The 26th Annual Convention of the Blackpool Magic Circle attracted some 1,200 registrants and their new venue, the Winter Gardens, was a considerable improvement over the old location. The dealers — about 25 — were well provided for; stands arranged horse-shoe fashion ensured all had equal prominence noticeably missing were Ken Brooke and Davenports. Trevor Lewis lectured on children's magic and there were plenty of 'names' on the Gala Show — Fred Kaps, Howard de Courcy, Otto Wessley and Christa, Van Buren and Greta, Somerville Marionettes, Cody and Oran (rope spinning and sharpshooting), Scott Christian and Family, The Wychwoods and Ian Kent. An excellent bill with plenty of variety, the performers having the luxury of a proper stage and the audience comfortable seats. Food and drinks available most of the time.

So far so good — an unqualified success, but now the not so good news for those whose chief interest lies in close-up magic, and that means readers of this magazine.

There were two sessions, the second being a repeat performance by the same four performers. If we assume that two-thirds of the total number of registrants watched this event — a low estimate — it means that there was an average of one hundred spectators at each table, of which about 30 would be able to see in comfort. Such a situation would have been unacceptable to spectators watching the Gala Show and would have caused something of a riot.

It was something of an ordeal for the performers having to do eight shows, an experience something akin to being on a treadmill.

Starting about 30 minutes late the first performer at our table was Fred Kaps with cards and coins and in the latter included the effect wherein a coin held in a spectator's hand changed places with the works inside his wrist watch. In spite of the large audience and performing seated he succeeded to a large extent in getting over close-up material, which was, as always, superbly performed. Gordon Bruce with excellent card effects, also seated, suffered most from the conditions, his tricks requiring that the attention of the spectators be directed to cards lying on the table much of the time leaving little opportunity to 'project' beyond the first couple of rows. Bob Read next — as usual performing material from his publications — both tricks and patter. Here we saw the advantage of performing standing when in this situation which is a lesson in itself to those contemplating building a close-up routine. Andrew O'Connor — by far the youngest member of the team, also on his feet, amongst other material used giant cards and no doubt most could follow with relative ease the effects performed.

Should it be thought that the above observations are a 'stirring' operation the assumption would be correct. They are made with the sole objective of making organisers of similar events aware that there is an ever increasing interest in close-up magic and more consideration should be given to this aspect of magic both when budgeting and making arrangements for its performance.

In respect of the above event the organisers are to be congratulated on their efforts by providing proper tables with a suitable covering. Jugs of water for liquid refreshment were available for the performers who were properly introduced to the audience. All these amenities were suggested as essential to the smooth running of such events by Bert Graham in his article entitled 'A Plea' which appeared in Pabular Vol.3 No.10. A further excellent idea was a table shielded with a large screen behind each table giving cover for the performers to set up, but the closed circuit television proved to be a waste of time.

All the above was fine but the real problem remains. How to arrange matters so that such a large number of registrants can see close-up magic in comfort. Not all who attend are particularly interested in close-up magic and a partial solution could be to provide for them an alternative attraction to run concurrently. This could be lectures not likely to be of interest to close-up performers and possibly a show by the dealers each showing one speciality, thus substantially reducing the number attending the close-up show.

Even with the above or similar ideas it would still require at least a dozen tables and two or more sessions to enable the event to be one which could be truly called 'close-up' magic. Whatever arrangements are made there is no way it is possible for every performer to be seen to advantage by all the registrants when they number a thousand plus. Lastly there is no possible way in which only four performers can satisfactorily entertain so large a number of spectators.

During the interval of the Gala Paul Daniels received an illuminated message to Ken Brooke signed by the Conventioneers from top comedian and magic nut Ken Dodd. A nice thought by the Blackpool boys.

QASIS

CARD INC/VIND As soon as the first spectator names a card, you fill in the information with a nailwriter. The

The performer displays a pack of playing cards. Fanning them faces towards himself, he removes a single card, which he holds with its back towards the audience. The balance is put aside.

A spectator is asked to freely name any playing card. The performer hands the card he is holding to another spectator. Addressing the first participant, the performer says, "Sir, I let you exercise a totally free and independent choice in the naming of a playing card. Is that correct?" The spectator concurs. "With this freedom of choice," continues the performer, "you elected to name the two of hearts."

Turning to the second participant, the performer states, "Madam, you are holding my prediction would you inform the audience as to precisely what card I predicted?"

She says, "The two of hearts."

METHOD:

The card taken out of the pack at the start of the routine is actually a blank card, whose back matches that of the rest of the pack. On the face of this card, prior to the performance, you have written:

I PR	EDICT
THE	ı
OF	•••••

fill in the information with a nailwriter. The second spectator reads the message — and must verify that the predicted card is correct. Obviously, this routine is intended for a stage situation, where the prediction card is not shown to the audience for the simple reason that most of the spectators would be too far away to see it. Thus, the use of the second spectator as 'verifier' is logical. The rest of the audience, of course, believe that she is holding the actual card named. Though the 'verifier' knows that the card she holds bears writing rather than a card face, she is equally baffled as to how the correct information got there so all are fooled.

A simple idea, but one which I believe has some merit.

SCATTERSHOT — A collection of neo-paleonic card magic by Phil Goldstein. Available from the author at 121 Charles Street, Apt 4A, Boston, Mass. 02114, U.S.A. Five dollars.

Containing twenty card effects within its 20 pages this is a decidedly 'meaty' publication. Covering many wellknown plots with interesting variations of methods, utilising what are modern basic sleights to achieve the effects. The enthusiastic card man will find much to get his teeth into. Most can be done with a borrowed pack only requiring facility with such sleights as the Elmsley Count — Ascanio Spread — Orlam Subtlety — Mexican Turnover — Buckle Count - Hamman Count - the Half-pass etc.

Effects dealt with include Oil and Water - Collectors - Elevator - Sandwich - Ace Transpositions - a signed card, freely selected penetrates a magazine. Among the others the following appealed. Spectator is given the four aces to hold between his palms. A freely selected card is pushed between the held aces, and then the spectator is requested to return the chosen card he finds that he only has the four aces. The chosen card is revealed face up in the pack.

The above information should be sufficient to indicate the kind of material offered and should it be your approach to card magic a purchase is recommended.

Fred Robinson

In the last few years 'mercenary' is a word that has been kicked around a lot all over the world. As far as the newspapers are concerned it is usually applied to ex-servicemen of one country who are prepared to fight for another, for money.

In showbusiness the word is usually applied to theatrical agents, and it isn't necessarily true. I'll give you an example. Agents come in all shapes and sizes, tall, short, fat, good, bad, honest and crooked. I work for several small ones, by choice, although I do get the occasional job from the largest theatrical organisation in this country (I thought I'd sneak that in).

A few weeks ago I had a call from a guy I do quite a lot of work for and he said, "Next Friday A ----n Hotel, 10 o'clock, and keep it clean." He gave me the address and in the course of a 30 second conversation I found out that he had farmed me out to another agent because the job he had me booked for had collapsed, or he had given it to a cheaper act, or — or — or who cares about reasons. I was still working that night.

So-o-o on that very same Friday I arrived in plenty of time to find out that the hotel was actually a pub. I parked the car outside, left my bags in it, stepped inside to be greeted by five rock-type musicians belting away at full blast, plus maybe 300 customers trying to make more noise than the band. To add to the problem the room was L-shaped so around 50% of the audience wouldn't see the action anyway.

Now believe me, these kind of places don't frighten me one little bit; I grew up working in them and I can still do it, and will again, but only if I have to. Currently I don't have to, so I turned round, got back into the car and drove home.

Next day I called the agent and explained that the place was a pub and that I don't work in pubs any more, or bars or saloons or any other such-like places (which he knew). He was surprised because he had assumed, because of the 'keep it clean' instruction, that it was an after-dinner date in a proper hotel.

Now, usually with the agents I work for there is one simple rule: if you don't turn up you don't work for them again. But this is not a hard and fast rule. It has an escape clause. All you have to do is pay him the commission he would have received if you had done the job. That's mercenary!

In this instance I offered to pay the commission and he said "Forget it. It wasn't my job anyway." So I said "But what do I tell the other agent?" and he said "Tell him to !!*!"

Like I said a few paragraphs back. All agents aren't mercenary.

I remember many years ago when I first arrived in London entertainment in the pubs was quite common. Every other little pub used to have an act or two on a Saturday night. With the advent of TV and the so-called affluent society this tapered off along with the closing down of variety and music hall theatres. It stayed that way until a few years ago things suddenly started to boom again, but this time it was strippers and go go dancers; 'entertainment' was advertised every evening.

In the last 3 or 4 years 'acts' have been in again, mainly comedians. The problem is that many of those running the public house just have no idea at all about entertainment. They give you a microphone and assume that as you can talk louder than anyone else, that that's it for entertainment. Just a few places have an idea of what is needed, but not many.

One of the big things today in pub entertainment is the fact that they want to be able to put your name up outside in very large 'Dayglo' print and they want to tell the world that you have appeared on Television and it doesn't matter which programme you were on.

It's a strange situation that has arisen today. If you've appeared on TV you must be good. If you haven't appeared on it you can't be very good.

I'm not very good.

Goodbye.

Last month it was mentioned that 'Martin Breese and the Sound of Magic' were the main people in this country for cassette tapes on magic, implying they were one and the same which of course they are not.

Martin Breese runs 'Magicassettes' and Vic Pinto and Pat Page the Sound of Magic.

Both trade completely separately; our apologies for any misunderstanding.

The outstanding quality of Repro Five Star Reels is now world renowned. If you are using Repro Reel you are using the world's best. A reel of unparalleled precision and quality. Our reels are made by our own mechanic.

All our reels are of Metal construction, with the important working parts machined in Solid Brass for precision and accuracy. No expense has been spared. You cannot buy better at any price, and with normal care they will last you a lifetime.

REELS

Beautifully made precision reel that is so versatile. Only one inch (2.5cm) in diameter, this SILENT beauty has a fine, strong thread over 36 inches (1 metre). Complete with finger grip for easy handling. Precise controlled action allows the speed and timing of the thread take-up to be under your complete control at all times.

Comes complete with fully illustrated instructions and routine for performing the famous Albenice effect, "Serpent Silk" or Self Untying Knot.

Without doubt the best utility finger reel available today.......And just look at the economic price.....£5.25.

Utility Finger

Precision made with a very long run of thread which can be LOCKED AT ANY POSITION during or prior to performance. Yet a simple pull of the thread will release the lock and place the thread back under strong tension. PRECISE CONTROLLED release action ensures that the speed and kiming of the thread take-up can be under your complete control at all times!

Because of the very strong spring incorporated the FIVE STAR LOCKING reel is capable of pulling larger and heavier loads than usual.

Comes complete with fully illustrated instructions and routines and our unquestioned NO RISK MONEY BACK GUARANTEE.

Double Wrist

You may have seen bulky, hand-held double reels before — to enable you to spread cards in thin air or to cause a billiard ball to mysteriously float from hand to hand.

Now for something completely different! Before, during and after this amazing effect your hands are now Empty. The reel is attached to wrist strap and fits like a wristwatch. In addition we have halved the thickness of the usual double reel — Yes that's right — we have put two reels inside one case. The total thickness is only five sixteenth of an inch (8mm).

Overnight all other double reels have been rendered obsolete — and get this — the usual bulky double reels that need to be concealed in your hand cost anything between £12 - ($25) to £15 - ($35). The new Five Star Double Reel is permanently concealed, is less than half the bulk and costs only £8.50.

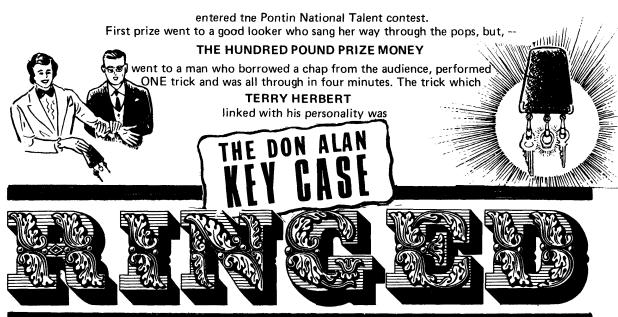

Can be used in stage or close-up presentations. Send today.

OUT OF THIS WORLD is still one of the strongest card tricks of all time, although considered a bit 'passe' of late.

When performed traditionally, no sleights are used, and this can be a weakness as accurate reconstruction by the spectator is possible. Stopping the deal halfway, and then switching the leaders is another weakness. This discrepancy is the spectator's largest clue.

I devised these two following methods with these weaknesses in mind. Some handling is made necessary but the spectator should hopefully still see it as a hands-off miracle.

EFFECT:

The spectator deals a shuffled deck straight through into two piles. One is all red, the other is all black.

Method 1

- 1. Secretly separate the colours, the red cards being on top. False shuffle the deck.
- 2. Have the spectator deal the deck into two piles face down, sorting the cards intuitively.
- 3. Have the last red card that was placed on the supposed black pile turned sideways on the pile. Remark that this was the first error.
- 4. When the deal is completed pick up the 'red' pile saying "So these are red." Place them in the left hand.
- 5. Pick up the top half of the 'black' pile down to the jogged card, and place on those in the left hand. Say "and these are black."

- 6. Push the outjogged card towards the spectator with the palm down left hand and direct the spectator to look at it as you pick up the remainder of the black pile with the right hand. You are now set to do the Ramsay version of the pass as you are starting with the left hand nearly palm down.
- 7. Apparently place this packet on those in the left hand but do the pass instead. You have all the misdirection you need, although you really shouldn't use it when performing for just one spectator, as the pass is truly invisible when well practiced.
- 8. The spectator may now inspect the pack to end.

Method 2

This is more suitable for other magii rather than the public. It's a swindle. Make up a deck that is all black cards. Arrange them so that no two identical cards are near each other.

Let your pal shuffle the deck only if he insists. Let him sort the cards in the usual way as you generate all the ridiculous distracting byplay you can muster.

He picks up one pile as you get the other. Switch your pile for 26 reds as he looks at his pile. A good method is to sweep your blacks into the lap with the right hand as the left comes into view with 26 reds.

If this works, as it is likely to, don't let your friend off the hook easily. I suggest you grab the cards and put them away saying "I don't want this little mechanical miracle to get worn out." Don't tell the secret for a week.

Who's geen a naughty goy then . . .? " simplified spin pass aces

A. Pargeter

In 'Abracadabra No.1027' there appeared a Four Ace routine entitled 'Spin Pass Aces' by John Muir. This routine employed the Spin Pass flourish attributed to Nate Leipsig to produce the four aces and involved using crimps and double undercuts to achieve the effect.

I discovered that the whole procedure could be vastly simplified by making the cut a false one.

Have the four aces on the bottom of the pack which is held in the right hand, Biddle fashion, with the second finger at the outer end and the thumb at the inner end. With the left index pointing upwards bring it into contact with the inner end of the pack and with it lift up the top half of the pack and swivel it towards the left in a clockwise direction pressing inwards. This pressure on the top half keeps the outer end of this half up against the second finger which acts as a pivot as the clockwise action continues until the position shown in (1) is reached. The pressure is now relaxed allowing the top half to fall onto the left palm. So far the procedure has followed the Leipsig spin cut which would be completed if the bottom half in the right hand were to be dropped onto the original top half now on the left palm. If instead of dropping the original bottom half to complete the cut, retain it in the right hand and describe a horizontal, clockwise circle just above the half in the left hand. During this action raise the left thumb bringing it into contact with the ace at the bottom of the right hand packet causing it to side jog to the left as shown in (2). The left thumb presses upwards on this ace causing it to turn face up on top of the left hand packet (3). The right hand continues its clockwise movement until it clears the right hand side of the half in the left hand when it places the cards it holds UNDER those in the left hand. The action should 'flow' smoothly from start to finish and has the appearance of a genuine cut. The other three aces are now on the bottom of the pack ready for the move to be repeated.

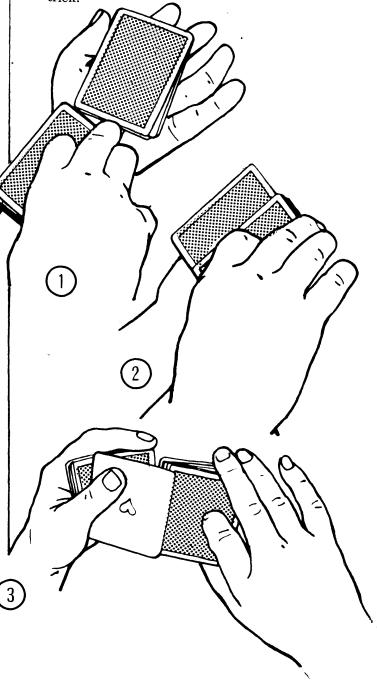

I precede this production of the four aces by having them on top of the pack which I fan faces towards the audience taking care not to spread it far enough to expose the aces.

My patter then describes the various types of shuffles and cuts used by card players commencing with the overhand shuffle during which I run the four aces to the bottom of the pack, and continue with riffle and waterfall shuffles concluding with a false cut.

All this can be presented so innocently that there seems little possibility of subterfuge and the appearance of the aces has a surprising effect. These can be used for your favourite Four Ace

Eric Mason's BILLET-DOUX in the September issue Vol.4 No.1 is great. To me, the principle does not seem to be used to the best advantage and I submit the following application which is definitely workable.

The effect is that a signed playing card, which has been freely selected, is found in a sealed envelope.

The envelope required differs from the one used in the original effect being a normal one, not an end opening one of the paybill type. It is, of course, the same size as the cards used. Prepare it by sticking down the flap and slitting open the long side opposite the flap and also the right short side. See sketch in which the broken lines indicate the cut sides. This envelope should be handy in a pocket, and an open pocket knife at the ready on the table to avoid fumbling at a later stage.

Have a card freely selected and the spectator given a felt tipped pen to write his name across its face. Meanwhile the magician turns away in order not to see the face of the card and at the same time secretly adds the envelope to the bottom of the pack. When the card is returned to the fanned pack Eric Mason's chicanery is performed sliding the card into the envelope and the fan closed.

The left hand reaches into the left coat pocket to produce the envelope using the move described in the original 'Stars of Magic' series Vol.3 entitled 'Dai Vernon's Mental Miracle'..... Remember? For those not acquainted with this particular move a suitable bottom palm could be used to convey the loaded envelope from the bottom of the pack into the pocket.

The penknife is used to slit open the envelope. Actually the blade goes into an open side and the slitting is only simulated, and to facilitate a quick finish the envelope is ripped apart to show the signed card.....thus destroying the evidence. Hope you like it.

PENTANGLE REVIEW Eric Mason

I was delighted and intrigued to receive as a Christmas gift a puzzle impeccably designed and made. I am not good at this sort of diversion so after many hours of frustrated fiddling I put the thing aside to await more patient and relaxed moments. In fact, I had decided that it was impossible to solve, and at this point I discovered that the makers had already considered this and included in the gift pack an address to which one could write for a solution. I did not even believe the address as it was not shown on my A.A. maps. However, I wrote and received by return of post a well written note with the secret versed in doggerel. Was pleased to be able to solve the puzzle, and with it separated in my hands I immediately panicked as I was unable to form it back into its original order, (was faced with another call for help, or?) worked at it and eventually 'solved' the solution. The address was - PENTANGLE, WALLOP, HAMPSHIRE, ENGLAND — would you have believed it?

I have written further and subsequently received a coloured catalogue containing some 50 diabolical devices. They range from Tangrams. double sided magic squares, rhombic and dedecahedron oriental puzzles, symetrical shapes, a Pandora's box by Professor Lionel Penrose with a nasty twist, three dimensional families of shapes like Papa Chuck, Woodchuck and Grand Papa Chuck, Chinese Rings invented by Hang Ming in the second century (this puzzled CARDAN in the sixteenth century) and made in acrylic and plated bronze in the twentieth century -255 operations solve it, if you don't make any mistakes. Sliding block puzzles — executive table mind bogglers — block, chrome steel, string, marble, paper, and glass materials go into making the superb structures. There are puzzles for beginners as well as advanced thinkers. Some have taken 2 years to reduce one sequence of moves from 184 down to 144. There are novelty puzzles involving games, trains, pythons, mazes, clinch cubes, pentacubes, polygons, solitaire and 'nine men's morris magic'. Tricky pressed steel and wire puzzles (three sets of these) and even the old trouser puzzle with two marbles.

Also supplied is a book list which includes a book about women (completely empty) — books on magic, mathematics, magic squares and cubes, palindromes, anagrams, moving pictures, coins and games, paper masks, Chaucer's puzzles, visual illusions, enigmas, secret codes, op art mazes, creative mazes, hoaxes, whittling, sundials, logic, labyrinths and boomerangs etc. etc.

The books are paperbacks sewn in signatures in the manner usually reserved for the best publications — the covers are plastic laminated and designed for years of use and there is enough material here to keep one's mind active for years — a ninepenny stamp will bring you lists, prices, catalogue, supplementary guide and a questionnaire to serve many purposes — to identify your interest, locate enthusiasts, and help Pentangle to develop the products you want. For collectors of antiques. Perhaps even the eventual establishment of a puzzle society. Do you like to make, collect, historicise, design or invent puzzles?

In all, this is a very creative and lively go ahead firm who have many items selected for display at the DESIGN CENTRE, London. For full details send a ninepenny stamp to J.D. Dalgety, Pentangle, Over Wallop, Hants SO20 8HT, England.

Highly recommended, intellectual or otherwise, young or old, or just for showing to those who know everything.

where there's smoke...

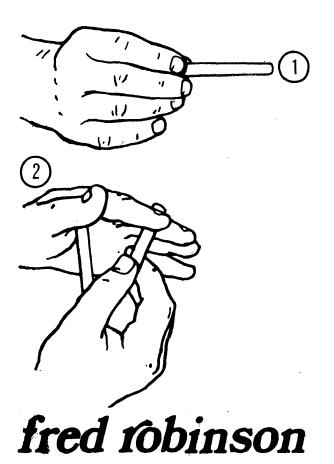

Most magicians know the stunt where a cigarette is apparently pushed into the ear and pulled from the mouth. This gag can be expanded in more than one sense of the word by first concealing an extra long cigarette in the left hand. An ordinary one is held in the right hand at the finger tips as shown in (1). Bring the free end of this cigarette into contact with the ear, or near it, and create the illusion of pushing it into the ear by sliding the fingers along it until it is completely concealed behind the fingers. The hand is then moved to the mouth and the cigarette placed between the lips, the fingers then sliding back along the cigarette bringing it back into view. Repeat this move once again.

Once more push? the cigarette into the ear, but this time the left hand concealing the long cigarette is brought up to the mouth and held by the lips, the fingers sliding along it, this time rather more slowly to increase the effect of the appearance of the long smoke.

The same stunt can be used as an opening to a continuous cigarette productions. Instead of having a long cigarette concealed in the left hand put an ordinary sized one in that position and after repeating the original stunt using the right hand only proceed as explained for the long cigarette finally taking the cigarette from the lips with the left hand placing it into the left coat pocket. Simultaneously the right hand produces its concealed cigarette from mid-air. Immediately the left hand comes out of the pocket bringing the other cigarette out again in the thumb palm position. The left hand now takes the cigarette from the right between the index and second fingers (smoking position) (2) the right hand stealing the one from the left thumb palm position. A continuous production of an apparently endless number of smokes is possible by repeating the process.

This stunt, unlikely to be used by many readers was a speciality of Stanley Merelle, a wellknown Midlands entertainer with magic, Punch and Judy and his Marvellous Marionettes; which every summer could be seen at Southport. It merely consisted of pushing a cigarette up his nostril until it was completely inside. He delighted doing this and watching the reactions of the squeamish. He probably got the idea from the Sphinx Magazine which in the twenties explained a similar effect using metal bars.

More later.

This column last month was wholly devoted to the Blackpool Magical Society's Annual one day convention and in part dealt with the closeup entertainment provided and some suggestions were made as to how this part of the function could be made less arduous both for the spectators and performers, but no solution which fully copes with the problem was suggested. The reason for this omission is simple — there is none. The problem can be alleviated but not completely cured — maybe the organisers (I am not knocking them, as has been suggested) could provide a cabaret style entertainment in its place and bow down to the inevitable fact that there is just no way to present close-up magic satisfactorily to such a large crowd.

Close-up magic by its very nature is an intimate affair and demands for its success that the audience be small. The Eddie Fechter yearly event restricts the registrants to ninety — and the Madrid Magic Circle regards about twenty-five as the limit — and when fifty attended last year it was considered to be too many. Their formula is a simple one — they book a small room at a high class hotel for the weekend and the programme consists of films, three lectures on a specific trick, and after each lecture it is a free for all with everyone wishing demonstrating their own handling of the subject in question, and lastly a 'workshop' dealing with such aspects as presentation, timing, misdirection etc.

This seems to be an idea that could well be adopted in Britain with hotels offering bargain rates for weekend accommodation out of season.

Plenty of magic on TV recently — BOB READ with a couple of his published items, Cups and Balls and Bottle production. DOUG ALKER with an All Backs variation which appeared to be an extension of his 'Useless Pack' which appeared in this magazine. (Doug has been booked to appear at the Dutch convention — also on the same bill MAURICE FOGEL.) BOB READ recently lectured as far away as Paisley and we think it was 'great'. He will be lecturing to members of the British magical Society in June. Yours truly also lectured for the latter society and learned quite a lot.

PHIL GOLDSTEIN prolific magical author and frequent contributor to this magazine recently did a two and a half weeks lecture tour in the Chicago area followed by engagements in Philadelphia and then to California where he taped an appearance for one of the major TV variety shows and has been nominated by the Magic Castle as 'Lecturer of the Year'.

Recently heard a sampler tape put out by 'Sounds of Magic'. Snippets on this cassette can be heard the voices of such magical notabilities as DAI VERNON, KEN BROOKE, AL GOSHMAN, FOGEL, JOHN BOOTH, DAVID ROTH and many others. The cost of this 15 minutes is £1 or two dollars which is refundable when ordering one of the complete cassettes, or if it is returned within 30 days.

SIMON LOVELL performs escapes when not doing close-up magic at the tables and early in May will be making an attempt to escape from a straightjacket dangling from a helicopter some two thousand feet up. Keep your thumbtips crossed for him.

KEVIN DAVIE'S 'Red-Black Surprise' the fourth line down from the top of the left hand side of page 450 Vol.3 No.12 should read 'has changed them all from black to red'. No doubt you all realised that.

TOMORROWS WORLD

Magicians watching the BBC TV programme 'Tomorrow's World' on April 11th (this is not a prediction, we are still a couple of months behind) will have seen a new British invention—an electronic device of a revolutionary nature with considerable potential in many areas.

Few will have realised its possibilities as a transmitter for use in two person mental acts and even less will be aware that its inventor was Cy Endfield, a name not unfamiliar to magicians on account of his reputation as a card man with considerable skill and creative ability whose three volume literary effort 'Entertaining Card Magic' edited by Lewis Ganson has not lost its value over the years. He also designed aringenious 'pack away' chess set and board used to commemorate the memorable battle between Spassky and Fischer for the world championship chess title. In his spare time he directs films—the best known of these being perhaps 'Zulu'.

What follows was written and prepared for publication towards the end of 1976 but had to be held over until the idea was fully protected by law.

Not too long ago, Derek Dingle, travelling on his way back from South Africa to New Jersey where he now lives looked in to see old friends in London where his extraordinary skill first flourished. He was accompanied by an American associate — Ricky Jay — and to those who know, recognise that these two comprise as high power team of manipulative talents you are likely to find in any of the ten thousand miles between from where they were coming to and where they were going.

Birds of a feather tend to have card sessions together, and that's how I found myself at Cy Endfield's South Kensington abode watching the cards pass from the hands of Ricky to Derek and to Cy and then to Alex Elmsley who just happened to be there, with me ending up feeling that I should communicate some of these happenings to Pabular readers (one idea, a location by Cy, appeared Vol.3 No.5) others may appear, if, and when permission is given.

One non-magical effect we saw was an electronic keyboard invented by Cy, where, with just five keys, he was able to cause a lighted display to exhibit at typewriter speeds all twenty-six letters of the alphabet, also all the numbers, dollar signs, pound signs, colons, full stops and dashes one needs to make complete writing sense. The entire gadget fitted under the palm of one hand, which only required that one hand to operate it. The magical thing about it, other than the mystery of seeing words and phrases appear silently at will was, that Cy has also invented a mnemonic code which makes it possible to learn to use this remarkable keyboard after no more than twenty minutes of study. Cy claims that it was solely his background in magic that enabled him to invent the system, which everyone present thought was going to herald in a new era of electronic domestic consumer devices.

It was Ricky Jay who came up with the suggestion that Cy's code could provide the basis for an incredible two-person telepathic act. The five finger keyboard could be tucked under the sender's arm, or in his pocket, and any message, whatever, could be instantly relayed (wireless transmission) to the receiving medium. The receiving device could either be the same tiny lighted display, seen from underneath a blindfold, or a tactile receiver read in same code as the sending by moving the receivers keys using solenoids (electro-magnets).

Cy has given me permission to print the code in Pabular and would require under his copyright only that if some reader wished to develop the apparatus to use as per Ricky's suggestion, that permission be asked (by writing to me) and granted by Cy, who will furnish more detailed ideas to anyone interested in the telepathic act.

Illustrated is the quick learning diagram and what follows is an explanation of it plus some helpful mnemonic hints.

The keyboard is represented by the five small circles set in an arch fitting the fingertips. The fingers do not stray from key to key as in ordinary keyboards. The first circle on the left is operated only by the thumb, the second by the first finger, the third by the middle finger, the fourth by the ring finger and the fifth by the little finger. Filled in circles represent keys which are depressed in a one hand stroke to form a letter.

There are three kinds of mnemonics (memory aids). (1) The simplest are common memory associations for single strikes — the 'U' or Upper class finger is the little finger extended as in drinking tea — hence pressing the little finger produces a 'U'. The most frequently used letter of the alphabet is 'E' and the most frequently used finger is the index finger which when pressed produces 'E'. 'O' is the centre, or Origin, hence the middle finger produced 'O'.

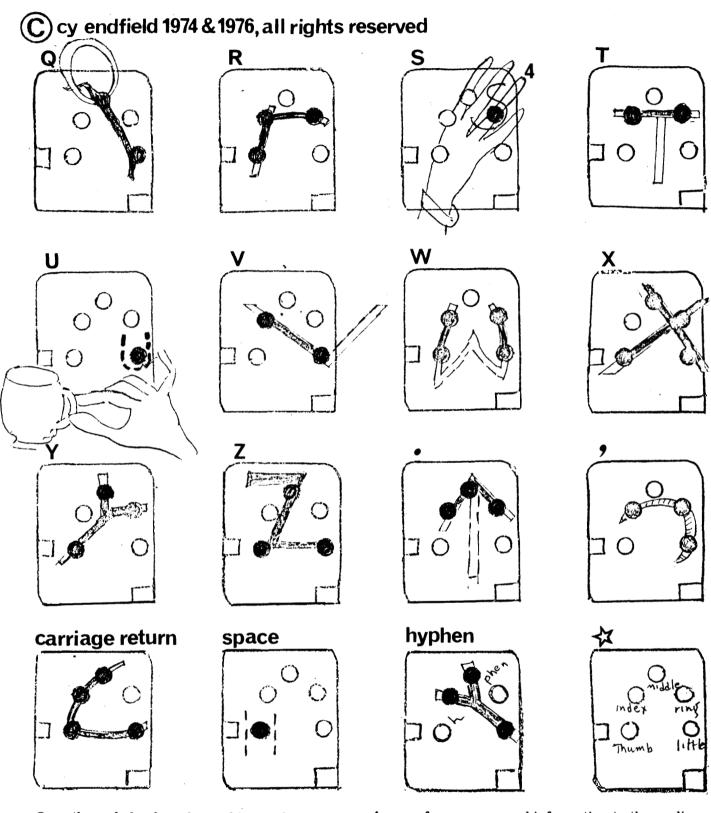

C) cy endfield 1974 & 1976, all rights reserved

When a 'stone' or solitaire is worn on the ring finger your single days are over, you are no longer S olo or Single, in other words the ring finger makes the 'S'. The thumb produces the 'space' as in ordinary typing using a space bar. (2) In some cases, the 'R', 'L', 'J', and 'C' (using the thumb and middle) 'X' and 'Y' the fingers shape the complete letter. (3) In most other cases, the characteristic stroke forming the particular letter is emphasised such as the upslant of the letter 'A' (index and middle) or the down slant of the 'N' (middle and ring) the up stroke of the 'K' and the down stroke of the 'V'. The Back of the 'B', the Dome front of the 'D' and the point of the 'full stop' etc. For 'P' Pressure, all fingers pressing down on the keys, and the Mountain peaks of the letter 'M'.

That concludes the original article.

Once the code has been learned it may have possibilities in other directions without using the electronic keyboard. One idea immediately comes to mind is an adaption of an effect which appeared in Thompson's 'My Best' in which the performer conveyed information to the medium seated behind him by causing bulbs concealed beneath the fabric of his coat to light up. Other, and simpler applications of the code may occur to readers — if so please let us know.

TAKE THREE PLUS ONE

In the March/April 1977 issue three methods of vanishing a coin were described. I have been interested in the simplification of 'classic moves' for some time, and two of my favourites have been the 'Coin in the Paper and the French Drop'. Studying the latter it occurred to me that the only persons who hold a coin between the tips of the thumb and second finger by the edges are magicians, so I swept away all preconceived ideas and basic sleights, and tried to make the envanishment appear as natural as possible. Finally I came up with the following which I have used successfully for many years.

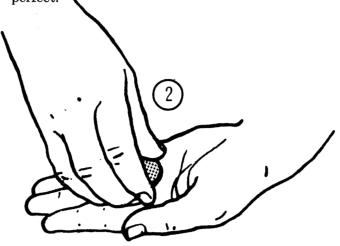

EFFECT:

The performer shows a coin lying on his left palm. He picks it up with his right hand, blows on it, causing it to disappear. That's it.

Before going into details place a coin on the left palm near the roots of the fingers as shown in (1) and pick it up with the right hand fingers, which are closed, going in front of the coin obscuring it from the spectators view, and the thumb at the rear edge (2). Repeat this action a few times, closely observing what actually happens when the coin is really taken, noting particularly how the left hand turns and drops to the side of the body with its fingers curved inwards giving the hand a natural half-closed appearance.

Having fully accustomed oneself to what happens when the right hand actually takes the coin proceed to duplicate the actions, this time the right thumb tip brushes over the surface of the coin and when it meets the fingers the right hand turns and moves upwards (without the coin) towards the right stopping just before it reaches eye level. The eyes follow throughout this action, and the left hand drops down with the coin resting in its curled fingers. Blow on the right hand and slowly open it to show that the coin has disappeared.

After showing the hand empty let it drop to the side and it will be found possible to toss the coin behind the back from the left hand to right enabling the left hand to CASUALLY be shown, or be seen to be empty. It takes a little practice, but properly presented the illusion is perfect.

arthur setterington Would you like to hear the payoff to last months story about not working in a pub? Remember? Well, the agent, the first one that is, the one I wasn't really working for that night (although I was) called me and gave me another couple of dates. Don't ask me to explain it..... either I'm getting better or this particular agent is mercenary.

Jay Marshall, he of the left hand with the acrobatic thumb, is back in town, ostensibly to appear at the Jack Hughes convention this coming weekend, but in fact, to look at any new shows which have opened in London since he was last here, buy some more books, steal a few jokes, and generally soft soap anyone who gets within firing range.

When you add to the foregoing the fact that the Magic Circle are holding their annual Collectors Day the weekend after next you will perhaps understand the Marshall Plan a little better. It is a simple plan which emanates from a simple mind. Just give him an excuse and he will come to England. The sad part of this tale is that if you don't give him an excuse he will still come because he has reached the age when he doesn't need an excuse he just has to think about it.

Mention of the Magic Circle's Collectors day reminds me that in the past I have made several requests in print, both here and in Abracadabra, the world's only magical weekly, for photographs of professional magicians, but so far the response has been but not quite nil. I am not sure why but the collecting of photographs has never really caught on with magicians. I know that almost every magician has several photographs lying around the house, in a box, a drawer, in an envelope sitting on a shelf somewhere, and one day they are going to end up in the dustbin. May I say, please, please, don't let that happen to the few that YOU have lying around. Send them to me or anyone else interested. I'm only sorry that I can't give the names of anyone else who is interested in the collecting of photographs...hold it, yes I can.... Larry Barnes....I don't know Larry's address so perhaps a better idea would be just to send them to me and I'll pass them on to him (he's got a hope).

I don't care whether they are old or new, male or female, gay deceivers, dealers or whatever. I'm more than willing to pay for them or exchange pics with you. The one thing I don't want YOU to do is to start collecting photographs yourself. If too many of you take that approach they might start getting scarce, which would annoy me intensly.

We have book collectors, prop collectors, film collectors and I even know one guy who collects anything to do with the I.B.M....there are collectors of all kinds of magical trivia, but photographs? only me and Larry, and nobody wants to help. Shame on you. I'd even swap six of Jay Marshall for one of anybody, that is if I had six of Jay Marshall, which I don't.

It seems as if good photographs are as scarce as good magic acts.

I'll tell you what I'll do. I don't have any pics of myself, but if anyone cares to send me anything I will go out and get some pro pics taken and send them one personally autographed. Now that's got to be worth at least ten of Jay Marshall's. Or if you have ten pictures of Jay Marshall I'll send you one of mine.

And now, surprise time. Some of you, in fact many of you will recall that around a year ago I had a book on the Stocks called '150 Comedy Props'. Well due to circumstances beyond my control the book never arrived. Well....look out because it is imminent. Yes, it really is. Actually printed. All we have to do now is wait just a little bit longer and we will be back in business.

Honest, it's true.

Goodbye.

Jeff Busby presents THE MAGIC OF SHIGEO TAKAGI

In keeping with our reputation for producing only the finest in quality close-up magic, Jeff Busby Enterprises proudly presents two fine routines by Japan's master sleight of hand artist — Shigeo Takagi.

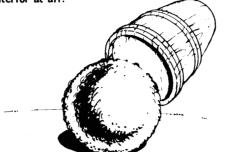

Personal demonstration by Takagi and movies of both routines detailed below were used in the writing of the manuscripts to ensure that none of the fine details were omitted.

Shigeo Takagi's One Cup Routine

This extremely novel one cup and ball routine created a sensation when performed by Takagi in public and private sessions at the Washington I.B.M. convention.

A ball is magically produced from the tip of a wand. It immediately vanishes and reappears beneath a beautiful wooden cup. The ball vanishes again and is reproduced from the performer's pocket. After a penetration sequence and more transpositions, the ball refuses to return to the cup. The cup is slapped and a large load ball drops out! But wait...For the stunning climax, the cup is displayed and shown to be a solid block of wood with no interior at all!

This is not "push button" magic. You will need some sleight of hand ability to perform this topflight routine and it does require practice. If you master this, it will be an effect that your audience will always remember.

To help you learn this routine, over 35 fine line drawings have been prepared. A separate typeset booklet containing comprehensive instructions will help you to master this with ease.

The cup is lathe turned from hardwood in the style of the popular "Paul Fox" cup. Beautifully made and well worth the price. $12.50 for the cup, instructions and illustrations. Please add $1.50 for Parcel Post delivery in the U.S., $2.50 for Surface Mail to any other part of the world. $4,00 for Air Mail delivery to any part of the world. 40¢ extra for insurance in the U.S. only. California residents include sales tax.

Shigeo Takagi's Coin Assembly

There have been many coin assemblies, but none this unique! Here is magic in the classical style, incorporating many ingenious moves and sequences never before used in this type of effect.

In brief, four coins cleanly assemble to under one of four covering cards. This version is done in "slow-motion" with fresh ideas raved over by the experts. No rapid actions as are evident in most current versions of this effect.

This routine does take sleight of hand ability and is not for the novice. Over 45 fine line drawings help to make this easy to learn. A separate booklet of text, keyed to the illustrations, clearly worded to help to understand this outstanding routine is included. The price is $4.50 for the illustrations and text in a plastic strip binder. Please include $1.00 extra for postage and packing in the U.S., $1.50 for Surface Mail to any part of the world. $2.50 for Air Mail delivery to any part of the world. 40¢ extra for insurance in the U.S. only. California residents include sales tax. Purchase this routine in conjunction with the ONE CUP ROUTINE and the COIN ASSEMBLY will be sent post free.

Most magicians turn to JEFF BUSBY ENTERPRISES for the BEST in quality close-up books and magic. Why not find out WHY? Send $1.00 for our current catalog of close-up books and props. Many exclusives. All catalogs shipped First Class or Air Mail for $3.00.

Pabular is published after the second week in every month and is printed by Instance Printers, Paddock Wood, Kent, England. Subscriptions may be obtained direct from the publishers, Pabular, P.O. Box 180, London SE12 8JJ or through many magic dealers. Price 60 pence per copy (or US $1.25) surface post included. Air Mail extra (US $0.50) per copy or (US $6.00) per year. Editorial or content copy should be sent to Fred Robinson, 1 Crescent Court, 24 Crescent Road, New Barnet, Herts, England. Advertising rates sent on request — smalls 3 pence per word (US 10 cents). Dealer enquiries welcomed. Reproductions of old prints and historical magical items by kind permission of Tony Faro.

In the October number, Bob Farmer's 'Body and Soul' struck me as being a very commercial sequence. The use of jumbo cards cut into quarters would surely intrigue a lay audience. On page 477 there is a reference to the "Criss Cross Subtlety". This is commonly credited to Dr Jacob Daley. In fact, the move was shown to Daley by Irv Weiner, its originator.

Here is a sequence of mine which functions quite well with quartered jumbo cards. In a recent lecture for the Boston S.A.M. Assembly, I taught this with above title and it is based on the Vernon "Follow the Leader" theme.

To prepare, cut a jumbo 4C and 4D into quarters and arrange the resulting eight pieces to read as follows in a face up fan — black index, black index, black pip, black pip, red index, red index, red pip, red pip. Close the fan, obtaining a break below the fifth piece, and immediately take all the pieces above the break and place them face up on the table, stating "four blacks". Place the remaining cards on top of the tabled cards, also face up, stating "..... and four reds". The actual order of the face up pile reading from the top is RI - RP - RP - BI - BI - BP - BP - RI.

Pick up all eight pieces and turn them face down. Remove the top four pieces without reversing their order and place the other four pieces aside. Turn the retained pieces face up and Jordan count to show four black pieces — two index and two pips will show in this count which is as it should be. Flip the packet face down and deal off the top piece (BP) turning it face up onto the table and put the remaining three pieces face down behind it. Pick up the other four pieces and repeat the procedure. You now have four positions as shown below:

А В С D The face up BP is at 'A' with three face down pieces at 'C' — supposedly the other three blacks. The face up RP is 'B' with a face down pile at 'D'.

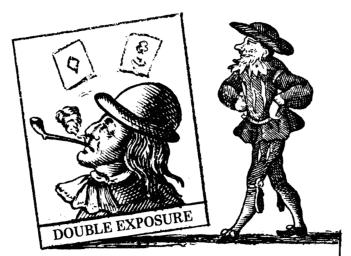

State, "We call these pieces 'leaders'" (point to 'A' and 'B') "and these are 'followers'. (Point to 'C' and 'D'). Now it stands to reason that the followers must follow the leaders. (Switch 'A' and 'B'). If they should decide to move, the followers are obliged to follow." (Turn up the top cards of 'C' and 'D' showing that they've 'switched' magically. Place them face up on 'A' and 'B'). "And yet these cards are very democratic. If the followers decide to move (Switch 'C' and 'D') the leaders are only too happy to move with them." (Turn up the top cards of 'C' and 'D', placing them face up on 'A' and 'B' as before. I realise that this action does not quite agree with what has just been said, but it 'seems' right).

"In fact these cards are so democratic it's all right if everybody decides to move — everything works out just fine." (Here you use a Cross Switch — switch 'A' and 'C' then 'C' and 'D'). Turn up the last two face down cards showing that once again the cards have followed the leaders.

NOTE: This routine can be done with, say, Kings and Aces (its original form). If they are stacked KH, KD, KS, KC, AH, AD, AS, AC at the start they'll turn up in mate suit pairs. Similarly, in the quartered jumbo version, index pieces will mate up with index pieces and pip pieces with pip pieces.

EDITORIAL NOTE: Here is a brief description of the Jordan Count. Hold the packet of four pieces in the left hand and from the spectators view they appear to be transferred one at a time into the right hand reversing their order as you do so. Actually, the right thumb first pulls off the top piece of the packet, and then the second piece likewise. In appearing to take the third piece fairly as before, the bottom piece of the two in the right hand is pulled under the two cards held in the left hand with the tips of the fingers of that hand as the right takes the two pieces above the stolen piece. In short, as the right hand appears to take the third piece it actually takes the third and fourth pieces together, leaving the first piece taken behind in the left hand which is counted off as the fourth piece. If you have mastered the Elmsley Count (who hasn't) the move should present no

Looking back to Pabular No.11 Vol.2 the effect "Psychic Exposure" by Bob Stephen quite intrigues me.

Not having a great knowledge of Polaroid cameras I would need to rely on the expertise of Mr Stephens for advice, nevertheless I believe the effect described below should be possible given the correct type of camera.

First I would refer you to my "SPLITZ" routine as described in Pabular No.11 Vol.3 wherein a blue backed card is faced with a red backed card, the cards glued together are pushed into the pack at any point by a spectator, the two cards are replicas of two forced cards using the Simon business card move.

Now my idea is to combine the Bob Stephen routine with the "SPLITZ" routine using the photograph taken by the Polaroid camera . . . the working is as follows:

Prior to performing the routine, photograph two cards in the manner described by Bob on a matt black background, the two cards to appear in the final photograph over the top of the person's head as in Fig. 1. The two cards are then placed at the top and bottom of the pack respectively.

When you are ready to present the item, approach a spectator with camera and take the spectator's picture as described in Psychic Exposure so that spectator's head will appear below the two cards (first exposure).

Now remove the photograph from the camera (this will have a white backing paper covering the face of the photograph) and have spectator place the photograph into the pack at any point, execute the "SPLITZ" move as described using photograph in lieu of the red and blue card . and removing the cards at each side of the photograph.

The backing sheet is now removed from the photograph and both photograph and two chosen cards will appear before your very eyes.

As already stated I have not tried this item out — possibly only certain types of camera will bring about the effect, but no doubt the camera experts will know which to use in order to get the best results.

An inventor, close up magician and tricksmith, painter and engineer - Bob Stephens has just died of a motor neurone disease. He was 38 years young.

He will be missed by all who knew him,

QASTS SEIC

It was before this magazine actually got off the ground that BOB READ enquired what the policy was to be. At that time it was not possible to say further than that the material would be confined to that of interest to close up performers and mentalists. After three years and a half the question can be answered in more detail.

The present policy is to put the accent on publishing material that is practical, and in this aim, which is my personal responsibility, we have over the past few issues been extremely fortunate in this respect. Many of the tricks which have appeared, I have either seen myself or know that they are being performed. One such, received much favourable comment and brought MO HOWARTH rushing over to me at Blackpool and caused WALT LEES to exclaim, "It's the only trick I've read for months that I'll bother to master." It was the 'Oil and Water' routine generously presented to us by JUAN TAMARIZ.

It would be too space consuming to comment on all those I had seen so will mention only the two one-man issues. First, ERIC MASON'S who is constantly receiving praise for his graphics. He is busy every Monday night in the Blenheim Bar performing items from his issue, (and many others yet to be released) to magicians and lay persons alike. BARRIE RICHARDSON, who specialises in mental magic recently performed for about 350 people. In addition to memorising the current issue of Time magazine, which is his most commercial demonstration, his act included four items which appeared in his issue, the pencil lifting registering particularly well. Mentalists are very fortunate in many ways nothing to carry — their material effective both for small and large audiences - and most important of all they have less difficulty in convincing audiences that what they are doing is really magic.

