, the Client Assistance Program (CAP) will help you fight for your rights when you're denied various types of disability benefits from any disability program. They will help you directly and/or put you in contact with the agencies that can help you. Your state CAP office is listed at the end of this section.

 More Free Legal Help for the Disabled

A national nonprofit law and policy center, the Disability Rights Education and Defense Fund (DREDF) can provide you with direct legal representation and act as co-counsel in cases of disability based discrimination. They also seek to educate legislators and policy makers on issues affecting the rights of people with disabilities. Contact: Disability Rights Education and Defense Fund (DREDF), 2212 Sixth St., Berkeley, CA 94710; 510-644-2555 (Voice/TDD).

 Help to Start a Business

If you dream of owning your own business, but need a little help, call the Small Business Administration (SBA). The SBA can help you think through your business plan, and give you some direction to help your business grow. They even have a Handicapped Assistance Loan program that provides low interest loans and loan guarantees to handicapped individuals or nonprofit organizations operating in the interest of disabled individuals. To learn more about the qualifications and eligibility requirements for the loans, as well as other services available from the SBA, contact the Small Business Administration Answer Desk at 800-8-ASK-SBA or 202-205-7333 (TDD).

State Client Assistance Program (CAP)

The first place to start when your state Office of Vocational Rehabilitation denies your handicap or disability benefits is your nearest state Client Assistance Program (CAP) office. CAP is a free information, referral, and legal service that helps disabled or handicapped individuals appeal a denial by OVR (or other agency). CAP can take your appeal process from the first stages all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary — and it won't cost you a penny.

I Wanna New Career And I'm a Veteran

I Wanna New Career And I'm a Veteran

Veterans have completed their service to our country. It's a service that benefits all of us as a country. Now it is our turn to provide needed services to them. Whether it's help in returning to school, starting a business, or finding a job, the government has programs to give veterans a hand in building a rewarding career and stable future.

Most people have heard of the GI Bill that allows veterans to receive help obtaining a college education. But did you know that disabled vets can receive up to four years of vocational training? There is a program to help homeless vets find and retain jobs, and veterans can get help returning to their old jobs, even if they have been in the service for five years.

Special consideration is given to veterans who wish to start a business and learn how to run it successfully. The Small Business Administration has Veteran Affairs Officers in most offices to help vets become their own boss. Also, don't forget to check out the "I Wanna Start My Own Business" chapter for other great programs.

 Free Help with Veterans Benefits

The Department of Veterans Affairs has toll-free numbers for the convenience of veterans and their dependents. In addition, the Veterans Affairs Federal Benefits booklet and other VA information is available to the public by computer.

 College Money For Service Time After 1985

Contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

It's called the Montgomery GI Bill (Active Duty) Program and it's for individuals who enter active duty after June 30, 1985, serve at least two years and have a high school diploma or an equivalency before the first period of active duty ends. Participants elect to have $100 deducted from their pay and the government contributes up to $400 a month for three years (or $14,400), which all goes into a savings account to be used for education upon discharge. Benefits under this program end 10 years after discharge. Also eligible for this program are those who had remaining entitlement under the Vietnam Era GI Bill on December 31, 1989, and served on active duty sometime during the period October 19, 1984 and June 30, 1985 and continued to serve on active duty to July 1, 1988 or to June 30, 1987, followed by four years in the Selected Reserve after release from active duty.

 College Money To Join The Reserves

Contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

Individuals who sign up for a six-year reserve commitment that begins after September 30, 1990 are eligible for the Montgomery GI Bill (Selected Reserve) Program. It's basically the same as the Active Duty Program described above, but Uncle Sam contributes only $197.90 per month for 36 months, and participants are not required to contribute $100 per month.

 College Money For Service Time Before 1985

Contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

If you entered active duty for the first time after December 31, 1976 and before July 1, 1985 you are eligible for the Veterans Educational Assistance Program (VEAP). Under this program, the government contributes $2 for every $1 the participant contributes into a fund to be used for education. The monthly benefit payment will vary depending on the amount and number of contributions. You may be eligible to receive up to a maximum of 36 months. The maximum individual contribution is $2,700 with the government contributing a maximum of $5,400 for a total of $8,100.

Benefits are available up to ten years from the date of discharge or release from active duty. In certain instances extensions are permitted. You are also permitted to attend part time at a lesser rate if you are unable to go full time.

There are a wide variety of educational options available including undergraduate or graduate degree programs, cooperative training programs, a correspondence course, and even studying abroad provided the program will lead to a degree. A state agency or the VA must approve the program.

 Vocational and Educational Counseling For All Vets

Contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

Servicemembers, veterans, and dependents of deceased or totally disabled veterans may receive a full range of educational and vocational counseling and testing. To locate your nearest counseling center, contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

 Vocational Rehabilitation For Vets With Disabilities

Contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

Veterans and servicemembers who served in the Armed Forces on or after September 16, 1940 and have at least a 10% service connected disability may be eligible for up to four years of rehabilitation services. Most veterans participate on a full time basis, but less than full time is possible. Veterans may: 1) enroll in a trade, business, or technical school or in college level institutions; 2) train on the job or in an apprenticeship program; 3) take on-farm training; 4) enter programs which combine school and on-job training; 5) train in special rehabilitation facilities or at home when this is necessary because of serious disability; or, self employment. The government pays for all the costs for tuition, fees, books, supplies and equipment - and may also pay for special services like tutorial assistance.

 Help For Homeless Vets

Veterans Employment and Training Service
U.S. Department of Labor
200 Constitution Ave., NW, (S1316)
Washington, DC 20210 202-219-9110

The Homeless Veterans' Reintegration Projects (HVRP) program was created to assist homeless veterans in getting and retaining jobs. The program also helps to link veterans with other providers including Veterans' Affairs offices and medical facilities, Job Training Partnership Act and social service agencies. These providers can help stabilize the homeless veteran and remove barriers to employment such as lack of skills, clothing, medical care, and job skills.

HVRP uses veterans who have experienced homelessness themselves to reach out to homeless veterans. They go into the streets, shelters, soup kitchens and other places where veterans might be to encourage them to take advantage of the available services. HVRP's goal is to get homeless veterans off the street and into gainful employment with an emphasis on long term job retention.

 Vocational Training For Retired Veterans

Contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

Veterans who were awarded a pension prior to December 31, 1995 may be eligible for up to 24 months — or more under certain circumstances — of vocational training. This includes trade school, college, apprenticeships, and even self-employment assistance. Program participants may also receive up to 18 months of employment-counseling, job search assistance and work adjustment services.

 College Money And Training For Surviving Spouse And Children

Contact your nearest Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office or Vets Center listed at the end of this chapter.

Educational assistance and training benefits are available to spouses and children of:

- 1) Veterans who died as a result of a disability arising from active service.
- 2) Veterans who died from any cause while rated permanently and totally disabled from service-connected disability.
- 3) Service members currently missing in action or captured in line of duty.
- 4) Servicepersons detained or interred in line of duty by a foreign government.

Benefits include $404 per month for attending school full time with lesser amounts for part time education. Individuals may be entitled to receive up to 45 months of education benefits.

A son or daughter must be between the ages of 18 and 26 to receive benefits, however it is possible in some instances to begin before age 18 and continue after the age of 26. The extension cannot go beyond one's 31st birthday. There are a wide variety of opportunities. A few of the many options include pursuing a degree at a college or university (this would include associate, bachelor, master or doctorate degrees). You may also take independent study or cooperative training programs.

Spouses may receive benefits for up to 10 years from the date the VA finds you eligible or from the date of the death of the veteran. Opportunities are extensive and include but are not limited to the following; pursuing a undergraduate or graduate degree, taking a correspondence course, studying abroad (provided the program leads to a college degree), or cooperative training programs.

Loans of up to $2,500 are available to spouses who qualify under the Survivors and Dependents Educational Assistance program. You must have passed the 10 year period of eligibility and have remaining entitlement. The loan program is based on financial need.

 Job Finding Assistance

Contact the State Employment Office or Job Service Office nearest you

Local Veterans Employment Representatives (LVER) are available at state job service offices around the country. They provide free job counseling, testing, training, referral and placement services to veterans. Priority in referral to job openings and training opportunities is given to eligible veterans. The highest priority is given to disabled veterans. LVER also work with the Department of Veterans Affairs to identify and aid veterans who need work-specific prosthetic devices, sensory aids, or other special equipment to improve their employability. They also provide information about unemployment compensation, job marts and on-the-job and apprenticeship training opportunities. Contact the State Employment Office or Job Service Office nearest you and ask for the Local Veterans Employment Representative. The number would be listed under state government in the blue pages.

 Get Your Old Job Back With A Raise After 5 Years In The Military

Contact your nearest Veterans' Employment and Training
Service (VETS) office (see page 951)

The Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1994 (USERRA) clarifies and strengthens the Veterans' Reemployment Rights (VRR) Act of 1940. USERRA continues the protection of civilian job rights and benefits for veterans and members of Reserve components. However, USERRA makes major improvements in protecting servicemember rights and benefits by clarifying the law, improving enforcement mechanisms, and providing Federal government employees with Department of Labor assistance in providing claims.

USERRA expands the cumulative length of time that an individual may be absent from work for military duty and retain reemployment rights for five years (the previous law provided four years of active duty, plus an additional year if it was for the convenience of the Government). There are important exceptions to the five year limit, including initial enlistments lasting more than five years, periodic training duty, and involuntary active duty extension and recalls, especially during a time of national emergency. USERRA clearly establishes that reemployment protection does not depend on the timing, frequency, duration, or nature of an individual's service.

The program also provides enhanced protection for disabled veterans, requiring employers to make reasonable efforts to accommodate the disability. Servicemembers convalescing from injuries received during service or training may have up to two years to return to their jobs (as opposed to the one year provided by the old law).

As under the previous law, USERRA provides that returning servicemembers be reemployed in the job that they would have attained had they not been absent for military service (the long-standing "escalator" principle), with the same seniority, status, and pay as well as other rights and benefits determined by seniority. USERRA also requires that reasonable efforts (such as training or retraining) be made to enable returning servicemembers to refresh or upgrade their skills in order to help them qualify for reemployment. The law clearly provides for alternative reemployment positions if the servicemembers cannot qualify for the "escalator" position. USERRA also reaffirms and clarifies that while an individual is performing military service, he or she is deemed to be on furlough or leave of absence and is entitled to the non-seniority rights accorded other individuals on non-military leaves of absence.

The period an individual has to make application for reemployment or report back to work after military service is now based on time spent on military duty; not the category of service performed. For service of less than 31 days, the servicemember must return at the beginning of the next regularly scheduled work period on the first full day after release from service, taking into account safe travel home, plus an eight hour rest period. For service of more than 30 days but less than 181 days, the servicemember must submit an application for reemployment within 14 days of release from service. For service of more than 180 days, an application for reemployment must be submitted within 90 days of release from service.

USERRA also requires that servicemembers provide advance written or verbal notice to their employers for all military duty unless giving notice is impossible, unreasonable, or precluded by military necessity. In addition, servicemembers are able to use accrued vacation or annual leave while performing military duty.

The Department of Labor, through the Veterans' Employment and Training Service (VETS) provides assistance to all persons having claims under USERRA. If you have questions about the program, please contact your nearest VETS office.

 Job Protection For Reservists And Members Of

The National Guard

Contact your nearest Veterans' Employment and Training Service (VETS) office (see page 951)

Congress has provided certain protection for reservists and members of the National Guard with respect to their civilian employers. The Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1994 (USERRA) provides that a reservist or member of the National Guard will be granted a leave of absence to perform active duty training or inactive duty training and will not be denied benefits due to this obligation. Written orders are not required but reservists and National Guard members are encouraged to inform their employers once they are told of orders that they will need a leave of absence. The leave of absence applies to active duty for training (ADT) and to inactive duty (IDT) which includes drills. Reservists and National Guard members are also encouraged to submit written requests to their employers in order to avoid any misunderstanding. The request cannot be denied by the employer regardless of the format.

There is no limitation on either the frequency or duration of a military leave of absence to perform ADT or IDT so long as the individual has been ordered to perform military training. In this case, his or her job is protected. It is also unlawful to make a reservist or National Guard member use his or her vacation to perform military training.

Upon completion of training, reservists or National Guard members must report back to their civilian job at their first regularly scheduled shift after their arrival home. Upon reporting back they must be allowed to return with seniority, status pay, and vacation as though they had not been gone.

The Department of Labor, through the Veterans' Employment and Training Service (VETS) provides assistance to all persons having claims under USERRA. If you have any questions about the program, please contact your nearest VETS office.

 Unemployment Compensation When Leaving

The Military

Contact your nearest State Employment Office

Ex-service members are eligible for a weekly income for a limited period of time to help meet basic needs while searching for employment. The amount and duration of payments are governed by state laws, which vary considerably. Be sure to bring a copy of form DD-214 when you are applying. Contact your nearest state employment office listed in the blue pages of your telephone book under State Government.

 Government Contractors Who Have To Hire

Vets

Office of the Assistant Secretary for Veterans' Employment and Training
U.S. Department of Labor

Washington, DC 20210 202-219-9116

Contractors or subcontractors with at least $10,000 of work with the Federal government must take affirmative action to hire and promote qualified Vietnam-era and special disabled veterans (who are also covered under the Americans with Disabilities Act). Job openings paying under $25,000 must be listed with the nearest state job-service or employment service office. Qualified Vietnam and special disabled veterans are then given priority referral for openings. Companies are not required to hire all those referred but must have affirmative action plans when applicable. Companies must file a VETS 100 report which shows veteran hiring information. Previous reporting has shown that in one year there were new hires of 112,027 of Vietnam-era veterans and 22,905 of special disabled veterans.

For additional information about the VETS-100 report, contact the office listed above.

You may also get copies of Affirmative Action Obligations of Contractors and Subcontractors for Disabled Veterans and Veterans of the Vietnam Era, Rules and Regulations. DANTES (Defense Activity of Non-Traditional Education Support)

CODE 2, 6490 Saufley Field Rd.

Pensacola, FL 32509-5243

800-452-6616

Troops to Teachers is a Department of Defense program that provides departing Service members and civilian personnel assistance in obtaining teacher certification and placement in schools. The emphasis of the program is relieving shortages of teachers and teachers aides in schools with students of low income families. Priority subjects are math and science.

Eligible participants may receive up to $5,000 to cover tuition, fees, books, housing, and transportation. Qualified schools that employ participants may also receive an incentive grant to offset a portion of the individual's salary.

To get additional information contact the office listed above.

 Job Training Partnership Act For Vets

Veterans Employment and Training Service
U.S. Department of Labor
200 Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20210 202-205-9116

Veterans are entitled to receive training and other help to find suitable employment under the Federal Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA). Programs are primarily designed to meet the needs of service connected disabled veterans, Vietnam-era veterans, and veterans that have recently been separated.

In addition to classroom, vocational, skills-based, and on the job training, JTPA can include:

- counseling, vocational and aptitude testing and career assessment
- remedial education
- on-site industry specific training
- supportive services and other training related assistance.

Programs may be conducted through public agencies and private nonprofit organizations. Veterans are also eligible for other JTPA-funded programs that help economically disadvantaged or dislocated workers find jobs and relocate to other areas or occupations.

To get additional information, contact your nearest Veterans' Employment and Training Service listed on page 951 or the main office listed above.

 Establishment of Veterans Programs

Assistant Secretary for Veterans' Employment and Training
U.S. Department of Labor
200 Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20210 202-219-9110

The Assistant Secretary for Veterans Employment and Training at the Department of Labor is in charge of establishing programs under the Job Training Partnership Act especially for disabled, Vietnam era, and recently separated veterans.

In addition to these programs, the Assistant Secretary also assures proper emphasis on veterans' employment and advancement by employers with federal contracts, carries out all other Department of Labor employment, unemployment and training programs that affect veterans and provides grants to states to fund veterans programs.

For information about available programs in your area, contact your regional or state Veterans' Employment and Training Service listed on page 951 or the main office listed above.

 Special Job Counseling For Disabled Vets

Assistant Secretary for Veterans' Employment and Training Service
U.S. Department of Labor
200 Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20210 202-219-9110

States receive funding from the Federal government to locate disabled veterans and help them find jobs, especially veterans of the Vietnam era. Disabled Veterans Outreach Program (DVOP) Specialists work with employers, veterans' organizations, the Departments of Veterans' Affairs and Defense, and community based organizations to match qualified disabled veterans with jobs and training opportunities. DVOP specialists receive lists of all veterans with service-connected disabilities in each state from the Department of Veterans Affairs. They then contact veterans to inform them of available employment and training programs, vocational guidance and employment counseling. Specialists serve as case managers for veterans enrolled in federally funded job training programs and state services. DVOP's maintain monthly contact with veterans and their employers to make sure that training is completed and that there are no problems. To identify your nearest office and DVOP specialist, contact your nearest job service office located under State Government in the blue pages of your phone book or contact the main office listed above.

 Free Workshop For Vets Leaving The Military

Veterans' Employment and Training Service
U.S. Department of Labor
200 Constitution Ave., NW (S-1316)
Washington, DC 20210 202-219-4953

The Transition Assistance Program (TAP) established a partnership with the Defense Department, Department of Veterans Affairs and the Labor Department to meet the needs of separating service members by offering job search assistance and related services within 180 days of separation or retirement.

TAP consists of comprehensive three day workshops at selected military installations throughout the nation. Workshop attendees learn how to conduct successful job searches, decisions in careers, current occupational and labor market conditions, resume and cover letter preparation, and a realistic evaluation of their employability.

Service members leaving the military with a service connected disability are offered the Disabled Transition Assistance Program (DTAP) which includes the three day TAP workshop and four hours of instruction to help determine job readiness and address the special needs of disabled veterans.

For additional information, contact the main office listed above or your nearest Veterans Affairs Center listed on page 955.

Transition Bulletin Board 800-641-6114

The military services provide civilian transition counseling at least 90 days prior to each servicemembers's discharge in a program called Operation Transition. A Defense Department document (DD Form 2586) is prepared to verify information valuable for civilian jobs and education, including military experience, training history, associated civilian equivalent job titles, and recommended educational credit information. The document is delivered to servicemembers 90 to 180 days before they are scheduled for separation.

The Defense Outplacement Referral System (DORS) refers mini-resumes to potential employers through 272 transition offices worldwide. Resumes are provided to employers by fax or mail, based on the geographic and occupational preferences of each individual. Employers may place job ads on the electronic Transition Bulletin Board (TBB) by calling 800-641-6114. Those employers having the proper computer equipment are able to place their ads electronically; others may mail or fax their ads to TBB. Service members are encouraged to respond to employers with their resumes. In addition, the bulletin board contains information on seminars, events, and other helpful information.

Two special registries have been developed to help separating servicemembers obtain public community service jobs. The "Registry of Public and Community Service Organizations" contains information on organizations desiring to hire servicemembers who are seeking employment in public and community service occupations. Defense matches people and employers on the two registries, and counsels separating servicemembers on how to apply for positions with public and community service organizations. For additional information, contact TBB at 800-641-6114.

Free Tutoring and Counseling for Veterans Interested in a College Education

(Upward Bound - 84.047)

Are you a veteran with a high school diploma or GED? Want to go to college? Then take advantage of a great program called Upward Bound. This FREE program can help you prepare for admission to the college of your choice.

Upward Bound assesses your strengths and weaknesses and provides one-on-one training in math, reading, study skills, and more to prepare you for the rigors of college. They will help you complete financial aid forms, help you study for entrance exams, and even coach you on interview skills. They will do whatever it takes to help make you a success in college.

Veterans Upward Bound is open to veterans who are economically or educationally disadvantaged, with two-thirds of enrollees being first generation college graduates. Veterans' Upward Bound programs are currently located at 34 colleges across the U.S. You do not have to be admitted or enrolled in these colleges, nor do you have to enroll in them after you complete the program.

The current budget for the Veterans Upward Bound is $8,407,272. Contact the program nearest you for more information, or contact the main office at the Division of Student Services, Education Outreach Branch, Office of Postsecondary Education, U.S. Department of Education, 400 Maryland Ave., SW, Room 3060, Washington, DC 20202; 202-708-4804.

Non-Competitive Government Jobs

The Vietnam-Era Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act of 1974 allows federal agencies to make noncompetitive appointments, at their discretion, to federal jobs for Vietnam-Era and post-Vietnam Era veterans. Under the Disabled Veterans Affirmative Action Program, all federal agencies are required to establish action plans to facilitate the recruitment, employment, and advancement of disabled veterans.

Veterans also receive additional preferences including: extra points to employment examinations, first consideration for certain jobs, and preferences for retention in reductions in force. Preference is also provided for: 1) unremarried widows and widowers of deceased veterans and mothers of military personnel who died in service; 2) spouses of service-connected disabled veterans who are no longer able to work in their usual occupations; and 3) mothers of veterans who have permanent and total service-connected disabilities. Individuals interested in federal employment should contact the personnel offices of the agencies of interest. There is also a manual available through the Office of Personnel Management which is designed to assist veterans with employment in the Federal government. Additional information is available by contacting the U.S. Office of Personnel Management and the Federal Employment Centers listed below.

Small Business Administration

In each local Small Business Administration office, there is a person who is designated as the Veterans Affairs Officer (VAO). This person should be your initial contact and resource person for SBA programs. You can contact the VAO by calling the applicable number listed below.

The following are among the programs by the Small Business Administration specifically targeted for veterans.

 Loans To Veterans To Start A Business

Director
Loan Policy and Procedures Branch
Small Business Administration
409 Third St., SW 202-205-6570
Washington, DC 20416 800-827-5722

The United States Congress has authorized the Small Business Administration to make loans for business purposes. However, before SBA can consider a loan application, the applicant must show that funding is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

A letter of declination from the bank is required. These are loans, not grants, and the applicant must demonstrate that the loan can be repaid from the earnings of the business. There are no grants available for starting and maintaining a small business. Veterans who meet SBA loan criteria are placed ahead of non-veterans who apply on the same day (see Special Consideration below).

All veterans must meet the same SBA standard loan criteria as any other applicant. If you are a veteran who is a farmer or from a rural community, contact the United States Department of Agriculture Rural Business - Cooperative Service. For those eligible, SBA offers a broad range of loan programs. Many of these loans are made by financial institutions and are guaranteed by SBA. Regular business loans are available to veterans on a special consideration basis. Loans range from $1,000 to $150,000, with approximately $16 million worth of loans made per year. Contact the Veterans Affairs Officer at your local U.S. Small Business Administration Field office listed below or you can call the national toll free number, 800-827-5722 (800-U-ASK-SBA).

 "Special Consideration" To Start A Business

Office of Veterans Affairs
U.S. Small Business Administration
409 Third St., SW
Suite 6500 800-8-ASK-SBA
Washington, DC 20416 TDD: 202-205-7333

The Small Business Administration (SBA) wants veterans to receive the benefits of all programs the agency provides. To ensure that this happens a policy was adopted giving veterans "special consideration" in agency programs. Special Consideration involves designing unique management training programs specifically for veterans, processing veterans loans applications before non-veteran applications submitted the same day, monitoring loan and procurement activities to measure veteran participation, coordinating training and counseling activities for veterans with other agency departments and allocating a portion of direct loan funds for veterans. To get additional information on SBA services, contact the main office listed above or the VAO (Veterans Affairs Officer) in your nearest SBA office listed below.

 Veteran's Guide To Entrepreneurship

409 Third St., SW
Suite 6500
Washington, DC 20416 800-ASK-SBA

A Veteran's Guide to Entrepreneurship is a publication that was developed by the Office of Veterans Affairs and will assist those servicemembers who choose to go into business for themselves. Many servicemembers choose self-employment for various reasons.

This publication will help provide the needed information on starting a business. The information is very comprehensive and will assist with all aspects of having your own business. In addition, there is also a Veteran's Handbook which also may be very helpful. To get both publications, contact the main office listed above or the VAO in your nearest SBA office listed below.

Veterans' Employment and Training Service and Regional Administrators

The Veterans' Employment and Training Service has 10 regional offices as well as at least one office in every state. The regional offices are administered by Regional Administrators (RAVET), and the state offices are administered by a Director for Veterans' Employment and Training. These offices can give you information about veterans employment and training programs, and reemployment rights for veterans reservists and members of the National Guard.

I Wanna New Career And I'm an Ex-Offender

I Wanna New Career And I'm an Ex-Offender

Since 1985 the nation's prison and jail population has nearly doubled. In 1985, there were 742,579 prison inmates as compared to 1,053,738 in 1994. At about $15,000 per prisoner, the nation's tab for corrections is now approximately $25 billion a year, and the price tag continues to grow each year.

From 1980 to 1993, the number of U.S. ex-offenders released yearly from state or federal prison has more than tripled, jumping from 122,952 to 456,408. If this trend continues, the community of ex-offenders will continue to grow, and at an exponential rate.

Here are some more worrisome statistics. According to recent Justice Department figures, an estimated 63 percent of released state prisoners are rearrested for a felony or serious misdemeanor within three years, 47 percent are re-convicted, and 41 percent are returned to prison or jail; an estimated 23 percent are rearrested for a violent offense -- such as robbery, rape, kidnapping and homicide. Those are frightening statistics but true, nonetheless.

It's not difficult to understand why most ex-offenders end up back behind bars. Once on the street, they face an almost endless series of obstacles such as lack of food, shelter, employment, clothes, start-up money, transportation, and medical services. To add to the problem, most ex-offenders don't possess a marketable skill, are semi-literate, and have no knowledge of community resources available to them. Despite these odds, here are some examples of ex-offenders who have used programs to start a new career:

 After 22 Years In Prison A Masters Degree And His Own Nonprofit

Thomas R. Sims, an ex-offender who spent 22 years in county, state, and federal institutions, is now the executive director of People United Together (P.U.T.), an organization that offers services and programs to offenders, ex-offenders and the community. In 1988, while incarcerated in Holmesburg Prison for theft, he and two other inmates teamed up and developed a community partnership with a Pastor and his congregation in North Central Philadelphia. This led to the development of P.U.T., which was started the following year. Sims credits the Pennsylvania Prison Society for providing help during and after his incarceration. "They were the only organization around that really fought for the rights of offenders. They provided opportunities such as vocational training and educational guidance for guys like me just getting out of prison." Mr. Sims is now completing his Masters Degree in Human Services at Lincoln University.

