Introduction

Isn't It About Time?

Hate your job? Feel as though your life is at a standstill? Want more time with your family? Need more money? Or simply feel unfulfilled? Don't just complain about your life. Do something about it. You can even get free money to change your life.

Sounds unbelievable, doesn't it? Like those late night infomercials who find some garbage collector in Cincinnati who read some book and became a millionaire overnight.

Don't worry, this isn't television. This is about real life. Because the government is certainly real and that's what I'm talking about. The government is where all this money comes from. And it's not just happening to one person in Cincinnati. It's happening to over 20 million people each and every year. Rich people, poor people, young people, and even old people are all eligible for programs that the government offers to help change your life.

There are over 5,000 government money programs where you can find opportunities like:

- $50,000 to Open Up a Coffee House
- $30,000 to Go to School in Hawaii
- $43,000 to Become a French Chef
- $100,000 to Open a Country Inn
- $30,000 to Become a Grizzly Bear Tagger
- $70,000 to Study Arts Management
- $50,000 to Edit Science Magazines at Home
- $2,000 to Study Storytelling
- $20,000 to Produce a TV Show For Kids
- $12,000 to Attend a Cowboy Festival in Australia
- $5,000 to Start a Street Hockey Equipment Distributorship
- $75,000 to Renovate an Old House
- $100,000 to Start a Day Care Center

These are programs which give out billions in taxpayers money each year but never spend a dime in letting people know that they're available.

Most of us only dream about getting money to make changes in our lives. We dream of winning the lottery or inheriting a bundle from some long lost relative. Or we may be wishing for a giant raise that will somehow solve all our problems. But none of these dreams seem to come true and we continue to languish through life in varying states of unhappiness. To change takes effort, and for some of us, it seems easier to complain about our lot in life than to stir things up by taking a new direction.

What most of us are totally unaware of, is that on the other side of a telephone line is over $350 billion worth of taxpayers funds that you can use to help make your dreams come true.

Next year you could be one of the:

- 1,000,000 entrepreneurs who will get money from the government to start or grow a business, or
- 4,000,000 people who will get money to invest in real estate, or
- 6,000,000 people who will get money to go to college, or

Isn't It About Time?

- 10,000,000 people who will get free help and training for a better job, or
- the tens of thousands of people who will get free money to help them travel around the world, work on their invention, change their neighborhood, or start their own nonprofit, or
- one of the many who have gotten money to become an artist, a writer, a talk show host, or cowboy.

Is there a catch? Yes, there is. The catch is that getting the money is going to take effort on your part. You won't have to invest thousands of dollars in high priced seminars, consultants, or experts, but you will have to invest some of your time. In our information driven society, it's information that is the tool for success. This book gives you all the tools you need to change your life because it's loaded with all kinds of valuable information. But it has to be you that puts it all to use. Changing your life isn't like adding a room to your house, where you can hire a contractor to do all the work. You have to take an active role in order to change your life, and here are the tools to help you do it.

Being Prepared For Change

We are living in a society with a very high misery index. I don't mean the official misery index that the economists refer to as a combination of current inflation and unemployment statistics. The misery I'm talking about is the fact that very few people seem to be happy. There are very few people who truly enjoy their jobs, or even their lives in general. Most people would rather be somewhere else, or seem to live in constant fear that the job they really don't enjoy anyway will be taken away from them.

The only way to deal with this anxiety is to learn how to deal with the changes that are happening in our society. But to do this people have to change themselves. We all know that the only people who really like change are busy cashiers and babies with wet diapers!.

Change is moving like a freight train through our society, and successful people are the ones who will learn how to deal with it and change their lives to accommodate it. Those who are anxious about our changing society as well as those who are already victims of it both fall into the trap of feeling that they can still wait until they have to do anything serious with their own lives in order to deal with our changing society.

If you are one of those who is not quite sure about the impact change is having on our society, these facts should make it all a little clearer for you.

- From about 1979 to 1994, Fortune 500 companies eliminated over 47 million jobs. That's about 25% of the entire U.S. workforce. Recent layoffs include 85,000 at IBM, 83,500 at AT&T, and 74,000 at General Motors.
- From 1979 to 1993, all age groups of men saw their wages go down or stay the same, except men over 65.
- A 30-year old man today makes 20% less than a 30-year old made 25 years ago. For the first time since WWII a generation of men in their late forties and early 50's have suffered a decline in wages.
- Wages declined at the same time when corporations experienced record breaking profits, executives' salaries have gone through the roof, and the Dow Jones

Introduction

Industrial index has gotten so high that it gave investors' nose bleeds!

- The number of people who consider themselves self-employed has almost doubled since 1977.
- In 1992, temporary jobs accounted for two out of every three new private sector jobs. Temporary, contract, and part time workers now make up more than 25 percent of the U.S. workforce.
- More people now work for Manpower Inc., a temporary worker firm than, for IBM or General Motors.
- The average person now works 180 more hours per year than they did a generation ago.
- In 1978, the average person with a college degree earned 38% more than a person with only a high school diploma. By 1990, college grads earned 80% more than high school grads.
- 70% of all the new jobs created in our country have been managerial, professional, and other positions that require higher education, but only about 25% of the workforce has a college degree.
- In 1980, United States Steel, America's largest integrated steel company, employed 120,000 people in steel production. Ten years later, it employed only 20,000 people in steel production, and yet produced almost the same steel tonnage.
- There are more people on campuses today who are over 35 than there are 18 and 19 year olds.
- In the 1980's, 45% of those laid off got their jobs back, but in the 1990's, only 15 to 20% of those laid off get their same jobs back.
- Almost 70% of those laid off workers will earn less than they did before being laid off.
- You have a 50% greater chance of being laid off than you have of being a victim of crime.
- Even the newspaper comic strip character Spider Man announced that he couldn't make enough money with his spider powers so he was changing careers and joining a circus.

Have you had enough?

How To Change In A Changing Society

Nothing that worked for you yesterday is likely to work for you tomorrow. The only thing that will remain constant is change. If you don't change yourself, someone else is going to do it for you and you may be less than ready for it. Change is the code word for survival in the new economy. Both organizations and individuals who want to thrive or hope to survive are those that learn how to continually reinvent themselves.

You can no longer get a job with a big company and look forward to 30 years of work with full health insurance and a retirement plan. Those kinds of jobs that used to be available in our transportation and manufacturing industries and paid $50,000 a year with only a high school diploma are quickly disappearing with each merger or downsizing.

Workers have become disposable, and the only workers that become valuable are those that have skills for the new jobs that are being created and skills for the old ones that are disappearing. We're leaving the industrial age and entering the age of information and services. We're now living at a time where muscles are no longer needed but where brain power is all important. Over 70% of all the new jobs are knowledge based. Almost all new high paying jobs require analytical and information oriented training.

Getting Trained and Retrained

Both the doctor who is trying to keep up on the latest cures to cancer and the typist who is trying to keep up on the latest in word processing programs know that they have to keep learning in order to service their clients to the best of their abilities. Those who don't learn something new will be destined to watch the world pass them by. And those who don't enter the workforce with the latest skills will likely find themselves on the bottom rungs of the ladder for a long, long time.

In our society there is no reason not to get the education and training you need to get ahead in our highly specialized economy. There are hundreds of programs worth tens of billions of dollars for people of all ages and all economic backgrounds just waiting to be used. And these programs are not going to go away due to budget cuts because voters want to keep them. Right before the 96 elections, 67% of the electorate said that education and training is the most effective way to improve things economically, and only 36% said the same thing about tax cuts.

Here are the kinds of programs you can take advantage of in order to get trained or retrained in our fast changing society:

- Free College Tuition If You're Over 55
- Free Tutoring If You're a Woman Having Trouble in Math and Science
- Free Training and Expense Money If You're a High School Dropout
- Grants To Go To College If You Make Over $100,000 Per Year
- Free Training If You're a Woman Who Wants a Job in the Construction Industry
- $6,500 for College If You Lost Your Job Because of Imports
- $10/hour for a Part Time Job To Help Pay For Your College Tuition
- $3,000 for a New Employer To Hire and Train You
- $63,000 To Cover All Your College Expenses

Change For A Wealthier, Healthier, and Fun Life

Getting a job you really like or simply getting out of one you dislike is not only a faster way to a wealthier life, it's also a faster way to a healthier life and one that holds a lot more fun for the individual. It will not only be healthier and more fun for you, it will also be healthier and more fun for your loved ones and those around you who will obviously benefit from your increased optimism and sense of fulfillment.

Researchers at the University of Pennsylvania found that parents who have control over how, when, and where their work gets done have fewer behavior problems with children than those parents who have less control over their lives. They also found that the amount of time parents spend working isn't linked to their children's behavior. But what does seem to have an impact on children is how much parents' work tensions affect home life.

Another group of researchers at the University of California, Irvine, has found that parents with more stimulating, challenging jobs are warmer, less harsh, and more responsive in their parenting.

Accomplishing career goals is also a major factor in our mental health and well-being. A sociologist at the University of Wisconsin at Madison interviewed 3,052 women at age 35 to see what kind of career goals they set for themselves. The researcher then interviewed them again at age 53 to see how well they were doing. She found that those who fell short of their career goals had lower levels of psychological well being and higher levels of depression compared with women who had attained their career goals.

I recently interviewed a group of gerontologists and leaders of organizations who work with the elderly, and to a person, they each preach that the key to a long and healthy life is staying engaged in meaningful activity. Searching for that career that you enjoy most is the best way to stay involved in stimulating activity for the longest possible time.

And if you are looking for real fun in life, you might find it in the struggle to find out what you really want to do in life. So many people believe that fun is sitting around doing nothing or doing something that requires no effort. It's no fun to play someone in a game that is at a level that is way beneath your ability. Beating them by an overwhelming score quickly loses its sense of fun. We have the most fun when we play someone who is a little bit better than we are and are successful in figuring out a way to beat them. Fun is derived when we achieve something that is unexpected because that is when we experience true growth.

Fun is doing something whether we get paid for it or not. And when we are engaged in that kind of fun, time becomes unimportant, our worries seem to disappear, and we are able to share the joy and happiness of life with others.

So why be stuck doing something when you would rather be doing something else? Here are 10,000 programs worth over $350 billion dollars to help you do the things you always wanted to do with your life.

This Book Takes Work

You can't expect to pay for the book, place it on your shelf, and have your life magically changed. You also can't expect your life to change even after you buy the book and sit down and read it. In order for the book to be valuable to you, it is going to require a lot of hard work on your part.

You are the one who is going to have to make the telephone call in order to get the book to work for you. You are the one who is going to have to read the application forms, fill out these forms, and maybe even fill them out again.

It's going to take a lot of effort. It's even going to take a lot of time. It could take six weeks, or even six months, or longer. That's simply the way the world works. Even if it takes you 16 months, if it means a lifetime of satisfaction, then it's well worth your efforts.

It's also important to know that you just can't apply to one program, or just one office. That would be like looking for a job and asking only one employer if they will hire you today. If that employer says no to you, it certainly doesn't mean that there aren't any jobs in the world. So if one office says that there is no money for your idea, that doesn't mean that it's true everywhere. There are thousands of offices and each year millions of people will be getting money through hundreds of programs.

It's All Not In The Book

It's impossible for this book to have every imaginable program there is in the universe. Organizations are adding programs every day, and no matter how good our research staff is, it is still possible that we missed some programs when we were compiling this book. So with this in mind, as you are contacting offices in this book for information about their programs, be sure to inquire if they know of any other programs that may be relevant to your search. It is very likely that people working in a given field may know what other programs are available in their field. It never hurts to ask, and that holds true for the sources listed in this book.

How To Treat The People Who Are Going To Give You Money

The key to getting what you need from the sources in this book is how you treat these people when you first call them. Remember, most of these people will get paid the same salary if they hang up on you right after you say hello, or if they work for you for free for two weeks. We have no control over their salary. Even though your tax dollars go toward paying their salary, you have no control over how much they get or even if they get it all. But how much help they give you about the inside information on getting the money in their program or help in filling out their forms or directing you to other programs depends a great deal on how well you treat them. This also goes for everyone else in our society: the teller at your bank or the customer representative at your insurance company. Sure, they all want to help you, because it's their job. But you have to help create an environment in which they want to help you as much as they possibly can. And the only way you can accomplish this is by using your personality.

Another problem is that many people believe that government employees are all lazy and shiftless people, so they don't deserve our best and most courteous behavior. It does you no good at all to believe this. Because if you do, they will feel this from you and will be less inclined to help you. These people have the money and help you need to change your life, so you should be doing all you can to make it easy for them to help you.

Here are some simple things to keep in mind when dealing with the people in this book. Remember, getting help and information is a people business, and how much help and information you get depends on how well you treat the people who have the information that you want.

Ten Basic Telephone Tips

1) Introduce Yourself Cheerfully

The way you open the conversation will set the tone for the entire interview. Your greeting and initial comment should be cordial and cheerful. Your telephone attitude should give the feeling that this is not going to be just another telephone call, but a pleasant interlude in someone's day.

2) Be Open and Candid

You should be as candid as possible with your source since you are asking the same of him. If you are evasive or deceitful in explaining your needs or motives, your source will be reluctant to provide you with information.

3) Be Optimistic

Throughout the entire conversation you should exude a sense of confidence. If you call and say "You probably aren't the right person" or "You don't have any information, do you?" it makes it easy for the person to say "You're right, I can't help you." A positive attitude will encourage your source to stretch his mind to see what information he might have that could possibly help you and maybe even save you some money.

4) Be Humble and Courteous

You can be optimistic and still be humble. Remember the old adage that you can catch more flies with honey than you can with vinegar. People in general, and experts in particular, love to tell others what they know, as long as their position of authority is not questioned or threatened. In fact, if they are made to feel like an expert by the way you treat them, chances are that they will give you more information than they originally intended to give.

5) Be Concise

State your problem simply. A long-winded explanation may bore your contact and reduce your chances for getting a thorough response.

6) Don't Be a "Gimme"

A "gimme" is someone who says "give me this" or "give me that," and has little consideration for the other person's time or feelings. Remember to "ask" for information or a particular document that you're interested in.

7) Be Complimentary

This goes hand in hand with being humble. A well placed compliment about your source's expertise or insight about a particular topic will serve you well. In searching for information in large organizations, you are apt to talk to many colleagues of your source, so it wouldn't hurt to convey some respect for your source's abilities. A good example of a favorable comment might be, "Everyone I spoke to said you are the person I must talk with." It is reassuring for anyone to know that they have the respect of their peers.

8) Be Conversational

Avoid spending the entire time talking about the information you need. Briefly mention a few irrelevant topics such as the weather, the Washington Redskins, or the latest political campaign. The more social you are without being too chatty, the more likely that your source will open up to you.

9) Return the Favor

You might share with your source information or even gossip you have picked up elsewhere. However, be certain not to betray the trust of another source. If you do not have any relevant information to share at the moment, it would still be a good idea to call back when you are further along in your research when you might have information of value to offer to an especially helpful source.

10) Send Thank You Notes

A short note, typed or handwritten, will help ensure that your source will be just as cooperative in the future, should you need their help.

Lesko's Lessons On Life

Many of us still believe that money will solve all of our problems. We say to ourselves: 'If I only had the money, I'd start my own business; I'd go back to school and become an art teacher; or be like Mother Teresa, and spend the rest of my life doing something meaningful.'

Money was probably your motive for buying this book.

I'm promising you free money to change your life — and I can deliver — but stop for a minute and think about it. Isn't this the same finger we point at our elected representatives in Washington? Congress tries to solve the country's problems by throwing more and more money at them, we say. In our hearts, we know money won't cure the nation, yet in our own lives, we think it will.

But that doesn't makes us hypocrites. We have been raised to strive toward success, and to equate success with a fat bank account. Not so. Money isn't going to solve our problems. In fact, it often creates more problems than it solves. Ask any big lottery winner. We all think about ways to make money doing the kind of work that we want to do — something fun and exciting, and certainly not what we're doing now. We yearn to escape the humdrum everyday kind of life and instead, do something that makes us really want to get out of bed every morning.

While many of us use money as an excuse for not chasing our dream, success takes a lot more than ready cash. It takes a strong will, perseverance, and, above all, a commitment to the chase. These are the important ingredients, and none of them requires a nickel. -ML

YOU CAN'T BUY SOMEONE ELSE'S MAGIC

Money will not solve your problems. It seems that it will, but ask anyone who has made a lot of cash, quick. There's always some motivational talk show person with a monetary cyclone to offer that promises to make millionaires of us all. They dangle dollars as bait. An inspiring author, a stimulating seminar, or a self help guru to guide you along is usually part of the deal, too. We tell ourselves this person has figured out the mysteries of success, and if we read a book or attend a seminar, some of it will rub off, and all of our problems will suddenly disappear. That's precisely what all of these fast talkers hope for.

The more people who fall for their line, the more money they pull in. All the while, they're busy developing their next "get rich" scheme to hype to anyone willing to listen. Their ideas for success are like puffy clouds that suddenly materialize, quickly change form, and just as suddenly disappear.

Things don't work that way. You can't buy someone else's magic, you have to find your own — then nourish it with your actions. We all have our own unique magic, we just have to tap into it so that we can share it with the world in our own special way.

Many of these self help gurus are magicians all right, because they have a magical way of getting people to part with their money. Even the good ones, those who really do have something to offer, can only give you a few tools that you might be able to use to build your own success in life.

Changing your life is not like putting in a new bathroom — it's not redecorating. You can't hire a contractor to build a new life, it's got to be a do-it-yourself project. And it usually takes some time, a lot of hard work, and maybe even a little luck.

STRIVE FOR FAILURE

My fear of failure was one of the biggest obstacles I had to overcome to achieve something worthwhile with my life. By being so afraid of failing, I did everything on the safe side. I followed the rules I'd learned in school, or the advice of one expert after another. But none of it worked, and as a consequence, my first two businesses were crashing failures. I'm probably the only person who had a computer software business back in the mid 1970s that failed, and I honestly believe one of the reasons was because I had an MBA in Computer Science. I ran my businesses like I had been taught to back in school, thinking that it would guarantee my success. Boy was I wrong! I followed the book instead of following my instincts, and it took two failed businesses to unlearn everything I'd been taught.

But now I can say that these failures were the best thing that ever happened to me. They taught me that the world did not end when my efforts failed, and the experience forced me to think harder about how to launch my next business. I concluded that my first two businesses went bust because I'd followed the advice of too many other people. I listened to their recommendations for success instead of following my own heart and, as a result, I didn't have any fun running the show. And certainly one of the biggest reasons that we all dream of having our own business is to have a little fun.

The third time, I said to myself, "I'm going to do this the way I think it should be done, not how everyone else says it should".

I figured that the worst thing that could happen was another failure, and having already experienced two, I knew it wasn't all that painful and that I would survive. This time, I told myself, at least I'll have some fun failing. Sure enough, that's when I had my first success, and success is a whole lot more fun than failure, take it from someone who has had both experiences.

I believe that you have to fail to succeed at anything — it's the only way most of us learn the important lessons in life. Without risking failure, you can't get anywhere in life. So it's important to prepare yourself to handle failure, because it's probably going to happen more than once before you succeed at something. Look at children learning to walk, or a kid on his or her first bike. It's the same process when we begin any new adventure on the road to success. Falling down, brushing ourselves off, and getting up to try again is all part of the learning process — whether you're two years old or 62!

When my kids first started to walk they would hold on to the edge of the coffee table for security. Then they would take one step by themselves and then fall on their butts. Then they would crawl back to the coffee table, grab the edge, pull themselves up, and try it again. But sure enough they would fall again. And this would go on for days, until they finally made it all the way to the kitchen without falling. They learned perseverance through this process, and gained confidence in themselves when they finally succeeded.

This is also true of anything new that you're going to do in life. You try. Then you fail. You try again. And then you fail again. You keep doing it until you get it right.

YOUR FEARS ARE WRONG

We all have fears. Some of these fears are real, but often, they are simply imagined fears that have no real basis. The problem is that often unreal fears stop us from doing the things we really want to do.

Here's an example. The average taxpayer is consumed with the fear of an IRS audit. It's a fear that rules much of our lives, especially around tax time. But do you know your real chances of being audited are only about 9 out of 1,000. So why do we worry so about being audited? Probably because of an even bigger fear — the fear of being audited and the government finding out that we have somehow cheated and we'll end up in jail. Well, the chances of that happening to you is about 1.6 out of 100,000.

Your chances of being injured in a car accident are far greater than your chances of going to jail for cheating on your taxes. Yet, we all seem to fear the tax man much more than the driver next to us on the highway. It's a fear with no basis in fact, but a true fear, nonetheless.

Every day when we want to go somewhere, we get into our cars and never worry about the dangers involved. We just get into the car and go. But when we want to go somewhere new with our life, we sit down and think about the fears of going down this new path, for example:

- we may lose our home
- we may wind up on welfare
- we may become a bag lady, homeless, or
- we may even starve to death

We're intelligent and we don't want these bad things to happen. So we stop, and we don't take the chance of going in a new direction. We limit ourselves to the safe path — the 9 to 5 job, the minuscule raise each year — instead of venturing out and testing the unknown path.

Don't let unrealistic fears stop you from doing what you really want to do in life. Listed below are a number of fears along with an estimate of your chances of these predicaments happening to you.

- Your chances of dying in a plane are 1 in 300,256
- Your chances of starving are 1 in 1,061,399
- Your chances of getting hit by a car are 1 in 40,471
- Your chances of dying in an auto accident are 1 in 6,157
- Your chances of dying from a snake bite are 1 in 28,657,778
- Your chances of dying from excessive cold are 1 in 402,371
- Your chances of dying due to a volcano or earthquake are 1 in 15,171,765
- Your chances of dying from being struck by lightning are 1 in 4,524,912
- Your chances of dying from a falling object are 1 in 361,232

GOALS ARE A TRAP

Maybe it was having parents who lived through the Depression or seven years of business school that made me believe that I always had to have quantitative goals or a plan of where I wanted to be in five years. When I got out of the Navy, my goal was to have a million dollar business. But after having two businesses that failed, this goal was beginning to look about as likely as me playing tennis at Wimbledon. But lo and behold, my third business made it. We were doing over a million and a half dollars of business within about three years. When I reached the million dollar mark, I got on the phone and called everyone I could think of to tell them the news. And when that was over, big deal. I had to go to work the next day and think of another goal to strive for.

I remember another big goal of mine that was even more disappointing. I always wanted to be a guest on one of the big morning TV talk shows, like The Today Show or Good Morning America. It was back in 1981 when I finally got my big break and was invited to be on Good Morning America. I was so excited, thinking that this was my big break. I had this fantasy of being on the show, being terrific, and then getting a call from some fat cat smoking a cigar in Hollywood who was going to make me some kind of big star. I saw lots of movies like that, so naturally I thought it should also happen to me. Well, of course it didn't happen that way. I was great on the show, or at least that's what the producers told me. The telephone did ring off the hook at ABC with people wanting more information about the book, and that was good. But no one called to make me a star, and I had to go to work the next day. Just like every other day.

Now I think that quantifiable goals are a big trap. You reach them and then what do you do? The real goal is to be doing what you want to be doing every single day of your life. Because that's what life really is, living every day. And if you are doing what you want, then every day is a pleasure, not just a day closer to reaching some goal. The process of what you are doing becomes the goal, not some artificial yardstick that you are forever trying to grasp.

I also found that goals made me do things that I was sometimes not very proud of. Being bright, I found myself looking for short cuts that would get me to my goal faster — like not being completely truthful, or withholding selective information to make myself look better, or working with people I disliked just for the money. It didn't make me feel the best, but I thought I had to do things like that to reach my goals.

Now life is different, I try to enjoy my work every day of my life, and not just on the days when I achieve some artificial goal. That's why I believe that goals can trap you into doing things you don't enjoy doing every day. And that can be a wasted life.

CREDENTIALS DON'T COUNT

Growing up in the 50s, I believed like most people that you had to go to Harvard or some other top notch school in order to write a book in this country. I also believed that you had to be an A student and have at least an MBA to be a success in business. Well, I certainly don't believe that anymore. I got a D in English at Marquette University and I've written over 50 books, and two of them have been New York Times Best Sellers. I finally got my MBA, and my first two businesses still failed. Now no one ever asks if I have an MBA or not.

Life is full of examples of people who accomplish so much in a given field without having the proper credentials. Look at the two people who started Apple Computer, Steve Jobs and Steve Wozniak. When they started their business they did not even have the credentials to get a job at IBM. They never even finished college, but they went into their garage and started an entire new computer industry. The same with the people who started Ben and Jerry's. One never finished college and the other was trying to get into medical school but couldn't. When they started the business, they didn't even know how to make ice cream! My understanding is that they took a $5 government correspondence course from the Cooperative Extension Service to show them how to do it. And the rest is history.

And if you think that grades are so important, do you realize that:

- Over 50% of all the CEOs for Fortune 500 companies had C or C- averages in college
- 65% of all U.S. senators come from the bottom half of their school classes
- 75% of U.S. presidents were in the Lower-Half Club in school
- Over 50% of millionaire entrepreneurs never finished college.

It is pure and simple desire that overcomes credentials and even the lack of talent. In my own case, my first successful business was doing term papers for Fortune 500 clients. I did market studies for merger and acquisition clients. When you look at my background I should have never been doing it, let alone be successful at that kind of work. Besides not passing English in college, I also never even did a term paper in college. Every time one was due, I would look for someone to do it for me or I'd buy one. So why was I successful at something I had no previous aptitude or training for? It's just one word...desire.

It's well known to sports fans that Joe Montana was the best quarterback of his time, even though he couldn't throw as hard or as fast as most of the other NFL quarterbacks he played against. Or that basketball's Larry Bird was considered one of the best, even though he couldn't run as fast or jump as high as most NBA players.

It's not having perfect abilities, it's having enough drive and determination. We have become such a credential oriented society when, in fact, credentials really don't mean that much. What has happened is that the lack of credentials has become a handicap or roadblock for us in doing the things that we really want to do. I used to say, "I can't start my own business because I don't have an MBA". Well, I finally got the MBA, and my first two businesses failed. I now feel that I would have been a lot more successful, a lot sooner, without that MBA.

IT'S NEVER TOO LATE

In 1996, the first of the baby boomers will be turning 50 years old. This means that there will be tens of thousands of people going to work realizing that they have spent the last 20 years of their lives in a profession or job that they never really liked. They wound up there because of money, family, greed, insecurity, or just plain ignorance. I will bet that 20 or 30 years ago, all they were thinking about was 1) how to get a job that would feed them and, 2) sex. By 50, most of these boomers have seen some of the world, their interests are more varied, and they've figured out, at least MOST, of the two major problems they were thinking about in their twenties. Knowing what they know now, they probably would have chosen a different career path, but they figure it's too late now...or is it?

It's never too late to change. It's never too late to make your life even more worthwhile. By the time you reach 50 or 60, you have a good chance of making it to 80 and even 90 years of age. For a 50 year old, that can mean 40 more years of life. And you might as well be doing what you really want to be doing in the last 40 years of your life if you didn't have the chance to do it in the first part of your life.

Boomers also grew up with the mind set that people in their 50's and 60's were old, over the hill, like their grandmothers or grandfathers. When the boomers were kids, their grandparents looked old at 50 or 60 and didn't live very long after that. And they were told that life was for the young people, the Pepsi Generation. Advertisers, anxious to tap into the bulk of the U.S. market made up of all those boomers, told us that 50 was ancient. Now that all those young baby boomers are reaching 50, the advertisers are starting to tell us that life is for seniors, the Depends Generation.

Thoughts of being too old are just old tapes rewinding and replaying in our head. They're not based on fact, but rather on perception and pop culture. So, you have to change those tapes. And it's not just 50 year olds who believe it's too late to change — 30 year olds believe it, 40 year olds believe it, and even 70 year olds believe it. Consider this:

There are more people on college campuses today over 35 than there are 18 and 19 year olds. There are more than 1200 women, aged 50 to 64, that are in school today getting their first professional degree in law, dentistry, pharmacy, and even divinity.

"Most people in the Age of Integrity (over 65) will continue to work in one way or another part time, or as consultants, contract teachers, community volunteers, or self-employed entrepreneurs — not only because they want to feel a sense of purpose or self-worth but because they will have to be prepared to support themselves for greatly elongated later lives."

In a capitalist society this really sounds dumb. But I truly believe it. Remember one thing: anybody can do anything if they have a lot of money. The trick is to do what you want with as little money as possible. The people who need a lot of money to do things are the weak people, not the strong people. The strong ones are those who do what they want on a little bit of money. And in a weak economy, it's always the strong that survive.

If you had a million dollars to start your own business it would be a snap, and it would also be bad. Why? Because you would teach yourself how to do business when times are good but not when times are bad. And sooner or later, times will always turn bad. If you don't know how to handle bad times, you'll go out of business. That's why during downturns in the economy, it's the weak businesses, the ones who don't know how to operate lean and mean, that quickly close up shop. They only know how to operate with a lot of money. If you start your business with as little money as possible, you'll learn, right from the beginning, how to operate in a lean and mean fashion. So, when the good times come you'll make a whole lot of money, and when the bad times inevitably occur, you'll be ready for them.

Not having a lot of money is also an excuse for not doing the things that we want to do. I hear it all the time. People saying, "I can't go back to school because I don't have enough money. Or I can't change careers because I don't have a lot of money." What we're doing in times like this is trying to solve all of our problems with money. But in our hearts, we know that it's nonsense. We keep yelling at our elected officials about this same issue. We complain that they are always trying to solve the country's problems by throwing money at those problems. We know you can't solve a problem by throwing money at it, but it becomes a comfortable excuse for not changing our own lives.

TOO MUCH EDUCATION

I always believed that unless I had an MBA (Master in Business Administration), I wouldn't be able to get anywhere in life. I finally earned one at age 27, and after that, it took me two failed businesses to unlearn everything they had taught me in business school. Most of the courses for this graduate degree involved training students to run huge companies like General Motors. If You Need Money, Go To The Bank, we were taught. Also, Conduct A Cost Benefit Analysis Before Making Any Major Decision. As a young entrepreneur trying to get a business going, I quickly learned that banks were not interested in people like me, long on solid money-making ideas, but short on cash. In school they also taught us that if we wanted to succeed, we needed to hire lawyers and accountants to help us build the right financial and legal structure for our companies. Because that image was supposed to be an important ingredient to success, we would need the power desk, the power business cards, even power drapes for our offices.

When my first two businesses failed, I looked around and couldn't help but notice that my accountants, lawyers, even the people I'd bought my power drapes and furniture from were all making money hand over fist. They all got paid before I went out of business, but I felt like the biggest loser on the block. So when I started my next business, I threw away that line of thinking, along with almost everything else that I'd learned in business school.

I figured out that as an entrepreneur, I had to concentrate on what I considered the critical success factors of my new business, the most essential of which was attracting customers. Potential clients weren't concerned about my legal or financial structure, and even less worried about the color of my drapes. It seemed to me that the more time I spent meeting with accountants, lawyers, or picking out office furniture, the less time I would have for what was most critical for my success — finding new customers. I even decided not to bother with government forms, except for taxes. Government forms were just another waste of my time, and my time was too important. I was starting a business! Creating new jobs! I also figured it would take the government at least three years to discover my oversight, and by then I'd either be out of business again or making enough money to painlessly pay an extra $50 to $100 in late filing fees. What I needed to get started was the time to find clients, not recordkeeping chores.

Higher education can knock the creativity out of you. It's true. The more you jump through the bureaucratic hoops of higher learning, the more you get programmed into being just like everyone else. It's what the system's looking for, and what it needs least. Solving today's real problems means coming up with unique ideas, because the old ones just don't work anymore.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not totally against school. We are entering an age where the average job is going to require more and more brain power and training. A college degree is now worth up to a million dollars more in lifetime earning power. So it's not all bad. But I know the more you learn in the structured bureaucracy of a college classroom, the more you will have to fight to regain your creative problem solving power later, as you attempt to start a business.

I also believe that the more formal education you have, the easier it is to talk yourself out of taking risks and doing what really interests you in life. Many of the fun things in life are not intellectual decisions, but rather emotional choices. Take having children, for instance. I was close to 40 years old before I had my first child, because when I first considered starting a family, I approached the issue analytically. Just as I had been taught in school, I made lists about the pros and cons. When I realized all the problems that having kids might bring into my life, I'd ask myself, "Why would I do something to myself that had so many possible bad consequences?" So I put it off. Then, when I had a child that wasn't planned — that wasn't the result of a cost-benefit analysis — I discovered it was the greatest thing that ever happened to me.

Having a book on the New York Times Best Seller List: I found that by the time you get there, it's no big deal. Another example is creating a million dollar business. By the time you do that, there's no real payoff. But having your first child. Wow, that's success.

The good decisions in life are made from the gut, not the brain. It's far too easy to talk yourself out of doing anything worthwhile if you think it over for too long. Learn to follow your gut and go with your feelings. You'll rarely be disappointed.

THE BEST INFORMATION IS FREE

Most of us grew up hearing that the best things in life are free, and we were skeptical until we fell in love or helped another person solve a problem and realized it felt pretty good. Still, our society bombards us with the message that money equals happiness, and all too often we believe it.

But where do these images are coming from? That's simple: from people who want to sell you something. No wonder people believe they need a lot of money to have the good things in life. You're never going to see an advertisement showing people having fun at a party, and the ad is sponsored by say, the Bosnian Peace Cooperative.

Our information society bolsters the money myth. The best lawyers cost millions, as we've seen at the OJ trial. The top investment advisors are the most expensive. We've seen them on the money shows. The best medical care comes from the most expensive doctors, otherwise they couldn't drive fancy cars and belong to exclusive clubs.

Again, it isn't true. This is the Information Age, and believe it or not, the most comprehensive information on almost any subject is available free from the government.

Whether it's law, medicine, or money, the best advice comes from the most knowledgeable experts, those who are ahead of the information curve. And many of those people work for the government as strategists and scientists, economists and tax experts, and in hundreds of other positions where they are privy to the latest information. These experts are at the forefront of breaking developments in their respective fields, months and even years before the general public is made aware.

If you learn how to use the system — and it isn't difficult — their expertise is yours. Remember, they already work for you.

Sure you can hire expensive experts to solve your problems, and many of these specialists are probably good. That's fine if you have money to burn. But thinking that you have to have money to get the information you need to get ahead is roadblock thinking. It's another barrier that keeps you from doing whatever it is you want to do with your life, from not solving problems when the answers are right at your fingertips.

Even if you have the money to hire an expensive specialist, you still have to do your homework to make sure you're getting your money's worth from that person. Why not skip a step and do it yourself? It's just sound business sense.

If you learn how to use the government, you can get better, more timely, information than anyone else. The government is the largest source of information and expertise in the world, and it's all available for free or next to nothing. The government represents approximately 37 percent of the entire U.S. economy, and that's a powerful demographic. Ask anyone in business.

In the 1990 census, the government spent over $3 billion to count all the noses and toilets in the country. Even General Motors can't afford what amounts to a $3 billion dollar market study! But you can get all of the information that you need with one phone call.

The government spends over $10 billion each year generating free medical information. Why ask a doctor about the latest remedies for back pain when you can call the National Institutes of Health and talk to a back pain expert, someone who is part of a multimillion dollar research effort.

Unlike most doctors who have barely enough time to scan The New England Journal of Medicine each week, NH experts can often tell you what will be in The New England Journal next week or even next year. They're doing the research today, and they're way ahead of the cure curve.

What about free legal help? Most laws are written and enforced by the government, and they constantly change from day to day. Courts around the country constantly interpret and reinterpret them. Keeping up with these changes is, to a large degree, what attorneys get paid for, usually by the hour.

But, again, you can do it yourself by calling the government.

For example, if you're interested in buying a franchise, you can go out and hire a franchise attorney and pay $200 an hour for them to research current franchise laws. Or you can call the Federal Trade Commission and talk to someone who actually helped write the law — and they won't charge you a dime. It's their job to give you the information that you're looking for, and most government experts are eager to talk to anyone about their area of expertise.

The same is true if you need investment information. Investment advisors are sales reps, nothing more. Their goal is to get you to spend money so they can take their commission. So instead of listening to a biased broker pitch biotechnology futures, you can call one of dozens of government biotechnology experts and ask their opinion. They know which companies are making the most progress, and where the next medical breakthrough is likely to be made. They know who is researching what, and how far along the studies are.

But perhaps best of all, from an investment standpoint, they know the early research findings long before they appear in professional medical journals. These experts know which drugs hold promise and which companies hold a piece of the pie, so they can tell you what will be in the Wall Street Journal next week, next month, or even next year. This isn't insider trading remember — it's just smart investing based on the most up to date information available.

Here's a little known fact about the government as the largest source of information in this country. Each year, commercial U.S. publishers release a total of 50,000 new titles. Yet just one government agency — the National Technical Information Service — publishes over 100,000 titles each year, on almost every technical subject imaginable. And most people have never even heard of this service, let alone used it.

The government also has more computer databases than all the commercial online services combined. The Internet wouldn't even exist were it not for the government, because it is supported by a telecommunications network developed by the U.S. Department of Defense.

Of course this information really isn't free. After all, you pay for it with your tax dollars. But that's all the more reason to use it. If you've already paid for it, why pay twice?

PLAN FOR THE WORST

Maybe it was my Navy training or my guilt ridden Catholic upbringing, but I've always expected and planned for the worst. It has been a great motivation for trying to do exactly what I've really wanted to do with my life, and not necessarily sticking to the "safe bets" in life.

In the early days of my business, I would sit in front of my telephone and try to get up the nerve to make calls and ask perfect strangers to toss some work my way. I wondered why it was so difficult to make each call — what was I afraid of? Then I'd ask myself, "What's the worst thing that can happen if I make this call? Will the person reach through the wires, grab me by the throat and start squeezing?"

I knew this kind of phone assault was fiction, science fiction, even. The worst anyone could do was say no and hang up. Big deal. I didn't have their business in the first place, so what had I lost? Nothing.

But I also came to realize that if I did make that telephone call, I might just get some business. If they said yes, I'd be that much closer to my dream of financial independence as an entrepreneur. But there was absolutely NO CHANCE of getting their business if I didn't ask for it — so I picked up the phone, over and over again.

Guess what? It worked.

It's natural to try to avoid discomfort and embarrassment. Not everyone's born to sell — let alone to sell themselves. Pride's at stake, but you have to push yourself past pride to get ahead. Failure makes you better, not worse, as long as you get back up and try again. That's the only way you build confidence. With any luck at all, you'll get to do those things in life you really dream of doing if you just open yourself up to the risk of failure.

A few years ago, I did an undercover survey that found 94 percent of all U.S. doctors didn't know that there were money programs available for their patients that could help them locate free prescription drugs, free hospitalization, and even free treatment by the best doctors in the world.

I felt the best way to dramatize my findings was to go public with each physician's name. I agonized over this decision for days, fearing a huge backlash from the medical community and, of course, a stack of lawsuits. Still, the truth was there, and I felt I had to publish their names. I even sat down with my family and discussed my dilemma. They too would be affected by my actions, should I take the names public. We are not rich, but live in a nice home in the Washington, D.C. suburbs. I tried to explain to my family how important I felt it was that doctors didn't know about programs that could help their less fortunate patients.

Then I asked them for the worst possible scenario, the worst thing that might happen to us if I released the survey results and named doctors.

I envisioned a monster lawsuit in which we'd lose everything and have to start over again from scratch.

Then I realized that it would not be a dead end. I would still have my family and my work. I could still support them, even if it meant eating bologna casseroles six nights a week. We would still be together, wouldn't we? And we'd still have fun. Besides, like I teach my kids, we need to tell the truth. So that's what I did.

And you know what happened? Nothing. I published the list of names and received broad press coverage, but only two of the doctors contacted me and their only complaint was that in their opinion, my survey was unscientific. In the end — much sweat, but no big deal. And I learned another big lesson.

If you really want to push yourself to do the things you want to do in life, just consider what I learned, and how I learned it. Tell yourself that the worst that can happen is a dead end, and what the heck, life has a serious punctuation mark at the end, even if you don't take chances. You shouldn't let fear of failure — like having to move to a rundown condo 10 miles outside of town — stop you from trying. Life's not that cheap, and success is well worth the worry.

LOVED ONES CAN BE YOUR WORST ENEMY

People who love you can be the biggest obstacle from pursuing your dream. They want to protect you from failure, and not incidentally, protect themselves.

They'll warn you that starting a small business is too risky. "Don't you know that three out of four businesses fail?" Or, "You can't quit your job, what about your pension, what about our health insurance?"

Friends and colleagues do it too, but their words of caution often come from simple jealousy rather than concern for your well being. You're willing to put everything on the line to buck the status quo, but they aren't. Inside, many of them wish that they had your nerve. At least you're willing to try, while they probably feel that they can't even risk trying something new.

Socrates said that if you love someone, you help them do whatever they want to do — not make them do what YOU want them to do. For all others, like neighbors or fellow citizens, your job is not necessarily to help them get what they want, just to stay out of their way as they pursue their goals. It would probably also be helpful not to play the doomsayer to their dreams, and instead, encourage them as much as possible.

I'm not one to argue with Socrates, and I've come to learn the wisdom of his words. How better can we show our appreciation for loved ones than by supporting them as they strive for greater happiness and fulfillment in life? It sounds like a good living to me.

I used to think that if I failed at something, I would be left walking around with a big, red F stamped on my forehead. Everybody would be whispering behind my back, and I'd be the laughing stock of the city.

But the first time a business of mine failed, I found most people didn't really care. Even my family stopped talking about it after a relatively short period of time. This taught me that most people are so wrapped up in their own lives, they really don't have time to worry about anyone else's trials and tribulations. There's no room left on their emotional disk for much else than what they are struggling with each day.