RAY WATERS — remember his Card in the Bottle — has found Frisk Lac. It is an aerosol spray used by artists that provides a convenient and quick method of 'roughing' cards — just spread them out and spray. It does change the shade slightly but is just the job for experimenters. Also caught him performing ROY WALTON'S 'Cascade' for a couple of non-magicians who obviously enjoyed it.

In the not too distant future we shall be explaining a couple of items from the repertoire of BRIAN SINCLAIR who ranks with the best of close uppers. Always ready to perform regardless of conditions — his Coins through Table is really something. He has a stack of impromptu card magic — always with borrowed cards — and usually manages to steal a wrist watch.

DEVANO must be one of the best known names in magic. Apart from inventing what must surely be the best selling Rising Card trick of all time, he has another speciality in which the drawer of a matchbox rises and falls. Harry usually drifts into the Blenheim Bar on Monday evenings after fulfilling his duties as host at the Magic Circle, so if you are around he would be happy to show you this minor classic.

Last time we met the conversation turned to the subject of acting as related to magic. There was a difference of opinion on one issue. Can an actor give a better performance of magic, providing the effects are self-working than a magician without acting experience? Having seen a professional actor attempt this task I can pronounce that the result was a dismal failure. One of the reasons for the lack of success in this particular instance and one that will be an obstacle to any other actor having a similar assignment is that an actor is trained to play a part which in this case is that of a magician.

The magician differs in this respect — he is playing himself — for all he is worth — and is not playing at being someone else either real or imagined. He is the product of his own experiences, not of an acting school, and has learned the hard way by discarding material which does not 'go' for him and retaining that which is well received by his audiences. Using this material as a vehicle the magician 'sells' himself as a personality to his audiences with whom he creates a rapport. The actor without magical performing experience cannot sell what he has not bought.

ONE POTATO TWO POTATO

Inspired by a routine published in the Genii a few years back by Larry Jennings the variations on his theme should appeal to those who found the original routine of interest.

The following properties will be required. One cup — four small balls — two potatoes — a handkerchief.

Prepare by putting two balls in the right coat pocket — two balls and a potato in the left coat pocket — a potato in the cup which should be on the table mouth upwards with the hand-kerchief folded once draped over it, folded edge towards you. The effect being designed to be performed seated you will also require a chair.

Commence by picking up the cup with the left hand, the thumb going outside and the fingers inside pressing the handkerchief a little way into the mouth of the cup (1). The right hand takes the cup and puts it mouth downwards onto the table leaving both the handkerchief and potato in the left hand. The left hand turns as the right hand takes the cup in order to keep the potato hidden, and casually places the handkerchief onto the table, left of centre, with the potato concealed beneath it. It is important that your eyes should be kept on the cup during the above actions which the audience will regard as being preliminary to starting the trick, providing their attention is directed to the cup and away from the handkerchief. The move is a Jennings idea.

Remarking that you now require some 'magic dust' both hands go into the coat pockets in search of it, and are removed each containing two balls classic palmed. Right hand sprinkle some of this magical dust on the table and the same hand mimes the action of gathering some of this 'dust' with the finger tips, as the second finger tip pulls one of the balls from the palm. This ball is now produced at the finger tips of the right hand which places it on the table and then moves back towards the edge of the table, where it rests in a natural position with the ball beneath it.

The left hand now picks up the exposed ball adding it to the two concealed in the hand which closes around all three into a loose fist. Two of these are produced singly by squeezing them out of the top of the fist (2) and letting them fall onto the table.

There is now one ball concealed in each hand.

The right hand now picks up one of the two balls from the table adding it to the one palmed and closing the hand into a loose fist and produces them by squeezing them out of the fist in the same way used when producing the two from the left hand. There are now three balls on the table and one palmed in the left hand.

The left hand now picks up the three balls from the table one at a time placing them singly on the open palm of the right hand. The shuttle move is now performed tossing two of the balls from the right hand into the left to join the one already there, retaining one in the classic palm. Display the three balls on the open left hand.

Pick up the cup with the right hand and replace it onto the table loading the ball it holds beneath it as you do so, and slide it to a position on the table a few inches to the right of centre, and let the three balls on the left palm roll slowly onto the table. Line up the three balls in a row at the same time letting it be seen that the hands are otherwise empty.

Close the left hand into a loose fist as the right picks up one of the balls which it places on top as shown in (3). When picking up this ball between the thumb and fingers, the latter should cover it from the spectator's view until it is on the top of the left fist. The extended forefinger now pushes the ball down into the fist.

A second ball is picked up in exactly the same way, but this time when the point is reached where the ball is apparently placed on top of the left fist, the ball within that hand is squeezed up creating the illusion that it is the one just picked up. This latter is actually retained in the right hand hidden behind the fingers. This sleight is basic to the 'Three Ball Transposition', an effect which can be found in that fine book written by Lewis Ganson 'The Dai Vernon Book of Magic' and it is to this book the reader should refer for a detailed explanation of the move.

The extended right forefinger now pushes the ball on top of the left fist into the hand as before.

As the right hand moves away and picks up the third ball the retained ball is classic palmed. This third ball is also apparently placed on top of the left fist as the ball in the left hand is squeezed out to the top of the fist repeating the previous move. The ball retained behind the fingers of the right hand is pushed into the classic palm with the second and third finger tips to join the one already there as the index finger is extended and pushes the ball on top of the left fist into the hand.

The position now is that there is one ball in the left fist, the audience believing there to be three — and unknown to them you have two palmed in the right hand and one under the cup.

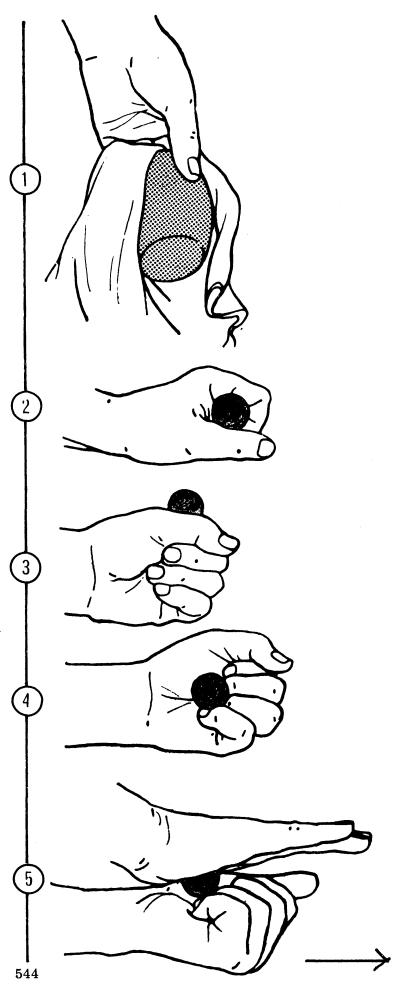

You are now about to achieve the effect of causing the three balls to pass magically, one at a time, from the left hand and appear under the cup.

Holding the left hand closed with its back towards the audience make a pass over the closed left hand with the right and towards the cup. Right hand now lifts up the cup to reveal the first ball, during which action the two balls have been let fall from the classic palm position onto the curled fingers. Replace the cup over the ball at the same time loading one of the two balls from the right hand. The remaining ball is pushed back into the classic palm, using the tips of the second and third fingers.

Repeat the magical gesture with the right hand over the left and towards the cup which is then raised revealing two balls. During this action the ball in the palm is allowed to fall from the classic palm into the curled fingers and loaded under the cup as it is replaced over the two.

The left hand is now opened to show that it contains one ball. Re-close the hand around the ball and secretly work it outside the fist between the knuckles and the fleshy part at the base of the thumb as shown in (4). The left fist must, of course, be held with its back towards the audience keeping the ball hidden from them.

Make a gesture again over the left fist with the right hand and under cover of the right hand the left turns bringing the ball it holds into contact with the right palm in the correct position for this hand to palm it away as it continues the gesture towards the cup. Assistance can be given when palming the ball by pressing it into the palm with the backs of the second and third fingers i.e. the nail side. A worm's eye view is shown in (5) which gives the relative positions of both hands as the ball is being stolen.

Once facility has been obtained with the above steal the precise action necessary for its achievement should be noted, and effort should be made to duplicate them as exactly as possible when making the two previous gestures in which no steal takes place.

The left hand is slowly opened and shown to be empty, and the right hand putting its first and second fingers on the bottom of the cup, tilts it backwards letting it fall onto the fingers of the left hand revealing the arrival of the third ball. Replace the cup over the three balls.

The next phase consists of magically extracting the three balls from under the cup.

Commence by stroking up the sides of the cup with the finger tips (taking care not to expose the palmed ball in the right hand) bringing the palms together as they clear the top (bottom) of the cup. Work the ball to the tips of the fingers where it is displayed holding it with the tips of the thumb and fingers of both hands. Still holding it with both hands lower it down to the bottom of the cup (6). As the hands move away they are seen to be empty.

The right hand now grasps the cup around its rim between the thumb and forefinger, and tilts it forward tipping the ball into the waiting left hand (7). As the cup is tilted it is also pushed forward a couple of inches so that one of the three balls is beneath the right palm and in the correct position for the right hand to steal it directly into the classic palm by pressing lightly down on it. The cup is now lifted to reveal only two balls and the one in the left hand is displayed for a moment and placed onto the table. The cup is then placed over the two balls.

Repeat the stroking action up the sides of the cup and produce the ball palmed in the right hand at the finger tips and lower it onto the bottom of the cup. Continue as explained in the previous paragraph, tilting the cup and stealing a ball—this time one of two—and finally placing the cup over the remaining ball.

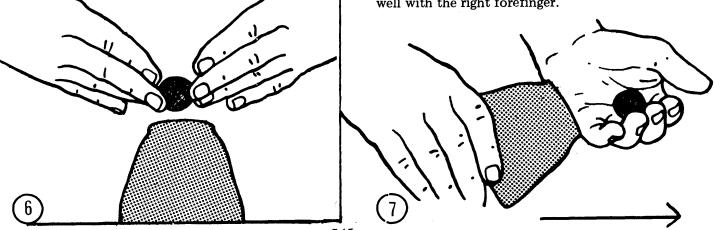

Once again repeat to produce the third ball which is placed on the bottom of the cup. Procede as before stealing the remaining ball from under the cup as it is tilted tipping the ball into the left hand which puts it onto the table. The right hand (with ball palmed) lifts up the cup and after showing it to be empty place it mouth downwards onto the table close to the right side of the handkerchief. As it is being placed down the left hand raises the right side of the handkerchief and the right hand still holding the cup slides it under the edge of the handkerchief, tilting it slightly loads the potato under it a la Jennings. The demeanour of the performer should appear to the spectators as though the cup is finished with (which is true) and he is about to continue using the handkerchief.

Display the handkerchief holding two adjacent corners one in each hand. Loose the corner held with the left hand, which is then formed into a fist. Right hand now drapes the handkerchief over the left fist and poking it with the second finger forms a depression, or well in the top of the fist at the same time loading the classic palmed ball inside.

Right hand now picks up one of the three balls and puts it on top of fist letting it rest in that position for a moment on display before pushing it into the well on top of the one secretly loaded there. Repeat with the second ball. The third ball is also placed on top of the fist for a moment before removing it and putting in the right coat pocket.

The three balls are now squeezed out of the well appearing at the top of the fist. As each ball comes into view it is removed with the right hand and placed onto the table. The effect being that the ball placed into the pocket has returned to the left hand.

You next pick up one ball from the table, (taking it with the fingers in front in the same way as earlier in the routine when putting the balls on top of the bare fist) and put it on top of the handkerchief covered fist. Push it into the well with the right forefinger.

Pick up a second ball in the same manner and appear to place it on top of the left fist, but this time retain it in the right, fingers squeezing up the ball in the well to the top of the fist as in the method described earlier. The ball concealed in the right hand is moved into the classic palm position and its forefinger extended and used to push the visible ball back into the well.

The ball remaining on the table is now picked up with the right hand which contains a ball classic palmed and again the fake move is performed, retaining this third ball in the fingers as the one in the well is squeezed out to the top of the fist. As this ball is displayed for a moment the tips of the right second and third fingers push the ball retained into the classic palm position. There are now two balls palmed in the right hand and one on top of the left fist.

The right hand new removes the ball from the top of the left fist and puts it into the right coat pocket at the same time leaving the two palmed balls in the pocket before removing the hand. At this point the audience believe there to be two balls in the well of the handkerchief and one in the pocket and expect to see a repeat of what happened before. There is considerable surprise when after making a magical pass the handkerchief is pulled away and all three balls have disappeared.

You now fold up the handkerchief and put it away in the left coat pocket at the same time the right hand moves the cup forward and towards the centre of the table. Make a pass over it with the right hand which then lifts it up to reveal the potato. Simultaneously the left hand is removed from the pocket with the potato palmed. The right hand passes the cup to the left hand which loads the potato into the cup in the standard manner. The right hand picks up the potato from the table and puts it in the right coat pocket as the left puts the loaded cup mouth downwards on to the table.

The right hand now makes a magical gesture over the cup, and then slowly lifts it up to reveal the appearance of the second potato, which concludes the routine.

There is only one move which may be a problem — the one in which a ball is classic palmed directly from the table surface. It may be solved by using a thick sorbo mat or by using balls with a rough textured surface which tend to 'cling' to the palm. Balls with a smooth surface, or are too small may be the cause of any difficulty experienced when perfecting the sleight.

Reported by Gordon Bruce

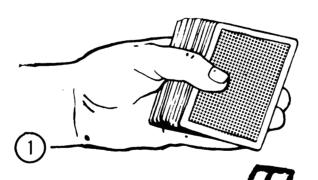

On April 6th some fifty magicians gathered at the Paisley Magic Circle headquarters for the magical extravaganza known as the Bob Read Lecture or 'Props by Oxfam'.

Bob performed, lectured and gagged his way through his 'bits and pieces' for three hours. In the first he performed the act as described in his book 'Thanks to Pepys' (copies still available) featuring his routines for Knife through Coat—the Incredible Bottle Production—Coins Across—Vanishing Comb—All Backs—and Hats and Corks.

A brief break to catch our breath, and he was off again. This time with sit-down material. Coins through Table — Knife Grinding and loads of gags and bits of business (check your early Pabulars). The hall keeper was knocking on the door as he was performing his Transpo Tumbler (a few copies left).

We barricaded ourselves in as he went through his never to be forgotten Cups and Balls routine which finished the show and most of the magicians. Bob worked long and hard and the well earned applause at the end left him in no doubt how well his efforts were appreciated.

Later in the pub Bob kept going with stories and anecdotes of his experiences with customs officers and at spirit seances. This man must be one of the best in Britain, and anywhere else for that matter.

SIMON LOVELL WRITES AGAIN

Have just finished reading the Barrie Richardson's issue of Pabular (Vol.4 No.4) and was very impressed with the simplicity of his methods. I thought readers might be interested in a similar effect of mine which uses a normal pack without a fake card. For the record I will call it:

Get knowledge of the top card and give the pack a casual false shuffle retaining the card at the top. Hold the pack in the left hand, fingers at the face side and thumb on back of the known card at the top. Spread the pack slightly and hold it face towards the spectators (1) pulling the top card back with the thumb (2). You are now in a position to deal continuous seconds as in Barrie's method and the spectators can see each card as it is dealt and

Start the trick by dealing seconds requesting a spectator to call 'stop' any time he pleases, and when he does so push the known card to the right so that the pack again appears as in (1). Bring the pack down to the horizontal and push the top over and ask the spectator to take a quick look at it and put it into his pocket taking care not to let you see its face.

Remark that one card is now missing from the pack and that by quickly looking through the cards you could tell the name of the chosen card. This raises a slight smile and you quickly riffle through the pack, faces towards yourself and say "I think I know it." Repeat the riffle and announce that you are now 100 per cent sure. This statement brings the demand "O.K. so what is it" (in my case the remarks vary from pub to pub when I claim to have checked every card). The reaction when you ask the spectator to take the of from his pocket really does my heart good.

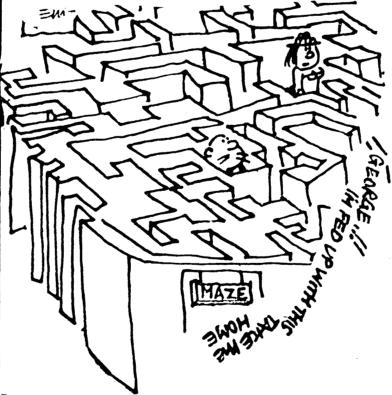

Well, there it is — simple, direct, and perplexing. Just as Mr Richardson would have liked it.

Trevor Lewis

You borrow a persons spectacles, and after looking through them say "You must have good eyesight if you can see through these, wait a moment I'll clean them for you." Remove hanky from pocket to clean lens and as you polish the lens.... a lens falls to the floor. This can either be 'cracked' or you could stand on it when looking for it. Everyone will see the joke.... except the chap who isn't wearing his glasses.

Naturally you have an extra lens (or piece of plastic) in your pocket along with the hanky.

In my search for material for this column it occurred to me that no-one had done much with smoke rings other than just blow them. I could not have been more wrong. Mentioning this to the Editor (we do meet on occasions) he remembered seeing BORRA, the world's greatest pickpocket for anyone's money, blowing rings in his circus act, but was somewhat hazey on details. Knowing that the PAGE BOY was a circus buff a 'phone call to him produced the following information.

Borra would hold a top hat mouth downwards at arms length — not at full stretch but with the arm slightly bent. He would then blow a smoke ring which would pass over the crown of the hat and settle on the brim. Another stunt was to blow a large ring and then blow a succession of smaller ones through it.

If you wish to try this, and cannot blow smoke rings, here's how. Get a mouthful of smoke and hold it for a few seconds — this will allow the smoke to collect some moisture causing the smoke forming the rings to be more dense and therefore more visible. Hold the tongue away from the bottom of the mouth and the lips open and rounded. Expel the smoke from the mouth by taking air in through the nose which (this is difficult to explain) gets behind the smoke and forces it out by blowing gently from the back of the throat. It is the formation of the tongue and lips that produce the rings.

Most readers will have had a relative who entertained them when a child with some simple trick or puzzle. In my case it was an uncle. After blowing smoke rings and making smoke come down his nose he asked if I would like to see smoke come out of his eyes. The apparent impossibility of this feat intrigued me and at his request placed the palm of my hand on his, not inconsiderable stomach, and obediently gazed into his eyes. No smoke appeared but I did feel the hot bowl of his pipe on the back of my hand. My first lesson in misdirection.

In attempting to place as many as possible impromptu bits of business on record, much which appears will be regarded as being elementary and 'old hat', but if a top world class entertainer can use the humble smoke rings in his professional act surely there is scope for the exploitation of similar material by lesser mortals in their attempts to entertain people, both young and old.

An instance of this happening was told by DEVANO who introduced the 'Snapper' novelty to a group of intellectuals. This wellknown simple stunt in which people are invited to engage a catch on a rod on an elastic loop at the bottom of a tube kept the group entertained for quite some time.

The PAGE BOY came up with the following routine with an imitation cigarette, which if weighted at one end can be rested on the edge of a table with almost all its length over the edge a la anti-gravity wand. It can also be balanced upright on the tip of the finger, back of the hand and to finish on the nose switching it for the real thing as you remove it.

More next time.

A BOOK DESTINED TO BECOME A COLLECTOR'S ITEM

THE RAMSAY CLASSICS

by ANDREW GALLOWAY

The collected works of John Ramsay, with an introduction by Dai Vernon. For the first time everything that Ramsay published in his long and illustrious career is now available in one volume.

Master Routines like — The Cups and Balls; The Cylinder and Coins; The Triple Restoration; The Four Little Beans. Also Ramsay on Thimbles (6 effects); Coins (4 effects); The Thumb Tip; The Watch Winder. All re-written and re-illustrated

PLUS RAMSAY ON MISDIRECTION and RAMSAY THE ARTIST

Beautifully printed on art paper. 108 large 8 x 10 inch pages with almost 300 superb line drawings by Gordon Bruce and 8 pages of photographs, most of them published for the first time. Cloth bound with gold titled spine and attractive two-colour, illustrated dust jacket. Limited number of de-luxe leather bound copies available.

Here are a few comments from:---

DAI VERNON — I was really delighted to receive your excellent book. The explanations are clear and right to the point, and Gordon's line drawings make everything crystal clear. You have truly contributed greatly to the art of 'pure sleight of hand' by the fact that you have made John Ramsay's methods available to future generations.

FRED KAPS — It really is a beautiful book, and as I went through it, it gave me fine memories of dear old John. When I look at the fine illustrations I actually see Johnny perform the tricks again. I hope that everybody who reads and studies the book will appreciate your fine work.

BOB READ — The Ramsay Classics is the finest book on pure sleight of hand and principles of misdirection I have ever read. You have really captured the very essence of magic '— fooling the mind — congratulations!

DAVID ROTH — I received the book in the mail yesterday and I've been up all night reading it. It is a fantastic book, one of the great books on sleight of hand magic and is surely destined to become a classic. You have done magic a tremendous service.

ROY WALTON — The book is delightful and fully explains the art of doing good magic rather than good tricks — the material is priceless.

FRED ROBINSON (Pabular) — Containing the finest creations of a man regarded as the greatest close-up magician of his era, the book requires no recommendation either from me, or anyone else. For true lovers of close-up magic, all it is really necessary to know, is that it is now available.

A must for every connoisseur of fine magic books. Cloth Bound: £9.50 U.K., £10 Europe, $25 U.S.A. Air Mail. Leather Bound: £15.50 U.K., £16 Europe, $36 U.S.A. Air Mail. Prices include post and package.

THE BEST METHOD OF CARD CONTROL NEW FORMULA 75p/$2.00 AIRMAIL RAY WATERS 61 GREENFIELD ROAD LONDON N15

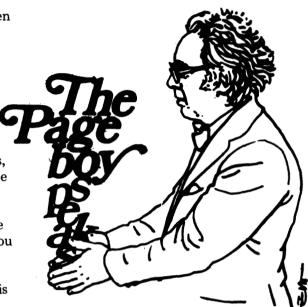

Thank you, thank you, thank you. To all those wonderful magicians who have sent me photographs. To date I have received seventeen pictures, two of which are of unknown performers. That is there are no names on the pictures and neither I nor the guys who sent them recognise the performers. Actually that now makes up about a dozen photographs I have of performers of unknown identity. It makes you think, doesn't it? Or does it? The point I am making is that as you grow older your features change, you gain a few wrinkles, add a few pounds, lose a few hairs. Change the act a little (?) with the result that if you look at a twenty year old photograph you don't recognise yourself, so the chances of someone else recognising you are remote. Lesson? If you are going to take the trouble and go to the expense of having professional pictures done make sure your name or the name of the act is included.

I have mentioned before in this column one Mike Caldwell. Mike hails from Hollywood, California. Yes, the Hollywood with the pictures where they never forget to include the names of the artists. He has been in London for the past couple of weeks scouting around the showbusiness scene and may have struck gold, which means that there is a strong possibility that we will be seeing more of Mike in London either late this, or early next, year.

I had an interesting conversation with Mike once upon a time. He told me he was thinking of putting together a close-up act. Now, apart from the fact that he could never get close enough to anyone to perform close-up magic (he weighs in at more than 300 lbs) I have never thought that Mike was technically capable of performing any close-up magic which would compare favourably with some of the guys who frequent the Magic Castle in Hollywood, which happens to be his local magic club.

After pointing out that the only close-up effect I had ever seen him perform was a coin vanish which was hilarious I asked him what effects he would perform and pointed out that it was a little late for him to start learning sleight of hand. His reply floored me. "Who the hell says you have to learn sleight of hand to do close-up magic?" You know something? He's right!

The conversation I have just described took place a few years ago and I don't think Mike ever did get around to doing that close-up act, but that phrase has always stayed in my mind. "Who the hell says you have to learn sleight of hand to do close-up magic?" I repeat, he's right!

Just think of some of the real heavyweights in close-up magic. Take Albert Goshman. Two of Alberts really strong effects are Devano's Rising Card and the Nudist Deck and neither of them can by any stretch of the you-know-what could be said to require much in the way of digital dexterity. One of the late Al Koran's favourite effects was the Piano Card Trick. I remember reading a description of the contents of Dai Vernon's prop case and it included a Chinese Compass. So-o-o if Messrs Goshman, Koran and Vernon are prepared to carry several almost non-sleight of hand effects which have to hold their own against the rest of the act, then why couldn't the rest of the act be just as simple to perform?

If Goshman is prepared to close his act with the Rising Cards why should he have to open the act with the incredible skill and misdirection required to perform his Coins and Salt Shakers routine? I can't answer, but the best I can offer is the quote of my friend Mike Caldwell — "Who the hell says you have to learn sleight of hand to do close-up magic?"

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

P.S. Last year the BBC screened 3 magic shows produced by John Fisher. In one of them Albert Goshman performed several effects. Last week they re-screened excerpts from all three shows and when it came to Albert's turn which effect do you think the producer chose to screen? You've guessed it. The Rising Cards. Remember. "Who the hell etc. etc....."

THE PERFECT ENDING TO A SMALL ACT

'The Ken Brooke Routine' is world famous & acknowledged the best. It contains table plans telling you how to place each bottle. It makes certain that every part of the presentation is VISIBLE!!!

Everything about the outfit is first class. As always, YOUR MONEY RE-FUNDED if it fails to meet your 100% approval.

READ THIS EXTRACT from a letter received from 'Pete Biro'. U.S.A.

"...Multiplying Martini's arrived in first class order. They are fantastic! I have a $125.00 set that I haven't been able to use because they are too hard to handle. The ease of handling with your bottles is untouchable. The realistic appearance and routine, first class..."

A MILLION DOLLAR EFFECT

It's Impossible to convey all that happens in cold print. Briefly, the trick starts with one bottle, one glass and two empty tubes.

The aim is to cause the bottle to change places with the glass, this you do but, during the course of it taking place, unexpected bottles make surprising appearances until you have produced, NINE BOTTLES AND TWO GLASSES FROM TWO EMPTY TUBES !!!

The apparatus we supply for this feature trick leaves nothing to be desired. The beautifully designed 'Martini' labels and neckbands are famous the world over and put the authentic touch to the apparatus.

PERFORMED ANYWHERE

Can be performed with success under all conditions, yes, EVEN SURROUNDED. No skill is required. The entire production in self contained. No table, body or other loads.

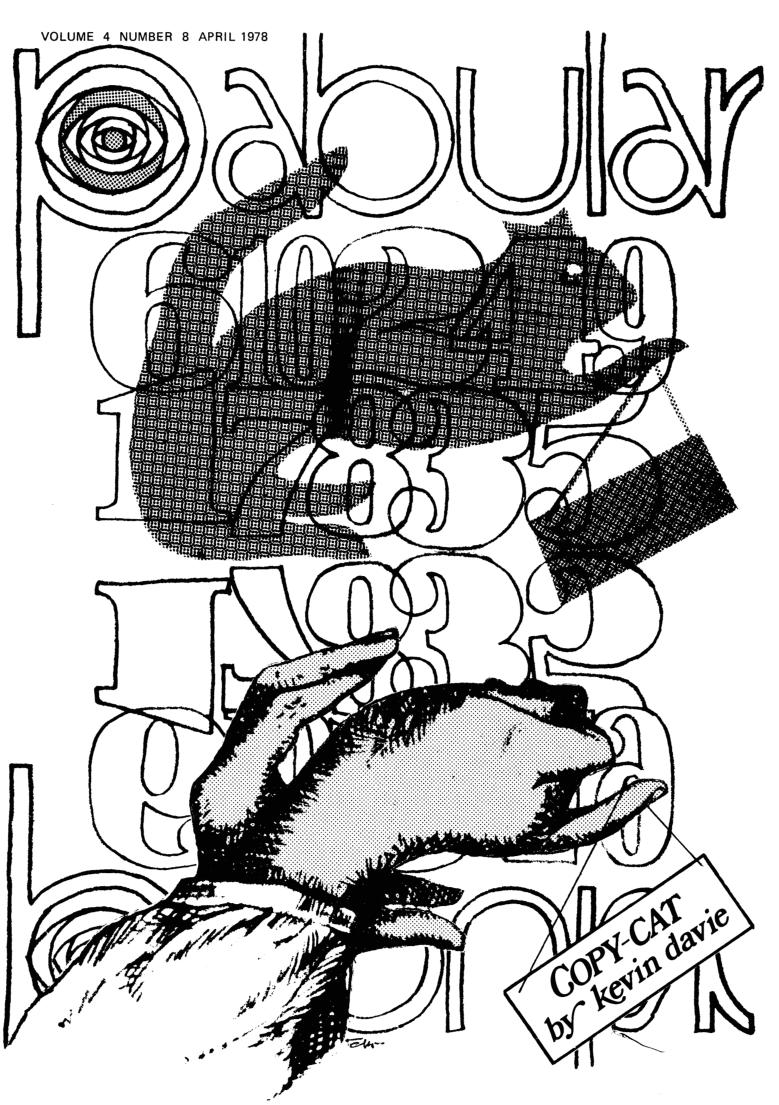

Taking a bow to prolonged applause is the target which all artists aim for. Positive results do not come about by chance but by planning and experience. Here, with some of the best equipment in the world is 'The Ken Brooke Success Formula'.

As far as can be ascertained the plot of the Ace to Ten or Clubs of one packet magically becoming arranged in the same order as a similar packet, was conceived many decades ago by Herbert Milton.

The idea attracted the attention of relatively few other performers which include Nate Leipzig, Charlie Miller and Jack Avis, but despite its clear cut uncomplicated effect has not become popular with magicians in general.

The following presentation of the 'Sympathetic Clubs' theme gets a very strong response from the spectators probably because the spectator plays an active role in determining the outcome. It also brings the effect, generally regarded as being more suitable for platform presentation, into the field of close-up magic.

The performer commences by removing the Ace to ten of clubs from a blue backed pack and arranges them in numerical order with the Ace at the face of the packet. They are displayed — the packet cut and placed aside.

A red pack is introduced which the spectator riffle shuffles twice and then removes the ten clubs keeping them in the order left after the two shuffles. One of the cards is found to be reversed and left as such.

When the two packets are compared they are found to be in exactly the same order with the same card reversed.

In brief, the effect is achieved as follows. After arranging the ten clubs from the blue pack in numerical order they are counted from the right hand into the left Biddle fashion during which certain cards are 'biddled' changing the order of cards from being in numerical order to one which corresponds to that of the ten clubs which are on top of the red pack. The two riffle shuffles which the spectator gives to this pack distributes the ten clubs throughout the pack without changing their order. Therefore, when they are taken from the pack in rotation both packets will be in the same order.

Here are the details of the Biddle sequence and the move for secretly reversing one of the cards.

First, arrange the ten clubs in order and hold the packet face up in the right hand with the second finger at the outer end and the thumb at the inner end in the approved manner.

The left thumb pulls the Ace at the face of the right hand packet onto the left hand. The Two is now pulled onto the fingers of the left hand, so that it can be stolen back beneath the cards in the right hand as the left thumb pulls off the Three from the face of the right hand cards onto the Ace in the left hand. The next face card in the right hand — the Four — is pulled off with the left thumb at the same time returning the stolen Two beneath the right hand cards to those in the left hand. The order of the cards in the left hand reading from the face is now 4 - 2 - 3 - Ace. This move is standard practice and wellknown.

The Five and Six are next pulled singly onto the left fingers and then stolen with the right hand beneath its cards as the left thumb pulls off the Seven. They are returned to the left hand packet beneath the Eight. This latter is stolen beneath the Ten with the right hand as the left thumb pulls off the Nine. Finally the Ten with the Eight concealed beneath it are placed as one card on top of the others in the left hand.

To secretly reverse one card turn the packet over face downwards and turn the top card (the Ace) face up on the rest. As this is done secure a finger break under the top face down card. Use those two cards held as one to turn the third card (the Two) face up. Square up the three cards and turn them face down retaining a break between them and the rest of the cards.

What has been achieved here is that the Three is now face up using a method described in Expert Card Technique (page 109). Three more cards are pushed beneath these three with the left thumb and the six cards squared. The right hand turns them over showing a Five at the face. Place these cards below those in the left hand.

The above sequence should be rehearsed until it is committed to memory and can be performed without hesitation.

Prior to performance take the ten clubs from the red pack and stack them by going through the above sequence. Place them on top of the pack and put it into the case.

To begin the trick remove the ten club cards from the blue pack and arrange them in order. You then slowly and casually show them to be in numerical order as you perform the biddle sequence explained above. Each card should be called as it is received into the left hand.

Turn the cards face downwards and perform the moves for secretly reversing a card pattering that the cards are in order from Ace (show Ace), Two (show Two), Three, Four, Five (show Five at face of cards in the right hand) to Ten (show Ten on face of left hand packet). Place the cards in the left hand on top of the right hand packet and put them aside in such a way as to suggest that they cannot be interferred with (in a glass, encircled with an elastic band or under a coin).

You now take the red cards, and if you so desire give them a brief false shuffle retaining the stack intact. Cut the pack at about twenty into two piles and ask spectator to riffle shuffle the two halves together. Square the cards and repeat the above, this time cutting at about thirty. On completion of the shuffles the ten clubs are removed in order from the top. The Three which is reversed should remain so.

The ten blue clubs packet is now placed beside the red packet and the spectator invited to remove and show the top card of both piles simultaneously - they match. He is asked to continue showing the cards of both packets in a similar manner revealing that both are in exactly the same order throughout.

This is a gag I often use which always gets a laugh. You will need a glass eye with a miniature card stuck on the back, say the King of Clubs. Have a regular King of Clubs the twenty first card from the top of a face down pack.

Commence by having a spectator cut a small portion from the top of the pack and then you deal twenty from the top in a face down row. Request spectator to count his cards and while he is so doing get the glass eye into the finger palm position.

Let's assume he has twelve cards. You count backwards from the twentieth card turning each card face up until you reach the twelfth which you push towards him telling him that the card was arrived at by pure chance as you had no control of how many cards are cut from the top, but he just happened to cut twelve, so all is fair.

Continue by saying "To prevent you cheating I'll keep my eye on your card" - as you say this, mime taking out your eye producing the glass one and keep your eye closed. Place the glass eye on the chosen card.

Gather up the rest of the cards as you recap on the fairness of the procedure and that he could not cheat as you had your eye on the card. Ask him to pick up the glass eye and place it aside and turn the chosen card face up. As the King of Clubs is revealed remark "It's an 'eye' card." Tell him to turn the eye up and he sees the miniature 'eye' card. Take the glass eye and fake transfer to the other hand which bangs it back into the head and re-open the eye which has been kept closed throughout. Dispose of the eye by picking up the cards placing both in the pocket. It's a fun thing and should be played for laughs.

Dateline Hollywood. Yes, it is the Hollywood — the one of the films, the filmstars, the sunshine, the 'gorgeous people'. How did I get here? Easy. I took an aeroplane. The flight was bad, the film I am not too sure about because although I paid my 2 or 3 dollars to see it the sound didn't work too well so I never did find out what ninety five percent of the dialogue was about.

On arrival I was met by one Mike Caldwell some of you may know him, some not but I do recall mentioning his wife in the early days of this column. Nancy wasn't there to meet me, she was at home cooking but Mike Caldwell was, and also Albert Goshman and Mike's sister Patti. Being somewhat shattered after my trip the first evening was spent in the Caldwell apartment which is a very simple word to something much more lush than you could ever imagine in London. (When I say lush I mean the apartment, not Mike).

The next day the Caldwells had planned for me; it was to be a simple, relaxed day with no visits to the Magic Castle etc. It turned out to be delightful. We visited a place called Knottsberry Farm which is a sort of Disneyland complex, which it actually predates. Although I have already said that Mike said we were not going to get involved in any magic of course he knew, as I didn't, that there were some magicians appearing at Knottsberry Farm. There are all kinds of shows going on with theatres and indoor arenas, too much to describe here so we will concentrate on the magical angle.

There were actually two acts appearing at the Farm and the first one we saw was a name completely new to me and he was a very pleasant surprise, a young man by the name of Carl Beck. I think he made five performances throughout the day, starting at about 11.30 in the morning with the last show about five or six o'clock in the afternoon. He is young, moustached, with longish hair and he dresses in black and white modern style cat suit. His act consisted entirely of a presentation of the Spirit Cabinet. It was the type of presentation we have seen many years ago by Virgil and Julie, Les Levante and his daughter Esme. On this occasion Carl was assisted, I think by a young lady called Francine who is the daughter of the late Willard who used to do a pretty big show with his daughter assisting him in many things, with the Spirit Cabinet being one of the more important items. She is a really beautiful girl. After the committee was invited on stage she was all tied up and secured with straps which were then nailed to a chair. All kinds of things happened — bells rang, tamborines rattled, discs were thrown out of the cabinet etc. It was a classical presentation of this effect, beautifully done and well worth a visit from anyone interested in the presentation of magic today.

After his show we sat around chatting and were joined by Ricky Dunn the pickpocket magician. Then came a surprise as I found that Carl Beck was to do another act no more than fortyfive minutes later. So we stayed where we were and caught the next show which was entirely different. This was an illusion show in which he was assisted again by Francine and two other beautiful young ladies. Again, the presentation, clothes and props were excellent. This act featured large illusions; Trunk Substitution, production of two leopards, transposition of a girl from one cage to another, a black panther appeared somewhere, Carl changed places with one of his girl assistants, and one or two minor things. A really excellent act, beautifully presented. As I have said before this young man is new to me but I am sure I will hear a lot more of him in the future. He is a full time professional performer and a real credit to the profession.

A couple of hours later, after eating and visiting the local magic shop (yes, there is a magic shop in Knottsberry Farm), we then moved over to still another theatre, this time an indoor one. Only one performer in this show, the aforementioned Ricky Dunn. In California at the moment the sun always seems to be shining and no-one wears a jacket, which if you think about it can be quite a problem for a pickpocket, and on this occasion it was. Ricky had several assistants up on stage and proceeded to perform Three Cards Across, Borrowed bill in the Lemon, a comedy presentation of an effect with a drink which is too good to give away. In the course of this he lifted wallets from hip pockets (because there were no jackets), took pens out of shirt pockets, and had everyones' wrist watches. It was not the easiest situation for a pickpocket to perform in but Ricky succeeded magnificently as only a true professional can. Again, a credit to the profession.

And so ended my first day in the city of Los Angeles.

Oops, I nearly forgot, we actually did finish up at the Magic Castle that night, very late, to meet Ricky Jay, which we did, but more about this next time.

Goodbye, Patrick Page

HANDYWORK

This is a one-handed coin exchange in which a coin held at the fingertips of the right hand is secretly exchanged for one held in the classic palm position of the same hand. It is unlike any other method with which I am acquainted and trust it will be new to you.

Start by classic palming a silver coin in the right hand and display a copper coin held between the thumb and fingertips of the two middle fingers of the same hand which is held back to the spectators. Sketch (1) shows the required position. The hand turns anti-clockwise until it is palm downwards and at the same time the two middle fingers curve inwards carrying the copper coin to the heel of thumb to the point marked 'X' in sketch. The heel of the thumb now exerts pressure on the edge of the palmed silver coin with a squeezing action causing it to fall onto the little and third fingers, the latter having moved from its position on the copper coin which is retained in position solely by the second finger. Immediately the silver coin falls from the palm, the second finger slides the copper coin from position 'X' into the classic palm and the fingers on which the silver coin is resting straightened and the thumb moved over to hold this coin in the same way as the copper one was held before commencing the sleight.

When performing standing surrounded by a group this method is completely free from angle problems and in this respect is superior to the de Manche method and others with which I am acquainted. It does bear some resemblance to one used by David Roth but he assured me that it differs from the one he uses.

Here are a couple of tricks which may be used as a practice vehicle for 'Handywork', though any other exchange may be substituted if so desired.

Get ready by having a packet of book matches in the right side coat pocket and a silver coin classic palmed in the right hand.

Call attention to a copper coin held in the right hand at the fingertips and appear to place it in the left hand, the fingers of which close around it. In reality the switch is made and it is the silver coin in the closed left hand, the copper being palmed in the right.

Remarking that you also require a silver coin place your right hand into your coat pocket and once inside let the copper coin drop and finger palm the book matches. Pause — and look at the spectators saying, "If I was a true magician it would not be necessary to take the coin from my pocket." Look at your closed left hand, and now two things happen simultaneously. Open the left fingers to reveal the change from copper to silver and remove the right hand from the pocket with the matches finger palmed.

With the right hand pick up the silver coin, display it and apparently replace in the left but make a switch retaining the coin in the right as the left fingers close over the book matches. The right hand now removes the copper coin from the right side pocket leaving the silver there. Displaying the copper coin make some remark about 'it being there all the time' and that it does not really match the silver one. Turn your eyes to the closed left hand and slowly open it revealing the matches as you say, "These are perfect matches."

The second offering is an ungimmicked version of the 'Silver and Two Copper Transposition' by Conrad Haden on page 442 of Bobo's Coin Magic. The effect is that three coins, a silver, a copper and a Chinese one placed into the left hand which is then closed. The right hand removes the silver, leaving the copper and Chinese coins in the left hand. A gesture is made and the silver coin magically returns to the left hand whilst the copper and Chinese coins pass from the left hand into the right.

In addition to the coins mentioned you will also need an extra matching silver coin which is classic palmed in the right hand at the beginning.

First place the other three coins onto the table and with the right hand pick up the silver and put it on the open left palm. Do likewise with the Chinese coin and then appear to do the same with the remaining copper coin but switching it for the palmed silver one, closing the left fingers quickly over the three coins as the last one is added to prevent exposing the substitution.

The left hand now turns palm downwards and the Chinese coin worked back towards the left finger tips until the major part of it is outside the fist. The right hand steals this coin between its thumb and curled forefinger as it points to the left hand and asks the spectators to name the colours of the coins.

You now open the left hand slightly between the thumb and forefinger enabling the same digits of the right hand to extract one of the silver coins (a spectator may be allowed to remove the coin if you so wish). You now remind the spectators that the left hand holds a copper and a Chinese coin, and the right a silver coin. The right hand turns palm downwards and a gesture made with both hands towards each other. The right drops the copper and Chinese coins retaining the silver and the left is opened to reveal the silver one. The 'shuttle' move is now executed i.e. apparently tossing the silver from the left hand into the right but really retaining it in the left and showing the duplicate kept in the right hand when dropping the copper and Chinese coins. The right hand now gathers up the other two coins and tosses them casually into the left to join the extra one, and put all coins into the pocket. That's all.

Two further books on Mental Magic by Phil Goldstein in similar format as his Blue Book on the same subject. Both priced at three dollars each plus an extra dollar to purchasers outside the USA and available from the author at 121 Charles St., Apt 4A, Boston, Massachussets 02114.

The first one, The Red Book of Mentalism, contains ten items in 20 pages of the kind we have been accustomed to expect from this prolific author. The Four-sided Triangle is a prediction in which a spectator thinks of a playing card and his thoughts coincide with a card selected by another spectator, and yet another spectator opens a large envelope and removes a Jumbo card which also proves to be of the same suit and value. Parallax is a divination in which duplicates a geometric design, a letter, and a number written by three different spectators. Disposable Color is a psychological force with an 'out' if it fails. Writers Cramp is a really natural and unsuspected way of switching billets. Happy Horoscoper is for those who like to include an astrological reading wherein Happy Birthday appears only on the back of a card bearing his birth sign. The five remaining effects include the use of Tarot cards. A 'Stop' effect using design cards which includes instruction for a pocket switch of two packets of cards — much needed information for the fumblers of this move. Removing the power from a magnet and a divination effect using Scrabble letters.

The Green Book of Mentalism also contains ten effects, and space being limited mention will be made of just a couple which seem to be that little different — always a problem with mentalism. Onstage Bender concerns the bending of keys and the use of an amulet on a chain which behaves in similar fashion to the wellknown sex detector (button on a thread). The presentation given allows plenty of scope for action and dramatics, and as the author observes 'It depends entirely on your own dramatic abilities, with the necessary confidence to turn a purely theatrical bluff into a miracle.' Nucleus is an effect with a borrowed deck from which a card is chosen and returned. Performer mixes the cards some face down and other face up and spreads them onto the table. Pressing his fingertips on the cards which cling to his fingers by magnetism?, as he raises his hands from the table. Suddenly all the cards fall to the table with the exception of the one chosen.

The real value of these publications lies in the variety of the presentations given with the effects rather than the 'secrets'. In many cases all the necessary patter is included. For the mentalist there is much for him to get his teeth into — for the conjurer who does tricks not quite so much, but he too should find some items for his use.

A spectator selects and signs the face of a card. It is lost in the pack. The cards are shuffled and ribbon-spread. The chosen card is the only face up card in the spread, and when it is turned over we see that it has a different coloured back to the rest of the cards. While the method employed in producing this effect is not exceptional, I have found that this trick produces a better response than many tricks which I consider to be much more impressive.

The idea is that the spectator should 'see' his card to have a blue back (assuming the pack is blue) as many times as possible before showing that it in fact has a red back. In this method the chosen card is seen to be blue 3 times.

Begin with the single red card on the face of the pack. Shuffle overhand retaining the card in position. It is now forced using a slip force. I use the one described by Harry Lorayne in "Close-Up Card Magic". The cards are held in the right hand and spread by the fingers of the left hand as the spectator is asked to touch any card. As this is done the right fingers slip the red card under the spread. When a card is touched, the spread is broken at this point, the remainder of the cards being placed on top of the others. The cards are squared bringing the red card to the face of the pack. The cards are held towards the spectator who signs the face card. Now glide back the red card, taking the next card and placing it into the middle of the pack "to lose the card". Square the cards and run them from hand to hand as you say that the card is now one of the cards in the middle of the pack. This is the third time the spectator sees his card to be blue.

To reverse the red card, I use a modification of the side slip. Holding the cards from above in the right hand the right forefinger swing cuts about half the cards into the left hand. As the cut is completed by placing the rest in the left hand the left-hand fingers strike the red card and push it into the right palm. As soon as it clears the pack the left hand tips the pack up in preparation for an overhand shuffle. The palmed card is added reversed to the face of the cards and the right hand undercuts about half of the cards. A few of these are shuffled individually. the rest being thrown on top of the others. This leaves the red card reversed in the middle of the pack. Spread the cards showing the signed card face up. Allow this to make an impression and then turn it over, showing it to be the only red card in the pack.

At the Dutch convention (26-27-28 May at Noordwijkerhout) I won the first prize card magic, the Henk Vermeydenprijs and the Grand-Prix 1978.

One of the tricks I did was Jazz Pieces. I read this trick in Pabular. Thank you very, very much for this great trick.

Pabular-reader,

Robert List (H.H. Jonker), Martin Campslaan 175, Rijswijk, The Netherlands

In the September 1975 issue Vol.2, No.1 of this magazine Fred Robinson contributed a gem of a trick. If you have not been using it, that is your bad luck. It is not difficult to do and certainly hits them between the eyes.

The trick was entitled Behavioural Bluff and can be found on page 156 of the issue mentioned. This method goes beyond the original one hence the title.

EFFECT:

Five cards are removed from a shuffled pack and placed in a row on the table. Four of these are eliminated either by one person or four spectators each eliminating one card. There is no force. A previously introduced card with a contrasting back is turned face up and matches the one left after the elimination process. The other four are then shown to be the Aces.

PREPARATION:

Put five cards of the same value on top of the pack — say the Five of Spades, and the four Aces on the bottom. The Five of Spades from a pack with a different back is placed in the outer top coat pocket with its back outwards.

PRESENTATION and WORKING:

Remove the stranger card from your pocket and lay it face downwards on the table stating that it forms your prediction. Introduce the pack, which may be false shuffled retaining the Fives at the top and the Aces at the bottom.