 Ex-Drug Dealer Becomes Foster Mom And Counselor

Rose Marie Tappa, a former cocaine and heroin addict, has turned her life around with the help of Project Return, an ex-offender support agency located in Milwaukee, WI. After serving nine months in prison for drug dealing, Ms. Tappa turned to Project Return for help. "I was afraid of the future and ashamed of my past. Project Return gave me an opportunity to build my self-esteem and learn how to deal with difficult situations instead of running away from them." In addition to being a full time mother and foster parent, Ms. Tappa works part time for Project Return, is involved in a neighborhood watch program, and speaks of her experiences to halfway houses, prisons, and schools. "I'm here to say that it can work. If I can plant just one seed of that idea in someone's mind, I've succeeded."

 New York Prisoner Gets Help In Nebraska

Glenn Thomas, a former inmate, read about Nebraska's CEGA Offender Referral Service while still in prison in New York and sent for a referral form. He said the New York prison system didn't offer any pre-release services while he was incarcerated and he didn't get any significant help from parole officers. Within five days, Glenn got the form from CEGA, filled it out, and two months later received his list. Within two weeks of his release, he was working full time. Glenn added that the agencies CEGA referred him to also taught him how to interview and got him involved in CURE-SORT, an advocacy group for sex offenders. "CEGA is looking out for the best interest of the inmate...These people are for real and inmates need to trust them," he said.

 Ex-Offender In California Gets Help To Get A Degree And Help Others

Derrick Jones, 38, was serving time for grand theft in California's Donovan State Prison when he heard about the pre-release planning program offered through the Community Connection Resource Center. "They helped me with job referrals, taught me how to write a resume, and helped me find my first job," he said. Now completing his B.A. in human behavior from National University, he works full time at Community Connection counseling ex-gang members and other ex-offenders.

 Chicago Alderman Convicted Of Bribery Gets Help To Re-enter Society

Lou Farina, a former Chicago alderman, served one year in prison, after being indicted on charges of election bribery. Now Director of Public Affairs at Chicago's Safer Foundation, he considers himself a "man with a mission" and acts as a "semi-lobbyist" for ex-offenders. "I work toward getting ex-offenders to become successful taxpaying citizens, help them to go straight, and get a job," he said. "Only after being in prison for a year did I realize what we have to do to get ex-offenders back in the mainstream of society." Mr. Farina first became involved with the Safer Foundation in 1985 during his trial and has worked with them ever since, first as a volunteer and later as a paid staff member.

Federal Program To Help Employers Hire Ex-Offenders

 Federal Bonding Program

Department of Labor
Employment and Training Administration
Room N4456 202-293-5566
Washington, DC 20210 800-233-2258

The Federal Bonding program provides insurance (coverage that protects the employer from employee theft or destruction up to $10,000) for people that the employer's bonding company will not insure. The government provides bonding coverage at no cost to the employer or the applicant. The only standards for qualification are that the applicant be qualified for the job position, not be commercially bondable, and have a firm offer for full time work. Application is made through any one of the 1,700 local offices of the State Employment Service (or Job Service). All ex-offenders are automatically eligible.

Between 1966 and Oct. 1990, 25,000 persons who otherwise would not have received bonding did; during this period there was a default rate of only 1.57%. Research shows that those who received bonding assistance could not have obtained the job without this coverage.

Public and Private Agencies That Help

There are, however, public and private agencies that work to help ex-offenders find another way of life and remain out of prison. Some agencies are funded by state or local governments. Others are supported by charities, religious, and business groups. The organizations listed on page 968 offer after care services such as education/training programs, social services, and job development assistance.

According to our research, Kentucky, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Wyoming offer no after care programs specifically geared toward ex-offenders. These states do have charitable organizations such as the YMCA and YWCA, Goodwill Industries, Salvation Army, and United Way's First Call for Help Program. They can be found in the white business pages of the phone book. These organizations are always good places to contact and may provide other referrals that are useful.

Although most of the organizations listed do not provide legal services, a few like the National Legal Aid and Defender Association (NLADA), listed under National Organizations, provides assistance to legal aid and public defender offices. Although it doesn't provide direct services to individual clients, it does act as a referral service, providing the names of local programs that can provide inmates or ex-offenders with representation.

There are also several national advocacy groups that work to achieve reforms in the criminal justice system. Organizations such as the American Civil Liberties Union, American Friends Service Committee and CURE (Citizens United for the Rehabilitation of Errants) have state programs that offer information on education, policy development, and advocacy organization tactics. Check the white business pages of your phone book for local listings or contact the national office listed on page 968 under National Organizations.

Employment Rights For Ex-Offenders

Ex-offenders may encounter certain discrimination in their efforts to change their lives. Here are some laws and sources that can help overcome these obstacles.

 Arrest and Conviction Records

U.S. Department of Justice
Office of the Pardon Attorney
Room 400, 500 1st St., NW
Washington, DC 20530 202-616-6070

American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU)
132 West 43rd St.
New York, NY 10036 212-944-9800

According to state and federal laws, a potential employer can ask about an ex-offender's arrest or conviction only if it is related to job duties. Federal and state laws largely limit a potential employer inquiring about arrests and convictions or using any information about arrests or convictions in making employment decisions. Without such laws, an employer's use of these records could have a discriminatory impact on minority groups.

I Wanna New Career And I'm an Ex-Offender

For example, someone convicted of tax fraud who applies for a bank teller's position could be denied employment since the required job-related duties involve the handling of money.

Arrest records and conviction records may be treated slightly differently since an arrest does not always mean that charges were filed. Even if charged, a person may have been acquitted.

If a company is collecting the information because it is job-related, some state laws limit the availability of an applicant's history within the company, itself. Access to that information may be restricted to one focal point such as the personnel office. Such restrictions help maintain the applicant's privacy.

 Garnishment and Credit History

American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU)

132 West 43rd St.

New York, NY 10036 212-944-9800

An employer is not allowed to inquire about credit history or financial history without substantiating that it is job-related. If you have a history of bad credit, you can receive a copy of your credit report from the credit bureau in your home town or from TRW, a national credit reporting agency. The first copy from TRW is free. Other national agencies charge a fee. For information, contact TRW Credit Data/Consumer Assistance, P.O. Box 2350, Chatsworth, CA 91313-2350 or call 1-800-392-1122.

Once you have received a copy of your report, check it for errors. You can challenge the mistakes by explaining the error in writing to the credit reporting agency. Valid debts can be postponed or cleared by writing to the creditor and explaining your circumstances. Many creditors will accept small payments as long as they are sent on a regular basis. Credit agencies don't keep criminal records or release that information.

Another way to improve your credit rating is to apply for a secured credit card. Some major banks are now offering this service to people with troubled credit histories.

Your first step is to mail in a cash deposit. The bank will then issue you a credit card with a charge limit equal to your deposit. In other words, if you don't pay your bill, the bank will seize your deposit to cover losses.

Requirements vary from bank to bank. Some banks accept any applicant who can come up with the cash deposit. Others will reward you by converting your card to a regular account if you make reliable payments on a regular basis. Signet Bank offers cards ranging from $300 to $5,000. If you don't have $300, they will open a savings account with any amount you can afford to send, and then issue the card when your deposit reaches $300. Be sure to ask questions to discover any hidden costs or penalties. And, remember, the reason for obtaining a credit card is to re-establish good credit, not dig yourself further into debt.

 Employment Opportunities

In some states, the parole board can restore to ex-offenders certain legal rights. If an ex-offender has only one felony conviction and completes parole without another felony conviction, the parole board can issue a Certificate of Relief from Disability. Those with more than one felony conviction can get a Certificate of Good Conduct if they stay out of trouble for a specified time. However, this depends upon how severe the crime was. Contact your parole office for details.

Getting one of these certificates shows that an individual is serious about obtaining work. They may also make it easier to get some jobs or occupational licenses.

Other Sources Of Help And Info For Ex-Offenders

 Starting A Business With Government Money

Small Business Administration
Small Business Answer Desk
P.O. Box 34500 800-8-ASK-SBA
Washington, DC 20043-4500 202-606-4000

If you are interested in going into business for yourself, you can call the U.S. Small Business Administrations (SBA) Small Business Answer Desk or your local SBA office.. SBA can provide you with information on starting and financing your own business, and counseling and training programs such as SCORE (Service Corps of Retired Executives) and state Small Business Development Centers. Ex-offenders are eligible to apply for the same loan programs as anyone else if not on parole or probation. See the chapter entitled, "I Wanna Start My Own Business."

 Public Employment Service

U.S. Department of Labor
Employment and Training
200 Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20210 202-219-6871

The local public employment service office was established to help unemployed workers, including ex-offenders, find jobs. Services include job counseling and guidance, job-search training, help with preparing a resume or job application, and evaluation of workers' job skills. Offices generally do not have specific programs for ex-offenders, but serve all unemployed or underemployed persons. Some, however, do have special programs for ex-offenders, so be sure to ask when you call. See the chapter entitled, "I Wanna Get A Government Job."

 JTPA Programs

U.S. Department of Labor
Employment and Training
200 Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20210 202-219-6871

State and local governments and businesses work together to provide free job training and retraining programs under the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA). To qualify, individuals must have a low income, so ex-offenders should apply as soon as they are released from prison. The program can provide job counseling, classroom and on-the-job training, and help with job searches.

Ex-offenders can ask their case worker or job counselor for information about JTPA programs. Also, look in the white pages of the telephone book for Private Industry Council or under the city or county government listings for Employment and Training or Human Resources. Individuals can also call the Mayor's office or the national office of the Employment and Training Programs of the U.S. Department of Labor at 202-219-5580.  Social Security Information

Social Security Administration
Office of Public Affairs
P.O. Box 17743
Baltimore, MD 21235 800-772-1213

Social Security is a benefits package of protection for you and your family upon retirement, disability, or survivorship. It is an insurance program and is based on earnings you had while working. Supplemental Security Income (SSI) is an income maintenance program for poor people who are elderly (age 65), blind, or disabled.

Social Security and SSI are not offender/ex-offender programs, as such. They are programs for all citizens of the United States (also, legally admitted refugees and sponsored aliens) if you qualify under the eligibility guidelines. While in prison, benefits are forfeited and will not be paid by SSI or Social Security. However, if any family member was receiving Social Security payments on your entitlement prior to your incarceration, they may still be eligible. If they think they qualify they should contact their nearest local Social Security Office or call the Social Security toll-free information line at 800-772-1213.

 Your Social Security Card

Social Security Administration
Office of Public Affairs
P.O. Box 17743
Baltimore, MD 21235 800-772-1213

Upon release from prison, you may be required to furnish your Social Security card in order to obtain some services or get a job. In many cases, you will be asked to show your Social Security card as evidence of the number assigned to you. If you are age 18 or older and never had a Social Security Number before, you will need to apply for one in person. If you already have a Social Security Number but no longer have your card, you can apply for a card by writing any Social Security office and requesting an Application Form SS-5. Complete the application and mail it back to the Social Security office with the required evidence. The application explains what documents are required, depending on whether you are applying for an original or a replacement card.

 Educational Opportunities

Contact a case worker, job counselor or

National Home Study Council
1601 18th St., NW
Washington, DC 20009 202-234-5100

At least seven of every ten inmates have not completed high school. Prison inmates and ex-offenders who don't have a high school diploma can work toward their G.E.D. (General Equivalency Diploma) by participating in home study (correspondence) courses. Individuals enroll with an accredited educational institution which provides lesson materials for study by students on their own. When each lesson is completed, the student mails the assigned work to the school for correction and grading. Corrected assignments are returned to the student. Many courses provide complete vocational training. Emphasis is on learning what you need to know.

A number of schools offer full four-year high school diploma programs and academic degree programs. The National Home Study Council offers a directory of member schools. The following publications also provide information on educational opportunities:

Bear's Guide to Earning College Degrees Non-Traditionally by C & B Publishing, P.O. Box 826, Venicia, CA 94510; 707-747-5950, 800-770-1379.

Free Help to Write a Resume

Free Help to Write a Resume

You need a job and you need it now. Somewhere, an employer has the job you want. But, how do you two connect? By marketing your job talents, and showing prospective employers you have the skills they need, that's how.

Do you have job talents? Of course you do! Homemakers, disabled individuals, veterans, students just out of school, people already working — they all have skills and experience suited for many good jobs.

What you need to learn is how to market your talents effectively to find the right place for you. Writing a good resume is the best way to let a prospective employer learn about your individual interests and skills.

Developing a Resume

The two main types of resumes are the chronological and the functional. A chronological resume is used when you have had a fairly direct path of development from one position to another within the same field. A functional resume emphasizes your skills and is used by people who change jobs or careers frequently. A good resume will be no more than one page long and will capture the highlights of your career goals, education, and work history.

A resume should include the following information: name, address, telephone number; job objective or career goal; educational history (degrees, certificates, courses, accomplishments); work history including military service (skills, experience); and memberships related to your job objective. Depending on the position for which you are applying, it might also include work related honors or achievements, knowledge of foreign languages, ability to travel or relocate, and security clearance information.

Job Application Forms

Some jobs do not require a formal resume but may call for a written application. Most application forms require basic information such as your name, address, and telephone number; social security number; dates of previous jobs; names and addresses of former employers; and dates of schooling and training. Before you fill out the application, read it through to be sure that you have all of the required information. It is very important that you print the information neatly and legibly. If your application makes a poor first impression, you are unlikely to get any further with that employer.

Although not every job calls for letters of reference, you should ask people if they would be willing to write one for you. Do not list someone as a reference unless you have their permission to do so. Candidates for reference include former employers, teachers, volunteer supervisors, and other people who can accurately assess your character.

Locating Employers

There are several methods of locating potential employers:

International Employment

- Cold Calls — visit employers to see if there are any openings in their organization. You may find yourself in the right place at the right time, but this is a difficult and time consuming method of job hunting.
- Networking — learning about openings through friends, relatives, or co-workers is probably the most successful way to get a job, and referrals of this kind often guarantee an interview.
- Newspaper Ads — classified ads list specific openings, but there is often intense competition for those jobs. Want ads list just a small proportion of available jobs.
- Employment Agencies — public employment agencies provide job hunt services at no cost, but are usually looking for unskilled labor. Private agencies will, for a fee, try to match employers and employees. Some agencies specialize in a particular field, but the main disadvantage is the fee, often paid for by the job seeker. Be sure to check on an agency's policy regarding fees before you begin to work with them.

Applying and Interviewing for Jobs

Once you have found a job that sounds good to you, you must apply for it. This involves writing to the company offering the job and including your resume or a job application. In either case, your cover letter is very important — it is the first thing that your prospective employer will see, and it will say a lot about you. The letter should be personalized and contain information such as where you heard about the job, an indication of your interest, why you are suited for the position, and your interest in interviewing. It should include your name, address, and phone number.

The next step in the job search is the job interview, which involves an exchange between people trying to find out whether they can work together. Before you go to the interview, learn as much as you can about a prospective employer by reading brochures, talking to present employees, calling the local Chamber of Commerce in that area, or visiting the public library. Some important interviewing techniques: Do be honest, be prompt; use a firm handshake; dress appropriately; make eye contact; address interviewer by name; prepare to ask and answer intelligent and thoughtful questions; ask for the job.

After the interview, it is important to maintain contact with the prospective employer. Write a short thank you letter, indicating that you will call at a specific time to find out the status of the position. Call when you said you would. If the answer is no, ask why without being a pest. Knowing why you did not get a job may help you get the next one.

There are several resources where you can turn for help in writing your resume:

- * Your State Employment Service Office will help you pull together your work history into effective categories. Look in the blue pages for the office nearest you, or page 581 for a listing of state offices.
- * Your County Cooperative Extension Service offers a variety of services to assist you in writing your resume. Some offices offer classes, while others have pamphlets. Most of these services are usually free. Since services vary from one area to the next, contact your County Cooperative Extension Service to learn what is available near you. To

Job Hunt on the Internet

Job Hunt on the Internet

The Internet provides a variety of services to let job seekers and employers contact each other without playing the typical phone tag game, and you can learn all about them in this chapter, dedicated to job seekers like you. For your convenience, the sites have been divided into two sections — general and specific job sites — with appropriate subcategories.

The general employment sites section features websites that can be helpful to any job seeker, regardless of occupation or location. The kind of sites you will find will nevertheless vary. Sites such as America's Help Wanted! (<http://www.jobquest.com/>), Career Network (<http://www.careernetwork.com/>), IntelliMatch (<http://www.intellimatch.com/>) and a number of others for example, are sites primarily concerned with resumes. The sites have resume banks where you can submit your resume and wait for an employer to contact you, or they provide services that will compare your resume with posted job openings and notify you of matches. Some resume focused sites even specialize in helping you create a well organized and effective resume. There are also sites that are focused mainly around a search engine — that is, sites that require you to enter an occupation or location of your choice into their search engine which in turn provide you with names and contact information of hiring companies that match your request. The Career Search Launch Pad (<http://www.anet-dfw.com/~tsull/career/cslp.html>), The Job Exchange (<http://www.jobexchange.com/>) and The Job Zone (<http://www.thezones.com/jobzone/>) are best examples of such search engine based sites. If it's straight job listings you are looking for, the Internet offers that as well. Hotflash Jobs (<http://lquest.com/~ntes/jobslst.html>), Jobs & Careers Online (http://www.servonet.com/temp_jc/jchome.html), 123 Careers (<http://www.webplaza.com/pages/Careers/123Careers/123Careers.html>) and USA Jobz (<http://www.adgrafix.com/jobz/index.html>) and several other sites provide just that — straightforward job listings complete with career descriptions and contact information.

Many of the sites that you will find listed below, however, are not limited to one specific service and often combine features such as resume banks and search engines with other helpful services. Of these multi-service sites, some stand out as particularly well organized, powered by exhaustive databases or using new and innovative methods. America Job Bank (<http://www.ajb.dni.us/>), for instance, has been recognized by PC magazine as one of the top 100 sites and can perform a nationwide job opportunity search, link to state search engines, or provide you with employer maintained job listings. Similarly, Career Mosaic (<http://www.careermosaic.com/cm/>), has succeeded in accumulating an exhaustive database of numerous employment opportunities and features a search engine as well as a resume posting service. Sites such as The Virtual Job Fair (<http://www.vjf.com/>) and The Monster Board (<http://www3.monster.com:80/>) also stand out as one of the fastest growing collections of links to over 55,000 job opportunities worldwide.

The section of specific employment sites has several subdivisions, such as international and regional employment, and sections where employment related websites are listed under occupational headings. In the international and regional employment sections, the sites are categorized by country and/or state, and provide information concerning available job opportunities in various parts of the world, with a focus on the United States. The other specific employment related sites, are divided into sections such as entertainment industry, finance market, sciences, careers for minorities and women, computers and technology and several others. The kinds of websites you can find in these categories can also vary: in the Entry Level Jobs category, for example, you may find sites such as the Job Source (<http://www.jobsource.com/>) that offers information about internships, tips for interviewing and connections to other sites along with a listing of entry level and part time job openings as well. Included in this listing would be encounter sites similar to the Student Center, (<http://www.studentcenter.com>) that includes a 35,000 company searchable database and a self-diagnostic test to determine the best career opportunities for you. Similarly, in the Environmental Careers section, the sites vary from those that provide you with listings of environmental sources, and career opportunities such as GreenBeat! (<http://earth.tec.org/greenbeat/mar96>) and more specifically oriented sites such as UWIN (<http://www.uwin.siu.edu/announce/jobs/>) that serves as a clearinghouse of jobs and related opportunities in various water resources fields.

In addition to the general and specific job websites, the following listings also include a section of online classifieds that function as electronic versions of regular newspaper classified advertisements. Generally, however, these sites offer much wider databases and quicker ways to find what you're looking for than the regular newspaper help wanted sections.

Still confused about where to begin? Check out these sites that are dedicated to helping the beginning Internet job searcher find her/his way through the multitude of options: JobHunt: OnLine Job Meta-List (<http://rescomp.stanford.edu/jobs/jobs-all.shtml>), Career Planning Process (<http://www.bgsu.edu/offices/careers/process/process.html>), Occupational Outlook Handbook (<http://stats.bls.gov:80/ocohome.htm>) and Sources of Information on Career Preparation and Training (<http://www.espan.com/docs/sources.html>) offer a variety of services that range from listings of accessible job search resources to self assessment tools and occupational reading archives.

Below you will find a listing of services which have taken the first step in revolutionizing the job market through the Internet. Visit these sites often, because the information on many of them changes almost daily. New sites are added frequently, as well.

The sites below are categorized as follows:

- 1: General Career Sites:
Describes those sites that offer help in more than one area of expertise and are more general in nature when identifying a new job. Some of these sites also offer help in career planning and resume preparation.
- 2: Career Planning:
These sites typically will not offer you specific job opportunities, but will help you develop strategies for finding the right job or in resume preparation.
- 3: Career Specific:
Describes those sites that offer job opportunities in specific career areas.

Career Guide to Industries: Career counselors and job seekers can compare occupational opportunities across a spectrum of U.S. industries with this companion publication to the Occupational Outlook Handbook. Surveys occupations in more than 40 industries, from transportation and communications to health care and the computer and data processing fields. The text and tables describe the nature of each industry and detail employment, working conditions, occupations, training and advancement, earnings, benefits, and outlook. (s/n 029-001-03127-1; $14)

Government Resources

The Federal government spends a great deal of time examining the current labor market, projecting the future market, analyzing wage and benefit data and more. The following offices can answer your questions or direct you to bulletins and other publications for more information as you search for your ideal employment opportunity.

 Current Employment Analyses

Office of Employment and Unemployment Statistics
Bureau of Labor Statistics
U.S. Department of Labor
Postal Square Bldg.
2 Massachusetts Ave. NE
Washington, DC 20212 202-606-6378

Labor force statistics from the Current Population Survey provide a comprehensive body of information on the employment and unemployment experience of the nation's population, classified by age, sex, race, and a variety of other characteristics. The data is published in a variety of sources, including the monthly news release, The Employment Situation, and the monthly periodical, Employment and Earnings. Data uses include economic indicators, measure of potential labor supply, and evaluation of wage rates and earnings trends for specific demographic groups.

 Employment and Unemployment: Monthly Data and Estimates

Office of Employment and Unemployment Statistics
Bureau of Labor Statistics
Postal Square Bldg.
2 Massachusetts Ave. NE, Room 4675
Washington, DC 20212 202-606-6378

This office collects, analyzes, and publishes detailed industry data on employment, wages, hours, and earnings of workers on payrolls of non-agricultural business establishments. In addition, the office provides current data on occupational employment for more industries for economic analysis and for vocational guidance and education planning.

 Employment Projections: 650 Occupations and 300 Industries

Office of Economic Growth and Employment Projections
U.S. Department of Labor
Postal Square Bldg.
2 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room 2135
Washington, DC 20212 202-606-5720

This office produces national occupational employment projections for over 650 detailed occupations for all industries combined, within more than 300 detailed industries.

 Employment Statistics for 800 Occupations and 400 Industries

Office of Employment and Unemployment
Bureau of Labor Statistics
U.S. Department of Labor
Postal Square Bldg.
2 Massachusetts Ave. NE
Washington, DC 20212 202-606-6515

Available occupational employment statistics include data on employment by occupation and industry for about 800 occupations and 400 industries. Published in bulletins, such as Occupational Employment, data are used for evaluation of current and historical employment by industry and occupation and vocational planning.

 Industry-Occupation Employment Matrix

Office of Economic Growth and Employment Projections
Bureau of Labor Statistics
U.S. Department of Labor
Postal Square Bldg.
2 Massachusetts Ave. NE
Washington, DC 20212 202-606-5730

The national Industry-Occupation Employment Matrix provides detailed information on the distribution of occupational employment by industry. Coverage is for over 650 detailed occupations--wage and salary, self-employed, and unpaid family workers, and wage and salary workers for over 300 detailed occupations.

 Wage Surveys: Area, Industry and White Collar

Earnings

Office of Compensation and Working Conditions
Bureau of Labor Statistics
U.S. Department of Labor
Postal Square Bldg.
2 Massachusetts Ave. NE
Washington, DC 20210 202-606-6220

This office conducts three different types of wage surveys. The area and industry surveys provide annual data on averages and distributions of earnings for selected occupations in major industry groups in metropolitan areas. The white-collar salary survey is the annual Professional, Administrative, Technical, and Clerical Survey which is used in the federal pay setting process and provides data on salaries in white-collar occupations from a national sample of establishments.

 White-Collar Salaries

Benefit Levels Division
Office of Compensation Levels and Trends
Bureau of Labor Statistics
U.S. Department of Labor
Washington, DC 20210 202-606-6225

The annual white-collar salary survey provides data on salaries in white-collar occupations from a national sample of establishments. The data available includes averages and distributions of salary rates for about 50 blue collar and 100 professional, administrative, technical, and clerical work levels. The results are published in the annual news release, White-Collar Salaries, and the annual bulletin, National Survey of Occupational Pay.

State Labor Offices

Want to know if teachers are going to be needed in your state in four years? What about nurses? Manicurists? Computer programmers? By contacting your state labor office, you can learn the answers to these questions and more. You can find out which counties offer the highest salaries, and have the fastest growing population of managerial positions. The primary function of each state labor information office is to collect data in conjunction with the Federal government in order to produce employment, unemployment, occupational, and wage information. In addition, each state compiles data showing future manpower needs within the state. By studying labor trends, economic conditions and school enrollments, these agencies can project the future supply and demand for up to 1,000 different occupations. Isn't that incredible? No need to spend four years worrying about whether you will find a job after you graduate from college. You can choose a profession that will have the greatest demand and amaze your friends and family with your ability to predict the future.

An important function of each of these offices is to provide career and job counseling information. If you are looking for a job, each office has access to a state database which identifies available job openings throughout the state. They project which jobs will be in demand in the next 10 to 20 years. Moreover, you can obtain the starting salaries and median wages for occupations. Many states give out free books designed for job seekers, as well as information on how to participate in training programs and vocational education opportunities.