Friends and acquaintances offered their condolences and asked sympathetic questions, listened for a few minutes, and even offered advice (even though many had never taken a business risk in their lives). Much to my amazement, I found that their interest passed quickly and the subject never came up again. If anything, they were interested and even eager to hear about my next business venture. I think they felt that at least I was having some fun trying something new, while they plodded along with their own boring jobs.

So why stop yourself from doing what you really want to do in life? Because you're afraid of what others might think or say if you fail? Guess what? The truth is they don't really care.

RETIREMENT IS PASSE

Being raised in the 50's, I was brought up to believe that at 65 you retired and moved somewhere sunny to play golf for the rest of your days. That's the way it used to be, but times have changed. Now that I'm getting close to that age, the idea seems dreadful for many reasons.

1) We're living too long

Back in the 50s, retiring at 65 and relaxing for the rest of your life meant 5 to 10 "Golden Years" of golf, bridge, bird watching, fishing, or playing mah jong. Then, if you were lucky, a short stop at the nursing home before your Big Exit.

That's just not true anymore. Here are some data taken from Gail Sheehy's recent book, New Passages (Random House, New York City, 1995). "During most of human history only one in ten people lived to the age of 65. In contemporary America, eight in ten people sail past their sixty-fifth birthday,' and that 'already the average healthy man who is 65 today — an age now reached by the majority of the U.S. population — can expect to live until 81." Sheehy writes 'A woman who reaches 50 today — and remains free of cancer and heart disease — can expect to see her 92nd birthday.'

So why would anyone 'retire' with 20 or 30 more years to finally do what they've dreamed of doing? That's enough time to launch a new life or at least a whole new career.

2) You'll Need The Money

In the old days, planning for retirement was easy. Social Security was there, most people had a company pension plan, and through 40 years of work, most people were able to save a little nest egg for their retirement.

But financially, it's a whole new world out there. The health of the Social Security system is in question, and even if there is a check in the mail, it won't cover next month's rent. Organizations are cutting back on retirement plans, health insurance, and other benefits for retirees, and the cost of living just keeps rising. It's also nearly impossible to save enough money to live on comfortably for a period of 30 or more years. Never has been, probably never will be.

Who wants to spend half a life chasing a little white ball around a golf course, even if the weather is perfect? Most people need to succeed at something other than a card game or catching a big fish. Anyone who has spent 40 years in any profession has skills to market, and running your own business leaves you room for recreation. You call your own shots, set your own hours, take three day weekends when you want to. Plus, you stay active and engaged in life which, research shows, will help you live even longer.

So take your retirement worries and throw them out the window. If you're tired of working at 65, take some time off. Maybe play a little golf. Then start planning your post-retirement career doing something you always wanted to try, but never found the time for.

3) You Can Do What You Like

I think that most people look forward to retirement, and doing nothing all day, because they hate their jobs. But this wouldn't be the case if you love your work. People stay in jobs they hate for millions of reasons, and some are legitimate. Yet many people stay because they are afraid of change. Retirement is a golden opportunity for charting a new life course, for getting excited about yourself and what you can contribute. You know that you've got talent and skills, and most of these qualities can be applied regardless of the nature of the work you choose to perform in retirement.

The greatest satisfaction has never been found in retiring from a useful life, but from continuing to make a difference in the lives of others by contributing our talents and skills where they matter, are recognized, and appreciated.

Most of us want to help others, to make a difference in the community — and getting older is no obstacle. Does anyone ever ask Mother Teresa to stop serving the sick and poor? Did anyone tell the late George Burns he was too old to make people laugh? Of course not.

There are many people (though not enough) who have found bliss in their work, and they are paid for doing what they love. They don't think of it as work. It's something they'll do until they die, paid or not, because they feel they are contributing their best to society. Imagine feeling that way about what you do every day. You too can find this kind of satisfaction once you find your life's true calling. When you do, you won't think about retirement anymore. When you die you can rest forever, but while you're here make yourself useful — especially to others.

4) New Jobs Are Suited For Seniors

It used to be that Americans worked in factories and in jobs that required hard physical labor. As people aged, they were unable to continue such strenuous work, and there were few other opportunities available. Now jobs requiring physical labor are fast disappearing. More people work for the government than in manufacturing, a trend that seems sure to continue. Our economy is quickly shifting from one based on manufacturing to one driven by information and services, and the better paying jobs are all going to require brain power, not muscle power. At age 60 or 70, the body can't take running a blast furnace in a steel factory, but it certainly can handle a computer keyboard or analyzing data from financial statements. Even starting a small pet-sitting business and walking peoples' dogs every day can earn you enough money for a comfortable living.

5) Demographics Are In Your Favor

Baby boomers represent the largest segment of our population, and the first wave is just hitting retirement age. Who's going to do all the work once they're gone? Who's going to keep the Social Security System solvent? It used to be that seniors left the workforce to make way for younger workers, but now there are fewer newcomers. Where seniors in the past were encouraged by companies to leave, more often than not, employers in the future will encourage them to stay on — even in a part time capacity or as consultants. Either way, the future looks pretty bright for retirement-aged people who want to keep right on working, and even find the time to play a little golf now and then.

"At least half the Baby Boomers can expect to live well into their late eighties and nineties, remaining healthy and active."

BE YOUR OWN HERO

As a kid I had a lot of heroes: Superman, Batman, Mickey Mantle, and more. But as I grew older, they stopped serving as role models as I became aware of the more human qualities of each hero. Batman and Superman turned out to be nothing more than ink, and Mickey Mantle became a full-blown alcoholic. It didn't matter much to me, I long ago stopped reading comic books and was never good at baseball anyway. But I had trouble finding heroes to replace them.

The media always jumps on the shortcomings of anyone who has the remotest chance of becoming one of our heroes. Dig up the dirt, editors tell their reporters, find the skeletons. Maybe none of us can accept that nobody's perfect. But who ever said heroes are perfect? Every hero, in myth or in real life, has had faults — it's what has always made them human and someone that we were able to identify with. From Hercules to Dr. Martin Luther King, this is the real lesson of heroes. They teach us that we don't need to be perfect to demonstrate valor, stamina, and courage in the face of seemingly unbeatable odds.

My way out of the hero dilemma was to work toward becoming one myself. Instead of being continually disappointed by the world around me, and by people I didn't know, I began putting all of my efforts into making myself a better person by helping others in any way that I could. I quit fantasizing about watching someone else's movie and started trying to be the action hero of my own life. And I believe you can do it too.

We're all on a separate pathway in life. We have guidebooks and mentors, but in the end we make our own decisions and have to find our own unique trail. It might not suit everyone, but if we're successful, it will suit us.

When making decisions, I often ask myself a question. If I were watching myself in a movie, what would the hero do? I think long and hard about it, then usually choose the more difficult route. Like giving up money for the sake of principle, or choosing paths that others say are too difficult, too stupid, or simply can't be followed.

For each of us this is the real test, the real challenge. By nature, most of us want to take the safe and easy road through life — a road that is well paved, with bright lights and stepping stones to follow. Business school might train you to make tough decisions, but not heroic ones. And our society doesn't exactly encourage any of us to break out of the pack and do something different. We're constantly being pointed in the easiest, safest, and surest direction to get anything and everything we want. But these are shortcuts that lead nowhere worthwhile. Sooner or later the trail doubles back on itself, and many travelers get lost along the way.

If you are interested in reading more about the path of the hero, dig into Joseph Campbell's work. He devoted his life to studying those myths that are common among cultures throughout the world, and the similarities all of our heroes have shared down through the ages. Campbell's wonderful books help explain our reason for being alive. If you are unfamiliar with Campbell's work, it's best to begin with The Power of Myth, a PBS television feature narrated by Bill Moyers. Video and book versions of the program can be ordered through PBS Home Video, P.O. Box 751089, Charlotte, NC 28275-1089; 800-645-4737. The six video set costs $124.95, and the video set and a hardback copy of the book cost $143.00.

Campbell found that the legends of heroes are remarkably similar in almost every culture around the world. First the hero is forced out into the world to make his own way. He then enters a dangerous place — in Western lore, often an uncharted forest. There the hero must find his way out, cutting his own path through, and along the way encountering — and overcoming — many challenges and obstacles, monsters, and mysteries. These victories provide the hero with new wisdom and strength. And these are passed along to his people, once the hero returns.

In the Star Wars films, George Lucas relied on Campbell's work to insure that this cross-cultural heroic dynamic was central to the plot of each movie. But the truth is, we don't need blockbuster movies to show us the way. We can become heroes ourselves on a daily basis, getting better all the time.

THREE CHEERS FOR MEDIOCRITY

...Or as some others have put it, 'Perfection Is The Enemy Of The Good'. Trying to get things perfect used to keep me from doing a lot of things in life. I didn't think I could start my own business unless I had an MBA. Or I couldn't write a book, because I didn't have an English degree from Harvard. Perfection kept me from deciding what kind of business I wanted to start in the first place. I couldn't start a consulting business because I lacked the information, expertise and money of Booz, Allen & Hamilton, at the time probably the largest consulting group in the world.

Then this need for perfection started undermining my ability to finish projects. There was always something more I could add to make it better, always some additional information I needed to improve my product. Trying to get things perfect was stopping me from getting anything done at all, perfect or otherwise.

One day, I began looking at the things I was spending money on — clothes, appliances, books, etc. None of them were perfect by any stretch of the imagination, but I bought and used them anyway. That was when I realized that my work projects didn't have to be perfect either. The important thing was getting them done — people would only buy a finished product — and making each one as good as possible under the circumstances.

We all work under constraints, mostly money, time, or talent. These keep us from doing a perfect job every time, but it shouldn't keep us from marketing our best efforts. I've found that people will need your goods and services, even if they aren't perfect.

Don't get me wrong, I believe in good products. But it's more important to finish — to contribute something — than to let perfection slow you down or stop you outright.

Every quarterback can't be Joe Montana, but all football teams need a quarterback. Not every artist is a Picasso, but walls need pictures. And while we're all not Einstein, major scientific discoveries are being made each year by researchers who see Einstein as a role model. Genius inspires, but it's not a prerequisite for making a sincere effort to contribute your best in any field.

One of my sons recently reminded me of this. When my older boy was in sixth grade, he wanted to enter a statewide science competition. He's a good student, mind you, but I knew there were hundreds of other kids out there who were probably better at science than he is, and they were ready to compete against him. No one in our family is especially gifted in science, but my son liked the teacher in charge of the science fair and convinced us to let him try.

He worked on a Rube Goldberg-type of contraption for weeks — you know, like the game Mousetrap. Balls fell into cups that dropped on pulleys to set other balls rolling down chutes. It was OK, in my eyes, but nothing brilliant — it didn't even work that well. Still, he took it to the state competition and won first prize.

It wasn't that his invention was necessarily mediocre, but I was expecting some kid's project on advanced particle physics or recombinant DNA mass spectroscopy to take top honors, or at least something to do with fruit flies. In other words, just because we might view a work product as less than perfect, doesn't always mean that it's not good enough. Sometimes it's better than good — it wins first prize! I was wrong, and my son taught me a lesson I'll never forget.

LIFE IS A SMORGASBORD

I used to think that life was something like a fancy restaurant, where you wait politely until someone comes to take your order. I don't see it that way anymore. I now know life is more like a smorgasbord or an all you can eat salad bar. You can't wait for opportunities to fall into your lap, you have to get up from the table and grab them yourself. No one is going to wait on you anymore. They're all too busy tending to their own needs. So speak up, get up, and take what you need to make life worthwhile for you.

You can play the good sailor and float through life, being pulled here and there by others who will use you to fulfill their own dreams. Or you can decide what YOUR dreams are, and start figuring out what YOU must do to make them come true. Try being the master of your own destiny by exercising some control over what you work at in life. Later, when you look upon your accomplishments with pride, you'll be glad that you exerted yourself.

THE EXPERTS ARE WRONG

It used to be that experts could predict the future by looking to the past. History repeats itself, they said. But that was before our present age of rapid change, before our country became much more susceptible to external forces rather than internal ones.

At one time, we only had to worry about what was going on here at home, but now the actions of people half a world away can have a bigger impact on our welfare. This seemed to start with the oil embargo in 1973, when one country in the Middle East stopped our economy cold. At that point it became almost impossible for experts to forecast the future and predict trends correctly.

The fellow who started Federal Express proposed the delivery service as a project while he was a student at Yale. His professor gave him a D. I'll bet that professor regrets not having a few original shares of his student's dumb idea now.

Or why couldn't all the experts at IBM see the coming of the micro computer age? It took two college dropouts to show them the way. What about David Bobert, who was told he was stupid for trying to market a coin operated machine that dispensed air for filling tires? Air is free, they laughed. Nobody laughs now that Air-Vend is a $5 million dollar business¹. And during the early stages of the 1994 presidential campaign, none of the talking heads on the Sunday TV talk shows believed that Bill Clinton had a prayer of winning the election.

I recently heard that the inventor of Post-It Notes also was told the idea wouldn't work. Experts at the 3M Company spent a lot of time and money researching the market, and concluded that nobody would buy sticky little notepads. Now they're everywhere and people wonder what they ever did without them.

Remember the fallibility of experts when you are trying to do what you want in life. Most of us, when we have an idea, instinctively ask an expert, or worse yet, friends and relatives. We need the feedback, and that's fine. But remember that they are very likely to be wrong, not only your friends and relatives, but the experts too. They don't know you well enough to know you can make your idea succeed. Experts are best at telling you what has worked in the past, and they'll steer you towards the more traditional concepts that have worked before.

This kind of advice might keep you from making obvious mistakes, but that's about all. Remember, the remarks and comments of experts and even friends and relatives can be detrimental to your future success. More often than not, they'll discourage any bold new ideas you might have about your life or the life around you. And unfortunately it's bold new ideas that we need. This world is changing fast, and what worked yesterday won't necessarily work tomorrow. That's why IBM, the steel companies, and even the auto manufacturers got into trouble over the past 20 years.

Even if your idea has proved a failure in the past, that does not mean you cannot make it happen. Your individuality is the most important ingredient for turning your idea into a success. Each of us brings something new to the marketplace. Your uniqueness means you will do things differently than anyone has in the past, and that could be all that's needed to make your plan succeed. Remember, all great innovations in the past started with some pretty crazy ideas — even the wheel.

BEING DIFFERENT WORKS

In the section called "The Experts Are Wrong", I talked about the importance of finding and expressing your uniqueness when it comes to getting what you want out of life. There's a tendency among all of us — especially experts — to try to imitate success rather than to look for new solutions. Most markets are big enough to handle more than one supplier or service, but when you play follow-the-leader you may be giving up the truly unique quality that you have to offer the world. It already has all the other stuff, so why give it more of the same?

Do you think the world is good the way it is, and that we need more of the same? I don't think so. We need different solutions. We are all unique and capable of coming up with novel answers, but we are hardly ever encouraged to do so. In school, we're told there's only one right answer, and we'd better know it. And most organizations also expect workers to do things the company way, the way things have always been done before. The longer you are in situations like these, the harder it will be to regain your creativity when you go out on your own. People who don't want to follow all of the rules are not often welcomed by corporations, or even by schools. That notion of having to "go along" to get ahead stifles creativity in all of us, and just plain kills it in some people.

The Microsofts of the world understand the uniqueness of the individual, and they encourage creativity rather than conformity. Why do you think they're making so much money? Because they're allowing freedom on the part of their employees to conduct business in a different way — more open and creative, with less emphasis on corporate politics.

What works well for someone else won't work as well for you, because you're different. You have to find what is unique and special about you and share it with the world. That's when the magic begins, and the experts will start advising others how to imitate you.

Without Jobs*, William Bridges, Addison Wesley,

Every time I was on someone else's payroll, it would usually take less than six months before I realized that my boss wasn't making the right decisions. There were times I would think he was pretty dumb. Sometimes I'd get so frustrated that I'd mumble dirty words about him behind his back.

I don't think this is unique to me. I've heard friends, relatives, neighbors and even perfect strangers criticize their employers. This is because bosses DO make dumb decisions. We all do. It's part of being human. It doesn't take a genius to become a boss, or even the head of an organization. Take a moment and think about all the dummies you've ever worked for.

I figure about 98 percent of the people who run things in this country got where they are because of connections, drive or maybe pure chance — but not brain power. So you don't have to waste your time and energy whispering about your boss when, instead, you can be in charge and have other people wasting their time whispering behind your back. It's a lot more fun.

GIVING IS SELFISH

I used to think that in order to run my own business, I had to be a tough, hardnosed son-of-a-gun. I couldn't give anything away, and always had to look out for number one. But after my first two businesses failed, I took another look at this approach. In my third business, I started being more myself — less selfish and self-protective, and more giving. I discovered that giving things away for free helped my business more than anything I'd done before.

At first, I tried selling research services to business clients by placing small advertisements in newspapers and cold-calling potential customers. But I was getting nowhere. It wasn't until I started publishing a free newsletter on information giveaways that my business finally began taking off. I would put every source of free information that I could find into my newsletter, and even though it seemed like I was giving away the store, it worked. Potential clients thought I was smart because I had one or two sources in my newsletter that they didn't know about. But of course I knew more than they did; I was spending much more time looking for free information than they were. I also think that giving the information away somehow increased the comfort level for many potential clients. Showing them that I was free and open with my sources, rather than close mouthed and secretive, seemed to make it easier for them to want to hire me. The bottom line is that this free newsletter launched my business, and my phone has not stopped ringing since.

I now believe that giving is a selfish act — not bad selfish, but good. In business, as well in your personal life, I've learned that you have to give in order to receive. The more you help others, the more comes back to you. It's like a boomerang. So giving must be selfish, right? It feels good to give, but it also does wonders for business. The problem most of us have is finding someone who deserves our help. But this same problem can work in your favor. When you give things away to potential clients, you look like a very deserving person — someone they can feel good about and trust with a business project.

There is another side to giving that I would like to share, and it has to do with interfering with others' gift giving. As a young adult, I used to be very hot-headed and independent. I didn't want to take anything from anyone, not even gifts from friends and relatives. I didn't want anyone's help. But after I got a little older, and understood more about the joy of giving, I changed my mind about accepting gifts. Now I graciously accept them, not so much because I'm greedier, but because I now know that by not accepting presents I'm denying people the opportunity to feel good — nice-selfish — about themselves. And who am I to deprive them of that pleasure?

ENTHUSIASM IS RENEWABLE ENERGY

Before I started working on my own dreams, I used to get tired every afternoon at 3 o'clock. It was like clockwork. I'd get tired and start daydreaming about other things I'd rather be doing, like playing golf or traveling to exotic places around the globe. Now that I'm doing something I really love, I don't get tired at 3 o'clock anymore. In fact, there are days when I don't even need sleep.

A few years back I put together a publicity trip called INFO-VAN. My whole family and I packed up a big truck loaded with free stuff you can get from the government. We went to 17 cities in 17 days. I dressed like Uncle Sam and sat in each town square, handing out free items from Washington, and there were days when I functioned perfectly well on just a few hours of sleep. We spent all day handing out stuff, and then drove all night to get to the next city on time. It was exhilarating. I was fulfilling a dream, and seemed to have all the energy in the world. And I still find this to be true. Recently I appeared on the Home Shopping Network. I spent about 11 hours one day on live TV, selling my books, and telling people where to get free help from the government. I lived on only two or three hours of sleep, but it was so exhilarating that I did it for two days in a row. And I was 52 years of age.

So forget all of these pep pills and oriental extracts that profess to increase your energy. I believe most people lose energy — not because they need snake oil or coffee — but because they're not doing what they want in life. I've found that when you are, not only do you get renewed energy, but many of life's other little annoyances disappear. For example, when I worked for other people and traveled around the country, I would be really angry when my plane was late or I got a bad seat — or if my hotel bed sagged in the middle. Now when I travel, I don't care if I have to travel by camel and sleep in a tent (at least most of the time). Doing what I want now makes all the difference. How I reach a destination has become a minor detail, when it used to be the entire focus of my efforts, back before I realized the energy and freedom of working for myself.

You can do it too. Recharge yourself — and get rid of many of life's little annoyances — by pursuing something you really care about.

BIGGER ISN'T ALWAYS BETTER

Most of us grew up believing that in business, the larger your company grew, the better for all concerned. It still seems to be the prevailing sentiment among the business community, despite thousands of examples of companies that have grown too fast, too soon — then failed. When I first started my business, I wanted it to grow, and grow fast. At first it was just me, a telephone, and a desk in a one bedroom apartment. I was overjoyed when my business grew to over 30 employees in just three years. It was great for my ego, I found, but bad for my soul.

One of the main reasons I always wanted my own business was because I hated top-heavy organizations that made me follow inflexible rules. Personnel manuals, vacation schedules, and long, boring meetings drove me nuts. I hated how I found myself playing office politics, and doing things like coming in on Saturday mornings just to impress my boss.

If I had my own company, I told myself, I'd let people work intuitively. They'd be able to go to lunch when they were hungry, take a vacation when they needed it, and I'd assume everyone was bright enough to get things done without sitting through endless meetings. But once I had 30 people working for me, I discovered that the easiest way to get things done was by using the same old bureaucratic tools that I'd hated ... meetings, manuals, and office politics as usual. What a disappointment, I was creating the same kind of workplace that I'd run from not so many years ago.

Lesko's Lessons

Another reason I always wanted my own business was that I wanted the freedom of working for myself, and not having to answer to the boss. I wanted to be the boss, plain and simple. It sounded nice in theory, but once I had 30 employees, reality set in — in an upside down sort of way. I found that I no longer had just one boss — I had 30. I was working for my employees, trying to make payroll every week so they could keep their jobs. Before, when I used to come in on Saturdays to impress the boss, I now found myself coming in on Saturdays to set an example for my employees. It may have been a backwards sort of pressure, but it was still the same kind of pressure.

So I eventually started listening more to my soul and less to my ego, and began scaling back the size of my company. I now work out of my house and while I have employees, they too work at home and I don't have to be there to manage them. I'm at home with my family, don't have to put up with on-site employees, and also lose no time commuting. When my kids come home from school, I can walk up and meet them at the bus stop. We spend some time having cookies and milk in the kitchen. Believe me, it's much more rewarding than talking football around the water cooler.

MAKE SOMETHING BIGGER THAN YOURSELF

One day you'll probably be able to quit working. How boring! I believe we're put here to do more than relax, even after 30 years of hard work and paying taxes. Sitting around is no reward, but I've found out what really works, at least for me. The real pleasure in my life comes from contributing to others. I've found that helping others has benefits that far exceed putting money in the bank — it's an energy booster each and every time you do it. And what most of us want after we've made enough money to live comfortably isn't more time to take naps; it's more energy to enjoy life! I guarantee that once you begin contributing to others, you'll have more energy. Even if you haven't made enough money yet — maybe you're just starting out — helping others will ensure that you won't have to figure out what to do with your life once you have some money in the bank. You'll already be doing something worthwhile and reaping the benefits of this renewed energy and enthusiasm.

Also, making decisions is easier if you know your work helps others. For one thing, your ego won't get in the way of the value of your work because you are making a contribution to society — making a difference. When I first started doing television shows to sell books, I found the attention of the spotlight was as intoxicating as it was addictive. The more I appeared on TV, the more I wanted to be on. It was sick, I've come to realize. I was doing things I normally wouldn't, just to get on the tube and satisfy my ego as a talk-show personality. It's something that happens to most people who get close to the business of television and feel how persuasive it can be in selling a product or a personality.

In my heart, I knew that television helped sell my books, and that my books helped people. So I learned to remove my personal self from the fickle decision making that drives the media business, and instead concentrated on selling books to help others. It was like a light bulb went off over my head. Instead of feeling defensive or apologetic about my zany TV personality, I accepted that it was just another tool to sell my books to people who needed the information to get their own lives jump-started. I provide the booster cables, and television reaches a far larger audience than direct mail or taking out an ad in a magazine. Oh, yes, I make money. But more importantly, my books help others.

INVEST IN YOURSELF, NOT THE STOCK MARKET

It amazes me that people give so much of their money to stockbrokers and investment advisors — these people get all the fun of playing with your money, yet take none of the risk. All you get as an investor is the worry, and if you are lucky, a dividend check. Sure, some people make a killing on pork bellies, but most investors wind up eating Roloids for breakfast.

Money should be used to get all you can out of life. I don't believe that you can do that by turning your money and investment decisions over to someone else. Many of us are unhappy with the way the world is, yet we give our money to those people running it in the same old way. If you have an idea — something you believe would make the world a better place — put your money in it. Forget the investors, invest in yourself.

You are your best asset, not blue chip stocks or profit-sharing plans. You should continually be investing in yourself to make sure that you continue to grow. Why invest money in someone else? They're only trying to make their own money and increase their own investments. Learn how to make your own money yourself. Then you'll find real security, and a sense of a job well done — a sense of self worth.

I see rich people fall into the investment trap all the time. On a nice sunny day, stand in front of any big name brokerage office in New York or Chicago. You'll witness a very interesting phenomenon — wealthy people pull up in their limousines, go inside, and give their money to someone who came to work by subway, bus or bike.

If these rich people spent the money themselves — investing in projects that they believed in — they would probably not make as much. But they would earn, learn, and get a much better return out of their investment. They might even learn to behave creatively with a little bit of that money, and find out how exciting investing can be.

"Taking out the bottom 10% where money matters a great deal to those who do not have enough to live on — the relationship between income and happiness for the rest of the population is not of real importance. Rich people are virtually no happier. Even national surveys of young American children ages 7-11 show that their self reported happiness is not related to their parents' income levels."

DON'T PUT THE HURDLES TOO HIGH

If you want to learn to play the piano, don't set your sights on Carnegie Hall after one lesson. Sure you're excited, but your goals have to be realistic and achievable. Otherwise you'll be playing frustration and hopelessness, not Chopin. Do something that allows you to contribute to the best of your abilities. If you don't feel you've got the talent to play major concert halls around the country, but you're the best piano teacher in town, think it through. There are hundreds of children who will love you for teaching them, and love is far better than applause. It usually lasts a lot longer, too.

We set our own goals, but too often put our hurdles too high. It's best to put them just high enough to be a struggle, but not too high that we can't get over any of them. Raise or lower them as you go through life. What feels right for this year may not be right for the next. Professional men and women on the fast-track wake up one day with little children and the next day they are living with teenagers. And then they're gone. Miss anything?

Many professionals with children are opting out of the fast lane, shifting their focus from becoming a partner at a high-powered law firm or advertising agency to working from home — managing 4 or 5 clients — and eating cookies with the kids after school. Tell me who gets the real bonus out of that kind of an arrangement.

Trying to become a partner at a law firm requires putting in 60 to 70 hours each week, but handling 4 or 5 clients might take 20 hours. If you try to make partner while raising young children, you will probably fail at both tasks. Time, energy, and frustration will sap your drive, and too often you'll be forced to give one up. These are both full time jobs. Supermom is a super myth, a marketing angle for the sellers of microwave breakfasts, pre-packaged lunches and carryout dinners. By lowering your sights in your professional life, you can create an atmosphere where both jobs, professional and personal, can get done pretty well.

I recently read a book called "Ambition: How we Manage Success and Failure Through Our Lives" by Gilbert Brim. In the beginning of the book, the author tells a wonderful story that addresses this topic. Brim talks about his father, who retired as a college professor and bought an abandoned farm of several hundred acres. His father had always longed to return to the life he had as a boy, growing up on a farm. When he finally was able to buy the place, he first cleaned the woods, put up fences, roamed the hillside and mountaintops, and trimmed the trees and brush along the drive. As he grew older, his father's legs and back began tiring earlier and earlier in the day, until he had to hire a young man to help him. As he grew older still, the upper part of the mountain behind the farm became too hard to reach, and his father stayed closer to home.

Brim's father lived to be 103, and every few years there was less and less that he could do around the place. But he always found something within his capabilities. At 100, he couldn't even tend the little garden in front of the house, so he constantly worked on four outdoor window boxes of flowers. They were waist high, so he didn't have to bend down to cultivate the flowers. There is a giant lesson here for all of us.

Find something that will challenge your abilities, even as your abilities may lessen. Set realistic and achievable goals every day, but don't set them in concrete. Make them flexible and attainable, and perhaps you too will live to be 103.

We often have to figure out more than one way to get where we're going, whether it's due to a traffic jam or a vacation threatened by bad weather. The same is true in launching a successful business.

If you want to open a store in your local shopping mall but don't have the $100,000 it will take to start one, consider a different route — become a vendor with a push cart, or perhaps open a booth in the same mall, for a lot less money. All of these business ideas will only cost a few hundred dollars to get started, but it's a start. Or maybe you want to make a living on the professional golf tour, but you know your game is a little shaky — your 18 point handicap won't even get you into the qualifying school. So what? Think about all the other opportunities there are on the circuit. You could get a job with the PGA Tour selling flowers or catering, or become a saleswomen calling on pro shops with a line of golf clothing.

The point is — avoid tunnel vision. View the big picture, and don't let society or any of your own pre-conceived notions lock you out of an area where you want to make a living. The world is full of possibilities, but sometimes you have to create them for yourself. Even if your first step is small, and not where you envision yourself being, at least you're making progress. And that progress can build on itself and turn into real momentum. You're moving toward what you want — and if you have the stamina and drive — you'll get there.

Few people know exactly what they want in life, and often, by the time they get there, their goals and outlook have changed considerably — or the world has. It's a waste of time waiting around for that perfect job or perfect circumstance. Just start doing what you want to do and keep moving in that direction. Nothing worthwhile happens overnight. It always starts a little imperfect and evolves into something better.

I covered some of this earlier when I talked about retirement being passe. Still, it's important to mention it again in another context. Many of us have been conditioned to believe that work stinks, and that being able to sit on our butts for the rest of our lives would be heaven. We also seem programmed into believing that the easier the work is, the better. What a joke! Even though we are sometimes burnt out from our daily labors, the reality is that the harder we work, the better we feel. Even if we're tired at the end of the day — if we've worked hard we feel like we've accomplished something. It's human nature to want to work hard, to push ourselves to the limit. Plus you sleep better at night when you're happily exhausted from what you've been doing all day.

So why do so many people try to find the easy way out of work? Why do they call in sick when they're feeling OK? It's because most people don't like what they are doing and try to do as little of it as possible. That's human nature too.

When people find work with meaning — something that interests them and gives them personal satisfaction — they suddenly start loving their jobs and willingly work longer hours. Then they find leisure time is no longer engaging or nearly as enjoyable as a hard day's work and a good night's sleep.

I'm not talking about workaholics who feel they have to work 70 hours a week to just keep up or get ahead. I mean people who work 12 hour days just because they love doing it! The key is not resigning yourself to a job that you hate instead of taking the risks of changing careers or looking for a more meaningful job.

But I have bills, bills, bills, people argue. Of course — we all do. But isn't it better to take risks and succeed than to spend your days hating your job and longing for a couch and a TV to escape into? That's not living, it's resignation! And if you're going to resign from life, find more challenging work and resign from your current job.

Then you'll bounce out of bed in the morning, raring to go, instead of dragging yourself through another dreary workday, just waiting for it to be over. Because one day it will, and then what will you do?

TRAIN YOURSELF FOR CHAOS

When I began starting businesses, I used to try to get everything to run smoothly. That's what I was trained to do in seven years of business school. Their educational mission was to teach us to get everyone and everything to work perfectly in business. Nice concept on paper.

In real life, nothing ever runs perfectly. Once I was in the real business world, something or someone was always going wrong. People would screw up. Materials wouldn't be delivered on time. Customers wouldn't pay their bills. Nothing seemed to work smoothly — the way I thought they would if I worked at it hard enough. I spent all my time putting out fires and frustrated myself to no end. Eventually, I quit trying to train myself to handle things perfectly, because perfection so rarely happened.

Instead, I began training myself to cope with chaos. Now I plan for what will go wrong when I step into the office tomorrow. What will I do when I don't get my money on time? What will I do when my materials don't come in on time, or bills aren't paid?

In a perfect world, we wouldn't need business schools. Businesses would run themselves, turning handsome profits each quarter. Perfection handles itself, it needs no fine tuning. But perfection rarely happens in life or in business — so I recommend chaos training. Everyone needs a crash course in it before starting a new business. Think of it as business boot camp for the coming millennium.

FIRST, PLEASE YOURSELF

So many of us grow up with the Judeo-Christian ethic of self sacrifice and putting others first, that we don't know where to draw the line in our own lives. This may sound like heretical Me Generation propaganda, but it's true. Just because you help yourself doesn't mean you forget everyone else — you just put yourself in the picture, too.

I believe in helping others, but I also know there are times when trying to please others hurts you — and indirectly them, in the long run. It's like a boomerang. You have to throw it, it won't throw itself. You have to be the nicest to yourself first in order to be nice to others. If I'm not happy in what I'm doing, I can't be joyful and helpful to others around me.

When I had my first child, I started having all kinds of anxieties about my finances. Believe me, I sweated bullets! I'd need a big house in a great neighborhood and an even bigger bank account to afford college. I worried for months and months — I didn't have any of these things. Where would they come from?

Then I started spending all my time trying to figure out how to make more money just to alleviate my anxiety. I began making most decisions not because I thought they were right and I wanted to do them, but more because I thought they would make more money.

Soon work was less fun — I wasn't making enough to live up to my expectations of a bright future for my kid. As a result, life was less fun, and I became less able to bring joy and laughter to those around me.

Then one day I began thinking about what I remembered most about my father. It was never the house he provided, or money for college — it was the upbeat attitude and love we shared around the house that had the greatest impact on my life.

Right then and there I changed directions completely. I realized that my major duty to my children would not be to have the biggest house on the block, the nicest car, or a fat bank account. Instead, I decided to do work that I felt was important and meaningful, so that I could come home happy and share this with my family. They would remember me as the kind of father that was always around, trying new things, and staying curious about life.

I think this "me first" boomerang approach also works with almost all other personal relationships in life. If you do not take care of your happiness and self-fulfillment first, you cannot be genuinely generous and caring with others. You simply won't have the capacity or energy to give graciously of yourself. And that won't help anyone.

We waste too much time worrying about the things we can't control. Does my boss like me? Will my company downsize and put me on the streets? Are terrorists stealing nukes? Will the airplane crash? Are antibiotic resistant diseases about to create the Mother of all Plagues? Will Aunt Lila like my gift? On and on it goes...

Usually there's little we can do to influence these events. If someone doesn't like you, it's usually because of a personality conflict. How can you change that and remain true to yourself? Impossible! If you wind up on welfare, it's the economy, stupid. Don't worry, be resourceful — plan for economic chaos and you won't be left out in the cold. Nuclear black market and terrorists? What does that have to do with you? Write your elected representatives and express your concern — then let it go. Unless you're the pilot, you have absolutely no control of the airplane — whether it gets to your destination on time or falls out of the sky. Listen to the flight attendant and notice the emergency procedures — and then relax — you have no control.

Sure, there are little things we can do that may influence such events, but I believe the amount of your worry should be proportionate to your ability to control the outcome.

It pays to be prepared, to be somewhat cautious and definitely concerned about threatening issues. But when all is said and done, the only real control you have is over your own decisions in life. Make good ones, and the rest of your worries fall into the proper perspective.

If you are worried about money, remember Howard Hughes. He was brilliant, good looking, rich and famous — smart as a whip. He dined with movie stars, presidents, and kings. Then he started worrying. He worried about germs and microbes, and wound up a wasted hermit living in an airtight penthouse in Las Vegas with the drapes drawn shut to keep the bugs away. Guess what? He died anyway.

"Past success often makes it more difficult to succeed in the future. That's what happened to GM, IBM, and Sears."

ANTICIPATION IS ALWAYS WORSE THAN REALITY

It never fails. Every time I worry about doing some unpleasant task like confronting someone who owes me money, or firing an employee who has been with me for a long time, I realize that thinking about what's going to happen is always worse than the actual event itself. I usually worry about the confrontation so much that my stomach will ache, and then, when I finally make the call or have the meeting, it's never as bad as I expected. So now I try to get any potentially stressful situation over as fast as possible. Procrastinating only makes things worse, I know that now. The sooner I get it over with, the better I'll feel, and the actual event is never as bad as I imagine it will be.

Now my stomach doesn't hurt when I've got bad news to deliver or a confrontation to face. I visualize a positive outcome — what it will be like afterwards. People appreciate the honesty and directness of such an approach, and so do I.

In our fast changing society, too many people are afraid that if they're not using the latest technology they'll be left in the dust — selling apples on street corners instead of making a killing by staying up with the virtual pack.

In a consumer society like ours, this fear is absurd. The truth is, the longer you hold out on acquiring some new technological whiz-bang product, the better off you'll be when you finally do buy the next generation of products. Save your time, worry and aggravation, and let new technology pass you by for awhile. Then, when you're ready, the products will be better, cheaper, easier to use — and you'll be fresh and excited about them — not jaded and cynical like the others who feel burnt because last year's hot software isn't worth a slice of toast anymore.

The problem is, we never get any encouragement to wait and not act impulsively. Everyone tells us to buy now — or life will pass us by. This has been going on in our country ever since the first car was offered to consumers. Earlier, really. For farmers, it was the steam combine; for tailors, the foot-pedal sewing machine.

But the car was the first big piece of technology that truly revolutionized the world. When the first automobiles appeared, slick salesmen told people how life was going to pass them by if they didn't own one. A lot of people were fooled into believing that their life was better with a car, but it wasn't. They were buying the sizzle and not the steak. Those early cars were complicated to run, and required special tools and skills. And they were even a lot slower than the existing mode of transportation, the horse. Most importantly, there was no "software" for the first cars — no roads to ride on. Because of this, some of those early car owners weren't even able to try out this new gadget that was supposed to revolutionize their lives.

Still, there were people who just had to have a car.

And what eventually happened? After everyone who just had to have the first cars had one, the manufacturers started figuring out how to make them cheaper, easier to use, and more useful. The next models were a lot better, as were subsequent generations of cars.

The same is true of computers. I remember in the early 1980s, when personal computers were first introduced. Salesmen told us our lives and businesses would fail if we didn't run out and buy the latest personal computers — at the time selling for around $5,000! They told us that we could balance our checkbook on the computer! Keep recipes! If our children didn't know computers, they'd never get into college!

Well, if you never balanced your checkbook by hand, you would probably never do it by computer. It would take longer. A $5,000 piece of machinery to store recipes? Great idea! And the college gambit is as old as the encyclopedia salesman. The only thing a student could do on a computer back then was word processing. And if they had to write a report, a $200 typewriter would still do the job just fine.

The longer you waited to buy a computer, the cheaper they became and the more problems they could solve in less time. Fifteen years have passed, and it's finally getting easier to balance your checkbook by computer, but only if you write a lot of checks. You see — it pays to wait.

I see the same thing happening with the Internet. In early 1994 when I first started playing with the Internet, it was a little expensive for a commercial connection and very difficult to use. The information available there was also questionable as to its value. But by late 1995, it became a whole lot easier to use, and the price keeps dropping. There is a lot more information available, but I still question its usefulness in real time. If you're not on the Internet yet, don't fret, and don't believe those that imply that you're one of the only ones not online. It won't hurt to keep waiting, and when you do sign on, it will be with a much better service than it was — well, yesterday.

THE HARD DECISIONS ARE THE BEST

It's human nature to try and avoid making hard decisions, but I say the toughest ones are some of the best moments in life. Every time I've ever had to make a hard decision, I've always chosen the most difficult path. And these moments have become some of the most important and best turning points in my life. They made my life far richer than I could ever have dreamed, and were responsible for quantum jumps in my self confidence and inner security.

So now I look for those hard decisions — in fact, I'm eager to take them on. They don't come around very often, but when they do, try to appreciate them for the opportunities they can offer. The problem with tough decisions is that your intellect — as well as your friends and hired experts — will always caution you to go one way, while your heart tells you to pick another way. These decisions are usually choices between money and an idea or project that you believe in — even changing your career or spending your vacation building houses for the poor. Trust your heart — that's what it's there for.

ASSETS ARE A TRAP

You pay for your assets twice. Once in cold cash, and again in the limitations they place on your ability to make decisions to change your life.

We are all conditioned to believe that the game of life is won by the person who has the most assets when they finally bite the dust. "He Who Dies With the Most Toys Wins" — you've seen the bumper sticker, but nothing could be further from the truth. I find assets are a burden to life. The more assets I have, the more time I spend worrying about losing them, and the less time I spend having fun with my life — doing what I really want to do.

I'm not advocating taking a vow of poverty — I'm just saying be careful about accumulating too many assets or getting trapped in the "gimme more" mind set. You don't want to find yourself working just to add new toys to the playground — most of the time, you'd be too busy to enjoy those toys, anyway. If you can't afford to lose those material things, don't bother accumulating them in the first place.

DON'T TRUST ME

I deeply believe in what I've written in these past 36 philosophical vignettes, but don't trust me. What works for me might not work for you — you've got to find out for yourself. This goes for anyone you turn to for advice — whether it's your mother, your stock broker, your barber or your therapist. Face it, we're all different, and each of us must create our own unique mosaic of what works and, even more importantly, what doesn't work.

I don't actually follow everything I'm professing here each and every day — I'd love to, but I don't. Sometimes I give in to my own personal weaknesses or to outside influences and can't live up to my own expectations of myself. But I try and I keep trying, continually learning from my mistakes.

That's what has been so wonderful about writing this book. It's given me an opportunity to put what I really believe in down on paper — an itemized account of my values and beliefs, what's important in life and what isn't, at least to me. It's taken me a lot of years of experiencing both success and failure to arrive at what I feel is important to me in life. And I'm sure that those beliefs will continue to change as I keep on learning from my life.