Deal out the top five cards in a line across the table, and as you explain how the selection is to be made secure a break above the four Aces with the right thumb and transfer it to a left little finger break, and hold the pack in the left hand.

As each card is eliminated move it towards you, forming a heap a few inches from the edge of the table. Transfer the pack to the right hand, its thumb regaining the break at the inner end of the pack.

Two things now happen almost simultaneously. The right hand holding the pack puts it onto the table on the spectators side of the eliminated cards and the left moves the selected card a few inches in any direction which appears to be a natural action depending upon the position of the card. Keep your left finger on this card as you comment on it.

This latter action of the left hand supplies sufficient distraction to provide cover for the right thumb to release the four Aces letting them drop on top of the eliminated cards as the pack passes over them when it is placed onto the table. The best position for the disposition of the eliminated pile and the chosen card will be evident when you rehearse the effect.

Left hand now turns over your prediction card and the right the selected card proving your prediction to be correct.

To round it all off pick up the heap of eight cards and holding them in your left hand count off three into your right hand leaving the remaining five lined up as one card. Pat the three in the right under those in the left, square up and turn the packet face up. Buckle Count to show the four Aces.

Clean up by squaring up the pack and getting a little finger break above the four duplicates and cop them into the left hand. Add these to the pack as you pick it up tossing the aces face up onto the table as you do so.

QASTS TILL

Congratulations to Robert List for his successes at the Dutch Convention in winning the first prize for card magic — the Henk Vermeydenprijs and the Grand-Prix 1978. He wrote as follows, 'One of the tricks I did was Jazz Pieces. I read this trick in Pabular. Thank you very, very much for this great trick.' Thanks to Bob Farmer of Ontario who contributed the effect thus helping us to advance our reputation for printing workable effects.

Barrie Richardson over from Holland in the state of Michigan brought complete silence to the Blenheim Bar as he demonstrated The Magnetic Force from his issue Vol.4 No.4. Performed with authority and in a dramatic manner the impact it created was out of all proportion to the simple means employed. Lest is be thought this effect is suitable only for intimate performance, Barrie remarked later that it goes even better before a large audience. Later still, he fooled me very badly with a stripper deck and a couple of effects using a method of exchanging one card for another previously concealed in the hand which I missed completely. Excellent though the exchange is, it was only completely deceptive on account of the planned misdirection built into the presentation as a preliminary to the execution of the move itself.

The above observations are not made with objective of making the above mentioned gentleman appear to be the world's greatest magician—we both know he isn't—but to pinpoint what appears to be an important aspect of that necessary part of the magician's equipment—misdirection.

Also running loose in London recently — Jim Zachary whose book on dice is shortly to be published. He is an expert on the subject and has some novel ideas to impart.

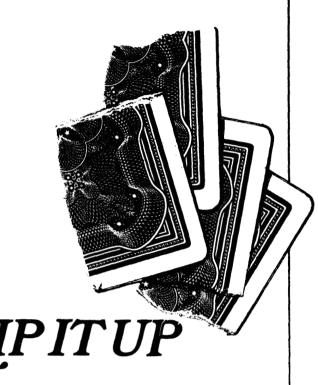

He was accompanied by Fr. Cyprian, Hank Moorhouse and Rick Johnsson. The first mentioned showed some of his many inventions which for the record included Hofzinser's Departure, The Solid Gold Credit Card and his Moroccan Card to Wallet. The other two sported similar type black beards which made it difficult for me to remember who did what, and when — we had a couple of sessions. I know for certain that Hank did a Three Card Monte because he gave me a set — he has marketed this under the name 'Sting'. All these referred to are sound tricks and worth a purchase if the effect appeals. Rick promised a non-trick article which, judging from a recent article in the Linking Ring should be entertaining and stimulating.

Also in town Gerald Kosky, a name familiar to readers of magical literature. In addition his prolific output of ideas, he also lectures, but unfortunately it was not possible to arrange any in this country due to shortage of notice. He did explain one of old timer Maro's coin effects, eminently suited to stand up bar performance, which had somehow escaped publication. It will appear shortly.

John Fisher recently lectured to the Magic Circle Monday nighters and to my annoyance I missed it. John, a B.B.C. producer, who has been responsible for bringing more top class magicians to our T.V. screens than any other single person, has been globe trotting in search of more performers for a new programme. Their appearance in this country makes it possible for Ken Brooke to arrange for us to have the priviledge of seeing them in person by arranging for them to lecture. Over the years he has been responsible for making it possible for magicians in this country to benefit from the advice of these top liners, and to see them in action. Some have been magicians' magicians and others whose magic appealed to normal human beings, and on occasions there have been those whose offerings had universal appeal. One of the latter group, and who must be regarded as one of the best close-up performers of this era is Johnny Paul and it is thanks to Ken and John that on Saturday 1st July we shall be enjoying the fine magic of this performer — who said Santa Claus is dead?

In the April/May number of the 'Magic Circular', Bill Nagler described a card effect which was the hit of the Abbott Close-up Show Convention, and has since played strongly for him. He was not able to give the method and full working, but Bob Stencil, the originator kindly permitted him to give a good description and source.

The only real clue given was "take a look on page 359 of Expert Card Technique". This I did, and found it referred to double facers, and since I prefer not to use fake cards gave the problem some thought, and arrived at a solution which overcame my objection, and enabled the effect to be obtained without their use.

The effect remains the same and is slightly stronger since part of it takes place in the spectator's hands, and may on occasion be performed with a borrowed pack. No difficult sleights are involved — it is quickly learned — and having performed it several times I can say it is every bit as strong as Bill Nagler claims. So with thanks to Bob and Bill, here goes.

EFFECT:

Two spectators each select cards which are returned to the pack. This is spread and the first spectator's choice is revealed face up. The pack is re-spread with the object of finding the second spectator's card in a similar fashion, but instead of this happening, the first spectator's card again turns face up. A third attempt is made, again the same card is found to be face up. It is now handed to spectator for him to sign his name across its face. On receiving it back the performer, in order to make doubly sure it does not happen again tears it into four pieces and gets spectator to put his hand on them.

METHOD:

Yes, of course a duplicate is needed. This can be added to your own pack after doing a few tricks, or to a borrowed pack if the back design matches. A borrowed pack having two Jokers may also be used.

SLEIGHTS:

Add-on move.

Slip force.

Any double lift.

Larreverse (Ultimate Secrets. Dai Vernon).

Secret Reversal (Million Dollar Card Secrets. Garcia).

SET-UP:

Top card — any picture card — in this case the King of Clubs.

Second card — any spot card — in this case the Nine of Hearts.

Bottom card — duplicate of the second card — face up.

ACTIONS:

Commence by slip forcing the KC and 9H on different spectators. They are asked to show them around to ensure that someone remembers the chosen cards and also as an insurance policy against smart alecs.

Have the chosen cards placed on top of the pack, first the KC and then the 9H. Cut the pack and complete the cut. Personally, I use the swivel cut.

Stating that you are about to perform a miracle, and that under no circumstances are they to name the cards until asked to do so, slowly spread the pack and when the reversed 9H appears push it forward and invite the spectator who took the KC to take it. When he obliges take the next card (the face down 9H) into the right fingers in position for the Larreverse. Claim that spectator is holding the card he chose. When he denies this, say that the miracle worked at least half way if it is the card the other spectator chose. When he agrees, take the 9H back still face up onto the cards in the left hand and turn it over using the Larreverse, and square up the pack.

Say that now you will cause the other selected card to turn face up completing the miracle. Once again spread the cards, again the 9H is revealed face up in the centre. Pretend that something has gone wrong and perform the Larreverse again. This time the cards are automatically set up for it.

An incredible electronic breakthrough for the Close-up Magician . . .

PROGRAMMABLE L.E.D. WATCH

Every close-up worker we have shown this item to has purchased it on the spot! The presentation possibilities are endless.

Have a spectator "select" a card.
Then have her press the magic button on your watch.
Amazing as this may sound, your watch, word by word, reads . . . Julie chose . . . the 9 . . . of clubs!

Of course, you can program the watch to say any spectator's name, any card, or for that matter, any message made up of 5 words of up to five letters (or numbers) each. The watch can be programmed on a moments notice.

Not only does the Programmable Watch do all of this—it is also a full five-function watch that tells the hour, minutes, month, date, and seconds. It is a precisionmade unit that is accurate within three minutes a year and comes with a one-year warranty from the manufacturer.

We have the Programmable Watch in stock for immediate delivery.

Spread the cards once more, and again the same 9H is seen to be face up. Saying that you put a stop to this happening, once and for all, drop the offending card on the table asking the spectator who originally chose it to sign his name across the face of it.

During the time when he reaches for the card to sign it, push the top card of those in the left hand (the KC) under the cards in the right hand and replace the latter under the cards in the left hand. The KC is now on the bottom of the pack.

Hold the pack in the right hand and take a break above the KC at the bottom of the pack in readiness for the secret addition move. Swivel cut the top half of the pack letting it drop into the left hand, and have the signed 9H placed face up on top of them. Using the cards in the right hand flip the signed card face down letting the KC fall on top as per the ADD ON move. Place the cards remaining in the right hand under those in the left.

You now check that the 'signature is visible' by double lifting the two top cards and showing the signed 9H to spectators. Replace it/them on top of the pack — face down, and deal the KC which they believe to be the signed 9H onto the table.

Next put the pack on the table and pick up the KC keeping its face towards you and miscall it as the 9H and saying that to be safe you will tear it into four pieces. Do so, and square them up and put them on the table asking the person to put his finger firmly on his signed? card, and not to lift it.

It is now necessary for the signed 9H to be moved from the top of the pack to second from the top in order to perform the Automatic Reverse. This is easily achieved by taking them one at a time from the top of the pack reversing their order in the process at the same time remarking that it is possible that one of them may be the other selected card.

Replace them square on top of the pack and turn the top card face up. Double lift this face up card with the face down 9H beneath it and use them to flip over the third card face up (they believe it to be the second card). Neither card proves to be the other chosen card. Square up the three cards and turn them over dropping them on top of the pack. The signed card is now face up, second from the top. Cut the pack and complete the cut.

Remarking that this is your last effort spread the pack across the table to reveal the signed 9H face up in the spread, wait a moment for the penny to drop before asking the spectator to name the card he chose. When he replies "The King of Clubs" tell the other spectator to lift his finger and turn over the torn pieces. When they are seen to be the King of Clubs the effect it creates leaves nothing to be desired.

Although the working may appear complicated when reading it — only about ten minutes is required to memorise the handling — the rest is practice.

Thanks once again to Bob and Bill who I trust will approve of my method and changes.

Jeff Busby presents

THE MAGIC OF SHIGEO TAKAGI

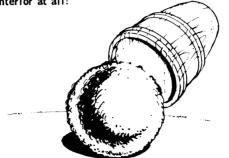

In keeping with our reputation for producing only the finest in quality close-up magic, Jeff Busby Enterprises proudly presents two fine routines by Japan's master sleight of hand artist — Shigeo Takagi. Personal demonstration by Takagi and movies of both routines detailed below were used in the writing of the manuscripts to ensure that none of the fine details were omitted.

Shigeo Takagi's One Cup Routine

This extremely novel one cup and ball routine created a sensation when performed by Takagi in public and private sessions at the Washington I.B.M. convention.

A ball is magically produced from the tip of a wand. It immediately vanishes and reappears beneath a beautiful wooden cup. The ball vanishes again and is reproduced from the performer's pocket. After a penetration sequence and more transpositions, the ball refuses to return to the cup. The cup is slapped and a large load ball drops out! But wait...For the stunning climax, the cup is displayed and shown to be a solid block of wood with no interior at all!

This is not "push button" magic. You will need some sleight of hand ability to perform this topflight routine and it does require practice. If you master this, it will be an effect that your audience will always remember.

To help you learn this routine, over 35 fine line drawings have been prepared. A separate typeset booklet containing comprehensive instructions will help you to master this with ease.

The cup is lathe turned from hardwood in the style of the popular "Paul Fox" cup. Beautifully made and well worth the price. $12.50 for the cup, instructions and illustrations. Please add $1.50 for Parcel Post delivery in the U.S., $2.50 for Surface Mail to any other part of the world. $4.00 for Air Mail delivery to any part of the world. 40¢ extra for insurance in the U.S. only. California residents include sales tax.

Shigeo Takagi's Coin Assembly

There have been many coin assemblies, but none this unique! Here is magic in the classical style, incorporating many ingenious moves and sequences never before used in this type of effect.

In brief, four coins cleanly assemble to under one of four covering cards. This version is done in "slow-motion" with fresh ideas raved over by the experts. No rapid actions as are evident in most current versions of this effect.

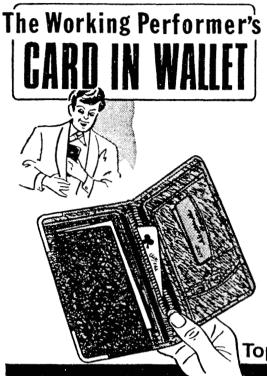

This routine does take sleight of hand ability and is not for the novice. Over 45 fine line drawings help to make this easy to learn. A separate booklet of text, keyed to the illustrations, clearly worded to help to understand this outstanding routine is included. The price is $4.50 for the illustrations and text in a plastic strip binder. Please include $1.00 extra for postage and packing in the U.S., $1.50 for Surface Mail to any part of the world. $2.50 for Air Mail delivery to any part of the world. 40¢ extra for insurance in the U.S. only. California residents include sales tax. Purchase this routine in conjunction with the ONE CUP ROUTINE and the COIN ASSEMBLY will be sent post free.

"The wallet which was recommended to me arrived today. It is the best Card to Wallet apparatus I have ever seen. Something I will use on a regular basis. Your suggestion to use it for The Ambitious Card was excellent. Enclosed my cheque to cover the cost." Roland Hurley. U.S.A.

"The new wallet arrived and is simply fabulous. It makes miracles too easy. As a full time performer I need first class apparatus and like all your items, this is worth £100 to me."

Al Dante, Finland

"What are the chances of getting another of the wallets you recently sent me?" Brad Holbrook, U.S.A.

"It has been doing so well for me I would like to order another one for my son who is also a professional magician."

Jack Pyle. U.S.A.

"I would like another two for friends." Danny Dew. U.S.A.

"I use it as my normal wallet. Hand picked magic!" Fred Robinson. G.B.

Top quality black seal grain leather

Do you object to paying for apparatus of the highest class? Fred Kaps was here and performed the card in wallet — he did it again — and again — and again in one continuous routine — each time the freely selected card was found in the zipper compartment of his wallet. Those present looked for all the usual weaknesses and found — NOTHING.

The actual gimmick is based on a little known idea, perfected by the world's leading artiste of our time. We have not sold millions gentlemen for this apparatus is of very high standard, we only get a few each month.

If you can palm a card really well you will delight in this apparatus. If you cannot palm cards we will send you a very fine method by Barry Stevenson, 'its original title — 'The Incredible Signature'.

We do not supply any cards as any can be used in the classical version. This apparatus is sold to you on our usual money back guarantee. Wallet is in black seal grain leather with gold metal corners.

WHODUNNIT?

EFFECT:

A spectator is invited to play the part of a detective and shown a number of cards on which are written murderer's names, various weapons and motives. By following the instructions of a voice on a tape the cards reveal the name of the murderer, his motive and the weapon used, all of which is confirmed by the voice on the tape.

PREPARATION:

Twentyfive cards are required on which are printed the following:

Dagger	Jealousy	Don Wilson
Club	Greed	Max Forest
Poison	Rivalry	Dr Browne
Gun	Power	Dennis English
Rope	Resentment	Fay Laker
Explosive	Eternal Triangle	John Foster
Pillow	Heir to Fortune	Ilsa Heinz
Sword		Frank Dacey
Stone		Hubert Ganzia

Put the card with the word Dagger on top of the face down packet followed by Jealousy and then Frank Dacey. The remainder of the cards are well mixed but in no particular order.

A tape will need to be made, preferably using a stranger's voice.

PRESENTATION:

Ask a spectator to assist and show him the cards explaining their relevance to the experiment and the role he is to play. False shuffle the cards without disturbing the order or position of the three top cards, and place them in front of the spectator requesting him to listen to the voice on the tape and follow the instructions given by it.

VOICE:

The year nineteen hundred was a particularly bad year, so far as crime was concerned. One case in particular with which I was personally involved created considerable publicity. It was the murder of an American arms dealer.

On being asked to investigate I gathered available information which is on the cards before you. I would like to go through the clues, suspects, motives etc once again with your assistance.

Will you please pick up the cards and deal a number of them face downwards onto the table . . . have you done that? . . . good. Put the remaining cards aside and pick up those just dealt and deal them into three separate heaps. As you are doing that I will explain that in a similar way I had to sift through the evidence, evaluate the clues, and make some inspired guesses.

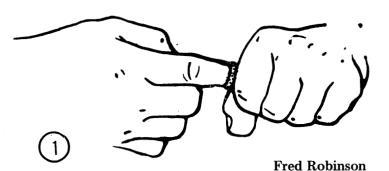

When you have finished, no doubt our conclusions will coincide. You have finished dealing . . . Fine — please turn the top card of each heap face up.

My first task was to make a search for the weapon. From the injuries which caused the death of the victim it was evident that his death was caused by a sharp instrument — probably a knife. Finally I discovered a hidden dagger — no doubt you have done the same . . . you have? . . . excellent.

Having found the weapon my task became easier and by a process of elimination I became satisfied I knew the murderer but still needed to find the motive. After considering all aspects of crime from every angle and asking innumerable questions I realised that the suspect had a motive — it was jealousy. Did you arrive at the same conclusion? . . . You did — good.

Finally, after checking all the evidence it became clear beyond any possible doubt that only one person could have been responsible for committing the murder — that person was Frank Dacey. I have no doubt, whatsoever, that you reached the same conclusions . . . You did? . . . congratulations on your remarkable achievement. Now, if you'll excuse me, something urgent has developed (shouts) Righto Watson, I'm coming.

THIMBLE-O

A thimble is displayed on the right index finger and still in that position is pushed into the left fist and disappears, both hands being shown completely empty.

Before displaying the thimble button up your jacket. After showing the thimble on the index finger push it just inside the left fist which is held waist high fairly close to the body, Figure (1). Withdraw the index finger leaving the rim of the thimble just visible to the spectators and then push it further into the fist this time with the right second finger. Withdraw the second finger stealing the thimble out of the left fist in the process and again push the index finger into the fist leaving it in that position. Figure (2) gives a 'navel's eye' view of the situation at this point both hands being in close proximity to the bottom of the left lapel.

Both hands, with the right index finger still within the left fist, move upwards until they are about level with the outer left breast pocket the thimble on the right second finger going beneath the left lapel. Pause for a moment and look directly at the spectators at the same time gently press outside the lapel with the fleshy part of the hand at the base of the thumb marked 'X' in (2). This pressure is made directly onto the thimble through the fabric of the lapel in order to enable the second finger to be eased out of the thimble.

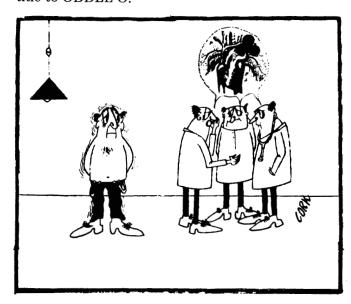

Turn the body bringing the right shoulder towards the spectators at the same time move both hands a few inches away from the body leaving the thimble hidden behind the lapel. Still keeping the index finger within the fist, twist the right hand bringing its palm towards the audience keeping the second, third and little fingers closed. Next turn the right hand back to its original position and withdraw its index finger from the left fist keeping it extended.

Open the left hand to show that the thimble has disappeared. Magicians will immediately conclude that it is in the right hand, a view that may also be shared by non-magicians due to the manner in which this hand was turned with three of its fingers kept closed. Conclude by showing the suspect hand also to be empty. DO NOT reproduce the thimble.

Thimble workers may have other methods of reaching the point shown in (2). The method given is wellknown to thimble workers, but for those seeking a full explanation the finest description of this move appears in the 'The Ramsay Classics' under the chapter heading 'A Lesson in Misdirection'.

Finally, should the thimble have a tendency to fall from under the lapel — as it will with some suits — try covering it with one of those finger stalls used by the banking fraternity to facilitate counting notes. You will of course change the title to ODDLE-O.

FER C

One of the difficulties in bringing this periodical up to date is that there never seems to be a break from magical activities of various kinds that seem to demand attendance.

The first two weeks of this month (July) began with Johnny Paul performing his inimitable brand of close-up magic to a record crowd at Vic Pinto's studio and arranged as usual by Ken Brooke. This was not a lecture, but a performance of the actual material used by Mr Paul professionally. No tricks were explained as is the general practice with lecturers, in fact there was little in the way of new effects to be explained though there were a few 'moves' which had most of us guessing, but the real value lay in having the opportunity to observe the results of one man's lifetime experience of performing close-up magic to non-magicians. There was a conspicious absence of those clever moves which delight so many magicians and mean so little to the audience other than to cause them to wonder why the performer is holding the cards in such an odd manner, thus violating one of the cardinal principles — that of making every action appear to be necessary and normal and excluding everything likely to arouse suspicion in the minds of the spectators.

Instead we saw - or did not see - the standard sleights such as the force, top change, and palm used to achieve effects which were mainly old classics and included the Cards Across, Torn and Restored Card and a variation of the Card on the Ceiling using a board held in the hand on which to bang the pack. It was during these effects that the value of the old sleights was most evident. Covered by misdirection provided by the actions, patter and spectator involvement the use of these sleights to achieve the effects provided plenty of evidence to show their superiority in achieving a clear cut effect not possible with many of the substitute sleights which are mainly devised by magicians to fool other magicians or because they have not troubled to master the basic tools of their trade. These substitutes, most of which appear contrived and circuitous, usually involve extraneous actions which in addition to arousing suspicion tend to lessen the directness of the effect.

To clarify the point I am trying to make let us consider forcing a card. There are numerous complicated and roundabout ways of causing a particular card to be chosen such as counting down to a given number — adding numbers together — pushing a knife or a face up card into the pack - covering the pack with a handkerchief and having someone cut it etc. All this kind of irrelevant business adds nothing whatsoever to the effect in hand either by increasing its entertainment value or making the effect appear more magical. It would be almost impossible to visualise Johnny Paul resorting to such devious methods. He takes the shortest distance between two points merely spreading the cards casually as he is chatting to the spectator making the selection appear —at least to himself — to be of no particular importance.

Other tricks performed included — Devano Rising Cards — Sponge Balls — extremely skilful Dice Stacking — and a Cups and Balls routine. This latter defied explanation, even by the best informed, one of its chief merits being that it did not come over as being a 'set' routine, the general effect being that the various effects just happened rather than that they were expected to occur.

It was a rewarding evening, especially for those performing close-up magic outside the magic scene. To have the opportunity to witness a working performer of the calibre of Johnny Paul can only be regarded as a considerable priviledge and of inestimable value to those attending.

Attending the recording of three magical shows which should appear on your TV screens (BBD 2) during November accounted for three days away from the typewriter. These will appear as — The Fred Kaps Magic Show — The Amazing Randi Magic Show — and The Ricky Jay Magic Show. Close-up magicians appearing in these shows will be Tony Slydini and Johnny Paul. All are produced by John Fisher who thanked Ken Brooke during the recording for his valuable assistance — somebody should present these gentlemen with a medal or something — you can be assured these shows will be top class entertainment.

All these events brought the usual crop of magicians to the city. Geoff Ray in between cruises showed me the use he has made of Walt Lees Cull—a Separation Vol.1 No.4 Dec 1974 and Firewater by Jan Heinz and Carl Lauchli in Vol.3 No.4 Dec 1976 both in his regular professional programme. In the latter he partially fills a glass with drink and then releases the gas into it sealing it in with a suitably sized rubber ball which is attached inside the coat. Producing the drink with appropriate patter he sets fire to the drink.

Gaeton Bloom in The Magic Place Studio utilising what can best be described as an 'Open Crimp' performed an hilarious (in his hands) routine with a cardboard box, a piece of cheese and a clockwork mouse which failed to find a chosen card. Gaeton has decided to let us have his Chop Cup routine for the magazine which he promised on his last visit should he decide to release it. Thanks very much.

Pauline thought he was a double act Gate and Bloom and was looking for the other half, which brings me to Bob Read who squeezed in a lecture during a business visit to Chicago. This was a predictable success and someone out there must have the 'savvy' to book him for a lecture tour. Whoever does will have no regrets.

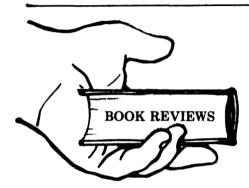

Gordon Bruce came down from Scotland for a day and stayed nearly a week and Alex Elmsley also broke cover after almost a year in hiding and joined Gordon, Ricky Jay, Steve Freeman and yours truly for a session. Steve is a superb card worker who works slowly and deliberately without a suspicion of finger flinging. When he performs the Tilt move it looks just the way it would look if a card was being pushed into the centre of the pack and not as generally performed with the pack held shoulder high as if taking aim with a rifle. You may smile, but how do you do it?

Chatting with Peter Warlock soon after the magazine started we discussed the hazard of printing tricks and sleights already published. He assured me that it would happen to us, The Simplified Spin Pass Aces Vol.4 No.6 he informs me is explained in an early Pentagram the originator being Jack Avis.

We regret omitting to credit Jack with the original conception but Mr Pargetter's idea of replacing the bottom half back in its original position after flipping over each ace eliminates the necessity of cutting the pack each time before spin cutting to reveal the next ace. This economy of movement plus the fact that the illusion of a genuine cut before producing each ace seems to justify its publication.

Have just received from "Obie" O'Brien (brought over by Bob Read in his diplomatic bag), a report of the 8th Annual Close-Up Convention held as usual at the Forks Hotel, Buffalo. Everyone knows that the genial Eddie Fechter is mine host of this establishment, the atmosphere of which appears to be something akin to that of an English pub. This is undoubtedly the event of the year in the USA for close-uppers and its popularity is such that next year it will only be possible to attend if you are specifically invited. No space to give details but the names of those attending which reads something like a 'who's who' in the close-up magic field, and brings credit to Obie O'Brien who has been responsible over the years for this event. Should be scope for a similar event in Britain — any suggestions?

Notions by Phil Goldstein. Available from the author at 121 Charles Street, apt. 4a, Boston, Mass. 02114. USA. Three dollars. Outside the USA four dollars.

This booklet of 12 pages contains 10 items of a varied nature and resembles his previous publications both in format and practical nature of the effects it contains.

Very Good Hand is a small packet ambitious effect in which the ace of spades jumps around until the audience suspect that you have five of them until at the climax all change into a royal flush — in hearts. Broken Elevator is a six-part elevator routine with a spectator involved climax. In Contrasting Prediction a red backed card matches one freely selected card from a blue backed pack. Prints Charming in which three blank cards acquire faces and backs. MacDonald Goldstein - the authors version of the MacDonald aces. Maybe and Pop-off are two excellent gags — the first an old mindreading gag re-vamped to good effect and the second a stunt for balloon workers. Another Birthday proves to be a variation of the effect in which a spectator looks in a diary for his birthdate and finds the name of a previously chosen written beside it. Just Chance is embellishedwith an applause cue at the end under the caption The Coupon Caper and finally In Case of E.S.P. the performer divines a selected E.S.P. sign.

None of the effects are technically difficult. If you can buckle count, glide, do the Hamman back count — have some blank cards, a rough and smooth forcing pack and can make a simple flap card and double envelope all the effects are within your scope.

TWISTING, TURNING, EXTENDING AND OTHERWISE MOLESTING THE ACES

The following sequence allows a smooth lead-in to the classic Vernon effect, Twisting The Aces (More Inner Secrets of Card Magic, page 5). In effect the four aces are shown in a face-up fan. They are then alternated face-up and face-down but magically turn face-down. One of the aces is then turned face-up and it stretches to twice its length. It is returned to its normal size and turned face-down. The aces now turn face-up, one by one.

The latter part of the effect is the Twisting The Aces sequence while the former part is an impromptu version of Peter Kane's The Lady Stretches (Kabbala Volume 3, page 5) and for another version see Roy Walton's Stretching A Point at page 11 in his booklet Some Late Extra Card Tricks. The introduction is a short small packet version of the Bill Simon effect Four Packet Shuffle which can be found at page 21 of his booklet Sleightly Sensational.

WORKING:

Though the description above refers to the four aces being used I have found that the effect is easier for the audience to follow if the Ace, 2, 3, 4 of spades are used. However, a working with four aces is appended to this description.

Arrange the cards in the left hand in a face-up fan with the 4 on top followed by the 3 and 2 with the ace on the bottom.

With the right hand remove the "3" and "4" and put them face-down between the Ace and the "2". The order of the cards reading from the top will be — face-up two, face-down three, face-down four, face-up Ace.

Turn the packet over so that the back of the ace is uppermost followed by the four face-up, three face-up and the two face-down.

Now a simple count is used to show all cards to be face-down.

- (1) Push off the top three cards as one and place it/them beneath the single card remaining.
- (2) Push off the top card and place it beneath the three remaining.
- (3) Push off three cards as one and place them below the single card.

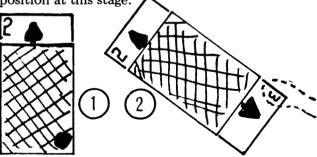

Alternatively a modified Elmsley Count could be used as follows —

- (1) Push off three cards as one taking this group into the right hand.
- (2) As the right hand returns to take the next card secretly replace the three card group under it leaving them in the left hand as the right hand counts off the original bottom card as the second card.
- (3) As the right returns to take the next card it leaves the card it holds beneath the packet in the left hand, the thumb of which pushes off the top three cards as one which is taken into the right hand.
- (4) The remaining card in the left hand is merely placed or counted onto the cards in the right.

Whichever procedure is used the order of the cards at the end of the count will be — facedown two, face-down ace, face-up four and face-up three. To this point the spectators have seen the cards magically turn face-down. Now the two of spades will apparently stretch to twice its length.

Hold the packet in a squared condition in the left hand and remove the top card (the two) holding it face-up in the right hand. Place it face-up and outjogged underneath the packet in the left hand as in (Fig 1). Put the right thumb on the inner right corner indicated by the black circle in the same sketch and the tip of the right index finger immediately below it and in contact with the back of the bottom card — the three.

The bottom card is now pulled backwards towards the body by exerting a gentle pressure with the index finger and thumb, the latter covering the index of the three as shown by the dotted lines in (Fig 2) which indicates the position at this stage.

If the hands are moved in a slight circle as the above actions are executed the two will appear to have stretched to twice its normal length. Allow this to sink in and then square the packet being careful not to expose the index corner of the three.

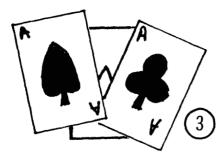

Remove the two from under the packet (it will be face-up) and replace it face-down beneath the packet. The order of the cards will now be - from the top down, face-down Ace, face-up four, face-up three and face-down two.

The packet is now set for Twisting The Aces. Elmsley Count the cards into the right hand and the four will appear face-up. Elmsley Count the cards a second time, placing the last card under the packet which will show the three face-up and the rest face-down. At this point the order of the cards will be - face-up three, face-down two, face-up four and face-down Ace.

Continue by doing a triple lift and turnover and counting the cards singly reversing their order and the two will appear face-up. Remove it and place it face-up on top of the packet.

Double lift holding the two face-up with the Ace face-down hidden beneath it and flip over the other two cards dropping the 'double' as one on top of them. Turn the packet facedown.

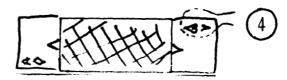

Elmsley Count the cards to reveal the face-up Ace of Spades.

WORKING WITH THE FOUR ACES

There is a very old dodge found in many magic books wherein the ace of hearts can be made to appear as the ace of diamonds by masking part of its centre spot with two other cards leaving the pointed end of this spot visible (Fig 3). Advantage is taken of this possibility in the stretching sequences when using the four aces for this routine.

Arrange the aces in a face-up fan in the following order - AC, AH, AD, AS. It will be necessary to have the pointed end of the AH pointing towards the body so that when it is partially exposed when appearing to stretch the AD it will be accepted as part of the centre spot of this latter card. Sketch (4) shows the position at the stage when the AD is at full stretch the dotted lines indicating the right thumb which covers the index of the AH.

With the aces fanned in the left hand remove the AH and AC and place them together face-down between the AS and AD and turn the packet over. From the top down the order will be - AS face-down, AC face-up, AH face-up, AD face-down. Execute the false count previously described to show all four aces face-down. At the end of the count the order will be - AD face-down, AS face-down, AC face-up, AH face-up.

The packet is now held squared in the left hand with the AH on top which is removed and placed face-down beneath the packet. Proceed with the stretching sequence.

My powers are real

RECENTLY there has been some negativism about me on television and in the press. Unfortunately I do not have control over this and could not stop it.

All the lies and fabricated stories which have been circu lating around are vicious and malicious, spread by people who are afraid of my powers and jealous of me.

I hope the negative articles did not change your attitude towards my powers. I assure you again that my powers are real and these people will use any means to try to destroy me.

Reach for a bottle and ask for the loan of a £1 note. Form the note into a cone as shown in sketches 1, 2 and 3 around your folding coin in such a way that it is kept hidden. Whilst you are doing this borrow a matching coin and then moisten your finger with saliva and apply it to the inside of the neck of the bottle and set the cone in the neck of the bottle as in sketch (4) pressing it in carefully so that the folding coin is trapped neatly within the neck where it is held securely and covered by the note. The pressure of the coin against the inside of the neck of the bottle plus the thickness of the folded note will enable you to open up the note in a natural manner and drop the borrowed coin inside. Push the borrowed coin down slowly without dislodging the folding coin. You are now ready to perform a miracle.

After a suitable pause lift the bottle by the neck with the index finger on top of the note to ensure that the borrowed coin is not shaken out of the top of the note — pause again — at this point magicians will realise that you are going t perform the coin in bottle and that they missed the build-up thinking that you were going to do just another bar stunt. Now bang (pound) the bottle on the table several times — make plenty of noise. The folded coin is now in the bottle remove the £1 note from the bottle and steal the borrowed coin as you hand it back with your thanks.

Display the coin in the bottle shaking it about making more noise — and turn it neck downwards shaking the folding coin into the hand containing the borrowed coin. Switch coins letting the genuine one fall onto the table or floor and return it. Make the business of extraction with some showmanship holding the bottle on high and bringing it downwards with a longggggg shake.

Points of interest?

I have thought for a long time that the coin ought to go into the bottle the same way that it comes out.

It is a method of repeating the trick before the same company having previously performed it using the old method.

One can get the folding coin into the neck of the bottle in full view of the spectators in a fair and open manner without arousing suspicion.

The method is 'OPEN' in performance i.e. more people can see and hear it.

Let the borrowed coin fall onto the table so that it makes plenty of noise.

Use a small fruit juice bottle.

Is there still a better way? Yes, there is write in if you think you know it.

PETER'S PRESTO POP-IN

Described by Fred Robinson

Within a couple of days of passing our Art Editor's version of the Coin in the Bottle over to the Editor, Peter Crush demonstrated his method of this effect to me in the Blenheim Bar — where else?

Using a new English penny piece and showing that it was too large to pass through the neck of a tonic bottle he placed it flat over the aperture as shown in (Fig 1) and grasped the neck of the bottle in his left hand as in (Fig 2) and putting the index finger of his right hand into, the top of his left fist pushed it downwards onto the coin pressing it into the bottle.

The effect was excellent and the method ideal for close-up performances. The secret is of course the same — the coin is a folding one but using a small coin is one of those — why did I not think of it — ideas. Also being small the extraction of the coin is much easier.

An interesting variation in presentation came up — instead of grasping the bottle by the neck, stand it on the counter or table, cover it with an handkerchief and press on the coin through the fabric pressing it into the bottle.

Here is a quick stunt with a pipe. Have your regular pipe palmed in the left hand with its stem pointing up the arm. Take from your pocket a miniature and remark "I am trying to cut down on my smoking." Put it stem first into the left fist, (Fig 1) shows the performers view at this point, and press downwards and outwards on the bowl with the right fingers levering it on the side of the left index finger causing the end of the stem to snap out of the left fist into the centre of the right palm. The right hand moves away with it palmed, the bowl being under the curved fingers and the end of the stem in the centre of the palm. Immediately the left thumb presses on the bowl of the regular pipe and with a pushing action brings it into view (Fig 2).

Do not try to make a miracle out of it—performed casually in an offhand manner during conversation (not when other tricks are being performed) though it could be used as an icebreaker.

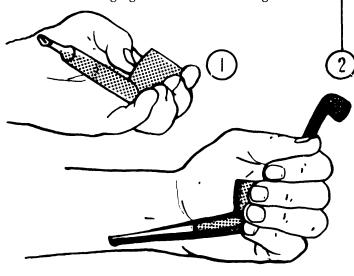

It is a simple matter to light one cigarette from another but not possible to light a pipe in a like manner. It can be done by stretching a piece of paper over the bowl 'drum' fashion and bringing the lit end of the cigarette into contact with the pipe tobacco by burning a hole through the paper with it.

Spread a handkerchief over your open palm and press the lighted end of a cigarette directly onto the fabric which does not burn or scorch — that is providing you have a coin beneath it which absorbs the heat. Not much but another icebreaker for your favourite coin and handkerchief trick.

To produce smoke from your fingertips. Strip off the striking surface of a safety matchbox. Place it on a plate or saucer and set fire to it. This will leave a brown residue into which you rub your thumb and index finger tips of the left hand. By rubbing them together wisps of smoke will rise from them. Remarking that "Where there's smoke there's fire" bring a lighted cigarette you are holding in your right hand just above the rising smoke producing a flash of flame. The size of the flash depends upon the size of the ball if flashpaper concealed in your right hand. More next issue.

This offering is a direct outcome of reading this magazine's review of Phil Goldstein's book Scattershot. The effect is precisely the same but the method must be different or it would not be appearing here (have not as yet had access to the book). As in the original a selected card disappears from between the four aces held by the spectator, only to reappear face up in the pack.

Begin by putting the four aces face up on top of the face up pack which is then held in the right hand Biddle fashion.

They are then taken by the left hand singly 'biddling' the third ace in the process. Ask the spectator to hold his left hand palm uppermost and place the four, (actually three, aces on it, and then ask spectator to cover the cards with his right hand. This latter request ensures that he will not notice that he only holds three aces.

Now fan the pack face up taking care not to flash the ace at the bottom and ask him (or preferably, her) to name any card. The named card is removed and dropped onto the table. The pack is now squared and held face down in the left hand. Call attention to the chosen card and patter about it being a free selection etc, the left hand drops to the side and its thumb pushes the top card (the ace) over the side of the pack, and using the thigh as a lever flip it over face up. The move can be done with impunity as all eyes are on the chosen tabled card.

Right hand now picks up the chosen card and places it face up on top of the pack directly on top of the face up ace taking care not to flash the latter, and turn over both cards as one.

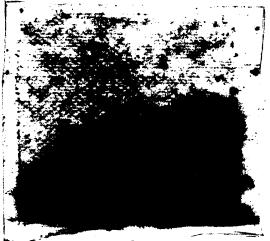

Request spectator to open his hands slightly and take the top card — the ace — which the spectator believes to be the card chosen and push it between the spectators palms and ask him to re-close his hands. As this is happening the left hand with pack drops casually to the side of the body and the chosen card turned face up with the same move as used previously for reversing the ace. It is now eccessary to bring the chosen card to the centre of the pack, and this can be done by casually cutting the pack. Personally I split the pack holding half in each hand and bang them together over the spectators hands bringing the face up chosen card to the centre. This kind of action suits my particular style and find it preferable to other, and possibly more subtle moves, which may tend to bring the spectator's attention towards the pack when as far as he is concerned the only cards involved are those he holds between his palms.

You now say to the spectator "You are holding the four aces and" Here you pause and wait for him to name the chosen card. When he obliges smartly ribbon spread the pack across the table revealing the card he has just named face up in the spread. There is nothing further to be done other than to direct your gaze towards his hands and watch as he looks through the four cards and finds only the aces.

The above routine has been in continuous use over the past three months and its impact on lay persons has been such that it is a regular item in my repertoire. Nuff said.

TEA TOTATIER,

vic allen

Place a few tea-bags in your wallet, and when someone has assisted you or a 'Betcha' trick goes wrong take one from your wallet, screw it up in your hand and push it into their top pocket saying "Have a drink on me", or it can be used to tip the waiter. It always gets a laugh.

Although at this moment I happen to be sitting at my 'tripewriter' in the north east of Scotland, my thoughts are actually in the U.S.A. which in case you have forgotten, was where I left you last time.

For the record, I don't keep records. I don't even keep copies of this magazine, and I hope that doesn't surprise you, but my reason for making this point is the fact that I have no idea what I rambled on about in the last issue. I know I was in Los Angeles but have no idea whether my literary effort was done before, or after the P.C.A.M. convention. Anyway, as I have heard Jay Marshall say, all that money has been spent so let's progress to some action that is a little more recent.

After bidding a fond farewell to the City of Angels, shaking hands with Nancy Caldwell kissing Mike Caldwell goodbye, I headed east for the Big Apple, which they tell me is Americanese for New York City, and the Society of American Magicians' annual convention. It was held at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, which is big, big, big. They gave me a room with two beds and a television set and for all the use I made of them I would have been as happy with a sleeping bag on Grand Central Station.

This was probably one of the best conventions I have ever attended. Everything was good. The competitions, the shows, the lectures, the hotel, the dealers room — I liked them all. What do I remember? Well, I did an act on one of the shows which I enjoyed and so I probably did OK. I also did a lecture on the Saturday afternoon, and sold out of lecture notes plus a few copies of my latest book which I had managed to hide away from conventioneers at Los Angeles. Yes, I have another book on the market and its called '150 Comedy Props' and its very very good. If you want to get a few laughs in your act, buy it. (Its £2.35 pence including postage and packing, $6.00 by airmail to the U.S. or do you think I'm getting too mercenary?) (Could be: Ed)

I also did an X-rated show one evening at midnight which received a mixed reception. In the hotel foyer there was a large blackboard on which was scribbled last minute announcements throughout the convention. Someone had written on it after my midnight epic, 'Dai Vernon's Midnight Show, admission free, excellent. Patrick Page's Midnight Show, admission $10.00 Gyp.' I don't know the person responsible but he was wrong. I wasn't gypped. I was perfectly satisfied with the arrangements but offer him my belated thanks for his condolences.

I digress. Regarding the close-up, one of the highlights for me was the performance of Phil Goldstein, who works professionally as Max Haven. He does a mental-type act and he's good. Very good. He will be appearing at the next IBM Convention in England. Johnny Thompson did his Malini Egg Bag routine and the gambling type routine which defies description. Harry Lorayne proved he could do a memory act by performing practically every card trick he has ever published.

David Roth did miracles with his coins, Darwin Ortiz did miracles with his cards, Karrell Fox did miracles with a ball routine which deserves a little thought and is well worth thinking about if you are interested in such things.

Maurice Fogel performed as only he can, superbly, and just don't believe one of the stories you may have read recently about him. The guy who wrote it just didn't know the full facts.

A pleasant surprise for me during the convention was to meet again John Calvert and Tammy. They, like Maurice Fogel, did the whole second half of one of the shows. I liked it. I liked New York.

There's more to come, but that's all for now, I'm running out of space), so keep your fingers crossed that in the next issue I can remember how I signed off in this one.

is a name to watch. He has his own TV series in Spain and won first prize for card magic at the Paris FISM Convention in 1973. - Genii- said about that triumph: "he did all the routines while accompanying himself with a harmonica! Very funny, lighthearted and terrific musically and, of course, magically as well. Others doing card work varied good to lousy..." He's lectured in almost every country except here and we hope to be putting that right in the future.

THE TAMARIZ RABBIT

Recently he spent a week at the Magic Place and bedazzled all those present with a close-up trick that involved four empty top hats, four apples, a worm and a rabbit. It was really three tricks in one, a laugh and a surprise in each, building to a very funny, unexpected climax. We are privileged to be able to offer it to you made in a style which to the best of our knowledge has never been used by any magical organisation in the world.

A NEW HIGH IN CLOSE-UP MAGIC ASK FRED KAPS

Someone in Holland saw world master magician Fred Kaps perform the Roy Johnson version and spent money on a phone call so they could join in the fun. By the way, Fred coloured his outfit with felt pens adding an additional dimension to a prop that spells fun, fun, fun for audiences of all ages. Here is magic with a golden touch linked with a sparkling offbeat presentation.

Gather round, everybody — I'm going to will a sad story. Make room up front for Steven Kuske, because it was his "OOTW" in the February 1978 Pabular that inspired this tale.

Way back in the 1940's a young man dreamed up an effect in which a spectator would deal a mixed pack of cards (not really—all the red cards were together on top of the blacks) into two face-down packets, guessing the colour of each card as he did so. The "red" guesses would go into one pile, the "black" guesses into the other. These guesses were undisclosed ones, so that the spectator alone knew which packet was supposed to be "red" or "black".

With the cards finally dealt completely, the performer would ask, "Into which pile did you deal your red guesses?" Upon it being indicated, he would pick it up, turn it over, and show a red card on the bottom. (It would have had to be so, since red cards made up the lower half of each packet). "Well," the young man would say, "your first guess was correct."

He would then disclose other red cards by lifting off varying portions of the packet a few times, showing the face card each time. (Of course, he made certain he cut into the lower half). Thus proclaiming every card in this packet (held face down in the left hand) to be red, he would pick up the "black" half with his right hand and say, "But that isn't true of this half - I'm afraid one of the red cards got in with the blacks." Placing the "black" half face down on the "red" half (and making certain to keep a little-finger break between them), he would deal cards from the top face up on the table. Each card would be a black one until a quarter of the pack had been dealt - and then a red card would turn up.

"Ah, there's the mistake!" the young man would say as he tossed the red card out on the table. (Under cover of this, he would bring his hands together and "pass" all the cards above the break to the bottom). The cards would then be handed over to the spectator to finish the deal.

All this, mind you, was in the young man's mind. He hadn't actually performed it because one thing bothered him: that arbitrary sorting operation by the spectator at the start. He reasoned that anyone old enough to eat without a bib would be aware that only an exact separation of 26 cards in each packet could accomplish the effect. If the halves were visibly uneven, the deception would be obvious. So he tested it on a number of people, saying he was checking out an ESP test. Sure enough, in practice, as the spectators dealt out two piles, there were enough instances of visibly unequal piles to make such a procedure too risky to handle.

Was the young man chagrined? Not at all. Even while he tested the aforementioned procedure, it occurred to him that a self-working method was possible in which the colours (cards) guiding the guesses were changed during the deal. There were residual benefits and side effects, too. The inference was strengthened that the performer really controlled the spectator's thoughts and actions. For the spectator there was a differing and significant challenge to meet. Best of all, the young man was pleased with the "hands-off" presentation which he thought came close to the way one would do it if one really had the power. Happy about the way it turned out, this young man put the trick on the market, sold thousands of copies, and received lots of favourable comments which indicated that magicians were happy with it, as well.

And then, at the 1978 S.A.M. Convention at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York, the laurels on which he had been resting since the '40's' suddenly sprouted thorns. Responding to a tap on the shoulder, the now-no-longer-young man turned to face his long-time friend, Oscar Weigle. Choosing his words carefully to soften the blow, Oscar said, "You are in disastrous trouble. That 'Out of This World' trick you have been peddling all these years contains fatal flaws."

Notwithstanding the bracing grip friend Oscar had on his shoulder, the man swayed like the girl in the Broom Illusion when human support is removed. "You mean . . . " he stammered.

"Yes," Oscar answered somberly, "refunds may be in order." Then, mentioning that he disliked seeing grown men cry, he thrust the February 1978 Pabular into the hand of the no-longer-young man and left hurriedly.