Don't overlook the marketing and business information these offices can also provide. The data can cover both the consumer and industrial markets. You can find five to ten year projections of industries by city and county, how many hotels with fewer than 100 employees operate in a given city, what the fastest growing industries in any county are, and much more. Whether you are establishing a new plant, a real estate business, or a fast food franchise, these offices can help you find the best location with regard to labor availability, customer availability, and competition. You can even discover what wages are being paid by your competitors in the area for similar jobs.

You must remember that no two states operate in the same manner or generate identical data. Contact the state you live in, as well as other potential new locations to find out more about their predictions for the future.

How Do I Check Out a Move?

How Do I Check Out A Move?

Finding a new home can be a nightmare anytime. But what if you don't know the first thing about the area where you are relocating? A bank account and the local real estate ads aren't enough anymore to make the right decisions on a move. You need help. Uncle Sam has sympathy for those who have learned to hate cardboard boxes and unreal-estate agents.

When you move to a new town, there are things you should know before you settle on your dream house. Are some neighborhoods safer than others? What about the schools? Are they as good or better than the schools your children now attend? Are they asking too much for a house in this area? What about the mortgage options? Know the score for yourself. Don't depend on the real estate agent interested in seeing her commission for telling you everything.

A house selling in Washington, DC for $125,000 would only go for $62,000 in Columbus, Ohio. Know the value of homes in your potential city, so you don't pay an arm and a leg for something not worth a foot. There are many government resources to help you on your way to a successful move.

Here are some best kept secrets to make any transition easier:

 Moving Expenses As A Tax Deduction

Contact Your Local IRS Office

or

IRS Forms Line 800-829-3676

You can write off many moving expenses if certain conditions are met. You can even deduct expenses of moving back to the United States if you retire while living and working overseas. Just call the IRS and ask for Form 521, Moving Expenses, which outlines expenses you can and cannot deduct, explains what happens when your company pays for part of the move, details issues such as gas, food, and lodging during the move, and more.

 Get Your Moving Expenses Paid

Employment Training Administration

U.S. Department of Labor

Office of Worker Retraining

and Adjustment Programs

200 Constitution Ave., NW, Room N-5426

Washington, DC 20210 202-219-5577

If you have been laid off from work and are not likely to return to the same employer, you may be considered a dislocated worker. Dislocated workers are those who have been laid off from a job due to factory downsizing, reorganization, trade issues, military downsizing, and more. There are many services available to dislocated workers through the Title III Program which provides for retraining and readjustment assistance for dislocated workers. In many cases, funds are available to assist the dislocated worker in moving to a new location where the worker has a job offer. To become eligible for these services, you must contact your local State Employment Services office or the Job Training Partnership Act office (look in the blue pages of your phone book). Each local office has funds that they can disperse for a variety of services to the worker, including training, child care, job search services, and education.

 Eliminate High Crime Cities

Law Enforcement Support Section
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Gallery Row Bldg., Suite 3R
Washington, DC 20535 202-324-5015

To find a safe little hamlet to raise Junior, you better do some research before you move. Crime In The U.S., the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI) annual report of violent and property crime, contains statistics for many towns with over 10,000 people, and can provide you with information such as the number of murders, robberies, assaults, burglaries, auto thefts, and more, but they do not rank cities. Many libraries carry this publication, or you can call the FBI for information on your city.

 When Weather's Important

National Climatic Data Center
National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration
Federal Bldg.
151 Patton Ave., #120 704-271-4800
Asheville, NC 28801-5001 Fax: 704-271-4876

Weatherheads can take the chill out of moving by contacting Uncle Sam's Climatic Data Center, which can help you move to a sunny location through their book, Comparative Climate Data ($10), covering weather data for 270 major locations. Pick a city and find out if it's warmer, colder, sunnier, or snowier than other cities.

 Move To A City With Lots Of Single Men

Fertility and Family Statistics
Population Division
Bureau of the Census
Bldg. 3, Room 2353
Washington, DC 20233 301-457-2465

You can check out the singles scene anywhere in the country by contacting the Bureau of the Census. They keep some interesting figures regarding the population, such as the ratio of total number of single men to single women in metro areas. Give them a call to find out what areas of the country will improve your chances of finding that special someone...if that's what you're interested in.

 A Library Of Information

Your local library
Check the blue pages of your telephone directory.

A wonderful resource for information about a town is its local library. Library workers, familiar with the area can answer questions such as the population change of the town over time, how the city operates, the city budget, and demographics. The library can also provide information on the history of a town, city parks and recreation facilities, school board information, community resources, and even election results. You can locate the local library by looking in the blue pages of the town's telephone directory.

 Check Out The Town Business Scene

Your local Chamber of Commerce

Check the blue pages of your telephone directory.

Local Chambers of Commerce can provide you with a wealth of information regarding a new town. They usually offer a map of the town, parks and recreation directories, walking tours, information about the type of government and the town's annual report, along with information on schools, real estate, and industry. You can also look through the Chamber's membership directory to see the types of industry located in the town to get a sense of the business climate. You can locate the Chamber of Commerce by looking in the blue pages of the local phone directory, or by contacting the city hall.

 Salaries, Unemployment, And The Job Market

Office of Publications

Bureau of Labor Statistics

U.S. Department of Labor

2 Massachusetts Ave., NE, Room 2863

Washington, DC 20212 202-606-7828

If you are looking for an overview of labor information, then the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) is for you. The Bureau collects, processes, analyzes, and disseminates data relating to employment, unemployment, and other characteristics of the labor force; wages, other worker compensation; economic growth and employment projections; and more. BLS can refer you to experts within the Bureau who can answer your specific questions, provide you with historical information, and refer you to tables and charts for data. They can answer questions such as:

- What is the employment statistics and the outlook for a particular occupation?
- What is the unemployment rate for a state?
- What is the current wage for a word processor in Seattle, and what are the average benefits likely to be?
- What is the employment projection for a specific job?

 Highway Looking Like A Parking Lot?

Office of Highway Information Management

Federal Highway Administration

U.S. Department of Transportation

400 7th St., SW

Washington, DC 20590 202-366-0160

Want to know how many people own cars in your state? What about fatal and injury accident rates for the Nation's highways? Want to know the number of licensed women drivers or the ratio of licensed drivers to the population? What about highway finance or highway usage? An extensive list of publications is maintained by the Office of Highway Information Management. For information about your state or for ordering information, contact the office listed above.

 Flood Insurance Made Simple

National Flood Insurance Program
451 Hungerford Dr.
Rockford, MD 20850 800-638-6620

Some victims of the recent flood were covered under the government's National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP), but many were not. To find out if you qualify, get the free brochure, Answers to Questions About The National Flood Insurance Program which explains NFIP, and the type of assistance it provides. For information on rules, regulations, claims, and publications, contact National Flood Insurance Program.

 How Not To Buy Swamp Land In Florida

Interstate Land Sales
Registration Division
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)
451 7th St., SW, Room 9160
Washington, DC 20410 202-708-0502

Thinking about buying lakefront property in Arizona or a condo on a golf course in Florida? Before you send a dime to a land developer in another state, find out before you buy what your rights are from the following free publications: Buying Lots from Developers and Before Buying Land....Get The Facts. There are several things a developer must do before a lot can be sold or leased. They must file a Statement of Record with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), containing full and current disclosure about ownership and more, and a printed Property Report must be delivered to each purchaser or lessee in advance of signing the contract or agreement.

 Make Sure Your Kid Learns The 3 R's

Consumer Information Center
Department 417Z
Pueblo, CO 81009

Find out how to grill potential educators for their teaching skills and select the right school for your kids by contacting the Department of Education. They have a free publication, Choosing A School For Your Child (50 cents, 417Z), which discusses school choices, options, and questions that should be asked when deciding upon a new school. There is even a checklist to complete for each school visited, showing the pros and cons.

 Rural Housing Help

Administrator

14th and Independence Ave., Room 5334
Washington, DC 20250 202-720-1474

How Do I Check Out a Move?

For those who live or are considering moving to a rural area, the Rural Housing Service offers a variety of housing assistance. Direct loans are available to assist lower-income rural families obtain decent, safe homes, loan guarantees, home repair loans and grants, and rural rental assistance payments to name only a few of the programs. Contact the office listed above for more information.

 Housing Finance Statistics

Program Evaluation Division
Mortgage Information Center
Assistant Secretary for Housing
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)
451 7th St., SW
Washington, DC 20410

202-755-7470 ext. 145

Monthly reports are compiled by the Program Evaluation Division of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) in areas relating to the mortgage market, securities, taxation, market trends, interest rates, among others. You can receive a free survey of mortgage lending activity and a survey of FHA and conventional mortgage rates. If you are interested in receiving information about these subjects or want to be placed on the mailing list, contact this office.

 How Much Did A House Sell For?

County Recorder of Deeds
Check the blue pages of your telephone directory.

If you know when the current owner bought the house and how much they paid, you will be a better prepared negotiator. All this information is available at the county Recorder of Deeds. Other information available includes the legal description of the property located at the address, and the bank or company who financed the purchase. Also available at the county level is information on the property's assessed value, which is different from the appraised value, and the amount of taxes charged for the property. To locate the County Recorder of Deeds, look in the blue pages of the local telephone directory.

 What's The Housing Market Like?

HUD USER
P.O. Box 6091
Rockville, MD 20850

800-245-2691

301-251-5154 (DC metro area)

If you are planning on moving, it might be helpful to know some general information about the housing situation of a prospective area. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and the Bureau of the Census have released the results of the American Housing Survey for the United States in 1993, the largest and most detailed survey of the Nation's housing stock. It provides information on national or regional housing conditions, markets, or policies. It presents detailed data on the characteristics of occupied and vacant housing units, including size, structural condition, housing costs and values, and indicators of neighborhood quality. It also provides basic demographic data on the age, sex, race, income, and mobility of householders. In addition to the Survey available for $5, results from 11 metropolitan areas have also been released ($5 each). Contact HUD USER for more information.

 Veterans Home Ownership

How Do I Check Out a Move?

Veterans Assistance Office
Department of Veterans Affairs
810 Vermont Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20420 800-827-1000

If you are a veteran or an unmarried surviving spouse, you can obtain VA-guaranteed loans for the purchase and refinancing of homes, condominiums and manufactured homes. You can usually do so without a down payment (except for manufactured homes). For eligibility and more information on VA loan guaranties, contact your regional VA office. The following publications are available to veterans:

Pointers for the Veteran Homeowner - a guide for veterans whose home mortgage is guaranteed or insured under the GI Bill. (26-5)

To the Home-Buying Veteran - a guide for veterans planning to buy or build homes with a VA loan. (26-6)

VA-Guaranteed Home Loans for Veterans - helps you understand what the VA can and cannot do for the home purchaser. (26-4)

 Counseling for Homebuyers, Homeowners, and Tenants

Single Family Servicing Division
Secretary-Held and Counseling Services
Office of Insured Single Family Housing
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development
Washington, DC 20410-8000 800-569-4287

To help reduce delinquencies, defaults, and foreclosures, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) provides free counseling to homeowners and tenants under its programs through HUD-approved counseling agencies. The counselors advise and assist homeowners with budgeting, money management, and buying and maintaining their homes. This is not just for HUD homes, but for all home buyers and owners. The amount of service available does vary for each counseling agency. Contact this office or your local HUD office of information for the counseling agency nearest you.

 Housing Discrimination

Fair Housing Enforcement Division
Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development
Washington, DC 20410-2000 800-669-9777

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) administers the law that prohibits discrimination in housing on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, and national origin; investigates complaints of housing discrimination; and attempts to resolve them through conciliation. Two common forms of discrimination are redlining and steering. Redlining is the illegal practice of refusing to originate mortgage loans in certain neighborhoods on the basis of race or ethnic origin. Steering is the illegal act of limiting the housing shown by a real estate agent to a certain ethnic group. If you have experienced housing discrimination, you should file a complaint with any HUD office in person, by mail, or by telephone at the numbers listed here. HUD refers complaints to state and local fair housing agencies. To receive a copy of the free publication Fair Housing Act Regulations, contact the Housing Discrimination Hotline at 1-800-669-9777.

Crime In Your Neighborhood

The crime rate for a neighborhood can be a whole lot different than the rate for the entire city. You don't want to put your kid in a day care center near an outdoor drug market or buy a fast food franchise in an area where the crime rate is ten times the national average. Real estate agents can brag all they want about how a certain area has a low crime rate, but if you want the facts and not the opinion of a biased salesperson, you have to get local crime statistics. Your State Crime Statistics Office collects information or can tell you where to locate information like:

- The rate of auto thefts in your town
- The rate of robberies in your town
- Crime and arrest data by county

Before drawing conclusions from state crime data, a number of factors should be considered, including strength of local police departments, economic profile of the town, and attitudes of residents toward police and crime. Most states have publications that report crime and can produce computer printouts of specific topics.

Sample The State Statistics

Every ten years, we all fill out the Census form and then what happens with all of that information? Approximately 1,300 organizations nationwide receive data from the U.S. Bureau of the Census and then disseminate that information to the public free of charge or on a cost recovery basis. These organizations are called state data centers and can provide you with specific information on your state or town. Want to move to a town full of twenty-somethings? Want to know the area with the most 20-year old houses which will need new roofs for your roofing business? Want to stay away from teenagers? Want to know the number of churches, hospitals, or recreational facilities in a town? You can sometimes even get information for a particular zip code. The data centers can provide you with information on specific reports they have available, customized searches that they can perform, and their free and fee schedules for particular information.

State Data Centers

Below is a roster of data centers in all 50 states as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Some of these Census Bureau information providers are based in state departments and agencies, universities, business colleges, and libraries. Each center listed below includes the name and phone number of the data expert.

Highway Information Closer To Home

You can get more specific information on the roadways in your town by contacting your state Highway Department. Want to know how safe your corner is for kids? How many accidents occur on the beltway and when? How safe are the bike paths? Where are accidents most likely to occur? Every state highway department has a database made up of reports completed by all law enforcement agencies which investigate accidents. In most instances, the computerized system can be searched and printouts provided by a number of variables including accident type, county, month of year, alcohol involvement, driver sex, age, and more. Some states provide these printouts free of charge, while others charge up to $150 per hour or require a Freedom of Information act request. Many states also publish an annual report, which is usually free.

Go To School Before Your Kid Does

The difference between school districts and individual schools can be staggering. It's an important consideration that's bound to affect where you decide to live. Should you count on the information that you get from a real estate agent interested in selling you a house? No! If you are house hunting and have children in school, you can find all the answers to all of your questions simply by contacting both the State Department of Education and the local school district. The amount spent per child, student-teacher ratio, tests scores, experience, and more are only some of the data available from these offices. Once you have compiled the information, you can make an informed choice on what school is best for your kids.

Housing Made Affordable

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) has several different programs available to help people become first time homebuyers, assist with the housing needs of the elderly and disabled, help people who are having trouble paying their mortgage, mortgage insurance for those deemed ineligible for FHA mortgage insurance, and even find subsidized rent for people who are struggling with their finances. In some cases, housing funds are made available through local community organizations. HUD also offers properties for sale through real estate brokers, and these homes can often be purchased for less than the going rate. Contact the HUD regional office near you for more information about HUD programs.

State Housing Assistance

Every state has a variety of programs to help with the construction and purchase of homes. Housing finance agencies (HFAs) have been created by states to issue tax-exempt bonds to finance mortgages for lower-income first-time home buyers and to build multi-family housing. Funds are also available for persons who take steps to make their homes more energy efficient, for home owners and landlords who remove lead paint from dwelling units, for houses without plumbing or those with plumbing that is dysfunctional, for handicapped persons, and to help landlords defray the costs of bringing low-income housing into compliance. In many states, elderly home owners can look to the HFA to obtain financing and/or support services they need to remain in their homes and avoid institutionalization. Some of the states have more than one agency dedicated to housing, and many cities and counties have quasi-federal/quasi-local housing authorities with addition programs.

Insurance: Car, Homeowner, and Health

Each state has its own laws and regulations for all types of insurance, including car, homeowner, and health insurance. The officials listed below enforce these laws. Many of these offices can provide you with information to help you make informed insurance buying decisions. If you have a question or complaint about your insurance company's policies, contact the company in question first. If you do not receive a satisfactory response, then contact the state insurance regulator. They can answer many questions, including:

- What are some tips on how to choose an insurance policy?
- Are there consumer guides to different policies?
- What should you do if you have been unfairly treated by an insurance company?

Put Your Money In A Safe (Place, That Is)

Finding the right bank, savings and loan, or credit union means figuring out your own needs first. How much money can you keep on deposit and how many checks will you write? Examine your future loans and savings needs, as well as look at the convenience of the financial institution, its service charges, fees, and deposit and loan interest rates. Before making your final choice, make sure the institutions you're considering are federally insured. The offices listed below can answer such questions as:

- what is a bank's asset size?
- what are all the banks in a state that are covered by their office?
- where is a particular bank located and where are its branches?

For information about a particular financial institution, contact one of the following offices:

National Banks (banks that have the word "National" in their names or the initials "N.A." after their names)

Comptroller of the Currency, Compliance Management, Department of the Treasury, 250 E St., SW, Washington, DC 20219, 202-874-5000.

FDIC-Insured Banks

Office of Consumer Affairs, FDIC, 550 17th St., NW, Room F-130, Washington, DC 20429, 202-898-3542 or 1-800-934-3342.

Savings and Loans

Office of Thrift Supervision, Department of Treasury, 1700 G St., NW, Washington, DC 20552, 202-906-6237.

How Do I Take Care Of The Kids?

How Do I Take Care Of The Kids?

Families all over the country are taking advantage of government programs to help parents find affordable day care for their little ones. States get money to fund grants, contracts, and certificates for these day care centers. Many also provide money for after-and before-school programs. But they also spend the money on people who want to start a day care center. Each state is given a great deal of latitude as to how the child care money is distributed, so it is important that you ask about child care assistance when you apply for JOB CORPS, other training or education programs, Aid To Families With Dependent Children (AFDC), or if you are just making ends meet. If you are a parent wondering if there are programs to help you pay for day care, or if you want to start a day care center and want to know which major programs support families who use day care...here they are.

Former AFDC Recipient

Robvato Gray, a 27-year old mother of four children, had been on welfare since the age of 18 and had lived in government housing for eight years. She received food stamps and $184 per month from AFDC.

Wanting to improve herself, she started to provide child care for mothers at $25 per week. Soon she began to realize that she was providing the same quality care that centers in her area were providing, but she was charging only about one-third of the money that the centers were receiving.

She began checking into government programs and started to participate in a program where the government paid Day Care Home Providers weekly to watch the children of welfare recipients, while the mothers worked. The program also gives the day care provider money on a monthly basis to provide food for the children in her care. Additionally, she got a government grant through a neighborhood center to purchase $1000 worth of toys for the children she watched.

By increasing her weekly fee to about $75, Robvato not only increased her income from $104 per month to $4000 per month, but also increased her self esteem, and it was a welcome benefit. She has been off welfare for a year and a half, has two homes, and two vehicles. The inspiration of this success has led her to start a janitorial business, as well as to give speeches and to train other women on AFDC to become self-sufficient as she was able to do.

 Let Every Child Get A Head Start

Administration For Children and Families
U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
Head Start Bureau
Washington, DC 20472 01

202-205-8572

Each year, almost one million children from low-income families enter school for the first time, and many have health problems and a lack of self confidence. The Head Start Program addresses the needs of low-income preschool children, and provides educational, social, medical, dental, nutrition, and mental health services. In 1993, Head Start had 36,300 classrooms serving 721,268 children. In order to qualify to enroll a child in a Head Start program, a parent must meet certain income guidelines (in 1993 a family of 3 could earn $11,890), and parent involvement is encouraged. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services awards grants to local public agencies, private nonprofit organizations and school systems for the purpose of operating Head Start programs at the community level. To locate a Head Start Program near you, contact your local board of education or Department of Social Services (look in the blue pages of your phone book), or contact the office listed above.

 Ease Some Of Your Employees Concerns

Women's Bureau Clearinghouse
Women's Bureau
U.S. Department of Labor
200 Constitution Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20210 800-827-5335

Finding reliable, affordable day care is never easy, but companies are finding that providing on-site day care keeps employees happier and profits on the rise. The Women's Bureau Clearinghouse publishes the Work and Family Resource Kit which helps employers understand the range of family needs emerging in the work place and options such as flextime and job sharing. The Clearinghouse can even refer you to companies similar to your own to see how they operate these innovative programs, and the benefits they have received. For your free copy, contact the office listed above.

 Get Up To $2,287 In Credits Or Refunds

Internal Revenue Service
Information Line 800-829-1040

Take advantage of some of the perks the IRS gives to those who have children. If you have a job, earn less than $26,673 (1995 figure), and have a child living with you, you could be eligible for the Earned Income Credit (EIC). This Credit reduces the amount of tax you owe, and is intended to offset some of the increases in living expenses and social security taxes. The EIC is comprised of three different credits: basic, health insurance, and extra credit for a child born in the tax year. You could qualify for up to $3,110. Get a copy of Publication 596 which explains the form you need to file and eligibility guidelines.

 Get A Kid, Get A Credit

Internal Revenue Service
Information Line 800-829-1040

You may be able to take a credit if you pay someone to care for your dependent who is under age 13, your disabled dependent, or your disabled spouse, so that you can work. For purposes of the credit, "disabled" refers to a person physically or mentally not capable of self-care. Request Publication 503 Child and Dependent Care Expenses which outlines the credit, as well as explains the tax rules covering benefits paid under an employer-provided dependent care assistance plan.

be considered a dislocated worker. Dislocated workers are those who have been laid off from a job due to factory downsizing, reorganization, trade issues, military downsizing, and more. There are many services available to dislocated workers through the Title III Program which provides for retraining and readjustments for these workers. Some local providers cover the cost of child care while you retrain for another job. To become eligible for these services, you must contact your local State Employment Services office or the Job Training Partnership Act office (look in the blue pages of your phone book). If you are part of any government training program, make sure to ask if child care or transportation costs are covered. In many instances, there are some funds available. The following programs also may offer child care:

ED/OVAE/DNP/SPB
400 Maryland Ave., SW
Switzer Building, Room 4512
Washington, DC 20202 202-205-5977

In order to improve the literacy rate for adults, many literacy programs are being started in the workplace. These programs teach basic skills that can result in new or continued employment, career advancement, or increased productivity for workers. Money is available for projects to improve literacy skills, adult secondary education services, and even to provide education counseling, transportation, and non-working hours child care services to adult workers while they participate in the program. To learn more about the grant application process or to learn what programs exist in your state, contact the office listed above.

 Money To Let You Hit The Books

Contact: Your College Admissions Office

In a survey of colleges around the country, it was discovered that over a thousand community colleges and four year colleges and universities provide child care for free or reduced costs. Most operate on a sliding fee scale, and offer a variety of services with some offering hot lunches and infant care. These child care centers are frequently staffed with preschool and early education students to provide them training while taking care of your child. Talk to the admission officer at schools which you are considering attending to learn if they offer this benefit, the cost of service with your income, and even if there is a waiting list.

 Money For Employers in Appalachia

Executive Director
Appalachian Regional Commission
1666 Connecticut Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20235 202-884-7700

If you own a business in the Appalachian region and are having trouble recruiting employees, maybe you should consider offering a child care program. The Appalachian Regional Commission offers grants to companies to assist them in providing child care services to their employees. Grants can cover technical assistance, operating, construction, renovation, and equipment, and can cover up to 80% of the total cost. There are 399 eligible counties including some in Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and all of West Virginia. Contact the Appalachian Regional Commission for more information about this program.

Compensatory Education Programs
U.S. Department of Education
Office of Elementary and Secondary Education
400 Maryland Ave., SW
Washington, DC 20202 202-401-1692

If someone you know is in need of training to learn to read and they also have a child under seven years of age, they may be able to participate in the Even Start Program. Even Start is designed to provide family centered education programs that involve parents and children. It includes instructional programs that promote adult literacy, train parents to support the educational growth of their children, and help children to succeed in school. Transportation to the program is offered, as is child care for the periods when parents are in the program. To be eligible, parents must reside in an elementary school area served by Chapter 1, which is for areas with a predominance of lower-income residents. Even Start is often offered by community based organizations, local education agencies, and others. The Office listed above can provide you with information on Even Start Programs near you, as well as provide you with information on Even Start Programs for Migrant Education and Indian Tribes.

Money For Child Care Or Even To Start A Day Care Center

Child care issues should not be a stumbling block for people who want to start a training program or continue their education. This program emphasizes the role of parents in choosing the care that best meets their family's child care needs. Parents may choose from a variety of child care providers, including center-based, family child care and in-home care, care provided by relatives, and sectarian child care providers. You can even get money to start a day care center. Federal funds are available to states, Indian tribes, and territories to provide grants, contracts, and certificates for child care services for low income families with a parent who is working or attending a training or education program. Funding is also provided to improve the availability and quality of child care and for early childhood development and before- and after-school services. For information on how to take advantage of this program in your state and to find out about eligibility requirements, contact your state agency listed below or the main office at Division of Child Care, Administration for Children, Youth, and Families, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, 200 Independence Ave., SW, Room 352G, Washington, DC 20201; 202-690-6782.

More Child Care Help Close To Home

The Federal government gives money to the states, who then in turn give money to local organizations to provide child care services. Sometimes it is difficult to track the money, but one way is to contact your local Department of Human Services. They can let you know what programs are available to you in your area, as well as direct you to other programs and resources you can use. Many have established special programs, such as Child Care Management Services or Child Care Resource Centers to help you locate appropriate services. Look for the Department of Human Services in the blue pages of your phone book under your county's listings. If you have trouble locating the number, contact your state office which is listed below.