Use this book like a philosophical lazy susan or salad bar. Pick and chose — help yourself. In the end, you'll have your own unique mix of principles that work best — different from mine and different from the person right beside you. And that's empowering.

"The Emptiness of Success

First, the amount of time and effort required to achieve a given goal may be so great that it causes failure in other important areas of life. Life becomes unbalanced. A second reason is described as 'fear of failing.' When the success is seen as the result of luck or other external causes rather than one's own effort, problems may arise. A third reason why winning may not bring happiness is we may be wrong about the value of the goal."

78 Federal Money Programs Worth $30 Billion

Most people have heard of the Federal government's largest money programs for students like the Pell Grant program and the Guaranteed Student Loan program. But did you know that the Federal government is the single largest source of money for students — whether they show financial need or not? It's true, but very few people are aware of the many grant programs in place and just waiting to give money to those students smart enough to find out about them. These little known programs provide students with:

- $15,000 to do graduate studies in housing related topics from the Department of Housing and Urban Development
- Money to finance a graduate degree in criminal justice from the Department of Justice
- $5,000 to study to be a librarian from the Department of Education
- $11,000 for a bachelor's degree in community planning from the Department of Housing and Urban Development
- $800 to travel to energy conferences from the Department of Energy
- $14,000 to get a graduate degree in foreign languages from the Department of Education
- Money to finance a graduate degree in mathematics from the Department of Defense
- $2,500 towards a degree in history from the National Endowment for the Humanities
- $8,800 plus tuition and expenses to be a nurse from the Department of Health and Human Services
- Grants to study child development and violence training from the Department of Health and Human Services

How To Apply

Requirements and application procedures vary widely from program to program. Some programs accept applications once a year, while others award money on a year round basis. Some programs require you to apply directly to the main funding office in Washington, DC, while other programs distribute the money to local organizations which then distribute funds to individuals. Whenever possible, we have provided a current listing of those local organizations that you may contact directly to obtain money. It should be noted that these lists can change and students might find it useful to also check the main Washington office just to inquire about new organizations which may have been recently added to the list. Like most things connected to the government, organizations are formed, changed, and even shut their doors on a frequent basis.

All these federal programs are listed in the Catalogue of Federal Domestic Assistance, which is available in most libraries. The program name and number in parenthesis refer to this publication.

Federal Money For Students

(Special Emphasis Outreach Grants 10.140)

Don Green

Special Emphasis Outreach Programs

Civil Rights Enforcement

Washington, DC 20250

202-720-7002

The program objective is to provide rapid financial support to assist public, private, State and/or other colleges and universities whose activities relate to the 1890 Morrill Act special emphasis areas. Overall goals of this program are to assist these institutions in their efforts to increase minority participation in agricultural and related fields, and to improve higher educational programs and resources that prepare students to enter these fields. Money can be used to provide assistantships for minority students; assist in arranging work experiences for students with business, industry, and government agencies; help faculty members pursue postgraduate work in such fields as animal science, plant science, food and nutrition, clothing and textiles, computer science, and agricultural economics. Students must apply to those institutions that received the money. Contact the address listed above for a list of those institutions. Money available: $35,000.

 Fellowships To Study Food And Agriculture

Science

(Food and Agricultural Science National Needs Graduate Fellowship Grants 10.210)

Grant Programs Manager

Administrative Building, Room 338A

14th and Independence Ave., SW

Washington, DC 20250

202-720-7854

The program awards grants to colleges and universities that have superior teaching and research competencies in the food and agricultural sciences. These grants are to be used to encourage outstanding students to pursue and complete a graduate degree at such institutions in an area of the food and agricultural sciences for which there is a national need for development of scientific expertise. Therefore, institutions that currently have excellent programs for graduate study and research in the food and agricultural sciences dealing with targeted national needs are particularly encouraged to apply. Money can be used to support a student completing a two-year masters program or a three-year doctoral program. Students must apply to those institutions that received the money. Contact the address listed above for a list of these institutions. Money available: $3,456,000.

Dr. James L. Rasmussen

Silver Spring, MD 20910

301-713-2474, ext. 107

The program objective is to increase the number of minority students enrolling in college and majoring in math, science, and engineering from the St. Vrain and Boulder Valley School districts. Another objective is to recruit scientists and engineers from the Boulder County area to serve as science/ math tutors for primarily girls and minority students in the Boulder Valley

Dr. Charles F. Osgood

ATTN: R51A

U.S. Department of Defense

Fort George G. Meade, MD 20755-6000 301-688-0400

The National Security Agency (NSA) is concerned over the steadily declining pool of American citizens making careers in those areas of mathematics most strongly identified with cryptology. This alarming trend, along with lagging federal compensation could imperil NSA's carrying out its cryptologic mission. This grant program exists in order to make careers in these fields of mathematics seem more attractive to Americans and to make NSA known as a possible employer of such mathematicians. This grants program provides for summer salary, professional travel, graduate student support, postdoctoral support, and conference support. Contact the source office listed above for additional application information. NSA provides a free brochure describing how to apply for a grant. Money available: $2,600,000.

The Community Development Work-Study Program makes grants to institutions of higher education to provide assistance to economically disadvantaged and minority students. Students take part in community development work-study programs while they are enrolled full time in graduate or undergraduate programs with that major. Grants are given to encourage minority and economically disadvantaged students to develop careers in community and economic development, community planning, and community management. Related fields include public administration, urban management, and urban planning. Student assistance is in the form of work stipends, tuition support, and additional support to cover books and travel related to conferences and seminars. Students must apply to those institutions that received the money. Money available: $2,000,000. Each student is eligible to receive up to $11,000 per year for undergraduate work, and $15,000 for graduate work.

Over $3 Billion In State Aid For Students

After checking out what money programs are available from the Federal government, your next task is to find out what's available at the state level. There are close to 400 programs worth almost $3 billion dollars in financial aid available through all 50 states. Just because you or your parents don't have the money to pay for college, that doesn't mean your dream of a college degree will never happen. Even if you do have the money, financial assistance from one of these programs could make things a little easier for all concerned.

Did you know that there are state money programs which:

- Pay for a singing degree?
- Give you money to study wildlife?
- Give you $2000 to go to vocational school?
- Pay for your nursing, teaching, or law degree?
- Give you $7,000 to study marine sciences?

The advantage of many of these programs is that most people don't even know they exist, so your competition will be less. Each state has different requirements for their various programs, so you may need to do some checking on what specific programs might fit your needs. Some programs are exclusive to residents of a particular state, whereas others have no limitations. In addition, some programs will award money to a student, and put no limitation on what school the student chooses to attend. In some cases, for teachers or health professionals a service requirement may exist which says that the student will practice in a particular state after graduation for a certain period of time.

What follows is a concise and comprehensive state-by-state listing of available programs. It will allow you to shop around for the best program to suit your individual needs. By remaining flexible and adjusting your educational goals to fit the program that most appeals to you, chances are you might find yourself pursuing the college education that you always thought was beyond your reach. Using this information might be an important first step in building a successful future for yourself.

I Wanna Write A Book

I Wanna Write A Book

Yes, you can make money writing a book. Sometimes you can even make a lot of money. I've made a bundle, and I even got a D in college English. So, if I can do it, there is no reason why you can't.

There are a number of ways you can make money writing a book:

- 1) You can get a grant from the government or a nonprofit organization
- 2) You can go directly to publishers
- 3) You can find a literary agent who will contact publishers for you
- 4) You can publish the book yourself

What Kind Of Money Is Available

The government money that's available is in the form of a grant. That's money you don't have to pay back, so of course, there's no better money than that. The money you might get from a publisher will usually be in the form of an advance towards future royalties. That means they will give you a certain amount of money when you sign the contract. Sometimes this money will be spread out in payments, some you could receive at the signing and some when you turn in the manuscript. This advance will be deducted from the royalties you earn when the book sells. If the book sells more than what the publisher gave you in the advance, you will receive more money. If the book sells less than the advance figure, the publisher loses.

Using the government or a publisher will usually mean you get money up front. Publishing yourself means you put up your own money. There is more risk, but it can also mean more reward. I've published about 12 books with New York publishers, but in the last five years I've been publishing myself. And to tell you the truth, I'm a lot happier now.

What You Need To Start

So many people believe that you have to have the entire book completed in order to get anyone interested in your project. Not so. All you usually need to have completed is a chapter or two along with an outline to get someone interested. I believe that it is important not to write the entire book, especially for the commercial market. If your idea is of any value, people are going to give you ideas on how to make it better. More importantly, they will tell you what they want to see in the book in order for them to publish it. And a bigger issue today is that no one has time to read a complete manuscript. They are more likely to review your book if you give them as little to do as possible. Most people want to see the basic concept of a book in progress, and nothing more.

Government Grants To Publish Your Books

This can be the most difficult way to get published mainly because so few books are published this way each year. Approximately 50,000 books are published annually by commercial publishers, while the government only publishes a few hundred titles.

However, the odds of getting a grant from the government are probably a lot better than getting money from private sources. You have about a one in eight chance of getting a government grant for your book, which as odds go, isn't bad at all. Many of the government programs have now stopped giving money directly to individuals and only give money to organizations who in turn pass it on to the individuals who have applied for it.

The point is to ignore what I just said, because if you want to change your life you have to try everything, and I mean everything!. Listed below are the sources of government grants for writers. When you call the organizations listed below, be thorough in your questioning of the person on the other end of the line — have they told you about every program available that might be able to give you some money? Also look in the Freelance Writers chapter to learn how to get a job writing for the government.

Going Directly To Publishers

This seems to be the most obvious method and it works for many people. The world of publishing is very big and there is probably an editor at some publishing house who would be interested in your idea. Life, like so many things, is a numbers game. So the more publishers you call, the more editors you talk with, and the more likely you are to find someone interested in your book idea.

Listed below are the sources that identify publishers in the United States. You can find these sources in most local libraries.

Publishing Your Own Book

With a successful book, you'll make a lot more money publishing it yourself. What profits a publishing company would have made will end up being yours to keep. But you'll need money up front to publish your own book. How much? That depends on the kind of book.

There are three major issues involved in publishing your own book: printing, distribution and marketing. The most expensive part of it can be printing. There are ways of getting the other two necessities for free, but you need to have books to sell first. The first book is the most expensive to produce. If you print 5,000 to 10,000 copies of a 300 page book you may be able to have them printed for about $2 each. But printing only 300 books can cost you $30 each. If you are going to sell your book for $20, you're in big trouble if you only print 300 copies. But if you print 5000 copies, it's going to cost you $10,000 before you make even one sale. A $10,000 advance from a publisher may start to look a lot better after adding up these numbers.

If you are publishing a self help book, you can consider other alternatives. You can make single copies of books at a local copy store, or your home computer and put it into a three ring binder. You can also charge more for the book in this kind of format. This could work well for books like: How To Fix Your Credit, How To Get Free Legal Advice, How To Travel Cheap, Make Money On The Internet, etc.

Distribution is an important element in anything you produce in this country. Getting your book in bookstores can be a major problem. You can find distributors who will do it for you and charge you a commission for doing so, or you can contact the bookstore chains directly. Either way it's hard, but not impossible. The bigger problem for a self publisher is that bookstores work on consignment. That means if they sell your book, you get the money. If they don't, you get the book back and get no money. And it may take three to six months to find out which of these two events actually occur.

When I first started publishing my own books, I decided that I couldn't afford to be in bookstores. If every bookstore purchased 10 copies of my book, I'd be out of business. If there are 5,000 book stores, that would mean 50,000 books at $2 each. I would have to put up $100,000 to cover printing costs and have no idea if and when I'd get anything back. So I decided on distributing my publications through mail order. If someone sent me the money, I would send them the book.

Nothing happens without successful marketing. You can have production and distribution all figured out but if you don't know how to sell your book, you're sunk. I use talk shows. I was on talk shows when I was writing for New York publishers, so I knew how the system works (you make hundreds of telephone calls and try to convince the producers you have something interesting to say). But this time when I got on the shows, instead of saying the book was in book stores, I'd say the book was only available by calling 1-800-UNCLE-SAM.

If you want to sell your own book, you'll find the way that works best for you.

Using A Literary Agent

This may be the most productive method for someone trying to get their first book published. Using a middle man, in this case a literary agent, can save you time in finding a publisher. Also, most big publishers would rather deal with an agent who knows the business rather than dealing directly with you. They don't want to spend time explaining contracts and educating you about the process. The agent performs this role for them.

Every literary agent has her area of expertise, collection of publishers, and editors within those companies, whom they are close to and know the kinds of books they are looking for. So instead of contacting hundreds of publishers and editors directly, you can now concentrate on just dozens of agents. To contact an agent, write a brief letter describing your work, list any prior publications, and include a self-addressed stamped envelope (SASE) to receive a reply. The cost? They will normally ask you for 10% to 15% of what they get for you from the publisher. Some particularly successful agents are in such demand for their time that they charge a flat fee just to read your book outline or sample

Listed below is a small collection of literary agents around the country who do not charge reading fees. For additional information on literary agents contact: Association of Authors' Representatives (AAR), 10 Astor Place, 3rd Floor, New York, NY 10003, 212-353-3709. The AAR will send you a list of 22 suggested questions to ask, the AAR's Canon of Ethics, and a listing of agents who are members for $5, plus postage and handling.

The Novel Process

702-588-8040

The Novel Process is very selective about the screenplays they read. The writer must have a finished play to submit a synopsis via e-mail. If they love the synopsis and know of a producer, director, and or studio who will read such work with the goal of securing an option for the writer, they will then ask you to send a hard copy of the play for them to read. An SASE will be required. Otherwise all business is done by fax or e-mail.

Writers Guild of America is a labor union representing professional writers in motion pictures, television, and radio. Membership can be acquired only through the sale of literary material or employment for writing services in one of these areas. There is an initiation fee of $1,500 for new members, basic dues of $100 paid in quarterly installments of $25, and an assessment of 1-1½ on earnings from the sale of material or from employment as a writer in motion pictures, television, or radio. The Guild also provides a registration service for literary material. Writers are advised to register their material before showing it to a producer or agent.

I Wanna Travel

I Wanna Travel

If your dream is to become an international jet setter, don't let a little problem like money stand in your way. The Federal government has over 60 programs devoted to travel within the U.S. and abroad, spending over 65 million dollars a year to send you packing. They will even pay to have foreign relatives come and study here. No matter if you are 16 or 65, there is something in these programs for everyone.

You can be like:

- Cowboy artists from the Western Folklife Center of Elko, NV who shared their lore at a festival in Melbourne, Australia with a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.
- Nancy Friese of Cranston, RI who went to Japan for six months to explore relationships between natural and man-made environments in Japanese landscape gardens through the United States/Japan Artist Exchange Program at the Japan/US Friendship Commission.
- Carl A. Chase, a steel drum maker and tuner from Brooksville, MA who was able to visit Trinidad and Tobago for a residency with one of the islands' foremost steel drum makers through the Travel Grants Program at the National Endowment for the Arts.
- William Ulfelder who spent a year studying the rain forest in Costa Rica as a Fulbright Scholar.
- A police officer from Los Angeles who helped in the creation of D.A.R.E. (Drug Awareness Resistance Education) in several Latin American countries through the U. S. Thematic Programs.
- Piano/violin duo Susan Keith and Laura Kobayashi who toured Latin America and the Caribbean together as Artistic Ambassadors for the U.S. Information Agency.
- Tamara Astor from Northfield, IL who spent a year teaching grades 1-3 in London, England through the Fulbright Teacher Exchange Program at the U.S. Information Agency.
- Central Washington University who sent thirteen K-12 teachers from the state of Washington to Chile for a four-week seminar on the country through the Fulbright-Hays Group Projects Abroad through the U.S. Department of Education.
- Columbia University in New York City acting as the host of seven different humanities seminars for college teachers with grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities.
- Maria Marotti from Santa Barbara, CA who was awarded a $3,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities to study Italian feminism.

Washington, DC 20585 Fax: 202-586-0019

The objective of this program is to give juniors and seniors the opportunity to participate in hands-on research at the cutting edge of science at the Department of Energy Laboratories, and to provide training and experience in the operation of sophisticated state-of-the-art equipment and instruments. College juniors and seniors who are majoring in an energy-related field can spend a semester using some of the Federal government's equipment and instruments at many of the Department of Energy's labs. The energy research must be in an area of the laboratory's ongoing research. Students receive a weekly stipend of $225, complimentary housing or a housing allowance, and a round-trip ticket to the lab. The total amount of money available is $2,500,000. Applications may be obtained by writing to Science and Engineering Research Semester, Office of Science and Technology (ST-50), Room 3F-061, U.S. Department of Energy, 1000 Independence Avenue, SW, Washington, DC 20585.

This hotline is staffed by trade specialists who can provide information on seminars and conferences, overseas buyers and representatives, overseas events, export financing, technical assistance, and export counseling. They also have access to the National Trade Data Bank.

They offer trade missions to help you find local agents, representatives, distributors, or direct sales. Their Trade Shows promote U.S. products with high export potential. The Agent/Distributor Service will locate, screen, and assess agents, distributors, representatives, and other foreign partners for your business. Matchmaker Trade Delegations prescreen prospects interested in your product and assist with meetings. If you cannot afford the cost of traveling overseas, the Trade Information Center can refer you to several programs which offer loans to help you start exporting. You can also receive assistance from your own state's Department of Economic Development. Contact the office listed above for more information on exporting in general, and for more specific information on your product or service.

The Words "Poor and Starving" Don't Have To Apply To Artists Any Longer!

National Endowment for the Arts Grants to Organizations

The National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) is an independent agency of the Federal government that was created to encourage and support American art and artists who are actively creating art in various mediums. The Endowment does this by awarding grants to nonprofit arts organizations in all fields, as well as through its own leadership activities. The agency does not direct the creative activities of individual artists or arts organizations but acts as a catalyst and as a partner with others who support the arts. The NEA helps to enhance the quality of life for Americans through a breathtaking array of cultural activity: from the best in theaters and touring dance companies to folk festivals and music concerts; from museums and orchestras to arts programs in our nation's schools that reach millions of students each year who might otherwise lack exposure to the arts.

There are four different themes in which specific projects are considered. Organizations submit one application to one of the four categories that best conveys the purpose of your project. Congressional legislation has eliminated fellowships to individuals. Listed below are the four different themes.

 Heritage and Preservation

Heritage and Preservation

National Endowment For The Arts

1100 Pennsylvania Ave., NW

Washington, DC 20506

202-682-5428

Fax: 202-682-5512

<http://arts.endow.gov>

The theme of Heritage and Preservation is for projects which honor, assist and make visible those arts rooted in and reflective of the many traditions that make up our nation and for the preservation of our most significant artistic accomplishments and works of art.

Projects may include but are not limited to: 1) documentation and/or presentation to the public of artists and art forms that reflect our diverse cultural traditions and heritage; 2) projects that pass on to future generations the repertoire, technique, aesthetic principles and oral traditions through apprenticeships or other forms of instructions; 3) documentation and/or preservation of significant artistic works, styles, techniques, and aesthetic cultural perspectives; 4) technical assistance to traditional folk artists; 5) publications that document and/or disseminate artistic works models of preservation, or other materials aimed at strengthening our artistic heritage; 6) conservation treatment of highly significant works of art, artifacts, and collections wholly owned by the applicant; and 7) innovative uses of modern technology to preserve and strengthen our artistic heritage.

Recent grants recipients include:

- support for projects to restore New Mexico's historic adobe churches
- preservation and documentation of Alabama's rich musical traditions, including bluegrass, spirituals, and gospel
- support for a project to foster a South Dakota mentor program helping American Indian youth learn their ancestors' artistic skills
- support for a project to conserve a key portrait by Rembrandt Peale housed in Ohio

Federal Arts Programs

- a project to resurrect old musicals that would otherwise be lost to future generations and preserve archival "American Talkers" tapes capturing legendary performances by Woody Guthrie and Jelly Roll Morton
- a project to support the 5th annual "American Roots" Fourth of July concert and radio broadcast on the Washington Monument grounds

Literature Fellowships: Literature Fellowships are available to published poets of exceptional talent and published translators of literature for projects that involve the specific translation of poetry (including verse drama) from other languages into English. The Guidelines will be available on the Internet later this year. The first step is to select a theme that best supports the purpose of your project and submit an application (be sure to submit the "intent to apply" card from the guideline book by the deadline). Applications will be reviewed first by the NEA staff in your disciplines/field for eligibility and completeness, then there will be an expert review and a theme panel review. The NEA Chairman makes the final decision based on the National Council on the Arts recommendations. Once all reviews have taken place, you will be notified of a grant award or application rejection.

* Creation and Presentation

Grants are available to organizations for the creation of new work and the presentation of new and existing works of any culture, period, or discipline. Projects might provide the resources time and space for artists to create a specific work or body of work, or they might present art from any era or in any discipline to audiences through a diverse range of activities in formal or informal settings.

Projects may include: 1) creation/development of specific work(s), 2) commissions, 3) residencies, 4) rehearsals, 5) workshops, 6) performances, 7) exhibitions, 8) festivals, 9) literary publishing, 10) design charrettes, 10) touring, 11) production and/or broadcast of film, video, and audio works.

The first step is to select a theme that best supports the purpose of your project and submit an application (be sure to submit the "intent to apply" card from the guideline book by the deadline). Applications will be reviewed first by the NEA staff in your disciplines/field for eligibility and completeness, then there will be an expert review and a theme panel review. * Education and Access

Education and Access

Grants are available to organizations for projects which broaden and deepen educational experiences for people of all ages or which reach audiences that have not been reached before or expand the awareness and appreciation of art forms to which exposure has been limited or nonexistent. Education in the arts includes pre-K through grade 12 and postsecondary programs, career development, teacher training, master apprentice relationships, culturally specific traditions of learning and lifelong learning projects. Access entails a deliberate effort to reach audiences that have not been reached before or that have been limited in their opportunities.

Projects may include: 1) touring performances, exhibitions, and other activities that are designed to reach audiences which ordinarily would not have the opportunity to participate in such events; 2) curriculum-based arts instruction in grades pre-K through 12 that provides substantive and sequential learning in the arts. Such projects should involve the combined efforts of arts organizations, artists and schools; 3) instruction offered by arts organizations or artists that provides sequential learning in the arts over an extended period of time; 4) activities which extend the work of older, disabled and/or ethnically diverse artists to the general public; and 5) outreach projects which engage diverse communities in partnerships.

Recent grant recipients include:

- help for the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra to expand a model collaboration among public elementary and middle schools, families, and the community which advances overall learning through music and the arts
- the American Library Association will receive support for "Writers Live at the Library" with prominent authors teaching workshops in Southeast communities
- Educational Broadcasting Corporation will receive assistance to continue its renowned "Great Performances," "Dance in America," and "American Masters" series
- funds will support ARTS WORK, a job training partnership of businesses, Very Special Arts New Mexico, and schools preparing students with disabilities for arts-related jobs
- Eugene Ballet Company will receive funds to develop an educational outreach ensemble

The first step is to select a theme that best supports the purpose of your project and submit an application (be sure to submit the "intent to apply" card from the guideline book by the deadline). Applications will be reviewed first by the NEA staff in your disciplines/field for eligibility and completeness, then there will be an expert review and a theme panel review. The Endowment offers grants for projects which focus on organizational planning, strengthening capacity internally or with an arts field, sustaining the arts, building partnerships, and developing new resources. Projects may focus on strategies for building partnerships and resources among a group of organizations linked by geography, programming or mission.

Projects may include: 1) technical assistance to help arts organizations develop long range plans, improve the skills of staff or otherwise strengthen their capabilities or those of their field; 2) projects to enhance earning income through the creation or development of products or services; 3) efforts to identify and target potential audiences and to streamline box office operations; 4) community planning, possibly spearheaded by a local arts agency, to examine new ways of building the audience for the arts; 5) development, by a national service or other appropriate organization of a model computer program for ticket sales, scheduling, or marketing purposes; and 6) development of a consortium or other alliance of organizations to share expertise and resources.

The first step is to select a theme that best supports the purpose of your project and submit an application (be sure to submit the "intent to apply" card from the guideline book by the deadline). Applications will be reviewed first by the NEA staff in your disciplines/field for eligibility and completeness, then there will be an expert review and a theme panel review. Attention Artists!

Over $180,000,000 Available From State Governments

How do most struggling artists perfect their craft? By working alongside masters in their specific craft, and believe it or not, there are money programs administered on the state level to help you do just that. If you are working with an arts group, there are state grants to assist you in organizing special productions, grants that will allow you the resources to travel around the state to represent your art organization, or grants that would allow you to hire people with special capabilities to enhance your productions.

Here's just a sampling of what some states can provide:

- $2,000 to study music, dance, or storytelling (Alaska)
- $2,500 for choreographers (California)
- Money for architects to help school children (Georgia)
- $5,000 to work with a master artist in their studio (Idaho)
- $10,000 for creative writers (Idaho)
- $10,000 for photographers (Illinois)
- $1,000 for poets (Iowa)
- $2,000 for art teachers to attend a workshop (Maine)
- $150 a day for artists who can spend two days a week at a local school (Massachusetts)
- $10,000 to put on a program of poetry readings (Nebraska)
- $8,000 for dancers (North Carolina)
- $500 for writers to attend a workshop (North Carolina)
- $10,000 for art critics (North Dakota)
- $2,000 to put on an arts festival (Oklahoma)
- $5,000 for printmakers (Texas)
- $500 to writers on a first-come first-served basis (Virginia)

Eligibility Requirements:

Almost every state requires that you be a state resident to receive money through these programs. The exceptions to this rule are often found in those programs where the state will pay an artist from another state to come to work with school children within their state. Eligibility requirements for all programs vary greatly. Some states, like Pennsylvania, require that you have lived in the state for two years and have three years of professional experience. States like Rhode Island require that you are at least 18 years of age and have resided in the state for at least one year. With residency requirements being as minimal as one year, it may be worth looking for a state that has some specific programs that interest you, and to establish residency there.

What Are Your Chances?

Remember, you have to play to win, and your chances of winning and receiving these funds will be slightly different for each of the programs listed. For instance, Virginia has a program that gives out money on a first-come first-served basis. So, if your application is the first received, your chances of success are 100 percent. Vermont, on the other hand, has one of the more competitive programs that awards funds to only approximately 5% of their applicants. Whatever your chances, remember that each year the money has to be awarded to someone, and your chances will be just plain zero if you don't apply!

How To Work With Arts Organizations

A lot of the state money programs are awarded to art organizations. Therefore, if you have trouble getting money as an individual it may be worth your time to find an art organization to collaborate with or perhaps become your own art organization. Your state arts council can help you locate organizations that may be willing (and even eager) to work with you in order to be awarded this grant money. Talk to your local community college, community group, or even your church about joining together to win funding. You might make an arrangement where you share the proceeds of the program if you win, and both you and the community group lose nothing if your efforts are unsuccessful.

Some of the money given to organizations requires matching grants in order to receive the funding. A matching grant requires that the recipient raise funds in some proportion to the amount awarded. This may not be as difficult as it sounds because oftentimes, in-kind goods and services may be used as matching grants. An in-kind contribution of goods is an offering of any tangible, useable item that the organization would have otherwise had to purchase. An in-kind contribution of a service includes intangible contributions such as donations of volunteer time, or the use of facilities or equipment.

I Wanna Be a Freelancer

The Joys of Freelancing: Starting a Business Without Money

More and more people are realizing that there are many benefits to freelancing. In fact, every day more data show that the demand for freelancing is growing. Some analysts estimate that 25% of the nation's workforce is now working on a freelance basis, which includes part time, temporary, and contractual workers⁽¹⁾. In the last five years, the number of temporary agencies that supply these kinds of workers increased from 3,500 to 7,000⁽²⁾. Manpower, one of these temporary agencies, now employs more than General Motors or IBM⁽³⁾. Other experts predict that less than 50% of the workforce will be in standard full time jobs by the year 2000⁽³⁾.

We've heard the terms in recent years: downsizing, rightsizing, restructuring, streamlining, reinventing, and now outsourcing.

All this boils down to more and more companies becoming less and less interested in providing for the long term wellbeing of its employees. It's a trend that's likely to continue at an even greater pace. In 1994, corporations experienced record profits, but the number of jobs that were cut was equal to the number they eliminated at the height of the last recession. So, even in good times most corporations are not taking care of employees⁽⁴⁾.

Companies want to be lean and mean. They want to be flexible and don't want to take on the responsibility and financial burden of full time employees. This may be bad for employees, but it's great for the world of freelancing. And don't think of freelancing as losing benefits: think of it as an exchange of benefits. Your personal freedom and control over your life are worth more than your health and retirement benefits and the security of your job, all of which are disappearing fast anyway. The new status symbol of the 90's won't be doing your own thing, it will be controlling your own time.⁽⁵⁾

Here are some advantages to being a freelancer:

- You can be still looking for a full time job while you are pretending to look for freelancing or consulting work.
- You can give yourself a title while you are out of work, such as an independent consultant, freelance wordprocessor, etc.
- You can take more tax deductions around the home and at play, such as the part of your house and car you use for business. Even some of your meals and entertainment expenses may fall into this category.
- You can have more control over your hours, take vacations when you want, or only work certain days.
- It's ideal for a household member that is only interested in a part time job while staying at home with the kids. A freelance artist can easily work 20 hours a week at home and still be with the children.

And here are some advantages from the employer's eyes. You may even want to include some of these points in your sales letter:

- They don't have to commit to you forever, and then worry about firing you when they want to downsize.
- They don't have to pay you benefits, overhead, supplies, etc.

How To Become a Freelancer With the Government

- They can show their bosses that they are getting more work done with less people because freelancers are not counted as employees, and are often paid from a different budget than that of full time employees.
- They can get a project done and not worry about keeping those people busy once the project is completed.
- They can get more value for their money by hiring more qualified people for a shorter period of time.
- They have less liability from the potential harmful effects of employee protection laws like Equal Employment Opportunity Laws.

What Do You Need To Be A Freelancer?

The only thing you really need is a customer. And this is basically true for any business. If you have a customer or a client, you're in business. The tools that will make getting a customer easier are a phone, a desk, and business cards. And the next level of tools you will find helpful are a resume, a brochure, or samples of your work. If you think you need a lot of expensive equipment you may want to rethink being a freelancer. The beauty of freelancing is that you can start a business without any money. All your money should be invested in getting business, not in equipment. Even if you think you need to buy a lot of equipment to do the work you want to do, for heaven's sake don't go out and buy it. Nothing can put you out of business faster than having a lot of equipment around that is not being used because you don't have a lot of business. Rent the equipment only when you need it, or use someone else's equipment at night. Believe me, all your resources should be spent in getting customers. Once you have a steady flow of customers, then you should look into buying your own equipment. Sure it would be nice to have all the fancy equipment you need, right in your house, but in the beginning that can be a ticket to failure. The most important part of being a successful freelancer is staying in business long enough to reap the rewards of all the seeding that you are planting in your "garden of opportunity." What you plant today will come back to you next year, and what you plant next year will come back to you the year after. The trick is to be around a few years from now so that you can enjoy the benefits of what you planted today. Buying all the equipment you need will just run you out of money faster, so that you will have less of a chance of being around and in business next year. It's a game of beat the clock. You have to figure out how to get all the customers you need before you run out of money.

How To Get Free Legal, Marketing, and Tax Advice

What stops many people from starting their own freelancing career is misinformation. Here's the kind of thinking that can go through your head when you think about freelancing. "Gee. I'm going to start a business at home. If something goes wrong, somebody will sue me and I'll lose my house. I wonder if incorporating as a business will protect me?" Now that the "what ifs" got you, you're smart enough to know that this sounds like a legal question and you'd better talk to an attorney. So you call a friend of a friend who is an attorney and they tell you it will cost you $500 to $1000 to help you solve this problem. You don't have an extra $500 to $1000, so you figure you will put off starting your new career until you get the extra money. You don't have to do that. You can get free legal advice on this or any other subject if you just contact one of the local Small Business Development Centers that are located in almost every city in the country. (See the chapter entitled "I Wanna Start My Own Business" for a state-by-state listing for Small Business Development Centers.)

These centers will sit down with you for free and help you figure out any kind of legal, management, financial, or even tax problem you are having in trying to start and develop a business. They will even help you get the business you need. They can help you identify potential clients and will work with you to devise a plan for getting development money. You just can't beat that.

The Government Will Buy Your Freelancing Services

The government buys more freelancing services than anyone else in the world. They buy typing services, legal services, accounting services, and landscaping services, to name just a few. One year the government even spent $30,000 for the services of a freelance priest. And you don't have to be living in Washington, DC to get the work. Only about 20% of all government business is done in Washington, DC. The rest is done all over the country and all over the world.

Freelancing can be your first step to a multimillion dollar business. The time is right and you can do it without any money of your own.

How To Become a Freelancer With The Government

If you are between jobs or just thinking about quitting the one you have and want something to tide you over until you get your next one, you should seriously think about freelancing for the Federal government.

The Interior Department hires ecologists and geologists. The Justice Department hires business consultants. The Department of Energy hires conservation consultants. Here's a sample listing of the kinds of projects freelance consultants do for the Federal government:

Types of Government Freelancing

Practically every major government agency hires freelance consultants to work on both small and large projects — which might be exactly what you need until you land a full time job down the road.

The feds hire all kinds of professionals to perform consulting work, from accountants and business specialists, to computer experts, social scientists, and security and surveillance consultants. The offices listed below, called Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization, specialize in helping individuals and small businesses get involved in contracting with their agency.

Subcontracting

Not only do the feds themselves hire consultants, so do the large prime contractors who sell their products and services to the government. By law, any large company that receives contracts worth $500,000 or more from the Federal government must make an effort to subcontract some of that work to small businesses. So, for example, if a company gets a large computer consulting contract with the Defense Department, they have to make an effort to hire some freelance computer consultants to work on that contract. And that could be you.

How to Find Subcontracting Work

All of the federal procurement offices or Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (SBDU) (see list below) can provide you with information regarding subcontracting. Many of the departments' prime contracts require that the prime contractor maximize small business subcontracting opportunities. The SBDU offices can show you the way to get this work.

Each of the large federal agencies listed below, except the Department of Education, maintain directories of large contractors who are looking to do work with the feds in your area of expertise. And since the companies listed in these directories, for the most part, have just landed big government contracts, they might very well be looking to take on more full-time employees to help fulfill those contracts. A great lead on new job openings that probably won't be listed in the Sunday newspaper!

Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization

Note: Offices designated as Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (OSDBUs) provide procurement assistance to small, minority, 8(a) and women-owned businesses. Their primary function is to ensure that small and disadvantaged businesses receive their fair share of U.S. Government contracts. "OSDBUs" are the contacts for their respective agencies and are excellent sources of information.

More Help Selling Your Services

Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization Office
Cameron Station, Room 4B110
Defense Logistics Agency
Alexandria, VA 22304

703-274-6471

Need some help marketing your product or service to the government? The Procurement Assistance Offices are attuned to the federal procurement process, and can help you draw up a sensible business plan that will be successful. They can match the product or service you are selling with the appropriate agency, and then help you market your wares effectively. Several programs even have online bid matching services. They can obtain specifications, get your name on solicitation mailing lists, and more. These offices are partially funded by the Department of Defense to assist businesses with Defense Procurement. To find out where these centers are located, see the following state-by-state listing, or contact the office listed above.

How Artists, Designers, and Photographers Can Get Freelance Government Contracts

The Federal government spends millions of dollars each year for the services of artists, graphic designers, illustrators, painters, calligraphers, photographers, computer graphics specialists, and other art-related specialists. Because the government is involved, many artists might shy away from finding out how they can get in on these worthwhile opportunities. The following listing is put together to help you get in contact — often in just one phone call — with the people who hire artists like yourself. Don't forget to check the general section on freelancing, as well as checking out state contracts.

It's difficult to get a clear estimate of the amount of government contracts that go to artists. If you count prime contracts as well as subcontracts, the figure could be as high as $20 to $30 million dollars. Here are what some of the major agencies spend each year:

Spending By Major Agencies On Artists

National Science Foundation	$187,500
Labor	$400,000
Postal Service	$378,000
U. S. Geological Survey	$100,000
Food and Drug Administration	$200,000
Federal Emergency Management Agency	$25,000
U. S. Customs Service	$40,000
National Park Service	$1,900,000

Here are some examples of artists who have landed art contracts with the government:

Artists Who Received Government Contracts

Jacob Lawrence received $95,000 to create a ceramic tile wall mosaic to be placed in the Joseph P. Addabbo Federal Building in Queens, NY. GSA, 1989.

Linda Sherman Design, Inc., of Gaithersburg, MD, received $432,000 to provide graphic art and editorial support services to NASA in 1990.

Manuel Neri received $100,000 to create a marble sculpture entitled "Ventana al Pacifico" that was placed outside the Gus J. Solomon Courthouse in Portland, Oregon. GSA, 1989.

Gerald Farrar and Associates, Inc., of Tulsa, OK, received $3,540 to provide graphic art services to the Department of Energy in 1991.

Lehman-Scaffa Photo and Art of Silver Spring, MD, received $12,000 to provide graphic arts services to the National Science Foundation, including viewgraphs, slides, charts, maps, mechanical and conceptual drawings, page layouts, publication covers, signs, typesetting, posters, prints, negatives, and exhibit materials.

Hugh Moore and Associates of Alexandria, VA, received $35,000 from the National Science Foundation to provide graphic art support services, including designing educational pieces for a national science program.

Freelance Government Contracts for Artists

Inkwell, Inc., of Washington, D.C., received $10,000 from the USDA to provide graphic art support services.

Douglass Harding Group of Washington, D.C., received $32,000 from the USDA to provide graphic art support services in 1990.

Thomas Baldwin, Inc., of Alexandria, VA, received $138,000 from the Forest Service to design the interior of the Service's National Visitors Center.

Standsbury Ronsaville Wood Inc., of Annapolis, MD, landed a contract from the National Park Service worth $16,000 to provide graphic design services, including illustrations, layout, exhibit production, publication design, and more in 1991.

Nelson/Hendrickson of Purcellville, VA, landed a contract from the National Park Service worth $72,948 to provide production-ready wayside exhibit plan packages.

Maria Alquilar received $19,000 to create a high fired clay sculpture for the General Services Administration that was placed in the Main Border Station in San Luis, AZ.

Caleb Bach received $18,000 to produce two paintings entitled "The Effects of Good and Bad Government" that were placed in the Seattle Courthouse.

Robert Brooks received $4,000 to create a photographic mural that was placed in the U.S. Border Station in Fort Kent, ME. GSA, 1984.

Houston Conwill received $49,000 to create a bronze sculpture on a granite platform that was placed in the Joseph P. Addabbo Federal Building in Queens, NY.

The painter, Blue Sky, received $12,600 to create an oil painting entitled "Moonlight on the Great Pee Dee" which was placed in the J.M. McMillan Federal Building in Florence, SC. GSA, 1978.

Frank Smith received $20,000 to create a ceramic tile wall mural for the Joseph P. Addabbo Federal Building in Queens, NY. GSA, 1989.

Another Color, Inc., received $422,000 to provide graphic art and editorial support services to NASA in 1990.

Creative Service, Inc., received $200,000 to provide graphic art and editorial support services to NASA in 1990.

We've put together an agency-by-agency listing of the people who will look at your work, get it reviewed, and put your name on their vendors list so you can get in on these contracting opportunities and others in the future. In many cases we've also included the kinds of projects these agencies most often hire freelancers to work on, from brochures and book design to exhibits and promotional posters.

When To Apply

Keep in mind that because new contracts are awarded at the beginning of the government's fiscal year in October, you should make sure that an agency you're interested in working for has seen your portfolio by late spring or early summer — this will give them enough time to consider you and the services that you offer for the current fiscal year. Otherwise you may have to wait an entire year before you get any work, especially the larger contracts.

Find Out Past Winning Contracts

Because many art contracts are awarded on a competitive bid basis, you should be aware of successful bids in the past before you submit a bid of your own. Through a Freedom of Information Act Request from the agency in question, you can get copies of winning bids on art contracts from previous years. Remember, the competition on these contracts is very high, but most artists don't know how to use the Freedom of Information Act to give them the edge. Do some quick research into these winning contracts to find out what made them win the competitive bid — it might involve more than just having the lowest price on services rendered.

Small Contracts

For smaller contracts valued under $25,000, many agencies award Blanket Purchase Agreements (BPAs) to artists they like to work with. Getting a BPA means that the agency agrees to offer you work up to a certain value over the period of the fiscal year, often up to $25,000. For larger jobs, the agency may send out project announcements to three artists on their bidder's list and ask for bid proposals. Each agency conducts the bidding procedure slightly differently and you should contact a particular agency to find out how they operate.

For even small jobs, such as those for $2,500 or less, an agency may simply pull the name of an artist out of their Rolodex and call them for a quote on a job. If they think the price is in line with what they want to spend, they'll simply award the job to that one artist. Many jobs are awarded on this basis. Obviously, it pays to be persistent and to keep your name in front of the individual that has a say in awarding contracts.

Who To Contact For Contracts

 Agriculture Department

James Schleyer

Design Division

Room 516A

U.S. Dept. of Agriculture

Washington, DC 20250

202-720-4337

Each year the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) contracts out about 40% to 60% of its design work to freelance artists. Contracts are awarded to freelancers through the procurement office, which maintains a list of approved artists that receive notification of requests for bids when a contract needs fulfilling. To get on this contracting list, artists must have their portfolios reviewed and approved. To set up an appointment to have your portfolio reviewed, contact James Schleyer, chief of the Design Division.