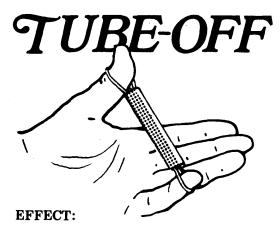

How can the pain that followed be described? As seen through Mr Kuske's critical eye and reported under the heading "OOTW", the World trick is apparently filled with clues which must be sorted out by size, the "largest" being the mid-deal switch of guide cards. This made the no-longer-young man sad, because he had always considered that dodge as the strong part and an effective throwoff on the method. Many magicians had agreed with him about that.

Something else that saddened him was Mr Kuske's observation that there were no sleights. This omission constituted a serious weakness, since it enabled the spectator to make an "accurate reconstruction" of the method. Now the man began to get a headache — he had been under the impression that the trend in magic for the past 50 years or more was to stress subtlety over sleights. Headache aside, however, the World trick starts off with one of the most convincing sleights in card magic: the false overhand shuffle that keeps the colours separate. There also was a pass involved in the original version, incidentally, but it fell by the wayside because magicians found the subsequent method to be subtle enough to make it unnecessary.

Well, after a while the sadness wore off, but the man still smarted a bit about the word "passe" that Mr Kuske had used. The older one gets, the more sensitive one becomes about words like that. Accordingly, just to sort of balance things off, he thought he would reveal this story, giving the details of the very first method so that Mr Kuske could see some of the deceptive points he missed in his own method, a method that has been suggested many times, by the way.

And now, the moment of truth — the real reason for this account. It's to take advantage of the Pabular policy of equal time/space. Surely you have such a policy! There is a booklet available containing a very direct way of separating the reds and blacks — a Martin Gardner idea. The booklet also contains 18 other tried-and-true methods of performing the trick. Its title? Out of This World — and Beyond. How to get it? By sending $4.60 (U.S. funds) to Paul Curry, Phoenicia, New York 12464, U.S.A.

The performer takes a plastic tube two inches long and through it, threads an elastic band. Into one of the loops protruding from the tube the left thumb is inserted and into the left little finger. The tube is obviously secure on the band which is stretched taut between the thumb and little finger.

A handkerchief is draped over the hand and a moment later the tube drops from beneath the handkerchief. The handkerchief is removed, and the elastic band is seen still stretched between the thumb and little finger.

This is a puzzling, uncomplicated close-up quickie with a simple plot, using simple articles.

REQUIREMENTS:

Plastic tube two inches long with a half inch diameter — rubber band — and handkerchief.

METHOD:

Thread the rubber band through the tube and insert left thumb and little finger through protruding loops (Fig.1) shows this arrangement. Cover the hand with the handkerchief and proceed as follows.

Push the index finger into the band between the thumb and tube and then withdraw the thumb. Now push the thumb into the band at the other end of the tube between the little finger and the tube. With the thumb push the tube up against the second finger and withdraw the index finger. The tube is now gripped between the index and second fingers and when it is required to drop the tube, open these two fingers and move the thumb and little fingers apart stretching the band taut. Remove the handkerchief and show the band stretched between the thumb and little finger as at the beginning, but minus the tube.

Although the description may seem complicated the action is very simple in practice.

QASIS'

Reunion Weston, a regular retold me of the Barrie Force. But this visit. work was Both will

Some months back we printed an excellent article by Bert Graham which criticised in a constructive way the treatment meted out to performers participating in close-up at conventions and the like, giving valuable hints to organisers of such events.

No such article regarding these same hardworking gentlemen is required on how to treat visiting lecturers — at least that has been my experience with one exception which shall remain nameless. Perhaps I had better mention the others — which will not take long. The Leicester Magic Circle, The British Magical Society and recently The Order of the Magi all making sure that someone was delegated to meet me and looked after the 'inner man' before being taken to the headquarters. This kind of hospitality which makes the lecturer feel at home with some of the boys prior to doing his stint ensures that he gets off to a good start having already made 'contact' with some of his audience, thus avoiding to some extent starting cold. It is part of the business of making the event more enjoyable and is especially applicable when the subject is of a close-up nature depending on a more intimate contact with the onlookers than would be the case if the lecturer's subject matter was related to the various aspects of platform and stage magic. Either way its an advantage to have a friendly rapport with the audience from the beginning even if one is an experienced lecturer -- which I am not.

Manchester — the home of the 'Magi' — has a reputation for being a city where it rains every day proved to be a disappointment when I arrived — it was fine. Met by Max Robertson this year's President and Arthur Day who recently showed me a trick which seemed familiar, it was Mark Weston's 'SPLITZ' from Vol.3 No.11 of this magazine. After an excellent meal, which consisted of more courses than Marlo has methods for doing Oil and Water, we moved on to the reque.

Among the forty or so attending, apart from my escorts, I had only previously met Bayard Grimshaw editor of the I.B.M. Budget who performs a monthly miracle by getting it out on time. Kevin Fox once published a trick in this magazine and worked it at the Ramsay Reunion — must twist his arm for another. Mark Weston, a regular contributor, Mo Howarth a regular reader and appreciative of our efforts told me of the fun he was getting from a trick in the Barrie Richardson issue — the Magnetic Force. Brian Glover was only a name to me until this visit. Proved that all I'd heard about his card work was true by showing me a couple of tricks. Both will be appearing in this magazine. It was raining when I left.

Back in London — and in the Blenheim Bar to see someone jacketless with short shirt sleeves causing a coin to appear and multiply first to two then three and finally four as he tossed them from hand to hand. Another coin effect in which the coin appeared and disappeared — no give away moves in either effect, wondering how the first was done, but Bill Spooner did give me the lowdown on how he did the second one — a hooked coin. He also kindly gave me his booklet 'Here's Hoo' with Coins which explained all. Apparently purchasers get the gimmicked coin included. If Bill, who hails from North Carolina, lets me know price and details I will review it fully.

Same place the Monday following. This evening Martino from South Africa entertaining magicians and lay persons alike with card tricks and an effect which he gave us permission to publish and will appear fairly soon. Changing a scrap of paper into a pound note. None of the magicians caught on to the fact he was using a thumb tip and some who saw it performed twice were still in the dark so get your thumb tip at the ready, preferably one which is a reasonable match to your flesh and does not stick out like a sore thumb. This is an item from the repertoire of a busy professional magician and one that has considerable impact on magicians and also on people who do not like magic - everyone likes money.

Bev Bergeron writes re the Simplified Spin Pass Aces — if you have any contact with A. Pargeter please tell him that I have been looking for this effect for years. I must have paid over one hundred dollars throughout the years trying to get a SIMPLE ace cutting effect that I could work from table to table. I'm a pro— I do not sit at a table for magicians. I have to be ready to perform as I approach a group of people sitting or standing. With the Pargeter method I can set faster than with any other method I know.

Anthony Brahams on his last visit to the U.S. tells me he managed to see some top class close-up magic — Jimmy Grippo at Las Vegas — J.C. Wagner, bar magician of San Diego doing tricks from his own book and those of Paul Harris which seems to point to a source of practical material — at the Magic Castle Martin Nash looking the part of a gambler cutting aces and centre dealing and other relevant material. He also attended the Fetchter Convention and was impressed by the high standard of the magic most of which could be considered commercial.

Lecturers booked for the I.B.M. British Ring Annual Convention included Elizabeth Warlock and Phil Goldstein — will be there and — we will be reporting anything that was of interest to close-uppers.

many — shown to me by that excellent card worker from France Dominique Duvivier. We were introduced to each other by Gaeton Bloom with cards in hand — at three paces. Those who have seen Dominique perform with cards will know what I mean when I say I had great difficulty in not putting my pack away. Our session was short and sharp, with Gaeton acting as interpreter, and my problem is to remember precisely the routine Dominique kindly gave permission to publish in Pabular.

That I was involved working on a similar routine added to the confusion due to some similarities, therefore I can only vaguely remember the effect, but I clearly recall his handling of the Hamman count used to display the cards, which he showed me in detail and will be explained during the working instructions.

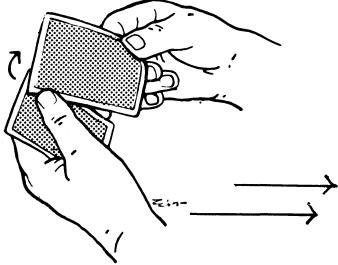

To the Duvivier effect I have added others using the same cards making a sequence of effects in which four cards change places — turn over — all look alike (twice) — change colour (three times) — lose their backs — all four finally changing to different separate cards. These effects are achieved with various counts and displays currently used with small packet card tricks, and the effect upon lay audiences is staggering as the routine proceeds to its climax when the performer reluctantly? allows the cards to be examined.

You will require six cards -3D, 6S and JS with multi-coloured backs, two blue and one red backed Joker. Arrange these as follows reading from the top -3D, 6S, JS all face up, the two blue backed Jokers face down and lastly the red backed Joker face up.

Square up the packet and hold it in the right hand between the second finger at the outer end near the right corner and the thumb at the inner end near the right corner. The index finger rests gently on the face of the top card and the third finger is in contact with the right side of the packet acting as a guide to keep the packet square. See (Fig.1). This is the grip for Duvivier's handling of the Hamman count which is used to show the packet of six cards as four face up cards all different.

Proceed by pulling off the 3D with the left thumb letting it fall onto the left palm. Do likewise with the 6S. Appear to do the same with the JS but perform the Hamman move, taking all the four cards into the left hand stealing the 3D and 6S back into the right. Drop these two (as one) on top of these in the left hand, immediately pushing the top card (6S) over towards the right with the left thumb which remains on the card. The right takes it at the right inner corner between its finger and thumb and lifts it upwards causing it to snap over the tip of the left (see Fig.2). This flip past the thumb is an unspoken emphasis that it is the last card and the spectators fail to notice that this card has been shown twice. Do not count out aloud either in the above initial display or at any time during the routine.

THE PROBLEM IS

Retake the cards in the right hand again holding them as in (Fig.1) remarking that you will cause one of them to turn face downwards. Bend the cards concave by squeezing the ends and move the right index finger back and forth across the face of the top card (6S). Relax the pressure allowing the cards to straighten and repeat what the audience will regard as a magical gesture — which it is.

The left thumb now pulls off the 6S, 3D and JS singly into the left hand using the same action as before leaving a blue backed card in the right hand. This is a Joker and beneath it, unknown to the onlookers is a Joker of the same colour and a red backed Joker face up. All three are dropped onto those in the left hand as one card.

Saying "Perhaps you missed that — watch for the next one." Hold the cards in the right hand (Fig.1) and do the 'squeeze' business. Perform the Ascanio Spread, I prefer the Hamman method which is as follows. Left thumb pulls the top face down card to the left and the left index finger pulls the bottom card (6S) to the left and the second finger pulls the next to bottom card (3D). Two face down cards are now visible — both being blue backed Jokers and beneath the second one are hidden the face up red backed Joker and the face up JS.

Square up the cards and holding them in the right hand give them a 'squeeze'. Take them into the left hand and by using the Elmsley count produce the third effect showing three face down blue backed cards and the 6S face up. Remove the 6S and place it face up on top of the packet.

Ascanio spread and a complete reversal takes place, one card face down and the 3D, JS and 6S face up. The face down card(s) is a packet of three, which is drawn out of the spread and dropped face down as one card on top of the three face up cards.

Again hold the cards as in (Fig.1) and Hamman count pulling off with the left thumb a blue backed card followed by another blue backer, then a face up Joker. In taking this latter include the three cards under it and steal back the first two with the right hand (the Hamman move). These two cards held as one blue backer are dropped onto the others in the left hand, taking a break under them with the left little finger tip. A Joker has appeared for the first time and three face up cards turn face down.

You now appear to turn the packet over, but before doing so turn the four cards below the break over using the half pass. The pass is part of the movement of openly turning the packet over and if done without hesitation passes unnoticed. At this moment all the cards are face up and in the following order from the top down — Joker, 6S, JS, 3D, Joker, Joker.

Turn the packet over and Elmsley count causing the Joker to disappear, its place being taken by a red backed card. Pull out the red backer and drop it face up on the packet showing it to be the Joker they have just seen face up in the spread.

Now turn the Joker face down and obtain a little finger break below the second card (a blue backed Joker). From the point of view of the audience you appear to take the red backed Joker and put it face outwards under your wrist watch strap. Actually, the right fingers go under the second card (the break facilitates this) and pulls it clear as the left hand turns to ensure that only the face of the blue backed Joker is seen as it is being removed.

The spectators now believe that you are holding three blue backers. Now show all three to have red backs using what is now a wellknown move for this purpose. Hold the cards face up in the right hand, again as in (Fig.1) and turn the hand to show the red backer at the bottom, then with the left thumb pull off the face card (6S) into the left hand and turn the right hand to show the red back of the bottom card. Repeat the action pulling off the JS and again showing the same red backed bottom card which seems to be the back of the last card in the right hand. the 3D. This card with a red and blue Joker beneath it are held as one card and dropped on the two in the left hand. The illusion of having shown the backs of all three cards is perfect - especially so as it forms part of a routine and the spectators are somewhat bemused by what has gone before.

Call attention to the Joker under your watch at the same time getting a little finger break under the 3D. Remove the Joker and show the back has turned from red to blue. Push it face up into the packet below the 3D and release the break. The order of the cards reading from the top of the face up packet is now -3D, Joker, Joker, Joker, JS and 3S.

Ascanio the cards again which brings the three Jokers in a block as one card immediately below the 3D. Remove this block as one card and show its? back to have changed to red. Drop the three as one face up on top of the others. All four cards have now been shown as red backers.

Turn the packet over to show a multicoloured back and proceed to show that all four? cards to have similar coloured backs by using the Hamman count as described when displaying the cards at the start of the routine.

Now turn the packet face up and by repeating the Hamman count show the packet to consist of all Jokers. — CLIMAX.

Under cover of this startling double climax there will be a relaxing of attention by the spectators and you take advantage of this fact to dispose of the two blue backed Jokers which are on top of the face up packet. Personally I palm them off and drop them into my pocket having conveyed by my manner that the trick is over - there will still be a Joker on the face of the pack to prove all is fair when their eyes return to the cards — as they eventually will. They will also feel a desire to get their hands on the cards, so you begin to tease them by suggesting that perhaps things are not quite as they thought, and that the four cards are not all Jokers, but all different. As you say this display the faces of the four cards by doing the Ascanio Spread without concealing any card — all are now different.

You now proceed to show that all four backs have changed to red. This is achieved by using the 'Caboodle' principle explained in detail in Pabular Vol.4 No.1.

Hold the packet face up in the right hand between the thumb at the inner end, fingers at the outer end, in the position required to perform the Kelly replacement i.e. with the fingers well over the outer end of the packet so that the tips can be brought into contact with the bottom card and swivel it to the right.

Left hand now takes the Joker from the face of the packet, shows its red back, and puts it face up on the bottom of the packet. Next take the 3D — do not show its back, but appear to put it face up on the bottom of the packet. In reality it goes above the red backed Joker which is swivelled aside as explained above to facilitate this. Without hesitation the right index and little fingers move from their position at the outer end of the packet to the long sides squaring up the cards as the hand turns to show the red back of the 3D?

Repeat with the JS and 6S which leaves the cards of the face up packet - 3D, JS, 6S, Joker

Hold the packet in the left hand — face up — and take the top card, the 3D, with the right hand between the thumb at the inner end and the fingers at the outer end show its multicoloured back. Left thumb pushes the JS over the side of the packet and the right picks it off beneath the card it holds — the two cards overlapping. Right hand turns over the two cards showing their multi-coloured backs, after which its index finger moves over to the long side and pushes the cards square.

The right hand now takes the next card—the 6S—again overlapping as before and after displaying it squares it up with the index finger. The red backed Joker is now 'Caboodled' going into the packet above the bottom card and the right hand turns showing a multi-coloured back, apparently that of the Joker.

The backs of all four cards have now been shown to have changed from red to multi-coloured.

Holding the cards face up in the left hand take them into the right, one at a time reversing their order and then turn them face down. Show them once more as having multi-coloured backs by doing an Elmsley count and as you complete this remark "Of course I could change the backs back to red again, one at a time (as you say this count the cards singly revealing the last card to be red backed) but you have already seen that."

Finish by giving your cards to a spectator.

Bob Hamilton sent the following for inclusion having seen it worked in a bar up north.

Standing at the bar (where else) bring out a box of 'Swan' matches and ask anyone to hand which direction the swan is swimming. When they reply "To the right" prop the box on a cigarette packet with the swan facing them and wager that you can make the swan swim in the opposite direction i.e. to the left, without touching or moving either the box or the cigarette packet.

Having accepted all the bets ask the barman for a glass of water and resist making any cracks about it being difficult to tell the difference between water and beer in this pub because you will require another in a moment. It should be a pint glass.

Stand the glass of water in front of the box and ask a spectator to look through the glass and say which way the swan is now pointing. He will again say "To the right." Appear somewhat disconcerted, take a look yourself, and reluctantly agree with him. The object of this byplay is to raise the hopes of the punters to think something is wrong and they may have won the bet.

You now ask for another glass of water and place close to and in front of the other glass so that both glasses and the matchbox are in a straight line (Fig.1). Now ask the spectator to take another look and say which way the swan is swimming. Due to the fact he is viewing the swan through two glasses of water it will appear to be swimming towards the left which makes you the winner.

If desired the business of playing up can be extended by exchanging the second glass for first one, and getting the spectator to look through this one also, before finally asking him to look through both.

For this stunt, also designed to obtain a free drink you will require a matchbox and a coin of suitable size enabling it to be 'jammed' into the cover of the box as in (Fig.2). You will also need a stooge.

Bring out, or borrow a coin of the same denomination as the one jammed in the box and not seen by the spectators. Explain that you are able to divine whether a coin is head or tails upwards when covered by a matchbox. Demonstrate to your intended victim what is required of him by setting the box, coin side downwards over the borrowed coin. Next remove the box standing it up on the table near the coin. Tell him that when you turn your back he is to either turn the coin over, or leave it as it is, and cover it with the box.

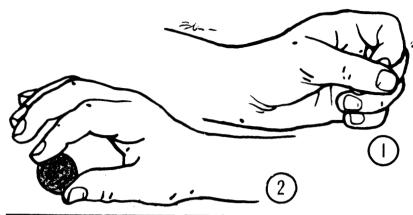

When your back is turned your stooge takes over and picks up the box as the spectator makes his decision. Suddenly, as if he has just thought of the idea, your stooge nudges the victim, picks up the coin and places the box back on the table.

When you are informed that they are ready, turn round, and acting in whatever manner suits your style announce it as heads or tails according to which side will be uppermost as you force out the coin by pressing the drawer inwards with the forefinger in the act of picking up the box.

Make sure that you call the opposite side of the coin visible when you have it set, otherwise it will be you who will be buying the drinks. This happened to Dave Robertson when he had me set up as his victim, and he's a Scotsman.

A juggling feat for a change. The idea is to toss the box up and, as it comes down, hit the striking surface with the head of a match causing it to ignite, while the box, knocked sideways by the impact, is caught in the other hand. The match is held in the right fingers with the box on the back of the same hand (Fig.3). Success is dependent upon tossing the box so that it is at the correct angle for the match to hit the striking surface on the box when it is in the air. It is much easier if you cheat a little by weighting the box with a couple of large coins or increasing the striking surface on the box by pasting further such surfaces on one of the sides of the box.

When someone gives you a cigarette and is proffering to light it for you move your closed fist into the flame. Your fist lights up and you light your cigarette from it. The dodge, shown to me by Jan Heins is to have your hand in your pocket around your lighter allowing the gas to escape from it into your fist.

With a suitably shaped lighter the same effect is possible by actually having the lighter in your fist and disposing of it by sleeving. If you have any ideas on this, or any other stunts your comments would be appreciated, also a reminder of anything with cigarettes or pipes which have been missed would be welcome.

ROLL AWAY

The performer, who is seated, drops a coin into his left hand from where it completely disappears.

You will require a coin the heavier the better — it must also be round.

Partially close your left hand into a loose fist as in (Fig.1) and rest it on the table with the opening between the thumb and forefinger uppermost. Hold the coin in the right hand between the thumb and forefinger as in (Fig.2) and drop it into the opening at top of the left fist angling it so that the edge strikes the inside of the left forefinger at the point marked with a cross in (Fig.1).

If the edge of the coin hits the finger correctly (a matter of experiment) it will impart a rolling motion to the coin, which, when it hits the table will travel towards you and fall over the edge of the table into your lap. There must be sufficient space between the tips of the fingers and the hand to allow a free passage of the coin.

A few trials will indicate how far from the edge of the table the left hand should be, five or six inches seems to be about the best distance. The passage of the coin is well covered from both sides by the forearms and from the front by both hands — the right not moving away until the coin is in the lap.

A suggested presentation is to count one as the coin is dropped into the left hand which retains it. Open hand to show coin and repeat on the count of two. Count three performing the vanish.

While the trick is practical when spectators are seated, all angles being well covered it is vulnerable when some are standing so here is an idea — which I have not tried but seems worthy of a trial.

Cut a hole about two or three inches in diameter in a piece of black cardboard about six inches square. Introduce it as a 'black hole' and rest it on the left fist and drop the coin through and vanish it as described. The cardboard will hide the rolling coin from those standing.

The sucker element can be introduced by making a flap hinged across the centre of the cardboard which you accidently? expose before resting it on the fist. Should be interesting to watch the spectators examining the cardboard and searching for the coin.

You may not believe it but I actually do remember how I signed off last time out. I was talking about New York. I had intended to carry on doing so, but at this point I would like to harp back to Los Angeles for a moment. I was pleasantly surprised to meet several people who appeared to be pleasantly surprised to meet me for the first time. They were mostly Pabular readers, all of whom said they liked the column. I don't know whether they were being nice or were good liars, but I liked them. There was one young man, however, who expressed great surprise at meeting me for the first time and said that I was nothing like he had imagined me to be. When I asked what he meant he said "Well you're a lot younger than I expected and a much nicer person." It turned out he had expected a miserable old fashioned Englishman or Scotsman, because I always seem to be complaining or 'having a go' at someone, which is English for using someone as a whipping boy. Well, it's nice to know someone else who was pleasantly surprised. Am I really a very nice guy!

The Page boy speaks....

But to New York. With SAM Convention over I was left with a few spare days to spend in New York, and I stayed with Charlie and Regina Reynolds who have a delightful old fashioned home in Greenwich Village. I was pleased to learn that nearby there was another magic show at the Village Gate Theatre called 'The Incredible World of Magic and Illusion' starring Richiardi, 'The World's Master of Illusion' plus 'a cast of internationally acclaimed magicians from the far corners of the world'. This turned out to be a first class show headlined of course by Richiardi who really must be, as the table tent said 'the world's master of illusion'. I first saw him many years ago at the London Palladium, probably around 1956. This time he seemed to be doing more or less the same act — the canary lemon and egg, the incredible levitation, the De Kolta Vanishing Lady and other smaller magic. For my money this fellow has to be one of the greatest magicians in the world, not only today but of tomorrow and yesterday. Supporting acts included Ger. Copper with manipulations, The Fantasios, a double act from Italy, basically a dove act. Another year or two and this guy really will be a force to be reckoned with. There was also a pickpocket (unfortunately I have forgotten his name) who had an unusual act consisting of one or two tricks, some pickpocketing and an amazing demonstration of musical ability with a violin string, a bow, a piece of chair and a matchbox, which got him off to an incredible hand. Last, but not least, was one Bobby Baxter. I have known Bobby a long time and have often met him in many different parts of the world, but this was the first time I had actually seen his act. He does unbelievable close-up with cards and thimbles, but this was his stage act. The first half of the act was silent, with great facial expressions which proved he was a master of the art of pantomime, or if you like mime. The second part consisted of two card items in which he proved to be an expert at handling assistants chosen from the audience. The whole act was hilarious, and Bobby, if you ever read this, I loved the act.

As on previous visits to New York I usually reserve part of my last day for a visit to Maceys, the large department store, so that I can buy all my presents in one go (laziness I suppose). This time, after spending my three dollars there, I left the store and wandered down the street only to be accosted by two young fellows actually standing on the sidewalk by an upended orange box trying to suck people in to bet on the Three Card Trick. They weren't having much luck and I just didn't have the guts to stand there like an idiot tourist. But it was interesting to see this in New York though it happens quite often in London.

Now you will not believe this but barely 200 yards down the street I saw a crowd gathering. I joined it and peeking between someone's legs I saw a young man with dark curly hair of about 16 years of age busking magic on the sidewalk. Not only busking, but doing it silently which is, to say the least, very unusual. I only saw him do a not more than adequate version of the colour changing handkerchief which seemed to register OK with the crowd, and the Chinese rings, also performed silently. This seemed to cause quite a minor sensation especially amongst those allowed to examine the rings. At the end of the routine he picked up just about the smallest tin cup I have seen and pointed it in everyone's direction. He probably picked up a few dollars in small change but, being the big time magician from over the ocean, I put a dollar bill in, hoping to get a reaction. But he didn't bat an eyelid.

So I just wandered away, happy in the thought that someone was at least making some money out of magic instead of just playing around with tricks among other magicians as I had been doing for a week at the Waldorf Astoria.

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

COIN THROUGH HAND

What follows below is in response to a request by Patrick Page in Vol.3 No.10 June 1977.

EFFECT:

A coin is placed on the back of the left which is held in a loose fist. It is pushed down with the right hand which is then removed — the coin has gone. The left fist is opened and the coin is seen resting on the palm having penetrated the hand.

METHOD:

Hold a small coin (a fivepenny bit will do) with edge of the coin on the pads of the fingers in the right hand as in (Fig.1) Form the left hand into a loose fist and bring it up to the level of the right hand which displays the coin. The position of the left fist is SIDE ON, with the little finger nearest to the spectator. You should leave a big enough cavity (which is facing you) to accept the coin later on WITHOUT MOVING THE FIST. The strength of this effect depends on there being little or no movement being seen during the 'move'.

Move the right thumb onto the face of the coin and slide it backwards until it comes into position just above the opening in the left fist (Fig.3). Then tilt the mouth of this opening up a little and ease the thumb off the coin which will fall and hit the side of the left thumb and fall through the opening into the left fist.

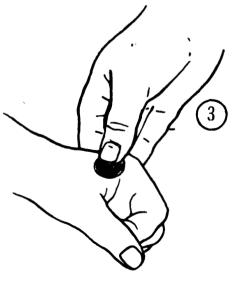

Bring the right thumb back to its original position and turn the left fist so that its fingers face the spectator and state your intention. Go through the action of pushing the coin through the back of the left hand. Remove the right hand and show that the coin is neither in that hand nor on the back of the left hand. Turn the left fist over and open the fingers to reveal the coin resting on the palm.

The above takes only a short time to execute and has its beauty in that no movement is visible to the spectator as both the coin and right thumb is hidden by the 'wall' created by the right fingers enabling the move to be made as boldly as desired.

This effect has had considerable success with laymen — try it out — I am sure you will like it.

AIR MAILED

is a name to watch. He has his own TV series in Spain and won first prize for card magic at the Paris FISM Convention in 1973. -Genii- said about that triumph: "he did all the routines while accompanying himself with a harmonica! Very funny, lighthearted and terrific musically and, of course, magically as well. Others doing card work varied good to lousy..." He's lectured in almost every country except here and we hope to be putting that right in the future.

THE TAMARIZ RABBIT

Recently he spent a week at the Magic Place and bedazzled all those present with a close-up trick that involved four empty top hats, four apples, a worm and a rabbit. It was really three tricks in one, a laugh and a surprise in each, building to a very funny, unexpected climax. We are privileged to be able to offer it to you made in a style which to the best of our knowledge has never been used by any magical organisation in the world.

A NEW HIGH IN CLOSE-UP MAGIC ASK FRED KAPS

Someone in Holland saw world master magician Fred Kaps perform the Roy Johnson version and spent money on a phone call so they could join in the fun. By the way, Fred coloured his outfit with felt pens adding an additional dimension to a prop that spells fun, fun for audiences of all ages. Here is magic with a golden touch linked with a sparkling offbeat presentation.

The following is a simple, impromptu approach to a two-way out. Basically, the performer writes down a prediction on the back of his business card. This is placed writing-side down onto the table, and left in full view. Later, the writing is displayed, and the performer's prediction is found to have been correct. Unknown to the audience, however, is the fact that the performer allowed himself predictions for two different possible outcomes.

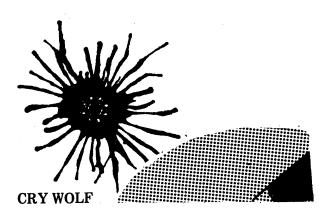

The illustrations tell the story. The actual writing on the card is as shown in figure one. Due to the slant of the writing, and the counterbalancing signature in the lower right-hand corner, the writing will look "complete" whe held as in figure two or as in figure three. Obviously, depending on the way the card is held, your thumb is covering one or the oth of your two outs.

Shortly after creating a packet transposition entitled "Escorts", I experimented with a more elaborate approach, using gaffed cards. This eventually mutated into a marketed effect, "Howl". The following routine was developed during and after "Howl". The sequence is very similar, but the methods diverge — this one being slightly more difficult. No fakes are involved.

- 1. Four cards are used: the ace of spades, the two of spades, and two identical jokers. Begin by displaying the cards. Openly place the jokers in between the ace and the deuce, the ace going at the face of the packet.
- 2. Turn the packet face down. State that you'll reverse the order of the cards, to bring the ace to the top. Siva Count the cards. Double-turnover the top two cards as one, displaying the ace. Turn the two cards down. Deal the top single card to the table, face down.
- 3. State that you'll reverse the order of the remaining three cards, to bring the deuce to the top. Count the cards, genuinely reversing their order. Double-turnover, displaying the deuce. Turn the double card down. Deal the top single card to the table, face down, next to the first tabled card. The remaining two cards are placed off to one side.
- 4. Mix the two tabled cards, challenging the spectator to keep track of which is the ace and which the deuce. No matter what the answer, show the spectator to be wrong. . .as neither card is ace or deuce rather, they're the jokers. Turn over the pair of cards off to the side, showing the ace and deuce.

- 5. Again place the jokers in between the ace and two, with the ace at the face. Turn the cards face down. Siva Count to apparently reverse their order. Double-turnover, displaying the AS. Turn the two cards down. Deal the top single card to the table.
- 6. State that you'll reverse the order of the remaining three cards, to bring the deuce to the top. Eye Count the cards. Double-turneer, displaying the deuce. Turn the double card down. The right hand removes the top card (supposedly the deuce). The left hand flips the two remaining cards face up. The left thumb pulls the face card over to the left a trifle—taking care not to expose the fact that the card behind it is not the second joker, but the deuce. Insert the face down card in the right hand between the left hand's cards.
- 7. Eye Count to show a face down card between two jokers. Flip the packet over. Snap your fingers. Spread to show the deuce has changed into the ace. The right hand retains the top card. The left hand takes the lower-most pair, cropping them onto the table.
- 8. Use the card in the right hand to flip over the initially tabled card using a Mexican Turnover to switch. The tabled card is thus shown to be the deuce.
- 9. Again, place the jokers between the ace and deuce, the ace at the face of the packet. Turn the cards face down. Genuinely count the cards, reversing their order and bringing the ace to the top. Turn up the top single card, displaying the ace. Turn the ace down, and deal it to the table.
- 10. State that you'll reverse the order of the three remaining cards, to bring the deuce to the top. In fact, count the cards as follows: hold the packet in Elmsley Grip. Push off the top two cards as one, taking them into the right hand. The left hand's card is now taken on top of the right hand stack but you steal back the lower-most card of the right hand stack into the left hand. Finally, place the single card now in the left hand onto the right hand stack.
- 11. Double-turnover the top two cards as one, displaying the deuce. Flip the cards down, and repeat the actions of step 6, above. The order of the packet from the top will be: face up joker, face down joker, face up deuce.
- 12. Eye Count the packet, displaying a face down card between two face up jokers. Turn the packet over. Snap your fingers. Spread to show that the deuce has changed not into the ace, but into a joker.
- 13. Remove the face up joker. Flip over the pair in the left hand, adding the right hand's card to the face of this pair. Eye Count, displaying three jokers.

Phil Goldstein

- 14. Pick up the tabled card showing it to still be the ace. Drop the ace face up onto the packet. Double-turnover the top two cards apparently simply turning the ace face down onto the packet.
- 15. Remove the card second from the bottom (using either a Glide, a Buckle, or a Pull-Down). Drop this card (a joker) face up on top of the packet burying the face down card.
- 16. State, "three jokers facing in one direction, the ace facing in the opposite direction." Turn the entire packet over. Elmsley Count, the last card going to the bottom, to show three backs and an ace.
- 17. Elmsley Count once again (this time placing the last card on top). You will again display an ace face up among three face down cards.
- 18. Snap your fingers. Elmsley Count. The face up card is now a joker. When you come to this face up joker, jog it forward during the count. At the conclusion of the count (the last card going on top), strip out the jogged joker, placing it face down on top of the packet. The order of the cards is now, from the top: joker, joker, deuce, face up ace.
- 19. Spirit Count, to display four jokers, apparently backs and fronts.
- 20. As an optional further display: hold the packet in your left hand, face down. Rotate the hand palm down. With the right hand, remove the face card (joker). Snap this joker, to emphasise its singular nature, and place it face down beneath the packet. Rotate the hand palm up. Apparently flip the displayed joker face down actually, Triple-turnover. Deal the top single card to the table, face down. As this is done, the left hand turns down again, to prevent the face up deuce from showing.
- 21. Remove the face card (joker). Snap it face down, placing it on the bottom of the packet. Rotate the hand plam up. Double-turnover the displayed joker. Deal the top single card to the table.
- 22. Rotate again. Remove the face joker. Snap it face down, placing it under the last card. Rotate the hand palm up. Flip the joker face down, dealing it ento the tabled pile.
- 23. Snap over to final (supposedly fourth) joker. Drop it fact flown on top of all.

Finis.

For this quick ace assembly, eight cards are used — the four aces, plus the black 8's and 9's. Start with the cards in order from the face: A, A, B, A, A, B, B, B.

Hold the cards face down. Fan out the top seven cards, holding the last two cards squared as one. Deal the top three cards to the table, face down. Flip the remaining cards face up. Ascanio Spread, displaying four aces. Square the cards, and flip them face down. Obtain a left little finger break below the top two cards.

Pick up the tabled trio of cards. Drop them face up onto the left hand packet. The right hand lifts up the five cards above the break. The three black spot cards are displayed, using a Braue Add-On, as follows: the left thumb draws the top card of the right hand stock off onto the left hand stock. The left edge of the right hand stock is used to flip this card face down onto the packet. Repeat these actions with the next card of the right hand group. You are left holding a face up black spot card in the right hand, with two face down cards squared behind it. Drop this three-card block onto the left hand packet, and flip over the top single card. The order of the face down packet is now, from the top: B, A, A, B, B, B, A, A.

Deal the top three cards onto the table, one on top of the other. Flip the remaining cards face up. An ace will show at the face. Remove this card with the right hand (which will casually show another ace behind it), using the card to gesture to the area on the table where you will deal out the (supposed) aces. Replace the right hand's card. Flip the packet face down.

Deal the cards as four into a T-Formation: the top three cards are dealt into a face down row. The last two cards, squared as one, are placed face down below this row. You can flash the face of this final (double) card.

Pick up the tabled pile of (supposed) blacks. Square the pile. Flash the face card of the pile (a black), then drop the pile face down onto the leader ace (the double card below the tabled row).

Make your mystical gesture. Pick up the five-card pile. Flip the cards face up. Use an Ascanio Spread to display four aces. Turn over the remaining row of three cards — three black spot cards.

The following is a crossbreeding of Karl Fulves' "Blank Intruder" (from "Methods With Cards", volume 2) and Howard Lyons' "Negative Miracle", second method (Ibidem 5). The effect is as follows: a pack of cards is displayed. The cards are in new deck order. In addition, two jokers and a blank-faced card are shown. The blank-faced card is put face down between the face up jokers, and this three-card sandwich is placed at the bottom of the pack, "out of the way..." A card is now chosen. Upon examination, it is found that the selected card and the blank-faced card have changed places.

Start by displaying the new-order pack. Place the deck aside, and display the three-card packet of two face up jokers, with a blank-faced card between them. After showing the three cards fairly, square up the packet, and count them in the following manner: the cards are held in the right hand, Biddle grip. The left thumb draws off the first joker into the left hand. The face down BF card is taken into the left hand, but as this happens the first joker is stolen back beneath the right hand's remaining card. The right hand's two cards, squared as one, are taken on top of all. The order is assumed by the audience to be J-B-J, but in fact it is J-J-B from the top. Get a break between the bottom card of the packet and the two jokers above it. Take the packet in the right hand, transferring the break to the right thumb.

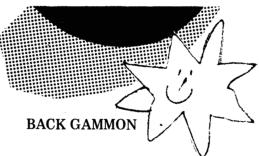

Pick up the deck with the left hand. The right hand starts to place its packet on top of the deck — unloading the face down BF card onto the pack. Change your mind, and move the two face up jokers (thought to have the selection between them) to the bottom of the deck.

(In place of the above procedure, you can use Rick Johnsson's "Empty Kosky" move to accomplish the same situation).

Riffle the pack until the spectator calls stop. The right hand lifts up the top stock of the pack at the designated point. The left fingers, however, pull the top card (the BF) onto the top of the lower half, in the action commonly used for the Slip Force. The right hand displays the bottom card of its stock — this is the selection.

The left little finger pulls down the lowermost card. As the hands come together, the right hand uses an Ovette Master Move (a/k/a Kelly Bottom Placement) to bring the selected card into the break above the pulled-down bottom card.

You're now done. Set the pack down. Make your incantation. Carefully remove the lower-most trio of cards. The face down card between the jokers is the selection. Ribbonspread the pack face up. In the location within the sequence where the selection was, now resides the blank.

This is a packet All-Backs routine, with a surprise ending. Six cards are used, a red-backed ace of hearts; a red-backed ace of diamonds; a blue-backed ace of spades; a blue-backed ace of clubs; two double-backed cards, red on one side, blue on the other. Rough the blue sides of each of the double-backers, and the backs of the blue-backed aces. At the start of the routine, the order of the packet from the face: AH, AD, AS, AC, DB blue side up. DB red side up.

Hold the packet face up with the right hand from above. Use a Hamman Flushtration Count to display four blue-backed aces. Snap your fingers. Ascanio Spread, showing a face down ace. Strip out the triple card, turning it over to show a back on both sides. Replace this turned-over three-card block on top of the packet. Square the cards.

Snap your fingers. Ascanio Spread, showing two backs. Strip out the triple card, turning it over to show backs on both sides. Replace this turned-over block on top of the packet. Square the cards.

Obtain a left little finger break above the lowermost two cards. Snap your fingers. Do an Ascanio Spread, keeping the two cards below the break squared as one. This will display three backs above a face up AD. Strip out the double card, turning it over to show backs on both sides. Replace this turned-over block beneath the packet. Square the cards.

Perform a Half-Pass on the lowermost card of the packet. Snap your fingers. Ascanio Spread, displaying four backs. Strip out the triple card. Do not turn this triple card over, but replace it on top of the packet.

Hold the packet with the right hand from above. The left hand removes the bottom card of the packet. Apparently show both sides of this card — actually using the paddle move developed by Francis Carlyle (contributed to the Phoenix under the title "Carlyle's Card") which will display the card in the left hand as being a double-backer, blue on both sides. Place the left hand's card on the table.

Remove the bottom card of the packet with the left hand, and repeat the Carlyle move to show it as a blue double-backer. Table this card on top of the first. Remove the new bottom card of the packet with the left hand, and again use the Carlyle move to show it as a blue double-backer. You are left with three cards, squared as one, in the right hand. This three card block is taken by the left hand, kept squared as one, and displayed with the Carlyle move as a blue double-backer, then placed on top of the tabled trio. Pick up the entire packet.

At this point, the audience believes the packet to consist of four cards bearing blue backs on each side. State that you will bring the faces back, one at a time. Snap your fingers. Ascanio Spread, displaying three backs and a face up AD. Strip out the triple card, replacing it on top. Square the packet.

Snap your fingers. Ascanio Spread, displaying a face up AD and AH. Leave the triple card in position. Square the cards, then deal the two face up red aces to the table, keeping them face up.

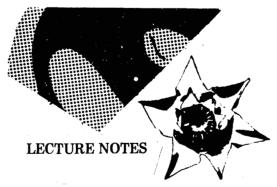

You apparently hold two cards, both blue double-backers. In fact, you hold four: the face down AC, face down AS, and two doublebackers, blue side up. Hold the packet in the left hand. Obtain a left little finger break below the top two cards of the packet. The right hand removes the two cards above this break, squared as one. Grip the double card with the thumb at the left long edge, the middle finger at the right long edge. Stretch out your left arm - you are going to do the standard sleeve change: briskly rub the double card back and forth on your sleeve. As you make your third or fourth downstroke, release the card(s) from your middle finger, allowing it to snap over - visibly changing from a back to a face (AS). Continue the downstroke, bringing the double card back on top of the left hand stock.

The right hand removes the top single card of the packet (AS), and apparently replaces it below the left hand's card(s). In fact, use the left forefinger to buckle the lowermost card of the three-card block, and insert the AS into the break above the buckled bottom card.

You can now fan the four card packet. Due to the roughing, the cards will fan out as two face up black aces. Hold this apparent two-card fan in the left hand. With the right hand, pick up the tabled red aces, holding them in a two-card fan, as well. Rotate both hands, showing that the backs of all four aces have changed to red.

The notes describe eight effects used by the author in his lecture at the I.B.M. Convention.

Three of these items first appeared in 'Notions' already reviewed in this magazine i.e. IN CASE OF ESP, POP-OFF, and MAYBE. The latter now includes an additional kicker devised by Sid Lorraine.

FLUSHING is a trick with five cards, blank on both sides, end up with normal backs and on the faces appears a royal flush. ANOTHER BIRTHDAY is an adaptation of the Birthday Card trick in which a jumbo card appears inside a birthday card which matches one freely arrived at in a normal sized pack. This effect does not appear in the U.S. edition.

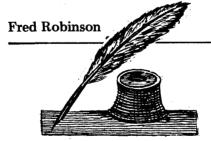

CALCULATED THEFT introduces a calculator. A thought-of card, one of four, disappears after some funny business punching various buttons on the instruments.

A large chart bearing large signs of the zodiac is handed, to a volunteer spectator. The performer divines which of the signs the spectator has in his mind. Entitled ZODIACTION.

In SIDEWINDER four blue-backed kings change their back colour to red, and when turned faces upwards are seen to be four aces.

Finally, a brief but adequate description of the Elmsley, Hamman and Jordan counts which are used to produce some of the effects.

All workable tricks and very effective as those who saw the lecture would agree.

AN OPEN LETTER

At the I.B.M. convention in Hastings on the 14th of September 1978 during the dealers show, Mr Klingsor, president of the F.I.S.M. convention to be held in Brussels 1979, in order to promote this event made the false announcement that Fred Kaps, Richard Ross, Tonny van Dommelen, Brahma et al would be appearing in a Gala show called "Parade of Grand Prix Winners", as one of the attractions of the F.I.S.M. convention.

We, the undersigned would like it to be known that Mr Klingsor never contacted any of us on this matter and that no contracts have been signed to appear on such a show.

A few moments after meeting Phil Goldstein when he arrived in London he said "I have some material for Pabular" — it is all in this issue.

Magical writers can be roughly divided into two categories - those who describe tricks most suitable for showing to other magicians and those whose work is directed towards effects which appeal to those outside the fraternity. It is not possible to put Phil's contributions as a whole into either of these classes as he caters for most tastes which include mentalists, both close-up and platform performers. His card tricks include items for those who have facility with sleights used by experts in this field and some for those who lack expertise in this regard. All his publications are completely without 'padding', full of 'meat' and described with enviable clarity. Moreover, he proved that his material is practical during his visit both in formal appearances and in free and easy sessions with the boys.

Much has been happening in the close-up world since the last issue and it is difficult to know where to start. Perhaps it would be best to start at the beginning — which was in the Magic Place.

Ken Brooke has been fooling everyone with one of Gaeton Bloom's off-beat ideas. Two playing cards are placed 'T' fashion on the table i.e. with the narrow end of one card butted up against the centre of the other thus enabling the two cards to support each other both cards being balanced on one of their long edges. The trick is to take one card away leaving the other standing up on its long edge. A sketch would have helped but I think you will understand. This is not for sale and it is no use asking how its done — have fun coming up with a solution.

Danny Ray has been speaking to Ken in glowing terms of Andrew Galloway's The Ramsay Classics. I cannot remember the exact superlatives used but was left in no doubt that this French professional regarded the information on misdirection as some of the most valuable ever to appear in print. For the close-up performer this book is an investment, not only for the information it imparts but also in the monetary sense as it is unlikely that there will ever be any further copies printed once the present stock is exhausted.

The winter season of The Magic Circle opened with 'Pabular Night' on Monday 4th of September. Thanks to all who helped to make it a success — have lost the list which included many who were conscripted on the night so will not mention names except that of Basil Horwitz. He comes — I thought — all the way from South Africa especially for this event every year, but he is really here for the I.B.M. convention which took place this year in Hastings — Sept. 13th to 17th. Basil gave me a couple of tricks for the magazine which I think I can remember, for not only do I lose lists, information somehow gets wiped off the tape in the cassette recorder.

What now follows is some very random recollections of what took place, before and during the above mentioned Convention.

Jay Marshall, who has the honour of being Pabular's first subscriber was one of the first to arrive here greeted me thusly "Did you hear about Bob Read's Chicago lecture?" There was only one reply "Who hasn't?"

Peter Duffie down from Scotland showing an eye-popping version of Alex Elmsley's "Dazzle" — was relieved to hear that he was not telling 'how' until he had a chat with Alex. This attitude is a welcome contrast from those who cannot wait before 'spilling the beans' on someone else's originations even though they have a different method which provides them with an excuse for so doing. Peter also has a version of the 'Collectors' which is direct and has a climax. This will be appearing in Pabular and is the answer to the many who inquired if I had seen it.

Winner of the close-up competition for the Zina Bennet Trophy was Rex Cooper, with Ken Hawes second and Chris Pratt third. Did not see this event but have seen the acts on previous occasions and seem to remember that both the winner and second perform standing — at least most of the time. I have a distinct impression that most close-uppers perform w'ilst seated, yet more prizes are won by those who do their bit standing. It is a point worth considering by those who aspire to win prizes. Will have more to say on this at a later date — perhaps you have something to say on the subject.

Doug Alker did not compete in the close-up this year. Instead he concentrated his efforts on stage magic to great effect by winning three prizes in the British Ring Shield competition, the Conventioneers Trophy for originality, the Tom Harris Cup for comedy, and the Theo. Speaker Cup which is the runner-ups prize to the winner of the Shield, which was won by Brian Sefton with an excellent manipulative act.

The hardest worked performer was without doubt Phil Goldstein presenting his 'Human Deck of Cards' on the pier, performing in the Peter Warlock show, and on the Gala show under his professional name Max Maven. He also lectured and appeared in the Saturday midnight close-up show giving two performances.

Also appearing in this latter event were Frans Biemans with his specialities which are effects achieved by using mechanical and electronic principles — all very puzzling to me. No doubt the explanations would be even more so.

Card tricks and Cups and Balls with the production of a glass of liquid as a climax was the offering of a very fine worker from Sweden to whom I must apologise for not getting his name.

Roger Crabtree shouted a great deal—jumped on and off a chair several times—had mice running around on the table and round the brim of his hat, performing several other tricks before climbing into a box—very funny.

Mike Gancia who arranged this event was also responsible for the close-up competition. He also performed in the Peter Warlock show and his act included an effect which is seldom seen. The performer removes his wristwatch and drops it into his handkerchief which is held by the four corners. The handkerchief is shaken—the watch has vanished and found back on the performer's wrist. A story accompanies this effect about the magician being held up—the robber wrapping his spoils in the handkerchief only to find it empty when opening it later.