Child Care Money for Those On or Just Off AFDC

For those who are struggling to work, but find that the cost of child care is making you wonder if the effort is worth it, take heart. There is an Aid To Families With Dependent Children (AFDC) At-Risk Care Program which permits states to provide child care to low-income families who are not receiving AFDC, need child care in order to work, and would otherwise be at risk of becoming eligible for AFDC. There are also funds for AFDC recipients (Title IV-A Child Care) to allow them to pursue employment or work training, as well as transitional funds to assist those recently off AFDC. The central point of administration of these programs are with state welfare agencies. In this way state agencies, which also have the responsibility for providing welfare, employment, and related services under the Job Opportunities and Basic Skills Training (JOBS) program, can coordinate child care with these services. States may not be using the title "At-Risk Care Program, or Title IV-A Child Care" so make sure you explain your situation clearly and state that you need child care assistance. There is a list of state lead agencies below who may be able to assist you in locating a local source who has received these child care monies. You may also contact Office of Family Assistance, Administration for Children and Families, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Fifth Floor 370 L'Enfant Promenade, SW, Washington, DC 20447; 202-401-9294.

Comprehensive Child Development Centers

Children don't have to wait to be preschoolers to take advantage of government programs. The Comprehensive Child Development Program is a five-year demonstration program that provides intensive comprehensive support services to children from birth to entrance into elementary school. They also provide support services to parents and other household family members in locating training and employment opportunities, in securing adequate health care, nutrition assistance, and housing. Currently, there are over 30 programs in existence. Contact one of the programs listed below to learn more about eligibility requirements and application procedures. You may also contact Administration for Children and Families, P.O. Box 1182, Washington, DC 20013; 202-205-8566.

Check Out Day Care Before You Sign Up Junior

We don't trust our kids with just anyone, so how do you check out a day care before you enroll your child? Each state has a different type of licensing procedure and requirements, so you can contact your state office listed below to learn more about what is required of day care facilities (many states require that facilities which operate out of individual homes also be licensed). In addition, some states have special offices where you can register a complaint concerning a day care establishment, as well as learn whether complaints are already on file regarding a particular facility.

JOBS For You

Are you on public assistance, but would like to be working? JOBS (Jobs Opportunities and Basic Skills) Training Program is a state and federally funded program which provides education and training for public assistance recipients along with the necessary support services to help you find quality jobs. You can take part in basic math and reading skills classes, job training programs, and even on-the-job training. JOBS is required to provide or reimburse you for transportation and other work related expenses, as well as offer child care for those who need it. Child care is subsidized for parents, so that they may choose the best child care provider for the child. Payment rates are set by the state, and the care must meet certain standards. Contact your local Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) office, or contact the State JOBS Coordinator for information on the JOBS program nearest you. For more information, contact Office of Family Assistance, Administration for Children and Families, 370 L'Enfant Promenade, SW, Washington, DC 20447; 202-401-4534.

Child Care Help From Your State

In order to give states the freedom to choose what particular services they need, the Federal government provides the Social Services Block Grant (Title XX). This allows each state to provide social services which best suit the needs of the individuals residing in the state. Examples of funded services include child day care, protective and emergency services for children and adults, homemaker and chore services, information and referral, adoption, foster care, counseling, and transportation. To find out what services are provided in your state, contact your state Department of Social Services. For more information, contact Office of Community Services, Division of State Assistance, 370 L'Enfant Promenade, SW, Washington, DC 20447; 202-401-9344.

The Foreign Agricultural Service compiles and disseminates agricultural trade and commodity production information to agribusinesses and the general public. They offer private companies and cooperatives assistance in marketing their products overseas by collecting and publicizing information on foreign buyers and advertising U.S. export availability. They have a monthly magazine, commodity and trade reports, publications, and fact sheets (many of which are free). They can answer such questions as:

- 1) What are the market prospects for U.S. food and farm products in Japan?
- 2) What are some overseas markets and buying trends for a particular product?
- 3) What are some overseas promotional activities?
- 4) How do I begin an export business?
- 5) How do I advertise my product directly to buyers overseas?

The National Agricultural Statistics Service collects data on crops, livestock, poultry, dairy, chemical use, prices, and labor, and publishes the official USDA State and national estimates through its Agricultural Statistics Board. There are nearly 400 reports annually covering domestic agriculture, such as estimates of production, stocks, inventories, prices, disposition, utilization, farm numbers and land, and other factors. They provide national profiles from regular surveys of thousands of farmers, ranchers, and agribusinesses that voluntarily provide data on a confidential basis. Publications are available and range from free to $12. They can answer such questions as:

- 1) How has the use of a specific chemical for crop growth changed over the past five years?
- 2) Has the size of farms increased or decreased over the past ten years?
- 3) What statistics exist on wildlife damage to crops?
- 4) How has the weekly crop weather effected crop growth?
- 5) What data is there on livestock slaughter?

The Country Desk Officers at the U.S. Department of Commerce can provide businesses with information on a market, company, or most any other aspect of commercial life in a particular country. These specialists can look at the needs of an individual U.S. firm wishing to sell in a particular country in the full context of that country's overall economy, trade policies, and political situation, and also in light of U.S. policies toward that country. Desk officers keep up to date on the economic and commercial conditions in their assigned countries. Each desk officer collects information on the country's regulations, tariffs, business practices, economic and political developments, trade data and trends, market size, and growth. They have free reports and other information available or they can refer callers to other country specialists. They can answer such questions as:

- 1) How can I expand my business through a foreign franchise?
- 2) How can I reduce my company's distribution and transportation costs overseas?
- 3) What type of export opportunities exist for computer manufacturing companies who want to expand to Germany?
- 4) What are some recent foreign labor trends in Japan?
- 5) Which markets are growing the fastest overseas?

 Housing Discrimination

Fair Housing Enforcement Division
Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)
Washington, DC 20410-2000 800-669-9777

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development administers the law that prohibits discrimination in housing on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, and national origin; investigates complaints of housing discrimination; and attempts to resolve them through conciliation. Two common forms of discrimination are redlining and steering. Redlining is the illegal practice of refusing to originate mortgage loans in certain neighborhoods on the basis of race or ethnic origin. Steering is the illegal act of limiting the housing shown by a real estate agent to a certain ethnic group. HUD refers complaints to state and local fair housing agencies. They can answer such questions as:

- 1) How do I file a discrimination complaint?
- 2) What are the regulations regarding housing discrimination?
- 3) Is sexual harassment a violation of the Fair Housing Act?
- 4) Can someone be denied housing because of a mental disability?
- 5) Do landlords have to pay for physical changes to your apartment if you need them, such as grab bars in the bathroom or wider doors?

The Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy Clearinghouse can provide information on how to save energy, as well as information on solar, wind, or any other aspect of renewable energy. They have the latest research on renewable energy technologies and energy conservation, and can refer you to other valuable resources. A list of free publications is available. They can answer questions such as:

- 1) How can you convert a home to solar heat?
- 2) How do heat pumps work and are they efficient?
- 3) What should you look for in a wood-burning appliance?
- 4) What can be done to improve the energy efficiency of a home?

The Earth Resources Observation Systems (EROS) Data Center is a national archive, production, and research facility for remotely sensed data and other forms of geographic information. It receives, processes, and distributes data from the U.S.' Landsat satellite sensors and from airborne mapping cameras. The Center houses over 2,000,000 worldwide scenes of Earth acquired by Landsat satellites and nearly 6,000,000 aerial photographs of U.S. sites. Maps and photographs range from $6 to $65 and can be obtained from the Center's customer service department. The staff can answer such questions as:

- 1) How can I receive a listing of aerial photographs of a particular hurricane that I am studying?
- 2) How do the Landsat satellite sensors work?
- 3) How can EROS help my company's geologic exploration projects?
- 4) How can EROS help my company form a geochemical assessment of a potential land site that we are interested in developing?

- 5) Can the Center furnish me with a printout of land ownership lists in my particular county?

Earth Science Information Centers (ESIC) offer nationwide information and sales service for U.S. Geological Survey map products and earth science publications. This network of ESICs provides information about: geologic, hydrologic, and land use maps, books, and reports; aerial, satellite, and radar images and related products; earth science and map data in digital format and related applications software; and geodetic data. ESICs can fill orders for custom products and provide information about earth science materials from many public and private producers. They can answer such questions as:

- 1) Where can maps of Indian lands be located?
- 2) What earth-science teaching aids are available?
- 3) Where can accurate topographic maps be found which show the location and measurable elevation of natural and man made features?
- 4) Where can out-of-print maps be located?

The National Environmental Data Referral Service (NEDRES) is designed to provide convenient, economical, and efficient access to widely scattered environmental data. NEDRES is a publicly available service which identifies the existence, location, characteristics, and availability conditions of environmental data sets. NEDRES database contains only descriptions, and not the actual data. Major subject categories include climatology and meteorology, oceanography, geophysics and geology, geography, hydrology and limnology, terrestrial resources, toxic and regulated substances, and satellite remotely sensed data. For more information on the NEDRES database, contact the office listed above. They can provide the information and pointers to data on such questions as:

- 1) What data exists on the air quality in the U.S.?
- 2) Where can information be found on the Chesapeake Bay?
- 3) Where can data be located on the estuarine water of California?
- 4) How has acid rain affected the environment?
- 5) How has pollution affected the ocean environment?

The National Geophysical Data Center (NGDC) combines in a single center all data activities in the fields of solid earth geophysics, marine geology and geophysics, and solar-terrestrial physics. NGDC fills thousands of requests each year for data services and publications. Typical specialized data services may include digitization of analog charts, derivation of geomagnetic indexes, and customized computer graphics. They can answer such questions as:

- 1) Where can historical earthquake data be obtained?
- 2) Where can data on solar flare activity be located?
- 3) What causes avalanches, and what methods are used to ensure the safety of skiers in areas where avalanches typically occur?
- 4) Where are thermal springs and thermal wells located in Nevada?
- 5) Where can information on earthquake damage to transportation systems be obtained so that new systems can better withstand the effects of an earthquake?

RCRA stands for the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act which has the goals of: protecting human health and the environment from the potential hazards of waste disposal; conserving energy and natural resources; reducing the amount of waste generated, including hazardous waste; and ensuring that wastes are managed in an environmentally sound manner. They can answer questions regarding recycling, hazardous waste, solid waste issues, and much more. They have a catalogue of publications, as well as a publication, Solving the Hazardous Waste Problem: EPA's RCRA Program, which provides an overview of RCRA. They can answer such questions as:

- 1) What are the hazardous waste disposal regulations in my state?
- 2) Which plant pesticides are considered safe?
- 3) What are the laws and regulations concerning hazardous waste transportation?
- 4) How can I begin a recycling program in my community?

I Wanna Change My Name

I Wanna Change My Name

What's in a name anyway? A lot for many people. If you are saddled with Michael Michael or Kelly Kelly, or your rotten ex-husband's name, don't feel like it's got to be yours forever. You can become James, Brandon, Tiffany, or even Countess Regina. Name changes are often for religious purposes, or to have a name which reflects a person's personal beliefs or interests. Many naturalized citizens may change their names to help make English pronunciations easier.

All you need to do is fill out a simple form and pay a fee, usually ranging from $35-$200. This is all done through your county probate court, where you must be a resident of the county for at least one year. The form asks for your current name, address, and other identifying information, as well as the name you would like to have and the reason for the change. The exact rules vary from county to county, but basically the courts all follow the same pattern. Some require that you attend a hearing in front of a magistrate to explain your reasons for changing your name. Your name change needs to be posted locally for four to six weeks to see if anyone objects. You must also prove that the name change is not to dodge creditors or to run from your criminal history, or for other questionable purposes. Denial for name changes are rare. Most frequently a denial is when one parent tries to change the name of a child and the ex-spouse objects. If you have met all the requirements, then the court will legally change your name. For those going through a divorce, you can easily add your name change request in conjunction with your divorce proceedings.

The next order of business for you is to get all your legal records in order. You must let the Social Security Administration know about your new name so they can keep your earning records in order. You can go to the local Social Security Administration office to complete the form, or you can call the Social Security hotline at 800-772-1213. Make sure your credit cards and bank accounts are changed to your new name. Even your employer needs to know, so your paycheck and retirement accounts can be changed. If you have a will, this may be a good time to update it as well. All that is left is for you to get your friends and family to start calling you by your new legal name.

How I Started With A Phone And A Desk And Turned It Into A Million Dollar Information Brokerage Business

All my life I wanted to start my own business. I didn't care what it was — I just wanted to learn how to feed myself and not work for someone else. I even considered selling hot dogs on the mall near the Washington Monument — I just wanted to be my own boss.

I started my first business when I got out of the Navy and hooked up with two other Vietnam Vets as partners. We scraped up a few thousand dollars in savings to start a little service business that provided information about the job market to military personnel who were overseas and due to return home soon. It was a bust and lasted only about six months. We lost all our money and didn't even get one single customer.

About a year later I tried again to start a business. It was a little software company I started with another person who was good at writing computer programs. We developed software to maintain mailing lists and called the system TOMALIS, which stood for Total Mailing List System. This was back in the days of mainframe computers, and the computer languages of the day went by names like Fortran and Cobol. That business also failed, but at least it took three years for this one to go under. This was back in the mid 1970s, and I felt that I must have been the only person in the world who had a computer business that went down the tubes during that "boom" time.

With another failed business under my belt, my hungry stomach was telling me that I had to go and get a real job to survive. I landed a job with a bunch of hot shots who were in the travel business but were also trying to get into the mergers and acquisitions business. I was hired to run the computers within the company, and it wasn't a bad job. No one else in the company knew about computers and this made me look smart without really knowing much. But what really interested me were the hot shots running the company. In order to get close to them to see how they ran the business, I would volunteer to do anything. I'd hang around late at night when they were discussing big deals and volunteer to get coffee, donuts, do the xeroxing — anything to try to learn how to act like a big shot.

One day they came into my little office and asked me, not to get coffee, but to get information on how good or bad the rental car business was. It seems that they were considering making a bid to acquire Avis Rent-A-Car and needed some good market information to go along with the financial statements that they were poring over. I, of course, said YES, YES, YES. I was their "yes man", even though I knew nothing about the rental car business and had no idea where I was going to get this information.

I wanted to do this so badly I could almost taste it. This was one giant step up from coffee and xeroxing that lucky people are offered once in life, and I didn't want to blow it. I saw myself as a young Turk on the way up the ladder of success. But I didn't have a clue where to go for the information I needed. I sat in my little office wondering if I could make the grade. I sat there staring at my desk hoping something would pop into my head and give me the magic answer. I stared at the telephone and then picked it up thinking, "Here I am in Washington, DC needing to know about the rental car business. Who can I call? Why not the government? I pass by all those big buildings every day on the way to work. Maybe someone there can help me."

Well it worked. By starting with the government information operator, I was able to work my way through a dozen more calls and referrals until I finally found an expert in the rental car business. It turned out to be a man who used to be the president of Hertz and was now in Washington and bored out of his mind with his government job. He actually invited me to lunch so he could tell me everything he knew. I was shocked! I couldn't believe that in 45 minutes on the telephone I could locate a real expert who was willing to tell me everything I needed to know about the rental car business. And he even wanted to take me to lunch!

Afterwards I was so excited about the information I had just received that I burst into a meeting my boss was having with his hot shot merger and acquisition buddies. He was eager to hear everything that I learned from my lunch right then and there. They were blown away, and so was I. We couldn't believe that a young turk like me who didn't know anyone could get such information that we had all assumed was privileged and confidential. This was a lot more satisfying than staying up until midnight attempting to debug some computer program. In those days there weren't any personal computers, and everyone worked on the same big computer. So if you needed a lot of computer time to debug a program you had to go down to the computer room at midnight when no one else was using it. In the end, the big shots, the ones I was trying to be like, got a lot more excited about the information I got on the rental car business than with any program I ever wrote for them.

I was hooked. I was constantly getting information for these people on anything they would ask for. But it didn't last long — the company was going under, even though I had no idea it was even in trouble. I guess I still wasn't so close to the big shots after all. Again, it was time to find another job or start another business. I had a few thousand dollars in the bank, and a wife with a good job, so I figured that could support me for awhile in a new venture.

The new business would be exactly what I was doing for my hot shot bosses. I would try to be a consultant to people in the merger and acquisition business and get all the information that they needed to make their business a success, but were unable to find themselves.

This time, success finally happened. The business grew from just me, a telephone and a desk in my one bedroom apartment to over 30 employees and a million and a half dollars in sales in a little more than three years. Even after two failing businesses, I finally realized my first success, and I'll show how you can do it too.

Five Basic Steps For Starting An Information Brokerage Company With As Little Money As Possible

A recent listing of Inc. Magazine's fastest growing businesses in the United States showed that over 33% of those businesses started with less than $10,000 in capital. That can happen because we're no longer in an industrial economy where it takes a lot of money to open up a business. Instead, we're living in a service and information economy where it takes very little money to start and grow a business. An information brokerage company fits this model to a tee. Here's my list of the steps you should take to get started:

Step #1

Get a personal computer that can handle at least word processing and has the capability of adding a modem in order to tap into commercial and public databases. Even if you don't plan to use this feature now, it might be helpful to have it in the future as your business grows.

Step #2

Establish a telephone and a desk that you can call an office. An answering machine or a voice mail message system is a minimum requirement for you to be in touch with other staff members.

Step #3

Print envelopes, letterhead, and business cards. Decide on a simple design printed on a medium grade paper. If you try to get too fancy on cheap paper it looks bad. Stay simple and classic in all of your materials for your business.

Step #4

Believe the notion that we live in an information society, and if you are willing to make enough telephone calls you can gather information on almost anything.

Step #5

Find a customer and do whatever it takes to make them happy and keep them coming back for your service or product.

Steps #1, #2 and #3 are pretty easy to accomplish. There are a lot of people who will take your money and provide you with those items. Steps #4 and #5 are a little more difficult to achieve but still possible now that you have this booklet. The following chapters will not only show you how to tap into the world's largest source of free information, but will also show you how to find and keep customers while spending next to nothing of your own money.

What You DON'T Need To Start an Information Brokerage Business

Everybody is always telling entrepreneurs about all the essentials they need. Well, I think it's just as important to tell entrepreneurs what they don't need. After starting four businesses of my own and after having two failures, here is what I believe you should be extra careful to avoid.

1. Too Much Professional Advice

If you're starting a business with a limited supply of capital, too much professional advice is going to kill you. If you try to surround yourself with all the trappings of business success, you're soon going to go out of business.

Remember, you and your time are the most valuable resources in your business. Succeeding in business is a "beat the clock" game. If you're spending a lot of your time meeting with lawyers and accountants or choosing fancy "power" furniture, you'll have little time to concentrate on the one thing that is most important to your success...getting a client. This is the most critical success factor of any new business. Without a client, everything else is meaningless.

When I started my first business, I got the high priced accountants, the high priced lawyers, the power business cards, and power furniture, but I went out of business. And who won? It was the accountants, lawyers, and furniture salesmen. They were all smart enough to get paid and I was out on the street.

Your clients don't care what kind of accounting system you use or what legal structure you have formed. And having the right look, whether it be impressive business cards or furniture, may only affect your business 5% or 10%. This is a very insignificant percentage, especially if you have no business. Furthermore, it's a waste of time if you're spending a half a day choosing furniture when you could be spending a half a day getting a client. Remember, 99% of your clients won't care what kind of furniture you have. The only person who cares about what kind of furniture you have is the furniture salesman.

2. Too Much Money

Anyone can start a business if given $1 million bucks. It doesn't take a lot of creativity to spend money to buy advertising in your local newspaper. But what are you going to do next year when your business doesn't have an extra $1 million around? Instead of learning how to buy space, you should first learn how to get your local paper to write a FREE story about your business! The price is right and it's more effective than advertising because you're also getting a big, respected institution, the newspaper, to endorse you. It will also earn you credibility in the local business community, and that can serve as a spark to get your new business off the ground.

Too much money for a novice entrepreneur can make you fat, lazy, and not very creative. The key to developing a strong business is learning how to get sales using the least amount of money, not the most amount of money.

3. Too Perfect A Product

A beginner entrepreneur can easily get hung up on trying to develop the perfect product. Most of us can never be perfect, but we can still be successful. Entrepreneurs can easily get trapped into believing that their product or service has to be just right before they offer it to the public.

Trying to be flawless can lead to failure, and being a perfectionist can cause you to go broke before you even get your product to market. Be careful that your perfectionist attitude isn't really a mask for your own insecurities. What your family and friends will think about your product doesn't matter, because the object of a product should be its sale to a potential customer. Customers come with all different kinds of needs that would be impossible to satisfy all the time, and very few customers are willing to pay for perfection. Go open up your own closets and look at all the mediocre stuff that you've purchased over the years.

Until you start asking people for money you really don't know what they will buy. Your product is probably going to change dozens of times before it reaches its final form. And this metamorphosis is due to customer feedback, your most important information source. Introduce your product as soon as possible so that you can stay in business long enough to find out how to improve that product. Then listen to your customer. He's the expert you need to listen to.

Few of us are smart enough to read minds but we're all smart enough to listen. If you offer a product to ten people and five of them say they would buy it if it were green, go right out and paint the thing green, so you can make a few sales.

If you spend too much time designing the ultimate product you'll probably be wrong anyway and have very few resources left to learn from your mistakes. Overdesigning a product isn't just a failure of the small entrepreneur. Do you remember Ford's Edsel or Coca Cola's New Coke? Now those were big failures.

4. A Board of Directors

Anytime you get three people in a room to talk about an idea there will always be at least one naysayer. Finding potential problems is always easy to do. If an idea was perfect, it wouldn't be an idea anymore; it would already be a product or service provided by someone else.

For ideas to work, it usually takes the passion and commitment of one person. This kind of spirit doesn't come from a board of directors that engages in group decision making. Although democratic, this process usually results in ideas where everyone owns a small piece of the end product and no one person is committed to the complete picture. The "vision" for a new product can often be lost in this way.

Board meetings can be a big waste of time for struggling entrepreneurs. Entrepreneurs have to live from moment to moment, often making quick, reflexive decisions so they can immediately move to the next decision. The temperament required for entrepreneuring is very different from the temperament needed to placate a diverse group such as a board of directors.

5. An MBA

I have a BS in Business and an MBA and I believe that it took me two failing businesses to "unlearn" all that I was taught in my six years of business school. I was brainwashed into believing such things as: "If you need money, you go to the bank." When I was starting my businesses I quickly learned that a bank is the last place an entrepreneur with no money should go. Business schools spend a lion's share of the time teaching you how to run big businesses like General Motors, and that kind of business plan has little relevance to the small, struggling entrepreneur.

The jargon you learn in business school certainly is helpful if you want to get a job in big business. But if you are a small entrepreneur, much of what they teach you will just interfere with your natural instincts. There is no magic to most operations associated with running a business. Accounting is keeping a checkbook. Production is making sure that your product costs less than what you sell it for. But in the beginning, marketing can sometimes seem magical. Finding and keeping a customer is what any new business is all about, and that doesn't take an MBA to figure out. It just takes a lot of door pounding and return calling.

6. Government Forms

Don't tell the government this because I could get in trouble. I believe that entrepreneurs should even forget about government licenses and forms for starting a business.

After I had two businesses that failed, I got rid of the accountants, the lawyers, the power furniture, and power business cards, and I also didn't file any local, county, state, or federal forms. Don't get me wrong — I did file my tax return because I never mess around with the IRS and you shouldn't either. The government forms I'm talking about are the permits, licenses, and applications necessary to do business. My theory is that filing all these forms takes time and energy. Because your time is very important, you'd be better off to concentrate that time on what is the critical success factor of your business...getting customers.

If you don't file the necessary forms there isn't much that can happen to you. At the pace that the government works, it will take them three years to find you. And by then, you'll either be out of business, or you'll be successful enough to pay the $25 fine and file whatever forms are necessary.

What You DO Need To Start An Information Brokerage Business

Just like in real estate where you are always told that there are three things that are key to making a fortune...location, location, and location. Well, the same goes for the information brokerage business where there are three things that are critical to its success...customers, customers, and more customers. Customers make it all happen. Your business is nothing without them. If you get a customer and have a strong desire to make that customer happy, you can figure out all the rest of it by yourself.

You Don't Have To Be A Know-It-All

As an information broker, you are basically getting information for free and selling it to customers for as much as you can get for it. You may not know everything you need to know about every little information source that is available to you, but in the beginning that won't matter. You will learn this as you get clients. What happens is that your clients will make you smart about your own business. When I started I barely knew two or three major sources in Washington, like the Department of Commerce and the Library of Congress. But after a year and a half of doing projects for clients, I learned 90% of everything I know today, and that's 15 years ago. You'll go up the learning curve fast when you're constantly trying to get new information for clients. That's why it's important to get clients as soon as possible. If you're trying to get information for pretend clients, you're not going to have the same motivation and you won't get the real feedback you need to be able to make the proper adjustments for the next client. Even consider working for free for a potential client. It's better than doing nothing. This way you are at least honing your skills at gathering information and getting better at it all the time.

So, there are basically only two things you should be spending your time on...looking for customers or satisfying those customers. In the information brokerage business, everything else is a detail that shouldn't be your first priority.

What Are You Going To Sell And To Whom?

The problem with the information brokerage business is that you are basically a generalist who knows how to find information on just about anything. It's a great skill to have but it can create some serious marketing problems. How do you go about selling everything to everyone? It's very difficult, believe me, I've tried it. In the beginning of my business, I was telling people that I could give them information to solve any kind of problem. It took me awhile to realize that people have specific kinds of problems and they can only use you if you identify these specific problems and tell them you can get them the answer that they're looking for.

Before I could get customers I had to show them how I could solve their specific problems like: financial information on their competitors, or information on the size of little known markets. They don't have "anykind" questions. No matter how good you are, you're not going to be successful if you go in to sell someone that you can answer "anykind" questions. The best you're going to get from the potential client is "Ok, Mr. Information Broker. When I have an 'anykind' question I'll give you a call." They'll never have one. So they'll never call.

Remember Rich People Have More Money

Besides finetuning your sales pitch you also have to consider finetuning your customer base. The big question is: Who are you going to sell to?

Some people are in business to make money. Some people are in business to save the world. And some are in business to do both things. If you're in business to save the world, you better get out. You'll be much happier becoming a non-profit organization or joining a religious order. Saving the world is too expensive to do as an entrepreneur.