 Commerce Department

Office of Administrative Operations

Visual and Electronic Communications Division

Design and Graphics, Room 2864

U.S. Department of Commerce

Washington, DC 20230

202-482-3061

The U.S. Department of Commerce contracts out about 20% of their graphics and design work to freelancers. This work often includes publication design, poster design, exhibits, presentation charts, framing and mounting, and much more. If you're interested in being considered for some of this work, contact the Graphics Branch and arrange for a portfolio review. If they can use the kind of work you do, they may decide to sign you to a Blanket Purchase Agreement where you'll receive up to a certain dollar amount of work throughout the year. This division awards about 40 BPAs each year.

 Customs Service

U.S. Customs Service

1301 Constitution Ave., NW

Graphics Department

Washington, DC 20229

202-927-0314

The Customs Service hires artists on a freelance basis to work on some of their projects that involve graphics, such as 30 x 40 presentation boards, color graphics, exhibits, and the like. To be considered for this work, you'll need to get your portfolio reviewed before June/July when new contracts are awarded for the new fiscal year. If they're interested in using you, they may sign you to a blanket purchase agreement where you'll be awarded projects up to a certain total dollar amount over the year. The U.S. Customs Service spends between $30,000 and $40,000 per year on freelance graphic art.

 Drug Enforcement Agency

Chief, Contracting and Procurement Unit

Washington, DC 20537

202-633-2894

From time to time the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) contracts for graphics support for their different programs, such as education and interdiction. If you're interested in doing freelance graphics work for the DEA, you'll need to submit an SF-129 to this office. Once you're on file, if they're interested in using your talents, they'll contact you when an appropriate project comes up and ask you to submit a bid.

 Energy Department

William Talbot

U.S. Department of Energy
1000 Independence Ave., SW
Washington, DC 20585

202-586-2732

This office produces the technical graphics support for the Department of Energy (DoE), and they hire the services of design firms that can produce technical computer graphics. If your computer graphics company is interested in competing on DoE contracts, you'll need to submit a Solicitation Mailing List Application (SF-129), which is available by contacting this office. This form asks you to provide basic background on your company, including size, computer capabilities, and experience. Once selected, graphics companies are kept on list, and when a job comes up, DoE will contact three or four firms and ask them to submit bids on the contract.

Bob Stiefel

Printing Operations
1000 Independence Ave., SW
GE-116

Washington, DC 20585

202-586-6035

This graphics section of the Department of Energy (DoE) does exhibit design and construction and print media production. Once a year in March and April, design contractors used over the previous year are reviewed. Interviews with new design artists interested in doing print media work with DoE are then scheduled. This interview process includes a portfolio review. If selected as a contractor, designers are held under Blanket Purchasing Agreements and are called in on an irregular basis for bid sessions during which they bid against each other on the available projects. Contact the department if you're interested in having your portfolio reviewed during March and April.

 Environmental Protection Agency

James Ingram, Visual Information Specialist
Editorial Services Division
U.S. Environmental Protection Agency
401 M St., SW
MS 1704

Washington, DC 20460

202-260-4359

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) hires the services of graphic artists to do all kinds of projects, including presentation exhibits, view graphs, slide shows, publication designs, cover illustrations, photography, and much more. To be considered for this work, you'll need to arrange with Mr. Ingram for an interview where your portfolio will be reviewed. EPA hires freelance artists three different ways. For small jobs with a quick turn-around, artists are used on a on call basis, where EPA will call you up with a job they think you can do and ask for a price. If they like the price, you get the job. They also hold a certain number of artists under Blanket Purchasing Agreements, where you get work during the year adding up to a certain total amount of the agreement. For large projects, EPA will choose three artists on their vendors list and send out requests for proposals. The lowest bid gets the job.

 Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA)

Susan Rappa

Graphics Department, Room 315

Freelance Government Contracts for Artists

Federal Emergency Management Agency
Washington, DC 20472

202-646-3475

Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) puts about ten graphic artists and designers under contract per year. If you're interested in showing your work to FEMA, contact the department and arrange to go in for a portfolio review. If they're interested in using your services, you may be recommended for a Blanket Purchase Agreement where you'll be asked to submit bids on projects as they come up, with the lowest bid getting the job. FEMA spends about $25,000 per year on freelance art services.

 Fish and Wildlife Service

Tom Nebel

U.S. Dept. of the Interior
Fish and Wildlife Service
1849 C St., NW, Room 3544
Washington, DC 20240

202-208-4111

The Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) contracts out all kinds of graphic design services, from illustration and photography to calligraphy and book design. To be considered for these contracting opportunities you'll need to contact this office and set up a portfolio review. If you live in an area of the country other than the Washington, D.C., area, you should contact the Fish and Wildlife Service field office nearest you. If they like your work and want to use you, FWS will notify you when projects matching your capabilities arise, and you'll be asked to make bids on them. On smaller projects, they may simply call you up and ask for a price and to determine whether you can get the project done in the allotted time.

 Food and Drug Administration

Jesse Nichols

Office of Communications
Food and Drug Administration
5600 Fishers Ln., HFI-40
Room 15A-19
Rockville, MD 20857

301-443-3210

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) contracts graphic artists and designers to work on editorial illustrations, exhibit design, posters, photographic projects, and much more. If you're interested in being considered for this work, contact this office and arrange for a portfolio review. If they'd like to use your talents, they may decide to sign you to a Blanket Purchase Agreement where you'll receive up to a certain dollar amount of work throughout the year by bidding on individual projects as they arise. This office at FDA signs about 10 artists each year under freelance contract.

 General Services Administration

Tim Hinton or Arlethia McGhee

Office of Graphic Design
U.S. General Services Administration
18th and F Sts., NW
Washington, DC 20405

202-501-0742

The General Services Administration (GSA) hires artists to do all kinds of work for them on a freelance basis, including publications, exhibits, slide shows, and audio-visual productions. To be considered for work with GSA, an artist needs to contact GSA and set up an appointment to have his or her portfolio reviewed. Once reviewed, artists are classified according to their strengths and the type of publications that are appropriate for their type of work. The artists are then ranked according to the quality and style of their work. When a job needs to be contracted, GSA will contact three or four artists from their lists and ask them to submit bids. Bids are chosen based on both quality and price. Contact the department to set up a portfolio review.

Art-in-Architecture Program (PGA)
General Services Administration
Washington, DC 20405

202-501-4228

By law, the Federal government must spend 0.5% of the cost of constructing or purchasing new buildings or completing major repairs and alterations of existing buildings on artwork. Artwork can include sculptures, murals, photographs, paintings, ceramic tile displays. Artwork can range from a couple of thousand dollars in cost to $100,000 or more, depending on the size of the project. To have your work considered for upcoming projects, you'll need to receive a program application from this office, then submit it along with 35mm slides of your work created within the last three years. You'll also need to include a current resume. Working with national, state, and local art agencies, GSA then nominates and selects artists to work on these projects.

 Immigration and Naturalization Service

Glenn Brown, Printing Officer
Immigration and Naturalization Service
425 I St., NW, Room 2115
Washington, DC 20536

202-514-3210

Each year, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) retains three graphic artists or companies on a bidders list who are contacted whenever a project comes up that the INS cannot do themselves. Each artist is asked to submit a price on the job and the lowest gets the project. Each August, Mr. Rutter reviews the portfolios of any new artists interested in being placed on the bidders list. The three artists chosen are the ones who can provide the necessary quality of work for the lowest amount of money. The kind of work that INS contracts out often includes one-, two-, and multi-color bar and pie charts for presentations, along with calligraphy for handlettered certificates. Contact the department in July or August to arrange for a portfolio review.

 Internal Revenue Service

Buddy Kirk
Internal Revenue Service
111 Constitution Ave., NW
Room 1137
Washington, DC 20224

202-622-7330

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) hires freelance artists to do exhibits, posters, computer graphics, illustrations, charts, brochures, flip charts, flyers, and much more. To be put on the vendors list and qualify to submit bids on projects, you'll need to have your portfolio reviewed by the IRS design group. If they are interested in your work and feel that they can use your special skills, you'll be placed on the list of vendors and receive notice when any relevant projects arise. This IRS design group spends about $650,000 annually on contracts with various artists.

 Labor Department

Lionel White

Division of Audio-Visual Communication

Washington, DC 20210

202-219-7820

The Labor Department hires outside art contractors to do all kinds of projects, including cover to cover publications, name cards, graphic panels for exhibits, newsletters, editorial illustrations, book cover designs, stationery, and much more. If you're interested in being considered for these design contracting opportunities, contact this office and request that your name be placed on the mailing list of contract proposals that are mailed out each spring. Upon receiving the proposals, fill it out and return it, being sure to include background on your expertise, examples of technical experience, and price scale. A panel of experts will review the submitted portfolios and price proposals and choose the top applicants to work under Blanket Purchase Orders valued up to $25,000 annually. The Labor Department spends between $350,000 to $500,000 each year on freelance graphic art.

 National Archives

Serene Werblood

NEPP

Washington, DC 20408

202-501-6056

The graphics division of the publications office hires freelance graphics artists to work on such projects as lobby posters, books, marketing brochures, direct mail, and exhibit catalogs. Every year, this office keeps two or three freelance designers under contract with Blanket Purchasing Agreements. For larger jobs, they send out requests for bids to artists on their vendor list. To be considered for contracting work with the publication division of the Archives, you'll need to contact this office and arrange to have your portfolio reviewed. If they like your work and think they can use you, you'll be put on their list of bidders. New contracts begin in October, so they like to have their prospective freelancers chosen by July/August.

 National Institutes of Health

Ron Winterowd

900 Rockville Pike

Mail Stop 1016

Bldg. 10, Room B-2L316

Bethesda, MD 20892

301-496-2868

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) contracts out about 50-70% of their art and photographic work, which includes publication design, illustration, exhibit fabrication, photography, video production, charts/graphs, poster sessions, composites, and much more. To be considered for this contract work you'll need to contact this office and arrange for an interview and portfolio review. If they want to try you out, they use Open Market Requisition contracts. If they'd like to keep you on for a longer time, they may decide to sign you to a Blanket Purchase Agreement where you'll receive contract work valued up to a certain dollar amount over the course of a year.

 National Institute of Standards and Technology

Bill Welsh
Repro-Graphics
National Institute of Standards and Technology
Gaithersburg, MD 20899-0001 301-975-2631

The National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) graphics department does some work with freelance artists. If you're interested in finding out more, you'll need to contact this office and have your portfolio reviewed by the department. If they're interested in using you, they will use the standard contracting procedures: a bidders list, blanket purchasing agreements, and so on.

 National Oceanic and Atmospheric

Administration

Diane Boxley
National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration
Room 725, (083312)
6010 Executive Blvd.
Rockville, MD 20852 301-413-0907

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) hires freelance artists to do work on exhibits, publications, silk screening, wall plaques, photography, and much more. To be considered for the work, you'll need to arrange to have your portfolio reviewed. If they are interested in using your talents, they may decide to sign you to a Blanket Purchase Agreement, where they'll provide you with ongoing contract work up to a certain dollar value. Or they may simply contact you with a project in mind, ask for a price, and if they like it, you get the job. For more information on the portfolio review process, contact the office above.

 National Park Service

Harper's Ferry Center
Contracting Branch
Administrative Annex
Taylor St.
P.O. Box 50
Harper's Ferry, WV 25425 304-535-6236

The National Park Service contracts the services of all kinds of artists, illustrators, and photographers. To qualify for these contracting opportunities, you'll need to have your portfolio reviewed by the NPS. The review can be arranged through this office — either in person or by sending copies of your work by mail. Once your portfolio is approved, you'll be placed on the bidders list and receive notification of projects in your area of specialty.

 National Science Foundation

Division of Grants and Agreements
4201 Wilson Blvd.
Arlington, VA 22230 703-306-1210

Graphic artists and illustrators interested in doing contract work with the National Science Foundation (NSF) should send samples of their work along with a statement summarizing their capabilities and areas of specialty. Upon receiving this information, the Division of Grants and Contracts will circulate your resume and samples among the different NSF program offices, which in turn will decide if they are interested in using your services. This is the procedure used on contracts that are less than $20,000 in value. Over that amount, NSF places a notice in the Commerce Business Daily for open bidding.

Office of Philatelic and Retail Services

U.S. Postal Service

475 L'Enfant Plaza

Room 4461-E

202-268-6576

This office oversees both the production and promotion of U.S. postal stamps, and they hire freelance artists to help support many of their projects, including posters, brochures, and stamps. If you're interested in doing this kind of work, you'll need to contact this office and arrange to have your portfolio reviewed, either in person, or by submitting tear sheets of your work. For graphic art on their promotional materials, they work three different ways. For projects under $2,000, they will simply contact the artist on file they think is best for the job or who can do it the fastest. For projects up to $5,000, they will normally use a Basic Pricing Agreement that is in place with the artist for an entire year. For projects over $5,000, they will often ask for competitive bids from their list of vendors. Most of the stamps are done by freelance illustrators, 300 of whom they keep on file. Contracts usually are for $3,000 per stamp or $10,000 for a block of four. In 1992, they contracted with 26 artists to do 126 stamp designs. If you're interested in being considered for stamp illustration, you'll need to contact the above office and arrange to have your work reviewed. Depending on the project, contracts are awarded in a similar fashion to those for the Postal Services promotional materials described above.

Thad Dilley

Communications Department, Room 2P530

475 L'Enfant Plaza

Washington, DC 20260

202-268-2194

This department of the U.S. Postal Services contracts the services of graphic designers, illustrators, calligraphers, and photographers to work on their publication materials. To be put on their bidders list, you first need to send them a description of your graphics capabilities and specialties, and then make an appointment to go in for a portfolio review. If after reviewing your work, they are interested in using your talents, you'll be put on a bidders list and notified when projects arise that you are qualified to complete.

 Public Health Service

Room 36-36

U.S. Department of Health and Human Services

Public Health Service

5600 Fishers Lane

Rockville, MD 20857

301-443-1090

This technical services branch of the Public Health Service (PHS) works to meet the art requirements for the Indian Health Service, the Office of the Surgeon General, the Assistant Secretary of Health, and the Agency for Health Care Policy Review, among others. To keep up with their heavy work load, they contract out a large amount of art projects, including silk screen posters, banners, brochures, plaques, exhibit designs, 3-D displays, and much more. If you're interested in doing work for them on a freelance basis, contact Harris Pacchione to arrange for a portfolio review. If they like your work and want to use your talents, you'll be put on a bidders list and perhaps offered a Blanket Purchasing Agreement and asked to bid on jobs as they come up during the year. Currently PHS maintains about 30 BPAs with freelance artists. For major jobs, they'll send out proposal requests to three vendors on their list and ask for proposals.

 Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health

Administration

Gene Souder

Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration

Graphics Branch, Room 789

Rockville, MD 20857

301-443-4183

The Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration (ADAMHA) hires freelance artists and design firms to work on such projects as view graphs, exhibits, publications, logos, and much more. On June 1st of each year they award the new graphic design contracts for the new fiscal year, so if you're interested in being considered for this work, you'll need to contact this office and arrange for a portfolio review. Each year, approximately 15 firms and individuals are awarded Blanket Purchase Agreements where they are given up to a certain dollar amount of work throughout the year.

Work is also contracted by:

703-648-6880

The National Mapping Division of the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) contracts the work of freelance graphic designers to create pamphlets and educational pieces dealing with the earth sciences. Companies and individuals interested in being considered for contracting work should submit background information on their capabilities, along with samples of their work. If the USGS is interested in using your services, you'll be placed on a bidders list and notified when an appropriate contracting opportunity arises. For contracts valued under $2,500 the USGS will simply contact the artist they think is best suited for the job and able to do it in the needed time. The USGS awards about $100,000 in contracts annually for graphic art.

 Small Business Administration

U.S. Small Business Administration

Washington, DC 20416

202-205-6740

The Small Business Administration (SBA) contracts out about 70% of the graphics and art design work that they produce. These projects include publication design, banners, name tags, oversized presentation boards, pamphlets and brochures, and more. If you're interested in being considered for contract work with SBA, contact the office and arrange for a portfolio review. If they'd like to use your services, they'll have your name put on a bidders list in SBA's Office of Procurement and Grants Management. When a project arises, Procurement will notify at least three artists on the bidders list and ask them to submit bids on the project.

* Smithsonian Institute

Ann Garvey

Smithsonian Institute Press

470 L'Enfant Plaza

Suite 7100

Washington, DC 20560

202-287-3738, ext. 352

This office provides the graphic art and design support for much of the Smithsonian Institute, including all of the publications produced by the Smithsonian Institute Press (this does not include the Smithsonian Magazine, which is an entirely separate entity). Although much of the work is done internally, they do occasionally hire the services of freelancers to work on projects that they don't have the time or expertise to complete themselves. This work may involve graphic design, mechanicals, and every so often, illustration work. To be considered for this work, you'll need to contact the department to arrange for a portfolio review. If they are interested in your work, you'll be contacted to submit bids on projects as they come up, with the lowest bid winning the job.

* State Department

Rose Grover

Graphics Division

U.S. Department of State

21st and C Sts., SW,

Room 1655

Washington, DC 20520

202-647-1082

When the different bureaus within the State Department need outside graphics support, they contact artists on a vendors list that they maintain. The kind of projects that get farmed out to freelancers are usually last minute projects that the Graphics Division doesn't have the time or capability to do, such as charts for congressional briefings. To be put on the vendors listing, an artist first needs to be cleared by Rose Grover, the head of the Graphics Division. This process may include a portfolio review. Once on the bidders list, artists can receive direct calls from the individual bureaus for bids on projects.

* Treasury Department

Stu Gates

Printing and Graphics

U.S. Department of the Treasury

Annex, Room B-39

Washington, DC 20220

202-622-2160

To handle some of their large and mid-level graphic design work, the Treasury contracts the services of outside design vendors. This work is awarded on a competitive basis through Blanket Purchase Agreements where the graphics/design firm or individual is given contract work up to a certain pre-determined dollar value throughout the year on an as-needed basis. Contact this division for more information on getting your portfolio reviewed and being considered for the bidders list.

How to Get Video Production and Voiceover Contracts From The Federal Government

Freelance video production is one of the fastest growing fields in federal contracting. In 1993, the Federal government spent almost $21 million dollars on the services of freelance video production people. That represents almost one-quarter of what the entire Federal government spent in the area of audio-visuals for 1993! Video tape production increased by 48% from 1989 to 1993. The growth of the video industry during these years translated directly into increased government business. That translates into more projects for video producers to bid on and to win.

These projects often include video taping press conferences and meetings, making documentaries and training videos, and much more. This is exactly the kind of expertise that government employees don't often have, so many of these projects are completed by experienced freelancers.

To get in line for this big government money spent on video production, you first need to know who does the hiring and who they're looking to hire. That's what the people included in the following list can tell you. These Federal A-V contacts keep track of what their individual agency is doing and planning to do with video projects. They can help you get a better picture of whether you've got the expertise to do the kind of jobs that they need to have done.

How Freelance Writers and Editors Can Get Government Contracts

Writers don't have to be starving artists these days — the Federal government hires freelancers to do all kinds of work, such as script writing, technical writing, editing, translations, and much more. Believe it or not, your creative talent can find an outlet (and a paycheck!) within the halls of several Federal agencies. Consider this:

- * If you're a consumer writer, the Food and Drug Administration might be interested in using your skills to write an article on food safety for $1,200.
- * If you're an editor, the U.S. Department of Agriculture might want to use you at a rate of $1,225 per week.
- * Technical writers can land $25,000 contracts that NASA awards each year.

While many agencies have writers on staff, sometimes the work load is just too much and they'll look outside for freelancers to handle the overflow. Not all hire freelance writers, so we've done the leg work for you and found out which agencies do. Don't forget to also check the general section on freelancing, as well as checking out state contracts.

To be considered for any kind of contract work with the government, you'll need to submit a standard capabilities statement with each agency with which you would like to work. This statement should be submitted on a standard form 129 (SF-129), which is available free from any of the contracting offices listed below.

Once they've received your SF-129, an agency will put you on the bidders mailing list so that when writing opportunities come up, you'll be notified. You'll then be asked to submit a closed bid for the project, with the lowest bid getting the work. Keep in mind, though, that on larger contracts of $25,000 and up, the government usually pays only on completion of the project, which could be six months or a year, depending on the size. So if you're going to bid for a project, be sure you can survive that long before you get paid.

Here are some success stories of individuals and small businesses that have received writing contracts worth more than $25,000:

International Computer and Telecommunications of Lanham, MD, received $1.99 million to provide NASA headquarters with technical writing support services.

Gottlieb Associates of Washington, DC, received $55,310 to edit a science magazine for the National Science Foundation.

Stone and Webster Engineering Corp. of Engelwood, CO, received $192,839 to revise and update a book for the Department of Energy.

Graph Tech, Inc., of Arlington, VA, received $57,418 to provide editorial services to the Federal Emergency Management Administration.

Bruce Valley of Alexandria, VA, received $38,289 to write speeches for the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The Blue Pencil Group, Inc., of Reston, VA, received $27,900 to edit a scientific journal for the National Science Foundation.

Not all freelance writers get work through this kind of formal, bidded contract. Most writing and editing jobs are smaller, valued under $25,000, and are given out on a less formal basis — the procurement office might contact only three writers they know of and ask for bids, with the lowest getting the job.

Even smaller jobs in the range of, say, $2,500 or under are often awarded to writers that the Small Purchases Agent for an agency might have in his/her Rolodex, especially those writers who can do work on an as needed, last minute basis. So make sure that the Small Purchases Agent in each agency knows your name and has your resume on file — it's usually the people who are freshest in the agent's mind that gets these small, though often lucrative assignments.

Here are some examples of these smaller contracts:

Briere Associates of Arlington VA received $2,000 to edit an investigation report for the International Trade Commission.

Richard Bellman received $511 to write a paper on fair housing for the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Peter Petrakis of Annapolis, MD, received $2,500 to write a scientific report for the Public Health Service.

Paragon Solutions received $23,011 to develop a users manual for the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Rowena Itchon of Washington, DC, received $2,000 for editing services from the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Barbara Snyder of Falls Church, VA, received $625 to write a paper on drug abuse for the Department of Health and Human Services.

Don Hill of Virginia received $2,500 to produce a series of training conference reports for the Office of Personnel Management.

In fact, when first starting out in government contracting, it's a good idea to complete a few of these smaller contracts before you try to land any of the larger ones valued over $25,000. Showing a government agency that you have successfully completed smaller contracting work for them will make them more likely to award you larger jobs when you submit bids on them. Just as it is in the private sector, if all other things are equal, contracts often go to those companies with whose work the agency is most familiar.

I Wanna Start My Own Business

Small Business Development Centers

Small Business Development Centers (SBDCs) could be the best deal the government has to offer to entrepreneurs and inventors, and a lot of people don't even know about them! Where else in the world can you have access to a $150 an hour consultant for free? There are over 700 of these offices all over the country and they offer free (or very low cost) consulting services on most aspects of business including:

- how to write a business plan
- how to get financing
- how to protect your invention
- how to sell your idea
- how to license your product
- how to comply with the laws
- how to write a contract
- how to sell overseas
- how to get government contracts
- how to help you buy the right equipment

You don't even have to know how to spell ENTREPRENEUR to contact these offices. They cater to both the dreamer, who doesn't even know where to start, as well as to the experienced small business that is trying to grow to the next stage of development. In other words, the complete novice or the experienced professional can find help through these centers.

Why spend money on a consultant, a lawyer, an accountant, or one of those invention companies when you can get it all for free at your local SBDC?

Recently, I spoke with some entrepreneurs who used a California SBDC and each of them had nothing but praise for the services. A young man who dropped out of college to start an executive cleaning business said he received over $8,000 worth of free legal advice from the center and said it was instrumental in getting his business off the ground. A woman who worked in a bank started her gourmet cookie business by using the SBDC to help her get the money and technical assistance needed to get her venture up and running. And a man who was a gymnast raved about how the SBDC helped him get his personal trainer business off the ground. All kinds of businesses being started, and all kinds of compliments for the SBDC's role in assisting these entrepreneurs, in whatever they are attempting. It sounds like a solid recommendation to me.

Can something that is free be so good? Of course it can. Because most of the people who work there are not volunteers, they are paid for by tax dollars. So it's really not free to us as a country, but it is free to you as an entrepreneur. And if you don't believe me that the SBDCs are so good, would you take the word of Professor James J. Chrisman from the University of Calgary in Calgary, Alberta, Canada? He was commissioned to do an independent study of SBDCs and found that 82% of the people who used their services found them beneficial. And the businesses who used SBDCs had average growth rates of up to 400% greater than all the other businesses in their area. Not bad. Compare this to the Fortune 500 companies who use the most expensive consulting firms in the country and only experience growth rates of 5% or less. So, who says you get what you pay for?

Microenterprise: When You Need Just A Little Money To Start A Big New Business

A recent survey showed that approximately 33% of the top 500 fastest growing small businesses in the U.S. started with less than $10,000. It doesn't take much money to start a business in today's information age and service economy. We're no longer in the manufacturing age, when you needed a lot of money to start a business because you needed to buy an expensive plant and costly equipment. Today, many businesses are started with nothing more than a phone, a desk, and business cards. Traditional government money programs required entrepreneurs to ask for at least $50,000 to $100,000. Now the government has set up Microenterprise Programs where you can ask for just a little amount of money to make that big change in your life.

A Growing Unknown Resource

These programs are continually growing. They seem so successful that policy makers are finding new ways to help them grow. But this growth and success seems to be causing as many problems as the opportunities they are creating. On one hand, the SBA programs recently increased the number of banks that participate in its microloan program from 100 to 200 and also added a subcategory of lenders to include for profit and nonprofit organizations. Grants under this program will increase from $45 million in 1995 to $98 million in 1997, and direct loans will increase from $120 million to $250 million during the same period. But, on the other hand I read that programs like the one at the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development fell short of quota by $1.5 billion because not enough people applied. This means that the poor bureaucrat administering the program couldn't give out all their money because not enough people applied. I even got a personal call from a local organization who had $50,000 of this money for someone to open up a bakery, and no one applied for it.

66% Chance of Being a Microloan Winner

Each year thousands of people will be getting microloans to start or expand their businesses. Although data is not available for every program, one of the major microloan lenders estimates that 66% of the people who apply for money, get it. Here are a few examples of recent recipients:

- $5,000 to Street Smart, Inc., a street-hockey equipment distributor in Southeastern Pennsylvania
- $25,000 to Med-Ex Medical Express, a courier service that specializes in the health care field
- $15,000 to Jeannette Saunders and Pamela Marshall of Sacramento, CA to start P&J Word Processing Service

The Demonstration Partnership Program provides funds to stimulate eligible entities (mainly Community Action Agencies) to develop new approaches to provide for greater self-sufficiency of the poor. Many of the programs funded include micro-enterprise/ self-employment projects. The target populations have included homeless men, female heads of households, young minority males, families, and low income women. Programs offer a range of services including technical assistance, small low interest loans, business training, and more. For information on how you can start a program or for a listing of existing ones in your area, contact the office listed above.

North Coast Opportunities, Inc., Ukiah, CA

Central Vermont Community Action Council, Inc., Barre, VT

Southeast Iowa Community Action, Burlington, IA

Mayor's Office of Community Services, Philadelphia, PA

Elmore/Autauga Community Action Corp., Elmore, AL

 Up To $5,000 For Refugees

U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services
Office of Refugee Resettlement

Washington, DC 20447

202-401-9246

Refugees can receive technical assistance, training, or loans of up to $5,000 through a program called the Micro-Enterprise Development Project. The program allows states and public or private, nonprofit organizations and institutions to apply to receive grants to develop and administer micro-enterprise programs consisting of small-scale financing ($5,000) available through microloans to refugees. It also includes funding for technical assistance and support to these refugee entrepreneurs. For information on organizations which were awarded grants, contact the office listed above.

Awardees Include:

Church Ave. Merchants Block Association; Brooklyn, NY

Coastal Enterprises, Inc.; Wiscasset, ME

Economic and Employment Development Center; Los Angeles, CA

Institute for Social and Economic Development; Iowa City, IA

The State and Small Cities Program is the second largest component of the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program and aids communities that do not qualify for assistance under the CDBG Entitlement program. The grants assist communities in carrying out a wide range of community development activities directed toward neighborhood revitalization, economic development, and the provision of improved community facilities and services. Funds can also be used to provide assistance to public and private organizations, agencies, and other entities (including nonprofits and for profits) to facilitate economic development in supporting micro-enterprise.

Funds can be used to establish credit (direct loans and loan guarantees, revolving loan funds, and more) for the stabilization and expansion of micro-enterprises; provide technical assistance, advice, and business support services to owners of micro-enterprises; and provide general support to owners of micro-enterprises and organizations developing micro-enterprises. In 1994, these funds totaled $1,287,300.

If you are an interested citizen, you should contact your local officials for more information. If your local government or state officials cannot answer your questions, you may wish to contact the HUD Field Office that serves your area (look for the office closest to you from the list later in this chapter). Be aware that the state administers the program and determines which local projects receive funding.

Call yourself a handyman and get money to fix up your neighborhood. Money is set aside to give to public housing residents to modernize existing public housing projects. The money can also be used to provide residents with on-the-job training in construction and contractor related trades. It's called the Comprehensive Grant Program, and is available to Public Housing Agencies and Indian Housing Authorities of 250 housing units or more, which includes 897 public housing agencies nationwide. Contact your local Public Housing Authority for more information or you may contact the office listed above.

 State Microloan Programs

Contact the State Office of Economic Development listed in your state capital or

See the chapter, State Money and Help For Your Business, page 232

In addition to the federal programs, many state governments are also putting their money into microloan opportunities. Here are a few microloan programs that are currently available at the state level:

Iowa - Self Employment Loan Program ($5,000 for low income)

Maine - Job Start Program ($10,000)

New York - Micro Loan Program - NY Job Development

North Dakota - Micro Business Loans

Ohio - Ohio Mini-Loan Program

South Carolina - Micro Enterprise Loan Program

Texas - Rural Microenterprise Loan Program

New programs are being added all the time, so be sure to contact your state capital for the most current information.

Money To Start A Business In A Small Town

The Intermediary Relending Program (IRP) is a rural development program administered by the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). The purpose is to provide loans for the establishment of new businesses, expansion of existing businesses, creation of new employment opportunities, and community development projects in rural areas. Loans are made to intermediaries who relend funds to recipients for business facilities or community development. You can borrow up to $150,000 with a maximum term of 30 years and an interest rate of one percent per annum. For information, copies of regulations, and forms, contact the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Business and Industry Division, Room 6321 South, 14th and Independence Ave., SW, Washington, DC 20250; 202-720-7818.

"Sears eliminated a staggering 50,000 jobs from its merchandising division in 1993, reducing employment by 14 percent. The cutbacks came in the same year when Sears' sales revenues rose by more than 10 percent."

Rural Business Grants

The Rural Business Enterprise Grant Program (RBEG) is administered by the Rural Business Coop Services, and provides grant funds to a local or regional intermediary which, in turn, lends funds in a flexible manner to local businesses. Funds are designed to facilitate the development of small and emerging private business, industry, and related employment. Money can be used for the acquisition and development of land, and the construction of buildings, plants, equipment, access streets and roads, parking areas, utility and service extensions, refinancing, fees, technical assistance, startup operating cost, and working capital. Grant applications are available from Department of Agriculture field offices. For more information, contact the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Community Facilities Loan Division, 14th and Independence Ave., SW, Washington, DC 20250; 202-720-1400.

Help Those Help Themselves

The Discretionary Grants Program's goal is to strengthen the American family, which includes improving access of youth living in low income families to needed support services, including employment training and other transition to work services, and improving the integration, coordination, and continuity of other health and human services funded services. The program areas focus on employment opportunities and self-sufficiency among low income individuals; however, they are not micro-enterprise oriented programs. This program supports projects which provide employment and ownership opportunities for low income people through business, physical or commercial development and which generally improve the quality of the economic and social environment of low-income residents in economically-depressed areas. The emphases of projects must be on self-help and mobilization of the community-at-large. For application information, contact the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Community Services, 370 L'Enfant Promenade, SW, Fifth Floor, Washington, DC 20447; 202-401-9346.

There are several set-aside programs available including:

- Historically Black Colleges and Universities
- Pre-Development Funds (assess feasibility of potential projects)
- Youth Opportunities Unlimited
- Community Food and Nutrition Program
- Rural Housing
- Community Facilities Development
- National Youth Sports Program
- Migrants and Seasonal Farmworkers

"Forty years ago, people doing knowledge work and service work formed less than one-third of the work force. Today, such people account for three-quarters if not four-fifths of the work force in developed countries."

"All developed countries spend a fifth of their GNP on the production and distribution of knowledge."

Welfare Moms Can Start Their Own Business

If you're getting help from Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC), you may be able to get free training on how to become an entrepreneur, along with money to help you become your own boss. The program is called Job Opportunities for Low-Income Individuals (JOLI) program, which seeks to enhance the capacity and self-sufficiency of participating individuals. JOLI aims to help Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) recipients and others whose income falls below the federal poverty guidelines become self-sufficient by starting their own micro-enterprises or through employment in newly created permanent jobs. The program is designed to demonstrate and evaluate ways of creating new employment and business opportunities for certain low income individuals through the provision of technical and financial assistance to private employers in the community, self-employment/micro-enterprise programs, and/or new business development programs. JOLI awards grants to nonprofit organizations to develop these projects. For information on programs in your area or application information, contact U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services, Office of Community Services, 370 L'Enfant Promenade, SW, Fifth Floor, Washington, DC 20447; 202-401-5282.

Grants To Towns That Will Lend You Business Money

Cities can get grants that can be used to lend you money to start a small business. The Entitlement Grants is the largest component of the Community Development Block Grant Program and provides annual grants to entitled cities (population 50,000) and counties (population 200,000) to develop viable urban communities by providing decent housing and suitable living environments, and by expanding economic opportunities, principally for low and moderate income persons. The program provides funds to carry out a wide range of community development activities directed toward neighborhood revitalization, economic development, improved community facilities and services, and most recently micro-enterprise. Funds can be used to establish credit (direct loans and loan guarantees, revolving loan funds, and more) for the stabilization and expansion of micro-enterprises; provide technical assistance, advice, and business support services to owners of micro-enterprises; and provide general support to owners of micro-enterprises and organizations developing micro-enterprises. In 1994, there were 802 metropolitan cities and 135 urban counties which were awarded $3,003,7000 in all. To learn if your community received funds and the person to contact in your area for more information, contact American Communities, Information Center, Office of Community Planning and Development, P.O. Box 7189, Gaithersburg, MD 20898-7189; 800-998-9999. You may also contact the HUD office nearest you (listed below).

"The pattern established in the middle of this century - go to school, get a job, progress, peak out, glide for decades into retirement - are being replaced by multiple careers, lifelong learning, and a lot more uncertainty."

Microloans

The U.S. Small Business Administration's Microloan Program was developed for those times when just a small loan can make the real difference between success and failure. Under this program, loans range from less than $100 to a maximum of $25,000. SBA has made these funds available to nonprofit organizations for the purpose of lending to small business and they can also provide intense management and technical assistance. A microloan must be repaid on the shortest term possible — no longer than six years — depending on the earnings of the business. The interest rates on these loans will be competitive and based on the cost of money to the intermediary lender. This program is currently available in 44 states. To learn which nonprofit organizations in your area offer this program, call the Small Business Answer Desk at 800-8-ASK-SBA, or contact U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA), 409 Third St., SW, Suite 8300, Washington, DC 20416; 202-205-6490.

State Money and Help For Your Business

Who Can Use State Money?

All states require that funds be used solely by state residents. But that shouldn't limit you to exploring possibilities only in the state in which you currently reside. If you reside in Maine, but Massachusetts agrees to give you $100,000 to start your own business, it would be worth your while to consider moving to Massachusetts. Shop around for the best deal.

Types Of State Money And Help Available

Each state has different kinds and amounts of money and assistance programs available, but these sources of financial and counseling help are constantly being changed. What may not be available this year may very well be available next. Therefore, in the course of your exploration, you might want to check in with the people who operate the business "hotlines" to discover if anything new has been added to the states' offerings.

Described below are the major kinds of programs which are offered by most of the states.

Information

Hotlines or One-Stop Shops are available in many states through a toll-free number that hooks you up with someone who will either tell you what you need to know or refer you to someone who can. These hotlines are invaluable — offering information on everything from business permit regulations to obscure financing programs. Most states also offer some kind of booklet that tells you how to start-up a business in that state. Ask for it. It will probably be free.

Small Business Advocates operate in all fifty states and are part of a national organization (the National Association of State Small Business Advocates) devoted to helping small business people function efficiently with their state governments. They are a good source for help in cutting through bureaucratic red tape.

Funding Programs

Free Money can come in the form of grants, and works the same as free money from the federal government. You do not have to pay it back.

Loans from state governments work in the same way as those from the federal government -- they are given directly to entrepreneurs. Loans are usually at interest rates below the rates charged at commercial institutions and are also set aside for those companies which have trouble getting a loan elsewhere. This makes them an ideal source for riskier kinds of ventures.

Loan Guarantees are similar to those offered by the federal government. For this program, the state government will go to the bank with you and co-sign your loan. This, too, is ideal for high risk ventures which normally would not get a loan.

Interest Subsidies On Loans is a unique concept not used by the federal government. In this case, the state will subsidize the interest rate you are charged by a bank. For example, if the bank gives you a loan for $50,000 at 10 percent per year interest, your interest payments will be $5,000 per year. With an interest subsidy you might have to pay only $2,500 since the state will pay the other half. This is like getting the loan at 5 percent instead of 10 percent.

Industrial Revenue Bonds Or General Obligation Bonds are a type of financing that can be used to purchase only fixed assets, such as a factory or equipment. In the case of Industrial Revenue Bonds the state will raise money from the general public to buy your equipment. Because the state acts as the middleman, the people who lend you the money do not have to pay federal taxes on the interest they charge you. As a result, you get the money cheaper because they get a tax break. If the state issues General Obligation Bonds to buy your equipment, the arrangement will be similar to that for an Industrial Revenue Bond except that the state promises to repay the loan if you cannot.

Matching Grants supplement and abet federal grant programs. These kinds of grants could make an under-capitalized project go forward. Awards usually hinge on the usefulness of the project to its surrounding locality.

Loans To Agricultural Businesses are offered in states with large rural, farming populations. They are available solely to farmers and/or agribusiness entrepreneurs.

Loans To Exporters are available in some states as a kind of gap financing to cover the expenses involved in fulfilling a contract.

Energy Conservation Loans are made to small businesses to finance the installation of energy-saving equipment or devices.

Special Regional Loans are ear-marked for specific areas in a state that may have been hard hit economically or suffer from under-development. If you live in one of these regions, you may be eligible for special funds.

High Tech Loans help fledgling companies develop or introduce new products into the marketplace.

Loans To Inventors help the entrepreneur develop or market new products.

Local Government Loans are used for start-up and expansion of businesses within the designated locality.

Childcare Facilities Loans help businesses establish on-site daycare facilities.

Loans To Women And/Or Minorities are available in almost every state from funds specifically reserved for economically disadvantaged groups.

Many federally funded programs are administered by state governments. Among them are the following programs:

The SBA 7(A) Guaranteed and Direct Loan program can guarantee up to 90 percent of a loan made through a private lender (up to $750,000), or make direct loans of up to $150,000.

The SBA 504 establishes Certified Development Companies whose debentures are guaranteed by the SBA. Equity participation of the borrower must be at least 10 percent, private financing 60 percent and CDC participation at a maximum of 40 percent, up to $750,000.

Small Business Innovative Research Grants (SBIR) award between $20,000 to $50,000 to entrepreneurs to support six months of research on a technical innovation. They are then eligible for up to $500,000 to develop the innovation.

Small Business Investment Companies (SBIC) license, regulate and provide financial assistance in the form of equity financing, long-term loans, and management services.

Community Development Block Grants are available to cities and counties for the commercial rehabilitation of existing buildings or structures used for business, commercial, or industrial purposes. Grants of up to $500,000 can be made. Every $15,000 of grant funds invested must create at least one full-time job, and at least 51 percent of the jobs created must be for low and moderate income families.

Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) Emergency Disaster Loans are available in counties where natural disaster has substantially affected farming, ranching or aquaculture production.

FmHA Farm Loan Guarantees are made to family farmers and ranchers to enable them to obtain funds from private lenders. Funds must be used for farm ownership, improvements, and operating purposes.

FmHA Farm Operating Loans to meet operating expenses, finance recreational and nonagricultural enterprises, to add to family income, and to pay for mandated safety and pollution control changes are available at variable interest rates. Limits are $200,000 for an insured farm operating loan and $400,000 for a guaranteed loan.

FmHA Farm Ownership Loans can be used for a wide range of farm improvement projects. Limits are $200,000 for an insured loan and $300,000 for a guaranteed loan.

FmHA Soil And Water Loans must be used by individual farmers and ranchers to develop, conserve, and properly use their land and water resources and to help abate pollution. Interest rates are variable; each loan must be secured by real estate.

FmHA Youth Project Loans enable young people to borrow for income-producing projects sponsored by a school or 4H club.

Assistance Programs

Management Training is offered by many states in subjects ranging from bookkeeping to energy conservation.

Business Consulting is offered on almost any subject. Small Business Development Centers are the best source for this kind of assistance.

Market Studies to help you sell your goods or services within or outside the state are offered by many states. They all also have State Data Centers which not only collect demographic and other information about markets within the state, but also have access to federal data which can pinpoint national markets. Many states also provide the services of graduate business students at local universities to do the legwork and analysis for you.

Business Site Selection is done by specialists in every state who will identify the best place to locate a business.