This effect does not qualify as a close-up item in its original form but it did trigger off some thoughts which eventually led to an idea which may be just what you are seeking — a finish to your close-up act.

The disappearance of the watch and its return to the wrist could be achieved in the same way as in the original method evolved by the late Oswald Rae. For this two watches are required — one which the audience see you remove from the wrist, and the other a few inches further up the arm which is pulled down to the regular position replacing the one just removed as the sleeve is adjusted. A double handkerchief accounts for the vanish.

As the trick proceeds the performer tells the story of how certain dishonest people evade paying custom duties — you can make up your own story. After the vanish of the watch and its re-appearance on the wrist a ringing alarm clock is produced from beneath the handkerchief as the performer remarks "They even do it with clocks".

The clock production is a logical progression from the trick with the watch and the patter has some bearing on the routine which in itself should please friend Goodliffe.

That the production of the clock is a practical proposition there is no doubt. We have seen the production of large and heavy steel ball and a large brass nut produced from beneath a hat by Don Alan whilst seated at a table — why not an alarm clock. The handkerchief could be replaced with a hat.

Assuming that a handkerchief is being used here are a few suggestions for getting the clock from the lap into place for producing it from beneath the handkerchief.

Fasten a strong thread to the rear of the mat and tie the free end onto the handle of the clock. The thread should be sufficiently long so that it does not pull on the mat when it is on the table and the clock is resting on the lap. After showing the watch having returned to the wrist of the left hand rest the forearm on the mat to prevent it moving as the thumb of the right hand which is holding the handkerchief goes under the thread and moves upwards lifting the clock up behind the handkerchief. The handle of the clock is now gripped with the right thumb and fingers and is placed on the open left palm as the handkerchief is draped over it. Pull handkerchief away to reveal the clock.

The left forearm should be resting along the rear edge of the mat to hide this edge which will curl up immediately the thread which is sliding over the right thumb takes the weight of the clock. The right hand should be holding the handkerchief by the middle of one side prior to the steal to provide maximum cover.

A further suggestion is that instead of attaching the end of the thread to the mat it could be fastened to some part of the body. This would give greater freedom of movement and remove the problem of keeping the mat in situ.

Getting away from the thread principle, a piece of wire could be attached to the clock and the free end formed into a loop. The wire should be of the right length to reach a point just below the edge of the table when the clock is resting in the lap. In this case the right thumb goes into the loop and lifts up the clock behind the handkerchief which should be sufficiently large to provide proper cover. The ideal wire for this purpose is florists wire which is stiff enough to stand upright and being pliable can be bent out of the way behind the clock when it is produced.

Back to the thread idea for a moment. This could be long enough, when attached to the body, for the clock to rest behind the calves of the legs leaving the lap clear and available should it be required when performing previous effects. The use of the longer thread would make it impractical to bring the clock up behind the handkerchief using the method previously explained, but such a method could be used to bring it up between the knees into the lap.

All the above ideas are suggestions on how the production may be accomplished, and are intended to encourage readers to experiment with them until a proven practical solution is found as I believe the effect of producing a ringing alarm clock as a climax to a close-up act is one that would be hard to beat. My only fear is that someone has thought of it before.

Some further ideas have just occurred to me, but will leave them for later, and return to the Convention.

Had a long discussion with Tom Owen and Harry Dewhirst re their own Blackpool Magical Society and the problems connected with the close-up magic event at conventions where the number of registrants are in the region of the thousand mark. Suggestions made in this column have been discussed by their committee making arrangement for their annual convention next February. I gathered that there will again be four close-up performers doing eight performances as last year, but some of the pressure will be taken off them by the proposed two hours interval — four shows before and four after.

A few things I remember — a session swapping card moves with Philippe Fiahlo, Rovi showing me an extremely subtle way of marking a card enabling it to be found in a shuffled pack and giving me permission to publish some of his specialities in Pabular — that there were fewer fun and games in the early hours — losing a pint of milk to Manfred because I failed to count from ten to one backwards as he snapped his fingers. Wally Boyce thought he had the answer when he turned his back. It is of course one, two three, four etc. Try it on someone now if you have nothing better to do.

That's all.

Just a couple of weeks ago we had a visitor to these shores, two visitors in fact. One, Hiram Strait, and if you think that's a phony name you'd be right. Hiram is one of the managers of The Magic Castle in Hollywood and is making his first visit to the UK. I don't know what he thought of London because practically all he saw of it was Ken Brookes' studio and Davenport's Magic Shop.

One of Hiram's reasons for being here was to chaperone Dai Vernon on a trip to Berlin. Hiram had strict instructions from Irene Larsen not to let Dai out of his sight, as she knows his reputation for the ladies. Dai Vernon booked me for a show while he was here. He said that on his one hundredth birthday he is going to throw a big party for all his friends and he has hired me to MC the show. As time goes by Dai Vernon amazes me more and more. Here's a man in his middle eighties who has travelled all the way from California to Berlin to sit up into the wee small hours of the morning talking about magic to people he has never met before. He was also talking about a trip to Japan plus the F.I.S.M. Convention in Brussels next July. Come to think of it his engagement book is probably so full of things he has yet to do, he just has to plan ahead to his one hundredth birthday, and why not? He'll be there and so will I.

A short while back one of David Berglas' sons ran his second annual Collectors' Fair. For those of you who don't know what that is, it is a collection of dealers, in this instance 60 of them, who collect junk, and sell to collectors who collect junk. In fact there is usually a large proportion of stamp, coin and ephemera dealers and I loke to look and browse around among the theatrical memorabilia in the hope that I can pick up a picture or two. At the aforementioned affair I got lucky and picked up several, but one of them in particular intrigued me.

It is a postcard picture of Han Ping Chien, the oriental magician who was apparently responsible for devising the coins through table plot. First I don't think I had ever seen a photograph of him before and secondly, he is wearing a couple of medals and it's those medals I'd like to know about. Does anyone know of two medals awarded to Han Ping Chien?

The photograph was taken in Berlin prior to 1939 in a studio by a photographer called J. Standt. Do you know anything about those medals? Does anyone? Does anyone really care?

Just a few short hours before I sat down to write this Uri Geller appeared on television in Holland. Apparently there was a whole bunch of magicians present and Henk Vermeyden challenged Uri Geller on several points of his performances or demonstrations, points like why did he always have the pictures drawn before a TV programme, why was it that he always selected the spoons etc. The upshot of it all was that apparently Uri Geller struck Henk Vermeyden a blow and walked out of the studio. It seems the Dutch newspapers are full of it this morning, so far there have not been any reports over here. Isn't it about time we stopped challenging Geller about his methods and perhaps changed our tactics to questioning his ethics and morals? Every time a magician challenges Uri Geller about his methods he usually finished up exposing something that he shouldn't be exposing.

WHERE THERE'S SMOKE

Here is a stunt which Martin Breese of cassette fame uses when offered a cigarette. He refuses, and says "I only smoke my thumb." This brings a puzzled look to the faces of the onlookers so he demonstrates by putting his thumb in his mouth and puffs away. No smoke is seen so he takes out a box of matches, removes one, and holding the box as shown in sketch strikes the match and bringing it below his nose inhales the smoke given off into his nostrils. Putting his thumb again into his mouth, and making a pretense of lighting it, he takes another puff and blows the retained smoke from his mouth. The amount of smoke is small and usually there is disagreement among those watching, whether or not, any smoke appears at all. When this happens Martin repeats it. The stunt is a very old one which I have not seen performed before — it seems just the job for an icebreaker.

Here is a follow-up which someone may find sufficiently interesting to be worthy of experiment. Continue the above by saying "sometimes I smoke my matchbox" as you take a cigarette holder from your pocket and push it into a hole in the box (which has been kept hidden up to this point) forming a kind of pipe which you then smoke producing volumes of smoke.

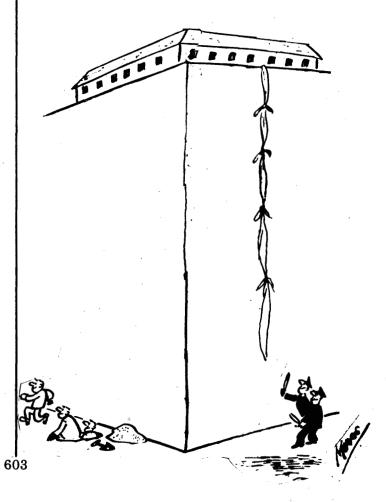

The smoke could be produced by bringing together the same chemicals as used for the smoking clay pipes — concentrated ammonia and hydrochloric acid — a few drops of each. The problem is to bring the chemicals together when required to produce the smoke and keeping the acid, which is highly corrosive, from coming into contact with anything likely to be damaged by it, especially the mouth.

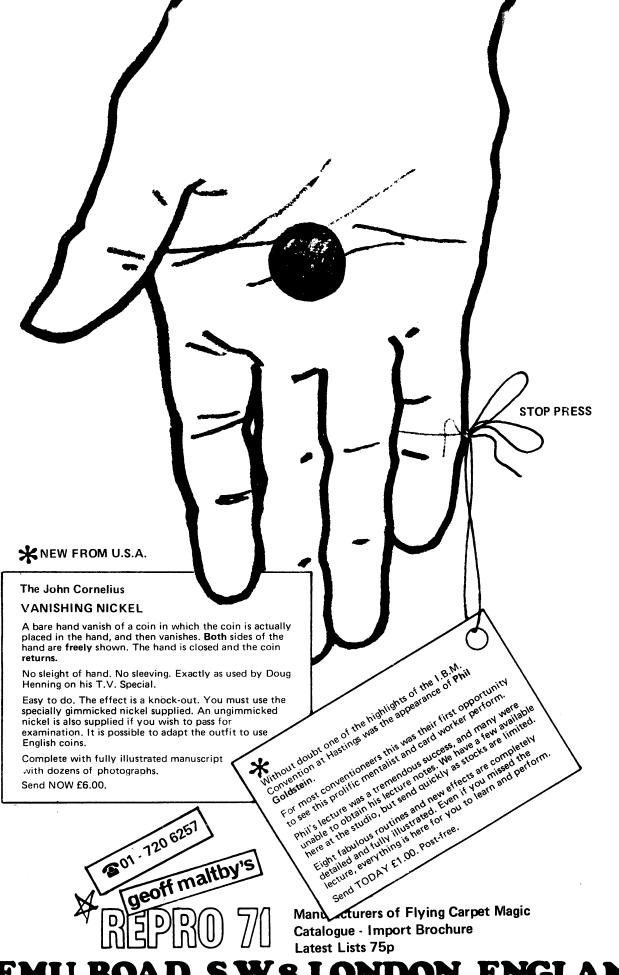

From a packet of book matches tear out one, start a split in the torn end and replace it in the packet. When you are ready to light up with someone else, strike this match and split it in half lengthwise handing one half to the other person to light his cigarette and do likewise with the half you retain.

Everyone knows the gag of blowing down the sleeve to extinguish a match held in the opposite hand which snaps the end of the match with the tip of the second finger as it is held by its middle with the thumb and index finger.

Here is a method for achieving the same objective with a paper match. It was shown to me by Karrell Fox and appears entirely without his permission. Holding the lighted match between the index finger and thumb, press the thumb nail into the match just below the halfway mark putting a thirty degree bend in it. Twirling the match between the finger and thumb will cause it to go out.

Fred Snooks, who makes apparatus to order for magicians, told of this stunt which caused some fun amongst a party of musicians. On to an oblong tray pour enough water to cover the bottom and place four matches — one at each corner. Get four volunteers to compete in a blowing match to see which could get their match to the centre of the tray first. When they are all set with their mouths close to matches shout "Go" at the same time banging the table heavily with your fist. Result — wet faces. There is a time and place for everything — including this stunt.

I usually follow 'The Problem is.........' described in Vol.4 No.10 with this effect, the impact being stronger, makes a good finish to the routine. The same cards are used on these occasions, but I will describe it as performed when used as a separate effect.

The spectator sees four face-up cards magically turn face-down, one at a time — their backs then change — each assuming the same multicoloured back. Finally all four cards are seen to have different coloured back designs and are immediately handed out for examination.

It should be performed standing up. You will require a double-backed card, one side being blue with a geometrical pattern as subdued as possible, the other brightly coloured. Also required are the ace, two, three and four of either clubs or spades (black cards are better visually than red). These four cards are chosen from different packs and should have vividly coloured backs, even brighter than the one on the double-backer. The greater the contrast, the more startling the climax.

Arrange the four cards face up in numerical sequence with the ace at the top, and place the double-backer geometrical side up between the two and the three.

With the packet of five cards squared perform the Ascanio Spread which reveals the four face cards only, the blue back of the D/B being hidden behind the two. Remove the two and the D/B as one card and place them, still held as one, on top of the ace as you remark "I am going to cause the ace to turn face downwards."

Square up the packet and Ascanio Spread to reveal the two, three and four still face up with one face down. This face down card which the audience accept to be the face down ace is the D/B with the ace hidden beneath it. Take the D/B and ace as one and place on top of the packet remarking that you will cause the two to do likewise.

Square up the cards and Ascanio, which will show the ace, three and four below the face down top card. The audience believe this to be the two which is in fact hidden below the ace. Retaining the spread held in the left hand, with the right remove the face down card (the D/B) and push it between the three and four. Saying "I will now cause the face down two to change places with the face up three" Ascanio spread showing the two now to be face up together with the ace and four. The three is hidden behind the two the audience believing it to be the face down three. Place these two cards as one, underneath the four at the bottom of the packet and square.

Ascanio to show the four has turned face down — actually it is hidden below the D/B. Place these two cards as one second from the bottom and square. Ascanio once more revealing all four cards face up, the D/B being hidden behind the two. These two cards are placed as one on the bottom of the packet.

You now remark that you are now going to ascertain how closely they have been watching by asking a few questions. "What is the colour of the backs of the cards?" you ask. Whatever the answer you show the backs of all four cards to be of the same design — not blue with a geometrical pattern as they expected, but backs of a bright colour. Actually it is the colour side of the D/B which they see four times by using the "Caboodle" move as explained in Vol.4 No.1.

This sudden change in colour of the backs of the cards is something of a stunner which enables me to bottom palm the D/B and lose it by putting it casually in my pocket. At this moment the audience are somewhat bemused, giving plenty of misdirection making the disposal of the D/B a simple matter, especially as I am at the same time holding out the cards as if for them to be examined, but without letting go of them. This is a 'tease' as the spectators will feel a desire to take a look at the cards, and someone will assuredly extend his hand to take the cards in order to take a closer look, but as his hand is about to make contact I move the cards back out of reach and say "What you have seen may have been some kind of trickery — do you recall how I started? - the cards were in Ace, two, three, four order." Spread out the cards face up and rearrange them, not in their original order, but merely in a manner which appears that you are casually showing the faces once again. This is a continuation of the teasing business — it is the backs of the cards which the spectators are really interested in seeing and by denying them this privilege for a moment or two makes the climax, which is in any case a knockout, even mose effective.

Square up the cards and hold them as shown in sketch (1) the right hand taking the top card. The right hand now takes the next two cards as one from the left hand leaving the first card taken beneath the two in the left hand. This is the wellknown Elmsley Count move, but instead of continuing the count in the usual way the right hand turns over bringing the two cards it holds backs uppermost (2) and takes the remaining two cards, one at a time, from the left hand on top of the two face down cards it is holding.

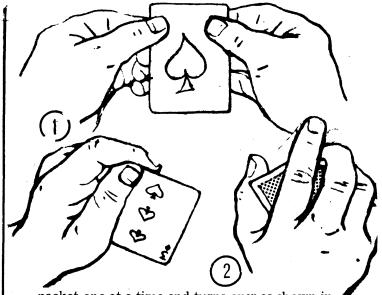

During the above action it should appear that the cards are being shown separately and not being counted to prove that you are only using four cards. As each card is taken the hands move well apart using rather broader gestures than is the common practice when the Elmsley Count is being performed.

When the right hand is turned over after taking the two cards as one, it is done when the two hands are well apart, and as the right hand is returning to take the third card. To enable this and the subsequent fourth card to be taken with the right hand it is necessary for the index finger to move to the outer end of the two cards and the tips of the second and third fingers to press on the face of the card. The right thumb is now free to move off the cards which are now held with the fingers. See sketch (3) for a worms eye view. As the right hand takes the third card the left thumb pushes it to the right feeding it into the right hand above the two face down cards, the right thumb pulling it more or less square with the two face down cards. The left hand pushes the remaining card into the right hand above the three already there and then transfer the packet to the left hand.

The passing of the cards from the left hand to the right hand should be made as casual as possible and whilst the spectators may get a flash of the back of a card as the right hand turns the two cards over and the third card is taken it is not really important and any attempt to prevent this happening is wasted effort as it will be accepted as the back of the multicoloured card which has been safely disposed of.

The four cards — two face up followed by two face down — are now Elmsley Counted using the same grip as shown in (1) and the third card will be face downwards displaying a multicoloured back different from the one previously seen. When this appears during the count it should be jogged forward, and after the fourth card is taken on top, this face down card should be stripped out and placed (still face down) on the bottom.

Still using the same grip, the right hand takes the two face up cards at the top of the packet one at a time and turns over as shown in (2). Simultaneously the left thumb spreads the two cards it holds showing them to be backs uppermost, as, without hesitation the right hand returns and slides the two cards it holds beneath the two in the left hand, and in one continuous movement (with the thumbs on the backs of the cards and the fingers below) spread the cards to display them showing each card to have a distinctly different multi-coloured back design.

In making the above spread the inner ends of the cards should be raised, sketch (4) gives the spectators view, and by moving the thumbs back and forth cause them to be kept in motion for a second or two without actually separating them. This movement is difficult to explain, but the visual effect bears some resemblance to that achieved when performing the Ascanio Spread, different parts of the backs of the cards being brought into view during the action.

This latter part of the routine in which all the backs are seen to have different designs is a complete knockout to the audience and is greatly enhanced if the performer has sufficient acting ability to convey his own disbelief at what is happening to the cards.

Conclude by reluctantly? handing the cards to a nearby spectator.

HAPPENINGS By O'Bie O'Brien

Hello, to all of my overseas friends (and, of course, any U.S.A. readers). Fred has consented to let me write a column from time to time on the close-up magic that goes on in the States and submit a few tricks from time to time. This will be similar to one of your regular columnists who wears that funny Scots kilt when he performs. You know who I mean — somebody speaks??? In this way I hope you will be able to know who has been working close-up at the conventions, at The Magic Castle and who stops in to visit my teacher, Eddic Fechter, from time to time at the Forks' Hotel in Euffalo, New York.

Well, here goes — I just got back from Lou Tannen's 16th Annual Jubilee at Brown's Hotel in the Catski'l Mountains of New York State. That is about 100 miles from New York City. The close-up was fantastic as usual — why shouldn't it be? Most of the top men doing close-up magic come to this gala event every year. One can expect to see Frank Garcia and Harry Lorayne who usually attend all of Tannen's Jubilees. Both worked close-up. Harry did four fast ace tricks to everybody's delight. Frank does a short gambling routine and his version of "Pop-out Aces" from a newly shuffled deck.

Bill Wisch did a ring and chain routine and the dollar-Chinese coin, plus a little mind reading.

Barry Levy, a young lad from New York City, did two tricks. A computor predictor effect, cute and a little different but the second effect he calls "Card Thought", was a gas. Three spectators participate; one thinks of a colour, one thinks of a suit, and the third thinks of a card. He has the first spectator who thought of the colour hold a prediction envelope which has the thought of card inside. Really fooled me and many others!

Ali Bongo, with his shopping bag of tricks, did Gypsy Thread, luggage tags from different cities, and a real miracle of a die through a sheet of glass. Also Linking Pins, Haunted Key and a Brainwave deck a la Don Alan. Always a treat to watch him.

The next gentleman in my opinion was the class of the close-up as far as entertainment. Howard Flint was super funny. His gags, lines, et cetera, made me think of Bob Read and yes, he does excellent magic, too. Garcia had to see his 3-ring routine and commented "beautiful". Flint did a version of Don Alan's bowl routine, card selected, found in wallet, smoke cocktail, and ended with a big nut under his hat.

Paul Gertner did a super job as usual, with his version of Matrix, Invisible Palm, Stick (a la Flip), and his cups and balls, with steel ballbearings.

Al Goshman — always amusing to watch his Salt & Pepper shakers, copper and silver, sponges, coins thru and Chink-a-Chink.

Bob Little, with some real comedy close-up, using beat-up cups and thumb tips as the balls. A cute bit when he brought out the old ball and vase onto the table. He asked if anybody had ever seen this before and when they answered "yes", he pulled a gun and shot him. (Makebelieve, of course). His dove levitation got lots of laughs and his finale of a selected card appearing inside a baked cookie got him a good round of applause.

Peter Kersten, our East German friend, with his miniature vanishing elephant, Domino trick, red & blue decks, Bobbi, the small walking doll, finding a card and ending with the spectacles to find other cards.

Last, but not least, Phil Goldstein, a brilliant young man with cards and mentalism, who just got in from attending the British I.B.M. convention. With hardly any sleep he was superb. Doing a few mental effects and ending with his impersonator card, the joker.

Well, that wraps up this column. Satis Superque. "O'Bie"

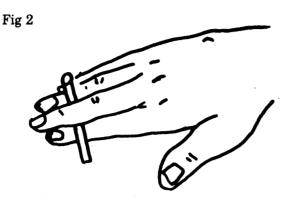

Since starting this column I am continually being surprised by readers I meet who are regularly working many of the old stunts and gags which one has read in the past and just passed over without giving them a trial. Peter Wentworth told me he often uses the stunt Martin Breese reminded me of — inhaling smoke from a match and pretending to smoke the thumb. Peter also uses another 'oldie' with a wooden match which is held between the thumb and forefinger as in Fig. 1. Cross the other arm horizontally across the chest, causing a ridge to appear in the coat sleeve near the elbow. By pressing the end of the match on this ridge and then releasing it, the match will fly several inches into the air. Not much, you may think, but it could as as a prelude to the serviette trick in which the serviette is rolled into a tube and stood on end. With suitable patter about Polish or Irish space rockets, the top of the serviette is lighted and when nearly burned to the bottom the ashes will rise upwards a la Red Ashes trick of long ago. I believe Hank Moonhouse sells this with full presentation and patter.

Instruct the spectator to hold one match as shown in Fig. 2 and tell him to break it by exerting pressure with his second finger. He must keep his arms stretched out and fingers straight. When he gives up get him to slap his hand flat onto the table and the match will break. Wally Boyce who is ever on the look-out for these bits of business to show his workmates works this by first appearing to break it as a genuine feat of strength. He prepares his own match by breaking it but not pulling the halves apart causing to present the appearance of being unprepared.

Matches of a certain brand if struck and allowed to burn as long as possible without burning the fingers, and are then blown out and held for a moment, will leave a head that will fall off. Other brands will not. Find these two contrasting brands and you have a 'betcha' trick.

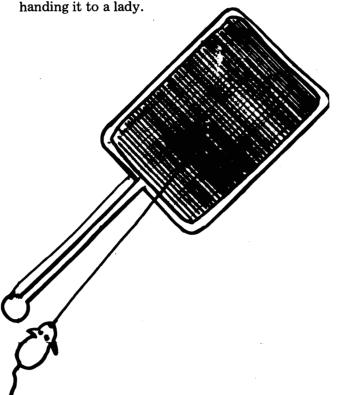

Did you know it is possible to hold a kettle of boiling water on the palm of your hand? (If you try it with a kettle from an open fire make sure no hot cinders are sticking to the bottom.

Piep-Piep - a Jan Heins gag

Piep-Piep is just one of those funny things in between. While you are shouting Piep-Piep and you are searching round the room looking everywhere you take out a flycatcher from your inner coat pocket and eventually slap it down—catching a mouse on it.

The flycatcher is faked by attaching a realistic toy mouse to a piece of elastic and attaching it as shown in the sketch, the mouse being concealed in the hand and released at the appropriate moment.

My additional suggestion would be to have a real mouse in your pocket and to switch it

Pred Robinson QASTS The state of the state

One of the events I did not attend at the I.B.M. convention was the Karrell Fox lecture. Having seen his stage performances a couple of times previously I judged there would be little to interest close-up magicians and therefore little to report in this column.

Fortunately, we met later in London and over a meal and long after, he performed trick after trick all of which contained something new that in one way or another constituted an improvement of value to the practising closeupper. The following day I was able to recall twenty-five and there must have been at least half a dozen that escaped my memory. A couple of the items I shall not easily forget were a simple method for burning and restoring the centre of a borrowed handkerchief (explained in his lecture) and the most natural appearing 'knot that is not' - I will rephrase that - a knot does not appear when the normal actions for producing one are executed. This effect has been around for at least a hundred years and has suffered various improvements before Mr Fox gave it the kiss of life. Also in the party were Phil Goldstein who now has a new address - 70.70 Franklin Ave. Apt. 101, Hollywood, Cal 90028, and Bob Read who steered us towards the venue which was the Anemos Restaurant.

Visitors to London will be warmly welcomed at this Greek restaurant, 32-34 Charlotte St, W1. Just ask for Dave behind the bar, mention you are a magician and Louie will suddenly appear who will personally make sure you have an enjoyable time. Open weekdays only from 12 noon until 3.00pm and 6.00pm until midnight. Louie assisted by Dave put on a magic show for the clientele every night except Mondays.

The most enjoyable event for me personally for a very long time was the arrival in London of the 'Professor'. For the first time I had the opportunity of really getting down to the 'nitty gritty' of card magic without the distractions which always occur when a large group is present. Under these intimate conditions it was possible to obtain some idea why Dai Vernon is the most revered personality in magic today, both as a performer and as a person.

It is not possible to comment on all the effects, sleights and moves which were performed and discussed, much which, in the opinion of many would be dismissed as 'finger flinging'. This particular term is usually used in a derogatory sense by those individuals possessing more thumbs than fingers and who are unaware of the value of these exercises in obtaining mastery over a pack of cards. This much maligned practice does on occasion produce new sleights and improvements on old ones. It was after watching a particularly inept and bungling performance that the Professor commented that the practice time required before cards could be handled properly was from five to seven years. I took this to mean the time required before one could expect to be able to perform card tricks in which sleights were used, with confidence, grace and in a casual manner without arousing the spectator's suspicions that something they were supposed not to see, was going to be done, was being done, or had been done.

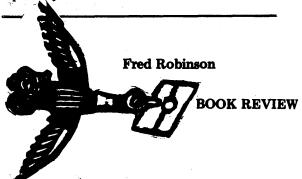

It is perfectly obvious that to prevent the spectators from suspecting 'something' is being done, every movement made by the performer must appear absolutely normal and natural. Any unnecessary or awkward movements which may arouse suspicions must be eliminated if the illusion is to be complete. It became apparent during our sessions together that a fundamental principle of Dai Vernon's approach to a move or sleight is directed to making all the necessary actions consistant with what is natural to his own personality. This critical attitude to ones magic demands considerable self discipline plus the ability to discern what mistakes are being made and then taking steps to eradicate them.

The above remarks relate only to technique - handling the cards. Learning the sleights is only the beginning and something to be forgotten when actually performing the trick in which they are being used. If you cannot perform a sleight as Le Paul so aptly put it 'as effortlessly as breathing' there will be a strong possibility that some or all of the onlookers will be conscious that some subterfuge is being used - whether or not they can relate their suspicions to the end effect is immaterial — they saw 'something', when they should have seen nothing — what should have been a magical effect has become a puzzle, which they may, or may not solve. When they see nothing, that was what became known as the Vernon Touch. Space is again running out, but must mention Hiram Strait who accompanied the Professor and presented me with a copy of his Lecture Notes No.1 which gives methods for Coins through Table, Coins Across, Okito Coin Box Routine and other coin effects and moves plus a method for the Torn and Restored Sheet of Tissue Paper. These are priced Five Dollars and airmailed to Britain for £2.50.

Thanks to Wayne Dobson for Coin Assembly which appears in this issue. It is from his lecture notes entitled Young Ideas which are available from the author whose address is 7 Ripon Drive, Blaby, Leicester, England. Price £1.25 post free and Four Dollars by airmail to the U.S. Other tricks are Coins through Table (worth the price of the notes), — Marked Cards, an ace cutting effect which ends with the backs of the pack changing colour. Coins Across — Signature Switch.

Plenty in the two sets of lecture notes — especially for the coin man.

THE BOOK OF JOHN — The Close-Up Magic of John Mendoza. The distributor of this book is Jeff Busby Enterprises and the price is Twenty Dollars plus postage.

This book, if a number of perforated sheets of paper held together by a piece of plastic really merits the title, consists of 134 large numbered pages plus nine others. The printing is of variable quality but the photographic illustrations are consistant in this respect — they are all equally bad, and the 36 effects explained are variations on familiar plots without anything new.

If the preceding observations on the physical qualities of this publication have conveyed the impression that it is just another run of the mill effort, which if purchased will end up wherever readers dump their less valuable items of magical literature — I am sorry. What really counts is the value of the material within the covers, and it is in particular respect that John Mendoza has provided a wealth of excellent practical material for close-up magicians, from which to select tricks suitable to their particular requirements.

About fifty per cent of the effects are with cards and require technical skill ranging from average to advanced — there is nothing for duffers. That they are variations of old plots is irrelevant. It is the treatment given to them by the author, a professional close-up magician, who has routined them in such a way as to make them into commercially acceptable magic which he actually uses in his own paid engagements. This is in itself a refreshing change from the hobbyist improvers whose interest does not usually extend to considering the overall effect from the point of view of the spectators.

Card effects include — cutting the aces after a face-up, face-down shuffle after which the pack rights itself. A poker demonstration deal with a running time of six minutes and very definitely for the top flight cardman only. Commencing with cutting the four aces in any order suggested which are then lost in the pack and the effect repeated in a manner which the author claims 'exceeds any challenge conditions' and this is followed with the 'Roll-over Aces' which in turn is followed by the performer proferring to stack a royal flush in spades which is placed on top of the pack to fall into his own hand in a ten hand game using a single shuffle. Instead of the promised royal flush the performer gets the four aces. Offering to try again, a number from one to ten is requested. This time he succeeds, not only in dealing himself a royal flush, but also one to the hand nominated by the spectator. Under the guise of explaining 'how it was done' the performer states he was using marked cards, not the royal flush he is holding which are all blue backers, but the rest of the pack, which, when displayed are seen to be red backed.

Other card effects to receive attention are

- Collectors - Card in Envelope - Twisting the Aces - Elevator - Torn and Restored Card etc.

For the Coin man there are two large coin productions, one seated and one standing — Coins through Table — etc.

Among the miscellaneous will be found — Cups and Balls — Chop Cup — Lump of Coal under Fez — and many others.

The last two effects are for the stage - a dove production and a Linking Ring routine.

COMPUTER TOISCOVERY

EFFECT:

A card selected by a spectator is returned to deck which is then shuffled by the performer and placed onto the table. Spectator is then requested to cut off (remove) from the tabled deck about a third or more cards which are taken by the performer. Performer then tells spectator that he will use the cards handed to him, as a computer machine, in order to locate the card he has chosen. This will be done, the performer continues by alternating the cards in his hands. First card up, second card down, next up, next down, etc until all the cards have been alternated, after which the upper group will be pulled clear of the others and discarded.

The lower group left in the performer's hands is computerised by alternating the cards as before, and discarding the upper group. The same process being repeated until just one card remains in the performers hands. This last card is shown to be the spectator's selection.

Each time the cards are alternated and the upper group removed the spectator is asked if he (she) would like to remove some of the cards that still remain in the performer's hands. The cards removed from the top of the packet being taken by the performer and used for computing, and the lower portion discarded.

SECRET:

When the selected card is returned to the deck bring it to the top of the deck and then by using whatever shuffle you prefer bring it second from the top. This is done each time the upper portion is received back from the spectator. If the spectator elects not to cut off any cards, you still shuffle them bringing the selected card second from the top. This procedure will ensure that the card remaining in your hand at the finish is the one selected by the spectator. Remember that you always discard the upper group of alternating cards and the bottom portion when the spectator cuts the packet. Have fun.

THE BEST METHOD OF CARD CONTROL NEW FORMULA 75p/$2.00 AIRMAIL RAY WATERS
61 GREENFIELD ROAD LONDON N15

1) Four duplicate coins, two of which are joined together by means of a piece of hair giving a space of approx. 1½ inches.

Set-up

The threaded coins are placed vertically on the table as fig.1. The others are placed to each side as fig.1.

Routine

Phase 1. Hold the stack of four cards in the right hand, 'Biddle' position and secretly bridge them by pressing the ends down slightly.

Pass the cards to left hand and deal off top card to right hand which places it vertically over the right hand coin (1).

The next card is placed horizontally over coin (3).

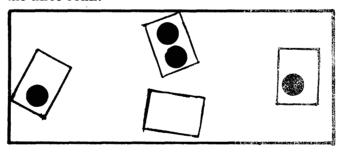

The front end of the final card is used to push coin (4) forward some six inches, which secretly pulls the threaded coin (3) simultaneously forward under cover of the card. The card is now placed over the coin(s) vertically:

The position now is as in fig.2.

Phase 2. Right hand picks up right hand card and the 'snap move' is used to show the coin has 'gone' and the left hand simultaneously raises the front card to show two coins. Snap the two cards together as a flourish and secretly transfer the hidden coin to the left hand card.

Drop the right hand card face up on the table and cover the two coins with the left hand card adding the hidden coin.

Phase 3. Left hand picks up left hand card to show coin (2) then replaces card without releasing its grip (i.e. for snap move) and at the same time right hand moves to the card covering the three coins.

Raise both cards simultaneously, with the left hand concealing the coin by the snap move. This reveals the three coins.

Phase 4. The right hand card is slid horizontally below the three coins which thus lie on the back of the card. The secret coin remains hidden BELOW the card.

Flick the left hand card to silently prove that no coin is concealed and drop it on top of the three coins.

Make a magic pass from the remaining card to the covered coins and then slide the double cards backwards with both hands so the cards are tilted forward. This allows all four coins to slide onto the table.

Finally pick up and snap last card to show last coin gone!

The threaded coin gimmick is Morty Rudnick's. The snap move is Derek Dingle's. (See Dingle's Deceptions, page forty-two).

THE SNAP TURN COUNT

The following counting procedure may be found useful for various routines. It allows the performer to apparently display four cards, one at a time, each slowly and fairly — and yet in fact display only two of the cards' faces, each being shown twice.

Assume, for example, you wish to show four cards as being four jokers. Two of the cards are indifferent, and the starting order is, from the top: face down X card; face up X card; face down jokers.

The packet is held face down in the left hand, Mechanic's Grip, Rotate the hand palm down (i.e. Glide Grip), revealing the face card to be a joker. The right hand removes this joker, allowing the second joker to be visible at the face of the left hand stock. Hold up the card in the right hand. Snap it over face down, to emphasise its singularity, and replace the card face down beneath the left hand stock, in line with the rest of the packet.

Turn the left hand palm up again, and apparently turn the joker just displayed face down. In fact, do a Triple Turnover. The top single card (supposedly the joker just turned over) is dealt onto the table, face down. As you do this, the left hand again turns palm down, concealing the indifferent card behind the card just dealt off.

Remove the face card of the packet (the second joker) with the right hand. Another joker (actually, the first) will be visible at the face of the left hand stock as this card is taken away. Snap the card face down, and replace it face down beneath the left hand stock.

Turn the left hand palm up, and do a Double Turnover. The top single card (supposedly the second joker just turned over) is dealt onto the tabled card.

Rotate the left hand palm down. Remove the face card (joker), snap it face down, replacing it below the left hand stock. Turn the left hand palm up, flip the joker face down, and deal it onto the tabled stock. You are left with one card in the left hand — another joker.

Display this last card, snap it face down, and use it to scoop up the tabled pile.

You can stop here, or if you really feel like gilding the lily, you can go into a variant of the Hamman Flushtration Count: hold the cards face down in the right hand from above (Biddle Grip). Rotate the right hand palm up, showing a joker. Rotate the right hand palm down, and draw the top card off into the left hand with the left thumb. Now rotate both hands palm up, displaying a joker at the face of each hand's stock. Rotate the hands palm down, drawing the top card of the right hand stock onto the left. Repeat this rotation-and-display sequence for the last two cards. By this time, the spectator should not only be convinced that you have only four identical jokers, he should also be rather sick of the whole thing.....

It is worth mentioning that, at the conclusion of the Spirit Count which ends my "Cry Wolf" routine, the cards are set up for the Snap-Turn Count just described.

This offering was inspired by, and is an adaption of the vanishing deck idea from the lecture notes of Ron Wilson (French edition).

I have taken what was just a quickie and turned it into a what has proved to be a very commercial routine. Over the past weeks I have worked it in pubs, restaurants and at magical societies and the result has always been the same — stunned silence — followed by 'Where the so-and-so did the cards go!' It has now become a regular item in my repertoire.

The advance preparation consists in cutting a bridge pack card case in halves across its width. Throw away the half with the flap and into the other half put the pack with the Joker reversed on the bottom. Remove the bottom from a poker sized pack and push the pack and half case inside it. Although a close-up mat is not essential it will help with the explanation if it is assumed that one is being used, and that the pack is resting on it near the right inner corner before commencing the trick.

Begin by saying "My final effect is an experiment with E.S.P. using this pack of cards." During these remarks, plus any others you care to add, remove the cards from the case. Care must be taken not to flash the bottom of the cardcase, the reversed joker or allow the half case to fall out. It can be done quite easily—unless you have the half case at the wrong end. Removing a pack from its case is, to any self-respecting cardman a simple matter, and whilst taking the above precautions the removal of the cards from the case should be done as you are chatting to the spectators with scarcely a glance at the pack.

When removing the cards from the case they should be taken out with the left hand leaving the case in the right because after the removal of the cards it is replaced back on the mat in the position it originally occupied. If the cards were to be removed with the right hand the replacement of its case with the left in the desired position would be an awkward movement detrimental to a smooth performance — one of the little things which are so important.

The joker is now required. Personally I produce it using the Paul Harris 'Open Revelation' hence the reason for having it reversed on the bottom of the pack. Another excellent way would be the Piet Forton 'Pop Out' move. If you are not conversant with either of these simply cut the pack and ribbon spread across the table to reveal the joker. Whichever method is used it is finally placed FACE UP on the left side of the mat.

Next have a card selected by someone who is within arms length of the face up joker — this will be a spectator on your left. He is asked to remember it and show it around. Have it returned to the pack and control it to the bottom. A neat way to get the selection to the required position and at the same time enable the maximum number of the audience to see it, is to hold the pack squared and have it pushed halfway into the pack. With the chosen card protruding from the pack hold it face towards the spectators moving it around giving everyone an opportunity to see which card has been chosen at the same time keeping your head turned making it clear that you are not taking a sneaky peek. Lower the pack to a face down position, face front, and bring the card to the bottom using the 'Multiple Shift' action.

Saying "The test will be done under strict scientific conditions, so I will put the pack inside the case out of sight of the joker who is going to show his powers in the field of E.S.P." As the above statement is being made the pack is positioned in left hand to perform the Curry "Turnover Change" and the right hand has picked up the card case.

"For a start" you say "the joker should not be looking." Under cover of this remark which should be made suddenly as if you have just realised this card should be face down you turn it over exchanging it for the chosen card using the Curry sleight. The pack is put into the case out of sight 'to stop any of the cards giving the game away' — that's your story. Naturally it goes back into the half case which is still within the larger poker sized case.

Hold the pack in the right hand — retaining its contents by pressure with the thumb and fingers on the front and back of the case, and call attention to the face down card on the table saying "The joker will now demonstrate his powers." Push the card towards the person who chose the card and request him to place his fingers on it. This action will cause you to lean forward slightly making it perfectly natural for the right hand holding the case to move back towards the edge of the table. Immediately the bottom of the case is over the edge of the table the pressure is released and the pack inside the half case falls unsuspected into the lap.

The misdirection provided by pushing the joker towards the spectator plus your request to him and his responses ensures that no-one is at all interested in the case or its contents at this particular moment.

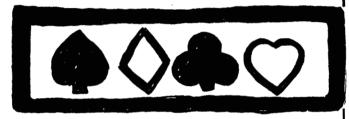

You patter to the effect that the joker begins to exercise his E.S.P. powers now that the pack is safely out of sight in the case, which, if there are no spectators behind is placed on the table with the bottomless end pointing away from the audience. If you are surrounded retain it in the right hand keeping the open bottom masked by the fingers, but this is less effective than if the pack? is put onto the table because there is some restriction on your movements as you build up towards the climax, and also the impact of the pack vanishing is greater if it has been out of your hands for several moments previously. Covering the pack? with a handkerchief overcomes the problem, the excuse for this being that you are making sure that the joker cannot see anything.

Continue to patter about the extraordinary E.S.P. powers of the joker and ask the spectator with his fingers on it, if he is getting any 'vibes'. From now on play it your way. There is plenty of scope for extracting fun out of the situation such as getting the spectator to stroke its back gently with the tip of his forefinger, placing his ear right down on to the card asking "Can you hear anything?" etc. Finally ask him to name the card he chose and then turn it over. When the spectator sees the card he has chosen his expression is really worth seeing.

When the spectators have fully realised what has happened, remove the handkerchief—if you have used one—and say "That's all I have, NO, not all the tricks—all the cards I have." With that remark smash your hand really hard down onto the case—flattening it. Pick it up and rip it open to show the complete disappearance of the pack.

Believe me — this routine is really commercial, hard hitting magic — give it a trial and listen to dead silence as the climax is reached.

Note: The Paul Curry 'Turnover Change' was first explained in Hugard's 'More Card Manipulations, Part Two' and subsequently in other publications including Harry Lorayne's 'Close-up Card Magic'.

ACE-STOUNDING

ACE-STOUNDING was originally published in the Derek Dingle issue of the Genii magazine. The effect is that the four aces are placed in four random positions in the pack, which is then shuffled in a variety of ways, including several face-up/face-down shuffles. The pack is shown to be in a face-up and face-down condition at the conclusion of these various shuffles. The magician then cuts the pack four times, each cut revealing a face-up ace after which the pack is immediately ribbon spread across the table revealing that all the remaining cards are face down.

The original method required a rather complicated set-up and handling, while the one outlined below requires no pre-arrangement of the cards and is easier to do. At the same time I believe the effect to be as strong as the original version.

Commence by removing the aces and ribbon spreading the remainder of the pack face-up across the table. The aces are then inserted for about half their length at four random positions, towards the centre of the spread. Square up the pack keeping the four aces out-jogged half way out of the end of the pack.

Now perform the D'Amico 'Multiple Shift' as explained by Marlo in his book of the same title. Here's how. Hold the pack face up on the palm of the left hand with its index finger in contact with the protruding ends of the outjogged aces. This finger acts as a stop when the pack is tilted causing the cards above the uppermost ace to slide down covering it. The left thumb and fingers now grip the aces and the cards above the topmost ace by the sides near the outer end, and the right thumb and fingers likewise grip the inner end of the lower portion which has remained stationary. The left thumb and fingers retain the cards they are holding as the right hand strips out the bottom portion and drops them on top of the left hand packet. This casual move which appears to the onlookers as a simple cut brings the four aces to the bottom of the face up pack.

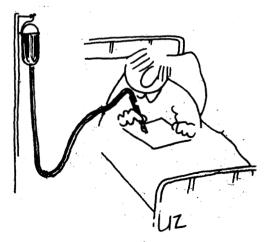

At this stage a number of Hindu, overhand and riffle shuffles can be done, provided the four aces remain in position.

Now the pack is shuffled in the following manner. With the pack face downwards on the table, undercut the bottom half to the right and turn them face up, spread to their face up condition. Show the other half to be face down in a similar manner. Square up both halves and Zarrow under the top four cards of the face down half, and when squaring up retain a break between the two halves.

Undercut the lower half to the right and turn them over. Faro the two halves together. The Faro need not be a perfect one — all that is necessary is to ensure that the top four cards of each half alternate.

Show that some of the cards are face up and some face down by spreading the top eight or ten cards, and as you close the spread get a break below the fourth face down card from the top. Cut at the break and complete the cut, and turn the pack over.

That's about it. Produce the four aces using slip cuts and ribbon spread showing that the rest of the cards are all face down.

And a happy and prosperous New Year. So nineteenseventy eight has come and gone. We are all another year older, and with luck, a little bit wiser. John Osborne, I think, coined a phrase, Look Back In Anger. How do YOU look back on nineteenseventy eight? For me, it was a good year in many respects. I had two trips abroad, first to the South of France, the land of topless bathing suits, film festivals, and idiot magicians, and secondly, the United States, Los Angeles and New York, to be precise, the land of opportunity (or is it opportunists) and still more idiot magicians.

The parts I liked best was meeting the idiot magicians and I include myself in this category. What other group of entertainers (?) are so hospitable, friendly, backstabbing as us lot? Why am I talking like this? Is there a reason? You bet there is. It seems that every time I see a magician perform these days he is doing something that really belongs to someone else. The magical societies are no help. Not only do they condone it, but by booking these thieves they actually encourage it. Now, before you start getting as hotted-up as I am at the moment, let me explain. I am not talking particularly about some guys original effect, a rare event in any case, but more of the cute ideas or routines. Take the Linking Rings for instance. No-one can take exception to anyone performing the Linking Rings? No? That's what you think. I remember a few years ago a fellow professional telling me that he had done a job the night before and as he had to do a longer show than normal, he added the Rings to his act, and the point of his conversation was that he was telling me how well that OLD GAG where the spectator did so and so had gone. OLD GAG???? Yes, it IS an old gag. I've been doing it for around twenty years, AND IT'S MINE......ALL MINE. Now although my act, or rather the effects in it are all pretty standard, it is all the little bits and pieces that go with it that make it work for me, and here is someone telling me how well he has been doing with my material. So my New Year message to you and you and you is GO STAB SOMEONE ELSE IN THE BACK.

To return to sanity. I attended a wedding over the Xmas period which had one of those Disco units playing non-stop all evening with no breaks, and after an hour or more of it I told my wife I was going home, which fortunately was only round the corner. Leaving my son and daughter to look after their dear old Mum, I vanished. Switching on the TV set (I am now at home) I started to doze off until I heard loud music, and upon opening my eyes it was to discover that the Doug Henning Magic Show was about to start. For the benefit of the US. magicians this is last year's show. I sat and watched it enthralled. It was great, it was marvellous. I loved it. And it put me in such a good mood I went back to the wedding and enjoyed myself all over again. It was one of those little pleasant surprises. I didn't know it was on TV and suddenly BANG there it was, and Henning does one helluva job for magic on TV.

The only other TV magic I have seen lately on my magic box were the three magic specials produced by John Fisher. Sorry, I only saw two of them, the Fred Kaps Special and the Ricky Jay Magic Show. A friend of mine has video taped the Randi show but as yet I haven't had a chance to see it. My non-magical friends tell me that they liked the Kaps show best of all, but out of the three shows, the one they remember best is Ricky Jay. For me it was a toss up between the individual performances of Kaps and Jay. Kaps' did the Chinese sticks better than I have ever seen it done. But all of the performers in both shows I saw were good.

I love everybody, Goodbye,

The Book of John

It is a very rare event when a working professional close-up magician reveals one of his cherished routines and it is almost unheard of for such a person to reveal all of the routines he uses to make a living. In THE BOOK OF JOHN, John Mendoza has done just that. As a successful working professional, Mr. Mendoza can and does perform close-up magic for a living.

THE BOOK OF JOHN is not a pretty book for the collector, but rather a book for those who are interested in commercial close-up magic with maximum audience appeal — magic which will send the layman away baffled and entertained...and will also fool all hell out of the magicians having a chance to watch it.

The routines explained in this book are not for the beginner. They do require sleight of hand ability ranging from basic to the very difficult, but they certainly are worth mastering.