That leaves us with the other two options to work with: making a buck and making a buck and saving the world. IF you're interested in making money and saving the world, you first have to make money in order to be around long enough to save the world. So we're down to just trying to make money (the good old fashioned American way). With this in mind, information brokers might be smart to remember what Willy Sutton said when asked why he robbed banks. He said; "Because that's where the money is". Information brokers have to live by the same slogan if they want to stay in business. It may be that poor people have a lot more information needs than rich people do, but poor people barely have enough money to pay for food and certainly aren't going to pay for information, no matter how useful the information might be. Rich people on the other hand, have money to spend on finding out how they can get richer, and they are willing and able to spend it.

Consumers Or Business?

Now that I've finished stating the obvious, let me talk about something that may not be as clear. Is the market for your information going to be aimed at consumers or businesses?

Both groups have information needs and both have wealthy as well as poor constituents. I've sold information to both groups and have developed some rules of thumb for selling to each of these different groups.

Businesses, especially the big companies, are more accustomed to paying for information than consumers are. That's because they're all spending someone else's money. They're all trying to accomplish their goals as easily as possible. That means when they need information to make their decisions it's easier and quicker to buy it than to go out and find it themselves.

More and more businesses are realizing the value of having good information for good decision making. Whether big or small, a business can't succeed today unless it keeps up on the latest information. Business in the 90's is a fast changing environment, and unless companies are willing to keep up to date on what is going on in their markets, competition, technology, and regulations, they'll soon be out of business.

The information brokerage business is very similar to any other kind of service business, like the shoeshine business, for instance. Anyone can shine their own shoes, but people with a few extra bucks would rather pay someone $2 to do it for them. As an information broker, you have to find people who understand the value of having clean shoes and have a few extra bucks to have someone else clean them.

That's why I believe that selling to businesses or organizations is a better place to start when looking for customers. It's just an easier sell, with more available dollars to spend.

A Nitch Or Not

You also have to decide if you want to develop a "hook". That's a marketing term to make it easier for people to purchase your services. It's taking the situation we mentioned earlier about "any kind of a problem" and refining it even further. It makes it easier to attract the attention of customers if you can say you specialize in some interesting aspect of the information brokerage industry. I was fortunate enough to have started in Washington, DC and developed the hook of government information. The other businesses that were around when I started were either in New York City or California, and didn't have my advantage of being located so close to government sources. It gave me an instant edge over my competitors, even though I had no more experience gathering information than they did.

There are a number of ways of describing the niche that you want to develop for your business. You can define it by the customer group that you specialize in helping: small businesses, environment-related businesses, or non-profit organizations. Or you can define it by the area of information you want to deal with, such as: health information, company information, or international information. Another way you can describe your business is by the medium of the information you want to provide, such as: only database searches, only document retrieval, or only interviewing industry experts.

How To Find Customers

It's a game of beat the clock. You have to find enough customers to feed yourself before you run out of money. With all the time in the world anyone can eventually teach themselves, through trial and error, how to find enough customers to sustain a business. But no one gives you all the time in the world. Your time will be limited to the amount of money you have to keep living on while you search for customers. That's why success is a game of beat the clock.

In order to stay alive for the longest amount of time it's best to spend as little as possible on each attempt to get customers. This is why having a lot of money can be a big problem in starting an information brokerage business. Sure, you can spend tens of thousands of dollars by placing full page advertisements in the Wall Street Journal or some other national newspaper. But it's very unlikely that such advertisements will ever pay for themselves. People who place big advertisements like that normally do it because they are in it for the long haul. They're big established organizations who have already figured out what works and what doesn't work. They know if they don't get back the money they spend on the ad this year they'll get it back next year, or the year after. You have to try to make sure you're going to be in business next year, and that's why you have to use your money wisely, and in smaller ways than a flashy Wall Street Journal ad.

Businesses that survive in the long run are those that learn how to run lean and mean. If you only know how to succeed with lots of money, you're eventually going to be out of business. Every business experiences business cycles, just like the economy does. There are good times and there are recessions. If you know only how to live in good times, what are you going to do in the recessions? What you'll do is go out of business. The businesses you see folding during the bad economic times are the ones who never learned how to operate their businesses lean and mean. They figured that the good times would last forever. So don't start that way. If you start with a lean and mean approach, you'll not only learn how to survive the bad times, but you'll also make a lot more money during the good times.

Five Ways To Get Customers Without Breaking Your Bank

You have to be both creative and persistent. As soon as you start implementing one customer generating project, you should immediately be trying to think of more ways to get customers. The secret to successful marketing is to always plan for failure. You should be thinking about what you are going to do when your first plan fails, instead of wasting your time thinking about what to do when it succeeds. You may think that this is negative thinking, but I see it more as survival thinking. Anybody can handle success. That's easy. But can you handle defeat? That's the trick in business and in life, and you have to be prepared for it. Though no one goes into business hoping for a failure, it's a fact that failure is going to occur a heck of a lot more often than success. So that's what you should be training yourself for and trying to plan for.

Here are six things to think about as you plan for your next failure:

#1: Make 100 Phone Calls A Day

One of the hardest things to do in any business is to make cold calls. If you're not willing to do this, it's doubtful that you're serious about being in business. Everybody makes cold calls, and you should too. It's a great way to learn what you really know about your business, and to learn what you need to learn.

Making cold calls will help you determine what's both right and wrong with your business. By trying to sell something directly to a customer, you will immediately start learning what you have to change in your business to make a sale. If you call a hundred people and half of them say they would buy your product if it was orange, then it's obvious what to do. You go home and paint your product orange and call those customers again. This is the type of market research you'll get back by cold calling on customers. And this is much better than doing original market research before you start your business. I personally don't believe in market research before a business is started. It takes just as much energy to ask someone to actually buy something than it does to ask if they would consider buying something if it were made available to them. To me, market research seems like a trial run. Why not just run the real race?

Who Do You Call?

The most important thing is to keep calling. You'll never have the perfect list of potential customers to call. This is a sales and learning experience. After making 100 calls you'll wind up with a dozen other kinds of people to call, because you will learn from calling people. There will be people who you will call who will tell you about other opportunities, and that's how you're going to get the perfect customer list to call. The object is to just take the best available list you can think of and start calling.

If you are thinking local, you can call your local Chamber of Commerce and they can give you a list of the largest organizations in your community to contact. It's usually a free list or it costs very little. The Chamber may also have a library that will be stocked with all kinds of other local lists, like high tech firms or medical facilities in your area. Additional local lists can be identified from the section below entitled "Free Mailing Lists Of Customers".

If you're thinking national or international, you can get these lists too. To find appropriate professional associations, go to the library and find Gale's Encyclopedia of Associations. This book lists all trade associations and trade publications, and it's well indexed.

What follows are some helpful hints on what to say when you make these important first calls.

STEP #1

The most important thing to remember is to ask for their business. But before you do that, you will probably talk about a lot of other things first. Be personable, friendly, and receptive to their conversation.

STEP #2

Do you know who you are going to ask for? If you don't, that's OK. When someone answers the phone you can say something like this:

"Hi, I'm Matthew Lesko, with Information USA and I was told that you have someone in your organization who is in charge of buying information services. Can you help me figure out who that might be?"

A starting paragraph like this is bound to lead to someone in the organization. But the most important part of calling and saying something like this is that you talk in an optimistic and energetic tone. If you call up and start talking in a negative tone like: "You don't need any information today do you?" People will want to please you and they can do that by saying you're right, they don't need anything, and hang up on you.

After making a few calls not knowing who to ask for, you'll start learning that there's probably only one person in an organization who buys your kind of information. It could be the Director of Marketing, the Sales Manager, the Corporate Librarian, or even President of the company if it's a small business.

STEP #3

What do you say when you get to the person who might be interested in the information you have to offer? You might want to start by saying something like this:

"Hi, I'm Matthew Lesko with Information USA, and I want to know who I might send some literature to about my information services. My service taps into all the latest information technology to make sure that your business knows the best places to make money."

This should be enough to get you started. At this point a few things may happen. They'll tell you to go away. Then take their advice and go away; it's not worth any more effort. Or, they'll tell you the name and address of someone to send some information to. Or, they'll ask you more about your services. Or, they might not say anything. With this kind of opening, you should start saying things that may be of interest to them. Like, how you helped some other similar company in the neighborhood, or how you have a new source of information you would like to come in and tell them about. If it looks like there's an open door to learning more about your services, be sure that you step through it!

STEP #4

Send your material out to that company as soon as possible. If you don't have an official brochure, send a customized letter describing your services. In today's fast changing society, I feel it's almost better not to have a brochure. Using your personalized letterhead is a good way to keep your business flexible, because your ideas about your business are going to be changing all the time. It's very likely that as soon as you print 10,000 copies of some brochure you're going to want to change it. The longer you can put the production and expense of something like a brochure off, the better.

STEP #5

Wait a week or so after you send your literature and then call them back. You may want to say something like this:

"Mr. Schilling, you may not remember me. We spoke last week about how my information services may be able to help your company. I just called to make sure you received my literature and to see if you had any questions about how services like mine might help your business."

During this conversation you will also want to try and get an appointment to see someone at that company in person. Or tell them you can give them a price proposal for a specific project. You may want to say something like this:

"Mr. Schilling, I know it's a little complicated to understand how our services can solve a lot of your problems, and I think the best way to explain what we do is for me to give you a no obligation price quote. Let's pick an area that might be of interest to you, maybe information on a competitor, or a new customer and I'll be happy to tell you how much it will cost to get you this information. What do you say? Give me a topic. I'll give you a quote. And, you can use it today, tomorrow or never. No obligation, honest."

#2: Start A Free Newsletter

This idea worked wonders for me. Before I used the newsletter idea, I was placing one inch advertisements in the Wall Street Journal. It was the most that I could afford, and it wasn't getting me any interest or business. When you're offering a service that is pretty complicated to explain, it's difficult to say anything much in one inch of space. Almost every response was worthless. I would even get people who would write their name in crayon on napkins and send it in to me. It was pathetic.

Then I had a bright idea that I would put out a free newsletter on how to get free information. I only knew a few sources at the time, because I wasn't really even in business yet. I had no customers. The newsletter was only four pages long. The first three pages talked about the information sources I knew something about. But page four described some of the kinds of services I could provide. When potential clients received my newsletter it seemed that they finally had something to relate to, because my phone hasn't stopped ringing since.

Potential clients could really relate to the newsletter for a number of reasons. It showed how smart I was by describing a half dozen information sources and anyone reading it would not know at least one of them. So they thought I was smart because I knew more than they did. (By the way, never worry about showing how dumb you are. The people who are smarter than you won't hire you anyway. But there are a whole lot of people dumber than you and these are the ones that you're after.) But I also think the newsletter did more than just that. It gave potential clients suggestions as to the type of information they could get. If they read my description of how you could get information about companies filed at the Securities and Exchange Commission, that might raise new questions, such as, "Hey, I wonder if you can get information about companies that file at the Federal Communications Commission?" and they would call me.

Never Worry About Giving Away Secrets

People have always asked me if I worried about giving away my secrets about finding information because then people wouldn't need me. That never bothered me. Look, I'm telling you how you can go into business and compete with me. There are no secrets in life, just lazy people. And the more money people get, the lazier they become. When people are buying a service, what they are really buying is trust. Think about it — would you go to a doctor or lawyer if you didn't trust them? The same is true for the information brokerage business. You first have to develop trust with a client no matter what your business is. If you belong to a fancy "union" like the doctors and lawyers do, trust almost automatically comes with the letters after the name. But the information brokerage business has no fancy union, so you have to develop another way to build trust with your clients. Giving free samples is a great way to do this, and it doesn't cost you anything because it's only words on paper. For the same amount of money it would cost to print up a brochure telling people how great you are, you can print a free newsletter that will actually give people something of value — information.

And as for somebody taking the information in your newsletter and finding out what they need themselves instead of hiring you, don't worry about it — that's going to happen anyway. You have no control over that. The people who want to do it themselves will find a way to do it themselves no matter what. It's the other people you want as clients, the people who don't want to do it themselves and have the money to pay someone else to do it for them.

I've been giving away free samples for close to 20 years and it has only helped, and never hurt my business. And it feels good too.

It doesn't have to be much of a newsletter, It could be only two sides of an 8 1/2 by 11 inch paper. It could be only one color if you want. The critical point is not color and size, it's just getting it done, and getting it out there in front of potential customers.

#3: Get Free Publicity

It doesn't get better than this. Why pay thousands of dollars for a one minute ad on television when you can get 7 minutes, 15 minutes, or even an hour for free? The way you do this is through publicity. You've seen it all the time as a consumer — people talking about their books on talk shows, or the local entrepreneur talking about his business on the local TV News. You can do that too.

Publicity is the main reason my newsletter was so successful. When I first published the newsletter, I didn't send it directly to potential customers, but instead sent it to the press. And because I was interested in finding businesses as clients, I sent it to the business press announcing a free newsletter on how to get free information. When you offer the press something that is going to be helpful to their readers, they're bound to be interested in it and want to let others know about it.

Within weeks I was receiving up to 500 inquiries a month. And these were real inquiries on real business stationery — not notes on napkins written in crayon. At that point, I was hooked on the value of publicity. I was shocked that I could send something out to the media and they would tell their readers about it, and it didn't cost me anything.

You don't have to offer the media a free newsletter. You can just have a press release and offer important tips right on the press release. Maybe something like "Ten Information Secrets For Small Business".

You can send your press release to all kinds of media, not just the obvious ones. You can start with the business media like I did, or you can use the general media like newspapers, radio or TV, either locally or nationally. No matter who you decide to send your press release to, you have to remember to call these media sources after you send out your material. Try to talk them into using it. You'll probably even have to send the material all over again after you call. The media in this country gets inundated with press releases. And the only way to have any hope that they'll take a second look at your press release is by talking to them after they've seen it. A press release has got to be eye catching and upbeat too, in order to spark the media's interest.

Here are some sources that may be helpful in identifying media. You can contact these organizations directly or go to your local library and look at their publications for free.

- 3) Local United Way
Most local United Way organizations maintain excellent listings of all local media and will give you a copy for free or for very little cost.
- 4) A Good Reference Library
Most good reference librarians will be familiar with available directories listing media sources. Ask for their assistance while you're at the library doing research.

I've included a sample press release to show you that there is no magic in writing a good one. You should try as much as you can to be provocative in your writing, different, exciting, fun, rude, or anything else you can think of to get anyone's attention. There is a lot of noise out there in the media and you have to fight for just a little bit of coverage. But remember, the important point is just to get one out there. Don't agonize about what you're going to say in this first press release. Just give it your best shot. Learn from it. Then start all over and try it again.

Sorry. The following press release is just a sample. I'm no longer offering free subscriptions to my newsletter.

FREE NEWSLETTER ON HOW TO GET ...FREE INFORMATION

Research expert and information guru Matthew Lesko is giving away the store. That's right! He's sharing his most important information secrets that he's spent a lifetime uncovering in a free 4-page newsletter so that small business can learn the power of information. He's willing to show you:

- how to get information on your most ruthless competitor by tapping into revealing state records;
- how to get free market studies on hot new products by calling little known government offices;
- how to get access to free mailing lists of customers from government agencies when people have to provide their addresses;
- how to find free expertise on money making investment opportunities in foreign countries.

Lesko's giving away the names, addresses, and even the telephone numbers of all his contacts. What — is he crazy? No, he just believes that information is the key to success for any small business and he's willing to give out free samples to prove his point. Even if your business has all the money it needs, the key to any success is the right information. If you don't know how to spend your money wisely, you'll be out of business in no time. Don't blow the opportunity to make your small business a success — get Matthew Lesko's information secrets, and put them to work for you!

Why pay for market studies when you can get them for free? Why pay high priced private investigators to spy on your competitors when you can learn about them for free?

Matthew Lesko operates an information consulting business that has an impressive track record showing business clients around the country how they can use information to grow their business. If you would like a copy of his free newsletter, contact:

#4: Free Speeches

Giving speeches to trade and professional associations is like making the perfect sales call to 100 different businesses all at one time. Dozens or hundreds of potential customers come to these gatherings to hear how you can help them. It doesn't get better than that, and the potential for important future contacts to be made at events like this can be awesome.

You'd have to make thousands of calls to make contacts like this. You can make it happen with just a few calls to the right organizations. You can be a speaker at trade and professional associations, local societies or business groups, at local junior colleges, or even at local libraries. It all depends on who you think the market is for your business.

If you think your clients would be marketing managers in large companies, contact the American Marketing Association in Chicago, Illinois. Through them you can get a listing of their upcoming conferences and the names and addresses of conference chairmen. They're always looking for speakers, especially free speakers. So if you call and say that you'd be happy to speak on the subject of "How To Get Free Marketing Information", you could have a good shot of being included on the next program. There are thousands of trade and professional associations you can speak to. To find which ones may be the best for you to contact, go to the library and find Gale's Encyclopedia of Associations. This book lists all associations and it's well indexed. There are also books listing upcoming meetings and conventions that may be interested in booking interesting speakers.

Local groups are also always looking for free speakers. Your local Chamber of Commerce can help you identify groups like a local marketing society, advertising club, auto salesmen group, or any group of 10 people meeting once a month for a rubber chicken lunch or dinner. An awful lot of business is initiated at these kinds of gatherings.

You can also speak at the local public library. Most libraries offer their facilities to people who want to give free speeches to the community. So if this is your market, check it out, because a lot of these organizations will probably even do the advertising for a speech for you. Any advertising of your speech will promote you as an "expert" in your field, and bring about even more people as contacts that could help your business grow.

#5: Free Mailing Lists of Customers

There is always some slick salesman out there who will be willing to sell you a mailing list of people they are convinced are your customers. My experience tells me that the best lists for information brokerage customers are those you collect yourself, or are members of specific small professional societies. Generic lists, like the names of directors of marketing for large corporations are not going to get you much response in a direct mailing. It would probably be better to call 100 or so organizations and get the specific name yourself of someone who buys information services.

Oftentimes, membership lists are much more profitable to mail information about your product or service to. These could be lists such as the local advertising executives club or the National Association of Bank Marketing Executives. Lists like these are not usually sold by mailing list salesmen, but are normally only available by going directly to the society themselves. You can locate relevant national societies by going to the library and looking at the book we mentioned earlier called Gale's Encyclopedia of Associations. To identify local professional groups, contact your local Chamber of Commerce or your local reference librarian.

Let's also talk about how to get free mailing lists. In marketing, the old adage "you get what you pay for" is not always true — it's more "you get what you work hard for". If you do a little work you can get some promising lists for free.

Start with your state office of economic development. You can find them by calling the operator located in your state capital. This is the office that is most interested in business development in your state. People in this office keep track of what kinds of business are located in the state, how big they are, etc. Many of these offices even maintain special lists like, companies who sell products overseas, or companies who are in the high tech business. It's worth a couple of calls to snoop around, because knowing this kind of information might come in handy in solving information requests for clients.

One of the best sources of business is your state office of corporations. From this office you can get lists of all the new businesses that started in your state. It seems that it's usually the new businesses that are trying to solve problems and need information to get ahead. The old businesses are usually cutting back and trying not to buy anything, while the new businesses are trying to grow. Many states are set up to provide lists of new businesses stating the name, address, and phone number along with the names of the owners. These can turn out to be great leads.

Also check your state licensing office. That's the office where all professionals have to register their activities, like doctors, lawyers, accountants, physical therapists, nursing home administrators, or travel agents. Remember, once the information touches the government in any way (such as through registration or licensing procedures), the information about that business becomes public, and that means that it's now your information, too.

How to Keep A Customer

The most expensive thing you'll ever do as an information broker is to try to get a new customer. Getting repeat customers is a lot cheaper than finding new ones. You've already sold them once, so they're convinced of the value and need of your service. With very little effort you can generate new business from old clients. Here's some ways to do this:

1) A Quick Call With Hot Info

Many times it only takes a simple call to an old client to remind them that they have an information problem you can cure very easily. You know the old saying, "out of sight, out of mind". Well, it works the same for customers too. But you should not call giving the impression that you only want to get more money from them, even though everyone knows that's what you're doing. It's much better to call with some free hot news you thought they would be interested in, like an article in the newspaper that may influence their business. You wanted to make sure they didn't miss it, and you would be happy to fax it to them. Your clients are busy people and they will be more interested in giving you their time if they feel that you have their interest at heart, along with your own.

2) A Sample Of A Continuing Report

You can offer past clients continuation services. If they had an information problem once, you can make sure that they don't have it again by providing a monthly, automatic updating service. For example, if your client contracted you once to get information on their competitor, you can offer to update the information every month for a fee of $150. This way they will stay on top of the situation knowing what their competitors are doing, and won't have to call you in an emergency when their boss needs to know something about the current competition. You will have already provided that information to them.

3) A Freebie Document

Without calling or writing proposals for continuation services you can easily generate new business by just sending a freebie with a little sticky note saying:

*"Thought you'd be interested in this.
Give me a call if I can help."*

You can look for articles that deal with the last project you worked on for them. Or, you can contact relevant government agencies and get copies of free reports to send to them. For example, if you had a client that once asked you for information on the Cable TV industry, you can call the U.S. Federal Communications Commission and get free copies of the latest reports showing trends in the industry. Almost any business owner is interested in this kind of information, especially if it's current. It's the kind of thing that most business owners just don't have the time to do.

It's all about communication — the more you communicate with new and established clients, the more those clients will identify new ways to use your services.

What's Good and Bad About Using Computers In The Information Age

Food Processors, PCs, and other Miracle Products

Before you purchase a database, first think about what you are actually buying. Is it the steak or the sizzle? Many of today's commercial database vendors are selling their services the way food processor sales reps sold their wares a few years back. Remember the sales pitch that this kitchen appliance could make the entire meal every day of the week? However, after buying this expensive gadget we found that puree of steak did not taste as good as a charcoaled piece of meat and that carrot mousse didn't suit our children's taste buds. Now we all have this expensive equipment cluttering up the kitchen counter that we use a few times a month to make coleslaw or milk shakes because the blender we bought 10 years ago is stashed away in the attic. Remember when simple was better?

This phenomenon has struck personal computers. A few years ago, buyers were sold on the belief that the world would pass them by if they did not have a PC. Furthermore, this sophisticated machine would solve all their problems and organize their lives like never before. We were told that daily tasks such as balancing the checkbook or keeping track of recipes would virtually disappear. However, PC owners discovered that because they never balanced their checkbook by hand, they were never going to do it by computer. It actually was more complicated and took longer to use the computer than the old fashioned way. And, keeping 50 or so recipes in a $1,000 machine that is located at the other end of the house proved to be inconvenient. Soon people realized that the "practical applications," like word processing and spread sheets, were not typical household functions. As a result of this revelation, computer sales began to plummet.

Waiting For The Technology To Mature

One can safely predict that computers will eventually be easier, cheaper, and more practical to use as the sophistication of the technology improves. The same pattern occurred with the introduction of the automobile. It took decades to get it right, and even now, cars are being improved in subtle ways all the time.

When cars first rolled off the assembly line, the primary advantages they offered over the horse as a traditional means of transportation were technology and novelty. An automobile cost at least ten times more than a horse. These complex machines were difficult to start and required special fuel that was hard to come by. Special clothing, goggles, and other paraphernalia were necessary for protection against dust and the elements. And cars were very limited in where they could go due to the lack of good roadways. All of these problems could not compare with the simple act of jumping on a horse and going anywhere. It was obvious that the horse still was the fastest, most convenient, and most inexpensive mode of transportation. But even then people were willing to be oversold on the use of a new technology. In other words, they bought the sizzle instead of the steak. And those who waited until the cost was worth the benefit of the application found that as the technology improved, the new product was faster, cheaper, and easier to use than the original. With the increase in available software, or highways in the case of automobiles, there were many more uses and applications for the new product than the old one.

By waiting for the technology to evolve into a cost effective alternative for a specific application, consumers who held on to their horses before buying the first automobiles found that they got to their destinations a lot sooner for a lot less money than the new car buyer. And when these patient consumers purchased the later model of automobile, they found that their later model machine could do a great deal more than the ones that rolled off the first production line, with a lot less kinks to be worked out.

Pros And Cons Of Databases

Overselling Computerized Databases

A similar story continues to unfold with online databases. Slick sales reps tell us that we can solve all of our information problems with their databases. Again buyers, because of their infatuation with the technology, are dazzled with the notion of getting the answer to a million dollar question by simply dialing up an all knowing computer. In order to avoid spending money on novelty items, one has to see if the price of obtaining information via high tech means is worth the money compared to relying on traditional alternatives.

Helpful With Large Amounts of Info

Databases are especially good at handling large amounts of information, and there are literally hundreds of computerized systems that perform this function. These services index and abstract everything from all business-oriented periodicals to those that can provide such bibliographic help only in a certain subject area such as energy. If this is your field of interest, you should think about what you will be paying for. Most of these types of databases are aimed at the professional user and can be expensive. Studies show that the average professional user of databases spends about $100 per hour. What kind of information will you be able to access at that price?

A $100 Seminar On How To Shop At Macy's

Many of the professional databases are also very complicated to use. It is the only industry where commercial vendors charge their customers for taking a course on how to spend money on their products. Wouldn't it be something if Macy's Department Store charged you to take a class on how to shop at their store? This should be a clue that databases and their applications are not for everyone. Especially if you know that you'll be using a database very infrequently.

Much of the material that is online is also available in print form. So you may be paying $100 per hour for the convenience of not dropping by your local library to look up the indexes manually. At $100 an hour, you could buy an awful lot of library help.

Non Discriminating Computers

Also remember that these bibliographic databases sometime create more problems than they solve. Searching a large database on a subject can easily churn out 500 articles for you to review. The problem now comes in trying to identify the worthwhile articles, not to mention actually obtaining those which you select. The computer is attempting to cope with the information explosion by providing the capability to index any and all data that are generated. However, the computer does a very poor job at being selective. It cannot tell you whether an article is good or bad. This problem is only getting worse because anyone with a word processor can be a publisher within days and the commercial vendors are always eager to acquire new databases.

After you get bombarded with some 500 citations racing across the screen, you still may have to make a half dozen telephone calls to locate a real expert in the field who can suggest which are the best and most current articles to read. Or this expert may be able to give you the answer right over the telephone. Even better, he may be able to tell you what will be online next year because he is in the midst of writing or reviewing articles and manuscripts on that subject. Remember, even though a report or survey is contained in a database, that does not guarantee it is the latest available information. Many databases still rely on printed documentation, so many times there may be less expensive and easier ways to get your hands on more current information. In the chapter "Using Industry Sources And Overcoming The Negative Researching Syndrome", use the resources listed in the section "Government Experts".