Licensing, Regulation, and Permits information is available from most states through "one-stop shop" centers by calling a toll-free number. There you'll get help in finding your way through the confusion of registering a new business.

Employee Training Programs offer on-site training and continuing education opportunities.

Research And Development assistance for entrepreneurs is a form of assistance that is rapidly increasing as more and more states try to attract high technology-related companies. Many states are even setting up clearing houses so that small businesses can have one place to turn to find expertise throughout a statewide university system.

Procurement Programs have been established in some states to help you sell products to state, federal, and local governments.

Export Assistance is offered to identify overseas markets. Some states even have overseas offices to drum up business prospects for you.

Assistance In Finding Funding is offered in every state, particularly through regional Small Business Development Centers. They will not only identify funding sources in the state and federal governments but will also lead you through the complicated application process.

Special Help For Minorities And Women is available in almost every state to help boost the participation of women and minorities in small business ventures. They offer special funding programs and, often, one-on-one counseling to assure a start-up success.

Venture Capital Networking is achieved through computer databases that hook up entrepreneurs and venture capitalists. This service is usually free of charge. In fact, the demand for small business investment opportunities is so great that some states require the investor to pay to be listed.

Inventors Associations have been established to encourage and assist inventors in developing and patenting their products.

Annual Governors' Conferences give small business people the chance to air their problems with representatives from state agencies and the legislature.

Small Business Development Centers (SBDCs), funded jointly by the federal and state governments, are usually associated with the state university system. SBDCs are a god-send to small business people. They will not only help you figure out if your business project is feasible, but also help you draw up a sensible business plan, apply for funding, and check in with you frequently once your business is up and running to make sure it stays that way.

Tourism programs are prominent in states whose revenues are heavily dependent on the tourist trade. They are specifically aimed at businesses in the tourist industries.

Small Business Institutes at local colleges use senior level business students as consultants to help develop business plans or plan expansions.

Technology Assistance Centers help high tech companies and entrepreneurs establish new businesses and plan business expansions.

On-Site Energy Audits are offered free of charge by many states to help control energy costs and improve energy efficiency for small businesses. Some states also conduct workshops to encourage energy conservation measures.

Minority Business Development Centers offer a wide range of services from initial counseling on how to start a business to more complex issues of planning and growth.

Business Information Centers (BICs) provide the latest in high-tech hardware, software, and telecommunications to help small businesses get started. BIC is a place where business owners and aspiring business owners can go to use hardware/software, hard copy books, and publications to plan their business, expand an existing business, or venture into new business areas. Also, on-site counseling is available.

U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) Programs

The SBA offices listed under each state can provide you with detailed information on the following programs:

Small Business Innovative Research Grants (SBIR): Phase I awards between $20,000 to $50,000 to entrepreneurs to support six months of research on a technical innovation. Phase II grants are an additional $500,000 for development. Private sector investment funds must follow.

International Trade Loans: Guaranteed long-term loans through private lenders to develop or expand export markets, or to recover from the effects of import competition. Maximum guaranteed loan is $1,000,000 for fixed assets and an additional $250,000 for working capital and/or export revolving line of credit.

Contract Loan: Short-term loans are available to small businesses to finance the costs of labor and materials on contracts for which the proceeds are assignable. Program guarantees up to 90 percent of loans not in excess of $750,000. Qualifying small businesses must be in business for at least 12 calendar months prior to the date of the loan application.

General Contractor Loans: Small general construction contractors may obtain short-term loans or loan guarantees for residential or commercial construction or rehabilitation of property to be sold. The SBA will guarantee up to 90 percent of qualifying loans made by private lenders up to a maximum of $750,000. Direct loans can be up to $150,000.

7(a) Loan Guaranty Program: This program is used to fund the varied long-term needs of small businesses. It is designed to promote small business formation and growth by guaranteeing long-term loans to qualified firms. Can guarantee up to $750,000, generally between 70%-90% of the loan value, at an interest rate not to exceed 2.75 over the prime lending rate. Maturities are up to 10 years for working capital; up to 25 years for fixed assets.

7(a) Loan Guaranty Program

Low Documentation Loan Program (LowDoc): Purpose is to reduce the paperwork involved in loan requests of $100,000 or less. A one-page application is used and it relies on the strength of the individual applicant's character and credit history.

7(a) Loan Guaranty Program

GreenLine Program: Intended to finance short-term, working-capital needs of small businesses. Loan advances are usually made against a borrower's certified level of inventory and accounts payable.

7(a) Loan Guaranty Program

Vietnam-Era and Disabled Veteran Loan Program: Assists disabled veterans of any era who can't secure business financing from private sector or other guaranty loan sources. Veterans can apply for loans to establish a small business or expand an existing small business. The maximum is $150,000.

7(a) Loan Guaranty Program

Handicapped Assistance Loans: Assists individuals with disabilities and public/private nonprofit organizations for the employment of the handicapped. Financing is available for starting/acquiring or operating a small business. There are 2 programs of assistance: HAL-1 and HAL-2.

HAL-1: Financial assistance is available to state and federal-chartered organizations that operate in the interest of disabled individuals. Applicants must provide evidence that the business is operated in the interest of handicapped individuals.

HAL-2: Financial assistance is provided to handicapped persons who provide evidence that their business is a for-profit operation, qualifies as a small business, is 100% owned by 1 or more handicapped individuals, and the handicapped owner(s) must actively participate in managing the business.

7(a) Loan Guaranty Program

Women's Prequalification Loan Program: Provides women business owners a pre-authorized loan guaranty commitment. It provides a quick response to loan requests of $250,000 or less.

7(a) Loan Guaranty Program

Secondary Market: Lenders who hold business loans guaranteed by the SBA may improve profitability and liquidity by selling the guaranteed portions of those loans in the secondary market. Banks, savings and loan companies/ credit unions and pension funds, and insurance companies are frequent buyers.

8(a) Participant Loan Programs: Makes financial assistance available to 8(a) certified firms. Applicants must be participants in the 8(a) Program and eligible for contractual assistance. Loans can be made directly or through lending institutions under the agency's immediate participation or guaranty programs. Loans may be used for facilities/equipment or working capital.

7(m) MicroLoan Demonstration Program: Aimed at small businesses needing small-scale financing/technical assistance for start-up or expansion. Short-term loans of up to $25,000 are made to small businesses for the purchase of machinery and equipment, furniture and fixtures, inventory, supplies and working capital.

502 Local Development Company Program: Provides long-term, fixed asset financing through certified development companies. Proceeds are provided as follows: 50% by an unguaranteed bank loan, 40% by an SBA guaranteed debenture, 10% by the small business customer. The maximum SBA debenture is $1 million.

504 Certified Development Company Program: Provides long-term, fixed asset financing through certified development companies. Proceeds are provided as follows: 50% by an unguaranteed bank loan, 40% by an SBA guaranteed debenture, 10% by the small business customer. The maximum SBA debenture is $1 million.

Surety Bond Program

Prior Approval Program: Aimed at small construction/ service contractors; surety/insurance companies; minority/ women's groups; federal/state agencies; state insurance departments; federal/state and other procurement officials.

Surety Bond Program

Preferred Surety Bond (PSB) Program: Aimed at small construction and service contractors; surety/insurance companies; minority and women's groups; federal/state agencies; state insurance departments; federal and state and other procurement officials. The decision to issue a surety bond guarantee is made by participating sureties. There are participating sureties authorized by SBA to issue/monitor and service bonds without prior SBA approval. SBA guarantees surety bonds for construction, service/supply contracts up to $1.25 million.

Export Working Capital Program (EWCP): Replaces the Export Revolving Line of Credit Program. EWCP will allow up to a 90% guarantee on private-sector loans of up to $750,000 for working capital. Loans can be for single or multiple export sales and can be extended for pre-shipment working capital and post-shipment exposure coverage.

Disaster Assistance Loan Program: A disaster-assistance loan program for nonagricultural victims. Eligibility is based on financial criteria. Interest rates fluctuate according to statutory formulas. There is a lower rate available to applicants without credit available elsewhere, not to exceed 4%, and a higher interest rate for those with credit available elsewhere, not to exceed 8%.

Disaster Assistance to Businesses

Loans for Physical Damage: Available to qualified businesses for uninsured losses up to $1.5 million for businesses of any size to repair/replace business property to pre-disaster conditions. Loans may be used to replace/repair equipment, fixtures, inventory, and leasehold improvements.

Disaster Assistance to Businesses

Economic Injury Disaster Loan (EIDL): For businesses that sustain economic injury as a result of a disaster. Working capital loans are made to help businesses pay ordinary/necessary expenses which would have been payable barring disaster. Maximum loan amounts is $1.5 million EIDL and physical damage loans combined unless the business meets the criteria for major source of employment.

Disaster Assistance to Businesses

Loan for Major Source of Employment (MSE): For business, large and small, and nonprofit organizations. The $1.5 million limit may be waived for businesses that employ 250 or more in an affected area.

Disaster Assistance to Individual Homeowners and Renters:

Real Property: Loans available to qualified homeowner/ renter applicants for uninsured losses up to $200,000 to repair/ restore a primary residence to pre-disaster condition. Homeowners may apply for an additional 20% for disaster mitigation. This is a long-term program for individual disaster losses.

Disaster Assistance to Individuals Homeowners and Renters:

Personal Property: Loans available to qualified homeowner/ renter applicants for uninsured losses up to $40,000 to repair/replace personal property such as clothing, furniture, cars, etc.

Government Contracting

Certificate of Competency: Helps small businesses to receive government contracts by providing an appeal process to low-bidder businesses denied government contracts by contracting officers for perceived lack of ability to satisfactorily perform.

Government Contracting

Prime Contract: Program increases small business opportunities in the federal acquisition process through initiation of small business set-asides, identification of new small business sources, counseling small businesses on how to do business with the federal government, and assessment of compliance with the Small Business Act through surveillance reviews.

Government Contracting

Breakout Program: Promotes/influences and enhances the break-out of historically sole-source items for full and open competition in order to effect significant savings to the federal government.

Government Contracting

Natural Resources Sales Assistance Program:

Timber Sales: Set-aside program maintains small businesses in the forest products industry by providing them with preferential bidding opportunities for purchasing timber offered by the federal government. Joint operation of the SBA and federal timber-selling agencies throughout the U.S.

National Small Business Tree Planting Program: Allocates grants to the states/trust territories for the purpose of contracting with small businesses to plant trees on land owned and controlled by state/local governments. Federal dollars are matched by community funds.

Government Contracting

Procurement Automated Source System (PASS): A computerized data base of small businesses nationwide which are interested in federal procurement opportunities. Information on each company includes a summary of capabilities, ownership and qualifications.

Small Business Technology Transfer Program (STTR) Pilot Program: This is similar in philosophy and objectives to the SBIR program. It has a requirement that the small firm competing for the Small Business Technology Transfer Program (STTR) Research and Development (R&D) project must collaborate with a nonprofit research institution. This is a joint venture project from the initial bid submission to project completion. Available to small high-tech R&D firms.

Grants and reimbursement programs are available. Reimbursement for tank testing is available for up to 50 percent of cost, not to exceed $300 per tank, maximum of $1,200 per facility. For site assessment, 50 percent of cost not to exceed $800 per tank, maximum of $2,300 per facility. For cleanup, grants of up to $1 million to cover 90 percent of cost, and no-interest loan for remaining 10 percent. For upgrade or closure, 60 percent of eligible costs up to a grant maximum of $60,000.

* Alaska Industrial Development and Export

Authority (AIDEA)

480 West Tudor Rd.

907-269-3000

Anchorage, AK 99503-6690

Fax: 907-269-3044

Business Assistance Program: Provides up to 80% guarantee of the principal balance to the financial institution making the loan. Can make project financing/refinancing, working capital loans available for projects that might not otherwise be financed. Guarantees up to $1 million are made on loans for real property/equipment or working capital for projects that stabilize the economic base or create or maintain employment. A new program established by the Legislature targets entrepreneurs in rural areas and provides a streamlined approval process for guarantees on loans of $75,000 or less.

Development Finance Program: To be eligible for funding, a project must be essential for the economic well being of an area and must produce adequate revenues to repay the bonds sold to finance the project. AIDEA works closely with local governments and approves projects compatible with the local economy and supported by the community. When projects require financing of more than $10 million in bonds, legislative approval is necessary.

Export Assistance Program: Designed to facilitate international trade. Program offers guarantees to financial institutions which provide exporters with pre-shipment/post-shipment loans. Guarantees may total up to 90% of the transaction plus interest or $1 million, whichever is less.

Tax-Exempt Umbrella Bond (Loan Participation) Program: Working through financial institutions, AIDEA participates up to 80% in permanent financing for public use projects such as ports/airports and docks. Borrowers apply at a qualified bank; the bank applies to AIDEA. Bank retains a minimum of 20% share in the principal amount. AIDEA participation limit is 80% or up to $10 million. Terms can be up to 15 or 25 years based on a 75% loan to value ratio. The project may not exceed 90% of the cost of the project or 75% of the appraised value of the project, whichever is less, unless the amount of the loan in excess of this limit is federally insured or guaranteed or is insured by a qualified mortgage insurance company.

Four Colorado development companies lend to small and medium-sized businesses at fixed rates for terms of 10 to 20 years. Companies must create one job for every $15,000 they receive in financing. Contact your local CDC:

State Money and Help For Your Business

SBA 504 Fixed Asset Loan Program: Provides long-term fixed rates for fixed asset purchases. At least one job must be created for every $15,000 in SBA assistance unless the project will produce a high community impact. Loans provided up to $750,000 or 40 percent of total project cost, whichever is less.

ACCESS Loan Program: ACCESS works in conjunction with the Small Business Administration's (SBA) 504 program. Together, they provide small businesses with long-term fixed rates on up to 95 percent of the financed portion of the fixed asset purchase (land and building, equipment, machinery). The ACCESS program cannot provide working capital. Loans are provided in amounts of $100,000 or more (no maximum). Industrial, manufacturing and wholesale distribution concerns located in enterprise zones are eligible for a lower rate. Through Access, businesses can borrow from local private lenders which might not have been able to provide financing for total project needs.

processors, engineering firms, consumer credit reporting services, any combination of these services, and the administration and management support required for any of these activities who invest a minimum of $200,000 in a new or expanded facility and hires a minimum of five new employees. Program provides credits of $250 for each new employee and $250 for each $100,000 investment. Credits may not exceed 50% of the company's precredit tax liability in any one year.

Targeted Area Tax Credits

Corporate Income Tax Credits: Firms which qualify for targeted industry credits and locate in one of the targeted areas, qualify for corporate income tax credits of $500 for each new business and $500 for each new $100,000 investment. Targeted areas: real property that is owned by any level of government or any of their agencies; real property owned by a non-profit organization which is organized and operated solely for the purpose of fostering economic development; real property which has been approved as a Delaware Foreign Trade Zone, and 30 low-income Census Tracts throughout the state. Qualifying firms will not be subject to gross receipts taxes for the first 5 years and will then have these gross receipts taxes reduced on a declining scale for a period of 10 years.

Retention and Expansion Tax Credits: Corporate income tax credits and gross receipts tax reductions are available to manufacturers and wholesalers planning new facilities or large expansions. Companies investing a minimum of $1 million or 15% of the unadjusted basis in the facility are eligible to receive 75% of Blue-Collar Tax Credits. Maximum annual credit cannot exceed $500,000.

Investor Tax Credits: Personal income tax credits are available to individuals who invest in approved Delaware small businesses. Tax credits of 15%, applicable to no more than $100,000 or investment per investor in any one company, will be provided. Tax credits can be spread over five years.

Green Industries Tax Credits:

Waste Reductions: Manufacturers that reduce their chemical waste by 20% or their other wastes by 50%, are granted a $250 corporate income tax credit for each 10% reduction.

Industry Credits: Eligible firms: manufacturers whose production inputs are comprised of at least 25% recycled materials; those firms that engage in the processing of materials removed from solid waste stream for resale as input to manufacturers; and firms who collect, distribute recycled materials, and/or materials removed from solid waste stream for recycling. Qualifying firms receive $250 corporate income tax credit. Also qualify for the 10 year gross receipts tax reductions.

Public Utility Tax Rebates for Industrial Users: Industrial firms meeting the criteria for targeted industries tax credits are eligible for a rebate of 50% of the Public Utilities Tax imposed on new or increased consumption of gas and electricity for five years. The public utilities tax rate is 4.25%.

Property Tax Incentives:

New Construction - City of Wilmington: Grants property tax reductions for new construction in targeted areas within the city. The city allows a 100% credit on the increased assessments for a period of 5 or 7 years depending on the use of the facility and its location within the city.

Property Improvements - City of Wilmington: Offers a 100% reduction in property taxes for 5 or 7 years on increased assessments to qualified improvements to existing buildings.

State Money and Help For Your Business

New Construction and Renovations - New Castle County: Exempts some qualified commercial and industrial construction or renovations within the city from county property taxes at a rate of 100% for the first year, decreasing 10% a year until the full tax rate is attained. Applies only to new construction or renovations. Exemption is generally non-transferrable.

New Industrial, Manufacturing, Warehousing or Commercial Construction - City of Newark: Partially exempts all new industrial, manufacturing, and warehousing enterprises from real estate taxes levied on the increase in assessed valuation of the property attributable to new construction, for ten years. Exemptions begin at 100% for the first year and decrease 10% annually for ten years.

New Construction and Renovation - City of Dover: Grants tax waivers for eligible residential, commercial or office use projects within a defined target area. Must have a market value of materials and labor which exceeds $15,000. Tax waiver is for 10 years. Applies only to new construction and renovation. The city has placed a $1,000 cap on building permit fees for qualifying projects in the target area. Also offers a 100% waiver of impact fees for projects which maximize land use in the target area (e.g. with strong mixed use residential, commercial, and office combination).

Kent County Property Tax Abatements: Manufacturers, financial institutions, wholesalers, home offices, and operating units of insurance companies who invest at least $75,000 in a new or expanded facility and hire 4 new employees are eligible. Property taxes are reduced from 90% to 0% over the period of 10 years.

Delaware Access Program: Designed to give banks a flexible and non-bureaucratic tool to make business loans that are somewhat riskier than a conventional bank loan, in a manner consistent with safety and soundness. Revolving Loan Fund: Can be used for direct loans in conjunction with private funds. Funds will be used primarily to provide guarantees for bank loans.

Business Development Loan Program: Offers direct loans for gap financing, construction, equipment purchases, inventory, and working capital. Funds can also be used to provide financing for development projects.

Commercial Development Assistance Program: Designed to encourage investment in small neighborhood commercial businesses, CDAP offers direct loans in conjunction with private funds. Typical fund uses are bridge financing, gap financing, acquisition of equipment, fixtures and furniture, inventory, and limited working capital.

Facade Loan Program: Designed to help revitalize neighborhood commercial corridors, this loan program offers direct loans to commercial property owners and business owners for the renovation of their building facades. Loan amounts are up to $25,000 at interest rates of 3%.

Met Grant Program: Designed to mitigate the disruptive costs suffered by businesses as a result of the Metro System's construction of the Green Line, this program can provide loans of up to $30,000 and grants of up to $20,000 per year. Projects must be CDBG-eligible and are only open to firms that had been sited along the Green Line's construction route. Loans may be funded at interest rates of 4% and must be repaid within five years of the Green Line's completion. Highly flexible, the program may underwrite equipment, inventory and even working capital costs.

Development Zones Loan Program (DZLP): Seeking to encourage the revitalization of the Alabama Avenue, DC Village, and Anacostia Development Zones, this business development program offers firms locating in these areas up to $200,000 or 90% of a project's cost. Low interest gap financing, typically set between 3% to 6%, may be used to secure land, equipment, inventory, leasehold improvements and working capital. Projects meeting federal CDBG standards, and furthering a specific zone's development goals, may thus access loans amortized over a term of up to twenty years, depending on the particular use of funds.

Community Development Block Grant (CDBG): Regular Round Economic Development Program and CDBG Employment Incentive Program. The purpose of these two programs is to expand economic opportunities in cities and counties, principally for persons of low and moderate income. Only projects which cannot be funded through private lenders are eligible. Projects must create or retain jobs for low and moderate income persons. Loans are usually made at below-market rates with favorable terms. The maximum loan amount for the CDBG Regular Round is $500,000, for the EIP program, $300,000.

Revolving Loan Fund Programs

Revolving loan funds are administered by Regional Development Centers to help business expand and create jobs. There are other similar programs in Georgia cities and counties - see Community Development Block Grants above.

Appalachian Region Business Development Revolving Loan Fund: Below market rate loans to businesses for projects that support downtown development, create and save jobs, and/or preserve and enhance historic downtown buildings. Must be located within one of the 35 "Appalachian Region" counties in North Georgia. One job is to be created or saved for every $20,000 loaned. 50 percent of total project cost must be provided by loan or equity injection. Maximum loan amount is $200,000.

Tax Exempt Industrial Bond Financing: Industrial Development Bonds are a type of long-term, low-interest rate financing available for manufacturing facilities. Private financial services firms issue the bonds up to $10 million available for each project.

Taxable Composite Bond Financing: Projects are pooled into a single bond issue of $15 million or more. Private financial services firms issue the bonds.

Grasp SBA Microloan Program: Loans to assist women, low income minority entrepreneurs, and small business owners. Program helps finance business's growth and expansion. Amounts vary - up to a maximum of $25,000 per loan.

Industrial Revenue Bonds (IRB): Local Industrial Development Authorities issue IRB's to small and minority businesses.

Surety Bond Guarantee Program: Enables small contractors to obtain the surety bonds necessary to compete for government and non-government contracts. Permits a small business contractor to obtain a surety bond when the company might otherwise be too inexperienced to obtain a bond.

Business Infrastructure Finance (BIF) Program: This program is intended to facilitate and enhance job creation and/or retention for low and moderate income persons by providing a flexible and expedient financing mechanism to assist eligible industries with the financing of various privately owned infrastructure. Projects that create employment, greater job security, better working conditions, job training, enhancement of workplace skills and advancement opportunities receive the greatest consideration. BIF projects must always create or retain employment principally for low and moderate income persons. The Maximum BIF loan amount is $300,000. Loan amounts cannot exceed 90% of the specific project cost. Rates will generally not exceed a rate of prime plus 3%. Maximum term of the loan shall be five years.

Employment Incentive Program (EIP): This is a financing program capitalized with state CDBG funds that may be used by private business along with conventional private financing to carry out economic development projects which will result in employment of low and moderate income persons. Activities encompass two areas: 1) grant to local governments for the installation of public infrastructure which will support an eligible economic development project (public water and sewer systems, distribution and/or collection lines, wastewater treatment projects, rail spurs, and various other types of public facilities). 2) Grants to local governments who may then loan the EIP proceeds to a sub-recipient industry to finance various fixed assets which will be used in an eligible economic development project. EIP projects must always create or retain employment principally for low and moderate income persons. The maximum EIP grant or loan amount is $250,000. The term of an EIP loan generally ranges between 4 and 10 years depending upon the assets to be financed.

Appalachian Regional Commission Infrastructure Funds: Provides federally funded grants to cities and counties in the north Georgia area for infrastructure improvements that will result in the creation of permanent jobs. The purpose of the program is to assist with the economic development of Appalachian Region counties in Georgia. Grant amounts are available up to $200,000 for individual projects. No more than 50% of the funds may come from federal sources. Most activities providing water and sewer services are eligible as long as program objectives are met by the proposed project. Projects related to the supply, storage, treatment, and transmission of water are eligible, and projects related to the collection, storage, and treatment of sewage are eligible.

Community Planning and Development

Section 108 Loan Guarantees: Section 108 provides communities with an efficient source of financing for housing rehabilitation, economic development, and large scale physical development projects. Eligible applicants: Metropolitan cities and urban counties, and nonentitlement communities that are assisted in the submission of applications by states that administer the CDBG program. Eligible activities include: acquisition of real property, rehabilitation of publicly owned real property, housing rehabilitation, economic development, related relocation, clearance and site improvements, payment of interest on the guaranteed loan and issuance costs of public offerings, and debt service reserves. All projects and activities must principally benefit low and moderate income persons, or aid in the elimination or prevention of slums and blight, or meet other community development needs. Maximum repayment period for a loan guarantee is twenty (20) years.

Rural Economic and Community Development (RECD)

I Wanna Start My Own Business

Georgia Intermediary Relending Program (IRP): The purpose is to finance business facilities and community development projects in rural areas. This is achieved through loans made by RECD to intermediaries. The intermediaries relend the funds to ultimate recipients for business facilities or community development. Intermediaries may be private non-profit corporations, public agencies, Indian groups, or cooperatives. At least 51% of the owners or members of both intermediaries and ultimate recipients must be U.S. citizens or admitted for permanent residence. Must be unable to obtain the proposed loan elsewhere at reasonable rates and terms. Loans must be for the establishment of new businesses, the expansion of existing businesses, creation of employment opportunities, saving of existing jobs, or community development projects. Repayment of loans are scheduled over a period of up to 30 years. The term of loans from intermediaries to ultimate recipients is set by the intermediary.

Georgia Business and Industry Guaranteed Loan Program: The purpose is to improve, develop, or finance business, industry and employment in an effort to favorably impact the economic and environmental climate of rural communities. Loans may be made in areas outside the boundary of a city of 50,000 or more in population and its immediate adjacent urbanized areas with a population density of no more than 100 persons per square mile. Can provide up to a 90% loan guarantee (normally does not exceed 80%). The loans are limited to a maximum of $10 million. Loan funds may be used in developing or financing business or industry, increasing employment and controlling or abating pollution; real estate purposes, machinery and equipment, and working capital. A minimum of 10% tangible balance sheet equity is required. Balance sheet equity of at least 20-25% will be required for new businesses, and businesses without full personal or corporate guarantees.

Rural Business Enterprise Grants (RBEG): Used to support the development of small emerging private business enterprises in rural areas. Small and emerging private businesses would generally be ones that will employ 50 or less new employees and have less than $1,000,000 in projected gross revenues. These grant funds may be used to finance and develop small and emerging private business enterprises in rural areas including but not limited to the following: acquisition and development of land, easements, and rights of way; construction, conversion, enlargement, repairs or modernization of buildings, plants, machinery, equipment, access streets and woods, parking areas, utilities, and pollution control and abatement facilities; start-up operating costs and working capital; technical assistance for proposed grantee projects; refinancing of debts; financial assistance to third parties through a loan; training in connection with technical assistance; production of television programs to provide information on issues of importance to farmers and rural residents.

Financing for Small Municipal and Rural Community Facility Projects: Rural communities and small incorporated towns/cities not larger than 20,000 based on the latest decennial population census of the U.S. are eligible to apply. Applicants must be unable to obtain the financing from other sources and/or their own resources at rates and terms they can afford. public bodies and non-profit corporations can be eligible applicants. Funds can be used for construction, land acquisition, legal fees, architect fees, capitalized interest, equipment, initial operation and maintenance costs, project contingencies, and any other cost that is determined by RDA to be necessary for the completion of the project. Direct loans may be obtained for 100% of eligible project costs subject to adequate security, ability to repay, applicant's authority to borrow, and availability of funds. Guaranteed loans - same as for direct loans as determined by private lender and approved by Rural Economic and Community Development (RECD).

Bonds for Industry (BFI):

For businesses seeking to expand or locate in Georgia long term tax exempt bond financing. BFI program provides affordable access to tax exempt bond financing for amounts as low as

Financing for Small Municipal and Rural Water and Wastewater Systems: Guaranteed loans, direct loans, and grants are available. Rural communities and small incorporate towns/cities not larger than 10,000 based on the latest decennial population census of the U.S. are eligible to apply. Applicants must be unable to obtain the financing from other sources and/or their own resources at rates and terms they can afford. Funds can be used for construction, loan acquisition, legal fees, engineering fees, capitalized interest, equipment, initial operation and maintenance costs, project contingencies. Projects must be primarily for the benefit of rural owners.

Guaranteed loans may be fixed or floating rate. May be obtained for 100% of eligible project costs subject to adequate security, ability to repay, applicant's authority to borrow, and availability of funds. Repayment terms: up to 20 years based on applicant's authority and life expectancy of the system.

Grants cannot be received in conjunction with a guaranteed loan. They are used to supplement direct loans for the purpose of reducing user rate costs to a reasonable level when compared to comparable systems and similar size communities with similar economic and income conditions. The actual amount of grant funds awarded to the applicant will be determined based on the grant dollars required to reduce the user rates for users to a reasonable level up to the maximum amount of 55% or 75%.

Special Grant Programs

Emergency Water Assistance Grants: Objective is to assist the residents of rural areas that have experienced a significant decline in quantity or quality of water to obtain adequate quantities of water that meet the standards set by the Safe Drinking Water Act. Grants may be made to public bodies and private non-profit corporations serving rural areas. Funds can be used for waterline extensions from existing systems; construction of new waterlines; repairs to an existing system; significant maintenance to an existing system; construction of new wells, reservoirs, transmission lines, treatment plants, and other sources of water; equipment replacement; and connection and/or tap fees. The maximum grant for alleviating a significant decline in quantity, or quality of water available from water supplies in rural areas is $500,000. The maximum grant available for repairs, partial replacement, or significant maintenance to remedy an acute shortage is $75,000.

Solid Waste Management Grant Program: Objectives are to reduce or eliminate pollution of water resources and improve planning and management of solid waste sites. Grants may be used to evaluate current landfill conditions to determine threats to water resources; provide technical assistance and/or training to enhance operator skills in the maintenance and operations of active landfills; provide technical assistance and/or training to help communities reduce the solid waste stream; and provide technical assistance and/or training for operators of landfills which are closed or will be closed in the near future.

Georgia's Freeport Law: A local option freeport amendment to the Georgia Constitution was submitted by the General Assembly and approved by Georgia's voters in November 1976. As a result, any local political subdivision now has wide flexibility in making a decision about this incentive. Under the law, all freeport decisions are in local hands — whether to have freeport at all, when to implement it, what kinds of inventory to exempt, the percentage of inventory exempted, and whether to have the law effective throughout the county or only for certain of its political subdivisions. Types of inventory exempted: Class 1: Manufacturer's raw materials and goods-in-process. Class 2: Finished goods held by the original manufacturer. Class 3: Finished goods held by the distributors, wholesalers, and manufacturers destined for out-of-state shipment.

Even after a local referendum has been passed, local officials retain their freedom to exercise further options: Defer full implementation of freeport or put freeport into effect on any scale, small or large, in increments of 20/40/60/80/100%. These levels are determined strictly by local officials.

Twenty Percent Investment Tax Credit: Also called the rehabilitation tax credit, it is an economic incentive that encourages the rehabilitation and reuse of historic buildings for business purposes. These will be found in cities of all sizes in all parts of the state. The majority will be found within downtown historic districts. The rehab tax credit provides a dollar for dollar reduction of Federal income taxes due for those taxpayers who can use the credit. The amount of the credit is equal to 20% of qualifying costs of rehabilitating the building. The building must be certified as historic. The work done on the building must also be certified. The total of qualifying rehab expenses must exceed the larger of $5,000 or the adjusted basis of the building. (Please note: This information provides only general guidance regarding the 20% investment tax credit. Professional tax advisors or legal counsel should be consulted for detailed information).

State Historic Preservation Tax Incentives: Designed to encourage rehabilitation of both residential and commercial historic buildings that might otherwise be neglected. The law provides an owner of historic property which has undergone substantial rehabilitation an eight-year freeze on property tax assessments. For the ninth year, the assessment increases by 50% of the difference between the recorded first year value and the current fair market value. In the tenth and following years the tax assessment will then be based on the current fair market value. The rehabilitation project must meet a rehabilitation test. If the property is: Residential (owner occupied — rehabilitation must increase the fair market value of the building by at least 50%. Mixed-use (primarily residential and partially income-producing property) — rehabilitation must increase the fair market value of the building by at least 75%. Commercial and Professional Use (income producing property) — rehabilitation must increase the fair market value of the building by at least 100%.

Georgia Minority Subcontractors Tax Credit: In an effort to assist minority-owned businesses, the State of Georgia provides an income tax credit to any company which subcontracts with a minority owned firm to furnish goods, property, or services to the State of Georgia. This includes, but is not restricted to, the construction of any building or structure for the state. A minority owned business can be one of the following: a business which is owned by a member of a minority race, or a partnership of which a majority of interest is owned by one or more members of a minority race, or a public corporation of which a majority of the common stock is owned by one or more members of a minority race. The law allows a corporation, partnership, or individual, in computing Georgia taxable income, to subtract from federal taxable income or federal adjusted gross income 10% of the amount of qualified payments to minority subcontractors.

City Business Improvement Districts: Permits the formation of special taxing district designed to promote the economic development of city commercial areas. Approved districts may provide supplemental services within the district's boundaries in order to improve and promote the district as a whole. Supplemental services include advertising, promotion, sanitation, security, and business recruitment and development.

Community Improvement Districts: Permits commercial areas to form special tax districts to pay for exceptional infrastructure needs. These "community improvement districts" (CID) do not replace standard city and county infrastructure improvement programs but supplement them by providing a means to pay for facilities which may be specially required in densely developed areas. Projects which can be funded include street and road construction and maintenance, sidewalks and streetlights, parking facilities, water systems, sewage systems, terminal and dock facilities, public transportation, and park facilities and recreational areas.

The EDA was established under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965, to generate new jobs, to help protect existing jobs, and to stimulate commercial and industrial growth in economically distressed areas of the U.S.

Public Works Grants: Public and private non-profit organizations and Indian Tribes to help build or expand public facilities essential to industrial and commercial growth. Typical projects are industrial parks, access roads, water and sewer lines, port and airport termination developments.

Technical Assistance Grants: Communities and firms to find solutions to problems that stifle economic growth. Funds are used for studies to determine economic feasibility of resource development to establish jobs and provide on the scene assistance for innovative economic development techniques.

Planning Grants: States, cities, regional planning councils, and Indian Tribes to help pay for the expertise needed to plan, coordinate, and implement comprehensive economic development programs.

University Center Program Grants: Awarded to colleges/universities to utilize available resources to provide technical assistance to clients and address the economic development programs and opportunities of their service area.

Revolving Loan Fund (RLF) Grants: Awarded to help depressed areas overcome specific capital market gaps and to encourage greater private sector participation in economic development activities. RLF grantees make fixed asset and/or working capital loans to area businesses.

Economic Adjustment Program Grants: Assist state and local governments in solving recent and anticipated severe adjustment problems, resulting in abrupt and serious job losses and to help areas implement strategies to reverse and halt long term economic deterioration, i.e., natural disasters and military installation closures.

Pre-Treatment/Wastewater Treatment Revolving Loan Fund: Assists local governments in constructing and rehabilitating solid waste and water and sewer facilities necessary for public purposes and for commercial, residential, and industrial developments. GEFA assists local governments by loaning funds at reduced interest rates.

REA Zero Interest Loan Program:

Rural Electrification Administration:

202-720-0410

Blaine Stockton or Mark Wyatt

The program provides grants and zero-interest loans to Rural Electrification Administration (REA) borrowers for public-private projects for economic development and job creation. Eligible applicants include any REA borrower. REA borrowers may apply for funds during the first 14 days of any month. Funds available: $13.025 million is to be available in fiscal year 1994 in the loan program and over $19 million in the grant program.

Assists local governments in constructing and rehabilitating solid waste and water and sewer facilities necessary for public purposes and for commercial, residential, and industrial development. Eligible applicants are cities, counties, solid waste and water and sewer authorities in the state of Georgia.

GEFA Water/Sewer Loan Program: Proceeds from the sale of state general obligation bonds and repayments from outstanding loans provide the funds from which we make loans throughout the year. This interest rate is set at the rate of the most recent sale of Georgia's general obligation bonds. The current rate is 5.43% The loan maximum is $1 million and the maximum term is 20 years. GEFA places a high priority on projects that: (1) are necessary to accommodate a new or existing industry or employer who needs water or sewer service; and, (2) are submitted by cities 20,000 and under and counties 50,000 and under in population. The total amount of loans made is dependent upon the availability of funds at any given time.

GEFA Environmental Emergency Loan Program: This loan program has an interest rate of 2.0%. These funds are available at any time and they are earmarked for projects needed to protect the community's health or safety. The maximum loan amount is $100,000. The maximum repayment period is 10 years.

GEFA State Revolving Fund (SRF) Program:

GEFA manages a 4.0% rate loan program for wastewater projects. The maximum term is 20 years. Because the funds originate as a federal grant to the State, there are some federal requirements attached. An administrative fee of 4.0% of the project cost is charged; this may be added to the amount loaned to the applicant by GEFA. The maximum loan amount is $12,000,000.

State Money and Help For Your Business

GEFA Construction Loan Program: GEFA can loan up to $1,000,000 to a community for an interim loan as long as the applicant has a known source of permanent financing. Such a project may later be eligible for GEFA permanent financing under our Regular Program. The Construction Loan Program interest rate is 4.5%. Work may begin on a project to be financed by GEFA even before a loan commitment is made. Applicants must follow GEFA's minimal bid procedures as outlined in the loan contract's "Appendix C", except for Emergency Loans. Please contact EPD's Ken Bryan at 404-656-4769 if you plan to proceed prior to having the loan commitment from GEFA.

GEFA Recycling and Solid Waste Facilities Loan Program: GEFA's solid waste loan program finances multi-jurisdictional solid waste management solutions, particularly facilities that help minimize the waste stream. The maximum loan amount is $1 million, the maximum term is 20 years. The interest rate is 5.43%. Applications are being accepted at this time.

GEFA Recycling and Waste Reduction Grants: Grants are available that help local governments build facilities and purchase equipment for new recycling or waste reduction programs.

Assistance in cutting bureaucratic red tape. Information and expertise in dealing with state, federal, and local agencies. Targets business populations such as minorities, women, start-ups and home based enterprises, providing, or referring to the appropriate technical, management and/or financial assistance program.

The Economic Development Resource Catalog is available which provides financing programs that are available to Illinois communities and local governments.

Specific telephone numbers are located next to the program where applicable. If not noted, contact the above number.

The Participation Loan Program, the Minority Women and Disabled Participation Loan Program and the Development Corporation Participation Loan Program provide economic development assistance through banks, development corporations and other lenders to Illinois small businesses which will provide employment opportunities for Illinois citizens. The Department of Commerce and Community Affairs (DCCA) can participate in small business loans up to 25 percent or the total amount of a project, but not less than $10,000 or more than $750,000.

State Money and Help For Your Business

Minority, women and disabled participations may not exceed 50 percent of the project, subject to a maximum of $50,000. DCCA's participation in a Development Corporation Loan must be less than 50 percent of the Development Corporation's loan, not to exceed 25 percent of the total project or $750,000 maximum. Funds available through the programs can be used for a number of business activities, including purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, working capital, purchase of land, construction or renovation of buildings, etc. Funds cannot be used for debt refinancing or contingency funding.

DCCA has designed these programs to encourage lenders (banks or development corporations) to make loans that they otherwise would not make for a variety of reasons. All loan servicing, except some necessary reports, is handled by the local lender. The whole process is designed to be simple and efficient.

Any for profit small business operating in the State of Illinois which has, including its affiliates, fewer than 500 full-time employees is eligible. A minority, women, or disabled business is a business which is at least 51 percent owned by one or more minority, women or disabled persons and the management and daily operations of the business are controlled by one or more of the minority, women or disabled persons who own it. Minority shall mean a person who is a citizen or lawful permanent resident of the United States and who is African American, Hispanic, Asian American, American Indian or Alaskan Native. Disabled shall mean a person with a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of the major life activities of an individual.

DCCA will, if necessary, subordinate its lien position in the event of default to the primary financing institution but typically will not accept less than a second lien position. DCCA will generally agree to accept a shared subordinated lien position with a Development Corporation but typically will not accept less than a shared second lien position.

The lender will set its rate ("Lender Rate") according to its normal lending guidelines. DCCA will establish its interest rate to be paid on its participation, which may or may not be the same as the rate charged by the lender.

The lender will set its terms according to its normal lending guidelines. DCCA will match these terms but typically will not participate for more than ten years.

Development Corporations provide financing to supplement commercial lending and support economic development. They may specialize in development and rehabilitation of housing or commercial real estate, investment in or lending to businesses, or related activities. Development Corporations are most often public and bank sponsored and funded financial institutions. They serve as a source of supplemental business capital for small businesses whose credit requirements cannot be adequately served by conventional lending institutions.

DCCA is committed to the establishment of Community Development Corporations and supports their efforts through the Development Corporation Programs. Each Development Corporation is locally managed and establishes its own operating procedures and lending criteria. Development Corporations are established or emerging throughout the state. For information about Development Corporations in your area, contact the Development Corporation Program Administrator at 217-524-0165; TDD 800-285-6055.

Each loan originated and submitted to DCCA for funding assistance must be compliance with the following criteria:

A. The project for which loan funds will be used would not be undertaken unless the loan is provided.

- B. DCCA's participation will cause a project to be undertaken which has the potential to create or retain substantial employment in Illinois or to modernize or improve the competitiveness of the borrower in relation to the amount of the loan.
- C. The borrower is a new plant start-up, modernization, expansion or a new venture opportunity in Illinois and is not a relocation of an existing business from another site within the State of Illinois unless that relocation results in substantial employment growth.
- D. The borrower has demonstrated to the lender that it is ready to implement the project for which the loan is being made and that it has the financial ability to carry out the project.

The lender will be responsible for the review and approval of the credit, collateral, security and documentation, determination of eligibility, and for the verification of the information in the application. DCCA will review the information submitted by the lender for its decision on the participation request.