The card magic section contains such gems as: Topsy-Turvy Aces, a truly Impossible Poker Demonstration, Uneral-Geniversal Card, Routined Poker Mental, Simple Collectors, Vise-Versa (a very effective card transposition), a handling of Derek Dingle's Open Sesame, Twisting the Aces Again, a culling system, two effects with the D'Amico Spread, All Gone, an entertaining Monte routine with a surprise climax, an elevator effect, a handling for the Jennings version of the Le Paul Card In Wallet, a section containing the complete text of the Automatic Deck, and a very effective version of the Ralph Hull Torn and Restored Card which was formerly sold privately for $5.00.

The coin section contains some exciting routines, each with a surprise climax. The first routine starts as a copper and silver sequence with a change to four silver dollars. Then into a pretty hand-to-hand transposition, after which more coins are produced to segue into a Coins Through the Table which climaxes with the production of a drill bit over a foot long and weighing about eight pounds! The second superb routine features a rapid production of silver dollars which grow larger and larger as the routine progresses, culminating in the production of a silver dollar about a foot in diameter. Two versions of Spellbound are detailed: One performed sitting and the other standing. The seated version features the change of a coin with the stroke of one finger while the stand-up version includes the production of a giant coin which can be performed surrounded. A version of Matrix with critical patter and handling details is explained. Another coin assembly with ungaffed coins, each a different denomination, is included. There are professional handlings of marketed effects such as the Copper/Silver/Brass Transposition, Intertude, Coin Casket, and much more.

But this is not all...Detailed are routines for the Don Alan Lump of Coal, the Chop Cup, a great bowl routine, a really funny ending for a bills and wallet routine with the Cups and Balls which takes only seconds to do and the loads are indetectable.

As a bonus section there is a very effective no-gimmick flash dove production routine and to top it all off, the Three Ring Routine which is guaranteed to produce at least three resounding ovations from the audience during its performance.

Physically, the book is 8½ by 11 inch size with 134 plus typeset pages (only the pages with text for effects are numbered), and spiral bound so that you can study the routines. The book is illustrated with photographs and line drawings, but, to put it quite bluntly, the printing and production are not of the highest quality, though the material certainly is.

If you are already performing close up magic, you'll want this book. If you are thinking about performing practical close up magic, you need this book. Don't pass it by — to have material laid out for you in this fashion by a working pro is invaluable. Learn from John Mendoza's experience.

The price for THE BOOK OF JOHN is $20.00 plus postage — a cheap price for professional experience. I advise you to take advantage of this. Distributed by Jeff Busby Enterprises and in stock for immediate delivery. Inquiries invited from reputable magic dealers.

CONSTRUCTING A ROUTINE

Many thousands of years ago, way back in the dawn of antiquity, some Neanderthal exhibitionist, discovered a new way to get attention. He found that if he took his favourite trick — the one of making a pebble appear underneath an earthenware drinking vessel — and increased the number of drinking vessels and added a few extra pebbles, all sorts of appearances, vanishes and penetrations were possible. He found that the entertainment value of the trick increased a thousandfold. Thus routining was born.

Ever since that time, magicians throughout the ages have all realised the value of blending their effects into routines. Think how many of the so-called classic tricks are really routines; the Linking Rings is a routine... the Cards to Pocket is a routine... the Coins Through Table is a routine... the Cut and Restored Rope, the Ambitious Card etc... etc. All are routines.

So, what is a routine? As far as this article is concerned, a routine is:Any presentation, wherein more than one separate trick, is combined for cumulative effect.

That is a nice mouthful, as far as it goes, but what do we understand by cumulative effect? To answer this question, try to picture two magicians working. The first one picks up a piece of rope, cuts it, restores it then puts it down. He then picks up a pack of cards, has one chosen, discovers it then puts the pack away. Perhaps he does both tricks very well and gets the applause that each one merits. The audience enjoy both tricks, but there is no cumulative effect. They have simply seen a man who can do a trick with a piece of rope and another trick with a pack of cards. Imagine the second performer. He wants a piece of rope, so he reaches up and produces one out of thin air. Taking a pair of scissors he cuts the tope and it joins together again. He repeats this, challenging the audience to try to catch him out. Then he lets a spectator cut the rope, again it is restored. With each repetition the mystery deepens. Finally the rope is tossed out for examination, but vanishes as it leaves the performers hands.

The second performer is technically no better than the first, but by careful routining, he has created the impression that he can make that piece of rope do just what he wants it to. This is the cumulative effect.

When constructing a routine, sight should never be lost of the cumulative effect. This is what all routining is about.

There are five basic principles commonly used in most routine constructions. Each will be treated separately, but in practice, many routines combine two or more of these principles. As always in magic, nothing is hard and fast. The first could be called:-

SAME EFFECT.... DIFFERENT METHOD

This is the type of routine, where the performer apparently repeats the same trick two or three times. The audience become increasingly bewildered with each repetition, because they are unable to catch the performer out. This is because they are led to suppose that he is repeating the same trick and using the same method every time. In fact, although the effect remains the same, the methods used vary. As there is no single method used throughout obviously, it is impossible to detect one.

The cumulative effect created by this type of routining, is that the performer is so skillful that it is impossible to catch him out.

The construction of a routine of this nature, is a fairly logical business. Firstly decide upon the effect to be performed, then research out as many different methods possible of achieving it. Bear in mind that the two important criteria are:-

- Similarity of effect
- Diversity of method(s).

Having researched all the methods available, decide which two or three are the most suitable for your purposes. The first time the trick is done, the audience do not know what the effect will be, so the boldest and most direct method is the best. For the final showing, when the audience are most on their guard and watching like hawks, the most subtle and devious is the one to use. For the showing in between (or showings if there are to be that number of repeats) pick methods as unlike as possible to the first and last.

The pitfalls to guard against, in constructing a routine of this nature are:-

- Do not let the routine get too long. Remember that as far as the audience are concerned the same trick is merely being repeated over and over. At first they will be curious and interested, but frustrated curiosity can quickly turn to boredom.
- Not having a definate finish. Always try to work in a punch climax. The sudden appearance of something totally unexpected, or the disappearance of the article(s) being used etc. This tells everyone that the trick is over.
- Make sure that the audience are aware that the trick is going to end shortly and that you will not drag it out interminably. With some tricks, such as coins through table or cards to pocket, they can see that the end is coming. On the other hand, with the linking rings or a two in the hand and one in the pocket type routine, there is no such indication and too many repeats can quickly cause restlessness to set in.

The second major principle of routining could be called:-

DIFFERENT EFFECTS..... SAME PROPS

Into this type of routine, fit such old favourites as the Cups and Balls, Chop Cup, Sponge Balls, Koran's Hanky Panky etc. It is the type of routine, where the performer takes a few simple props and with them produces a variety of differing effects in rapid succession.

The cumulative effect, which comes from this type of routine, is that given a few simple items, the magician can do whatever takes his fancy. This type of performance always has a sort of impromptu air about it, almost as if the performer is making the trick up as he goes along. This is its main attraction and should be exploited to the full.

To construct a routine like this is a fairly straightforward business. First it is necessary to decide upon the apparatus to be used. Secondly, work out as many effects as possible, for which the props can be adapted. Having worked out as many variations as you can, whittle them down to just two or three, by eliminating any similar or repetitious effects. Remember that in this type of routine, as opposed to the previous kind, variety of effect is the cornerstone. It is also desirable to vary the methods as much as possible, but the occasional repetition of a move or principle is permissable if the effect is different each time. (Thus the magnetic principle of the Chop Cup can be used throughout the routine to obtain differing effects).

The routine should be put together rather like a stage act. The opening trick must be a strong one, which captures the interest of the audience.

The final effect should be the most spectacular and memorable. The inbetween tricks should contrast with these two and with each other, and the pace should be varied.

The danger inherent in constructing this type of routine is:-

— The temptation to include too many tricks. This must be rigorously guarded against. A too long routine is deadly both to the audience and the performer. Resolve to include only the very best effects.

Another principle of routining is:-

SECRET PREPARATION..... IMPOSSIBLE FINALE

This type of routine is more often used in front of magical audiences than with the general public. Although there are one or two exceptions to this rule — Carlysle's Watch Steal from Stars of Magic being one.

The basic concept is that while openly performing one or two tricks, the performer is secretly preparing for a blockbuster finale. The tricks being performed act as a cover and provide the necessary misdirection to conceal the secret preparations.

The cumulative effect of this type of routine manifests itself when the final climax is reached and the audience are presented with an unaccountable mystery.

The construction of routines of this nature is usually a fairly elaborate business. The performer must first decide upon the climax to the routine. He must then devise ways and means by which that climax can be prepared for either before or during the performance. While doing this he must either discover or else invent suitable lead-up tricks, which will enable those secret preparations to be made/concealed. All the time it must be born in mind that if the audience has the least suspicion that any advanced preparation is taking place, then the whole routine is rendered nul and void.

However, having said all of the above, it must be acknowledged that some very fine and astounding magic has been produced from this type of routining.

The dangers are numerous; here are just a few:-

Including inferior effects for purely technical reasons.

Revealing the climax too soon after the preparations have been made. Delay is important. There should be at least one quick trick between the completion of the secret manoeuvers and the denoument.

Making the routine too long is always a problem. If working with a prearranged pack, (which also comes under this type of routining), it is very tempting to do as many tricks as possible which do not disturb the arrangement. One or two would be ample.

Next we come to the combination type routine, which might be termed:-

SEVERAL TRICKS..... ALL DONE AT ONCE

This is possibly the commonest type of routine, in fact it is so common that very few people even think of it as routining at all. In its most basic form, it is the type of effect where the performer shows two boxes empty, he then places an object in one. It vanishes from there and appears (a duplicate) in the other. In other words a vanish and a production are combined to produce a transposition. Mentalists also frequently routine in this way. An example is the type of thing where several people each select different items, by a series of forces. The performer then devines their choices, or else reveals that he had predicted them. Similarly the close-up cardician may have several cards chosen and returned to the pack, he then discovers them in rapid succession.

In this type of routine, the performer is striving for a cumulative effect brought about by a series of climaxes following one on top of the other. Well done it can be very impressive.

To construct a routine of this nature, it should be born in mind that all the items used must have a common denominator of some kind. It is the relationship of the tricks, to each other that helps create the cumulative effect. There must therefore, be a logical reason for performing the various tricks together.

There are also several pitfalls to be wary of:
Too many tricks will merely confuse the audience. In this type of routine it is essential that the audience follow fully everything that is happening, otherwise the impact of the final climax will be lost. They must not be confused by the inclusion of too many different items.

If all the endings come at the same time...so do the beginnings. When performing a routine of this nature, every trick has to be started and the necessary preliminaries run through before anything magical happens. And at this stage everything has to be stressed and double stressed so that the audience do not miss the point. All this can lead up to a long time, with very little of interest happening.

And so comes the final major principle:-

ROUTINING BY PRESENTATION

1) Patter linked routining. Where the magician tells a story and uses magic to illustrate the various phases.

- 2) Inserting link tricks. Say a magician wishes to perform a trick using a billiard ball and to follow this up with a cigarette trick. He can routine the two by inserting a trick wherein a billiard ball changes into a cigarette.
- 3) Overlapping apparatus. The performer does a trick with say a rope. He then picks up a large ring and does a trick involving the rope and the ring. He then puts down the rope and does a trick with the ring etc.
- 4) Having a theme. For instance the cardician may begin by making two cards change place. He then follows this up by making say four aces change place with four kings, after which all the red cards change places with the blacks and so on.

In none of the above is there any technical reason for routining. It is done simply to enhance the presentation. Not much of this type of routining is carried out in close-up work, although Bobby Bernard's "School for Croupiers" in Close-Up Vol.2 by Lewis Ganson is an example, as is Kevin Fox's prize winning act where he describes the various jobs that he has done.

In close-up this type of routining is usually more suitable for competitions and magician's shows than for commercial work, although some performers are no doubt successful in that sphere.

The drawbacks are:-

Flowing too smoothly from one trick to the next and not allowing for audience reaction. An audience that feels ignored soon loses interest.

Putting in extra tricks purely for the sake of continuity thereby making the routine too long.

These, then, are the major principles underlying most routining. There are others, but they are more limited in their applications. Usually being confined to specific types of apparatus or effect. This article set out to discuss the broad spectrum of routining in general terms.

Having discussed the basic principles, here are some points on the subject in general:-

Cumulative Effect has already been mentioned several times as being the basic reason for constructing routines in the first place. A well constructed routine is calculated to create a specific cumulative effect. This effect must be in the mind of the creator from the first conception of the routine. It must be the master plan, to which the routine is fitted.

The Length of the Routine is another point that has been stressed repeatedly. Obviously there is no standard length for a routine. The question how long a routine should be is rather like saying how long is a piece of string! The routine should be just long enough to create the desired cumulative effect and no longer. An overlong routine is a bad routine.

The Finish of the Routine should come at any point where you feel that the audience have seen enough. If the tricks selected have been carefully chosen, then the performance can be terminated after the completion of any one. Only the performer knows that he is working a routine. Only the performer knows that there is more or better to follow. Never commit yourself to reaching the climax of the routine come hell or high water. It is better to pause after each phase and ascertain if the audience want you to carry on. If they do not, then you have finished on a good trick and there matters can rest.

In A Good Routine the whole is greater than the sum of the parts. In a bad routine the opposite is the case.

CONCLUSION

This has been a somewhat lengthy article, which attempted to tackle a subject not often given much space in magical writing. There is a lot more that could be said. One day somebody may get around to writing a book on the subject, thereby giving it the in-depth analysis that it really warrants.

STRANGER THAN FICTION

This is my handling of an effect described in Expert Card Technique. It is a torn and restored card using a borrowed pack. The chief attraction is the extremely simple and subtle way, in which a stranger card is switched in, used and later disposed of.

It is always a good idea to carry a few old cards around with you to use in this and other effects. Then, when presented with a pack and asked to show something, you can perform seeming miracles. This trick is a miracle if done with a borrowed pack. Done with your own pack it is utterly pointless.

When you sense that you may be asked to do a trick, palm one of your old cards, face outwards in the right hand, glimpse its value and then wait for the inevitable request.

Take the offered pack in the left hand, face up. Pretend that you have been caught on the hop and are at something of a loss as to what trick to show. Whilst thinking about it, take the pack in the right hand, adding the stranger card face down on the face up pack and simultaneously going into an absent minded overhand shuffle. Take care not to flash the back of the stranger card, watch the angles carefully. The shuffle consists of drawing off one card from the top of the pack, dropping the pack on this card, then going into a normal shuffle, except for the last few cards, which are dropped on the bottom. This places the stranger card face up, second from bottom. It takes but a few seconds and must be done without looking at the hands.

Ask if there are any jokers in the pack. Without waiting for an answer, spread the cards face upwards between your hands, taking care not to expose the stranger. As you remove the jokers, locate the duplicate of the stranger and downjog it slightly.

Square up the pack, face down in the left hand at the same time obtaining a little finger break below the jogged card. Pause for a moment then say "I know what I can show you!" You now force the duplicate of the stranger card onto a spectator. The break will enable the card to be controlled to wherever you need it, but you must retain the two bottom cards in place.

When the card has been forced, square up the pack and begin an overhand shuffle, getting rid of the bottom card. The reversed stranger card is now on the bottom of the right hand's packet during the shuffle. Invite the person, who took the card to say 'stop' during the shuffle. When he does so, have him replace his card face down on the left hand packet. Drop all the cards in the right hand on top. This places the reversed stranger immediately above its face down duplicate.

Place the pack face down on the table. Snap your fingers then spread the cards across the table, showing that the selected card has apparently reversed itself in the pack. To the audience this appears to be the conclusion of the trick, so they will not be paying particular attention to the next move.

Pick up all the cards above the face up card in the spread. Square them and place them face up in a neat pile towards your left side. Now pick up all of the remaining cards, with the face up stranger card on top and square them in the left hand, at the same time getting a little finger break below the second card from the top. Lift off the face up card, together with the face down duplicate below it as one card and place these on the face up pile on the table. Finally take the rest of the pack from the left hand into the right, turning it face up in the process. Act as though you are going to drop these cards onto the tabled ones, but at the last moment change your mind.

Remark that each card is endowed with the latent power to do one piece of magic only, and once that power is used up, it becomes, magically speaking, useless.

As you say this, the left hand picks up the tabled packet and holds it face up. The right hand comes over and replaces its packet on those in the left. As it does so, the right middle finger contacts the face card of the lower packet and pushes it forward until it drops on the table. The left hand then replaces the pack face down on one side. All of this takes only a few seconds.

While you are doing this move, continue talking along the lines that this card having now been used for one trick will never be usable again. As you say this, absentmindedly tear up the card into four pieces. Be careful not fo flash its back in the process.

When the card has been so destroyed, appear to realise that you have unwittingly ruined the spectator's pack. Remark in an audible whisper to a nearby member of the audience that "perhaps if I push it back into the pack nobody will notice...."

While saying this, position the pack in your left hand for the well known tilt move. Pick up the torn pieces and insert them, face up into the break below the top card. Because of the tilt, the pieces appear to have been pushed into the centre of the pack. This move is just as deceptive, when performed with the torn pieces as with a whole card. During the move the pack is face down but the pieces go in face up.

When the torn pieces have been pushed right in, close the tilt and square up the pack. Mention that perhaps it was a mistake to put the pieces in face up, as they will show up more. Remark that you had better turn them face down. As you say this, ribbon spread the pack face down across the table. The torn pieces will be quite safe as long as the last few cards are bunched together. The face up chosen card will be right in the middle of the pack exactly where the torn pieces were apparently placed.

Do not comment on the fact that the card is restored. Just remove it, turn it face down and replace it in the spread. Gather up the pack and double cut it, taking the torn pieces to the bottom, where they fall into the left palm.

Place the pack on the table. Somebody is bound to make a dive for it. While this is happening, quietly dispose of the torn pieces.

NEW FINISH......TO LARRY JENNINGS "COINS THROUGH HANDKERCHIEF"

WALT LEES

In Vol.3 No.3, November (1976) was a truly great piece of magic, by a great magician. I refer to Larry Jennings' routine of passing four coins through a handkerchief. I played around with this for some months, and during that time, evolved a different finish. Perhaps this may appeal to some, as it can be used in conjunction with other tricks or as a quickie in its own right.

Required is a large coin or medallion. Mine is a large brass Chinese coin. The size of the coin is important as it must not be too large. The ideal width, is fractionally less than the distance across the base of the fingers of the left hand (see Fig.1).

It is not necessary to be able to grip or in any way hold or retain the coin in this position. Just make sure that if the coin is lying on the table, the left fingers can hide it, without obstructing the palm of that hand.

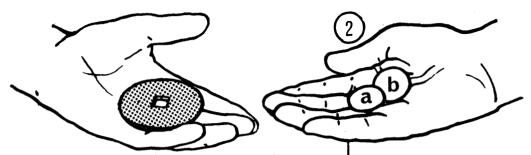

Have this coin in the left coat pocket. Perform standing, with a spectator on each side, holding the handkerchief horizontally by the four corners. This is, of course, the position for the Jennings routine. Perform the routine, or for that matter any other routine using four coins.

When you reach the point at which the four coins have been caused to pass through the handkerchief, pause for a moment and then offer to repeat the trick, using only two coins. As you say this, the right hand picks up two coins and places them into the left, which in turn drops them into the left coat pocket. Do not look at your hands as you do this. Just do it quickly and naturally. You have not in fact done anything at all. You are merely getting the audience accustomed to seeing you pass the coins from one hand to the other, prior to placing them in the pocket.

While the left hand is dropping the coins into the pocket, the right hand is picking up the other two coins and displaying them in the palm as in Fig.2.

Note the position of the coins as it must be exactly right. The front edge of coin 'A' lies in the crease at the base of the first three fingers. Coin 'B' is underneath 'A' and projecting at the rear.

It is very simple to work the coins into this position, in the process of picking them up and turning over the hand to display them. With the coins in this position, it is possible to perform a wonderfully deceptive "clink pass". I first saw this demonstrated by Mike O'Brien. The method is as follows.

The right hand turns and apparently drops both coins into the left, where they apparently land with a very loud clink. In practise it will be found that coin 'A' will land on the right fingertips. Coin 'B' will land on top of it and then slide off into the left hand, creating exactly the right sound. It is important that you do not look at the hands as you make this move.

As soon as the coin is in the left hand, close the fingers around it, and move the hand forward a few inches, bringing it over the centre of the handkerchief. It is not necessary at this point to palm or in any way alter the position of the coin in the right hand. Just keep the hand, back outwards, with the coin resting out of sight on the fingertips. Without unseemly haste allow the right hand to drop down below the level of the handkerchief and move under it to the centre, immediately below the left hand.

Place the left hand, back upwards, on the handkerchief. Open out the fingers so that the hand is flat. Pause, then left up the hand, showing only one coin. Now bring out the right hand from below the handkerchief displaying the other.

Offer to repeat the trick using only one coin. Apparently place the right hand's coin into the left. Use any fake transfer that looks reasonably natural. The left hand then goes to the coat pocket, apparently to deposit the coin there.

When the left hand enters the pocket, it cops the large coin and returns. There is no point in trying to palm the large coin as the hand is moving. Just keep the hand natural and relaxed, with the fingers lightly curled.

Place the left hand flat on the handkerchief, over the visible coin. Take care that the two coins do not talk as you do this. The position will be that the large coin is as far forward as possible, the small coin is directly under the left palm, but back clear of the large one.

The right hand, which still has a coin concealed, goes beneath the handkerchief. As soon as it is out of sight, reach up with the right middle finger and press upwards against the underside of the small coin below the left palm. This will have the effect of pushing the coin into the classic palm position in the left hand. Try not to visibly contract the hand as the coin is palmed.

As soon as the left hand has the coin palmed, the right hand emerges displaying its coin at the fingertips. The left hand is not raised yet, but remains on the handkerchief as though hiding the other coin. Drop the right hand's coin at the side of the left hand then with the right hand lightly grip the rear edge of the handkerchief.

Hold that position for a moment as you look at the audience and say "I suppose you think I have a coin under my hand." Without waiting for a reply say "Well, I do." At the same time raise your left hand slightly and draw it back sufficiently to reveal the large coin. Under cover of the surprise, the left hand continues to move backwards over the rear edge of the handkerchief and releases its palmed coin, which falls onto the fingers of the right hand.

The left hand then travels back and picks up the giant coin and the visible one and displays them on the outstretched palm. The hand is seen to be otherwise empty.

Toss both coins into the right hand and drop them in the right coat pocket.

CLEAN COLLECTORS

WALT LEES

This is a variation of the "Surprise Collectors", described in Mentzer's "Card Cavalcade". I have featured it extensively over the last three or four years and during that time have considerably altered the handling.

Take the pack and with the backs of the cards towards the audience run through, upjogging the four kings. Remove the kings, placing them in a face down packet on the table. Do not allow anyone to see their faces yet. Explain that you will show the cards to the audience in a few moments.

Take the pack, face up in the left hand and spread the cards into the right. Make this spread as wide as possible. Turn to a spectator on your left and ask him/her to point to any card in the face up spread that he/she thinks will be easily remembered.

When a card has been pointed to, break the spread below this card, so that it is the bottom one in the right hand. Turn the right hand back upwards and deposit the chosen card face down on the table in front of the spectator. Place the rest of the cards back in the left hand and hold the pack face up there. Ask the spectator on the left if he/she can remember the name of the card. Whatever the answer, turn up the card with the right hand, showing its face and repeating its value. Replace it face down on the table and have the spectator place his/her hand over it.

Turn to a spectator on your right and spread out the cards to have a second one chosen. However, this time a sleight is executed. The pack is face up in the left hand and its thumb pushes the top card to the right to begin the spread. The second card is pushed off in the same way. The third and fourth cards are pushed over together. They need not be in alignment, so long as they are pushed over together in the same movement. The right fingers now reach for the fourth card pulling it under the spread of three until it is about an inch further to the right than the third card. This enables the fifth card to be pushed between it and the card. In other words it is pulled out of the spread, which continues over the top of it. This is one of Fred Robinson's moves, originally designed to be used as a force.

Continue to spread the cards over the top of the original fourth card, until a fairly wide spread has been attained. Then invite a spectator on your right to point to one.

A good piece of misdirection to use to hide the steal of the fourth card is as follows. As you reach the point at which you push off the third and fourth cards together, suddenly turn to the spectator on your left and say, "You haven't forgotten that your card was the..." and pretend to dry up as though you have forgotten it yourself. This can look quite funny, as well as affording plenty of cover for making the move.

With the cards held in a wide spread, have the right hand spectator point to one. Break the spread below this card, so that it is apparently the bottom card of those in the right hand. In fact there is the original fourth card secretly below it, but well over to the right.

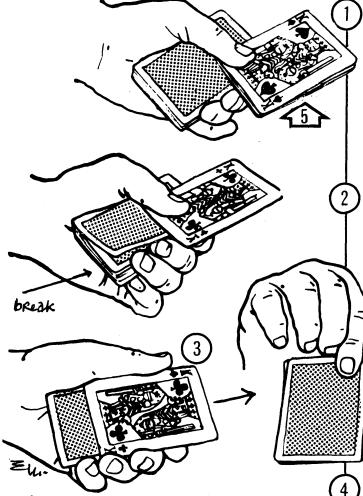

Turn the right hand back up as though to place the card face down on the table as previously. During the turning, the right fingers straighten out, causing the stolen card to slide across the backs of the others and end up where the chosen card should be. It is this card and not the chosen one that is placed on the table in front of the spectator. Ask him or her to put one hand over it.

Reassemble the pack, so that the second spectator's card goes to the bottom of the face up pack. Spread out the cards so that a third spectator can point to one. Place this one face down in front of that person, in exactly the same way as with the first card chosen.

Put the two halves of the pack together and take it face down in the left hand. The second spectator's card should now be the one on top. Get a left little finger break below this card.

Call attention to the four kings on the table. Pick them up with the right hand, fanning them, faces towards the audience. Drop them face up on the pack and square them, at the same time picking up the top card of the pack with them. Move all five cards to the position shown in Fig.1. All the actions from first picking up the kings to arriving at this position should be made in one continuous movement.

When the cards are in the position shown in Fig.1, the left middle finger feels for the edge of the top card of the pack, and pushes it upwards thus creating an opening between the top card of the pack proper and the rest of the cards. This action is completely masked by the packet of kings. The action can be facilitated by the left thumb moving the top card to the right ever so slightly. Fig. 2 shows the position.

Under the guise of showing the four kings separately the following actions take place:-

- 1) The right hand removes the face king from the packet, shows it back and front then returns it to the bottom of the packet. It goes directly below the spectator's card (not into the opening held by the middle finger).
- 2) The second king is taken and shown on both sides. This is apparently placed on the bottom of the packet, but in reality it is inserted into the opening below the top card of the pack. It is lined up with the packet though, to aid the illusion.
- 3) The third king is taken and this is also placed into the opening, going below the second king.
- 4) With the right hand, point to the fourth king, but do not remove it from the packet. At this point the left second finger can release its break.

The right hand now apparently lifts the packet of kings clear from the pack and places it down on the table. What in fact happens is that the right hand takes the packet from above, in the Biddle grip (fingers at the outer end, thumb at the inner) and slides it to the position shown in Fig.3. The left first and second fingers plus the right little finger assist in this action by pushing on the right edge of the packet. (The right hand is not shown in Fig.3 for the sake of clarity).

When the cards reach the Fig.3 position, do not pause, but straight away, begin to move the top three cards of the packet forwards in the direction of the arrow shown in the diagram. These are the three cards above the pack. As soon as the packet begins to move forward, the left forefinger comes up beneath the packet and pushes the two bottom cards flush into the pack. It is vitally important that you do not glance at the hands during this move.

When the two lower cards are safely in the pack, directly below the top card, lift the packet clear and, by releasing the hold of the middle finger, cause the packet to snap smartly into the position shown in Fig.4. It is held between the forefinger and thumb.

The position will now be, that instead of four kings as the audience suppose, you are holding two kings, with the second spectator's card reversed between them. In the pack are two reversed kings with an indifferent card on top of them. The three spectators, each believe that they are holding their own chosen cards, but in fact the second spectator (the one on the right) has an indifferent card.

Place the king packet face up on the table, neatly squared.

Turn to the spectator on your left and ask him/her to name the card he/she is holding. While doing so, obtain a break below the second card and set the pack for the well known Tilt move.

Insert the first spectator's card, face down into the break, saying that you will push it into the centre of the pack. The card will now be between the two face up kings. Allow the break to close, then take the pack in the right hand and dribble it onto the table, emphasising that the card is really lost.

Pick up the pack and place it back into the left hand. Under cover of this action, get a break below the top card and hold this with the left little finger.

Undercut half the pack and place it on top, without losing the break. Take the third spectator's card and insert it into the break. Release the break but do not push the card right in. Leave it projecting for about half its length.

Take the pack into the right hand and hold it aloft, allowing all to see that the card really is going into the middle of the pack. Return the pack to the left hand and push the card home, at the same time obtaining a little finger break above it.

Finally, take the second spectator's card and, without showing its face, drop it on top of the pack and cut the cards at the break, completing the cut. An important psychological point here, is not to lay stress on what the cards are but on where abouts in the pack they go. The audience have just seen one card fairly pushed into the centre, so emphasise that the third card goes into a different place by putting it on top and cutting. In this way, stress is taken off the identity of the card.

At this point the audience should believe that the three chosen cards are lost in the pack and that the four kings are on the table. In reality only two kings are on the table with one of the chosen cards between them. On top of the pack is a chosen card, with a face up king below it, beneath that is the second chosen card with another face up king below it. The pack is in the left hand.

Pick up the kings, in the Biddle grip, with the right hand. Explain that they are the four collector's and that they find chosen cards, but they have to be livened up first. To do this you rub them against your left elbow. During this bit of business the pack is completely hidden by the right arm. Take advantage of this to quickly thumb count four cards from the top and obtain a flesh break below them with the base of the thumb. As soon as you have this break, stop the rubbing and resume a normal position.

Hold the pack at table level and hold the supposed four kings, still in the Biddle grip, about 18 inches above it. Dramatically count one...two...three... On the count of three, slap the kings down onto the pack, but do not release the right hand's hold on them. With the right middle finger and thumb seize all the cards above the break. Do not lift the cards clear of the pack. Move the pack away to the left. Do not hesitate in moving the pack away. The pack should move away the instant the packet of kings touches it.

Place the kings on the table and spread the packet, revealing three face down cards between them. The cards will be in the correct sequence. The one on the left will be the left hand spectator's, the middle one will be the third spectator's and the right hand one the right hand spectator's.

Conclusion

This is a very startling effect when correctly performed. Get the timing right, study the misdirection and you will have an excellent piece of magic.

We have decided to bring the magazine up to date — at a stroke. You may have noticed that we have jumped from August Vol.4 No.12 to January Vol.5 No.1. This will no doubt cause confusion, not only to future collectors, but also to present readers who skip this column.

A letter from Donald Crombie called our attention to the 'Cry Wolf' effect in the Phil Goldstein issue in which some sleights required in the effect were not explained. These can all be found in Jerry Mentzer's book Counts, Moves and Subtlety. This is a 'must' for newcomers to small packet card tricks, however I will give a brief explanation of the sleights next month.

This is a Walt Lees issue — his second one. Walt recently lectured to members of the Magic Circle and sold many of his notes — indicating that they liked what they saw. The Professor who was there punted for a set and had remarked favourably on the lecture, specifically with regard to the clarity of both the diction and the explanations.

The enthusiasm of the Professor (part of his secret) continues unabated — he has been seen working on Eric Mason's 'The Problem is...' — see Vol.4 No.10. Eric continues to gain approval for this effect and 'Beauideal' described in the following issue when performing in the Blenheim Bar.

Obie O'Brien writes to say that the New York Luncheon Table now meets at the 'Gaiety', 224 West 47th Street on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from twelve noon to two pm — that Derek Dingle does the pass better than anyone he has yet seen — that there is a little town in the State of Illinois called Divernon.

Some issues back we mentioned Bill Spooner's work with the hooked coin and at the time did not know the price of his booklet Here's "HOO" with Coins. Bill informs me the price is three dollars plus fifty cents if you want it mailed. Ken Brooke has it in stock and will be happy to sell visitors to The Magic Place a copy.

Thanks to Ron Macmillan for allotting us space at his always successful International Day of Magic enabling us to meet and chat with old friends in comfort.

Had hoped to bring this column up to date together with this issue. Hopefully, this will be done next month. The Blackpool Magic Club's 27th Annual One Day Convention is on Sunday the 25th of February — see you there.

WALT LEES

Methods of magically producing four-of-a-kind from a shuffled pack are always useful to a working performer. It was with this in mind, that the following effect was brought about.

FOUR CARD SURPRISE!

You will require a pack of cards, that contains two jokers. For the best effect this should be borrowed. Secretly get both jokers to the top and reverse the second one. One good cover for doing this is to remove the jokers before showing a trick, then to apparently replace them on top at the finish. Done casually, without looking at your hands and giving the impression that you have finished your performance, this will pass unnoticed.

Spread the cards face down and invite a spectator to choose one. Take care to keep the top few cards bunched, so that the face up one is not seen. While the spectator is looking at the card and showing it around, square the pack and undercut the lower half. Extend the original top half towards the spectator for the card to be replaced. It goes on top of the two jokers. Replace the original bottom half on top, keeping a break above the chosen card. Double cut to the break bringing this card to the top.

Turn the whole pack face up and place in the left hand in a dealing position. Buckle the chosen card sufficiently to enable its value to be glimpsed. This is a good method of peeking, provided that you do not look down until the card is actually buckled and ready to be peeked. A common mistake in peeking is looking at the hands, while the move is being made. It is usually best to make the move without looking and just glimpse down only when the card has actually been exposed.

Now comes the secret cull of the three matching cards. This is done under cover of removing four random cards. These cards will be removed in such a manner that at the finish they can be magically exchanged for the four of a kind. Here is the method.

Suppose that the card you have just glimpsed is the six of clubs. State that you cannot always find the card the first time, sometimes you need four chances. Begin to spread the cards, faces towards yourself, from the left hand into the right, until you spot a six. Take the six into the right and break the pack at that point. Insert the top card of the left hand portion between the six and the rest of the cards in the right hand, upjogging it for about half its length. See Fig.1. Left hand now moves away with all the cards to the left of the upjogged card and the right hand tilts enabling the spectators to see the face of the upjogged card which is hiding the index corner of the six but leaving the inner left non-index corner in view.

Call attention to the upjogged card saying that it may or may not be the chosen card. The assistant will deny that it is the right one.

"Never mind," you continue, "I still have three chances left!"

Tilt the cards back towards yourself, leaving the projecting one as it is. Start to spread the left hand cards into the right once more. How you commence the spread is important. The first card from the left hand goes between the upjogged card and the six below it. The position of the upjogged card is such that it will act as a guide enabling the left hand cards to be slipped in cleanly and easily. Continue spreading the cards from the left hand into the right, with the six sliding underneath them. Keep going until you arrive at another six.

Repeat exactly what you did with the previous one. That is, push off the six into the right hand pushing the next card between it and the rest of the spread, upjogging it as befoe. This will give you two upjogged cards and cause the second six to slide below the spread but above the first one.

Tilt the right hand once more and allow the audience to see the second upjogged card. Ask if this is the one. When told no, start the spreading process again. That is push the left hand cards below the upjogged one, but above the sixes, thereby taking them to the rear.

Continue until you reach a third six, and repeat the business exactly as before, giving you three upjogged cards and taking the third six to the rear of the spread. Ask if this is the card chosen. When told no, appear a little disconcerted as you have only one more chance left.

Continue the spread as before, inserting the cards below the third upjogged card and above the three sixes. Keep going until you come to the face down card. As soon as you spot it, upjog the card immediately in front of it, then square up the pack in the left hand leaving the four upjogged cards protruding. As the pack is squared, the three sixes will slide to the rear, making them the top cards, when the pack is face down. For the time being, however, the pack is held face up in the left hand. Spread the four jogged cards into a wide fan as in Fig.2.

Tilt the cards, faces towards the audience and ask if you have managed to find the card. When told no, appear somewhat disappointed.

The right hand seizes the pack at the inner end and pulls all the cards above the break backwards through the left hand, in the direction of the arrow in Fig.2. This has the effect of stripping out the jogged cards, simultaneously closing the fan and at the same time adding the six cards below the break secretly to the rear of them.

Look at the spectator and say, "Are you sure that your card is not there?" Spread the top four cards to give him another look. Appear somewhat crestfallen when he says no. Square up all the cards above the break and turn them all face down. Deal the top four cards onto the table in a haphazard manner. The last card dealt will be the chosen one.

Have the spectator point to a card, if he points to the chosen one all well and good, if not force it by magician's choice. Have the spectator name his card. Turn over the "chosen" one and show that it is the correct card. Wait for a moment to allow the effect to register then say, "I thought it might be that one....because it wasn't the six of hearts, six of diamonds or six of spades. As you say this quickly turn over the other three cards.

Postscript

When culling the sixes, the angle at which the pack is held is important. If you tip the pack too much towards yourself, the audience will see the sixes sliding beneath the spread. If you do not tilt the cards sufficiently, they may spot what is happening. Tilt the pack just enough to prevent the audience seeing the faces of the cards but no more. Also go through the cards as rapidly and casually as possible.

Once in a while, the card immediately in front of the reversed joker may be one of the required ones. When this happens, upjog the card immediately in front of it, then push off the desired card under the spread until it clears the spread and joins the other two below, then insert the remainder of the left hand's cards below the jogged card and square up. This will rectify the situation.

Sometimes, during the culling, you may find two of the cards that you are looking for together in the pack. When this happens, just treat them as one card. Insert the upjogged card above them and take them to the rear together, then upjog a random card later to make up the numbers.

The culling system is based on an idea in Harry Lorrayne's book Reputation Makers. The stripping out/adding on move is by Dai Vernon. A good description of the magician's choice force will be found in The Royal Road to Card Magic by Hugard and Braue.

SOUND OF MAGIC, 8 Herbal Hill, London, EC1,

The Page boy speaks....

Scotland, yes, that's where I've just been. I've just spent a few days in God's Chosen Country. In those few days He chose to drop a few snowflakes on my home town with the result I was wandering around knee-deep in the white stuff, and before anyone tells me that my version of knee-deep doesn't necessarily mean that it was deep, my son beat you to it.

Several years ago the magic buffs in Edinburgh (which isn't my home town) got together and decided to have an unusual type of one day convention. Did I say unusual? Well, have you ever been to a convention where everything, shows, lectures, demonstrations etc were given over to Card Magic — or as some would have it 'card tricks'? That is exactly what they did in Edinburgh, they had a convention of card tricks. It sounds like it could have been one big bore, but it wasn't, it was very good. I liked it, and in case you think I have missed something out, I have, because they repeated the idea last weekend and I was there.

There were nine performers performing, five lecturers lecturing, and around 50 onlookers looking on. I have no intention of listing them all, but I thought all of the lectures or lecture demonstrations were very good. Vic Allen was entertaining, Roy Walton surprised a lot of people by demonstrating some almost self-working effects and fooling almost everyone present. Gordon Bruce did the same effect three times and if you can find another convention to book him he is going to do it three more times and get it right. (That was a joke folks, he did one of the most straightforward coin assemblies under playing cards I have seen. It was so good it couldn't possibly be his own). Joe Riding dealt with cabaret style card effects and yours truly was marked down to do what was listed as 'Card tricks on stage'. So what did I do? I did a couple of tricks and talked and talked. To the Edinburgh Magic Circle may I say thank you, it was fun.

After this I headed north to more familiar terrain and family faces, waded around in the snow for a few days and didn't think about the Edinburgh Cardarama (that's what they called it) again until I was on my way back to London lying flat on my back in my sleeping compartment on the train. I recalled some of the people I had mentioned as having performed card tricks for large audiences; Billy O'Connor, Lionel King, David Nixon, and probably some others, and I suddenly realised there were quite a number of performers, not just the ones I have mentioned who used similar type material, but there is no way in which you can say they did the same tricks. The point I am trying to make is that all of the good pros have managed to personalise their effects.

They worked at them until the effects became part of their personality, the effects became right for THEM. They picked effects which LOOKED as if they were perfect for them but in fact they had probably worked long and hard to make them so appear.

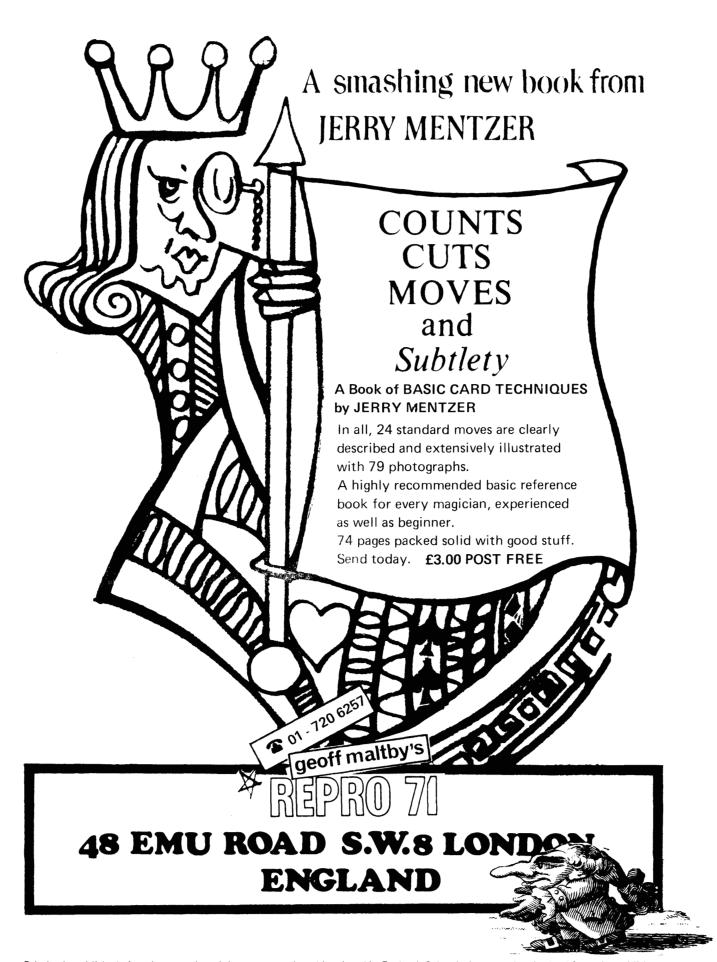

This started me thinking about some of my favourite acts. Al Flosso. How many times did Al do the Miser's Dream before it reached perfection. Make no mistake, in his hands it really was perfection. How long did it take Jay Marshall to get his ring routine just right. Just when did he decide to undersell the real magic of the effect and concentrate on selling the character behind it?

There are others. Channing Pollock. The man who really had the classic image of the smooth sophisticated manipulator. He is on record as having said he started off with the intention of being the greatest card manipulator in the world, and although he may have achieved that goal we all know it was not his card manipulations that lifted him onto the international circuit. When I first saw David Nixon I thought he was the greatest soft sell single, stand up patter magic act I had ever seen. That was getting close to thirty years ago. When he passed away recently he was a TV star and had been for many years and was still doing magic tricks. And again, we all know it wasn't the tricks that made him a star.

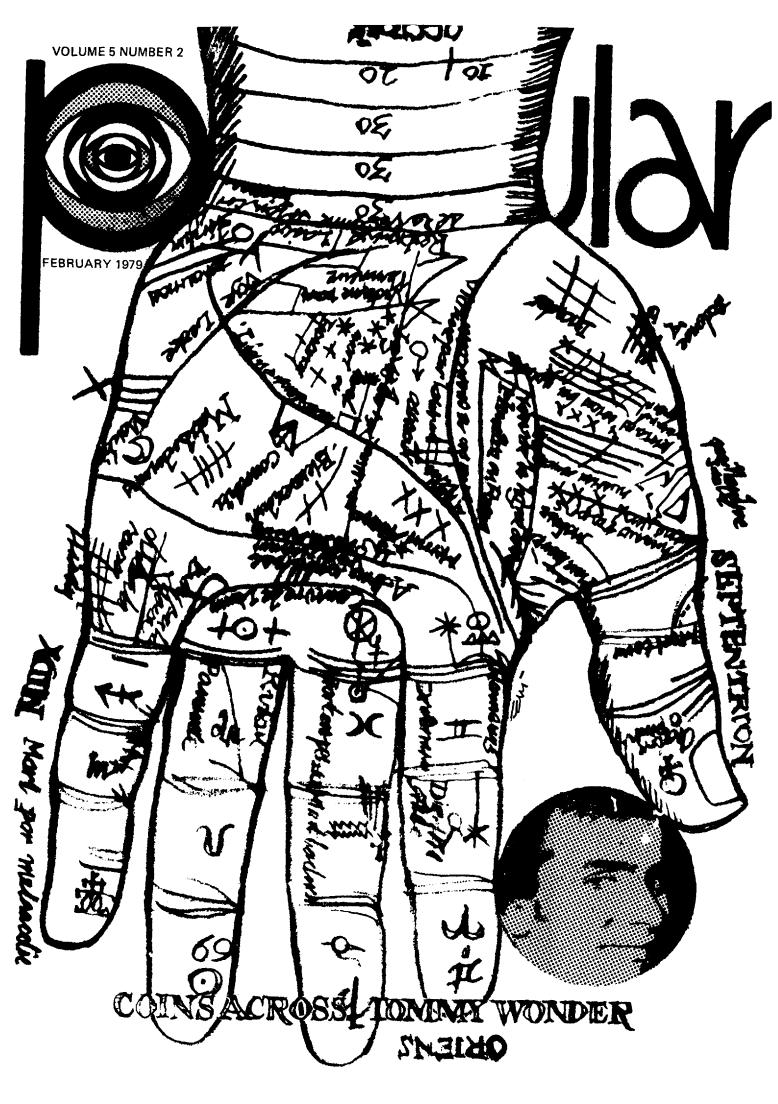

Shall I go on? Shall I talk about Ali Bey, one of the best twenty minute illusion acts of my lifetime. How about some of the acts I didn't see? Cardini, Hymack. Or some of the non-magic acts: W.C. Fields, Danny Kaye, Jolson, Benny, Hope? or Sinatra, Garland or Crosby? No matter how big any of these names they all have one thing in common. Every single one of them was a 'one off'. When you saw Flosso you saw Flosso; when you heard Crosby you heard Crosby. Let me ask you one final question: Who are you trying to be?

Goodbye,

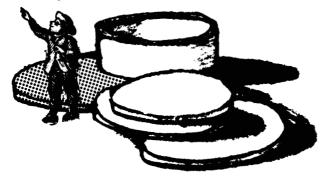

Patrick Page

COINS ACROSS — A PRESENTATION

In this version of the Coins Across which I have been performing professionally over the past three years, I have succeeded in eliminating any superfluous counting of the coins and found logical reasons for throwing the coins from hand to hand and in addition to providing psychological cover for the weak points.

In order to enable interested readers to obtain the maximum effect I have endeavoured to include in the description the important details regarding misdirection which are necessary to achieve this end. It was the description of the Tamariz 'Oil and Water' in a previous issue which gave me the encouragement to describe this effect in somewhat similar manner. I trust readers will obtain as much pleasure from studying my effort as I did from the Tamariz article.

This routine requires an Okito box with a recessed bottom, four silver coins, and one copper coin. The larger and heavier the coins the better.

To prepare — place the copper coin in the box proper followed with the three silver. The remaining silver coin is placed in the recess.

Commence the performance with the box held in the left hand so positioned that when the box is lifted the silver coin in the recess is left in the finger palm position.

The first action is to remove the lid with the right hand and put it down on your mat near the right inner corner. The left hand now tips the three silver and one copper from the box into the right hand, the fingers of which immediately close around them to prevent the spectators seeing the copper coin — it is best that it is not seen at this stage.