Is Speed Worth The Price?

Getting information to you quickly is another function that databases and telecommunications do exceedingly well. Here again, you must decide whether the convenience is worthy of the expense. Having the Associated Press wire service available during the day at $10 to $20 per hour may not be cost effective for you and your business unless you are a million dollar business. Most of us barely get through the morning newspaper which costs a mere 50 cents and usually contains the highlights of what is reported on the wire service. And it's not yet feasible to scan your newspapers via computer either in bed or while commuting to work. No doubt getting the price of stocks as they are traded on the floor of the stock exchange at $75.00 per hour may be worth it if you are a big time investor and have to know what the stock market is doing minute-by-minute. But for most of our investment decisions, reading the stock quotes in our local morning paper is usually good enough. There are many professional applications in addition to big time investing in which speed would be worth a significant premium. It is wise to make sure that paying for this convenience is honestly necessary to you and your organization.

Help If You Are Reinventing The Wheel

Another aspect of telecommunications which appears to have much more usable potential is the ability of like minded people to communicate instantly. The pace at which civilization develops seems dependent upon the speed at which ideas are refined and shared with others. Thus, it seems reasonable to assume that some day soon one person on one side of the street will not waste his or her time wrestling with a problem which has already been solved by someone else on the opposite side of the street. Telecommunications can aid in the process of making information more available.

We once spoke to a veterinarian in Iowa who was faced with treating a three-legged dog and was uncertain how to proceed. As a member of a veterinarian bulletin board, he posed his question to this professional forum via computer. By the next morning, there were answers from doctors in Florida and Massachusetts who had treated similar cases. He did not have to wait for the next annual meeting of veterinarians or for a relevant article to be published in the Journal of Veterinarian Medicine. Overnight, he had his question answered and was free to tackle other unsolved problems because his time was now free to go on to other things.

Databases Are Here To Stay

By presenting all these negative aspects, we hope it is now more obvious that databases contribute only a few pieces to solving a big information puzzle. Many times the cost far exceeds the benefit. However, like the automobile, online databases are here to stay, and in time, they will become more reasonably priced and offer applications users never dreamed could exist.

The online database business, like other segments of the information industry, is a buyer's beware market. Access to a $1,000 computerized information system that one firm is selling may be available for free or a modest charge from some public or non-profit organization.

Some suggestions about purchasing databases are described next which are intended to help you save some money while utilizing this current technology.

Money Saving Online Tips

Use The Free Database First

This may sound obvious, but the real problem is that you may not be aware of free online databases. The free ones cannot afford to hire an expensive sales team to promote their systems. Here are some examples of how prices may vary widely for the same product:

- You can tap into weather information on over seven systems at prices ranging from $3 to $90 an hour, or you can access the National Weather Service's free database provided by the Federal government, which happens to be the basis for all the other sources of weather information.

- Online encyclopedias can cost up to $75 per hour if you are accessing systems like Dow Jones or BRS, or you can pay as little as $6 per hour on CompuServe or Delphi. Oftentimes, it is the exact same file.
- City or state demographics can cost over $100 an hour from such vendors as DIALOG, BRS or Chase Econometrics, or you can use the free database offered by Conway Data, Inc. in Atlanta, Georgia (404-446-6996).
- The latest economic statistics that are sold on such systems as DRI and Chase for as much as $160 an hour can also be accessed for free from an electronic bulletin board maintained by the U.S. Department of Commerce. Chances are the data are probably available sooner from this free source.

Lesko's Info-Power, a monthly newsletter published by Information USA, Inc., frequently identifies unadvertised bulletin boards and databases that are free.

Consider Off-Line Alternatives

Typically what many commercial database vendors do is find data that are available in other formats, such as hard copy, off-line printout and computer tape. You can often save a lot of money by not accessing online systems but rather getting the information in less high tech ways. Here are some examples:

- Legi-Slate, Commerce Clearing House, and Congressional Quarterly will charge you up to $190 an hour to find out the current status of legislation, or you can telephone for free searches and even obtain computer printouts on all the bills you are monitoring by using a free database maintained by the U.S. Congress.
- Services such as Data Resources, I.P. Sharp, and Chase Econometrics will charge you $100 per hour to obtain demographic information on any country in the world, or you can call the International Demographic Center at the U.S. Bureau of the Census and request a free printout of the same information which may even be more current.
- Dialog charges $45 an hour for information on U.S. exports, and the Trade Information Branch at the U.S. Department of Commerce will give you much of the same information for free. Also, the data will be more current because this government office is where Dialog gets the information it sells.
- Control Data Corp. allows you to access a file called FARPS that will tell you where to get money in the government for your project, or you can contact the U.S. General Services Administration which maintains the file and this government agency will do free searches for you.

- An energy bibliographic database maintained by the U.S. Department of Energy in Tennessee is sold by DIALOG or it can be accessed directly from the government for free.

Use Database Wholesalers and Intermediaries

Many commercial vendors have initiation fees and monthly minimums which can increase your hourly cost considerably if you are not going to be a large user. One way to cut out these extra fees, at least until you see what your volume will be, is to use a database wholesaler or intermediary. For example, if you are a subscriber to MCI, you receive access to the Dow Jones service without paying an additional initiation charge. You may begin to see more of these opportunities as the telecommunications industry develops further.

If you are a first time database user and are interested in the non-consumer oriented electronic systems, it may be wise to have someone else do your searching. Even some so-called "user friendly" databases are not as easy to use as their vendors claim. Online charges at $100 an hour can translate into a hefty bill if you are just learning the system. Companies called information brokers will usually handle this for you. The best way to find available brokers is to contact your local reference librarian. They are in a good position to tell you what is available locally. If you have trouble with this approach, you may find help by calling: DIALOG Information Services, Customer Service, 1-800-334-2564.

This major commercial database vendor maintains a list, by city, of those organizations which will provide this service tailored to your needs. Be sure to ask if a nearby public, academic, or specialized library might perform online retrieval services because chances are, this would be a cheaper alternative. For example, the Brooklyn Business Library will do database searches and charge only for direct out-of-pocket costs. An information broker is likely to cost you three to four times as much. The following reference book identifies over 8,400 databases available in a variety of electronic formats:

If you have a PC with a modem but have been reluctant to access the more complicated business databases, you can call Easynet. This firm will search some seven major vendors for you and send the results to you via your computer. Easynet covers most of the major business databases and claims that their average search cost is $17.00.

Save With Evening Discounts

Most of the commercial database vendors offer discounts if you access their systems during the evening hours and other non-prime times. According to a survey of vendors, the average savings amounted to 50%, which means that if you encounter any volume at all, it would pay for you to hire someone to come into your office in the evening just to access certain databases. Here is a sample of such discounts offered by some of the major vendors:

ADP Network Services	50%
BRS	62% to 80.9%
CompuServe	52%
DataNet	84.4%
Dialog	53.3%
Dow Jones	22% to 78%
Delphi	45%
Mead Data Central	50%
NewsNet	25%
Source	62.7%

Save On Telecommunications Software

In this case, the cheapest may be the best. A paper presented at the 1985 National Online Conference concluded that there was little difference between using a free telecommunications product for the IBM-PC called PC-TALK and a $120 product called Instantcom. To obtain a copy of PC-TALK, contact your local IBM users group.

How To Use Your Computer... To Sell Government Information

Besides tapping into government information with your computer you can also load large government files into your computer, then turn around and make money selling the information in smaller bits to interested companies. Here are some examples:

Selling Government Contract Information

There's a database with millions of records at the U.S. General Services Administration that shows who got government contracts from what government agency and for how much. There's a great business opportunity here in selling this information to the following groups:

A: Businesses and freelancers who are looking to get government contracts and would like to know who in the government might buy their product.

B: Small and minority businesses who are looking for subcontracting work. There are laws requiring companies who get large government contracts to subcontract to small and minority businesses.

C: Government contractors who are interested in keeping tabs on what contracts their competitors are winning.

For more information on the price and availability of these files contact: Federal Procurement Data System Division, Federal Procurement Data Center, General Services Administration, 4040 N. Fairfax Dr., Suite 900, Arlington, VA 22203, 202-401-1529.

Selling Government Grant Information

This is an interesting database that very few people know is available. It contains the name and address of everyone who got a government grant, direct payment, loan, or loan guarantee. For large programs like Social Security it only gives a total dollar amount for a small geographical area, like a congressional district. But for other programs it gives the names and addresses of people like those who got money for their business, money to work on their video program, money to travel overseas, etc.

The market for this information may not be as obvious as the one for government contracts, but, believe me the market is there. Here are some examples to start with:

A: College and university researchers who want to know who is giving out research grants and who's getting them.

B: Insurance salesmen who are looking to sell business policies to companies who just got large government loans or grants.

C: Mailing list brokers who are looking for hot lists of people who get government money.

D: Banks and other financial services companies who are always looking for people who just got large amounts of money so that they can manage it for them (hold it in their bank or invest for them).

For more information on the price and availability of these files contact: Federal Assistance Programs Retrieval System (FAPRS), Federal Domestic Assistance Catalog Staff (WKU), General Services Administration, Ground Floor, Reporters Building, 300 7th St., SW, Washington, DC 20407, 202-708-5126.

Selling Government Statistics

Everyone needs data at one time or another. That's one of the main reasons that the information brokerage business has become so big. And one way more and more clients are going to want their data is in a form that their particular computer system can read. As an information broker, you can take data from government computerized files, and slice it up and reformat it for your clients.

For example, you can go to major statistical agencies like the U.S. Bureau of Census, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Agriculture, and the U.S. Department of Commerce and copy all the data files that have information showing the makeup of the people that live in your city. Banks, restaurants, and other businesses need this information in order to make informed decisions about the growth of their business. You can add value to this information by providing it in a format that is compatible with their computer (Lotus, dBase, etc.), and you can constantly send them updates to keep this information current for them.

There are literally thousands of places in the government you can get computerized data and resell it to customers. For example:

- You can get the names and addresses of all the people subscribing to a government publication on the environment and sell the information to non-profits who raise money to address environmental issues.
- You can get copies of all the Freedom of Information Act letters filed at a government agency like the Food and Drug Administration. Then scan these letters into your computer and sell this as a service to anyone who sends in a Freedom of Information Act request to get copies of everyone else's Freedom of Information Act requests.
- You can get the names of all the people who borrow money and use an asset as collateral and sell these names to mailing list companies, insurance companies, or bankers. This is the kind of information available from state offices.

Keep in mind that 99% of all government information is public. Just call offices you're interested in and see if they make their data available in computer readable formats. Then, you will only be limited by your imagination.

How To Write A Proposal

You may not even have to. Most information brokers work on projects ranging from $50 to $5,000. If it's a $50 project you're involved in, you certainly don't want to spend a whole lot of time writing proposals. You could spend the whole $50 just on proposal writing. But if the client wants a proposal, you should give it to him.

A small contract can be handled with just a few lines. You could say something like this:

Sample Small Project Proposal Letter

Mr. Jeff Bean
Carbon Steel Company
270 Price Street
Pittsburgh, Pa 18726

Dear Mr. Bean:

Thank you for calling us today to help you with your information requirements. As per our conversation, our task will be to identify any and all public documents filed to the State of Maryland Office of the Secretary of State under the name of Republic Steel, Inc. Our fee for this is $50.00, and is payable whether or not documents have been filed by this company.

We will report to you no later than Wednesday, April 29, 1995.

Again, thank you for your business.

Sincerely,

Matthew Lesko
President

On a short project, there is very little to lose if you have a miscommunication with the client. So if you can get away with a verbal agreement, all the better because it costs you nothing. You can play it safe by sending a note like the one above to serve as a backup agreement. But it's a different story for bigger projects. When there's some serious money involved, it's important to lay out everyone's expectations on paper before you begin the project. You should state what services you are going to perform and describe some of the limitations of the research process. Sometimes it's necessary to reassure new clients that you won't lie, cheat, or steal to get the information.

Below is a sample copy of a proposal letter for a more involved project.

Sample Large Project Proposal Letter

September 7, 1994

Mr. Steve Robbins
Graham Products Inc.
309 Palm Avenue
San Diego, CA 97213

Dear Mr. Robbins:

Thank you for thinking of us to assist you with your data needs. I feel that we can be of great assistance and I look forward to having an opportunity to show you how well our company can perform for you.

The objective of our research will be to seek the following information:

The Market Structure and Pricing for Clean Room Swabs in the United States.

The types of information we will attempt to find will include but not be limited to the following:

- 1) The names and addresses of the major manufacturers;
- 2) An estimate on their size (market share and/or sales); and
- 3) Prices charged for typical quantities at the manufacturing and distributors level.

The research methodology for this project will include:

- 1) Interviews with executives from major manufacturers and distributors of clean room swabs;
- 2) Interviews with federal industry experts who monitor this market; and
- 3) Interviews with executives in trade associations and industry journals which cover this market.

Information USA, Inc. does not guarantee that all the information desired will be found, but we do guarantee that all the sources described above will be researched and that we will give our best effort to accomplish the stated objectives.

Because of the nature of the project we cannot guarantee that this information is available and exactly how long it will take to obtain it. Our expertise is in obtaining difficult information inexpensively. The initial cost of performing this research will be between 10 and 12 hours of research time at $100 per hour. At this juncture we will have either obtained all the information or will have enough to provide you with a good estimate of market share. Or, we will be able to tell you whether we can obtain the stated information objectives and how much more research it will take to accomplish this.

The final written report will highlight the results of our findings. You will receive copies of all reports, articles, and other public and private documents we collect during the course of our research. You will also receive the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of all sources which provide us with information so that Graham Products can collect this data for itself in the future. Where and when appropriate we will computerize our findings for you. This can be done by providing you with the information on diskette or through an intermediary such as NEWSNET or CompuServe. Also, because this research will only identify the majority of sources available and not explore the total universe of sources, our report will identify the likelihood of uncovering any additional information through more exhaustive investigation.

To insure Graham Products' confidentiality, all research will be conducted in the corporate name of Information USA.

Research can begin upon receipt of a $500 down payment. It is expected that the research will take approximately three weeks to complete. You will be billed the balance upon acceptance of the final report. The price includes all charges, including communications fees. However, the price does not cover the cost of purchasing any outside market studies. Such items will be billed separately, and Information USA will consult with you for authority and billing arrangements before any purchase is made. This price is guaranteed for four weeks from the date of this letter but is subject to change thereafter.

Thank you for allowing me this opportunity to present our services. Please feel free to call me should you have any questions concerning this proposal.

Sincerely,

Matthew Lesko
President

Beginning Your Research Project

Cultivating a successful list of clients — it's the single most important element of your business. It may take weeks and even months of phone calls and then follow up calls to finally convince a customer to take a chance on you and give you some work. Show these clients that you'll execute their research project thoroughly and in a timely manner. If you are able to accomplish this, you may make a repeat customer for yourself simply by completing this first assignment. Over time, this client will come to rely on you for accurate information sources, knowing that he can come to you time and time again to retrieve the information that he needs. Mark my words, that client will be more than willing, even eager to pay premium dollars for your expertise!

Months of setting up your office with the right equipment and talking to the right people to get the choice research assignments will be worthless if you don't have a clear understanding of how to actually find the information that has been requested of you. How do you begin to get on with this first very important assignment to gather information?

Let's begin with the basic request for information from the client. Has he been specific about the information that he wants you to find? Or has he instead given you a vague outline of what information he thinks he needs? The most important task that you can accomplish at the beginning of a project is to clarify with the client and yourself the exact information that you have been asked to search for. This clarification just might be the key to the success or failure of the project, and will probably determine whether this client will come to you in the future with other projects.

Oddly enough, one of the biggest obstacles you may encounter is coming across too much information for your client — an avalanche of information, so to speak. It's a vital part of your assignment to understand just how much information your client needs to proceed on to the next step of his project. Chances are, he will not be interested in seeing mounds of extraneous information that will only confuse him. Therefore, narrowing the goals of the project to fit the clients' needs will save you important time and will demonstrate to the client that you are indeed a quick study and get down to business quickly.

A Case Study

Let's suppose that a client contacts you to discuss the development of an outlet mall that he is contemplating, along with a group of investors. He has identified available real estate close to a high volume National Park, and has convinced a group of investors that this could be a potential goldmine for an outlet-type mall. The investors will not go ahead until they have some important questions answered regarding this project. The client comes to you for those answers because he knows that you won't present him with useless information that will only slow down the deal and complicate the situation. He knows that sometimes too much information can make a potential investor edgy and can point up other questions that the investors now want answered. You should begin to set up a plan to accomplish the goals set up in Plan One phase of a project.

Stage One: Questions To Be Answered

A. Could the proposed area sustain a mall, based on available demographic information?

1. Population statistics for a 100-mile radius
2. Tourist attendance statistics for the Park and general area over the last five years.

Research Sources:

- Local Chamber of Commerce
- State Office of Tourism
- State Tourism Office for National Park Visitors
- U.S. Department of Commerce for population and business pattern statistics
- State Labor Office for local labor statistics
- State Economic Development Office for appropriate projections

B. What methods would be most successful in attracting qualified merchants to the outlet mall?

1. Compile leasing requirements from a sampling of retail merchandisers
2. What are specific demographic requirements for their customer base?
3. What size of retail development are they most interested in participating in?

Resource Sources:

- Contact three major retail merchandisers already included in outlet malls, such as:
Eddie Bauer
The Gap
Nike Athletic Shoe Manufacturers

C. General industry information regarding mall outlets

1. How do they draw merchandisers?
2. How do they allocate appropriate space to a retailer?
3. What major problems have they encountered?
4. How do they successfully manage their particular outlet?

Resource Sources:

- Talk with a store manager of an outlet mall.
- Check to see if there is an association for discount outlet owners in the area.
- Check to see if a trade publication exists for this particular industry.
- Attend a local Chamber of Commerce function where local merchandisers would be available to exchange information.

Much of the information for this report can be obtained easily over the telephone. Your local library is an excellent source for information on associations, trade publications, and regularly scheduled meetings held by leaders in that industry. You can always begin your search of federal offices by calling the Washington, DC information operator at 202-555-1212. Keep in mind too, that your local telephone directory lists most state offices, and by simply going through these pages you will no doubt find additional sources that you hadn't initially thought to contact. Online services are growing tremendously as an information source, often containing more up to date research than information found in publications.

This initial work will define the first stage of your research project. Some points you thought to be crucial to your research project may lose their importance in the face of more important information. For example, factors such as location might take on added significance as you learn more about local zoning restrictions. Often the information gathered from this phase will direct the work necessary to complete the second phase. This initial work may even define the project more clearly in the eyes of your client, and he'll be grateful to you for accomplishing this.

How To Write A Report

"If no one reads your report, your research is worthless." That's the one thing you should keep in mind when preparing a report for a client. Also, think about the newspaper USA Today and the local news on your television. These two organizations understand the communication of information better than anyone else in our society.

We live in a society with a lot of noise, a whole lot of noise. Everyone is competing for our attention. Think of it — we now have over 100 television channels and now they're talking about 300 channels being available soon. There are thousands of magazines published each year and they are adding more all the time. And, some 20,000 people subscribe to the INTERNET where they have some 8,000 special interest groups. And this keeps growing as we speak. Your report has to fight for your client's attention just like all these other media sources. But, you may say, "Yeah, my client paid big bucks for my report so she is definitely going to read it." Wrong. If it's boring, she's just going to skim it to see if there is anything really important or new in it, and then forget about it because it was boring. Or if she can't find the information in your report fast enough, she's going to get frustrated and probably never hire you again. So keep remembering that presentation is just as important as substance. The American people are the best entertained people in the world, and you have to be aware of that if you want to successfully communicate with them.

Answer the questions first. Your clients are busy people. They hired you to save them time, not to waste their time. It's not like in high school or college when you wrote about a lot of extra things in your term papers just to fill up pages. Clients don't need filler — they need answers. So, if the client asked you to get the size of the market for BBQ utensils in Southern New Jersey and you couldn't get the exact figure, don't beat around the bush about how much of everything else you were able to find. Answer the question up front. Give an answer, even if it's only your best guess, and then explain how you arrived at the number. Then you can go into how much other information you found while conducting your research.

Document Interviews. This is a technique that many researchers fail to do. I believe that interviews should be treated the same as any other source of documented information. For example, if you found the size of the BBQ utensil market in an article in Time Magazine, you should also pass along a copy of this article to your clients. You should do the same for interviews — if you spoke to an expert who told you the size of the BBQ utensil market, you should also include the highlights of this interview on a separate sheet of paper. The paper could look something like this:

Sam Gibbons
Industry Analyst
U.S. Department of Commerce
Washington, DC
202-377-4995

- the largest sellers of BBQ utensils in the United States are Acme, Craft, and Iron Works
- the market has grown over 30% in the last two years and is expected to grow another 10% next year
- the size of the market in the United States must be over $200 million dollars and probably double that in the rest of the world

Report writing was one of the hardest parts of the business for me to learn. You have to know that I flunked English in college. So writing did not come naturally to me, even though I now have two New York Times Best Sellers and write a syndicated column for the New York Times. Any writing ability I have has come from writing reports for clients. So I feel that if I could do it and do it effectively, anyone can.

Report on Outlet Mall Venture

Prepared by:

Toni Murray
Information USA, Inc.
P.O. Box E
Kensington, MD 20895

As requested, I conducted interviews with three merchandisers, The Gap (415-737-4883), Nike (503-671-4299), and Eddie Bauer (206-861-4844) to ascertain their criteria and understand their procedures for setting up outlet stores.

In surveying the three retail merchandisers, the consensus of opinion confirmed that the outlet mall concept was booming and that their outlet ventures were all doing extremely well. The criteria for choosing location for their stores was the same for each company:

1. That the mall should be located on a major highway with maximum accessibility.
2. That the area be tourist oriented and that there be year round traffic.

Nike revealed their outlet stores were doing better than their Nike Township stores. They also confided that they were considering producing products especially for their stores in outlet malls. The Gap is newer to the outlet concept of selling so the information that they can provide is not as extensive. They only have five stores, but are planning to open 20-25 outlet stores in the next five years. Eddie Bauer is well established in the outlet market presently, having 37 outlets. They look specifically for a mall that has other upscale stores.

In questioning the three retail merchandisers about criteria for considering a new location to open an outlet store, the subject of location within the mall was of major importance to all of the merchandisers. Visibility from the highway and visibility within the mall is extremely important to all merchandisers. Juggling positions of retailers will be an extremely important factor to be considered when choosing stores you wish to target to participation in this outlet mall. Strip malls are preferred over enclosed malls for two reasons. Strip malls are less expensive to maintain and they allow more visibility for merchandisers. The terms "center court", "end caps" and "anchor tenant" emerged repeatedly from these interviews. All of these terms relate to positioning within the mall. Anchor tenant is the store that appeals to all customers and will have the biggest draw. Center court is the space in the middle of the mall that has the most visibility. "End caps" are the spaces at the end of each side of the strip mall that are normally filled by a major retailer, with name recognition.

Eddie Bauer, whose parent company is Spiegel, mentioned that if Spiegel participated they would want a pod space (pod being a separate building adjacent to the mall). A synopsis of each interview with the merchandisers is included at the end of this report.

The Nike representative shared the name of the Silverthorne Outlet Mall in Colorado when I inquired about an outlet location in the Rocky Mountain Region of the United States. The manager of the Silverthorne Mall informed me that the mall was owned by a Virginia real estate corporation. I discovered that this company owns 79 outlet malls throughout the United States. Their Silverthorne Outlet Mall has 258,000 square feet and the anchor stores for this mall are Nike and Liz Claiborne, each with about 8,000 square feet. The "center court" position is held by Levi with 10,000 square feet.

In the course of my research, I learned of an industry publication that covers the outlet mall industry. The title of the publication is Value Retail News of Clearwater, Florida (813-536-4047). A complimentary copy of this newspaper has been ordered. It can be used as a valuable tool in keeping abreast of current market trends within this industry.

To summarize the findings of the interviews with the Gap, Nike, and Eddie Bauer:

1. For an outlet mall to be successful, a location on Highway 89 or 90 must be a priority.
2. This discount mall must be positioned so maximum visibility from the highway is achieved.
3. Planning of the mall structure should incorporate the factors of anchor stores and end caps. Also, enough land should be purchased to allow for building of pods should large merchandisers wish to join the mall;
4. Statistics need to be compiled and presented.
 - that travel east and west on Highway 90 and north and south on Highway 89 is sufficient to support an outlet mall.
 - population statistics of a 200 mile radius of Livingston must be presented to prove that there is year round population to draw on. These statistics should be supported with mention of the regional differences of Montana versus city drivers. (Montanans count miles, not hours, when driving, and expect to drive long distances to shop.) Figures on winter tourism in Yellowstone Park and at Bozeman's ski resort and Big Sky should be included with this information.
 - Weather statistics to dispel the myth of arctic winters making Montana roads impassable in the winter months should be included. The following reports will aid in this presentation.

Demographic Data

Montana State Travel Office (406-444-2654)

Yellowstone National Park Travel Data - This report details the number of vehicles and visitors that entered Yellowstone National park from the North entrance (Gardiner, MT) in 1994.

Visitors	455,410
Vehicles	366,122

Gross Lodging Tax Revenue - Reports are provided for the city of Gardiner, the city of Livingston, and for Park County. A tax of 4 percent of lodging price is collected by all motels, hotels, and bed and breakfasts.

Institute for Tourism and Recreation Research (406-994-2090)

The University of Montana

The following information is taken from the institute report, A Profile of Visitors to Montana: I-94, published in 1992. The report is based on 1990 statistics.

The institute estimates that 140,000 non-resident groups enter Montana on Interstate 94. 7 percent (9,800) of that group exit Montana via Highway 89 North and enter Yellowstone Park.

The following information is taken from the institute report, A profile of Visitors to Montana: Highway 89 South, published in 1992. The report is based on 1990 statistics.