An applicant may apply for a loan through a bank, development corporation or other lender. The lender applies to DCCA for a participation. All information included with the original application will remain confidential consistent with the Small Business Development Act and Illinois Freedom of Information Act.

International Finance Assistance Programs:

Office of Export Development Finance: Assists exporters to secure financing sources and to expedite such financing. Provides counseling on state and federal resources and helps match exports with financiers and credit insurance organizations. Also assists in assembly of loan packages and issues related to export financing.

Enterprise Zone Program

Purpose of the program is to stimulate economic growth and neighborhood revitalization at the local level. Numerous state incentives are offered to encourage companies to locate or expand in enterprise zones. Local units of government typically offer additional incentives to further encourage economic growth and investment in the local enterprise zone.

Industrial Revenue Bonds: Provide tax exempt low interest loans for manufacturers. Funds can be used for purchase of land, manufacturing machinery and equipment, facility construction, construction-related charges, and purchase of used buildings. Minimum loan amount $1.5 million, maximum is $10 million.

Illinois Venture Capital Fund: Provides seed capital for enterprises seeking to develop and test new products, processes, technologies and inventions.

Direct Loan Program: IDFA provides supplemental financing for small and medium-sized businesses undertaking a fixed-asset project which will result in increase employment opportunities. Can finance up to 30 percent of a fixed asset project, not to exceed $250,000.

Employee Ownership Assistance Act: Designed to encourage employees of plants which are about to be closed to acquire the facility and operate it as an employee-owned business. The program can provide small grants to fund feasibility studies and direct loans for up to 50 percent of the acquisition cost.

Title IX Revolving Loan Fund: Projects up to $100,000 to manufacturers in areas designated by the Federal Economic Development Administration. Fixed interest rate of 7.5%. Loan maturities up to 10 years.

Business Development Loan: Projects to $5,000 to $25,000 to small companies in Cook or Williamson counties for building renovation, and the purchase and installation of machinery and equipment. Borrowers required to inject 20% equity. Interest rate is fixed at 7.5%.

Programs For Business

Direct Loan: Offers supplemental financing to small and mid-sized companies for expansion or modernization projects. Can be used to finance the acquisition of land, buildings, and machinery and equipment. Program contributes up to 30% of a project's fixed-asset costs, up to $250,000, in conjunction with conventional bank financing.

Commercial Lease: IDFA purchases up to $200,000 of new equipment and leases that equipment to a business over a designated period of time. At the end of the lease, the lessee has the option of purchasing the equipment by remitting 10% of the original purchase price to IDFA.

Rural Development Loan: IDFA finances businesses in rural communities with populations of less than 25,000. The loan contributes up to 75% of a project's fixed-asset costs, up to $150,000. Long-term financing is available at 6% fixed-rate of interest.

Micro Loan Program: Provides small and emerging businesses with capital for start-up or expansion purposes. Loans up to $25,000 are available for the purchase of fixed assets, inventory, and working capital.

Solid Waste Disposal Revenue Bonds: IDFA issues tax-exempt Solid Waste Disposal Revenue Bonds on behalf of privately owned solid waste disposal companies which provide services to the general public. Funds may be used for acquisition of fixed assets, including land, building, and equipment, as well as building construction or renovation.

Multi-Family Housing Bonds: Tax-exempt bonds for housing developers that provide housing to low and moderate income residents. Funds can be used to purchase, build, or rehabilitate housing developments. Long term financing at rates below prime.

Programs For Units of Local Government

Bonds: IDFA offers local governments cost-efficient and time efficient ways to finance vital improvement projects. Bonds carry a double tax-exemption, and low interest rates.

501 Lease Program

Leases: IDFA's tax-exempt leases are for low cost projects ranging from $100,000 to $1 million. IDFA can help finance a variety of real estate and equipment purchases, such as equipment or water towers.

Tax/Revenue Anticipation Notes: To finance short-term working capital needs. Allows local governments to realize cash management savings.

Programs For Not-For-Profit Corporations

I Wanna Start My Own Business

Bonds: Tax-exempt bonds on behalf of qualified not-for-profit corporations at interest rates significantly lower than conventional financing. Proceeds can be used to purchase, construct, renovate or equip a facility for use by the not-for-profit corporation in its operations.

Leases: Tax-exempt leasing is an effective alternative to bond financing for transactions which are smaller in project size or exclusively for equipment needs.

Tax Credits

Illinois Department of Revenue

217-782-3128

State Investment Credit: Investment tax credit against Illinois' Personal Property Replacement Income Tax for purchases of property, including buildings, used in manufacturing, mining, or retail businesses.

State Investment and Jobs Credits: Tax credits against Illinois' Personal Property Replacement Income Tax for purchases of property, including buildings, used in manufacturing, mining or retail businesses if the base employment of the firm has increased at least one percent over the preceding year. This tax credit benefits those employers who place new property in service and also increases their employment.

Training Expenses Credit: An income tax credit of 1.6 percent of qualified educational or vocational training costs accrued or paid for employee training in semi-technical, technical, semi-skilled or skilled fields.

Agricultural Development Corporation: Issues tax-exempt revenue bonds for financing agricultural enterprises. May finance farm land, equipment, buildings, improvements and additions, and breeding stock. For some projects being a first-time farmer is required.

Indiana Capital Assistance for Small Enterprises Program: Provides working capital in the form of grants and loans to small business owners.

Industrial Revenue Bonds: Issues tax-exempt bonds for financing industrial development projects. Bonds are payable from project revenues. Projects are generally manufacturing enterprises.

Investment Incentive Program: Provides loans for low-interest loans to expanding to re-locating businesses. Grants or loans are made to eligible cities, towns, and counties which then make the loan to the firm to finance land, or buildings and equipment.

Enterprise Zones: Designed to help revitalize specific distressed areas and to create jobs for zone residents. There are currently fourteen enterprise zones. Through this program there are prime business sites available to meet a wide variety of facility requirements. Some of the tax and financial incentives offered to businesses locating in an enterprise zone are as follows:

Gross Income Tax Exemption: Businesses new to an enterprise zone are exempt from the gross income tax, and all enterprise zone income exceeding the income earned in the zone prior to its designation is exempt from the gross income tax.

Employment Expense Call: Income tax credit for the lesser of 10 percent of resident employee wages or $1,500 per employee.

Inventory Tax Credit: Property tax credit in the amount of depreciable personal tax liability on inventory in an enterprise zone.

Equity Investment Credit: Individual investors receive up to a 30 percent income tax credit for the purpose of equity in start-up or expanding enterprise zone firms.

I Wanna Start My Own Business

There are also other tax incentives available for businesses not located in an Enterprise Zone such as Inventory/Interstate Inventory Tax Exemption, and Property Tax Abatement.

International Trade Development Office:

Foreign Trade Zones (FTZ): An FTZ is a secured area legally outside of U.S. Customs territory. Foreign and domestic goods may enter a zone to be stored, distributed, exhibited, combined with other foreign and domestic products, or used in other manufacturing operations. While the goods are in the FTZ, no U.S. duties are paid on them. FTZs are located in Indianapolis, South Bend, and Burns International Harbor.

Export Finance Program: Provides short-terms loans for export orders up to a maximum of $500,000. This enables Indiana companies to offer more advantageous terms on letters of credit to foreign companies.

Trade Show Assistance Program: Provides financial assistance to companies planning to attend trade shows overseas. It is designed to help small and medium-sized companies realize their export potential through participation in international trade fair and exhibitions. Companies can be reimbursed for up to $5,000 of the cost directly attributable to the trade show.

International Business Education Program: Provides financial assistance to Indiana businesses seeking marketing analyses, technical information for competitive and marketing assistance or education programs on international issues. Funding is provided to Indiana firms to work with a state university on these programs.

The Capital Access Program: Designed to enable lenders to make business loans that carry a higher degree of risk than loans made under customary lending policies. Provides lenders with default protection that encourages them to extend financing they would not ordinarily offer. Financing is available to businesses that would otherwise be unable to obtain loans. The borrower makes a premium payment of between 1.5% and 3.5% of the loan amount, the lender matches that payment, and the Indiana Development Finance Authority (IDFA) matches the combined total of the borrower's and the lender's payments. For each loan, the total reserve contribution can range from a minimum of 6% of the loan to a maximum of 17.5%.

Industrial Development Project Loan Guaranty Program: The IDFA may guarantee a variety of financial instruments (loans, leases, bonds, letters of credit) made for the benefit of industrial development projects, mining operations, or agricultural operations that involve the processing of agricultural products. The most important requirement is that the financing encourages the creation or retention of employment in Indiana. Maximum amount for a guaranty is limited to $2,000,000. Most guaranties provided are for amounts less than $500,000. Maximum term: 20 years.

Underground Storage Tank Guaranty Program: The IDFA may guarantee a loan made to a petroleum marketer, petroleum retailer or political subdivision for the upgrade or replacement of underground storage tanks. Maximum amount is $200,000. Plans for the upgrade for tank replacement must be approved by the Indiana Department of Fire and Building Services.

Agricultural Loan and Rural Development Loan Guaranty Program: A loan made for the benefit of an agricultural enterprise or rural development project. Maximum amount is $300,000.

Bond Program: Types of projects for which the IDFA may issue bonds include the construction of new buildings, the acquisition or expansion of existing buildings, the acquisition of machinery, equipment or other fixtures, or the construction of pollution control facilities. A fee of $2,500 is charged by the IDFA, and requires the entity for which the bonds are issued to pay the Authority's issuer's counsel fees.

Export Finance Program: The Indiana Development Finance Authority and the International Trade Division (ITD) work in partnership with the Export-Import Bank of the United States (Eximbank) to provide export financing assistance to qualified exporters. The partnership assists Indiana exporters to obtain Eximbank guaranties and loans by packaging and submitting applications to Eximbank.

State Private Activity Bond Ceiling: The state ceiling (sometimes called "volume cap") is the maximum dollar amount of tax-exempt private activity bonds that may be issued within a year. All bond-issuing authorities must report to the IDFA when issuing tax-exempt private activity bonds. A fee of $500 per report is charged to cover administrative costs. At the end of each year, if the dollar amount of bonds issued is less than the state ceiling, the remaining volume may be carried forward for a period of 3 years by those entities planning to issue exempt facility bonds, qualified mortgage bonds, qualified student loan bonds or qualified redevelopment bonds.

State Bridge Grants for Innovative Research (SBIR): Kentucky businesses participating in Small Business Innovative Research contracts with federal agencies are eligible for state bridge grants. Grants bridge the period between the completion of a company's award for the first phase of a federal research project and the second phase award to help eliminate interruptions in the firm's development and growth in highly competitive technologies.

Kentucky Jobs Development Authority: Service or technology related companies such as data processing, research and development, and other non-manufacturing companies are eligible. Companies must provide a minimum of 75% of their services for persons located outside the state and must employ a minimum of 25 persons. The company receives a 100% credit against state income tax produced by the project, and a wage assessment equal to 5% of the gross payroll as inducements. These are limited to 50% of the approved costs or 10 years, whichever is first.

Kentucky Rural Economic Development Authority (KREDA) Incentives: Corporations, partnerships, sole partnerships, or business trusts that establish new manufacturing plants or expand existing manufacturing operations in qualifying Kentucky counties are eligible. Funds can be used for land, buildings, fixtures, and equipment for new and expanded manufacturing, together with storage, warehousing, and related office facilities. Costs can include all expenditures for land, site development, utility extensions, architectural and engineering services, construction or rehabilitation, and purchases and installation of equipment and fixtures. Companies can receive credits against Kentucky state income tax. Approved projects can be financed by conventional financing or by state bonds with either a lease or lease-purchase agreement.

Kentucky Industrial Development Authority: Any manufacturing company which is locating or expanding operations in Kentucky is eligible. Eligible projects are defined as land acquisition, building construction and fixtures used primarily for manufacturing purposes. Other associated costs may also be included. As an incentive, the company is allowed a 100% tax credit against Kentucky income tax which arises from the project.

Kentucky Industrial Revitalization Authority: Existing manufacturing companies which employ 25 persons and are faced with an imminent closure due to lack of productivity or profitability by outdated equipment are eligible. Building improvements, equipment purchases or other elements allowing the company to stay in business are eligible projects. The company receives a combination of a Kentucky income tax credit and the right to invoke an employee wage assessment equal to 6% of the gross payroll.

Certified Development Companies (CDCs) are SBA certified and intended to assist communities, both urban and rural, by stimulating the growth and expansion of small businesses primarily through financial assistance. Financial assistance may be provided through the Development Company loan programs.

Certified Development Corporations also package applications for other programs. Each administering organization sets its own policies regarding the targeting of particular industries.

Regional Revolving Loan Funds: Capitalized with either public or private grants. These pools of money are loaned to expanding companies in order to fill financing gaps that will allow viable projects to proceed.

SBA 504 Program: Provides loans using 50 percent conventional bank financing, 40 percent SBA involvement through Certified Development Companies, and 10 percent owner equity. Maximum loan amount is $750,000. Loan can be used for fixed assets (land and building, construction, machinery and equipment, and renovation/expansion).

* Child Care Loans: Coastal Enterprises, Inc. is able to make loans to child care providers to expand or improve a child care business and to prospective child care providers to start-up a business.

The Massachusetts Finance Development Agency is the result of a merger between the Massachusetts Government Land Bank and the Massachusetts Industrial Finance Agency (MIFA). The Land Bank and MIFA have combined programs and pooled resources to become the states primary source of financing for economic development projects. The agency has the capability to make $150 million in direct loans and guarantees and can issue some $500 million in tax-exempt bonds annually. Financing and assistance programs available include:

Predevelopment Assistance Funding Program: This provides pre-construction monies for economic development projects. Ranging from $5,000 to $25,000, predevelopment funds can be used for a variety of purposes including environmental testing, market analysis and traffic studies.

Direct Loan Program: Makes direct loans available to economic development projects. Eligible loan recipients include private companies, municipalities, nonprofit institutions, and community development corporations provided that projects meet public purpose criteria. Areas of lending include real estate, working capital, and equipment financing. The Agency also can make direct loans for targeted industries and needs including minority-owned and operated enterprises, seafood processors, on-site corporate child care, and mixed use projects.

Loan Guarantee Programs:

The Massachusetts Export Finance Guarantee Fund: Provides working capital loan guarantees to lenders making loans to Massachusetts exporters.

The Massachusetts Export Partnership Program: Provides lenders with up to 90% EximBank guarantee on working capital loans to exporters.

The EximBank Umbrella Policy: Provides insurance on foreign receivables.

Mortgage Insurance Program: Leverages private capital to help qualified businesses finance fixed asset expansion projects. The program provides lenders with additional collateral in the form of an insurance policy on a portion of the loan. Mortgage insurance is particularly attractive for financing equipment with low collateral value.

Emergency Technology Fund Guarantee: Targeted to companies in cutting edge industries, including but not limited to biotechnology, advanced materials, and advanced environmental technologies.

Bond Programs:

Tax-Exempt Industrial Development Bonds (IDBs): Available for manufacturers and environmental enterprises undertaking capital expansion projects such as land and equipment purchases, and the acquisition, renovation and construction of buildings.

Non-Profit Tax-Exempt Bonds: Eligible non-profit organizations can use tax-exempt bonds for purchase of land, buildings or new equipment, construction or renovation of buildings, or to refinance existing debt.

Tax-Exempt Lease/Purchase Equipment Financing: IDB-eligible and non-profit organizations can access tax-exempt lease/purchase financing for a variety of equipment needs.

Community Development Action Grant: Grants are made to cities and towns for public actions in support of private investments. Projects should create or retain long-term employment and/or housing opportunities and revitalize distressed areas.

Community Capital Fund (CCF): CCF is designed to generate and/or retain jobs in small communities. The program provides flexible structured debt financing for businesses which provide, create or retain jobs for low to moderate income residents. CCF can fund up to one third of the total project cost and the loans can be used for purchase of equipment, acquisition of real estate, new construction or rehabilitation, working capital or refinancing.

Massachusetts Downtown Partnership: Seeks to revitalize and strengthen the business and community life or urban centers in cities and towns, while preserving the state's heritage of historic downtown buildings. Funds are offered on a sliding scale for professional staff and technical assistance to non-profit organizations working on downtown revitalization. Staff funding decreases over the life of the three year program, while technical assistance is focused on different issues each year.

Economic Development Industrial Corporations (EDIC): Enables cities and towns to undertake development projects that will generate jobs and stabilize communities. With EDIC, municipalities can designate economic development areas and shape plans for their development. EDICs have the authority to negotiate payments in-lieu of property taxes and may also issue bonds to finance the development of eligible projects, which very often include industrial parks.

Alternative Investments Division:

Michigan Venture Capital Fund Program

517-373-4330

Invests in high growth, high margin companies with a potential return on investment of 35 percent or more.

Business and Industrial Development Corporations (BIDCOs): BIDCOs offer an array of financing options that can be structured flexibly to suit the needs of individual companies. In addition, they can provide management assistance to help businesses grow. As a privately owned and operated corporation, each BIDCO establishes its own criteria for the kinds of businesses it will finance and for the types of loans and investments it will make.

Industrial Development Revenue Bond Program (IDRB): IDRBs are tax-exempt bonds issued on behalf of the borrower by the Michigan Strategic Fund and purchased by private investors. These loans can be made for manufacturing and not-for-profit corporation projects, cogeneration solid waste projects, and solid waste facilities. Bond proceeds can generally be used to acquire land, building and equipment.

Micro Loan Program: Under this program, short-term loans of up to $25,000 are made to small businesses for the purchase of machinery and equipment, furniture and fixtures, inventory, supplies and working capital, but not to pay existing debts. Start up, newly established, and growing small businesses are eligible.

Low Documentation Loan Program (LowDoc): Low Doc is designed to simplify the application process for Small Business Administration (SBA) guaranteed loans providing a rapid response from SBA. The program applies to loans of under $100,000 made by banks and guaranteed up to 80% by the SBA. Any business is eligible if its average annual sales for the preceding three years did not exceed $5 million and it employs 100 or less, including owners, partners and principles. Loans can be made for an existing business, a business purchase or for a business start up.

Business Financing:

Loan Guarantees: Designed for "middle risk" projects which have good growth potential, but cannot obtain private credit financing, and are limited to a maximum of $400,000 to $800,000, or 90% of the loan.

Action Fund Loans: Provided when alternative funding sources have been maximized. These loans are a last resort and are limited to a maximum of 30%, $400,000, or $20,000 per job.

Tax Exempt Industrial Revenue Bonds: Provide long-term, low rate financing of fixed assets up to $10 million per project.

Missouri Capital Access Program: Helps finance early-stage business ventures which have difficulty acquiring conventional financing. The program helps decrease the risk by spreading possible losses between the lending institution, the borrower and the state.

Micro Enterprise Loan Program: Provides peer review loans from $500 to $7,500. The institution-based loan program awards loans of up to $15,000 to businesses employing fewer than 10 people.

Seed Capital Fund: Investors may receive a 30% credit on their investment to a company in a seed, follow-up, or venture capital state.

Capital Tax Credit: Investors may receive a 30% credit of the amount of their investments in an eligible small business. The maximum credit per investor is $50,000, and the maximum credit per business is $150,000. An eligible business must have less than $2 million in revenue in the prior fiscal year and be manufacturing, assembly, processing, research and development, or a qualifying type of service business.

Neighborhood Assistance Program (NAP)/Economic Development: Tax credits of 50% (70% in rural areas) are awarded to contributors who donate cash, property, or services to a 501(c)(3) non-profit corporation. The contribution must be for buildings or machinery/equipment to be leased to a company.

Public Infrastructure Financing: Industrial Infrastructure Grants awarded under the Community Development Block Grant program are available up to $500,000, or $10,000 per job, or 40% of the company's project cost, to provide essential public infrastructure. Priority is generally given to manufacturing.

New and Expanding Business Facility Tax Credits: Ten-year income tax credits of $75 to $100 per new job and $75 to $100 per $100,000 new investment for certain companies expanding or locating in the state.

Enterprise Zone Tax Credits: Communities may apply for designation as enterprise zones providing business income tax credits which could amount to $1,600 per employee if certain conditions are met.

Economic Development Credit: A contributor may receive a 50% credit for a contribution to the Missouri Development finance Board, which may then loan the proceeds to a private company or provide a grant to a public entity for approved projects.

Research: Prepares detailed information for prospective businesses on labor availability, wage levels, transportation services, shipping costs, taxes, utility rates, construction costs, and other areas of interest.

Missouri Economic Development Information System (MEDIS): Computerized information system consisting of databases including industrial building and land sites, demographic data, utility rate comparisons, market share data, various business listings and cost of living comparisons.

Microbusiness Finance

406-444-4325

Montana micro business companies with less than 10 full-time employees and annual gross revenues under $500,000 can receive loans of up to $35,000. This loan program is designed to fund economically sound business projects, that because of their small size, are unable to obtain regular commercial financing.

Business Location and Recruitment

406-444-4187

The program supplies information about such topics as taxation, labor supply and wages, vendor support, available sites and facilities, and state and local assistance programs.

Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Economic Development Program 406-444-2787

Each year competitive grant program awards approximately $2.7 million to Montana cities, towns and counties for lending to private business projects. The CDBG program also administers a $1.4 million revolving loan fund.

Trade Office

406-444-4380

The Trade program identifies opportunities for trade, both worldwide and domestically, and provides representation, information and technical assistance. The office works to increase Montana's export sales, international tourism and inward investment, serving mainly small and medium-sized firms new to international and national markets.

Made in Montana Program

federally guaranteed portion of the loan to the Board at a pre-established rate. This program provides fixed-rate financing at lower-than-average interest rates. Proceeds may be used for the purchase of land, buildings, equipment, machinery, building expansion or repair, inventory, or funds for working capital.

Economic Development Linked Deposit Program: State funds are placed in long-term deposit with approved financial institutions to back-up loans to specific borrowers. The proceeds from this fixed-rate loan can be used for working capital, interim construction, inventory, site development, and acquisition of machinery, equipment and buildings, among other uses.

Business Loan Participation Program: May be used to finance commercial, multi-family or SBA 504 loans, it allows approved Montana financial institutions the opportunity to "sell" up to 80 percent of an eligible business loan to the Board of Investments. The Board then owns a participation interest in both the financing and the security for an approved commercial loan that is serviced by the originating financial institution. Funds are targeted to long-term fixed-rate loans that have the potential to positively benefit economic development within the State.

In-State Investment Program: Makes four types of loans available to borrowers and offers an interest rate reduction if the project creates jobs. The job credit interest rate reduction is equal to 0.05% for each job created that employs a Montana resident, up to a maximum reduction of 2.5%.

Local Government Infrastructure Loan Program: Offers local governments long-term financing for infrastructure construction/improvements in such expenditures are necessary to accommodate a new or expanded business employing at least 50 full-time, permanent employees. Minimum loan size cannot exceed $10,000 per job created.

Industrial Development Revenue Bond Financing: Tax exempt revenue bond financing through the Business Finance Authority (BFA). Advantages include 100% financing. Lower interest costs to the company and no dilution of equity. Eligible applicants are manufacturing facilities, facilities for the disposal of waste material; small-scale power facilities for producing electric energy; water-powered electric generating facilities; water facilities for the collecting, purifying, storing or distributing of water for use by the general public. Bond proceeds may be used to finance the cost of land, buildings and equipment, as well as bond counsel fees and the development and financing costs of the project.

Guaranteed Loans

The Guarantee of Loans to Small Business Program: Works in conjunction with the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA). For businesses seeking guarantees on loan amounts that exceed the SBA's capacity. The BFA guarantees amount shall not exceed 90% of the original principal amount of the loan. The BFA guarantee amount and the SBA guarantee amount shall not exceed $1,500,000. The loan amount used to finance working capital shall not exceed $500,000. There is a non-refundable application fee of $250.

Machinery and Equipment: Guarantees up to 35 percent of the cost of new industrial machinery and equipment Maximum guarantee for any single project is $600,000.

The Capital Access Program (CAP): For small businesses experiencing difficulty obtaining lines of credit and funds for start-up or expansion. Encourages banks to make loans to businesses with more than conventional risk by creating an account designed to protect the lender. The account reduces lender risk by decreasing the bank's exposure on the loan. CAP is available to businesses with annual revenues of less than $5,000,000. Total loan amount may not exceed $500,000.

The Guarantee Asset Program (GAP): Designed to provide assistance to capital intensive businesses experiencing difficulty obtaining normal bank financing. BFA will guarantee up to 90% of a loan made by a bank to a qualifying business. The borrower must have at least 25 full time employees. No more than 40% of the gross proceeds of the loan may be used to finance working capital. The maturity of a loan shall not exceed 5 years. The terms of the loan will be determined by the participating financial institution.

The Temporary Loans to Business Program: The BFA will warehouse taxable and tax-exempt bond issues and package them into a composite bond. By placing bonds through the BFA, businesses can minimize their financing costs. The total principal amount of the loan shall not exceed $2,000,000. Interested businesses should arrange to meet with the Senior Credit Officer of the BFA to discuss application procedures.

Secondary Market for Loans by Local Development Organizations Program: Local Development Organizations (LDO) can sell their existing loans to the BFA and use the proceeds for loans for business development. Any LDO dedicated to the promotion and development of business is eligible for this program. The applying LDO must have a detailed plan describing how the proceeds of the sale will be used to promote business and maintain and/or create employment opportunities. A non-refundable application fee of $250 will be charged for each loan submitted for purchase consideration.

Assistance to Local Development Organizations Program: To help LDOs create and maintain employment opportunities, the BFA may lend money to LDOs for the purpose of developing and expanding business opportunities in their market area. By providing LDOs with additional resources for financing, the BFA can effectively foster economic growth through existing organizations dedicated to the development of business. Any local development organization dedicated to the promotion and development of business is eligible for this program. The terms of the loan to the business will be determined by the participating LDO.

Working Capital Line of Credit Guarantee (WAG): WAG allows participating banks or lending institutions to receive a guarantee of up to 75% for a working capital line of credit, not to exceed $2,000,000. The line of credit must be secured with accounts receivable, inventory and/or fixed assets acceptable to the participating bank and the BFA. The borrowing base may not exceed 90% of qualifying accounts receivable and 60% of inventory.

Technology Transfer Merit Program: All 16 sponsored programs of the Commission compete annually for incremental grants of up to $300,000 to support the movement of their technology into the marketplace. Among the business sectors which have received support through this program are plastics processing, software publishing, food processing, precision metalworking, and biotech and advanced materials.

Innovation Partnership Program: This is a competitive grant program aimed at encouraging faculty at New Jersey universities to conduct research in direct collaboration with New Jersey firms. Companies whose research interest are subsidized in this way are asked to provide 1-1 match support. However, companies may match the Commission's cash contribution "in kind" with services, equipment, or scientific supplies.

Small Business Assistance Vouchers: New Jersey based technology firms can receive vouchers from the commission for $1,000 worth of technical assistance from a network of approved providers. The vouchers represent a currency by which small companies can explore the resources of the Commission's advanced Technology Centers and other sponsored programs.

Entrepreneurs Forum: Provides assistance to technology business persons by offering critiques of business plans, panel discussions, networking opportunities, and mentoring.

SBIR Assistance: Provides technical assistance and "bridge loans" to New Jersey companies participating in the Federal Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) Program. Assistance is administered through a private consultant.

 New Jersey Commission on Science and

20 West State St., CN 832

Trenton, NJ 08625-0832

609-984-1671

Helps small, technology-based companies in their formative years. Services include bridge grants for while they are waiting for the next installment of their SBIR funds; the Washington Technical Liaison, who helps companies obtain the SBIR grants; and Innovation Partnership Grants, which provide funds to assist academic researchers involved in projects of use to industry. The state's major scientific research centers at the New Jersey Institute of Technology, Rutgers State University Business Innovation Center, and the Stevens Institute of Technology are linked to the program. The New Jersey Entrepreneur's Forum, supported by the Commission, gives new companies the benefit of advice and assistance from experienced business people.

 Casino Reinvestment Development Authority (CRDA)

P.O. Box 749

Atlantic City, NJ 08401

609-347-0500

Funnels a portion of casino revenues into state development projects, by mandatory investment in CRDA taxable or tax-free bonds (1.25 percent of casino gross receipts). CRDA pays interest at 2/3rds of market rate, freeing funds for development use. The CRDA then makes loans to designated municipalities at below-market rate financing.

 New Jersey Department of Commerce and Economic Development

Division of Economic Development

CN-8823

Trenton, NJ 08625

609-292-7757

The New Jersey Department of Commerce and Economic Development works with governmental and private economic development organizations to provide a broad range of technical and other assistance services to the business community. The Division of Economic Development supports existing new Jersey businesses, assisting in their retention and expansion needs, and encourages new companies to locate in the state. In partnership with the state's utilities, academic institutions and local governments, the Division administers two retention programs, the Municipal Business Retention Program and the Business Enhancement Program, designed to help companies run more productive, profitable and growth-oriented operations.

 Division of Development for Small Businesses and Women and Minority Businesses (SWMB)

Department of Commerce and Economic Development

Trenton, NJ 08625

609-292-2470

The SWMB offers a variety of resources to promote and assist in the start-up, growth and expansion of firms that range in size from one to 100 employees. One of SWMB's resources is SAVI-II, a computerized central registry that matches eligible firms with potential buyers in the public and private sectors. The Division also administers New Jersey's unified Certification Program and Set-Aside Program. Both are designed to assist women and minority owned business increase access to state government contract opportunities.

 New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection

CN-402

The Department of Environmental Protection strives to build relationships with the business community that promote both environmental and economic health through cooperation and innovation. These innovative efforts include: issuance of the first facility-wide permit in the nation, which replaces more than five dozen individual permits; amnesty and other programs that encourage compliance without the threat of penalties; and introduction of Alternative Dispute Resolution as a means of resolving permit and other disagreements by mediation.

One-Stop Shop: Provides business with a computer system that displays New Mexico's regulatory framework for firms considering relocation or expansion of their manufacturing operations. It consists of the following on-line computer data: Regulatory Environment Bulletin Board (REBB), financial resources, county profiles, site and building locations, directory of New Mexico manufacturers as well as licensing, permitting and taxation procedures.

Small Business Advocate: Assistance in cutting bureaucratic red tape. Information and expertise in dealing with state, federal, and local agencies.

Revolving Loan Fund: Assists communities with loan funds that are then disbursed to local businesses to encourage development in designated areas. Funds may be used for acquisition of real property, construction, rehabilitation or installation of public facilities, improve community's infrastructure, and other activities that encourage economic development. Maximum loan amount is $250,000 per project.

Economic Development Department:

Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Set-A-Side Loan Program: Grants are awarded to communities in non-metropolitan areas for community development projects in a defined geographic area to create new jobs for low to moderate income persons. In turn, the communities provide low interest gap financing for business start up and expansion.

Enterprise Program: This was enacted to stimulate the creation of new jobs and to revitalize distressed areas in qualified communities and counties throughout New Mexico. A strong public/private partnership and a focused strategic plan allows areas to be redeveloped to enhance the business and job opportunities for local business people and residents. Incentives include: fast-tracked infrastructure development projects, in-plant training programs, tax credits to property owners, financing local enterprise zone projects using the increment method, and local property tax abatement for 10 years on qualified property.

Retention and Expansion Program: Designed to retain and expand those businesses already located in a community can have dramatic economic development results in the local economy. The short term objectives of a local business retention and expansion program include developing a detailed database about local establishments, and solving short term local business problems.

Native American Initiative: Helps enhance tribal economic development and create employment opportunities. A primary focus is identifying federal, state, and private sector resources to help fund tribal economic development activities. Programs are designed and implemented to promote Indian economic potential and establish a business mentor program to enable Indian business efforts. There is also a comprehensive economic profile of each Indian pueblo or reservation and a resource directory for programs available to Indians.

I Wanna Start My Own Business

Main Street Program: Designed in response to the decline of central business districts in Americas small towns. The program is a tool for both community development and historic preservation, and is locally managed and operated. The New Mexico state office provides technical assistance, training and architectural services in partnership with the National Main Street Center.

Rural Readiness Programs: Builds business readiness in communities to ensure their capacity for economic opportunities. A team of economic development professionals working closely with community leaders evaluate the communities readiness and capacity. A plan of action is designed consistent with the communities goals and objectives to achieve economic stability, by utilizing a team process of implementation, assessment of the economic baseline, designing a program of work, training and workshops where appropriate, securing the tools and infrastructure to do the job, such marketing, materials, spec buildings and IRB policies.

Rural Development Response Council: Develops and enhances the cooperative efforts of state, federal, tribal, and local governments with the private sector to revitalize rural New Mexico communities. Goals are focused on business start-up, expansion, retention and attraction, preserving local culture, and strengthening and diversifying natural resource-based economics.

The New York State Urban Development Corporation, New York State Department of Economic Development and the New York Job Development Authority have been merged to form The Empire State Development. Empire State Development provides customer-driven, cost-effective products and services. Their "product line" which includes diagnosing business problems; cutting red tape; financing capital improvements, infrastructure, working capital; equity financing for technology-based start-up firms; productivity improvement; accessing new markets; advice to entrepreneurs, help with business management skills; commercializing new technology; and planning, feasibility studies for local governments, has been reduced from more than 100 programs to 20. The application process for businesses looking for state financial or technical assistance is much simpler, with just one form each for financial and technical assistance. Programs are locally accessible through regional offices. For more information about the state's programs contact the regional office nearest you. Programs and services available from Empire State Development include:

Recycling Market Development: The recycling program is dedicated to raising the productivity and competitiveness of manufacturers by helping companies make capital and/or process improvements that: yield less solid waste; enable the use of recovered materials as feedstocks; and facilitate market growth. New York businesses, not-for-profit organizations and municipal agencies are eligible for financial and technical assistance if they are engaged in: recycling, waste reduction and manufacturing from recycled feedstocks. Funding is available for capital projects; research, development and demonstration projects; and technical assistance projects. Field staff and retained consultants provide the following services: diagnosing the needs of a company; assistance in identifying and accessing materials supplies and new market outlets; in-plant assessments to help companies retool and/or make process adjustments that will enable them to use recovered material feedstocks; and in-plant assistance to help companies institute waste prevention practices.

Ownership Transition Services: Specialists work with business owners to develop suitable succession plans for their companies. Financial consultants provide advice about various succession planning options including: sale or gift to family members; sale to management; sale to outside investors; employee stock ownership plans; or a combination of these techniques. Any New York State business owner or company is eligible for consultation in planning for ownership transition.

Manufacturing Productivity Improvement: Two programs, the Manufacturing Extension Partnership and the industrial Effectiveness program, have been established to assist small and medium-sized manufacturing firms with the identification, development and implementation of improved management and production processes. The goal of these programs is to support businesses in order to: increase productivity and competitiveness; expand market share; and promote job growth and retention. Small to medium-sized New York state manufacturing firms that require outside resources to achieve greater productivity and/or competitiveness are eligible. Services can be provided at no cost, on a cost-shared basis or for a fee. All assistance is tailored to meet the specific needs of the company or industry. Available services include: organization and technical needs assessments; product design and development; manufacturing process and quality improvement; market expansion and product commercialization; information system upgrades; supplier development programs; project management; workforce training programs; technical awareness seminars; and assistance with environmental and other regulatory requirements. The Industrial Effectiveness Program provides financial assistance for private sector consultant expertise based on company need, project scope and company size, with a maximum of $60,000 available to qualified companies.

Linked Deposit: The program provides businesses with affordable capital, based on bank loans made at reduced interest rates, which are subsidized by linked state deposits. Under this program, eligible businesses can obtain loans from commercial banks, savings banks and savings and loan associations at an interest rate that is two or three percentage points lower than the prevailing rate on such loans. Companies will be considered for a linked loan based on: significance of the eligible project for improving the competitive position and profitability of the business; importance of a reduced cost of borrowing to the ability of the applicant to undertake the eligible project; and number of jobs to be created or retained in New York State, or other economic benefits created as a result of the linked loan.

International Trade Development and Investment: Assistance for direct investors; identification of potential sites and buildings; demographic, wage, tax and utility cost data; access to New York's incentive programs, including financing, tax incentives and job training programs; information about the communities under evaluation and introductions to local government officials and private business people; and project coordination and facilitation through a network of regional and foreign offices. Assistance for investors interested in joint venture opportunities or strategic alliances include: identify potential joint venture or strategic alliance candidates; assist with screening candidates by obtaining information; organize and facilitate introductory meetings and communication; and provide access to any New York State assistance programs that may be needed by a new business entity.

Entrepreneurial Assistance: This program encourages the start of new businesses by minorities, women, dislocated workers, public assistance recipients, public housing residents, and young people. It promotes entrepreneurship at centers throughout the state that provide classroom training, counseling, technical assistance and mentoring. Training and technical assistance are provided directly by non-profit organizations and vocational education institutions.

Economic Development Zones/Zone Equivalent Areas: Assistance available includes: investment tax credit of up to 10% may be available on business investments in new or expanded manufacturing facilities in the zone; wage tax credits of up to $1,500 for each new job created; a 25% tax credit is available to taxpayers that make eligible investments or contributions; refunds for 4% state sales tax paid on the purchase of building materials incorporated into the construction or renovation of industrial or commercial facilities; utility rate reduction; real property tax exemption; local sales tax refund of up to 4%

Center for Advanced Technology: The program enhances existing New York State businesses and helps generate new businesses. This is achieved by means of university-industry centers which carry out research and development, education, training and outreach. The specific research and commercialization activities in a particular center are determined by the needs of the target industry and the nature of the technology.

Taxes and Credits: Besides reductions in corporate tax rates, a manufacturer making significant investments in New York can receive investment tax credits that will reduce its effective tax rate to as low as the alternative minimum rate. In addition, machinery, equipment, fuels and utilities used in manufacturing or research and development are exempt from sales or use tax.

Business Ombudsman Services: The business ombudsman service helps small businesses resolve red-tape difficulties in their dealings with all levels of government (federal, state and local). Through a business hotline, the program also directs companies to appropriate economic development assistance sources. Any small business is eligible for assistance that employs 100 people or less; is located in New York State; is independently owned and operated; and is not dominant in its field. The Business Assistance Hotline phone number is 800/STATE NY (800-782-8369).

Skills Training Assistance: Uses of funds include instructional costs, supplies and materials, administration fees, curriculum development and new-hire wages for on-the-job training. Average project awards include $15,000 for an individual company and $25,000 for a group of companies pursuing a common training goal. Priority will be given to small businesses; group projects; businesses located in Economic Development Zone or economically distressed area; companies able to provide full or partial cash match; NYS certified minority and women-owned businesses; and a strategic industry as identified by regionally developed economic development strategic plans.

Regional Technology Councils: Assistance is provided by regionally-based technology business development specialists in conjunction with other state and local economic development organizations, not-for-profit organizations and private consultants. Services are provided to individual companies, groups of companies and through technology business assistance networks. Criteria for selection include: demonstrated need; willingness to contribute resources; and commitment to self-improvement.

Government Market Development Assistance: Procurement assistance service coordinates efforts by all state agencies and authorities to award the greatest possible number of contracts from the states procurement budget to New York State businesses. The service also helps New York State firms compete for and win contracts and subcontracts from the federal government.

Assistance for Minority and Women's Businesses: The procurement program for minority and women's business enterprises promotes equality of economic opportunity by eradication the barriers to state contracting opportunities. The program assists state agencies and their prime contractors who are attempting to meet their procurement goals and identify certified businesses. Eligible businesses are owned at least 51% by US citizens or permanent resident aliens who are women or who belong to one or more minority groups.

A conduit through which needed services are deployed to technology and manufacturing firms in each region. ITCs also help regional companies to apply and compete for federal research grants annually awarded through the SBIR program.

Industrial Technology Extension Services (ITES): 518-474-4349

I Wanna Start My Own Business

Consists of a network of technology specialists located throughout the State, who provide hands-on assistance to manufacturing firms. Technical personnel serve as field "agents", working one-on-one with small and medium sized manufacturing companies to bring the benefits of modern technology to the factory floor. Agents help companies to research, evaluate and implement technology and/or management-related productivity improvements. They also help companies obtain State Industrial Effectiveness Program grants, promote technology transfer with research laboratories and universities and act as the outreach arm of the federally funded Northeast Manufacturing Technology Center.

Northeast Manufacturing Technology Center

(NEMTC): 518-473-9746

A federally sponsored manufacturing technology center which works in conjunction with ITES agents to implement technology in the manufacturing work place. Dedicated to modernizing industry.

New York Photonics Development Corporation (PDC): An independent, not-for-profit organization dedicated to cooperative R&D and commercialization of photonics technologies with the U.S. Air Force and other industrial partners. Works closely with the ITCs to provide effective technology transfer assistance to companies.

Cooperative Finance and Development Programs

Corporation for Innovation Development Program

(CID): 518-473-9741

Supports the formation and growth of new technology companies by providing State investments and leveraged venture capital financing. Eligible firms can receive equity and/or debt financing of $250,000 or more for product marketing and development. Matching funding at a rate of 3 to 1 is required. Companies supported with CID investments comprise a diverse group of technologies, ranging from the manufacturers of three-dimensional computer displays to the exploration of novel treatments for life-threatening diseases.

Technology and Disabilities Program: 518-473-9741

Supports the development of highly promising, creative products and processes that are helping N.Y. citizens with disabilities lead more enjoyable lives. Companies may apply for financing to further develop products which meet these criteria. Investment financing of up to $100,000 per project is available to companies, which may collaborate with a not-for-profit laboratory on innovative technologies with a high potential for commercialization.