The right thumb now pushes the three silver coins out of the closed hand, one at a time, and places them in an overlapping line on the outer left corner of the mat. In the process of placing each coin on the mat the right hand turns allowing both sides of the coins to be seen. Do not call attention to the fact that both sides are seen either verbally or by 'display' — just push each coin out with the thumb and place it down on the mat in a natural manner. Pause a moment — and place the copper coin on the mat at the right outer corner using the same actions.

It is important that the audience are given time to appreciate the position and by pointing they are fully aware that there are three silver coins on one corner of the mat and a copper on the other. Remember that in some conditions it is difficult to distinguish silver from copper, and should this happen the impact of the effect is severely diminished. My own copper coin has an owl in the design and I say "Look there is an owl on this coin." It may seem odd, but people are really interested to see the owl on the coin.

While interest is focussed on the copper coin the right hand casually picks up the lid and replaces it on the box, which is then placed on the inner right corner of the mat, leaving the silver coin from the recess finger palmed in the left hand. This coin is now brought into the classic palm position as the right hand retakes the copper coin.

Under the pretence that you wish the people on your left to have a good view of the copper coin, the right hand moves over in that direction. As the right hand is travelling towards the left, the left hand takes the three silver coins and the right hand puts the copper coin on the mat in the position just vacated by the silver. You now have four silver coins in the left hand — one of which is classic palmed, and on the mat at the outer left hand corner, the copper coin.

At this point make some remark to a spectator on your right. Naturally your body will turn in that direction and as you are talking refer to the copper coin and glance at it. The next move is to pick up the coin but it would be an awkward action to do so with the right hand, therefore, it becomes a perfectly normal action to toss the silver coins from the left hand into the right hand leaving the left hand empty? to pick up the copper coin. This you appear to do, but in reality only two silver coins are thrown into the right, one being retained in the left. This latter is moved into the classic palm position on top of the one already there as the right hand jingles the two silver in its loosely closed fist. Without hesitation the left hand flips over the copper coin a few times before bringing it within the half closed hand. This business of flipping the copper coin centres the interest of the audience on it and takes the 'heat' off the throwing action which immediately preceded it. It cannot be stressed too strongly that no display should be made of the throwing move — from the point of view of the audience three silver coins have been tossed into the right hand leaving the left free to pick up the copper one. The playing down of the throwing move is an important piece of misdirection which, combined with the fact that the copper coin has been made the focal point ensures that the audience will be completely unaware that one of the three silver coins was retained in the left hand.

So far, only the properties to be used have been displayed to the audience and already you are two moves ahead i.e. two silver coins in the left hand, the spectators being aware only of the copper one. In the right hand are two silver, the spectators believing it contains three.

This very strong position has been reached by routining and using misdirection to cover the moves and from the point of view of the audience, nothing, other than showing three silver and one copper coin has taken place. In consequence the effect will have greater impact than would be the case if the performer was suspected of doing something other than merely showing the coins.

The magic begins with both hands held apart with their backs uppermost. Shake the right hand, and allow one of the silver coins in the left to drop from its classic palmed position onto the copper which is positioned on the fingers of the half closed hand, causing a clinking sound. This may seem difficult, but with heavy coins it is quite easy.

Drop the coins from both hands (retaining the classic palmed silver in the left hand) and spread to reveal that one silver has passed from the right to join the copper in the left.

Both hands pick up their respective coins simultaneously, and the right hand is again shaken and in the process classic palms one of the silver coins taking care not to allow the coins to clink. The left hand releases its classic palmed coin allowing it to fall onto the other two coins with the familiar clink. Both hands drop their coins on the mat and spread as before, to show the arrival of the second silver coin, this time the right hand retains the classic palmed silver coin. The passage of this second coin has extra impact because the effect has been achieved without any moves whatever.

Advantage is taken of the effect this real piece of magic produces on the minds of the spectators to secretly transfer the palmed coin from the right hand into the left. Immediately the second coin has passed the left hand turns palm uppermost and makes a casual gesture to the coins on the table and the right hand pulls back the left sleeve a little, and with a continuing movement the left hand pulls back the right sleeve. During this last movement the palm up left hand passes under the right hand which releases its palmed silver coin dropping it onto the open palm of the left hand. In reality the left does not actually pull back the right sleeve, but merely holds it as the right moves forward to pick up the third silver coin, which it does very deliberately, at the same time allowing the hand to be seen empty.

All the movements from the pointing gesture to picking up the coin should be done casually without looking at the hands. It should in no way appear that you are 'proving' both hands to be empty. The right hand moving forward to pick up the coin helps to keep the attention of the audience away from the left hand

With the left hand remaining at the right elbow as the coin is spun into the air and as it is spinning the left hand moves its coin into the classic palm position. The right elbow gives some cover for this action. Just before the right hand catches the coin the left moves away from the elbow.

The left hand next picks up the two silver and one copper. To cause the last coin to appear to pass across, give the right hand a shake, and open it palm downwards keeping the coin in the classic palm position. It is relatively easy with large coins for the hand to appear relaxed with a coin palmed.

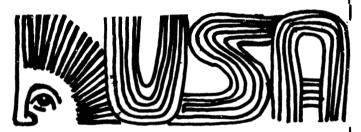

Immediately the right hand opens attention is directed to the left hand which drops its palmed coin onto the other three it holds. All coins are then dropped onto the mat and spread out in a straight line by drawing the hand towards yourself.

When spreading the coins keep the hand over one of the silver coins for a moment to create suspense before revealing the arrival of the third and last coin. As all eyes are on the left hand and the spectators are watching to see the anticipated arrival of this third coin, the right hand is quietly brought to rest on top of the box ready to pick it up. The spectators interest is further kept centred on the coins and away from the right hand by kicking the nearest coin with the left fingers causing it to hit the next coin, which in turn hits the next one and this latter hits the copper coin. Meanwhile the right hand has picked up the box and passes it into the left hand immediately that hand has 'kicked' the coin.

In passing the box into the left hand the right hand moves slightly beyond it so that the extra silver coin can be dropped from the right palm directly onto the base of the left fingers. Without hesitation the box is placed over the coin to bring it within the recess of the box, and still without pause the right hand moves away with the lid. Any noise made by the box coming into contact with the coin will be attributed to the removal of the lid. In moving away the right turns and the lid allowed to fall onto the open palm of that hand and allowed to slide onto the table.

All the above takes only a couple of seconds, and is over before the spectators eyes return to look at the hands, when they see the empty box in the left hand and the empty right hand. In making the left hand and coins the focal point by creating suspense and the 'kicking' flourish plus suitable accompanying patter the attention of the audience is drawn away from the right hand with its palmed coin to the left side of the mat where the action is taking place. The misdirection is further strengthened by the performer keeping his eyes either on the coins or the spectators. At no time should he look at his own hands which would reduce the effectiveness of the misdirection.

Greetings once again from the land of the deflated dollar, the big U.S.A. This time it's U.S.A. and Canada happenings, the NYCAN Convention held this time in Toronto, Canada.

About 350 had a good time on close-up. Warren Stephens with ring off hanky, rope knots and dice had a cute bit with a couple of matches which audience were invited to concentrate on and cause to light — instead the whole box lit. Tim Wright performed standing did Piet Forton's Pop out aces — Matrix — Coins Across and a really beautiful location of two selected cards — card throw from behind his back is caught in the deck between the chosen cards. This young lad who did more card tricks has certainly got it — entertaining as well as the sleights. Chairman for the event Bill McCourt with card tricks which included Rick Johnsson's racehorse trick - Card to Wallet in Envelope -Rising Cards and Joe Riding's Equal, Unequal Ropes. Art Emerson with his Nest of Boxes, also used to carry his act did a version of the old Stamp Album - the hottest packet trick on the market today, the 'Whole Card' originated by himself and Larry West. He ended with the beer can illusion — a la Zig-Zag — I liked it. Bob Little with the act as seen at Tannen's. What can I say!! It was great, of course only for magicians. Lastly Herb Morrissey with flash opening of a cigarette, Coins through Table - and then using his own invention, the Morrissey Chop Cup and Balls showed a lot of new moves that would have made Dai Vernon happy seeing his routine updated using these cups. I guess you could say I'm a little prejudiced because I work for Morrissey Magic at conventions but what Herb showed caused me to get out my cups and try some of the new moves.

Now some news from the Magic Castle. Harry Carroll, a regular at the Forks Hotel on weekends, worked a week in the Vernon Room which is open by invitation only. From all accounts he was a big hit - Vernon liked him. Why was he a hit? Well, anyone who spends time at the Forks Hotel watching Eddie Fechter something has to rub off. Eddie has taught me and many others the value of entertaining. Speaking of Eddie — he would like to sell his place, and if we could find 100 magicians with a thousand dollars each, we could buy the Forks Hotel. I think it would be a great investment. Eddie's health has not been of the best, so he would like to retire and do magic just at weekends — at the Forks, of course. Do you magicians read me?

No doubt readers not close to the magic scene like to know what effects are being worked — here are three I saw and liked. Ray Mertz (a Buffalo regular) showed me the Las Vegas Leaper from Paul Harris' new book. Three different people showed me Jumping Bean Aces from the book Classic Tacklers by Phil Goldstein, and I still like it. Keith Walker showed something (not explained) that Ken Brooke is doing — two cards stood up 'T' fashion, one removed and the other remained standing — no idea how it was done.

Got a nice postcard picture of Tom Mullica's Atlanta bar called 'Tom Foolery'. If you are near the Atlanta area stop by 3166 Peachtree Road.

That's it for now. Satis Superque.

"Obie"

Here are a couple of gags to try out on your brother magicians. Both require the same prop, namely one of those long rubber noses sold in joke shops. These consist of a long rubber nose attached to an eye mask.

Cut the mask part off and paint the nose flesh coloured.

First Gag

Paint the nose to look like an overlong thumb tip. You will also need a normal size thumb tip, however it is best to make this conspicuous in some way. Scratch a little paint off. Also required is a long cigar.

Have the giant thumb tip crushed up in your left hand. The normal tip is on your right thumb. Smoke the cigar.

Remove your pocket handkerchief and drape it over your left hand as in the usual presentation of the cigarette vanish. In doing so, contrive to secretly introduce the large thumb tip into the handkerchief. Also make sure that everyone sees the normal sized thumb tip on your right thumb.

Go through all the motions of doing the cigarette in handkerchief. Stick your thumb in, making a well and leaving the small thumb tip behind (it falls down inside the large one).

Take your cigar and push in into the handkerchief. Act as though you are having great difficulty getting it inside the thumb tip. Finally ram it hard in. It is stubbed out on the proper thumb tip, inside the large one.

By now your colleagues will be wondering how on earth you managed to push such a large cigar into such a small thumb tip. Let them wonder for a moment or two, then stick your thumb into the large tip and draw it out.

Second Gag

Cut the nose off the mask as before, but do not repaint it. To the inside of the nose stick some double sided cellotape, so that it will hold in place over your own nose for a few seconds

Announce that you are going to perform the vanishing cigarette without a thumb tip.

Secretly introduce the nose into the handkerchief. Take a cigarette and drop it into the nose. Suddenly sneeze violently. Instinctively hold the handkerchief to your face. Quickly stick the nose over your own. Pull the handkerchief away, showing it empty and remarking "No thumb tip!"

BETTER MEN THAN I HAVE SAID THE FOLLOWING:

You will rarely get a layman's reaction to magic from magician's wives! — Harry Lorayne.

Magic is people. You can only learn to do magic by doing it with a live audience and with new faces all the time. This is the only way to learn the timing and misdirection that are so important. — Matt Schulien.

I'm not sure what a magic technician is, however I think it's the guy, who, when given a choice between a sleight of hand method and a gimmick method, will choose the sleight of hand method. Then as an added measure will contrive to accomplish the effect with still another sleight of hand method etc. Technicians call this approach to magic the only answer. Box magicians call it a bunch of crap. — Mike Rogers.

Magic is not a suitable vehicle for seducing girls.

— Mike Rogers.

The main thing when palming a card is to close those fingers. — Charlie Miller.

Really love magic and do not do magic because you love to show off. — Bert Allerton.

People want to laugh. When they go to an entertainment, the thing they enjoy most is a good laugh. Magicians should capitalise on that. — Goodliffe.

I am not advocating a crop of the "Comedy Conjurer" type whose work consists of a string of funny stories in the course of which he does a couple of pocket tricks. It is not necessary to tell a funny story to get a laugh. — Goodliffe.

It is not enough merely to stand before an audience and do a card trick, no matter how great the technical expertise; the entertainer must employ all the tricks of the theatre to win himself the approval of those present. — Jean Hugard.

Be yourself. Don't try to emulate another's style or technique. Find your own style.

— Frank Garcia.

Nate Leipzig always gave magic a great dignity. He never performed his close-up tricks unless he had the undivided attention of everybody present and was sure that they were anxious to see his work. — Dai Vernon.

If they like you as a person, they'll like your act. — Nate Leipzig.

Nate Leipzig would never lend one of his own packs to another magician for the purpose of performing a trick... — Dai Vernon.

Boldness is one of the most apparent features of truly professional presentation. — Al Koran.

Charlie Miller once asked Malini, "Max, how is it you can always fool people with these sleights of yours?" Max replied, "Well you don't do it when they are watching." — Dai Vernon.

Do what you do best. — Eddie Fechter.

If magic is to be considered as an art, it must include skill in sleight of hand. In my opinion there is no substitute for deftness. — Dai Vernon.

Lots of amateur magicians, getting the applause of their friends let it go to their heads. It doesn't really mean they are ready for the stage because they are the life of the party. — Fred Kaps.

I find it impossible for a mind informed on the principles of magic and the inner workings of illusion to receive impressions similar to one not so informed. — Arthur Buckley.

I do not subscribe to the theory advanced by many present-day writers, that modern methods have eliminated the need for great technical skill. This is a delusion, since the greater the skill of the performer, the greater will be the impression he makes upon his audience. There is no substitute for skill. — Paul Le Paul.

Magic is a gift. If it wasn't, there would be no Scots magicians. -John Ramsay.

As promised in 'Oasis' last month we will bring this column up to date with some observations on the events etc of the past year.

It must hold the record for the number of different close-up magicians appearing on TV. In addition to those mentioned before in this column, several appeared in a series which ran for several weeks. Only managed to see the programme on which Brian King, Anthony Brahams and Bob Read appeared. All were guest artists on separate occasions in which the audience were playing charades with the viewers - a light weight affair in which the magicians had two three minute spots, thus no-one had time to register with the viewers. They could not have had much impact on the studio audience either, because the producer had decided that they should play to the camera with their backs to the majority of the studio audience who were in groups at separate tables. Surely it would have been better for the performers to have moved into one of the tables at which people were already seated, and obviously enjoying themselves. This would have given the show continuity and the performers would not have been in the position of trying to entertain two different audiences at the same time, which is possible with stage performances, but as this series proved, not with close-up magic.

Now in its 138th year Punch, a periodical devoted to humour is something of an institution. One of its regular articles entitled 'Country Life' consists of clippings of a humourous nature culled from provincial papers. Here is a sample.

"It's Death Defying! See the amazing Escapologist Simon Lovell at the Birchwood Hotel, Dedham. See him escape from a burning coffin inside a bonfire. Admission by ticket only includes Barbecue Meal."

It is the same Simon who contributes to Pabular. He was recently featured in two national dailies. In 'The Sun' sawing one of their Page Three nudes in halves and in the 'Daily Express' blowing a sheet of flame — a most impressive fire-eating picture — the flame occupying almost two pages in the centre spread.

The Magic Circle close-up competition held last December attracted eight entries and was won by Brian Barnes and it speaks much for his presentation as he had nothing new to offer—cards, mostly with a stacked pack, performed blindfolded. Without exception every performer in the competition worked standing. Does this indicate a general trend, or do they all read this column. Tommy Wonder better known to us as Jos Bema has outlined the advantage of performing standing. See next month's issue.

For those readers who were unable to follow the description of Phil Goldstein's 'Cry Wolf' in No.11 Vol.4 here is a brief description of the sleights which were the problem.

In all the counts the cards are held in the left hand as when about to perform the Elmsley Count. This count first appeared in Dai Vernon's Inner Secrets of Card Magic and subsequently in many other publications.

Arrange the four cards required for the 'Cry Wolf' effect i.e. with the ace at the face followed with the two jokers and lastly the two. Turn the packet face downwards.

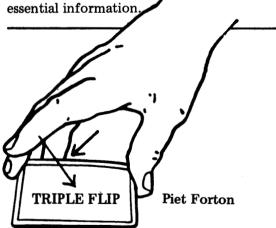

Siva Count (Jack Avis). With the packet of four cards in position in the left hand, take the top card in the right hand and when appearing to take the second card take two cards leaving the first card beneath the original bottom card in the left hand. The right hand coming in to take the third card brings the two cards it holds square underneath the two in the left hand, the thumb of which immediately pushes the top three cards over to the right to be taken with the right hand. The remaining card in the left hand is taken on top of the three in the right.

Eye Count (Edward Victor). Packet of three cards in the left hand. Right hand takes the top card and when seeming to take the second card on top of it leaves it in the left hand and takes the other two. The card in the left hand is then taken with the right on top of the two cards it holds completing the count.

Spirit Count (Gene Castillon). Arrange the cards from the top — joker, joker, deuce, face up ace, and hold in left hand. Right hand takes the top card and shows it to be a joker. It then takes the second card BENEATH the first one taken and this is also shown to be a joker. The right hand comes in to take the third card but this time the cards it is holding goes UNDER the two in the left hand, and as they are momentarily square the left thumb pushes the top three cards to the right. The right takes them and displays the face card — again a joker. The single card in the left hand is then taken beneath the other three and shown thus completing the illusion that all four cards are jokers.

A more detailed description of the above sleights with photographic illustrations will be found in that very excellent and timely publication authored by Jerry Mentzer — Counts, Cuts, Moves and Subtlety. It describes twenty sleights in addition to the above and is invaluable to newcomers to small packet card tricks who would otherwise have to expend much time and money in obtaining this

This effect stems from an idea shown to me by Remo Inzani some years ago. Three cards of like colour, say black, instantly change to three red cards. The principle lends itself to many variations. In its present form is an excellent trick for television.

To commence you will require to have three black cards on top of the pack followed by three red. This can be easily and quickly achieved by spreading the cards face towards you and locate three red cards in a block and cut the pack bringing them to the back of the spread. Respread the pack and up-jog three black cards, stripping them out and adding them to the back of the pack and turn face down, hold it in the left hand. You now have three black cards on top of the pack, followed by the three red ones.

The left thumb next pushes the top three black cards to the right to be taken by the right hand which turns them face up and drops them back square on top of the pack. At this point it is necessary to have a left little finger break under the top six cards, and this could be obtained by pushing all six top cards over when taking the three black ones, and getting the break as the pack is squared after turning the cards face up.

Immediately the three cards are faced and the pack squared, the right hand, thumb at inner end and the fingers at the outer end, lift off the six cards above the break.

The thumb of the left hand pulls off the top face up black card of the packet in the right hand onto the pack in the left hand turning it face down in the process as you say "One black card." Repeat with the new top card of the packet saying "Two black cards," and finally drop the third face up black card, with the three face down red cards hidden beneath it, on top of the pack as one card, saying "Three black cards."

With the thumb at the inner end and the fingers at the outer end lift off the face up black card and the face down red card beneath it as one card with the right hand saying "One face up black card." Next, thumb off the pack onto the table the top two cards (red ones), one overlapping the other as you say "Two black cards faces down."

Now for the really startling transformation. Push the inner left corner of the double card held in the right hand under the right long side of the undermost of the two tabled cards and move the index finger of the right hand to the approximate centre of the face of the black card. The sketch shows the situation at this point.

Using the corner of the double card flip the two tabled cards face up, and at the same time exert pressure with the right index finger snapping the outer ends of the cards off the tips of the fingers as you turn the hand in a clockwise direction. The double card will be automatically gripped between the thumb and indexfinger and the spectators will see an instant change of a black card to a red one at the same time as they see the red faces of the two cards they believed to be black. The full force of the effect is dependent upon the simultaneous appearance of the faces of the three red cards.

By dropping the double card on top of the pack, turning the red card face down, and dropping the other two cards face down on top of the pack the effect can be repeated immediately. This time the change will be reversed — from red to black.

THE PISCATORIAL PEG

In this effect the performer in attempting to find a card previously selected produces one which the spectator denies to be the one he chose. A clothes peg, to which a ribbon is attached, is clipped onto this wrong card while the spectator shuffles the rest of the pack. The pack is then placed into a paper bag which is then shaken by the spectator to further mix the cards before dropping in the clipped card leaving the ribbon dangling outside. The performer, holding the bag invites the spectator to pull the ribbon and when the card in the peg emerges it is seen to have changed into the one selected.

The plot is simple and uncomplicated and on that account easily understood by those watching, but most important of all it gets good audience reaction, and that is all that really matters.

You will require a clothes peg — a plastic one is best — and if you can get one which has holes in the part you squeeze to open it so much the better. It will save making one or finding some other means of attaching the ribbon to the peg. You will also need a piece of double sided transparent sticky tape which is affixed to one leg of the peg and a pack of cards.

With the above properties to hand you are ready to perform. A good idea is to have the paper bag and beribboned peg in your right coat pocket where they are readily available when required.

Begin by having a card chosen and brought to the top using whatever method you wish. Alternatively, a card could be forced and the pack given to be shuffled after which you run through the pack to find it and cut it to the top.

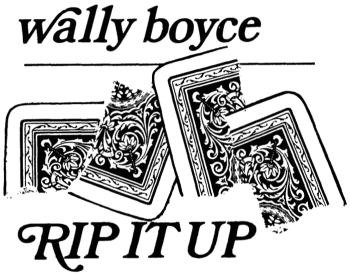

Whichever method is used the trick requires that the chosen card ends up on the top of the pack enabling you to double lift and turn the double face up leaving it projecting over the end of the pack.

Enquire if it is — or claim it to be — the chosen card, and when the spectator denies that it is the card he chose, obtain the peg and attach it to the double card so that the taped leg comes into contact with the back of the underneath card which is the chosen one. See sketch. This is a simple manner — the overlapping of the card(s) enables it to be done without fumbling. Give the pack to the spectator and retain the peg with cards clipped in the left hand as the right gets the paper bag which is handed to the spectator with a request to drop the pack inside and give it a good shake to make sure that the cards are really well mixed.

Next, take the peg in the right hand and holding it by the free ends show the face of the wrong card to the spectator saying "Are you sure this is not your card." When he replies "No" take the bag from him with the left hand in such a way that the bag is an open condition allowing the right hand to drop the pegged cards inside without hesitation. It is an important part of the presentation that no actions on the part of the performer suggest that anything 'fishy' is taking place as the pegged cards go into the bag — for one very good reason. It is during this action that he squeezes the ends of the peg releasing the wrong card which falls amongst the rest of the pack, the chosen one being retained by the sticky tape until the jaws of the peg close over it. The audience get the impression of the pegged cards being dropped — which they are, but not until the card(s) are almost out of sight as they enter the bag.

The bag is held by the performer and the end of the ribbon handed to the spectator who, after being asked the name of the chosen card is requested to slowly pull the ribbon. When the pegged card emerges from the bag it is seen to be the one selected.

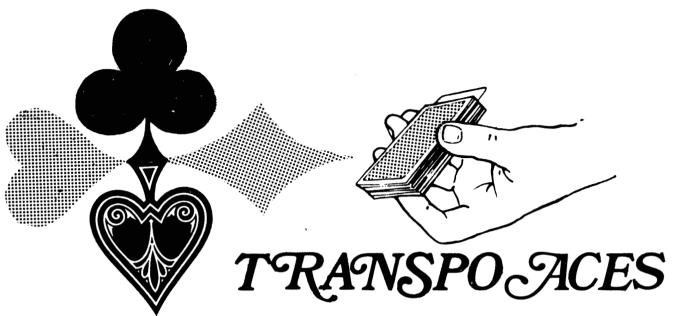

- WITH UNPREPARED PACK

In the April issue of Pabular there is an effect by Archie McIntyre called "RIP IT UP". This uses a duplicate card in the pack, but I have worked out a version which requires an unprepared pack. The effect is slightly different but there is no forcing and otherwise the sleights are the same.

- 1. Have a Joker or the Ace of Spades on top of the pack. In these instructions we will presume it is the A.S.
- 2. 2 cards are chosen from the spread pack—ask spectators that one be Black and one Red, for contrast, and have them shown around to be remembered. Will presume that they are the King of Hearts and the 7 of Clubs.
- 3. Have them replaced face down on top of the pack, first the Black one and then the Red one on top.
- 4. Turn over the top card it is the K.H. and have it confirmed as being the first spectator's card. Double lift, taking the face down 7.C. with it, and then turnover the next card, which is the A.S. and say to the second spectator "This must be yours." He will deny this and you will claim that you will have to find it. Turn over the 2 (really 3) cards face down and cut the pack.

- 5. Spread the pack and the 7.C. is then found face up in the middle. State that you will now have to get the K.H. to turn face up.
- 6. Larreverse 7.C. with the card above it (A.S.).
- Spread pack and A.S. is found face up no success.
- 8. Larreverse and 7.C. found face up.
- 9. Larreverse again and A.S. is found face up, but still no K.H.
- 10. Remove A.S. from pack to table pushing the card below it to the bottom of the top half of pack and cutting top half to bottom (the order is now K.H. on bottom and 7.C. just above it).
- 11. Have A.S. signed on face by a spectator.
- 12. Hold pack in Right hand and take a break above the K.H. with right thumb. Swivel cut top half of pack letting it drop on to the Left hand and have the signed A.S. placed face up on top of it. Using the cards in the Right hand, flip the signed card face down letting the K.H. fall on top of the A.S. as per ADD ON move. Place the cards remaining in Right hand under those in Left hand.
- 13. Double lift to show signature, turn face down and deal K.H. on to the table (they think it is the signed A.S.).
- 14. State that you are going to mark the A.S. still further and tear it in four pieces with the back facing the audience. "They don't make cards like they used to."
- 15. The position now is that the 7.C. is on the bottom of the pack, the A.S. on top and the torn K.H. face down on table.
- 16. Reverse bottom card in process of preparing for overhand shuffle (Expert Card Technique p.110).
- 17. Shuffle about half way through the pack with faces to audience. Turn pack face down and spread. Again you have found the 7.C. reversed but not the K.H.
- 18. A.S. is the card below the 7.C. after the shuffle. Slide it across under the 7.C. so it becomes the bottom card of the right hand (top) half of pack and ends up above the 7.C.
- 19. Larreverse, saying that this is your last attempt, spread pack and A.S. shows face up, still signed.
- 20. The climax comes when torn pieces are picked up and found to be the K.H.

Remove the four aces from pack forming them into a face up pile in alternate colours which for the sake of clarifying the description we will assume that the order from the top downwards is AD-AC-AH-AS.

Hold the pack face up in the left hand and push the Aces in the pack in different positions, but in the same order, and bring them to the bottom using the Multiple Shift. When the pack is turned face downwards the Aces will be in reverse order viz. AS-AH-AC-AD.

Overhand shuffle the pack undercutting about half, injog one card and shuffling the remainder off at random.

Hold the pack face down in the left hand between the pad of the thumb on one long side and the second, third and fourth fingers on the other. The index finger is bent underneath. (See Fig.1). The right hand, with fingers at the outer end and thumb at the inner squares the cards, and in so doing adjusts the injogged card so that it extends at the inner end leaving it protruding for no more than a quarter of an inch. The left thumb now moves from its position to the outer left corner the index finger remaining bent beneath the pack. The pack is now in the correct position for performing the left thumb count.

Explaining that you will now attempt to locate the Aces, riffle down with the left thumb until the pack breaks at the injogged card which acts as a temporary corner short. The right thumb now enters the break and executes a centre double lift taking the two cards below the break as one. This card(s) is placed face up on the face down pack overlapping the rear end thus hiding the injogged card. From the point of view of the audience you have located the AH. Turn the AH with the AS hidden beneath it face down and deal the AS face down onto the table. This leaves the AH, which the audience believe to be on the table, on top of the pack.

Continue by saying "Having found the AH let's see if we can find the other red ace." Repeat the riffle down and centre double lift finding the AD which is placed face up on top of pack to display before turning it/them face down and appearing to deal it (actually the AC) face down onto the table. The position at this stage is that the two red aces are on top of the pack and two cards on the table are the black aces. The audience believe the opposite to be true.

It is now required that one of the red to be at the bottom of the pack and the other at the top. Personally, I achieve this by double undercutting and at the same time pushing the injogged locator flush with the pack.

Hold the pack in the left hand — thumb on the back of the top card and fingers on the face of the bottom card taking care not to flash the bottom card which would spoil the climax.

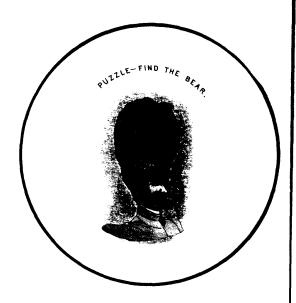

Smartly toss the pack from the left hand into the right retaining the top and bottom cards (the red aces) with pressure. Show the cards in hand to be the red aces and turn over the tabled black aces for the surprise ending.

SOURCES

The centre double lift is the brainchild of Jack Avis and was first described in the Pentagram. A further description appears in the Martin Nash book 'Any Second Now'.

The use of an injogged card as a temporary corner short locator is hopefully mine.

I nearly started off this article by saying that Jay Marshall is back in town, but I seem to recall having used that phrase before several times, so I won't, although it is a fact that the 'Chicago Gigolo' is back in town. He is here, ostensibly, to appear at a puppet festival which is being held here in London soon. Could you believe that? They've brought him all the way from the USA to perform his Paunch and Judy before a European audience. Still, it gives him an excuse to offer the Fabulous Fran for disappearing for a few weeks, although in the past he has never seemed to need an excuse.

You may be wondering why I have even bothered to raise the name of this Wandering Westerner. Well, I have a very good reason which will be of lasting interest to everyone who reads this magazine and is interested in performing close-up magic. Some of you do perform, don't you? Tucked neatly under the right arm of the aforementioned Marshall is a copy of a book newly published by Magic Incorporated, a company of which you-knowwho is president in name only. The book is The Encyclopedia of Impromptu Magic by Martin Gardner. This is, in fact, a reprint of all the articles on this subject which were published under this author's name in Hugard's Magic Magazine. It was no more than a few weeks ago that someone said to me 'Do you think that Jay will ever publish the Encyclopedia of Impromptu Magic?' and I replied 'Naaaaw, you know what Jay's like, he's been talking about it for years but I doubt if he will ever get around to it.' And lo and be-damned here he is with the proof of the pudding ready to eat, and it's great.

I remember reading the original articles when they first appeared but to have them all in one volume to browse through at your leisure brings pleasure beyond measure and you'll treasure the book forever and that's almost the worst line I have ever written but William McGonagle would have liked it and if you don't know who he was you should be ashamed of yourself, especially if you are Scottish. To return to the T.E.O.I.M. for a moment, it is a big book, beautifully bound, gold lettering on the spine and retails for $25.00 which in real money is 12½ pounds although no doubt there should be another couple of pounds on top for mailing such a large book all the way from the Colonies. See what I do for my friends? (I'm talking about Fran, not Jay). So if I haven't mentioned your book now you know why.

Come to think of it, while I'm in the mood for plugging various products I would like to thank all the people who have written complimenting me on two recent tape recordings I did for Sound of Magic, namely my Sponge Ball and Three Card routines. It would be impossible to write to all of them as there are too many but all I can do is say 'Thanks fella's, I deserve it.' I have another two routines on the stocks at this very moment which you will no doubt be hearing about soon I hope. In fact sooner than you may think, like in this issue!

Question time. Who has got the British rights to the Floating Bank Note? Several dealers seem to be claiming this honour but whoever it is, my compliments. It's great. I like it. It's one of the cutest ideas I have seen in years and it's so simple I wish I had thought of it. Maybe I will.

JEFF BUSBY PRESENTS JOE PORPER'S Copyright © 1979 by Jeff Busby

THE GHOST RING is an incredible set of rings for those who have always wanted to perform a three ring Linking Ring routine.

With our precision-made set, you can hold a ring in each hand and with no change in position or secret movement, the rings will visibly link! The rings can be shown openly at all times—there is nothing to conceal. THE GHOST RING can be used effectively within a few feet of the spectators without fear of detection. Truly beautiful magic, beautifully made.

We provide everything needed to develop your own routine or add some "killer" effects to your existing routine. Included is a set of three large (10 inch diameter) hollow, stainless steel linking rings, one of which is uniquely constructed so that it appears to be solid, but it will link or unlink in any direction, at any time. visibly, without any covering at all. The rings just seem to float through each other. There is nothing to hide or see. Included with the set of rings is a special naugahyde carrying case, padded on the inside to protect your set. To top it all off, we include a fully illustrated, typeset booklet giving complete details of various penetrations and effects possible only with THE GHOST RING, as developed by Earl Nelson and others.

LARRY WEST'S

The Whole Thing is a magical example of just how confusing the English language can be at times...... Particularly, if you do not watch, while you are listening!

Watch...and listen...as Larry West explains a magical misunderstanding with four whole cards.

If you watch carefully you will understand that he really means two whole cards and two Hole cards, (cards with holes punched through them).

Larry demonstrates that placing a Hole card over a coloured Whole card gives the appearance of spot card. . . and indeed it is a spot card!

Next he proves that he also has a card with lots of spots printed on it, as well as a whole spot card. . .and a spot card with a hole in it!

The fact that he ends up with a whole card with the word "H-O-L-E" printed upon it is wholly confusing. . .

In a very short time you will enjoy explaining to your friends. . . THE WHOLE THING!

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED

CHICAGO - JANUARY 1979

I've always had rotten luck — y'know the sort of bloke that buys a non-stick saucepan and can't peel off the label, keeps a praying mantis and discovers it's an atheist, loses all his money behind a show starring Astaire and Rogers — that's Ginger Astaire and Fred Rogers. So I guess it was no surprise to me when my company (that's the day job fellas) sent me to Chicago for a week, during the worst weather they've had in 40 years. Believe me, it was so cold monkeys were running around looking for welders. It was 28° below (don't ask me below what, I couldn't feel a thing) in fact, the last time I was as cold as this was on my visit to the windy city in 1977.

This time, however, I'd taken the precaution of forearming myself with a few names and addresses, and for the benefit of future visitors to Chicago, here are some names with a nine-point blue print on how to play on the generous nature and hospitality of these Chicagoans.

Phil Wilmarth, now this is the guy that wrote that terrific Schulien book, the Charlie Miller book — the Linking Ring Parades and much else. He does a great lecture, inspired by Joyce McKinney, called 30 minutes with a ring and some rope (talking of Joyce — and who isn't, I tried to get across to the Jewish Mormon town — Salt Beef City). I hope we get a chance to see Phil over in the UK, how about it Ron, or Bill, or Jack? Now Phil is a kindly, retiring anglophile who can't refuse to book you for a lecture or two even if you only drop the merest of hints. He's never been to the UK, so give him the baloney about English castles, muffins, pubs, Shakespeare etc and you're in.

Jay Marshall. S'no use trying to con Jay with the romantic England bit — he knows it for what it is, despite which he still spends half his time here. You can rely on Jay to pick you up at the airport, loan you hat, scarf, gloves, suitcase and up to $1,000 with no collateral.

He'll miss appointments to drive you round, and under the slightest pretext will take you to the Domino Lounge to see the funniest, filthiest comic/pianist in the USA. This is a must. Be prepared to answer questions such as "what are anchovies?" "What is white and black and has a dirty last name?" Jay has a vertical library — books filed in chronological order, (that is by date they were bought not published) in piles on the floor.

Jerry Schnepp — this bloke is a full time engineer and a hard working semi-pro. If he invites you to his home — go. Try to get him to sort a few obscure things out in his magic den, while you stay in the dining room and chat up his wife, Donna. Believe me lads, this Donna is something else — looks a million dollars and can she cook spaghetti bolognese! Beautiful (and so is the spaghetti bolognese) plus a large cold bottle of Souva, what a night! Jerry is the entertainments secretary of the Master Magicians Club and he'll provide you with 40 odd souls to talk at.

The Master Magicians Club — this happy bunch will go out of their way to eenvince you that they understand your jokes and like your tricks. Some of them will even buy your lecture notes, so try to meet them.

Gene Anderson — a shy, quiet, introvert who, if he knows you are in Chicago will stay over for an extra day just to whisper "howdy". It's no use encouraging him to retire early, because he is one of the prime movers after the show in luring you to "The Barn".

"The Barn" is where you are exposed to Eddie Spence. An Irish magician with a funny line in chat, and some crazy tricks. He does card relevations that will knock your eyes out — and the haunted handkerchief with two randy fleas that will get you acquainted with the girl on the next bar stool (and roars from the crowd). Eddie is almost unknown — and is fond of telling you that he eventually wants to take lessons from a real magician. If he only knew! Believe me, he's the funniest, most polished close-up worker I have ever seen!

Ben Martin. Ben spent a few weeks in England and reckons he owes us something. S'pity his charming wife talks so much, boy does she go on! If there's anything you want — books, mags, information, Ben's your boy.

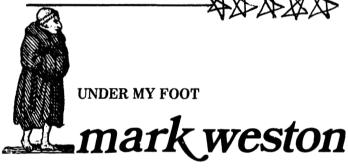

George Johnstone. Despite his links to one McComb, George is not a bad lad. He'll do anything for you providing you're armed with a bottle of Irish Mist or Baileys Irish Cream. He threatens to come to the UK in 1979 so he should be obligated to us if you go soon. Try and get an hour or two in his library, it's the most comprehensive collection of comedy books I've seen outside Hansard.

Dick Jarrow. Jarrow's the geezer that practically runs the Chicago Historical Society. For two (Andrus linking) pins he'll give you a conducted tour of the exhibits, including the buffalo skin playing cards and the Abe Lincoln bullet catch. If you're not careful he'll load you up with pamphlets, books on magic and on Chicago, take you to fine restaurants and entertain you at his lovely home. He's just completed a tour teaching magic in Alaska aided and abetted by his charming lady, Jeanne. If you can fix it, try to be there when his knockout daughter, Janie, is home with 5 of her college students — with a crowd like that you could get extasied to death.

So there you have it. All the above facilities have been tested and awarded a five-star rating.

When you're in Chicago, get mixed up with any, or all, of them, I'll guarantee that the warmth of their welcome will make you forget the snow drifts, the storms, and the 20° wind chill factor.

Certain effects in magic can only be shown to one person at a time by their very nature, this item falls into that category and I use it as a gag although if correctly performed the item is quite baffling to the lay man.

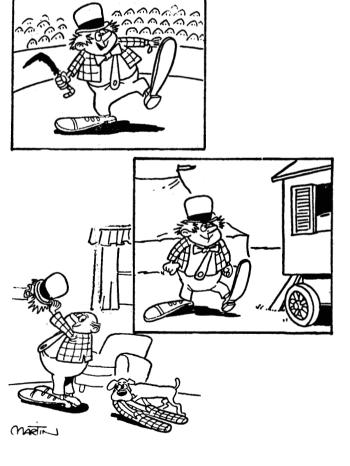

Requirements: The ability to palm a card really well.

Working: You meet a friend on the street or anywhere else where you are away from the main throng and have him select a card and remember the card without your knowledge after which the card is returned to the pack and controlled then palmed in the right hand... the pack is handed to the spectator for him to give the cards a really good hard long shuffle.

At this stage the performer's position is important up until the time that the card is palmed out of the pack the performer is face to face with the spectator. The right hand still holding the palmed card is placed onto the hips and the performer then turns at ninety degrees to the spectator with the palmed card away from the spectator's side.

Now the right hand goes inside the right side of the trousers band AND TO THE REAR... the hand releases the card which will ALWAYS FALL DOWN THE LEG ON THE RIGHT SIDE OF THE PERFORMER TO THE GROUND. Note... the card must always fall to the rear of the centre line of the performer's right leg when released arriving alongside the performer's RIGHT FOOT. All that is required is for the performer to glance downwards WITHOUT MOVING THE FACE (EYES ONLY) and move his right foot over the top of the card. Spectator is still directed to shuffle some more... then keep looking into his eyes as you ask him to name his chosen card assuming he says for example "nine of clubs"... you immediately reply "IT'S UNDER MY FOOT"... BUT DO NOT MOVE YOUR FOOT TO REVEAL THE CARD... He will just not believe it... just keep looking him in the eyes and again say "IT'S UNDER MY FOOT"... this time he will look at your foot and this time you move the right foot to the left revealing the chosen card. The strength of this lies in the fact that the performer never bends down, or looks at or goes near his own right foot... one needs to be an actor to some extent... but I know that will not worry anyone... we are all actors to some extent even the none magicians and laymen.

Correctly presented this is a nice reputation maker, and also makes a change.

For this effect you will require a pack of cards with a blank faced card with the same back design. On the blank side write the word OUCH in bold letters and smear two opposite corners with magicians wax on the same side. Only just enough wax should be used to cause the card to adhere lightly to the second card of the pack where it is placed. This done you are ready to go.

Invite a lady and gentleman to assist you — a husband and wife team is ideal, or other loving couple. Tell them that they are going to take part in an experiment in 'selective control' which should confuse everyone for a start.

Shuffle the pack retaining the 'double' card at the top. Spread the cards face down and ask the lady to take one and look at it and show it to other spectators, but on no account must the man see it. Say "This is how it's always been" — the lady selects and the man has to find — she selects a mink coat, he has to find the money.

Have the card replaced by undercutting half the pack taking the card on top of the 'double' and run three on top of the selection, injog the next card and shuffle off. Undercut at the injog to bring the three indifferent cards to the top of the pack followed by the chosen card and then the 'double'.

Tell the man that shortly he will be able to find his wife's card by a process of elimination — the cards, not his wife. First he will cause the card to rise to a position near the top of the pack. Place the pack face down on the lady's hand and tell the man to press down on the pack with his forefinger. Congratulate him on moving the card from the bottom half to the top half. Cut off about half the pack and place the bottom half aside.

Replace the upper half back onto the lady's hand and ask the man to press his finger on top again. Pick up the cards and say "I think it's near the top—let's see." Thumb over the first four cards plus the double into the right hand keeping them in the same order face down and then turn them face up onto the rest of the cards. The 'double' is now face up on top with the selection next.

Tell the lady that you will show her the five? cards, and should she see her card she must not indicate which it is. Hold the cards in the right hand in the Biddle position and pull off the double into the left hand as you count 'one'. Pull off the next card, the chosen one, onto the double counting 'two'.

As you pull off the next card pick up the chosen card under half packet in the usual Biddle manner — count 'three'. Pull off the next two cards singly as you count 'four' and 'five'. Ask the lady if she saw her card and she will (hopefully) answer "Yes". The selected card is now face up on the bottom of the face down cards in the right hand. Put this half on top of the half placed aside earlier and give them to the man asking him to put them in his right coat pocket.

Turn the five card packet face down and separate the 'double' as you take them singly from the left hand with the right reversing their order in the process. The 'OUCH' card is now on the bottom of the packet. Keeping the packet face down mix the cards retaining the 'OUCH' card on the bottom.

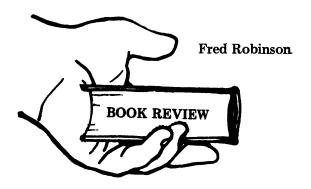

Explain to the man that you will place the packet on his left palm face down, and by curling his fingers the cards will stay in position when he turns his hand over. Demonstrate this with one card from the top of the packet — you are actually showing how to palm cards, but don't mention palming. What you require is for the cards to be held securely in his left hand so that he can turn it palm down without the cards falling.

Place the cards in position and tell him to turn his hand palm down holding it about chest high. Now ask him to reach under his palm with his right hand and carefully remove one card. Ask the lady if it is her card — she'll say "No". Get him to repeat this three more times, leaving one card — apparently the chosen one. Instruct him to keep the card in position and congratulate him on finding her card by selective control.

Now say that her card will disappear from his hand — and ask him to show that the card is still there turning his hand over. Next tell him to turn his hand palm down, and with the right hand first slap the back of it, then slap the right coat pocket — saying that this will make the card disappear. A lot of fun can be had when his hand is poised daintily in the air by saying to the lady "Did you know he was like that" and as he slaps his hand "I've heard of being gay, but a gay masochist.....never." Get him to repeat the action twice more — still the card fails to disappear.

Finally request him to clap both hands together, and then open them. The 'OUCH' card will show getting a good laugh and as it is freely displayed the audience will realise that the chosen card has vanished. Next direct the man to remove the cards from his pocket and thumb through them face up, and remove the face down card which has somehow arrived in the centre of the pack. Ask the lady to name her card and request the man to display the face of the card he has removed — it's hers. Climax.

FRED BRAUE ON FALSE DEALS. Edited by Jeff Busby. Available only from Busby Enterprises. Price 12 Dollars 50. Plus postage.

During his last years Fred Braue was working on what was to be yet another book on card magic. Unfortunately death intervened before it was ready for publication. The book under review records the material from his notes appertaining to false deals and tricks using these particular sleights.

It is in six sections, the first contains his previously unpublished method for dealing tops, seconds and bottoms using the same grip. That an identical grip is used both in normal and false dealing in itself is only of merit if the method of holding the pack is sufficiently normal in appearance to prevent spectators from noticing that the pack is being held in a special manner. In the Braue method it is held in the mechanic's grip which is in general use by card men, though I have yet to see it used by anyone other than magicians. However that is a minor criticism and will be ignored by habitual users of this grip.

The chapter begins with instructions on how to take the top card when dealing normally, and proceeds with explaining how to deal seconds and bottoms using the same action. The end result is that there is no variance when dealing seconds and bottoms from the regular deal. Mr Braue considered that the above system of false dealing was a vast improvement upon the deals described in Expert Card Technique published in 1940. Only time will tell if the system is of real value to cardmen by the number who adopt it. It would be presumptive to pass a snap judgement on the method without devoting some considerable time to its study. However, it is possible to express the opinion that the system is eminently practical, and worthy of study by anyone desirous of mastering these false deals. It may also be the answer to those who have not yet found a satisfactory method.

Also in this first section is an excellent method for double dealing and one-handed deal.

Section Two comprises two letters to the late Gus Southall, the well known British card expert. These contain further technical details on the second deal which will prove valuable to those having problems in understanding the technique explained in the first section plus a 'no miss' second which is easy to miss if you are a careless reader.

A popular effect using false deals which became a regular item in the repertoire of many cardmen after the publication of Bill Simon's Effective Card Magic was aptly called 'Call to the Colors'. Section Three gives Braue's handling and Gus Southall's routine for this effect.

Section Four gives fourteen effects dependent upon false deals and is the part of the book which will be welcomed by those readers seeking effects with which to use false deals. This is an important part of the book as the number of effects published which make use of false dealing is relatively small. These effects are varied and offer an Impromptu Poker Deal. The Self-Arranging Pack in which from a shuffled pack the dealer reveals a ten spot to be tenth down, a four at the fourth position etc and is also able to name the card at a number given by a spectator. Dealing the Aces is a feat in which the dealer finds the aces at numbers called for. Middle Deal Demonstration is not a middle deal, but is accepted as such by the onlookers. The Punch Deal enables the performer to deal until a spectator calls stop a freely selected card is found at the top of the pack at this point. In Four Ace Fooler the performer fails a couple of times in his attempt to find the four aces and when he eventually succeeds there is an added surprise. Simpatico is a stop effect using two packs. Two cards change places in Rapid Transit. Flash Cards has a patter theme and in effect a bunch of thirteen cards in mixed condition arrange themselves in numerical order. Dialling the Cards has the effect of causing the top cards of four heaps to represent the spectator's phone number, Count-Down Reverse is another stop trick this time with the spectator's choice replaced face up in the pack. Three Wheeling is a kind of Three Card Trick. The Topdowner is a 'quickie' wherein a chosen card is found at a number in the pack indicated by chance.