The institute estimates that 107,000 non-resident groups enter Montana via Highway 89 South as they leave Yellowstone park.

Recommendations for continuing research:

1. Contact Mike Riley (406-994-2090) at the Montana State University Business school regarding a report he is currently writing for the Museum of the Rockies on tourism in the Bozeman area.
 2. Contact and interview 30 possible merchandisers who might participate in the Mall.
 3. Contact State Highway Department to obtain their statistics on east-east and north-south traffic out of Livingston.
 4. Research actual site location information including:
 - a) land available for sale along I-90 and Highway 89
 - b) tax costs of land
 - c) zoning restrictions
 - d) city and state restrictions and regulations governing the land.
 5. Plan a comprehensive public relations campaign addressing all positive and negative issues in order to win city approval of project.
 6. Prepare presentation folders for all outlet merchandisers you plan to approach to participate.

Why Government Information Is Necessary For An Information Brokerage Business

Our changing economy has created both good and bad news for entrepreneurs. The bad news is that while our country may no longer produce the best cars in the world, the good news is our country has become the premier producer of information in the world. And now that the entire planet has been transformed into the information age using computers and databases that are available worldwide, this is even better news. Maybe it doesn't matter if we don't make the best cars anymore. Here's more good news for entrepreneurs — the largest source of information in the world happens to be the U.S. government. And because we live in a democracy, anyone can get all this information for free, or at very little cost. Because of this demand, as an entrepreneur in the information age there's a lot of money to be made providing information to people who need it and don't know how to get it. With the government as your source, you've got it made. You can get your product for free, and sell it to your customers for as much as the market will bear. It's kind of like running a gas station and having a free oil well in your backyard.

Government Is America's Biggest Industry

What people have failed to realize is that government in the United States now represents over 37% of the country's total Gross National Product. If you think the computer industry is big, think again. Look at the accompanying chart and you'll see that the percentage of GNP that accounts for the computer industry is peanuts compared to the government. Look at farming, health, and automobiles, and you'll see that government is bigger than any of them. If you ever go to Washington you'll see that there are no smokestacks in the city because our government doesn't make things — it's a government that produces paper, information, and expertise.

More Books Than All The Commercial Publishers

Did you know that all the major commercial publishers in the United States produce a total of about 50,000 books a year? This means that there are only about 50,000 new titles in all the libraries and bookstores around the country in a single given year. But did you also know that one little publisher in the government, called the National Technical Information Service (NTIS), publishes over 100,000 titles a year? Strangely enough, most people have never heard of the NTIS. Yet, it's the major source for reports published by federal agencies. I've seen government studies that show this agency is only publishing about 20% of what it actually could generate. So if NTIS was doing a perfect job they would have about 500,000 new titles a year. This is ten times the number of books published by all the commercial publishers in the country — and that's a lot of information.

And Better, Too

You must also remember that government publications are going to be better than the books you find in the bookstores or libraries. Ok, maybe they won't be as sexy looking but they sure will be more thorough. When you buy a book in the bookstore from an author like me, you get a book that the author spent maybe a year or two or sometimes as long as five years of his life working on. Five years is a long time for an author to work on a book. Authors have to eat every day, and there are very few of them able to spend five years on a book and still keep food on the table.

When you get a book from the government it is very likely that some government agency spent over 100 man years producing it. Much of government information and expertise is a result of large projects or contracts, and when the government studies something, they REALLY study it. That's what most of us say is wrong with the government...the fact that they spend too much time and money on everything. As an information broker this works to your advantage, because it will provide you with the most complete work available on any given subject.

Who Else But The Government Can Afford To Do It

Who else can afford to spend $3 billion dollars counting all the noses and toilets in the United States? That's what the U.S. government spent on the last census. They actually count people, toilets, and a whole lot of other things. Not even the biggest companies in the world such as General Motors or Proctor & Gamble and the like, can afford to spend that much money collecting information for just one study. But our government can and does, spending big money collecting information every day. And you can get it for free.

700,000 Free Experts

In addition to information in the form of reports, books and other publications, the government also has expertise. And it employs more experts than any other business in the world. Where else are you able to talk to experts on subjects like pasta, crayons, poplar trees, and even jelly beans, and all without it costing you a cent. I estimate that there are approximately 700,000 experts in the federal government that are each getting paid up to $80,000 a year just to study topics like these. And these experts are available to you for the price of a telephone call if you know where to look for them.

It may sound like an oxymoron to say "government expert", but after talking to thousands of them over the years, I truly believe that most government experts are more knowledgeable and more unbiased than those so called "private experts" who charge a lot of money to express their educated opinions. Let me give you some examples. Let's say your stock broker calls you up. You consider her to be an investment expert and she recommends putting all your money into biotechnology. Now think about it: Is that stock broker really an expert in biotechnology? No, she's an expert in calling people on the phone and getting them to invest their money in something. Most likely that stock broker just learned how to spell biotechnology that morning!

If you really want to learn about biotechnology you can call one of dozens of experts in the government who spend their careers doing nothing but studying biotechnology. So, when you call a government biotechnology expert, they could have been studying the industry for the last ten years of their life. These are not people, like investment advisors, who are trying to guess what everyone else in the market is doing. They are experts who live with the facts and figures in their head because that is their one area of study and expertise. Based on their study, they know today what trends and opportunities will show up in places like the Wall Street Journal in weeks, months, or even years. For another investment story see the chapter entitled "The Art Of Getting A Bureaucrat To Help You".

Using Free Government Experts As An Information Broker

It's important to realize the tremendous value of these government experts. As an information broker you can actually get better information from these experts than from the private professionals who charge high fees. It works for most any kind of specific expertise, be it marketing, legal, economic, and even medical.

Let's look at medical information as an example. Most of us believe that we have to go to local doctors to get the latest medical information, but that's not true at all. Doctors are probably the one group in America that is suffering the most from IES (Infomus Explosus Syndrome). IES means that the information in their discipline is growing so fast that there is no way they can possibly keep up on everything that is going on in their field and continue to take care of their patients. You've seen the headlines about health in the news — they're discovering new treatments, causes, and cures for diseases every day. Most doctors barely have enough time to read the New England Journal Of Medicine once a month, and this only provides them with a handful of articles.

Instead of relying on a busy doctor, who may not have the most up to date information and will also charge you a lot of money, you can call a government expert for free. The National Institute of Health spends billions of dollars every year studying every conceivable disease or ailment that you can think of. So instead of going to your local physician to determine the latest cure for anything from arthritis to hemorrhoids, you can call a government expert who is spending his career studying that disease. And these experts are also handing out lots of money to other experts around the world to study this disease. So why hope that your local doctor has had time to read the latest edition of the New England Journal Of Medicine when you can call a government expert who can tell you what will be in the New England Journal of Medicine next year, because they are conducting that research today.

This is also true of lawyers. Think about it. Where do the laws come from in our country? The government, right? So when you want to get the answer to a legal question, don't hire a lawyer when instead you can go to the government and get the answer for free. For example, maybe you're interested in buying a franchise and after talking to a franchise salesman you decide you better get some legal advice. If you call that friend of a friend who is an attorney for advice, they will go and read up on the franchise law for you. The attorney knows that the law changes every day and she better go find out what the latest revision is. Remember that this attorney is probably charging you somewhere between $100 and $200 an hour to get this information. Instead, you can make a call to the U.S. Federal Trade Commission and talk to a franchise attorney who helped write the law. In short, why pay someone $200 to learn the law for you when you can talk to someone who wrote the law, and it will cost you absolutely nothing?

Why Doesn't The Average Person Understand The Value Of Government Information?

I've been selling government information for close to 20 years now and I still can't come up with a simple answer to this question. I believe that it all comes from a combination of circumstances. First and foremost, most people hate their government. This is true because the only dealing most citizens have with government bureaucracy is with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), the Division of Motor Vehicles, and what they read in the newspapers about the latest government screwup. Most of us are sick and disgusted with the waste and "shenanigans" that seem to characterize our government in daily headlines.

Let's look at these government agencies. Of course, everyone hates paying taxes. It's just unAmerican to feel otherwise. But the Division of Motor Vehicles is hated by most of us for a different reason. It's probably the only government agency that most of us come into contact with during our lives. At one time or another we all have to get our drivers license renewed. You've all been there. You stand in line for hours and finally come face-to-face with some bureaucrat who has been answering the same question a thousand times that day. She hates her job and treats you miserably. You treat her miserably back, and struggle through talking with her just to get the whole thing done. But you're not done. She tells you to stand in another line. And after waiting in this second line for what seems forever you're in front of another miserable person who also hates his boring job. And you wind up having one of the worst days of your life, and you rightly blame it all on the Division of Motor Vehicles in your state. With the only government experience taking place at the Division of Motor Vehicles, it's obvious that the government wouldn't be on the top of anyone's list when they start thinking about where to get help and information.

The other major source of interaction most people have with the government is through the media. And with what we read about IRS scandals, Housing and Urban Development (HUD) scandals, hammers for $1,000 at the Defense Department, sex scandals on Capitol Hill, and more, we end up having little respect for government as a whole. These stories used to bother me a lot when I first started promoting government information, because they were so counter to the story I was trying to tell, but they don't bother me now. I've learned to better understand the role of the media in our society, which is to present the news. News is what's different in our society each day, and thank goodness the bad stuff is still what's different. When the good stuff becomes what's different, or news, then our society is really in trouble. The media's job is to find and expose what's wrong in our government and then we're all supposed to want to see it fixed. It's also very easy for the press to find someone in the government screwing up. We live in a democracy, and therefore, what work the government does is all public information open to public scrutiny. With over 15 million government workers on the payroll it's pretty easy to find someone screwing up. The media can't find someone in your house or small business screwing up because it's a private place of business, but once you get arrested or something like that, then your screwup becomes public information.

Day in and day out the average American is being bombarded with stories on how the government screwed up today. After hearing that over and over again, and not having any other personal experience except the bad one with the Division of Motor Vehicles, it's easy to see why a good upstanding American is going to go out of their way to avoid any contact with a lazy, shiftless bureaucrat.

Are The Rich Smart Or Welfare Queens?

There are some other myths about the government that keep us from using it like we should. I'm sure you've heard statements like this: "It's unAmerican to use the government. Our country is built on people who do everything for themselves. The only people who use the government are welfare queens or crooks who take congressmen and senators to lunch". I was brought up believing that this statement was practically a part of the Bill Of Rights. That belief changed when I got to Washington. Now I see that all the fat cats in our society have made it big because of help from the government. If your definition of a welfare queen is someone who takes money from the government and really doesn't need it, then some of our most famous current cultural heroes can be called welfare queens.

People like H. Ross Perot — he made his fortune getting government contracts. He built his business into being worth zillions of dollars, and then he sold it to General Motors. And as soon as he left General Motors he started another business getting government contracts. General Motors even tried to sue him for leaving and starting up a competing business that went after government contracts.

Ross is not alone. Lee Iacocca turned Chrysler around because he went to Washington and got a $1.2 billion loan from the government. I laughed when he made a big deal about repaying the loan. I grew up thinking all loans had to be repaid. Donald Trump built his whole business on government money programs that helped him buy and fix up property. "Mr. Dealmaker" even brags in his first book about how his first million dollar deal involved government property in Cincinnati. I was shocked to learn that even John Wayne got a government giveaway. That's right, John Wayne, who stood for everything America likes to believe about being a rugged "do-it-by-yourself" individualist. His private yacht was a converted U.S. Navy mine sweeper that was purchased at a government auction. But myths die hard even when the facts prove those myths wrong.

Uncle Sam Doesn't Advertise

So far I've only been talking about what goes on in the mind of the average American that stops them from using the government, but there are also a few things going on in the government that aren't helping things either. A big problem is that the government does not advertise the fact that most of this money and help is available to the average citizen. The reasons that they don't advertise can be put into two basic categories. For programs like grants, loans, and other money giveaways, it's difficult for a bureaucrat to ask Congress to kick in an extra million dollars to advertise the fact that they are trying to give away hundreds of millions of dollars. That seems to be a real tough sell for a bureaucrat. If they make such a request when fighting for their budget on Capitol Hill a Congressman would obviously say: "Why do you need the money in the first place? If you have to advertise that you want to give this money away, there can't be a need. So we're going to cut your budget!" No good bureaucrat ever wants a member of Congress to consider cutting their budget, because that could mean their job.

There's a different problem with the non-money stuff like all of the available government information and expertise. Most government information has not been created so that you can make a lot of money selling it. You're never going to see big signs in the government saying "FREE INFO: COME AND GET IT". The information that has been collected and created has all come about because of some law or policy. The fact that you can profit from it is just a byproduct of its original intent.

A good example is the U.S. Census. We've all heard of it, and we all know that it contains a lot of information about the kinds of people that live in the United States. But did you know that the real reason we do the Census is because our Constitution says that periodically we have to count the number of people living in this country so that we can figure out how many Congressmen and Senators we should have? So as a byproduct of the Constitution, we now have a $3 billion dollar market study that we can use to figure out the best place to open up a jewelry store, the best place to live, or where to look for rich people, among other things.

The same is true for other government information. The experts at the U.S. Department of Labor that forecast the supply and demand of various kinds of jobs in our country are doing this so that our government can better understand the effects of industry downsizing on government programs such as unemployment insurance. So if you're thinking about a new career, don't rely on reading an issue of U.S. News and World Report that talks about jobs in the year 2000. That article was written by some reporter who spent maybe a day, a week, or perhaps a month studying the subject. Instead, call the expert at the U.S. Department of Labor, who's been studying the topic for the last 15 years of his life.

The same is true for people like the aquaculture expert at the U.S. Department of Agriculture. An expert like this is on the payroll making $60,000 a year and studying the future of aquaculture because, some day, the availability of fish off our coasts might not be adequate to feed our population and we have to be ready with alternatives. But in the meantime, if you're interested in investing in an excelsior farm, this would be the office to contact. They have to know more about this subject than anyone else in the world because the future of America may depend on it.

The Art Of Getting A Bureaucrat To Help You

Our greatest asset as information seekers is that we live in a society inhabited by people who are dying to talk about what they do for a living. However, in this world of big bureaucracies and impersonal organizations, it is rare that any of us get a chance to share what we know with someone who is truly interested. Perhaps that explains why psychiatrists are in such great demand. They are great listeners, and not many average Americans are these days.

This phenomenon can actually work to your advantage — almost anyone can find an expert on any topic if you are willing to make an average of seven telephone calls to eventually locate that expert.

The Value Of Experts In Today's Information Age

Using experts can be your answer to coping with the information explosion. Computers handle some problems of the information explosion because they are able to categorize and index vast amounts of data. However, many computerized databases fail to contain information that is generated by non-traditional sources, like documents that are buried in state and federal agencies.

Another problem is that many databases suffer from lack of timeliness because they offer indexes to articles and most publishers have long lead times for getting the material into print. And in our fast changing society, having the most current information is crucial, and these articles are often not as current or up to date as they should be.

Computers also contribute to a more serious problem. Because of their ability to store such large quantities of data, computers aggravate the information explosion by fueling the information overload. If you access one of the major databases on a subject such as Maine potatoes, most likely you will be confronted with a printout of 500 or more citations. Do you have the time to find and read all of them? How can you as a non-expert tell a good article from one that will just waste your valuable time retrieving and reading it?

The first step to cut through this volume of information is to find an expert specializing in Maine potatoes. Yes, such an individual exists! This person already will have read those 500 articles and will be able to identify the relevant ones that meet your information needs. This expert will also be able to tell you what will be in the literature next year on the subject of Maine potatoes, because he is probably in the midst of writing or reviewing forthcoming articles right now. And if you are in search of a fact or figure, this government bureaucrat might know the answer right off the top of his head. The best part of this research strategy is that all this valuable information can be accumulated for just the price of a telephone call.

Case Study: How To Find Mr. Potato

The techniques for locating an expert can best be illustrated by a classic story from the days when I was struggling to start my first information brokerage company in 1975.

At the time the business amounted to just a desk and telephone crowded into the bedroom of my apartment. As so often happens in a fledgling enterprise, my first client was a friend. His problem was this: "I've got to have the latest information on the basic supply and demand of Maine potatoes within 24 hours."

My client represented a syndicate of commodity investors which invests millions of dollars in Maine potatoes. When he called, these potatoes were selling at double their normal price and he wanted to know why. I knew absolutely nothing about potatoes, but thought I knew where to find out. The agreement with my client was that I would be paid only if I succeeded in getting the information (no doubt you've guessed I no longer work that way).

Luck With The First Telephone Call

The first call I made was to the general information office of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. I asked to speak to an expert on potatoes. The operator referred me to Mr. Charlie Porter. I wondered if this Mr. Porter was a department functionary with responsibility for handling crank calls, but the operator assured me that he was an agriculture economist specializing in potatoes. I called Mr. Porter and explained how I was a struggling entrepreneur who knew nothing about potatoes and needed his help to answer a client's urgent request. Charlie graciously gave me much of the information I needed, adding that he would be happy to talk at greater length either over the phone or in person at his office. I decided to go see him and meet a real expert face to face.

Only Problem Was Getting Out Of Charlie Porter's Office

For 2 1/2 hours the next morning, the Federal government's potato expert explained in minute detail the supply and demand of Maine potatoes. Charlie Porter showed me computer printouts that reflected how the price had doubled in recent weeks. For any subject that arose during our conversation, Charlie had immediate access to a reference source. Rows of books in his office covered every conceivable aspect of the potato market. A strip of ticker tape that tracked the daily price of potatoes from all over the country lay across his desk.

Here in Charlie's office was everything anyone might ever want to know about potatoes. The problem, it turned out, was not in getting enough information, but how to gracefully leave his office. Once Charlie started talking, it was hard for him to stop. It seemed that Charlie Porter had spent his lifetime studying the supply and demand of potatoes and finally someone with a genuine need sought his expertise on the subject closest to his heart.

One Potato....Two Potato....

When I finally had to tell Charlie that I really had to leave, he pointed across the hall in the direction of a potato statistician whose primary responsibility was to produce a monthly report showing potato production and consumption in the United States. From this statistician I was to learn about all the categories of potatoes that are tallied. It turns out the U.S. Department of Agriculture counts all the potato chips sold every month, even how many Pringle potato chips are consumed in comparison to say, Lay's Potato Chips. The statistician offered to place me on the mailing list to receive all this free monthly data.

The Art Of Getting An Expert To Talk

The information explosion requires greater reliance on experts in order to sift through this proliferation of enormous data. Cultivating an expert, however, demands an entirely different set of skills from using a library or a publication. You must know how to treat people so that they are ready, willing, and able to give you the information that you need. It is human nature for almost anyone to want to share their knowledge, but your approach will determine whether you ultimately get the expert to open up to your questions. So it is your job to create an environment that makes an individual want to share his expertise. Remember when dealing with both public and private sector experts, they will get the same paycheck whether they give you two weeks worth of free help or if they cut the conversation short after a minute or two. They will decide whether you'll get all of the information that you're asking for.

Expectations: The 7-Phone Call Rule

There is no magic to finding an expert. It is simply a numbers game which seems to take an average of seven telephone calls to find the answer you're looking for. Telephone enough people and keep asking each for a lead. The magic lies in how much information the expert will share once you find the right individual. This is why it is essential to remember "the 7-phone call rule", and never stop at the second or third lead that seems to be going nowhere.

If you make several calls and begin to get upset because you are being transferred from one person to another, you will be setting yourself up to fail once you locate the right expert. What is likely to happen is that when your "Charlie Porter" picks up his telephone he is going to hear you complaining about how sick and tired you are of getting the runaround from his organization and colleagues. If you don't sound like you are going to be the highlight of Charlie's day, he will instantly figure out how to get rid of you fast.

This explains why some people are able to get information and others fail. Seasoned researchers know it is going to take a number of telephone calls and they will not allow themselves to get impatient. After all, the runaround is an unavoidable part of the information gathering process. Consequently, the first words that come out of your mouth are extremely important because they set the stage for letting the expert want to help you.

Ten Basic Telephone Tips

Here are a few pointers to keep in mind when you are casting about for an expert. These guidelines amount to basic common sense but are very easy to forget by the time you get to that sixth or seventh phone call.

1) Introduce Yourself Cheerfully

The way you open the conversation will set the tone for the entire interview. Your greeting and initial comment should be cordial and cheerful. They should give the feeling that this is not going to be just another telephone call, but a pleasant interlude in his or her day.

2) Be Open And Candid

You should be as candid as possible with your source since you are asking the same of him. If you are evasive or deceitful in explaining your needs or motives, your source will be reluctant to provide you with information. If there are certain facts you cannot reveal such as client confidentiality, explain just that. Most people will understand.

3) Be Optimistic

Throughout the entire conversation you should exude a sense of confidence. If you call and say "You probably aren't the right person" or "You don't have any information, do you?" it makes it easy for the person to say "You're right, I can't help you." A positive attitude will encourage your source to stretch his mind to see what information he might have that could possibly help you.

4) Be Humble And Courteous

You can be optimistic and still be humble. Remember the old adage that you can catch more flies with honey than you can with vinegar. People in general, and experts in particular, love to tell others what they know, as long as their position of authority is not questioned or threatened. In fact, if they are made to feel like an expert by the way you treat them, chances are that they will give you more information than they originally intended.

5) Be Concise

State your problem simply. A long-winded explanation may bore your contact and reduce your chances for getting a thorough response.

6) Don't Be A "Gimme"

A "gimme" is someone who says "give me this" or "give me that", and has little consideration for the other person's time or feelings. Remember to "ask" for information or a particular document that you're interested in.

7) Be Complimentary

This goes hand in hand with being humble. A well placed compliment about your source's expertise or insight about a particular topic will serve you well. In searching for information in large organizations, you are apt to talk to many colleagues of your source, so it wouldn't hurt to convey the respect that your "Charlie Porter" commands, for example, "Everyone I spoke to said you are the person I must talk with." It is reassuring for anyone to know that they have the respect of their peers.

8) Be Conversational

Avoid spending the entire time talking about the information you need. Briefly mention a few irrelevant topics such as the weather, the Washington Redskins, or the latest political campaign. The more social you are without being too chatty, the more likely that your source will open up to you.

9) Return The Favor

You might share with your source information or even gossip you have picked up elsewhere. However, be certain not to betray the trust of either your client or another source. If you do not have any relevant information to share at the moment, it would still be a good idea to call back when you are further along in your research when you might have information of value to offer.

10) Send Thank You Notes

A short note, typed or handwritten, will help ensure that your source will be just as cooperative in the future.

Case Study: Jelly Beans

In our information society, which produces thousands of databases and other resources every day, it seems that most decision makers rely primarily on traditional information sources. More often than not executives will spend lots of time and money trying to determine the size of a market or information about a competitor, and if the answer cannot be found through conventional sources, the corporate decision is made without the information. This does not have to be the case.

We believe that you can find solid information for almost any problem, no matter how sensitive the issue may be, if you use some unorthodox research techniques. To illustrate this point, here is a step-by-step account of how one of our researchers succeeded in gathering figures on the U.S. market for jelly beans when a Fortune 500 firm came up emptyhanded after exhausting all traditional sources. The prevailing view both inside and outside the industry was that this piece of the information puzzle could not be obtained.

It should be said at the outset that the estimates Information USA, Inc. finally obtained must not be regarded as 100% accurate, but they do represent the best available figures and, most likely, come within 10% to 15% of the actual number.

Opening Round

Faced with the problem of finding the U.S. market for jelly beans, we already knew that our client had contacted the major market research firms, did some literature searches, and came up with practically no useful information. As is evident from this case study, this information hunt occurred when Ronald Reagan was President and jelly beans happened to be the candy of choice of several very high government officials.

- 1) The first call was to the U.S. Department of Commerce to locate the government's jelly bean expert. We were referred to Cornelius Kenny, the confectionery industry expert. Mr. Kenny was out that day and would call us back when he returned to the office.
- 2) A search of Gale's Encyclopedia of Associations identified four relevant trade associations. However, upon contacting them we were told that they provide information only to their members.
- 3) The White House seemed like a good bet because of Ronald Reagan's fondness for jelly beans and the resulting publicity. The Public Affairs office at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue said that it never obtained statistical information on the industry but could tell us tales about a lifesize water buffalo and portraits of the President constructed of jelly beans. However, they suggested that we contact several lobbying organizations. Calls to these groups proved fruitless.
- 4) A call to the U.S. Bureau of the Census uncovered John Streeter, an analyst who monitors the panned candy industry. He told us:

- * jelly beans have never been counted and there would be no way to get the answer;
- * the non-chocolate panned candy category within the Bureau's Annual Confectionery Survey contains jelly beans;
- * the seasonal category of the non-chocolate panned candies, according to his estimates, contains 90% jelly beans because most jelly beans are sold during Easter and that jelly beans are about the only non-chocolate panned manufactured candy sold on a seasonal basis;
- * $37,804,000 worth of non-chocolate panned candy was shipped by U.S. manufacturers in 1984, which represents about 48,354,000 pounds; the figures for total non-chocolate panned candy for 1984 totaled $251,525,000 and 237,308,000 pounds; and
- * government regulations prohibited him from revealing the names of jelly bean manufacturers, but he did refer us to two trade associations he thought might help.

So this analyst at the Census Bureau, who tried to discourage us with warnings that no such figure for the jelly bean market exists, actually gave us quite a lot of concrete information as well as some valuable leads to pursue.

Armed and Dangerous With A Little Information

At this point, we had a market estimate from one government expert based on a figure generated by the U.S. Bureau of the Census. It may have sounded like the answer we were after, but taking that figure to our client at this juncture would have been premature and possibly irresponsible. The main drawback was that the estimate reflected only one person's opinion, and although he was an expert, he was not a true industry observer as one would be if they were actually in the business of selling jelly beans. Our strategy now was to find people in the industry who could give us their interpretation of these figures.

The Census expert referred us to one of the trade associations we had already contacted. However, when we called back saying that Mr. Streeter at the Census Bureau suggested we call them, the association promptly responded with a list of the 25 major jelly bean manufacturers. This is an example of how using the name of a government expert can get you in the door and get you the information you're looking for. When we phoned several manufacturers, they laughed when we told them of our effort to ascertain the market for jelly beans. Jelly beans had never been counted, they told us, and their advice was to give up.