Venture Line: 518-486-5438

Through a computerized database, VentureLine provides a convenient and confidential means of matching the financial needs of entrepreneurs and other businesses to the capital resources of investors and venture capital firms. Each week, the VentureLine database is reviewed to spot potential matches between applicant businesses and investors. Investors have the opportunity to confidentially review business applications before engaging in negotiations. Both businesses and entrepreneurs can explore financing opportunities, collaborative ventures, and licensing arrangements.

Special Projects and Initiatives

The Science and Technology Foundation supports various Legislative initiative and other special projects targeted at the growth of N.Y. State's technology infrastructure. These activities are:

Long Island Research Institute: A not-for-profit consortium of Brookhaven National Laboratory,

State Money and Help For Your Business

Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory, the Center for Medical Biotechnology at SUNY Stony Brook, and North Shore University Hospital working cooperatively to promote technology transfer and the commercialization of technologies from the four institutions.

Long Island High Technology Incubator: This modern facility provides young, growing technology firms with state-of-the-art equipment and laboratory space for development in a highly supportive environment.

Marist College Small Business Network: Supports the development of a computer network to assist small businesses throughout N.Y., enabling member firms to retrieve database information, marketplace information, and to communicate with other members. An Electronic Incubator has been established to assist defense related firms, diversify and develop new products and markets.

New York Tech-Scan: A corporate recruitment and economic development tool that serves as an electronic catalogue and source book on N.Y. State's high technology resources. Designed to provide easy access to wide range of information on the State's scientific and technological assets, its standing nationally and internationally, and its comparative advantage in key high-tech industries and critical technologies.

On-Campus Networks Initiative: A project to conduct a needs assessment of establishing an on-campus computer networks system among New York's colleges and universities.

Center for Integrated Manufacturing Studies: Designed to help small to medium-sized manufacturing firms adopt new technologies to become more competitive.

Syracuse Metropolitan Development Authority/Syracuse University Research Park: Includes requisite infrastructural planning for future development of a research park on a 90 acre parcel within close proximity to several major educational and medical institutions in the Syracuse area, including Syracuse University, Crouse Irving Memorial Hospital and Hutchings Psychiatric Center.

Long-term, Fixed Rate Financing Program: Allows North Carolina banks to win long-term fixed rate certificates of deposit from the State Treasurer and then re-lend the same money on a long-term, fixed rate basis to small businesses.

Industrial Revenue Bonds: Tax-exempt long-term, low interest financing available to manufacturing companies that will have a measurable economic impact on the community. Industrial firms may finance projects related to product manufacturing, distribution centers, or research and development facilities necessary to the manufacturing process. Generally, capital projects with investments under $10 million can be financed in full.

State Money and Help For Your Business

Industrial Development Bonds: For manufacturing companies that cannot qualify for financing that is exempt from federal taxes, North Carolina bond authorities can issue Industrial Development Bonds with interest income exempt from state income tax.

TIPP: Tarheel IRB Pool Program: Pooled industrial revenue bonds designed to allow small firms access to the IRB program. This enables borrowers in the $500,000 to $3,000,000 to use the bond vehicle cost effectively. Companies need a letter of credit from their bank. These bonds can have variable or fixed rates.

Job Creation Tax Credit: Companies creating full-time jobs in a designated economically-distressed counties may be eligible for a tax credit of $2,800 per job created and can be applied against state corporate or individual income taxes. The amount can offset up to 50 percent of a firm's state income tax. Companies can agree to hire a minimum of 20 new employees over two years, allowing them to still receive credits even if the county loses its distressed classification.

Industrial Building Renovation Fund: In certain economically distressed counties, companies may be eligible for funds to repair or renovate existing buildings for use as manufacturing and industrial operations. A firm can receive $1,200 per job created, up to a maximum of $250,000, for repair, renovation, or equipping a structure for industrial use. Funds used to benefit a private business, such as air-conditioning or equipment, are repayable at 2 percent interest. No repayment of funds is required where funds are used to provide a utility service to the building. The improvement is then loaned by the local government.

Manufacturer's Incentive Tax Formula: Can cut taxable income for businesses by up to 25 percent. This is an allocation formula that gives tax breaks to corporations that are located within North Carolina, even if they conduct a large volume of sales outside the state.

State Tax Incentives and Advantages

Corporate Income Tax: North Carolina uses the latest federal tax code and your business benefits from accelerated depreciation and other tax saving mechanisms on its state tax return as follows:

Savings for Multi-State Companies: Double-weighted sales factor apportionment formula for multi-state corporations gives your business significant savings if you do business in more than one state.

Sales and Use Taxes: Preferential rates provided by the State, that vary from the standard 4% rate and 2% total local option sales tax.

General Property Tax: Real property is assessed at full market value every 8 years. Personal property (autos, office equipment, industrial machinery) is assessed annually at approximately current market value less depreciation. Beneficial to businesses that otherwise might be subject to annual real property assessments. Also beneficial to areas where the original cost of equipment is used for tax purposes.

State Financial Incentives and Advantages

North Carolina Industrial Development Fund (NCIDF): Loans and grants of up to $250,000 ($2,400 per job created) are available to companies that repair, renovate or equip existing buildings for industrial use in less developed counties. Loans and quick loan turn-arounds and repayment exemption where funds are used to provide public utility service to building.

Taxable Industrial Development Bond (TIDB): For manufacturers who do not qualify for tax exempt bonds. Provide increased savings of 35-75 basis points.

Community Development Block Grant (CDBG): Companies needing up to $1 million in loans or infrastructure improvements. Requirement is that at least 60% of the jobs created by filled by people whose income is in the low to moderate income category at the time of employment. Are also available wholesale, retail and service companies.

Basic Buildings Program: Help develop small rural communities throughout the state. The state often constructs speculative industrial buildings, ready to be upfitted to specific industries. Using these buildings can cut the average start up time for a company from 29 to 13 weeks.

Business Energy Improvements Program: Low interest loans (approximately 65% of prime) are available for retrofitting existing buildings.

North Carolina Shared/Group FSC Program: Using the state's Group Foreign Sales Corporation, companies can obtain state and federal tax exemptions on a portion of their export profits. Exemption can range from 15-30% for federal and state tax purposes. Available to all NC companies with export profits.

North Carolina Ports Tax Credit: Available to exporters who use the NC ports at Morehead City and Wilmington and who are subject to the payment of NC income taxes. They can apply and qualify for a tax credit. Tax credit can be earned on cargo wharfage and handling fees exceeding the average for the last 3 years inclusive of the current tax year. The maximum cumulative credit that may be taken may not exceed $1 million.

Employment Security Commission (ESC) 919-733-7546

Job Screening: The state ESC screens and recommends job applicants for any company locating in the state. All you have to do is provide the ESC with a list of job openings and requirements for each position.

Other State Organizations Financial Incentives and Advantages:

Dept. of Community Colleges

Industrial Training Program: This program provides the following services at no cost to your company: selection/training of instructors; payment of instructor wages for the duration of the training program; lease/operation of a temporary training facility; training aids/materials; reimbursement of instructor travel expenses; and standard equipment required for training.

Department of Transportation (DOT)

Access Road Fund: Tax money is allocated to DOT to construct necessary site access roads for new plants that create a specific number of jobs.

Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources

Environmental and Energy Saving Programs: The Office of Waste Reduction provides grants and technical assistance to help companies reduce and control industrial waste. (The Pollution Prevention Pays Program provides free on site technical assistance in process evaluation to reduce waste streams).

North Carolina First Flight, Inc.: Helps and encourages small businesses and provides one-time grants of up to $200,000 for the establishments of small business incubator facilities that provide low-rent space, shared support services and basic equipment. First Flight Fund #1 (FFF #1) provides seed equity investment capital for entrepreneurs engaged in developing and commercializing technological innovations. Provides initial investments of up to $50,000 and up to $100,000 in second and later-round investments.

North Carolina Biotechnology Center: Biotechnological companies locating in NC are eligible for four grant programs from the North Carolina biotechnology Center. Grants support basic research, information sharing, education enhancement, job training instructional development. The state also has two loan programs that encourage technology transfer, research and development efforts.

Academic Research Initiation Grant: Seed funding for novel biotechnology-related research projects.

Institutional Development Grant: Broad institutional benefits such as establishment of core service facilities, purchase of multi-user equipment or recruitment of exceptional ability.

Event Support Grant: To promote information sharing related to scientific, educational or business aspects of biotechnology.

Education Enhancement Grant: Assists development of programs, activities, resources and personnel necessary for biotechnology education and job training in non-profit institutions, schools, community colleges, colleges, or universities.

Economic Development Finance Program (EDFP): Companies wishing to promote the initiation and expansion of commercial biotechnological applications can receive up to $250,000 of EDFP support for an 18-month period.

Local Financial Incentives and Advantages

Community Incentives: Local governments negotiate individually with businesses to meet the individual needs of an organization. Using public and private resources, these initiatives and incentives are put together by various localities to attract industries that provide jobs to the area.

Government Funded Water and Sewer Improvements: To ensure a quality infrastructure, local governments will invest money in utilities up to the amount that will be recovered in taxes over an 8 to 10 year period.

City/County Industrial Parks: Local governments are authorized to invest up to .05% of their assessed property taxes in economic development projects. Some local governments have acquired industrial sites, developed properties and directly negotiated their sale or lease to companies interested in locating in the area by using this power.

Road Improvements: Allows local elected official to use tax dollars for road improvements to meet the needs of local businesses.

Rail Sidings: Businesses requiring high volume or critical rail service benefit from location in some communities that will share or reduce the cost of rail sidings.

Incentives for Industry by Private Entities: These groups of business people, such as committees of 100, use private resources to provide land, buildings and grants to industries willing to relocate to their area.

Turnkey Project Management: Businesses locating to the state benefit from development companies able to provide economical and efficient management of a new plant opening, from site selection to beneficial occupancy.

Professional Development/Relocation Services: Relocating companies benefit from the free services of a professional developer in addition to the assistance provided by the professional state coordinator. Assistance covers almost every aspect of relocation, including property control, design and construction, employee recruitment screening, training and establishment of good employee relations programs.

Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) Funds: Over $93 million in JTPA funds are available to provide businesses with trained and skilled workers.

Small Business Administration (SBA) Subordinated Mortgages: Ten and twenty year loans are available with down payments as low as 10%. The SBA portion offers a loan for up to 40% of the project costs, with maximum participation of $750,000. Loan involves 50% participation by a local lender on a first mortgage.

Finance Center 919-733-5297

Farmers Home Administration Loan Guarantees: Guarantees private lenders up to 90 percent of the principal and interest on a loan. Borrowers must have up to 25 percent equity in the project to qualify. Maturities can be up to 30 years for real estate, 15 years for machinery, and 7 years for working capital. This is a program for communities with populations under 50,000.

Pollution Control Tax Breaks: Facilities for pollution control, recycling and recovery qualify for rapid depreciation on state income tax returns. North Carolina counties offer additional tax advantages for costs of this type of equipment.

Oregon Business Development Fund Loans (OBDF): Structures and issues loans to small businesses. Manufacturing, processing, and tourism related projects are eligible. Emphasis on rural areas, enterprise zones, and businesses with 50 employees or less. Offers long-term fixed-rate financing land, buildings, machinery and equipment, permanent working capital. Preference given to projects which will create a minimum of one job every $15,000 of OBDF investment. 17 percent of OBDF money is set aside for OBDF loans of $50,000 or less. 15 percent of available money is set aside for emerging small business in economically depressed areas. Maximum loan is 40 percent of eligible project costs and may not exceed $250,000 per project. 10 percent owner equity required in most cases.

Industrial Development Revenue Bonds (IDRBs): Industrial revenue bonds are issued by the Economic Development Commission to qualified manufacturing, processing and tourism related facilities. Only manufacturing projects are exempt from federal taxes. Major program goal is job creation. Eligible companies may borrow up to $10 million. Typically, the minimum bond is for

Local Revolving Loan Funds: There are many revolving loan funds for small business financing administered by Oregon's local government, and development groups. These funds frequently come from sources such as Dept. of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) through the State of Oregon, and the Federal Economic Development Administration (EDA).

Community Development Section 503-378-3732

Community Development Block Grant Program (CDBG): Through grants to eligible cities and counties, individual businesses may apply for direct loans for expansion or relocation. Grants are to be used for businesses which will create or retain permanent jobs, the majority of which will be made available to low and moderate income people. Money can be used for either a loan from the city or county to a business or to pay for construction of public infrastructure required to serve a business project. Must create or retain at least one job per $12,000 of CDBG funds. For public infrastructure projects, one job must be created or retained for every $20,000 of CDBG funds. Loans are for a maximum of $500,000 per project.

Business Development Division 503-373-1225

Enterprise Zone Program: There are 30 enterprise zones established to stimulate business investment. Firms locating or expanding on an enterprise zone is eligible for property tax relief. In addition, state and local government land within an enterprise zone not already designated for some public use is available for sale or lease at fair market value. Individual enterprise zones may offer other incentives.

Capital Access Program: The program provides loan portfolio insurance so lenders may make loans that carry higher than conventional risk. Borrowers pay a fee of between 4%-7% of the loan amount, which is matched by the Department and contributed to a loan loss reserve account in an enrolled bank.

Oregon Credit Enhancement Fund: Provides guarantees to enrolled banks to increase capital availability to small Oregon firms, helping them create jobs. The maximum guarantee for a loan is $500,000. The Department has authority to guarantee up to $75 million of financial institution loans. To be eligible a borrower's business cannot employ more than 200 full-time employees. Eligible businesses include: manufacturers, processors, natural resource industries, distribution companies, new technology firms. Retail businesses do not qualify.

Strategic Investment Program: Provides property tax exemptions for significant projects that will benefit Oregon's key industries. Properties developed under this program are exempted from local property taxes for up to 15 years on assessed value in excess of $100 million.

Oregon Entrepreneurial Development Loan Fund (EDLF): The EDLF provides initial loans of up to $15,000 to entrepreneurial businesses after meeting certain criteria. Loans must have a reasonable prospect of repayment. Maximum loan term is 5 years. Refinancing of existing debt is ineligible. Interest rate 2% over prime will be fixed for the term of the loan.

Small Business Advocate: Assistance in cutting bureaucratic red tape. Information and expertise in dealing with state, federal, and local agencies.

Community Development Block Grant: An anti-poverty block grant program whose funds are channeled towards those services and activities that will have an impact on the causes of poverty. About 90 percent of the funding goes to Community Action Agencies which can use the funds in various ways, such as revolving loan funds. Some of the types of activities funds are used for are to assist low-income people to secure and retain employment, obtain and maintain housing, obtain emergency assistance to meet immediate needs such as health services, nutritious food, housing, or employment assistance.

Revolving Economic Development and Initiative Fund (REDI): Funded by a one year, 1 percent sales tax, the REDI funds are used for a low-interest revolving loan fund for economic development and job creation. Loans are available to any for-profit business or non-profit business cooperative, whether business start-ups, business expansions, or business relocation. Funds can be used for purchase of land and site improvements; construction, acquisition, or renovation of buildings; fees, services and other costs associated with construction; machinery and equipment, trade receivables; inventory; and other working capital needs. The fund may provide up to 45 percent of the total project cost and requires applicants to have matching funds available beforehand, including a 10 percent equity contribution. Interest rates begin at 3 percent, but will later be determined semi-annually. Terms are amortized up to 20 years.

Economic Development Finance Authority:

Industrial Revenue Bonds (IRB): May be issued by any municipality, county, or sanitary district and may be used to finance industrial, commercial, manufacturing, agricultural, natural resources, educational, and other facilities. IRBs are limited obligation bonds of the issuing municipality, and once issued, they are to be repaid exclusively from the revenue produced by the project being financed.

SBA 504: Provides loans using 50 percent conventional bank financing, 40 percent SBA involvement through Certified Development Companies, and 10 percent owner equity. A fixed-asset loan (land, building, and equipment with a useful life of 10 years or more) in amounts up to $750,000. Administered through the South Dakota Development Corporation, eligible businesses may borrow up to $500,000 with a minimum of $50,000. One job is to be created for each $35,000 of loan amount.

Community Development Block Grants Special Projects Account: Allows the state to provide grants to local government, who in turn, loan funds to businesses which will locate in the community to create jobs which benefit low and moderate income persons.

Fastrack Loan Guarantee Program: Enables students who have an idea for a new business to obtain back financing guaranteed through the Fastrack Foundation. High school students in grades 9-12 are eligible to participate. A business plan should be prepared which should include market, competition, promotion ideas, costs and financing needs.

Agricultural Processing and Export Loan Program (APEX): Eligible to businesses that will use and add value to one or more of South Dakota's agricultural products; locate in a community with a population of less than 2,000; employ low income persons, farm families or displaced farm families. Funds may be used for purchase of land and associated site improvements; construction, acquisition or renovation of building; fees, services and other costs associated with construction; trade receivables; inventory; other working capital needs; refinancing of existing debt; and crop and livestock production. Can provide up to 70 percent of the total project cost. Maximum loan amount is $150,000. Interest rates are between five and seven percent.

Guaranteed Business and Industrial Loans: Loans aimed at creating and maintaining employment and improving the economies of rural areas. Local lenders initiate and service the loans, while the RDA guarantees up to 90 percent of the loan. Potential borrowers who want loans of $500,000 or less should apply to the Small Business Administration. Guarantees are limited to $10 million. Interest rates are determined between the borrower and the lender and can be fixed or variable. Eligible projects and costs are business and industrial acquisitions, construction, conversion, enlargement, repair or modernization; purchase of land, machinery and equipment, furniture and fixtures, and certain housing development sites; processing and marketing facilities, start-up and working capital; pollution control; feasibility studies.

Rural Rental Housing Loans: Loans are available to create, improve, or purchase modest but adequate housing units for people with low to moderate incomes and for those age 62 or older. Loans may be made for housing in open country and in communities with populations of up to $20,000. The borrowers must be unable to finance the housing with personal resources, and be unable to obtain credit from other sources. Funds can be used to build, purchase or repair apartment-style housing, buy and improve the land on which the buildings are to be located, provide streets and water and waste disposal systems, supply appropriate recreation and service facilities, install laundry facilities and equipment, landscaping.

Small Business Advocate: Assistance in cutting bureaucratic red tape. Information and expertise in dealing with state, federal, and local agencies.

Texas Capital Fund

Community Development Block Grant: Awards are made to a city or county that in turn provides a loan to a specific business for "gap financing". Project must be located in a rural area generally with a population of 50,000 or less. Funds can be used for land, building, machinery and equipment, working capital, and infrastructure to businesses creating jobs of which 51 percent benefit low and moderate income persons. Minimum loan is $50,000, and maximum loan up to $500,000. Up to $2.5 million for infrastructure projects.

Texas Capital Fund

Infrastructure Grant Program: Eligible uses include construction/ improvements of water/waste water facilities, public road construction, natural gas line services, electric power services, and railroad spur construction or improvements.

Texas Capital Fund

Texas Capital Fund

Main Street Improvements Program: Eligible uses include acquisition for architectural, engineering and design costs for construction or rehabilitation of such improvements, public improvements integral to the development of the project including water/waste water facilities, public road construction, natural gas line services, electric-power service, streetscape, and activities required to eliminate architectural barriers for the handicapped.

Economic Development Sales Tax Information: This is a collection of items relevant to both cities that are pursuing passage of the sales tax for economic development and those that have already approved it. The collection features the Texas Leverage Fund, and economic development loan program.

Texas Leverage Fund: The fund is an "economic development bank" for cities that have adopted the economic development sales tax to make loans to local businesses for expansion or to recruit new industry. A business will approach the city's Industrial Development Corporation to access this program. Proceeds must be used to pay eligible costs such as real estate, machinery and equipment for manufacturing, industrial, commercial, and certain infrastructure projects. Loans are for a period of up to 15 years at Wall Street Journal prime floating; maximum amounts based on City's sales tax proceeds.

Historically Underutilized and Small Business Linked Deposit Program: This program is designed to encourage lending to Historically Underutilized Businesses and/or small businesses in distressed communities by providing lenders and borrowers a lower cost of capital. Use of proceeds may include working capital, the purchase, construction, or lease of capital assets, including land, building and equipment. The minimum and maximum loan amount is $10,000 and $100,000 respectively, with a term equal to the useful life of the asset being financed. A HUB may be located anywhere in the state, however, a non-HUB must be located in a designated distressed community.

Texas Enterprise Zone Program: Provides incentives and regulatory relief to stimulate job creation and investment in economically distressed areas. Types of incentives include tax abatement to encourage business retention, expansion and start-ups, sales tax rebates available for businesses in the zone which are designated Enterprise Zone Projects.

Statewide SBA 504 Loan Fund: Eligible businesses are enterprises with less than 500 employees, $6 million or less net worth and an average of $2 million or less of net profit for the past 2 years. Eligible uses include acquisition of land, acquisition or construction of commercial industrial structures, renovation or improvement of Commercial/Industrial structures, and acquisition of machinery and equipment. Maximum amount is $1 million, but may not exceed 40% of total eligible products.

Economic Development Revolving Loan Fund: 804-371-7028

I Wanna Start My Own Business

The program was established to fill the financing gap between available private debt financing and private equity. Funds are loaned to businesses through local industrial development authorities. Loans are for fixed asset financing to new and expanding industries. Financing is available for manufacturing companies and other basic employment companies which have 50% or more of their sales outside the Commonwealth of Virginia. One full-time job must be created or retained within two years of the loan for each $10,000 borrowed from the fund. The company must provide a minimum of 10% of the project cost as cash equity.

Defense Conversion Revolving Loan Fund 804-371-7028

The fund is designed to assist businesses adversely affected by defense downsizing. The fund offers loans to companies that are creating new jobs or retaining at risk jobs in Virginia. It provides fixed asset and working capital financing for defense dependent industries making the transition to other products and services. Loans range up to $700,000. One permanent full-time job must be created or retained for each $10,000 borrowed from the Fund.

Private Activity Tax-Exempt Bond Program 804-371-8256

This program supports economic development projects through the issuance of tax-exempt industrial development bonds for the acquisition, construction and equipping of manufacturing facilities. Maximum finding amount is $10,000. Manufacturers must meet the VSBFA definition of a small business: less than $10,000 in annual sales, less than $2,000,000 in net worth, or fewer than 250 employees.

Taxable Industrial Development Bond Program 804-371-8197

The purpose of the program is to provide economic development financing to Virginia businesses by creating access to the public taxable bond market. Long-term fixed asset financing is available through the issuance of taxable bonds exempt from Virginia state income tax. The facility being financed should be occupied by a business which provides goods or services and which is owned or directly managed by the applicant. Financing may be used for acquisition, construction and equipping of commercial and industrial facilities.

Government Contracts: How to Sell Your Goods and Services To The World's Largest Buyer

If you produce a product or service, you've probably always wondered how you could offer what you produce to the biggest client in the world — the Federal government. Have you thought of the government as being a "closed shop" and too difficult to penetrate? Well, I'm happy to say that you're entirely wrong on that score. The Federal government spends over $180 billion each year on products ranging from toilet paper to paper clips and writes millions of dollars in contracts for services like advertising, consulting, and printing. Most Americans believe that a majority of those federal purchasing contracts have been eliminated over the last few years, but that's simply not true — they've just been replaced with new contracts that are looking for the same kinds of goods and services. Last year the government took action (either initiating or modifying) on over 350,000 different contracts. They buy these goods and services from someone, so why shouldn't that someone be you? To be successful doing business with the government, you need to learn to speak "governmentese" to get your company into the purchasing loop, and I can show you how to accomplish that in just a few easy steps.

Step 1

Each department within the Federal government has a procurement office that buys whatever the department requires. Most of these offices have put together their own Doing Business With the Department of _____ publication, which usually explains procurement policies, procedures, and programs. This booklet also contains a list of procurement offices, contact people, subcontracting opportunities, and a solicitation mailing list. Within each department there is also an Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization, whose sole purpose is to push the interests of the small business, and to make sure these companies get their fair share of government contracts. Another good resource is your local Small Business Administration Office which should have a listing of U.S. Government Procurement Offices in your state.

Step 2

Once you have familiarized yourself with the process, you need to find out who is buying what from whom and for how much. There are three ways to get this important information.

A. Daily Procurement News

Each weekday, the Commerce Business Daily (CBD) gives a complete listing of products and services (that cost over $25,000) wanted by the U.S. government — products and services that your business may be selling. Each listing includes the following: the product or service, along with a short description; name and address of the agency; deadline for proposals or bids; phone number to request specifications; and the solicitation number of the product or service needed. Many business concerns, including small businesses, incorporate CBD review into their government marketing activities. To obtain a subscription for $208 a year, contact: Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402; 202-512-1800.

B. Federal Data Systems Division (FDSD)

This Center distributes consolidated information about federal purchases, including research and development. FDSD can tell you how much the Federal government spent last quarter on products and services, which agencies made those purchases, and what contractors did business with the government. FDSD summarizes this information through two types of reports: The FDSD standard report and the FDSD special report. The standard report is a free, quarterly compilation containing statistical procurement information in "snapshot" form for over 60 federal agencies, as well as several charts, graphs, and tables which compare procurement activities by state, major product and service codes, method of procurement, and contractors. The report also includes quarterly and year-to-year breakdowns of amounts and percentages spent on small, women owned, and minority businesses. Special reports are prepared upon request for a fee, based on computer and labor costs. They are tailored to the specific categories, which can be cross-tabulated in numerous ways. A special report can help you analyze government procurement and data trends, identify competitors, and locate federal markets for individual products or services. Your Congressman may have access to the Federal Procurement Database from his/her office in Washington, which you may be able to use for free. For more information, contact: Federal Data Systems Division, General Services Administration, 7th and D St., SW, Room 5652, Washington, DC 20407; 202-401-1529.

C. Other Contracts

For contracts under $25,000, you must be placed on a department's list for solicitation bids on those contracts. The mailing list forms are available through the Procurement Office, the Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization, or your local Small Business Association office. Last year 18.7 billion dollars was spent on these "small" purchases, so these contracts should not be overlooked. Smaller contracts, completed over the course of a fiscal year, can mean lots of revenue for your business bottom line.

Step 3: Subcontracting Opportunities

All of the federal procurement offices or Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (SDBU) can provide you with information regarding subcontracting. Many of the departments' prime contracts require that the prime contractor maximize small business subcontracting opportunities. Many prime contractors produce special publications which can be helpful to those interested in subcontracting. The SDBU Office can provide you with more information on the subcontracting process, along with a directory of prime contractors. Another good source for subcontract assistance is your local Small Business Administration (SBA) office, 1-800-827-5722. SBA develops subcontracting opportunities for small business by maintaining close contact with large business prime contractors and by referring qualified small firms to them. The SBA has developed agreements and close working relationships with hundreds of prime contractors who cooperate by offering small firms the opportunity to compete for their subcontracts. In addition, to complete SBA's compliance responsibilities, commercial market representatives monitor prime contractors in order to assess their compliance with laws governing subcontracting opportunities for small businesses.

Step 4: Small Business Administration's 8(a) Program

Are you a socially or economically disadvantaged person who has a business? This group includes, but is not limited to, Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, and Subcontinent Asian Americans. Socially and economically disadvantaged individuals represent a significant percentage of U.S. citizens, yet account for a disproportionately small percentage of total U.S. business revenues. The 8(a) program assists firms in participating in the business sector and to become independently competitive in the marketplace. SBA may provide participating firms with procurement, marketing, financial, management, or other technical assistance. A Business Opportunity Specialist will be assigned to each firm that participates, and is responsible for providing the firm with access to assistance that can help the firm fulfill its business goals. SBA undertakes an extensive effort to provide government contracting opportunities to participating businesses. The SBA has the Procurement Automated Source System (PASS) which places your company's capabilities online so that they may be available to government agencies and major corporations when they request potential bidders for contracts and subcontracts. To apply for the 8(a) program, you must attend an interview session with an official in the SBA field office in your area. For more information, contact your local Small Business Administration Office, or call 1-800-827-5722 for the SBA office nearest you.

Step 5: Bond

A Surety bond is often a prerequisite for government and private sector contracts. This is particularly true when the contract involves construction. In order for the company to qualify for an SBA Guarantee Bond, they must make the bonding company aware of their capabilities based on past contract performance and meeting of financial obligations. SBA can assist firms in obtaining surety bonding for contracts that do not exceed $1,250,000. SBA is authorized, when appropriate circumstances occur, to guarantee as much as 90 percent of losses suffered by a surety resulting from a breach of terms of a bond.

Step 6: Publications

The Government Printing Office has several publications for sale which explain the world of government contracts. For ordering information, contact: Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402; 202-512-1800.

* U.S. Government Purchasing and Sales Directory ($23): The Directory is an alphabetical listing of the products and services bought by the military departments, and a separate listing of the civilian agencies. The Directory also includes an explanation of the ways in which the SBA can help a business obtain government prime contracts and subcontracts, data on government sales of surplus property, and comprehensive descriptions of the scope of the government market for research and development.

* Guide to the Preparation of Offers for Selling to the Military ($4.75)

* Small Business Specialists ($3.75)

* Small Business Subcontracting Directory ($7.00): designed to aid small businesses interested in subcontracting opportunities within the Department of Defense (DOD). The guide is arranged alphabetically by state and includes the name and address of each current DOD prime contractor as well as the product or service being provided to DOD.

* Women Business Owners; Selling to the Federal Government ($3.75)

* Selling to the Military, ($8.00)

Step 7: What is GSA?

General Services Administration (GSA) is the Government's business agent. On an annual budget of less than half a billion dollars, it directs and coordinates nearly $8 billion a year worth of purchases, sales, and services. Its source of supply is private enterprise, and its clients include all branches of the Federal government. GSA plans and manages leasing, purchase, or construction of office buildings, laboratories, and warehouses; buys and delivers nearly $4 billion worth of goods and services; negotiates the prices and terms for an additional $2.3 billion worth of direct business between federal groups and private industry; sets and interprets the rules for federal travel and negotiates reduced fares and lodging rates for federal travelers; and manages a 92,000 vehicle fleet with a cumulative yearly mileage of over 1 billion. For a copy of Doing Business With GSA, GSA's Annual Report, or other information regarding GSA, contact: Office of Publication, General Services Administration, 18th and F Streets, NW, Washington, DC 20405; 202-501-1235. For information on GSA's architect and engineer services, such as who is eligible for GSA professional services contracts, how to find out about potential GSA projects, what types of contracts are available, and where and how to apply, contact: Office of Design and Construction, GSA, 18th and F Streets, NW, Washington, DC 20405; 202-501-1888. Information on specifications and standards of the Federal government is contained in a booklet, Guide to Specifications and Standards, which is available free from Specifications Sections, General Services Administration, 470 E L'Enfant Plaza, SW, Suite 8100, Washington, DC 20407; 202-755-0325.

Step 8: Bid and Contract Protests

The General Accounting Office (GAO) resolves disputes between agencies and bidders of government contracts, including grantee award actions. The free publication, Bid Protests at GAO; A Descriptive Guide, contains information on GAO's procedures for determining legal questions arising from the awarding of government contracts. Contact Information Handling and Support Facilities, General Accounting Office, Gaithersburg, MD 20877; 202-275-6241. For Contract Appeals, the GSA Board of Contract Appeals works to resolve disputes arising out of contracts with GSA, the Departments of Treasury, Education, Commerce, and other independent government agencies. The Board also hears and decides bid protests arising out of government-wide automated data processing (ADP) procurements. A contractor may elect to use either the GSA Board or the General Accounting Office for resolution of an ADP bid protest. Contractors may elect to have their appeals processed under the Board's accelerated procedures if the claim is $50,000 or less, or under the small claims procedure if the claim is $10,000 or less. Contractors may also request that a hearing be held at a location convenient to them. With the exception of small claims decisions, contractors can appeal adverse Board decisions to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. For more information, contact: Board of Contract Appeals, General Services Administration, 18th and F Streets, NW, Washington, DC

I Wanna Start My Own Business

20405; 202-501-0720. There are other Contract Appeals Boards for other departments. One of the last paragraphs in your government contract should specify which Board you are to go to if a problem with your particular contract should arise.

Free Local Help: The Best Place To Start To Sell To The Government

Within each state there are offices that can help you get started in the federal procurement process. As stated previously, your local Small Business Administration (SBA) office is a good resource. In addition to their other services, the SBA can provide you with a list of Federal Procurement Offices based in your state, so you can visit them in person to gather valuable information. Another place to turn is your local Small Business Development Center (look under Economic Development in your phone book). These offices are funded jointly by federal and state governments, and are usually associated with the state university system in your area. They are aware of the federal procurement process, and can help you draw up a sensible business plan that will be successful.

Some states have established programs to assist businesses in the federal procurement process for all departments in the government. These programs are designed to help businesses learn about the bidding process, the resources available, and provide information on how the procurement system operates. They can match the product or service you are selling with the appropriate agency, and then help you market your product. Several programs have online bid matching services, whereby if a solicitation appears in the Commerce Business Daily that matches what your company markets, then the program will automatically contact you to start the bid process. The program office can then request the appropriate documents, and assist you in achieving your goal. These Procurement Assistance Offices (PAOs) are partially funded by the Department of Defense to assist businesses with Defense Procurement. For a current listing of PAOs contact:

Let Your Congressman Help You

Are you trying to market a new product to a department of the Federal government? Need to know where to try to sell your wares? Is there some problem with your bid? Your Congressman can be of assistance. Because they want business in their state to boom, most Congressmen will make an effort to assist companies in obtaining federal contracts. Frequently they will write a letter to accompany your bid, or if you are trying to market a new product, they will write a letter to the procurement office requesting that they review your product. Your Congressman can also be your personal troubleshooter. If there is some problem with your bid, your Congressman can assist you in determining and resolving the problem, and can provide you with information on the status of your bid. Look in the blue pages of your phone book for your Senators' or Representatives' phone numbers, or call them in Washington at 202-224-3121 or 800-972-3524.

Small Business Set-Asides

The Small Business Administration (SBA) encourages government purchasing agencies to set aside suitable government purchases for exclusive small business competition. A purchase which is restricted to small business bidders is identified by a set aside clause in the invitation for bids or request for proposals. There is no overall listing of procurements which are, or have been, set aside for small business. A small business learns which purchases are reserved for small business by getting listed on bidders' lists. It also can help keep itself informed of set aside opportunities by referring to the Commerce Business Daily. Your local SBA office can provide you with more information on set asides, and so can the Procurement Assistance Offices listed at the end of this section. To locate your nearest SBA office, call 1-800-827-5722.

Veterans Assistance

Each Small Business Administration District Office has a Veterans Affairs Officer which can assist veteran-owned businesses in obtaining government contracts. Although there is no such thing as veterans set aside contracts, the Veterans Administration does make an effort to fill its contracts using veteran-owned businesses whenever possible. Contact your local SBA office for more information.

Woman-Owned Business Assistance

There are over 3.7 million women-owned businesses in the United States, and the number is growing each year. Current government policy requires federal contracting officers to increase their purchases from women-owned businesses. Although the women-owned firms will receive more opportunities to bid, they still must be the lowest responsive and responsible bidder to win the contract. To assist these businesses, each SBA district office has a Women's Business Representative, who can provide you with information regarding government programs. Most of the offices hold a Selling to the Federal Government seminar, which is designed to educate the business owner on the ins and outs of government procurement. There is also a helpful publication, Women Business Owners: Selling to the Federal Government, which provides information on procurement opportunities available. Contact your local SBA office or your Procurement Assistance Office (listed below) for more information.

Minority and Labor Surplus Area Assistance

Are you a socially or economically disadvantaged person who has a business? This group includes, but is not limited to, Black Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, Asian Pacific Americans, and Subcontinent Asian Americans. Socially and economically disadvantaged individuals represent a significant percentage of U.S. citizens yet account for a disproportionately small percentage of total U.S. business revenues. The 8(a) program assists firms to participate in the business sector and to become independently competitive in the marketplace. SBA may provide participating firms with procurement, marketing, financial, management, or other technical assistance. A Business Opportunity Specialist will be assigned to each firm that participates, and is responsible for providing that company with access to assistance that can help it fulfill its business goals.

Some areas of the country have been determined to be labor surplus areas, which means there is a high rate of unemployment. Your local SBA office can tell you if you live in such an area, as some contracts are set asides for labor surplus areas. For more information, contact your local Small Business Administration office (call 1-800-827-5722 for the SBA office nearest you), or call the Procurement Assistance Office in your state (listed below).

State Procurement Assistance

Have you ever wondered where the government buys all of the products that it works with each day? You might be surprised to learn that they buy from small businesses just like yours that produce products such as:

- work clothing
- office supplies
- cleaning equipment
- miscellaneous vehicles
- medical supplies and equipment

Imagine what your bottom line could look like each year if you won just ONE lucrative government contract that would provide your business with a secure income! It might even buy you the freedom to pursue other clients that you wouldn't have the time or money to go after otherwise. If your business performs well and completes a government contract satisfactorily, chances are you'll have a shot at more and maybe even bigger contracts.

The offices listed below are starting places for finding out who in the state government will purchase your products or services.

Venture Capital: Finding A Rich Angel

With federal and state money getting harder to come by, and banks experiencing serious problems of their own that restrict their willingness to loan money, anyone interested in starting his own business or expanding an existing one may do well to look into venture capital. Venture capitalists are willing to invest in a new or growing business venture for a percentage of the equity. Below is a listing of some of the associations, government agencies, and businesses that have information available on venture capital.

In addition, there are Venture Capital Clubs throughout the country where entrepreneurs have a chance to present their ideas to potential investors and learn about the process of finding funds for ventures that might be long on innovative ideas for a business, but short on proven track records.

Associations

The National Venture Capital Association (NVCA)

1655 N. Fort Meyer Dr., Suite 700

703-351-5269

Arlington, VA 22209

Fax: 703-351-5268

The association works to improve the government's knowledge and understanding of the venture capital process. Staff members can answer questions about federal legislation and regulations, and provide statistical information on venture capital. NVCA members include venture capital organizations, financiers, and individuals interested in investing in new companies.

The association publishes a membership directory that includes a listing of their members with addresses, phone numbers, tax numbers and contacts. There are currently about 200 members. The directory is available for $10.

The Western Association of Venture Capitalists

3000 San Hill Rd.

Bldg. 1, Suite 190

Menlo Park, CA 94025

415-854-1322

Publishes a directory of its 110 members. The cost is $50.

National Association of Investment Companies

1111 14th St. NW, Suite 700

202-289-4336

Washington, DC 20005

Fax: 202-289-4329

It is composed of specialized Small Business Investment Companies (SSBICs). The SSBIC Directory lists about 120 companies across the country including names, addresses, and telephone numbers. It also describes each company's investment preferences and policies. The 23-page publication costs $25.98.

It also publishes Perspective, a monthly newsletter geared toward specialized small business investment companies. This newsletter includes articles about legislation and regulations affecting SSBICs. (Note: This association was formerly called the American Association of Minority Enterprise Small Business Investment Companies (AAMESBIC)).

National Association of Small Business Investment
Companies (NASBIS)

1199 N. Fairfax St., Room 200
Alexandria, VA 22314

703-683-1601
Fax: 703-683-1605

This association serves as an information clearinghouse on venture capital. Staff can direct you to venture capital sources, experts, and literature.

The 1994-1995 membership directory, Venture Capital: Where to Find It, has 120 pages listing about 300 small business investment companies and specialized small business investment companies. It gives names, addresses, phone numbers, investment policies, industry preferences, and preferred dollar limits on loans and investments. The directory is available for $10. To order, send a check or money order to NASBIS Directory, P.O. Box 2039, Merrifield, VA 22116.

Technology Capital Network
201 Vassar St.
Cambridge, MA 02139

617-253-7163

This nonprofit corporation tries to match entrepreneurs in need of capital with venture capital sources. Investors and entrepreneurs register with the network for up to 12 months for $300.

Venture Capital Clubs

There are more than 150 Venture Capital Clubs worldwide where inventors can present their ideas to potential investors. At a typical monthly meeting, several entrepreneurs may give short presentations of their ideas. It is a great way for entrepreneurs and potential investors to talk informally.

The International Venture Capital Institute (IVCI)
P.O. Box 1333
Stamford, CT 06904

203-323-3143

The IVCI publishes an annual directory of domestic and international venture groups (venture capital clubs). The cost of the 1995 IVCI Directory of Domestic and International Venture Groups, which includes contact information for all of the clubs, is $19.95.

Association of Venture Capital Clubs
265 East 100 South, Suite 300
P.O. Box 3358
Salt Lake City, UT 84111

801-364-1100

The association was formed to facilitate and encourage creation and participation in growth-oriented businesses. The association publishes a directory of its members and will put you in touch with the club nearest you. If you are interested in starting a club, the association publishes a 15-chapter manual which sells for $50. Send inquiries to the attention of Lisa Rene Jones.

Uncle Sam's Venture Capital

What Do Federal Express, Apple Computer, Staples and A Porno Shop on 42nd Street All Have In Common? They All Used Government Venture Money To Get Started

A few years ago I read that the government provided money to a porno shop in New York City through a program call Small Business Investment Companies (SBIC). Since 1960 these organizations have provided venture capital to over 75,000 businesses, so it's easy to see that one of those businesses might be a porno shop. Porno is a legitimate businesses in many areas of the country.

SBICs are licensed by the U.S. Small Business Administration but are privately owned and operate on a for profit basis. Their license allows companies to pool their money with borrowed money from the government in order to provide financing to small businesses in the form of equity securities or long-term debt. These government subsidized investment companies have helped Compaq, Apple, Federal Express and Staples make it to the big time. They have also helped smaller companies achieve success. They've financed Spencer and Vickie Jacobs' hot tub business in Columbus, Ohio, as well as taxi drivers in New York City who needed money to pay for the medallions which allows them to operate their own cabs.

Uncle Sam's Venture Capital Boom

In 1994, new government regulations were imposed that make it easier to become an SBIC. The budget for this program was also greatly expanded. As a result of this change, there will now be over $6 billion worth of financing available to entrepreneurs over the next several years. Now, that's not small change, even to a hotshot entrepreneur. With these new regulations and budget in place, the government expects that there will soon be 200 additional SBICs waiting to serve American entrepreneurs.

Who Gets The Money?

Basically you have to be a small business to apply for this money, and the government's definition includes companies that have less than $18 million in net worth and less than $6 million in profits. Wow, that's some small business! They seem particularly interested in businesses that offer a new product or service that has a strong growth potential. There is special consideration given to minorities and Vietnam Veterans applying for this money.

You do have to be armed with a business plan which should include the following:

- 1) Identify Your Company
- 2) Identify Your Product Or Service
- 3) Describe Your Product Facilities And Property
- 4) Detail Your Marketing Plan
- 5) Describe Your Competition

- 6) Describe Your Management Team
- 7) Provide A Financial Statement

Where to Apply

You can apply to more than one SBIC at the same time. Each acts as an independent company and they can provide money to both local or out-of-state businesses. At the end of this section is a listing of SBA licensed Small Business Investment Companies. However, this list is growing every day so it would be wise to contact the following office to obtain a current list: Associate Administrator for Investment, U.S. Small Business Administration, Washington, DC 20416, 202-205-6510.

States Have Venture Money, Too

It's not enough to only look at federal venture capital programs, because some state governments also have venture capital programs. More and more states continue to start new programs every month. Some states, like Maryland, see the value in the new rule changes for becoming an SBIC, and are beginning to apply to become a licensed participant of the Small Business Administration's program. Here is what is available from state governments at the time this book went to press. Be sure to check with your state to see what's new:

- 1) Arkansas - Seed Capital Investment Program
- 2) Connecticut - Risk Capital
 - Product Design Financing
 - Seed Venture Fund
- 3) Illinois - Technology Investment Program
 - Illinois Venture Capital Fund
- 4) Iowa - Venture Capital Resources Fund
- 5) Kansas - Venture Capital and Seed Capital
 - Seed Capital Fund
 - Ad Astra Fund
 - Ad Astra Fund II
- 6) Louisiana - Venture Capital Incentive Program
- 7) Massachusetts - Venture Capital Program
- 8) Michigan - Enterprise Development Fund
 - Onset Seed Fund
 - Diamond Venture Associates
 - Semery Seed Capital Fund
 - Michigan Venture Capital Fund
- 9) Montana - Venture, Equity & Risk Capital
- 10) New Mexico - Venture Capital Investment Program
- 11) New York - Corporation for Innovation Development
- 12) North Carolina - North Carolina First Flight Inc.
- 13) North Carolina - Seed and Incubator Capital
- 14) Pennsylvania - Seed Venture Capital
- 15) South Carolina - Venture Capital Funding Program
- 16) Tennessee - Venture Capital

Contact your state office of economic development in your state capital for further information on venture capital available in your state (also see the chapter entitled "State Money and Help For Your Business").

Money to Start a Business if You Are a Minority

If you want to start or expand a business and you belong to a minority group, the Department of Commerce has something special just for you. The Minority Business Development Agency funds Business Development Centers nationwide to assist with the start-up, expansion, and acquisition of competitive minority owned firms offering quality goods and services. These centers provide business assistance for bonding, bidding, estimating, financing, procurement, international trade, franchising, acquisitions, mergers, and joint ventures to increase opportunities in domestic and international markets for minority entrepreneurs. Individuals eligible for the centers' business assistance are Hispanics, Asians, Native and African-Americans, Aleuts, Eskimos, and Hasidic Jews.

These centers are operated by private firms, nonprofit organizations, state and local government agencies, Native American tribes, and educational institutions. The centers provide accounting, administration, business planning, construction, and marketing information. They also identify minority owned firms for contract and subcontract opportunities with federal, state, and local government agencies, and the private sector. The centers identify both private and public sector sources of financing for minority owned firms and assist with the preparation of financial documents and plans for submission to lenders.

The following lists contain the local Business Development Centers to contact. If you need more information, you may contact the national headquarters at Minority Business Development Agency, U.S. Department of Commerce, Room 5099, Washington, DC 20230; 202-482-3007.

I Wanna Start a Business And I Have No Money

Unconventional Loan Programs

The following is a description of loan programs available to low and moderate income individuals, minorities, Native Americans, Hispanics, refugees, unemployed individuals, welfare recipients, youths, and low and moderate income individuals who don't qualify for credit through conventional methods.

Most of these programs allow individuals (depending on the situation) to roll closing costs and fees into the amount of the loan. So you actually go to the closing with NO money in your pocket.

The aim of these programs is to stimulate economic growth through small businesses or microenterprises. Helping individuals become self-sufficient is the main focus, and also to challenge conventional methods of providing credit. All of the programs hope to demonstrate that persons with limited incomes are responsible, will repay, and can become successful if given access to knowledge and resources.

Some programs are designed just for youths, (15-21 years old), to develop their own businesses, avoid drugs and crime, sharpen academic skills and form positive attitudes about themselves and their communities. This is accomplished by utilizing the leadership, communication, management and business skills they may have acquired through affiliation with the illegal drug trade and other street activities. Loan amounts can range from $50 to $2,000 with terms from six months to two years.

The following is a small sample of many success stories that we found:

Susanna Rodriguez started making ceramic figurines for children's parties. Susanna is a former teacher's assistant who presently works in the kitchen of her small apartment. Her creations fill every free corner. She was constantly looking for ways to expand her business. One day she was in a store where the owner sold similar products. As they were comparing notes, the owner mentioned ACCION New York. After four loans as a result of working with that organization, Susanna's monthly revenue from her ceramics business has increased from $350 a month to $800 a month. In time, she hopes to open her own store. She feels that if it were not for ACCION, she would not be at the advanced stage of business that she is enjoying now.

Jeff Hess of Virginia had fished and hunted with his father since the age of five. He earned his associates degree in business and was working in an assembly plant for a moderate hourly wage, but wanted more. At the age of 24 he didn't see opportunity coming to call on him because he had no money and no credit. He and his wife, Cherylanna enrolled in the BusinessStart class at People, Inc. With this training, assistance in small business planning and a small loan, Jeff and Cherylanna were able to buy a bait shop in Honaker and turn it into Bucks and Bass, a full service hunting and fishing store. Located in prime hunting and fishing country, Bucks and Bass has nearly doubled its sales in its first year alone. Both Jeff and Cherylanna have left their jobs and run Bucks and Bass full time.

CEII is a not-for-profit community development corporation (CDC) based in Pensacola. It is one of the oldest and most successful CDCs in the state and receives funding from a variety of sources, including the Florida Department of Community Affairs CDC Support and Assistance Program. CEII operates three different small business loan programs: 1. State Funded Revolving Loan Fund: This fund provides loans up to $75,000 to businesses which create at least one new job for every $10,000 borrowed. Average loan size is $38,000. Loans are sold to participating local banks which then service the loans. A unique guaranty deposit system is used, whereby the bank's risk of loss is minimized and CEII receives a substantial income stream from the guaranty deposits. 2. SBA-Funded Microenterprise Loan Fund: Provides micro loans of up to $25,000 to existing or startup businesses. An SBA grant enables CEII to provide substantial training and technical assistance to borrowers on both a pre-loan and post-loan basis. 3. Rural Economic and Community Development (RECD) Funded Intermediary Relending Program: This is a brand new program just approved by the RECD. A total of $1 million in loan capital has been allocated to CEII to make loans to startup and existing businesses located in rural portions of their 15 county service area. Loans cannot exceed $150,000 per borrower and are intended to be linked with loans under their state-funded RLF program, and with conventional bank financing.

Free Business Assistance Programs

A helping hand is just a phone call away for individuals who want to enter into a small business or microenterprise. If you fall into any of the following categories: low to moderate income, Native American, minorities, women, welfare recipients, or have little or no money, you may be eligible for a wide range of assistance. These programs are aimed to assist individuals toward self-sufficiency.

Imagine getting training, counseling, peer support and exchange, and mentoring for free to help you get the knowledge you need to start your own business. Learn how to prepare a business plan and get guidance from the best instructors in the country. One such program is NOVA, located in Arkansas. Their program has four major components: Group Training; Individual Sessions; Business Start-Up; and Networking and Mentoring.

Imagine youths able to receive effective business course training. One such program is Kidpreneur Enterprises, located in Michigan. This program is available to all youths who express an interest in owning and operating their own small business. Kidpreneur is designed to provide and instill concepts and experiences in the minds of youths.

Doors can open for entrepreneurs, like Adina Rosenthal, owner of Threadbearer, a fabric and accessory shop located on Capitol Hill. At a very young age, Adina knew she wanted to work with fabrics. At age 17, she lost the use of her right arm when she was hit by a logging truck. After receiving her degree from the Fashion Institute of Design and Merchandising she attempted to get work at various design companies only to be passed over time and time again. A friend suggested she join the Black Dollar Days' program for entrepreneurs. After completing their entrepreneurial program, Adina opened Threadbearer. She accredits her success to the assistance she received, and is still receiving, from the Black Dollar Days Task Force.

Daryl Anderson an experienced roofer, lacked the necessary skills to run a business of his own. In 1994, Daryl began his involvement with the Cottage Industry Programs offered by the Portsmouth Community Development Group (PCDG) in Montana. After a year of technical assistance, the use of an office, and hours of encouragement, Daryl and his wife Karen were able to open Quality Roofing and Siding. Daryl admits he never would have made it without PCDG's commitment to business counseling and training.

The aim of these programs is to develop a participant's confidence and skills in understanding business enterprise and to further the development of viable business ideas.

I Wanna Start a Business and I Have No Money

1450 North Broadway
Lexington, KY 40506

Upon joining the small business training program, you will have access to classes designed to help with specific areas of self employment and business ownership. Classroom instruction is offered in the following areas:

Business Feasibility and Planning: Do you have a sound business idea? Do you have a product/service that customers want or need? How should you describe it? Do you have what it takes to be self-employed? An indepth look at these issues will help you decide whether or not your business idea is feasible and worth pursuing.

Marketing: A basic introduction to market research and the development of a marketing plan. A comprehensive market research analysis and customer survey will help you determine information crucial to the success of your business.

Financial Management: Learn the basics of filing/accounting systems, record keeping, cash flow, income statements, break-even analysis, personal budgeting. Technical assistance is also available to help you develop systems appropriate for your business.

Child Care Management: This training gives you the basics needed to develop a home child care business. Learn about the certification application, policies/procedures, parent handbook, activity development, communication, health, safety, sanitation/nutrition, and how to recognize child abuse.

These classes will help you determine what it takes to make a business successful, how to market your product or service, how much capital is needed to open a particular business, and most important, how to develop a comprehensive business plan.

Federal Money for Housing and Real Estate

The following is a description of the federal funds available to renters, homeowners, developers, and real estate investors for housing assistance in urban and rural areas. This information is derived from the Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance which is published by the U.S. Government Printing Office in Washington, D.C. The number next to the title description is the official reference for this federal program. Contact the office listed below the caption for further details. The following is a description of some of the terms used for the types of assistance available:

Loans: money lent by a federal agency for a specific period of time and with a reasonable expectation of repayment. Loans may or may not require a payment of interest.

Loan Guarantees: programs in which federal agencies agree to pay back part or all of a loan to a private lender if the borrower defaults.

Grants: money given by federal agencies for a fixed period of time and which does not have to be repaid.

Direct Payments: funds provided by federal agencies to individuals, private firms, and institutions. The use of direct payments may be "specified" to perform a particular service or for "unrestricted" use.

Insurance: coverage under specific programs to assure reimbursement for losses sustained. Insurance may be provided by federal agencies or through insurance companies and may or may not require the payment of premiums.

State Initiatives

While affordable housing has long held an important place on the Federal government's policy agenda, budget cutbacks in recent years have forced the government to turn over many housing responsibilities to the states. Housing finance agencies (HFAs) have been created by states to issue tax-exempt bonds to finance mortgages for lower income first-time home buyers and to build multifamily housing.

States are involved in a host of initiatives throughout the broad spectrum of housing finance and development. Interim construction financing programs which can reduce the basic costs of lower income housing projects have been initiated in a number of states, together with innovative home ownership programs and programs directed toward rehabilitation and improved energy conservation.

States are also venturing into areas which have not received as much public sector attention until recently. By encouraging non-traditional types of housing, such as accessory units, shelters, and single room occupancy housing, states are addressing important elements of the housing market.

In Colorado, the state Housing and Finance Authority (CHFA) has issued more than $2.6 billions of bonds and notes since its establishment in 1973, providing housing for more than 47,000 families and individuals of low and moderate income; 27,200 first-time home buyers and over 20,500 rental housing units. In recent years the state has broadened CHFA's authority to allow it to develop finance programs to assist the growth of small business, help exports with insurance on goods sold overseas, and similar projects.

Colorado has done more than simply help its citizens find housing: the programs have resulted in construction employment of more than 20,000 jobs, with wages estimated at almost $20 million in new local real estate taxes and an indirect gain of $1.6 billion for the state.

Wisconsin, Maine and New York each have between 18 and 20 programs including special ones for women and minorities, for disabled persons, and for environmental hazard removal.

Maryland operates 26 programs, including those to help people with closing costs and settlement expenses. It also has special funds available for the elderly and is developing an emergency mortgage fund to help people who have fallen behind in their payments. Nonprofit developers can also tap the state for money to build low cost rental units.

Among Michigan's 29 programs and Minnesota's 25 are several for neighborhood revitalization. Minnesota also offers programs targeting the needs of urban Indians and migrant farm workers. Alaska, Oregon and Vermont offer financing for tenant acquisition of mobile home parks.

Funds are also available for persons who take steps to make their homes more energy efficient, for homeowners and landlords who remove lead paint from dwelling units, for houses without plumbing or those with plumbing that is dysfunctional, for handicapped persons, and to help landlords defray the costs of bringing low income housing into compliance with state and local housing codes. There are also funds for nonprofit organizations to acquire or renovate existing houses and apartments for use as group homes for special needs such as the mentally retarded.

In many states, elderly homeowners can look to the HFA to obtain financing and/or support services they need to remain in their homes and avoid institutionalization. Some of the states have more than one agency dedicated to housing and we have attempted to list them all here. Also, many cities and counties have quasi-federal/quasi-local "housing authorities" with additional programs. Check your local government listings for these.

The following is a complete listing of state housing programs.

Free Grants, Low Interest Loans, and Tax Credits to Renovate Historic Homes and Buildings

Renovating an old house can be very time consuming and expensive. If only there were a way to get someone else to pay for all that time consuming work...well, there is, if you know where to look. About 20 states offer some kind of grant or loan program for individual homeowners who are renovating historic homes. Here are a few examples:

- Iowa offers matching grants for renovation projects
- Kansas offers up to $75,000 in matching grants for renovation
- South Carolina offers up to $25,000 in matching grants.
- Maryland offers low interest loans for historic renovation
- Tennessee offers 50/50 matching grants for renovation

To qualify for these grant and loan programs, you first need to have your house qualify for the National Register of Historic Places. This isn't as difficult as it might seem. Your house doesn't have to have national significance, such as at one time being George Washington's weekend retreat. It can have local historic or architectural significance to qualify for the National Register. It could be an early example of 18th century Greek Revival style--or have been owned at one time by a locally significant family. You'd be surprised how many older houses have some sort of local significance, and that might be just enough to qualify for these programs. Contact your State Office of Historic Preservation listed below for more information about how to get your property qualified for historic status.

Federal Tax Credits

If you happen to live in one of the 30 states that don't offer renovation grants to individual homeowners, you still may be able to qualify for some types of financial benefits. Under the Federal Tax Credit Program, individuals who have rehabilitated an income producing building used for commercial or industrial purposes can receive a 20% tax credit on expenses incurred during that renovation. To be eligible for funding, buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership into that organization.

What this means is that if you renovate your house and use part of it to run your own business, like a gift shop, you may be able to receive a federal tax deduction of 20% of the renovation costs. If you spent $50,000 on renovations, that comes out to a $10,000 tax deduction on next year's taxes. Not bad. Not only would you get the benefit of writing off 20% of your renovation expenses, but you'll also be able to write off part of your mortgage as a business expense.

Nonprofits Get The Breaks

Starting up a nonprofit, or looking to relocate an existing one? Think of moving into an historic building in need of renovation. Most states offer nonprofits matching grant money and low interest loans to buy and renovate historic buildings. Yes, that's right — some states actually offer nonprofits money to buy historic buildings.

Check In Often

The availability of money for historic renovation changes from year to year, depending on the state in which you live. Just because your state isn't awarding grants or loans this year, they may change within the next year or two, so continue to check the resources. Don't forget that some states, like South Dakota and Iowa, allow renovating homeowners of historic places up to 8 years of not having to pay property taxes--in the long run that could be even better for you than getting grant money.

Alabama

There are no state grant funds available to individual homeowners. However, owners of commercial property listed in the National Register of Historic Places are eligible for a 50% reduction in property taxes. The Wallace Property Relief Constitutional Amendment provides that property listed in the National Register be assessed at the lowest rate, regardless of use. Prior to the amendment, there was no recognition of historical properties. Now, for the first time, special provisions for historic properties exist. Historic buildings and sites are now assessed at 10%, regardless of use. Nonprofits, local government, and universities are eligible to apply for the Alabama Cultural Resources Preservation Trust Fund, a 50/50 matching grant program. Eligible funding categories include survey and planning, historic restoration and archaeological excavation and eligible projects are those used for historic preservation. The agency also administers the Federal Tax Credit Program. Individuals who have rehabilitated an income producing building used for commercial or industrial purposes can receive a 20% tax credit on expenses incurred during renovation. To be eligible for funding, buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership.

There have been no funding programs available to individual property owners since 1983. The Federal Tax Credit Program offers a 20% tax credit on money spent rehabilitating an income producing building that will be used for commercial or industrial purposes. Buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership to qualify.

Although $1.7 million is available in historical renovation grants, funds are not directly awarded to individual property owners. Home-owners must have the support of a sponsoring agency to apply for funding. This may include a certified local government, nonprofit organization, Indian tribe, or a national register listed district or educational institution. Matching funds are usually required. The office also administers the Federal Tax Credit Program. Individual property owners are eligible to apply for loans or mini-grants. Low interest loans are offered by the Historic Preservation Loan Fund in partnership with several banks throughout Arkansas. Mini-grants provide matching funds of up to $5,000 for small scale rehabilitation projects. Total project cost cannot exceed $10,000 and a dollar for dollar cash match is required. For both loans and mini-grants properties must be listed on or eligible for listing on the National Register. The Federal Tax Credit Program offers a 20% tax credit to individuals who have spent money rehabilitating an income producing building to be used for commercial or industrial purposes. Buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership to qualify. There is also a Courthouse Grant Program available to individual county courthouses listed or eligible for listing on the National Historic Register. Grant funds vary from year to year.

The State Historic Fund gives out grants to nonprofit groups or individuals in the private sector who have the sponsorship of their municipality or county. Once the grant is awarded it will go directly to the private sector applicant. Eligible categories include acquisition and development, education, and survey and planning projects. Funding is divided into four areas: 1) General Funding Pool: No maximum award amount. The average award has been between $45,000 and $60,000. Few awards are made in excess of $100,000; 2) Mini Grants: Maximum award is $2,500, minimum award is $500; 3) Emergency Funding Pool: Total amount allocated to this pool is $50,000. Although a dollar match isn't required, applicants are expected to share in the cost of the project; 4) Multi-Phase Grants: Multi-year projects based on comprehensive planning and clear fund raising strategies. The agency also administers the Federal Tax Credit Program. Individuals who have rehabilitated an income producing building used for commercial or industrial purposes can receive a 20% tax credit on expenses incurred during renovation. To be eligible for funding, buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership.

For profit corporations and private individuals are not eligible to apply for grants funded with state general revenue funds. While individuals are technically eligible to apply for grants from other state and federal funds, funds are rarely awarded. State agencies, units of local government, and nonprofit organizations are eligible to submit applications and compete for funding. Eligible funding categories include acquisition and development, survey and planning, and community education. In general, grants will provide 50/50 matching assistance. Funding is provided through state matching grants, state general revenue/infrastructure funding for special category grants and federal funds for matching grants. The agency also administers the Federal Tax Credit Program. Individuals who have rehabilitated an income producing building used for commercial or industrial purposes can receive a 20% tax credit on expenses incurred during renovation. South Carolina

Mary Watson Edmonds
Deputy State Historic Preservation Officer
Historic Preservation
P.O. Box 11669
Columbia, SC 29211 803-734-8593

This office administers both federal and state grant programs to support preservation efforts of individuals, organizations, institutions and local governments. Owners of South Carolina properties that are listed in the National Register of Historic Places or determined eligible for membership may apply for State Development Grants and State Planning Grants. Funds from State Development grants assist preservation work on historic structures or the preservation or scientific excavation of archaeological sites. These are reimbursable, 50/50 matching grants. Awards generally range from $5,000 to $25,000. State Planning Grants encourage sound planning when potential State Development Grant projects are in an early state. These are reimbursable 75/25 matching grants. Grant awards range from $1,500 to $4,500. Individuals may also benefit from the Federal Tax Credit Program. Through this program, individuals who have rehabilitated an income producing building for commercial or industrial purposes can receive a 20% tax credit on expenses incurred during renovation. To be eligible for funding, buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership. Individuals may also apply for Federal Survey and Planning Grants. Funds from this category help to identify South Carolina's historic and prehistoric resources, nominate them to the National Register of Historic Places, educate the public about their value and make effective plans to preserve them.

There are no state grants available to individual property owners at the present time. However, individuals, public agencies and nonprofits are eligible to apply for the Deadwood Fund which makes loans and grants available to purchase, restore or develop historic property for residential, commercial, or public purposes. The agency also administers the Federal Tax Credit Program. Individuals who have rehabilitated an income producing building used for commercial or industrial purposes can receive a 20% tax credit on expenses incurred during renovation. To be eligible for funding, buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership. The Historic South Dakota Foundation also operates a statewide revolving loan fund which makes money available to individuals doing rehabilitation work. However, requests for loans far exceed the current loan pool. The Foundation has a backlog of over 40 loan requests representing $600,000 in rehabilitation projects. The South Dakota Legislature has also approved an eight year moratorium on property tax assessment for improvements on historical buildings. Buildings must be on the state Register of Historic Places to qualify. Certified local governments can apply for assistance through a federal funding program. Each year 10% of the State Historic Preservation Office's federal appropriation is passed to county local governments in the form of matching grants. These grants fund local preservation activities in communities that have preservation zoning ordinances. Certified Local Governments can apply for either Survey and Planning funds or Federal Development funds.

At present, there are no state or federal funds directly available to individual property owners. However, individuals can apply for funding through Utah's Certified Local Grant Program. Homeowners qualify if they have the support of a sponsoring agency. Matching funds are usually required. Last year, $120,000 was available in total funding. The agency also administers the State and Federal Tax Credit Programs. Through these programs individuals can receive a 20% tax credit on expenses they incurred while rehabilitating a building that will be used for residences (state tax credit only), commercial or industrial purposes. Buildings must be listed on the National Register of Historic Places or be eligible for membership to qualify.

I Wanna Be an Inventor

Help For Inventors: Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights

Most inventors realize that it's vitally important to protect their idea by copyrighting it and obtaining the necessary patents and copyrights, but did you know that it's also important to look around for loans and other grants to support your business while working on your invention? If you want an idea to become an actual product, you have to invest an awful lot of your time into its research, and not just on a part time basis. Loans and grants programs for inventors help you do just that — for example, Hawaii offers low cost loans to inventors, as do other states around the country. First, let's talk about getting the necessary information concerning trademark and patent procedures. It's a first step in protecting your claim to future profits from your invention.

Patent and Trademark Office

United States patent and trademark laws are administered by the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO). States also have trade secret statutes, which generally state that if you guard your trade secret with a reasonable amount of care, you will protect your rights associated with that secret. The PTO examines patent and trademark applications, grants protection for qualified inventions, and registers trademarks. It also collects, assembles, and disseminates the technological information patent grants. The PTO maintains a collection of more than 5 million United States patents issued to date, several million foreign patents, and 1.2 million trademarks, together with supporting documentation. Here's how to find out what you need to do to patent your idea.

What a Great Idea

To help you get started with patenting your invention, the Patent and Trademark Offices will send you a free booklet upon request called Summary of How the Patent Process Works. There are three legal elements involved in the process of invention: the conception of the idea, diligence in working it out, and reducing it to practice — i.e., getting a finished product that actually works. If you have a great idea you think might work, but you need time to develop it further before it is ready to be patented, what should you do?

Protect Your Idea for $6

You can file a Disclosure Statement with the Patent and Trademark Office, and they will keep it in confidence as evidence of the date of conception of the invention or idea.

Disclosure Statement

Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights

Send an 8 1/2 x 13" drawing, a copy of the drawing, signed disclosure, SASE, and a check or money order for $6 to file. Upon request, the above office will also send you a free brochure on Disclosure Statements.

This is the best way to keep the idea you are working on completely secret and yet document the date you conceived the idea. You can file the Disclosure Statement at any time after the idea is conceived, but the value of it will depend on how much information you put into it — so put as much detail into this statement as you can.

Another way to document the date of conception is to have someone vouch for you and your idea. Explain your idea to another person who is able to understand it and have them acknowledge what you have said to them in a signed, dated, notarized affidavit. Keep the voucher statement in a safe place in case you should ever need to produce it as proof of conception.

Either of the above two methods produces documentation that can be used as evidence if someone else later claims to have thought of your idea first and patents it before you do. The drawback to the voucher method is that it does not preserve absolute secrecy as does filing a disclosure statement. The person you told may tell someone else, and then you might have a problem.

Telling the World

Another way to document the date of conception is to publish it in a journal. Suppose that while in your basement to see why your old furnace is not working, you trip over your stationary exercise bicycle, which you never use, and hit your head. You also hit upon a way to heat your home by hooking up the furnace to one of the bike wheels and pedalling for 15 minutes. You're not sure if this method will work with any other furnace except your own, but it might. If you publish this or any other idea in a journal, it is automatically protected for a year.

Publication acts as collateral evidence of the date of conception. If you are the first to conceive of an idea, and no one else has previously filed a Disclosure Statement on it or taken a Voucher Affidavit or published it, then for a year no one can patent your idea. Note that during the year you have to patent your invention you may not know whether someone else has documented an earlier conception date. The other catch to this method is that you have only a year to act. The heat is on because after a year you are barred from patenting your own invention! This is because the government wants you to use a reasonable amount of diligence in putting the idea to work sooner rather than later.

The Purpose of Documenting The Date of Conception

If someone else should try to patent your idea, filing a Disclosure Statement shows that you thought of it first, although filing this statement does not legally protect your invention. Documentation of the conception date gives you time to patent your invention, and is invaluable if you need to prove when you thought of your idea if a dispute should arise. (Note that filing a Disclosure Statement gives you limited defensive legal protection only if you follow it up with a patent in two years. Unlike a patent, it cannot be used offensively, to stop someone else from patenting the same idea.) When you go to file for a patent, if you and a competitor get into a dispute as to who was the first to invent it, the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) will hold an Interference Proceeding. If you thought of the idea first, your Disclosure Statement or Voucher

Affidavit will go a long way towards establishing that you were the first inventor and should therefore receive the patent for it.

Research Resources That Can Help You Turn Your Idea Into Reality

While diligently working out the details of your invention you can use the extensive resources of over 150,000 scientific and technical journals, articles, and books at the Scientific Document Library at the PTO in Crystal City, VA.

Facilitating public access to the more than 25 million cross referenced United States patents is the job of PTO's Office of Technology Assessment and Forecast (OTAF), 703-308-0322. It has a master database which covers all United States patents, and searches are available for a fee which is based on the size of the project. The minimum search fee is $150, but no fee is charged if the information you need is already contained in a report they have on hand. This office can run a search for you based on classification, subclass, country, or company name, but not by work or topic. An OTAF search will not result in an indepth patent search. (More on that, and how to find classifications in the Conducting Your Own Patent Search section below.) OTAF extracts information from its database and makes it available in a variety of formats, including publications, custom patent reports, and statistical reports. The purpose of most of the reports generated by an OTAF search is to reveal patent trends.

Copies of the specifications and drawings of all patents are available from PTO. Design patents and trademark copies are $1.50 each. Plant patents not in color are $10 each, while plant patents in color are $20 each. To make a request, you must have the patent number. For copies, contact:

Patenting Your Invention

To patent your invention, start by ordering the Patent Booklet called General Information Concerning Patents, and Application Form.

Superintendent of Documents
U.S. Government Printing Office
Washington, DC 20402 202-512-1800

The cost is $2 and may be charged to Mastercard, VISA or Choice Card. The booklet must be ordered by its stock number 003-004-00641-2.

The application will ask you for a written description, oath, and drawing where possible. The cost to file for a patent to individuals or small businesses of under 15 employees (defined by SBA standards) is $315. It generally takes 18 months to two years for the PTO to grant a patent, and rights start the date the patent is granted. If you use your invention prior to being granted a patent, you can put "patent pending" on your product. This warns competitors that you have taken the necessary steps, but otherwise affords you no legal protection. Before embarking on the patenting process, you should conduct a patent search to make sure no one else has preceded you.

Conducting Your Own Patent Search

Before investing too much time and money on patenting your idea, you will want to see if anyone has already patented it. The PTO will only conduct searches on a specific inventor's name that you request. The fee is $10 and covers a 10-year time span. You can request this service by calling 703-308-0595. If you wish to hire a professional to do your patent search, consult the local yellow pages or obtain a copy of Patent Attorneys and Agents Registered to Practice Before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. You can view this publication at the PTO Search Room, or obtain it from the U.S. Government Printing Office. Even if your search is not as in-depth as that of a patent attorney or a patent agent, you may still find the information that you need. You may conduct your patent search at the Patent and Trademark Office Search Room located at:

Patent and Trademark Office (PTO)
Washington, DC 20231 703-308-0595

You can also conduct your patent search at any one of the 72 Patent Depository Libraries (PDLs) throughout the country. For information about the Patent Depository Library Program and the location of a library near you, call the toll free number listed below.

Office of Patent Depository Library Programs
U.S. Patent and Trademark Office
2021 Jefferson Davis Hwy., Suite 2004 1-800-435-7735
Arlington, VA 22202 703-308-3924

The mailing address is:

Office of Patent Depository Libraries Office
U.S. Patent and Trademark Office
Suite 2004
Washington, DC 20231

This office distributes the information to the 72 PDLs. The information is kept on CD-Rom discs, which are constantly updated, and you or the library personnel can use them to do a patent search. CD-Rom discs have been combined to incorporate CASSIS (Classification and Search Support Information System). CD-Rom discs do not give you online access to the PTO database. Online access will be available through APS (Automated Patent Systems) within two years. APS is presently available only to patent examiners, public users of the PTO Search Room and to 14 of the 72 Patent Depository Libraries on a pilot program basis. Each PDL with the online APS has its own rules regarding its use. To use the online APS at the PTO Search Room, you must first sign up and take a class at the Search Room. Online access costs $40 per connect hour, and the charge for paper used for printouts is additional.

If you do not live near a PDL, the three CD-Rom discs are available through subscription. You may purchase the Classification disc, which dates back to 1790, for $210; the Bibliography disc, which dates back to 1969, for $210; and the ASIST disc, which contains a roster of patent attorneys, assignees, and other information for $151. You can also conduct your patent search and get a copy of it through commercial database services such as:

Mead Data Central, NEXIS Express, LEXPAT; 1-800-543-6862, 1-800-543-6862, Fax: 513-865-7418. Searches are done free of charge on patent topics. The charge for information found is $30 for a list of abstracts, plus print charges. Copies of patents (which you may decide to order after viewing the listing, or order directly if you already know which patent you want) cost $20. Copies include full text and detailed description of drawings, but no actual drawings because information is pulled from the electronic database.

If complete secrecy or doing your own search is your object, you may also subscribe to LEXPAT through the full library service. The cost is $28 per hour access charge, plus 65 cents per minute connect time. To subscribe call 1-800-843-6476.

Derwent, 1420 Spring Hill Rd., Suite 525, McLean, VA 22102; 1-800-451-3451, 703-790-0400, Fax: 703-790-1426. Patent searches are $360 per hour, plus 80 cents per record and $40 per hour for technical time. Copies of patents are $13-$16 for the first 25 pages and 67 cents for each additional page thereafter.

Rapid Patent, 1921 Jefferson Davis Highway, Suite 1821D, Arlington, VA 22202; 1-800-457-0850, 703-920-5050, Fax: 703-413-0127. Minimum costs for patent searches are: $240 for Mechanical, $290 for Electrical or Chemical. They are done manually. Delivery time is usually about four weeks. Copies of patents cost $3.25 for each 25 pages.

CompuServe, 1-800-848-8199. There is a $39.95 one-time fee. Search time is $12.50 per hour or 21 cents per minute. Searches are available for abstracts ($4), full listing ($4), or classification ($4).

If you are going to do your own patent search at your local Patent Depository Library, begin with the Manual and Index to U.S. Patent Classifications to identify the subject area where the patent is placed. Then use the CD-Rom discs to locate the patent. CD-Rom discs enable you to do a complete search of all registered patents but do not enable you to view the full patent, with all its specific details. Lastly, view the patent, which will be kept on microfilm, cartridge, or paper. What information there is to view varies by library, depending on what they have been able to purchase. If the library you are using does not have the patent you want, you may be able to obtain it through inter-library loan.

Copies of patents can be ordered from the PTO at 703-308-9726, or more quickly, but for a price, from commercial services such as Derwent or Rapid Patent. Depending on what each individual PDL has available, copies of patents can be obtained for no fee.

To obtain a certified copy of a patent, call 703-308-9726 (Patent Search Library at the PTO). The fee is $5 and you must have the patent number. For a certified copy of an abstract of titles, the fee is $15. For a certified copy of patent assignments, with a record of ownership from the beginning until present, call 703-308-9726. The cost is $15, and to request specific assignments you must have the reel and frame number.

Trademarks

Registering a trademark for your product or service is the way to protect the recognition quality of the name you are building. The PTO keeps records on more than 1.2 million trademarks and records. Over 500,000 active trademarks are kept on the floor of the library, while "dead" trademarks are kept on microfilm. Books contain every registered trademark ever issued, starting in 1870. You can visit the Patent and Trademark Office to research a trademark. You can then conduct your search manually for no charge or use their Trademark Search System (T-Search) for $40 per hour, plus ten cents per page and $25 per hour for office staff assistance time.

Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights

If you can't do it yourself, you can hire someone to do the search for you. For an agent to do this, consult the local yellow pages under "Trademark Agents/Consultants" or "Trademark Attorneys". You can also locate an agent by calling your local bar association for a list of recommendations.

To conduct your own search at a Patent Depository Library use the CD-Rom disc on trademarks. It is not presently available for purchase. The CD-Rom disc contains trademarks but not images. Images can be found in the Official Gazette, which contains most current and pending trademarks. Subscriptions to the Gazette for trademarks cost $312 per year. The Gazette for patents costs $583 per year. Both are issued every two weeks and can be ordered from the U.S. Government Printing Office. You can also purchase an image file which contains pending and registered trademarks and corresponding serial or registration numbers through Thomson and Thomson by calling 1-800-692-8833. The information contained in it dates back to April 1, 1987 and is updated by approximately 500 images weekly. However, the PDL you use is likely to have an image of the trademark on microfilm or cartridge, and also have copies of the Official Gazette. If not, and you have the registration number, you may obtain a copy of the trademark you want for $1.50 from the PTO. Contact:

There are also several commercial services you can use to conduct trademark searches:

CompuServe, 1-800-848-8199. Fees are: $39.95 one time charge, plus $12.80 per hour or 21 cents per minute online time, plus $4 per search and $4 for full entry callup.

Trademark Scan produced by Thomson and Thomson. It can be purchased by calling 1-800-692-8833 (ask for online services), or accessed directly via Dialog. Trademark Scan is updated three times per week, and includes state and federal trademarks, foreign and domestic. To access Trademark Scan you must already have Dialog. The cost is $130 per hour. Call 703-524-8004 or 1-800-334-2564. The fax number for Trademark Producer Scan is 617-786-8273. Users who already own the database should use this number.

Derwent, 1-800-451-3451, is a commercial service that will conduct the search for you. They will access the Trademark Scan database via Dialog. Cost is $60 per mark plus $1 per record. If required, 24-hour turnaround time is available.

Visual image of trademarks are not available on any of the electronic services above.

Online services and database discs for both patents and trademarks are constantly being expanded. For information on an extensive range of existing and projected products, call the PTO Office of Electronic Information at 703-308-0322 and ask for the U.S. Department of Commerce, PTO Office of Information Systems' Electronic Products Brochure. For example, there is a Weekly Text File, containing text data of pending and registered trademarks. Information can be called up by using almost any term. It can be purchased from IMSMARQ, 215-834-5089, the Trademark Register through Bell Atlantic Gateway, 1-800-638-6363, and Thomson & Thomson, 1-800-692-8833.

How to Register a Trademark

Get a copy of the booklet, Basic Facts about Trademarks from the U.S. Government Printing Office. It is free upon request from the Trademark Search Library by calling 703-308-9800/9805. The mark you intend to use needs to be in use before you apply. The fee to register your trademark is $175. The time to process your registration can take up to 14 months.

The Right Way to Get a Copyright

Copyrights are filed on intellectual property. A copyright protects your right to control the sale, use of, distribution, and royalties from a creation in thought, music, films, art, or books. For more information, contact:

Library of Congress
Copyright Office
Washington, DC 20559 202-479-0700
Public Information Office 202-707-3000

If you know which copyright application you require, you can call the Forms Hotline, open 7 days per week, 24 hours per day at 202-707-9100. The fee is $20 for each registration.

The Library of Congress provides information on copyright registration procedures and copyright card catalogs which cover 28 million works that have been registered since 1870. The Copyright Office will research the copyright you need and send you this information by mail. Requests must be made in writing and you must specify exactly what information you require. Contact the Copyright Office, Reference and Bibliography, Library of Congress, 101 Independence Ave., SE, Washington, DC 20559; 202-707-6850, Public Information 707-3000. The fee for the search is $30 per hour. You can get a certificate stating the search was conducted by qualified researchers. There is no fee if you conduct the search yourself, and staff at the Library of Congress will show you how to do it. You may then, if you wish, request a certificate. The Copyright Office will conduct its own search, but your work will probably reduce the time of the search and save you money.

Subscriptions to the following parts of the Library of Congress Catalogue of Copyright Entries are available from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402-9325. Each lists material registered since the last issue was published. Order by stock number using Mastercard, VISA, check, or money order. To order, call the Government Printing Office Order Desk at 202-512-1800. Fax for delays in receiving orders: 202-512-2250. For help or complaints call the Superintendent of Documents Office at 202-512-1803 (publications), or 202-512-1806 (subscriptions).

Invention Scams: How They Work

Fake product development companies prey on amateur inventors who may not be as savvy about protecting their idea or invention as experienced inventors might be. Most of the bogus/fake companies use escalating fees.

The following is a description of how most of them operate:

- The inventor is invited to call or write for free information.
- The inventor is then offered a free evaluation of his idea.
- Next comes the sales call. The inventor is told he has a very good potential idea and that the company is willing to share the cost of marketing, etc. Actual fact, there is no sharing with these companies. Most times the inventor has to come up with the money (usually several hundred dollars or more) for a patent search and a market analysis. Neither of these are worth anything.
- Then the inventor receives a professional/ impressive looking portfolio which contains no real information at all. All the paper crammed into this portfolio looks topnotch, but it's all computer generated garbage.
- Upon receiving this portfolio, the inventor is lured into signing a contract that commits him to giving the company thousands of dollars to promote/license the product. The company sends some promotional letters to fulfill their obligation, but large manufacturers simply toss them into the trash.

After all this, the inventor has spent thousands of dollars, wasted a lot of time, and gotten nowhere with his product.

How To Avoid Losing a Fortune

According to the experts, the inventor should:

- Beware of the comeons offered by these unethical companies. Avoid using the invention brokers who advertise on TV late in the evening; in public magazines; those who offer 800 numbers; and those on public transit display signs.
- When upfront money is required, look out. There are very few legitimate consultants who insist on a retainer or hourly fee.
- Don't allow the enthusiasm of your idea to take over your inherent common sense. Talk to your patent attorney and see if he knows anything about this company. Plus, check with inventors associations in the state, and see what they have to say about this particular company. Many of these companies have complaints filed against them with the local Better Business Bureau.
- Demand to know what percentage of ideas the company accepts. Legitimate brokers might accept 2 ideas out of every 100. The fake companies tend to accept about 99 out of 100.

I Wanna Be an Inventor

- Find out their actual success rate. Any corporation/ company that will not give you their success rate (not licensing agreements) is a company to stay away from.
- Get an objective evaluation of your invention from reputable professionals. This will save you plenty of money on a bad idea.

Free Help for Inventors

If you have a great idea and want to turn it into reality, don't rush out and spend what could be thousands of dollars for a private invention company and a patent attorney. You can get a lot of this help for free or at a fraction of the cost. There is a lot of help out there: university sponsored programs, not for profit groups, state affiliated programs, profit making companies, etc. Depending on the assistance and the organization, some services are free, others have reasonable fees.

Many of the inventors organizations hold regular meetings where speakers share their expertise on topics such as licensing, financing and marketing. These groups are a good place for inventors to meet other inventors, patent attorneys, manufacturers, and others with whom they can talk and from whom they can get help.