At this point Mr. Kenny, the confectionery expert at the U.S. Department of Commerce called us back and he, too, said that the market had never been measured. However, he did hazard a guess that the jelly bean market could be roughly 50% of the total Census figure for Non-Chocolate Panned Candy.

A separate call to a private research group which does trend analysis by surveying grocery stores shared its estimate that 90% of all jelly beans are sold at Easter.

Easier To Be A Critic Than A Source

Our lack of success in dealing with a few manufacturers caused us to change tactics. Instead of asking them to estimate the size of the jelly bean market, we began asking them what they thought of the figures we received from the industry analysts at the Commerce Department, as well as the Census Bureau. We decided to try to find someone who actually filled out the Census survey and get a reaction to the Census figures. We spoke with the owner of Herbert Candies, a small candy company. He gave us his 1984 jelly bean production and cost statistics, told us he filled out the Census report, and readily explained what he thought the Census statistics meant in terms of jelly bean production and cost. Furthermore, using his calculator, he helped us arrive at national figures for 1984. He also told us which companies manufacture 80% of the jelly beans produced in the country.

Now, armed with actual figures for 1984 jelly bean production, average cost per pound, average number of jelly beans in a pound, and the percentage of jelly beans produced during Easter, we resumed calling manufacturers — this time to get their opinion of our figures. This was the real turning point in dealing with the manufacturers. Because everyone in the industry knew that there were no exact numbers on the size of the jelly bean market, as professionals they were afraid to give a figure because anyone could say it was wrong. However, because they were experts in the business, they were not afraid to criticize someone else's information. Reactions from insiders were just what we needed to help hone a good working number. The manufacturers were able to tell us why our figures were good or not and they gave us sound reasons why the numbers should be adjusted, such as "Based on our sales figures your numbers sound a little low," or "Not all manufacturers report to the Bureau of the Census, so that figure may be low."

To show how this tactic prompted many manufacturers to be candid about both the industry and their sales in particular, here are highlights of our conversations with nine companies. What is presented below may seem to be too detailed, but after reviewing them we hope that it proves our point about how open business executives can be about their company.

- 1) Owner, Herbert Candies (small manufacturer and retailer)
 - * 90% of jelly beans are sold at Easter
 - * 60% of Census seasonal category are jelly beans
 - * average cost of jelly beans is $1 per pound
 - * when President Reagan first got into office the jelly bean market shot up 150% but now it is back to normal
 - * Four companies have 80% of the market, with E.J. Brach the largest at 40%, Brock the second largest, followed by Herman Goelitz and Maillard

- * Herbert Candies sold 30,000 pounds of jelly beans this past year and 90% at Easter; 10,000 were gourmet beans at $3.20 per pound and 20,000 were regular jelly beans at $2.80 per pound
- 2) Marketing Department, Nabisco Confectionery
 - * suggested we call SAMI, a private market research firm
 - * estimated 90% of jelly beans are sold at Easter
 - * confirmed that E.J. Brach has 40% of the market
 - 3) Vice President of Marketing and Sales, Herman Goelitz (producer of "Bellies", Ronald Reagan's favorite)
 - * between 35% and 50% of his jelly beans are sold at Easter
 - * $1.00 per pound could be the average retail price
 - * a retailer can purchase jelly beans at $.60 per pound
 - * the retail price ranges between $1.25 and $5 per pound
 - 4) General Manager, Burnell's Fine Candy (manufacturer of hanging bag jelly beans)
 - * 75% of jelly beans are sold at Easter
 - * $.60 to $.75 per pound is average manufacturer's price
 - * $1.59 is the average retail price
 - * 75% of Census seasonal category is probably jelly beans
 - 5) Senior VP of Marketing and Sales, E.J. Brach (largest manufacturer)
 - * produces 24 million jelly beans annually at an average price of $.86 per pound
 - * there are approximately 100 beans per pound
 - * Brach's selling price is about industry average
 - * they have about 50% of the market
 - * 90% of the jelly beans sold at Easter sounds too high
 - 6) Product Manager of Marketing Department, Brock Candy (second largest manufacturer)
 - * 85% to 95% of all jelly beans are sold at Easter
 - * average price paid by retailers is $.59 to $.99 per pound
 - * there are 130 to 140 jelly beans in a pound
 - * E.J. Brach has 40% to 50% of the jelly bean business — 32 to 45 million jelly beans sold in a year sounds correct given Brock's production figures; but probably it is closer to the high side
 - * Brock Candy is number 2 in the industry
 - * there are not many jelly bean manufacturers and basing total production on E.J. Brach's sales figures is a good way to arrive at an industry estimate
 - 7) Traffic Manager, Powell Confectionery (medium size producer)
 - * 75% of jelly beans are sold at Easter judging from Powell's sales
 - * average retail price $.75 to $.80 per pound and the average manufacturer's price is $.65 to $.70 per pound

- * 35 to 45 million jelly beans per year sounds reasonable
 - * it seems fair to double E.J. Brach production figures to get the total market because it has about 50% share of the market
- 8) President, Ferrara Panned Candy (largest panned candy producer)
- * familiar with Census data and believes that jelly beans represent about 75% to 80% of the seasonal sales; 80% to 90% of all jelly beans are sold at Easter
 - * 32 to 45 million pounds per year seems a bit low
 - * E.J. Brach has 50% of the packaged jelly bean market but has less than half of the bulk jelly bean market
- 9) New Product Development Manager, Farley Candy
- * familiar with Census data and believes that the numbers are understated because not all companies report their figures
 - * an industry estimate of 32 to 50 million pounds per year seems low

So much for all those who discouraged us from even tackling this issue of the market for jelly beans. All the data poured forth during these telephone conversations provided more information than our Fortune 500 client ever expected.

Deciding On An Estimate

As you can see from the interviews outlined above, traffic managers all the way up to company presidents were willing to give us their best estimate of the size of the market and even divulge their own company's sales figures.

After government experts, the figure seemed to cluster around the 45 to 50 million pound range. It may not be that obvious from just reading the highlights of our interviews, but that consensus became apparent after talking with about a dozen people associated with the industry.

Information Exchange Is A People Business

It is just surprising what company executives and government experts are willing to tell you if they are approached in the right way. You can find the answer to any question (or at least a good estimate) as long as you expect to make many phone calls and you treat each person on the other end of the telephone in a friendly, appreciative way.

The biggest difference between those who succeed in their information quest and those who fail boils down to whether or not they believe the information exists. If you persist in thinking the information can be found, nine times out of ten you will get what you need.

Coping With Misinformation

One of the major problems encountered by researchers is determining the accuracy of the information that they have collected. If you are doing traditional market research and using primary sources, accuracy is not that complicated. Traditional market researchers are well aware of survey methods, sampling techniques, and computing errors using statistical standard deviation analysis. However, if you are a desk researcher, like Information USA, Inc. which relies on secondary sources and expert opinion, how do you compute the standard deviation for error? The answer is that you cannot use hard statistical techniques, but you can employ other soft forms of error checking.

Major Causes for Error and Prevention Tactics

Problem #1: Lost In The Jargon

It is not uncommon for researchers to be dealing frequently in areas of expertise where they do not have complete command of the industry jargon. In such situations it is easy to believe that you have found the exact information needed only to find out later that you missed the mark considerably. This is a common trap to fall into when fishing in unfamiliar waters. And if you have to do the job quickly, it is easy to believe that you know more than you really do or to avoid getting the complete explanation of specific jargon because you do not want to waste the time of the expert who is giving you the information. Here is an experience of a U.S. Department of Agriculture expert which illustrates this point.

This government expert received a call one day from an assistant at the White House. This hot shot, who acted pretty impressed with himself, said he was in a meeting with both the President and the head of the Meat Packers Association and needed to know right then the official number of cows in the United States. The livestock expert asked the presidential aide if that was exactly what he meant and then when he impatiently responded "Yes," the bureaucrat told him the figure. Within minutes the White House staffer called back and said the president of the Meat Packers Association laughed at him and claimed that there were twice as many cows. The assistant then realized he needed the number of all cows — including "male cows" — as well as all female ones.

The White House aide had a problem with semantics, probably a city slicker who never knew the difference between cows and cattle. This can happen to anyone, not only a cocky Presidential aide. For example, if you want to know the market for computers, a more specific question to ask is are you talking about free standing units or central processing units?

Solution #1: Act A Little Dumb

In order to prevent this type of embarrassment, you have to find an expert with whom you are comfortable. When I say comfortable, I mean someone you can go to and ask dumb questions. You will get the most help if you act very humble in your approach. If you request information with the arrogance of the White House staffer, you may be given only the facts you ask for and nothing more. However, if you call up an expert and say something like "Oh God, can you please help me? I don't really know much about this, but my boss needs to know how many cows there are in the country." With more than a hint of indecision in your voice and honestly admitting you don't know much about the field, the expert is more likely to ask you some key questions that will ensure that you get the right figures. He may even enjoy giving you the information that you need, and not just resent your phone call.

Problem #2: Believing The Written Word Or A Computer

This is a more serious problem than the difficulties and confusion surrounding industry jargon. Mastering the terminology just requires a little homework. However, overcoming a deep seated belief that information either from a computer, in published sources, or from the government is always accurate can be like changing your religion. It took me years, as well as dozens of professional embarrassments, to overcome this problem.

Just because a figure appears in print does not make it gospel. Remember the saying, "Figures don't lie, but liars can figure." Keep this in mind before betting the farm on anything you read in print, even if it comes out of a computer. A good illustration which follows pertains to Census Bureau information.

A few years ago we were doing a market study on stereo speakers and discovered that the figures the U.S. Bureau of the Census had for this market were off by over 50 percent. No one in the industry complained to the government because the industry was small and couldn't be bothered. But most of the companies involved knew that the figure was misleading and so had no use for the Census report. Another case is a Fortune 500 company which told us that for over five years it filled out the U.S. Census form under the wrong Standard Industrial Code (SIC). An important caveat — this firm ranks as the number two manufacturer in the industry.

You have to remember that number crunchers at the Census Bureau and other such organizations are not always interested in the meaning behind the numbers. Much of their work is simply taking a number from block A, adding it to the number in block B, and placing the result in block C. Verifying where the numbers come from is not their job.

Published sources are an even bigger problem than government data. Many believe that what you read in a magazine or a newspaper or hear on television or radio must be true. Nonsense! Anyone and their brother can be interviewed by a magazine or newspaper, and usually what they say will get printed in a magazine or quoted on the air as long as it is not too outrageous. Sometimes you are more likely to get it into print if what you're saying is outrageous. After all, most news stories are just accounts of what someone said as interpreted by a journalist.

The more general the media, the less accurate its reporting may be about an industry. In other words, an article in the ice cream industry trade magazine is more likely to be accurate than a similar story in the New York Times. The trade journal will have reporters who cover that particular industry and they will more than likely be able to flush out bad data. The newspaper, on the other hand, will do only one ice cream story a year, and will print almost anything it hears. So just because someone is quoted in an article does not mean that the information is correct.

I have seen much of this firsthand when on nationwide book promotion tours. In newspaper interviews or on radio and television talk shows, I can say almost anything and they will print or broadcast it, as is. I will give countless facts and figures based on my own biased research (remember that I am trying to sell books), and hardly ever will I be questioned or seriously challenged about the authenticity of my research. I don't know if it is laziness, apathy, or just plain lack of time that allows so much unchallenged information to be presented in the media. I have even blatantly lied to a reporter who thought of himself as a clone of CBS' Mike Wallace of "60 Minutes." Before I started doing media interviews, I assumed that any good reporter worth his or her salt could find holes in what I presented and would expose me as some kind of fraud. I didn't know how they would do it, but I guess my own insecurity prompted me to prepare for the worst. The reality is that most reporters spend little or no time studying the topic before they interview you, and if you become annoyed or angry, especially with this Mike Wallace type described above, you can blow them away with an exaggerated fact or half-truth that he will never be able to verify.

Solution #2: Find Another Industry Expert

Whether a figure comes from the Census Bureau, a trade magazine or off a television program, your best bet for determining whether the number is accurate is to track down an industry expert and ask him to comment on the figure. What you are seeking is their biased opinion about the accuracy of the stated figure. If the expert believes the figure is correct but doesn't know why, find another expert.

Problem #3: Trusting An Expert

This may seem to contradict what I just said in the solution to problem #2, but stick with me and you'll see the difference.

There are many times when you cannot start with published or printed data and all you can do is pick the brains of experts within the industry. This means that you will be getting facts and figures based on the best available guess from experts. Many times this is the only way to get the information you need.

Getting this type of soft data can be full of danger. After having worked for hours trying to find a friendly soul to share with you his inner-most thoughts about the facts and figures of an industry or company, you do not want to turn him off with an antagonistic remark about the accuracy of his data.

Solution #3: Ask Why?

The best way to judge whether a source is knowledgeable about the fact or figure they have given you is to ask them how they arrived at that number. Such a question will likely initiate one of the following responses:

"I don't know. It's the best I can think of."

- A response like this will be a clue that the expert may not know what he is talking about and you should continue your search for a more knowledgeable and willing expert.

"This is the figure I read from an industry association study."

- This should lead you to verify that such a study was conducted and to attempt to interview people involved with the report and its findings.

"The industry figure is XX because our sales are half that and we are number 2 in the industry."

- This is probably one of the best types of answers you can get. Any time an industry expert gives you a figure based on something he is positive about, you can almost take it to the bank. The best you can do after this is to find other industry analysts and ask them to comment on the figure you were given.

Misinformation can lead to a decision making disaster. Following the simple techniques described above can take you a long way down the road to making good decisions based on near perfect information.

Using Industry Sources And Overcoming The "Negative Researching Syndrome"

When you cannot find company information from traditional sources or government documents, it may be necessary to dig around the industry in order to uncover it. This is likely to be the only place you can turn to when you really want:

- 1) the scoop on a company's pricing policy;
- 2) facts on distribution channels for a given product;
- 3) details about a company's potential future strategy; or
- 4) estimates on the profitability of a privately held company.

The researchers at Information USA, Inc. are seeing many more research projects which fall into this category, and would like to share with you some of our recent experiences in solving this type of problem.

Two Pronged Approach

Unlike traditional research work, hunting for specific information within an industry involves two separate approaches. The first is identifying potential sources. The second and equally difficult job is developing a strategy for interviewing these sources.

Although most researchers probably would think that the biggest problem is figuring out what organizations and companies to contact, we find this not to be the case when dealing with industry sources. We believe that the toughest challenges our researchers face are improving their techniques and attitudes for obtaining information. Other types of research are not as "technique sensitive," because relying on industry sources means getting in close range to the target company. Although technique can be the major trouble spot, let's tackle the problem of sources first.

Identifying Industry Sources

When I refer to industry sources, I am talking about those organizations and individuals whose business it is to know what is going on in the overall industry as well as activities among individual companies. These are the sources which can provide sensitive information that you cannot find elsewhere. Those who know their business and industry have to know about pricing, profitability, and even the strategy of those companies which comprise a particular industry. Most likely these individuals have never seen a given company's in-house strategic plan or a private company's profit and loss statement, but they are usually knowledgeable enough to give you estimates which can be as close as plus or minus 15% of the actual figures. They also will be familiar with an industry's "rule of thumb" in terms of operation, and can offer educated guesses on important figures, like sales based on the number of employees, or production based on the size of equipment, or strategy based on purchasing plans and sales literature. A researcher's job is to find industry people in a position to know and then to get them to share this knowledge.

Starting Points For Sources

Here are six major checkpoints for identifying industry sources:

I. Government Experts:

These sources can be the easiest to talk with and also can usually suggest leads to sources who in turn will identify others within the industry. Normally these are analysts within the Federal government and sometimes within state government. Their job is to monitor a specific industry either for the purpose of formulating government policy or preparing a market analysis which is used by both the public and private sectors. These people are the most plugged into a given industry.

Examples of U.S. government industry experts whose focus is primarily on policy are Energy Department specialists who study potential applications for wind energy, or biotechnology experts at the Department of Agriculture who stay current on this research field as it pertains to the food industry. In contrast, those federal experts whose orientation is geared toward market analysis are found at the Department of Commerce who produce the annual U.S. Industrial Outlook, and the analysts at the U.S. International Trade Commission who investigate the impact of imports on American industry.

Finding policy oriented experts can be difficult because they are scattered throughout the vast federal bureaucracy. Try to determine which agency in the government probably follows a particular industry under which a given company falls. For food products, try the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration; for products involving pesticides, check with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency; for companies in new technologies, contact the Office of Technology Assessment on Capitol Hill. Other resources which will help you identify where these policy experts are hiding include:

- 1) U.S. Government Manual (Government Printing Office);
- 2) Lesko's Info-Power III by Matthew Lesko, (published by Information, USA, Inc.);
- 3) Local Federal Information Center (look in the U.S. government section of your local telephone book under General Services Administration); or
- 4) The Washington or district office of your U.S. Representative or Senator.

Below are the main telephone numbers for finding the two major offices which have 100 or more experts with market analysis orientation who cover most every industry. Simply call and ask to speak to the expert who studies golf balls or music instruments or whatever industry you are investigating:

- International Trade Administration (ITA), U.S. Department of Commerce, Washington, DC 20230, 202-482-1461: over 100 analysts who monitor all the major industries in the U.S. and the companies within these industries ranging from athletic products to truck trailers; and
- U.S. International Trade Commission (ITC), Office of Industries, 500 E St., SW, Room 504, Washington, DC 20436, 202-205-3296: experts who analyze the impact of world trade on U.S. industries ranging from audio components to x-ray apparatus.

There are no concrete rules for locating state industry experts. Every state government works differently, and the level of expertise varies tremendously. However, there is a trend at the state level to accumulate more data especially within those industries, for instance, high-tech companies, which the state sees as having potential for contributing to their economic development. The starting place for finding a specialist is the state's Department of Commerce and Economic Development. These offices are located in the state capital and are easy to track down by telephoning the state government operator.

II. Industry Observers:

Industry observers may be affiliated either with trade magazines or trade associations. They are in a position to oversee what is going on in the industry and they collect details about specific companies within that industry. Associations can identify the magazines and other publications that report on their industry and vice versa. If you have trouble getting started, contact either the federal analysts at the ITA and ITC described above or consult the Encyclopedia of Associations (Gale Research Company) at a local library.

You have to be careful who you talk to when contacting these various organizations. Usually when you call a trade association looking for information about the industry, they will connect you with the library; and when you contact a magazine, you are likely to be switched to the research department. These offices are good to touch base with, but they normally know about only the more obvious published material and are not very helpful in getting answers to more difficult questions.

After you have contacted the libraries or research departments of these organizations, be sure to call back with a different tactic in order to get through to the association executives and editors of trade magazines. These are the people who are immersed in the industry and pick up bits and pieces of information about companies which rarely show up in the published literature.

III. The Distribution Chain:

People within the chain of distribution can be wholesalers, jobbers, distributors or anyone who acts as an intermediary between the manufacturer and the end user. Although not all products are sold through middlemen, many are, and if the company under investigation uses middlemen they can be an information bonanza. Most people in these kinds of businesses are down to earth types who generally like people and are approachable. What is also advantageous about dealing with distributors is that they normally handle the products of the company you are interested in as well as those of its competitors. As a result they can be very helpful in comparing strategies and assessing market share.

Who do you talk to in these organizations? You try to talk to the buyers or sales reps. This normally does not leave many people in between. How do you find these organizations? Usually it is quite easy — most trade associations or magazines can provide you with lists. Or, it is also easy to call up your target company and pretend you want to purchase one of their products, at which point they will be more than happy to inundate you with the names and telephone numbers of suppliers.

IV. Customers:

This may sound foolish to some, but for most industries customers are approachable and often prove to be valuable sources of company information. By talking to the buyers of a half dozen major retail chains, you can determine the market for goods ranging from tablecloths to toys. And the buyers at a dozen or so major food chain stores can give you a clear picture of almost any consumer food product. What is selling like hotcakes and what is gathering dust on the shelves can be invaluable marketing information.

How do you find a company's customers? If they fall into groups like supermarkets or department stores, their industry will be organized enough so you can contact the relevant trade association or trade magazines for a listing of members. Many times the target company's literature will proudly display major clients or customers. Most industries also produce a buyer's guide which will identify these sources. Again, the association or trade magazines should be aware of such publications.

V. Competitors:

Contacting the competitors of a target company may be difficult if they are also your competitor. If the company is not in the same industry as your firm, or someone else is doing the research, competitors can often provide all the information sought. Obviously these are the people who really have to know about the target company. They are in the best position to know how well the company is doing compared to them and what their competitor is likely to do in the future.

VI. Suppliers And Complimentary Product Manufacturers:

Don't overlook suppliers to the target company. These companies can be very helpful because the target company is just a customer to them and what they know about a company they are likely to assume that everyone knows. Many suppliers are directly dependent upon the success of their customer and make it their business to know how well they are doing and can offer predictions about future plans. Their livelihood depends upon knowing this information. Tire manufacturers have to know all about automobile companies and the manufacturers of equipment which make shoes have to know all about shoe companies. The same holds true for complimentary products like BBQ utensils and charcoal briquettes, or electric popcorn poppers and popcorn kernels.

The same technique described earlier for finding customers can also be used for locating suppliers and complimentary product manufacturers.

Preventing Early Pitfalls and Other Techniques

Developing a good technique is crucial when digging for information within an industry. Finding a source is simply a numbers game, and by following the outline presented above anyone doing the research will eventually run into a couple of people who will have most of the answers you need. However, creating the proper atmosphere for that source to want to share information with you is contingent on both attitude and technique. Here are some of the major problems you are likely to encounter.

A bad start leads to depression. I've seen this happen to even the best of researchers. They will start out confident about a project investigating a company's pricing policy or profitability. After spending a half a day on the project and talking to a half dozen industry experts, they are ready to throw in the towel and give up. What normally happens is that the researcher has run into trouble getting through to anyone who knows much about the company or anyone they did talk to has been full of negative comments such as "There's no way to get that kind of information."

After initial feedback like this, it's natural for researchers to begin to believe what they are hearing and to forget about their past research triumphs. This faulty start can be even more devastating to a novice who has yet to complete a number of research projects. This problem intensifies as the researcher continues because all the negative feedback poisons their relaxed, friendly interviewing style and upbeat attitude. This pessimism creeps into their voice when talking to people within the industry. Soon they will start a conversation by saying things like "You don't have any information on company X, do you?"

Once this begins to happen the researcher should stop immediately and get some help. This "Negative Researching Syndrome" will begin to feed on itself and will only get worse and worse unless something drastic happens to change this course.

How do you cure "Negative Researching Syndrome"? Well it isn't easy, and unless the researcher is very experienced, it usually requires the help of a senior researcher. What we usually do when we sense a researcher falling into this trap is to tell him that it is a bad time of day to be making these kinds of calls, or to quit for the day. Another approach is to suggest the researcher pick up the next day but only after we have had a chance to get together to talk about the project. Before our session I try to make sure the researcher is given an easy short term project just to build up their confidence. Then we brainstorm about one or all of the following strategies:

1) Try a different segment of the industry. Instead of talking with distributors, switch to retailers; move from customers to government experts and so on. Try anything to find someone in the industry who may be more willing to talk.

2) Describe past success stories. We will remind the researcher of projects in the past where we started out thinking that we were never going to get anything and how it all eventually came together. I'll even describe some of my own personal experiences doing research where experts said it couldn't be done. And, of course, we'll remind them that this is really the reason we are getting paid. If it was easy, no one would need us.

3) Try a different "story line." This is explained next.

A Bad "Story Line" Can Kill A Project

A bad story line can also be the chief cause of "Negative Researching Syndrome." What do we mean by a story line? It is the explanation or reason the researcher gives for needing the information. If the researcher is uncomfortable with the story, a potential source will sense this unease and be reluctant to talk. In most research this is not a problem. In traditional projects, conventional reference sources are used for gathering information, and all you have to do is identify yourself and ask whether certain information is available. However, in dealing with industry sources the situation changes markedly; they are not comfortable just knowing the researcher's name and affiliation. Industry sources want to know what you are after and why. And this is when the story line can make or break your chances for success.

Being comfortable with a "story line" can be a complicated process. The bottom line is that you are not after information that is proprietary. Consequently, it is essential for you to feel comfortable with what you are saying, because if you don't no one will open up to you and give you the real facts that you need to write a credible research report for your client.

If you are uneasy that your story line is too far fetched or something you don't know enough details about, you will fail to convince yourself or the people that you're speaking to, and as a result your efforts will backfire. Saying that you work for the FBI or write for the Nuts and Bolts Magazine are the kinds of stories that spell trouble. Furthermore, most researchers are basically too honest to stretch the truth that far and it begins to eat into their conscience. As they do get deeper into the research, the guilt that they feel will aggravate the troubling "Negative Researching Syndrome," and the researcher is bound to wind up empty handed, with little or no relevant information.

Here are a few sample explanations that may not be too improbable:

- Your company is doing a market study on all the companies within the industry. [Not just the target company.]

- You are trying to write an article about the industry and plan to submit it to a trade magazine.
- You are a student working on a paper. [Not a highly useful story but usually one that is easy to live with.]
- You have a client or your boss wants you to investigate the possibility of developing a competing brand and you are trying to get industry comments about such an idea. [People will more likely give opinions than information on a company, but their opinions will often include company information.]
- You are working on a speech about the industry and trying to get some background material.

Also, if your story is too negative or "predatory," no one will want to give you the information. This, too, will show up when you are talking with industry experts and cause a researcher to come up empty handed. In other words, don't call up an industry source and say, "I am with company X, which is a major competitor of company Y. Can you tell me about the pricing strategy of company Y so that we can try to put them out of business?" Many researchers worry that this is really what they are doing through their research efforts, and this anxiety and belief will lead to "Negative Researching Syndrome", along with failure to gather any valuable information.

Choosing the right story line can determine the success or failure of your project. Be sure you can live with it and feel comfortable and honest, and that this explanation will make those in the industry comfortable enough to share information with you. If a researcher's story line does not meet these two criteria, be prepared for a long, hard, and more than likely, frustrating and unsuccessful hunting expedition.