The last trick is a Gus Southall speciality. The performer appears to memorise the position of any card in the pack at a given number.

Section Five contains miscellaneous notes on false deals and explains Down's one-handed second deal, FB slow motion seconds, Dr Elliott's second, the bottom deal and second dealing, plus tips on second dealing. The sixth and last section lists notes on the text.

Physically the book consists of 44 8½ by 11 inches pages and spirally bound. It is limited edition of 300 copies numbered in rotation.

For those interested in false dealing and the effects made possible by these sleights it will be found to be a valuable addition to their libraries.

QASIS

Since the article on routining appeared in the Walt Lees issue several readers have expressed the desire for more articles of a similar nature dealing with the presentation of magic in general.

On looking back little has appeared in this magazine on the various aspects of our craft which are of equal importance — and perhaps more so — than the ever increasing number of methods for the same few plots.

One of the most valuable non-trick articles to appear in this magazine can be found in No.7 Vol.1 March 1975 under the caption of 'Professional views on doing professional magic for the layman' the author being non other than Fred Kaps. Now, here was an article of the utmost value to anyone contemplating doing magic for people other than magicians. To this day not one letter has been received commenting on this article, nor was it ever mentioned to me in conversation unless I made a point of asking a reader what he thought of it. The answer received was mostly a blank look or at best some vague comment proving that the advice given had meant nothing to them.

The reaction to an extremely ingenious method for achieving a certain effect was just the opposite. It was quite a talking point when published, but no doubt is now almost entirely forgotten. One of the many readers who praised it highly admitted that he had only performed it for other magicians.

The above example, together with the experience of spending many hours watching and listening to other magicians plus reading published material compells one to conclude that the majority of those interested in magic are not concerned with improving the presentation of their magic, but occupy themselves in evolving new and ingenious methods which generally add nothing to the effect, either by increasing its entertainment value or simplifying its working. The end result of these efforts is that the method employed is often more entertaining than the final effect which may interest magicians but will add nothing whatsoever to the effect from the point of view of the spectators.

If the above assessment has any validity it would seem that the demand for articles angled towards aspects other than the mere secrets of methods would not generally be appreciated by readers.

Despite the above impressions we have included some tricks with presentation details, notably the Oil and Water routine by Tamariz, and currently Tommy Wonder's presentation of the Coins Across. This is the direction we are moving, and will continue to so proceed.

The deadline is approaching — yes we do have one — more next month.

After concluding the first part of this routine described last month there are three silver coins, one copper coin and the lid of the box on the table. The right hand is empty and the box, mouth upwards with a silver coin in the recess rests on the left hand.

There now takes place a brief diversion from the 'Coins Across' theme.

The right hand picks up the copper coin and drops it into the box and then stacks the three silver coins which are placed on the centre of the mat with a little bang. As the silver coins are being handled the attention of the spectators will naturally be on these coins and away from the left hand, which turns the box over retaining the silver coin in the recess. At the conclusion of this move the box should be hidden from the audience by the curved fingers of the left hand. Immediately the three silver coins are stacked the right hand picks up the lid and puts it on the box which it removes from the left hand and gives it a shake causing the silver coin within the recess to rattle. The spectators believe the noise is made by the copper coin which they saw placed into the box earlier. This latter was retained in the left hand when the box was removed by the right.

The box is now placed on the back of the left hand and given a tap with the right index finger and the copper coin in the left released allowing it to fall onto the stack of silver coins, having apparently penetrated both the bottom of the box and hand. The right hand retakes the box and the left hand removes the lid, during which process the box is turned right side up and shown empty. The lid is replaced and the left hand puts the box down on the mat near the left inner corner thus disposing of the extra silver coin which is not required in the second part of the routine. Care must be taken to prevent the coin in the recess from talking — a knack easily acquired.

The second part dispenses with the box and the extra coin. Some humour is introduced when it is claimed that the copper coin will pass from one hand to join the silver coins in the other, but to the performers obvious bewilderment the reverse occurs and the silver coins persist in passing across to join the copper coin. The amount of fun extracted from the situation in which the performer loses control depends on his ability to act convincingly, and that he is unable to account for the perverse activities of the coins.

At the conclusion of the penetration effect, and as the box is being placed on the table, the right hand picks up the three silver coins and the body turns to inform a spectator on your left that you will now cause the copper coin to fly. Again, as in the first part it becomes a natural action for the right hand to toss the silver coins into the left leaving the right free to pick up the copper coin. Actually only two are thrown, the one retained being pressed into the classic palm position as the copper is picked up with the thumb and index finger.

Hold both hands well apart and announce that the copper coin will pass to join the silver ones. Pause a moment for effect, and flip the copper coin into the air and catch it in the left hand. This bit of fun business will 'break' the spectator's thought and they will forget that the right hand ever touched the silver coins. Look at the audience as if to convey 'isn't it marvellous'.

Still keeping the hands apart say that the copper coin will fly back invisibly. Shake the left hand and mime a catching action with the right. Open the right hand to reveal a silver coin. With an expression of unconcealed amazement quickly open the left hand and drop one silver and the copper onto the table and in the meantime the right has also placed its silver coin onto the table. Because a silver coin is lying on the open left palm it is logical for the right to pick up the copper, which the performer examines as if to ascertain why it did not fly. It is then dropped onto the fingers of the open left hand to join the silver which is resting on the palm. A second silver coin is apparently dropped into the left hand, but actually retained in the right and the click pass as described by Tamariz in his book 'Monedas y Monedas' performed. In this sleight the right hand appears to drop the coin onto the two already on the open left hand and in the same action closes the left fingers over the three (really two) coins. Briefly, the right hand retains its coin as it hits the back of the left fingers and closes them over the two coins which causes the copper coin lying on the left fingers to fall onto the silver resting on its palm with an audible clink. The illusion is perfect. The right hand classic palms the retained coin as it picks up the remaining silver one from the table.

Hold the hands apart and shake the left. Release the palmed coin in the right hand letting it fall onto the other one it holds making the familiar clink. Open both hands to reveal two silver in the right hand and a copper and silver in the left. Once again the copper has refused to fly.

It is now necessary to get the last remaining silver from the left hand into the right at a time when the audience, having seen the first two pass, will be anticipating that the silver remaining in the left hand will join the others in the right hand. Advantage is taken of this fact by introducing a subterfuge reminiscent of the methods used by the late John Ramsay.

Proceed by closing the right hand into a tight fist enclosing the two silver coins it holds, and then with its thumb and index finger pick up the copper coin from the left hand saying "Normally the copper coin really does fly" as you display it. Now for the subtle bit. Replace the copper coin back on the left hand, and in so doing cover the silver coin with the right hand and create suspicion in the minds of the spectators that it is stolen with the right hand as it moves away. The left hand is then closed into a fist with the copper and one silver inside. Care must be taken that the silver coin you have led them to think has been stolen by the right is not seen on the left hand after the right has moved away.

As you prepare to make one more attempt to cause the copper to fly from the left hand to the right pretend to become aware of the audiences suspicion that 'things are not what they seem'. Open the left hand to show it contains the copper and a silver coin and with the index finger of the right hand move them around a little to demonstrate that things are really what they seem. The real purpose of this action is to make sure that the silver coin is correctly positioned ready for the Han Ping Chien move, when the fingers are closed over the coins. Show that the right contained only two silver coins by performing the Han Ping Chien move which leaves a copper coin in the left hand, a silver in the right and two silver on the table. Pick up the two tabled silver coins with the right hand. Cause the third silver coin to pass repeating the same actions used to transport the two previous coins, still pretending that you are trying to make the copper coin fly.

The use of the Han Ping Chien in the above context is extremely effective as it is performed at the moment when people are relaxed and amused at having unfounded suspicious regarding the performers actions, or so they think.

The last phase of the routine is the last part of Ross Bertram's Passing the Buck described in the Stars of Magic series. In this effect the three silver coins return to the left hand — so the copper coin still does not fly.

Next month I will explain an effect which I only perform for audiences who have not seen it previously. It nicely follows the above routine, and it is entitled 'One in the Eye'.

TERRITORY

The following is a simple effective piece of close-up card mentalism, which can be done with a borrowed deck. Until the last moment, you never see the faces of the cards, which adds to the mystery.

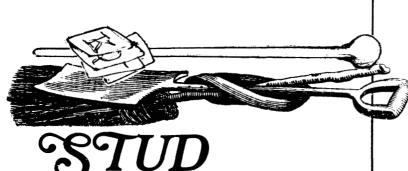

Have the spectator shuffle the pack. Take the deck, and slowly run the cards from your left hand to your right, instructing the spectator to touch the back of any card. When this has been done, openly jog the indicated card forward for about half its length. Continue running through the deck, and have four more cards touched, also jogging them forward. Square up the pack, and spread the jogged cards (still leaving them in their respective locations in the pack). Raise your hand so that the face of the pack is towards the spectator, allowing the spectator a clear view of the five spread upjogged cards. Instruct the spectator to merely think of any one of these randomly chosen five.

State, "We'll re-mix the cards, scattering these five cards — and all of the others — into new and random locations" This you apparently do, by Hindu Shuffling the pack. In fact, you utilize any of the standard Strip-Out techniques to secretly control the five outjogged cards to the bottom of the pack. Continue shuffling the pack, retaining this group at the face of the deck. Cut or shuffle five or six cards to the face of the pack — so that the group of five cards is near, rather than at, the face of the pack.

Hand the deck to the spectator. Explain that you wish the spectator to remove five cards from the pack — one being the thought-of card, the others being any four cards from anywhere in the pack. While the spectator is doing this, observe which of the five removed cards is taken from the portion near the face. This will be the thought-of selection. Thus, when the cards are handed to you, you will immediately know which is the one to go for — but don't jump at it... take your time, so as to convince the audience that the selection is being identified through mental (rather than physical) processes.

It is your attitude which will sell this effect. The spectator must believe that the initial five cards are genuinely lost during the shuffling, and thus that you've no clues to go on.

There is little doubt that an effective top change can produce a very strong magical illusion, but how does one DO the sleight? While the mechanics of this change have been well documented, some authors argue that the move should be covered by a natural action of sorts, while others believe that the cover should be in the form of appropriate misdirection. In the trick described below the necessary misdirection is built into the effect.

The magician explains that he rarely plays card games because it is too easy to win. He offers to demonstrate his point with a game of one card stud poker where opponents cut for the highest card.

The pack is shuffled and the spectator cuts first. He cuts to King, which is placed face downwards onto the table. The magician then cuts to a Jack. Undaunted at losing the magician says he will change the spectators King to a card of lower value. He holds the Jack face up and rubs it on the back of the face down King which is then turned over. It has changed into a Queen. The spectator will point out that his Queen still beats the performers Jack. When this observation is made our hero says that when he turned the King into a Queen, he also changed his own Jack into an Ace which is the highest card.

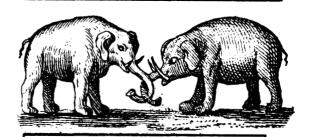

The pack is set up with a King on top followed by a Queen, Jack and Ace in that order. The suits are immaterial.

The King is forced, using the well known cut force, and after the spectator has cut the pack into two piles, pick up the original top half and flip the King face up. Turn it face and second the Queen face downwards onto the table saying "It's going to be difficult to beat a King" which provides some cover for the sleight.

Assemble the two halves of the pack with the stack on top, and slip-cut a la Erdnase or Endfield and show you have cut to a Jack. Take this card and hold it face up in a top change grip away from the pack. To change the King? into a card of lower value, rub its back lightly with the face up Jack and move it away a little in preparation for the top change. When the spectator goes to turn over the Queen the hand holding the Jack moves towards the pack, which is held about waist level. As the Queen is being turned over to reveal the change, quietly top change the Jack for the Ace and move it to a position near the Queen... Wait for someone to point out that the Queen still beats the Jack and then say that when you rubbed the cards together (suit the action to the words with the Ace face downwards) you also changed your card to one of higher value. Show the Ace.

The precise moment to make the change will come with experience and it should appear to the spectators that the Jack never moved away from the Queen. All movements should be made slowly and casually after the card was rubbed until the face of the Ace is revealed in order to attract attention away from the tabled card. At the moment the change is made the spectators interest will be centred on the tabled card especially as it is being turned over when they will be wholly concerned to see if your promise to reduce its value is successful.

THANKS FOR THE MEMORY

EFFECT:

Hand out a pack of cards for a spectator to shuffle and remark that there are persons who claim to be able to memorise the order of a shuffled pack, and others who deny that such a feat is possible. Take back the pack and say that you will try an interesting experiment. Run through the pack, pausing at times, suggesting that you are committing the cards to memory, and then place the pack on the table.

Get three spectators to take part in the experiment and ask one of them to give you a number less than fifty-three. You then scribble something on each of three cards, pausing in between for effect. When you finish writing on each card place it blank side uppermost onto the table.

The person who called the number is now asked to deal that number of cards from the top of the pack face downwards into a single pile onto the table. He is then requested to pick up these cards and deal them into three heaps, one for each of them as if to play a hand of cards.

You next hand each assistant a card and ask them in turn to read out aloud the name of the card written on it, and then turn the top card of their heap face up — in each case the card is the one you had written on the blank — proving? that you have a remarkable memory.

REQUIREMENTS:

Any pack of cards, some blank cards or pieces of paper and a writing instrument.

SECRET:

When memorising? the order of the pack after they have been shuffled commit to memory the bottom three as you hold the cards face up—the three which will be at the top when the pack is turned face down. If the procedure is followed as outlined in the description of the effect there will be a memorised card at the top of each heap. The last card dealt will be the top card of the pack before the assistant started dealing the first single heap. This knowledge will enable you to give your assistants the written card which corresponds to their top cards.

The effect should be presented as a feat of memory which in my own experience invariably creates favourable comment. To present it as just a card trick it will have the impact of — just another card trick.

It has been said before, but there seem to be a lot of conventions coming up these days. One that I wanted to catch was the Jack Hughes Weekend that took place recently but unfortunately, due to a clashing of dates, I missed it. This was a great pity. I had been to the first two and I was really looking forward to this one. One of the reasons I wanted to catch it particularly was because they had brought over Bob Olson. The last time I actually saw Bob Olson perform was in 1966 in Chicago, which according to my pocket calculator is 13 years ago. At that time he was performing an act which was more or less a modern day representation of an old time American magician called Richard Potter. At the time I thought he was very good and I was looking forward to him repeating the act at the Jack Hughes Convention. Unfortunately that was not to be but maybe there will be another time.

The next big event on my calendar is the F.I.S.M. Convention in Brussels and I am hoping very much that I will be able to make it. I plan to send my subscription, which makes subscriptions to all other conventions look silly. (I suppose if you spend all that money getting there and staying in hotels, what is another £50 or $100?) One thing you can say about the F.I.S.M. Convention is that you do see acts and meet people from all over the world, many of whom you have only heard about, and as years go by it seems to attract more and more big names in magic.

So what else is new? Not a lot at the moment. I've been so busy recently I haven't had much time to keep up with things magical, apart from what I laughingly call 'my act'.

'My act' - how many times have I heard someone use that phrase? It takes me back to my early days when I used to attend the magic clubs religiously every week, probably because I had nothing better to do, hoping that somehow, somewhere I was going to learn something which could be added to 'my act' and enable me to jump straight on to the stage of the London Palladium in one leap. And do you know something? I used to believe that such things were possible. I believed all those stories originated by Hollywood publicity teams which lead you to believe that Metro, Goldwyn or Meyer (who the hell was Metro) could actually see a beautiful girl in the street, put her in a big budget film and make her a star overnight. I believed it, and if you are honest you probably did too. Come to think of it, why didn't they put out stories like that about handsome young men?

To get back to our tiny segment of the performing arts, do you still think that you are going to find that indefinable 'something' which is going to lift your act into the upper echelons of showbiz? If you are a beginner you probably still have your dreams, if you have been around a few years and still believe you are going to make it big with 'your act' my advice is to forget it. Magic acts are specialities and as such they are supporting acts — not headliners. It seems that today the only way a magician can become a headliner is for him to build a gigantic show and take a chance on finding enough places to work, or to do it through TV. And to do it through TV requires something more than the ability to do the cut and restored umbilical cord.

Just for the hell of it I am going to list below the effects I performed in 'my act' many years ago when I first started performing for money.

Glass of wine production from handkerchief. Thimble routine.

Rising cards

A rigid rope trick.

Card manipulations and productions.

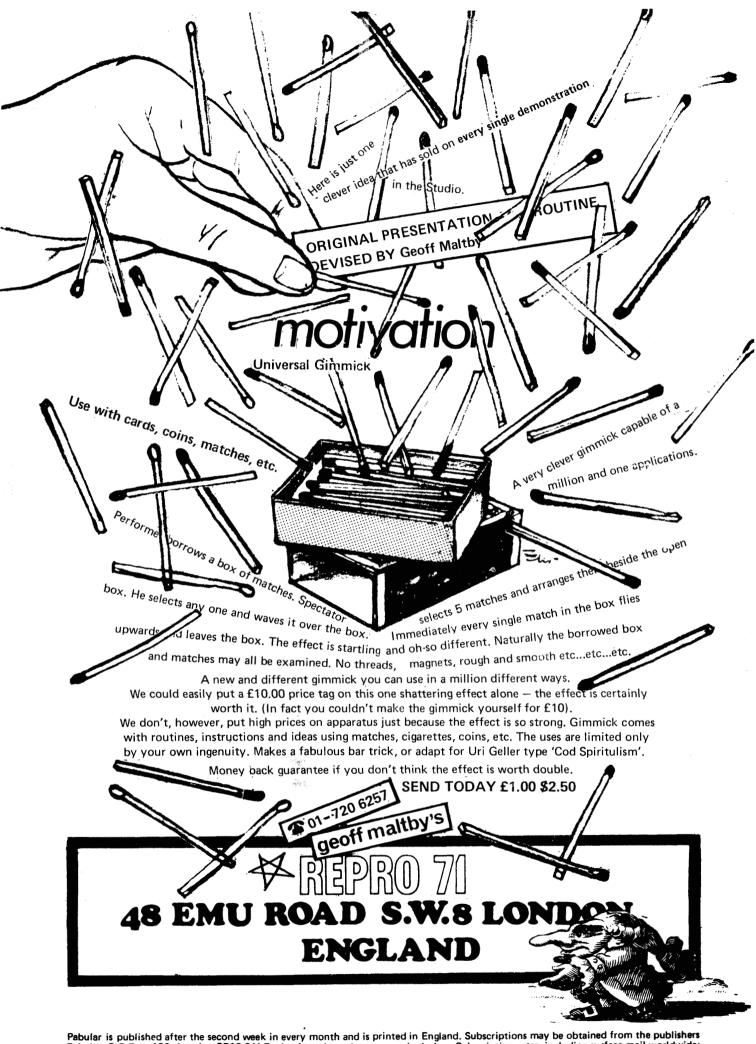

Cards to pocket.

Looking at the above list in retrospect I cannot think of anything I could have added which would have lifted it from the gutter onto the pavement let alone onto a professional platform.

In recent years 'my act' hasn't changed much; a little bit here, a little bit there, but I do make a living which should be the object of the exercise. For the speciality act, survival in luxury should be the aim rather than starvation. At present I am just a survivor, but you never can tell.

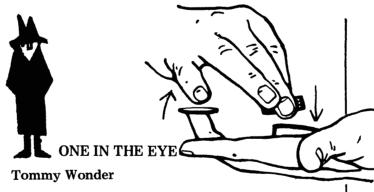

Goodbye

Here is the effect I promised last month which I use to follow the second part of the Coins Across routine but only when performing for people who have not seen it previously because nobody will be fooled by it a second time. The club at which I work regularly has many steady customers so I do not use it every time.

At the end of the second part of the routine, which by the way is similar to a trick of Tamariz, the copper and three silver coins are lying on the table and the other silver coin is in the recessed bottom of the box.

Commence by picking up the box with the silver hidden in the recess, and place it on the left palm. Remove the lid placing it on the table.

The right hand stacks the four coins on the table with the copper on the bottom and picks up the stack and appears to drop all four coins into the box. Actually only the three silver coins go into the box, the copper being retained in the right hand as follows.

As the right hand brings the stack towards the box it passes over the tips of the left fingers which come into contact with the copper coin on the bottom which stays there as the right hand continues on and drops the silver coins into the box. The situation at this point is that the right palm is directly over the copper coin which is resting on the left finger tips. The latter now pushes the copper coin into the right palm which retains it in the classic palm position as the silver coins are being dropped into the box.

The right hand now picks up the lid and during this action the left hand turns inwards and then back to its original position turning the box over in the process. Because the spectators still see a silver coin (now the one in the recessed bottom) all will seem fair. The right hand puts the lid on top of the box, or rather the bottom.

Next ask someone if they would like to see the copper coin escape from the box at the same time taking the box with the right hand leaving the three silver coins in the left hand which closes into a fist and turned back uppermost. The box is then placed onto the back of the left hand and as the right hand moves away the copper coin it holds is allowed to fall from the classic palm position onto the base of the fingers which are curled inwards to catch it.

Continue by saying "When I count one, two, three the copper coin will crawl out of the box on the count of three." As you say this bring the right hand palm outwards up near to the right eye. This gesture is most important for two reasons. It shows the right to be apparently empty – the copper coin will be hidden by the curved fingers - and it is necessary to condition the spectators minds into accepting the gesture as having no part in the deception. Using the phrase 'crawl out of the box' is also important as it is more intriguing than merely to say it will disappear from the box. They will be watching the box intently to see the coin crawl out of the box. Their whole attention will be on the box which is just where you want it to be as you make the count.

When you count one the right hand is near the box. At two it has moved away to a distance about half way between the box and your right eye. You now say two and a half (the old gag) and the coin is near your right eye, and at three it shoots forward towards the box in a magical gesture.

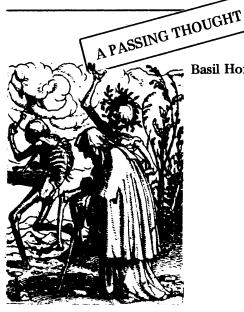

Between the count of two and three the spectators attention on the box will be at its peak, and also, the longer pause between two and three tends to build up the suspense.

The moment something happens is less interesting than the moment just before it happens. So, when the right hand makes the arc-like movement during the counting it can put the coin into the right eye (like a monocle) with impunity at two and a half, because all attention will be concentrated on the box in anticipation of seeing the coin crawl out.

On the count of three as the magical gesture is made drop the three silver coins from the left hand onto the table. The right hand, which is already back near the box removes the lid and turns the box over showing it to be empty.

You now look for the copper coin. Pick up the three silver coins and make a pretense of searching for the copper gradually bringing the hands nearer your face. Still talking about the copper coin having disappeared the spectators will eventually see it in your eye like a monocle. Usually there will be some who fail to notice the coin so just keep talking to them until they see it. Quite often a spectator will look you directly in the face and still not see the coin. When he does eventually see it, the expression on his face causes much amusement to the other spectators.

That concludes the routine which commenced with straight forward coins across and progressed with a perverse effect in which the silver coins passed from one hand to join the copper in the other when the performer apparently wished the copper to pass over to join the three silver. The third part described above brings in a penetration effect plus the re-appearance of a vanished coin in a manner which ends the routine with a laugh, an excellent way to close any routine which consists of a series of what might be called 'serious' magical effects.

Basil Horwitz

I have found the following effect creates a very strong impression on audiences of non-magicians. A mentally chosen card passes from one packet of cards to another — a simple plot easily followed by the spectators and can be performed with any pack with previous preparation.

Commence by having a spectator shuffle the pack and ask him to concentrate on any number between one and five inclusive.

Take back the cards and explain that you are going to take off five cards separately from the top of the pack and that he is to note and remember the name of the card corresponding to the number he thought of.

Hold the pack in the left hand in the normal dealing position getting a little finger break under the top two cards as you tell him what is required of him.

With the right hand — thumb at the inner end and fingers at the outer end — lift off the two top cards as one (the break makes this a simple matter) and show its face to the spectator as you count one. Remind him that if he thought of 'one' he should remember this card. As he is concentrating on your instructions and looking at the card the left thumb pushes the two top cards of the pack slightly over the side of the pack, enabling the left little finger to get a break beneath them as the other fingers closes them back square with the pack.

Replace the double card on the top of the pack, and still maintaining the little finger break, deal one card towards the spectator and a second one near yourself as if playing a two-handed card game. The spectator thinks he has the card he has just seen and you have another one. Actually the reverse is true.

Count two, and repeat the procedure of taking two as one and returning it/them to the top of the pack and dealing one to the spectator and one (the card seen by the spectator) to yourself.

Repeat the above as you count three, four and five, but as you count five the left little finger takes a break under one card only instead of two as previously. This break enables a double card to be dealt without hesitation after dealing the fifth card to the spectator.

The position is now such that the five cards seen by the spectator, which he thinks are in his heap are in yours plus an extra card.

Make your favourite gesture and pick up the spectators packet of five cards and holding them face down in the Biddle position in the right hand, show that it now contains only four cards as follows. With the left thumb pull off three cards singly into the left hand and dropping the remaining two cards as one on top of the three.

Build up a little suspense and remark that you will now see if the missing card is the one he has on his mind.

With the packet held in the left hand face down, turn the top card face up taking a little finger break under the second card as you do so. Take these two cards as one with the right hand thumb at the inner end and fingers at the outer end. Using the left long edge of this double card flip over the new top card in the left hand face up and place it on top of the double in the right, still face up. Repeat with the remaining two cards.

When the spectator admits that the card he is thinking of is missing drop the packet on top of the pack which has been left in a convenient position. On account of the packet having the bottom card face down anyone picking up the pack later will find just four face up cards on top.

You next pick up the other heap and still keeping it face down slowly and deliberately count the six cards. Ask the spectator to name the card he has in mind, and slowly turn the cards face up and show that the very card he thought of has travelled from his packet to yours.

There are numerous individual touches which I have not included — such as having someone place their hand on the pile containing the extra card and then allowing them to count the cards before discovering the mental leaper themselves. However, no doubt readers develop their own presentation — one possibly more suited to their own particular style.

QASIS

One of the rewards of editing a magazine is to become aware that use is being made of the subject matter appearing therein. Under the caption of 'A Plea' in Vol.3 No.10 Bert Graham outlined his ideas on how to organise and run the close-up event at magical conventions. Further observations and suggestions have also appeared in this column.

Points from the above were subsequently discussed with Harry Dewhirst and Bill Lamb, responsible with others for arranging the ever successful Blackpool Magic Club's Annual One-Day Convention. To claim that either the articles or chats had anything to do with the improvement evident in the Close-up event this year would be presumptive, but maybe they helped.

For the record the performers were — Doug Alker, Ken Ashburn, Ali Bongo, Peter Duffie, Al Glennan, Walt Lees, Dave Robertson and Rovi. I cannot report on their acts being occupied at the Pabular stand but was assured that their task had been eased due to the event being split into two sessions with a lengthy break between them. The provision of more tables reduced the number of spectators at each, but this meant that they did not see every performer. The advantages gained, both by the performers and audience, outweigh this small sacrifice which seems to be the only solution possible in the circumstances.

However, such an arrangement does preclude including a feature performer new to registrants as obviously there would be justifiable resentment if such a performer was billed and did not perform at every table. There is no answer to this one. Even a large screen enabling the 'star' to be seen by all would be a complete waste of time. The successful presentation of close-up magic depends on the performer being close up and in contact with the onlookers — not a remote picture on a screen.

There is more to conventions than organised events. Often it is the incidental happenings that one remembers most, and the characters one meets. Geoff Ray was there. He had just finished one cruise and preparing for another, told me he was using 'Dropit', which appeared some time back in this magazine, for vanishing a lighted cigarette, and also that it was possible to stick a square bottle on a flat surface with no visible support. The best use for this stunt I have seen was a chap who stuck a bottle on the wall and hung his hat on it.

Ken Hawes and Vic Allen, both who perform at restaurant tables, one works standing and the other sitting, were in hot debate on this matter which appears to depend on the prevailing conditions. Vic showed a new presentation using the Nudist Pack, an idea of Bob Hamilton's who was also in the group. Bob sent this routine several weeks back for publication — it will appear in the near future. Rovi, who has been booked to appear in Brussels at the FISM Congress 26 June/1st July 1979, was there and gave permission to publish some items he is currently using — more practical material for a future issue.

Continuing with conventions — they will soon be a weekly occurence -- Juan Tamariz informs me that the sixth Journados de El Escorial will take place from Nov. 2nd to Nov. 4th. This event is one of the greatest value to card workers. Limited to less than fifty registrants different aspects of card magic are dealt with in depth. A lecturer is provided for each subject — which last year were — Rising Cards, Torn Cards, Palms and Palming, and Routining Card Tricks. Following each lecture registrants joined in by either performing or giving further information on the subject under discussion. The end result of this procedure is a mass of specialised information, which together with seeing the effects performed one is able, both to obtain the maximum amount of 'knowhow' on the subject and to see the different presentations from the point of view of the audience. It is difficult to visualise how a more beneficial method of instruction could be devised other than personal instruction.

The most entertaining presentation of the Three Card I have ever had the pleasure to see was performed by Tamariz in The Magic Place some three months ago. Thanks to Juan's generosity it will appear in Pabular with full presentation details.

In Wayne Dobson's first lecture notes an ace cutting routine which ended with the backs of the cards changing to different back designs entitled 'Marked Cards'. Someone thought it was good, because it is now available from Ken Brooke price £3.50 retitled 'Oblivion'. It must be cheap at the price unless you already have about forty packs with different back designs.

Here's a stunt which should get you drink on your next visit to your local. Drop three coins onto the palm of your victim's hand and get him to cup his other hand over them. Take another coin and vanish it saying to the spectator you now have four coins. He will open his hands and seeing the same three coins will disagree. Insist that he has four and he will again maintain that he has only three. Say "Will you buy me a drink if I am wrong." Almost for certain he will agree. When he does tell him what to buy you—because you are wrong. Give thanks to Fred Snooks who caught yours truly with it. More next month.

BOB READ

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF IMPROMPTU MAGIC by Martin Gardner. Published by Magic Inc, Chicago, Ill 60625

It's arrived at last — the long awaited compilation of Martin Gardner's series from Hugards Magic Monthly is here.

During the late 50's and early 60's I recall many a discussion centreing around the inestimable value of the "EIM" to the aspiring crop of close-up workers. Without exception everyone agreed that it was the most comprehensive collection of gags, stunts and magic tricks with everyday objects extant and that it deserved preservation within one set of covers.

Then towards the end of the 60's rumours that the book was about to be published began to circulate.

About 1973 or so I began to despair of ever seeing it, and at enormous expense bought a complete file of Hugards. I even planned to write to Mr Gardner to seek permission to republish the articles in book form. Then I heard that Jay Marshall was involved and that he intended to do just that.

A mere 6 years later, and today the said JM has personally delivered my copy.

To say that the wait has been worthwhile is the understatement of the decade — the book is terrific!!!

It's a heavy tome, size 11½ inches x 8½ inches x 1½ inches — hard back, red binding with gold blocked titles. None of your plastic, spiral, stapled pamphlets masquerading as books — this "Encyclopedia" is a production to be proud of.

The contents are contained in 571 (yes 571) printed pages plus an index. The type face is clear, easily read and is accompanied by over 900 illustrations. Half of each page is left blank for additional notes or references.

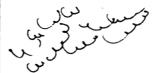

In his introduction Mr Gardner refers to the work as 'incomplete', 'slovenly', 'patchy'—he is far too critical. It is undoubtedly the most exhaustive reference work on impromptu tricks imaginable—and any patchiness is merely the result of the scores of items added to the original manuscript.

Over 60 categories are covered from balloons to bananas, soap to safety pins and rings to radishes. I lost count at 1,540 numbered items and estimated at least 200 extra variations.

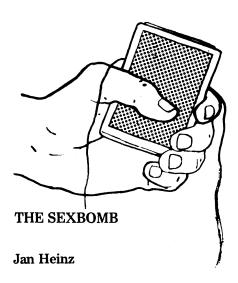

By definition every reader of Pabular should possess a copy of this monumental work—it ranks with Greater Magic, Bobo's Coin Book, the Vernon Book and is undoubtedly destined to become an all-time classic.

I understand that the price is about $26 (it would be cheap at £26). I suggest that you rush £15 — which should be enough to cover exchange rates and surface mail to Magic Inc. for your copy now!!!

I cannot recommend it too highly.

EFFECT

After explaining that every card has a certain meaning, you demonstrate your statement with a trick.

An imaginary string becomes reality. A chosen card rises by the use of the string out of the pack. After explaining that this card is known as the sexbomb of the game a loud "bang" is heard. Finally you ask your assistant the time and a message from the sexbomb has appeared on his watch.

REQUIREMENTS

A pack of cards with an extra queen of hearts, which is glued for one third on another card.

A pullstring available in the jokeshops. It is the same thing you can find in the party-poppers.

A small card or ticket with the message: "Phew, that was hot. Thanks. The Sexbomb". On the other side of this ticket some sticky tape or Blu-Tak.

PREPARATION

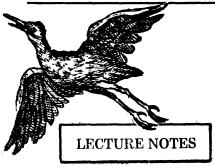

The prepared queen of hearts with the pullstring hidden in between is the second card from the bottom. Have the card with the message handy. Stick it under your table or on your belt.

PRESENTATION

Show the cards face up and take care to cover the prepared card. Tell the spectators that all the cards have a certain meaning. The ace is known as the highest card, the nine is a lucky card, etc. Meanwhile you are looking for the unprepared queen of hearts and here you keep a break. Turn the cards face down and force the queen. Let the spectator put his card back and cut the cards or shuffle them in such a way that the prepared queen of hearts comes in the middle.

Now you pick up an imaginary piece of string and put this in between the cards. Take out the real string, so it sticks out of both sides of the pack (see sketch). Two spectators take one end of the string each and ask them to pull the string carefully. Now the prepared queen of hearts will rise out of the pack. Stop the spectators when the card is out of the pack for one third. Explain that this card is known as the sexbomb and let them pull a bit harder, which causes the loud bang. If one of the two spectators looks at his watch he will find the message.

At the moment that the spectator pulls the string, it is a natural move to hold him by his arm in order to explain how he should pull the string. All possibilities for the misdirection are here present. If the watch does not work, you just stick it on his sleeve. Have fun.

The latest notes from Wayne Dobson entitled More Ideas is now available from the author, 7 Ripon Drive, Blaby, Leicester. Price £1.75 post paid. Airmailed to the U.S.A. Five dollars cash or five dollars fifty if payment is made by cheque.

They contain five effects in all, the most commercial being the first explained. A borrowed credit card disappears from an envelope and reappears in the centre of a pack when spread across the table. An Ace Assembly which eliminates the buckle count, a sleight the author claims is not too popular. In Aces to Queens the magician attempts to cut to the four aces. He succeeds to find the first three but the fourth cut produces a queen. The three aces then turn to queens. Follow the Leader is a variation Jackson's Restless Colours. The remaining effect appears in this issue with permission of the author.

Apart from the credit card effect there is nothing particularly new in effect but the variations in methods are clearly explained and all are well within any cardman's compass who has mastered Braue's Add On move, Piet Forton's Pop Out move, the Double Under cut and can hold a little finger break. Briefly, most cardmen will find something worthy of their attention.

JOKER SANDWICH

From the lecture notes of Wayne Dobson

EFFECT

A card is chosen and is placed face down in between two face up jokers. The three cards are then placed in between the palms of your hands. Upon separating your hands all that remains is two jokers, the chosen card has vanished.

The pack is then spread face up across the table, in the middle of the spread is seen one face down card, the card is turned face up and it is seen to be the chosen card!

REQUIREMENTS

A pack of cards with jokers.

PRESENTATION

Phase 1. Display the two jokers.

Hold the pack face down in left hand, dealing position.

Pick up the two jokers and place them face up onto the face down pack. Spread the jokers and as you are doing so get a break under the first two face down cards.

Square the jokers plus the two extra cards flush with the pack. Immediately lift off the two face up jokers plus the two hidden cards beneath them, holding them by the ends, with the fingers at front and thumb at back (Biddle position).

The left thumb slides the first joker face up onto the pack held face down in the left hand. The next joker with the two stolen cards beneath it is placed face up onto the other joker.

The pack now reads as follows: Face up joker, X card, X card, Face up joker.

Thumb count two cards from the top of the pack and place these cards (one face up joker with one face down X card beneath it) onto the right side of the table, leaving them slightly spread.

The white border of the face down card under the joker will be accepted as the other joker.

The second joker is now lying face up second from the top of the pack.

Phase 2. Turn the pack face up and hold in "Biddle position" in right hand.

With the right forefinger swivel and cut approx. half of the pack into the waiting palm up left hand.

A spectator is then asked to say 'stop' whenever he likes, and is asked to remember the card stopped at.

With the aid of the right hand packet the chosen card is flipped over, face down onto the left hand packet, at the same time the Braue Dropswitch is performed, that is the two cards which are being held by the right thumb are dropped onto the chosen card as it is flipped over.

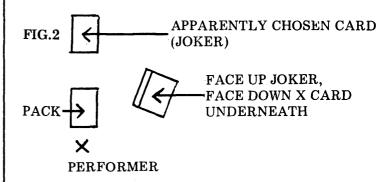

The hands separate once again, revealing, as expected, a face down card on the left hand packet. The audience believes this to be the chosen card. It is, in fact, a joker.

Thumb the joker face down onto the table about 12 inches from the edge. As the joker leaves the pack a face-up card will come into view. Everything thus appears correct. However, immediately below the face-up card is, face down, the actual selection.

Place right hand packet onto the left hand packet and square up the pack.

Turn pack face down and place it directly in front of you, about 6 inches from the edge of the table.

All cards should now be as in fig. 2.

Phase 3. Pick up joker pile on right side of table and hold in right hand (Biddle position).

Obtain a right thumb break between the two cards.

Reach for supposedly chosen card with left hand, as you do, bring right hand, with its two cards, directly over the pack. Left hand picks up chosen card? (joker) and at the same time the right hand drops the bottom card of the two cards held, onto the pack directly below.

The right hand now moves forward with its joker. Audience still assume that you hold two face up jokers.

The left hand should now appear to place its card face down in between the supposedly two jokers held in the right hand.

What actually happens is the left hand slides its card under the joker held in the right hand.

Your cards should now read as follows: Face up joker with face down joker beneath it.

You have now got to count the two cards as three.

Take the two cards into the left hand between the thumb and forefinger (Elmsley Count position).

The right hand approaches left hand and the right thumb peels off the first face up joker, this exposes a face down card, spectator assumes it to be his. The right hand then comes back to take the face down card on top of the face up joker held in right hand, as it does the joker stays in the left hand and the right hand moves away with the face down card.

The last joker is taken on top of the face down card held in right hand.

NOTE

This count must be performed in one continuous action.

The patter I use for the count is as follows: JOKER — YOUR CARD — JOKER.

Phase 4. The two cards, apparently three, are placed onto the palm of the left hand, the right palm is then placed on top of the left palm sandwiching the cards between them.

The hands are brought up into the prayer position.

Grasp a card in each palm and separate the hands.

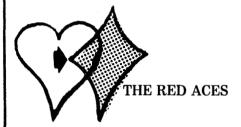

Let the two cards fall face up onto the table, showing just two jokers.

Let it sink in that the chosen card has vanished.

All that remains to be done is to turn the pack face up and spread it across the table. In the middle of the spread will be seen one face down card.

Remove the card from the spread, turn it face up and show it to be the selected card.

CREDITS: Basically this is an Alex Elmsley notion which he titled "Point of Departure". The handling described here, however, differs considerably from Alex's original.

Brian Glover

Prior to commencing the effect, cull the red aces to the top of the pack. Now execute an in-faro shuffle followed with an out-faro which will bring them third and fourth from the top of the face down pack.

Holding the pack in the left hand invite a spectator to lift a corner of the pack and take a look at the card (spectator peek). Take a break with the left little finger and say that you will try and cut to the noted card.

With the right fingers at the outer end and the thumb at the inner end cut the pack at the break and as the top half is being lifted the right thumb releases the bottom card (the selected one) leaving it on top of the bottom half but retain the break between it and the half remaining in the left hand. The right hand turns the top half it holds face up and drops it on top of those in the left hand enquiring if the card cut to is the one selected.

When told 'No', say "I must be one out, is this your card?" as you lift the block of face up cards together with the selected card concealed underneath away to the right, the left thumb draws off the top face up card onto the top of the face down half in the left disclosing another card on top of the right hand half. The spectator again denies that this next card is the chosen one.

Reassemble the pack by placing the face up portion in the right hand on top of the one in the left hand which is face down except for the face up top card.

Next turn over the face up portion sideways — which includes the face down selection — apparently restoring the pack to its original face down condition. However, two cards have been added to the top — the face up selection covered by a face down card.

Continue by saying "Whenever I make a mistake I call on the red aces to get me out of trouble." Overhand shuffle by undercutting the bottom half and shuffling them off at random on top of the original top half. Square up the cards and holding the pack in the left hand perform the Charlier pass. Thanks to the reversed card the pack will break at this point sending it (the chosen one) to the bottom and the red aces back to the third and seventh positions from the top.

Spell R - E - D and deal one card for each letter in a pile onto the table. Likewise spell B - L - A - C - K forming a separate pile. Turn over the top cards of the tabled piles to disclose the red aces. Pick up the aces and drop them face up on top of the face down pack. Cut the pack sending them to the centre.

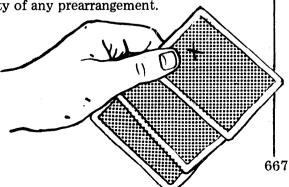

Turn the pack face up, and after riffling for effect, spread the cards from the left hanc into the right and when the three face down cards appear. The left hand then removes all the face up cards below the three face down cards and drops them onto the table, returning to retake the three face down (still in a slightly spread condition) gripping them between the thumb and fingers at the outer ends as shown in the sketch.

The order of the cards is now — two red aces with the peeked at card at the bottom. This latter is caused to appear between the two aces as they are turned face up as follows, after asking for the selected card to be named.

The right hand takes hold of the top card with the thumb on the back of the card at the point marked 'X' with the fingers underneath and both hands turn at the wrists bringing the cards face up as they are laid on the table. During this action the left thumb which is resting on the back of the middle card moves towards the left whilst the fingers move in the opposite direction, causing the two cards to cross each other. When the spectators see the faces of the cards the selection will be between the red aces.

The method of reversing a peeked card is an innovation of Al Leech and is described in one of his books.

Any method which suits the performer may be used to bring the aces into the required positions, but the one described is the one I personally use as it appears to preclude the possibility of any prearrangement.

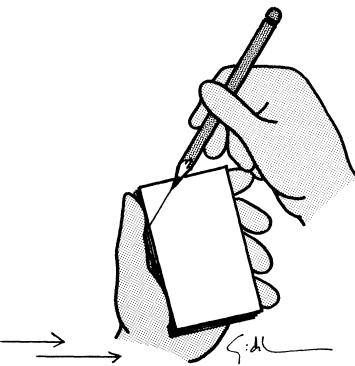

INTIMATE SPIRIT

Phil Goldstein

The following is a close-up Spirit Writing effect, in which the writing appears upon a blank card which has been initialled on both sides by spectators.

You will require a small stack of blank business card stock. On one card, scrawl your spirit message. Take another card, and trim off one corner, as in the illustration. Arrange the stack of cards such that the pre-written card is second from the bottom, writing-side-down. The lowermost card of the stack is the one with the missing corner. The cut corner should be at the outer right.

Begin by fanning or spreading the cards, displaying them as being all blank. Square up the stack, and place it on the table. Obtain a pencil from your pocket. The pencil is held in your right hand. The left hand, palm down, picks up the tabled stack, raising the stack towards yourself — thus the cut-away corner is visible to you, at the upper left (refer to figure).

Use the pencil to draw a line down the edge of the cut-off corner. When you turn the packet to display this, it will appear to be a line drawn alone the corner of the top card. The line serves to conceal the cut — in fact, the line has been drawn on the second card (which bears the writing).

Hand the pencil to a spectator, and ask him or her to place their initials within the triangle defined by the line. Do not be particularly concerned about this spectator realising that part of the top card is cut away, and that it is the second card being signed — the illusion created here is one which will hold up under reasonably close scrutiny, and remember that the spectator has no reason to suspect anything at this point. You will find that the illusion is more convincing if the cut is angled away from rather than towards the spectator.

When the card has been initialled, you apparently turn it over. In fact, use a Double Turnover, turning the card(s) lengthwise over towards yourself. Again, take the pencil and draw a line along the outer left corner of the top card — this time doing so legitimately. Have the spectator initial that corner, too.

Remove the top card of the packet, and place the rest of the cards away. The single card you hold bears a line across its outer left corner, by which is the spectator's initial. On the underside of the card, on the diagonally opposite corner, is another line and initial—and across the centre of the underside is your spirit message.

The dirty work is over — but here you'll use a further deception to again show both sides of the card. This is the Carlyle's Card move, which Francis Carlyle contributed to the Phoenix years ago. It is a paddle move done with a card, as follows: the card is held deep in the left palm. The left fingers curl over the right long edge of the card. The left thumb digs beneath the left long edge. The hand turns palm down, and simultaneously the thumb pushes the card out, so that it is held with the fingertips above, the thumb below. The same side of the card is still facing up, but it appears as if you have turned the card over.

When the corner-signed card is held in the palm up left hand, the initialled corner is at the outer left corner, as the audience expects. Do the Carlyle move — now the initialled corner is seen at the inner right. The change of location serves to hide the fact that you're showing the same initial twice. To further conceal this fact, display the top side to one part of the audience, and then execute the Carlyle move as you swing your hand over to the other part of the audience.

If you play with this, you will see just how convincing this set of moves is. The audience should be completely certain as to the fairness of your actions — and that the card signed on both sides is blank, other than the lines and initials on one corner of each side.

Have a spectator hold the card is his or her hands. Mutter your incantations. The card when next viewed is seen to have a spirit message on one side, even though the initials are still there. You are clean — and of course may leave the card with a spectator as a souvenir.

For the record, there was a misprint in last month's issue of this illustrious sheet. The penultimate sentence should have read 'for the speciality act, survival in luxury should be the aim rather than stardom'. So now you know what I mean.

There has recently been a great deal of correspondence in Abracadabra 'The World's Only Magical Weekly' regarding the terms amateur, semi-professional and professional. If I'm going to enter into this discussion, and I am, I suppose I should in fairness write to Abracadabra but I did that once many years ago and Goodliffe didn't publish my letter then, so there's no reason to think he should publish one from me now. Apart from that I have enough trouble filling this page without straining myself to help Goodliffe.

According to the 1978 edition of The Concise Oxford Dictionary 'professional' is defined as follows: 'of, belonging to, connected with, a profession'. That seems simple enough at first glance but like all good dictionaries there is still another definition, which is 'performing for monetary reward, opposite to amateur'.

The second definition seems clear enough, if you get paid you are a professional. But how about the first one? Charlie Charlston's wife makes tea and buns for the local magic club meeting. Does that make her 'of, belonging to, connected with a profession'? And if it does do just that, does that in turn make her a professional. A professional what? Remember, she only makes tea and buns for magicians.

There are enough definitions in the same dictionary for the prefix 'semi' to fill this page so it seems that the term 'semi-professional' can be all things to all men, but we know that this isn't so, don't we? Or do we? On one side you have the guy who earns his living from performing magic who occasionally looks down his nose at what he calls 'semi-pros'. And on the other side we have the shop assistant who performs magic occasionally for money who quite often says 'But lots of pro's have got other forms of income.'

OK. I have a friend who is a full-time professional magician, that is what he does for a living, nothing else. He also has two apartments and a shop. He lives in the house and rents out the two apartments and the shop which naturally gives him another source of income. Does that make him a semi-pro? The answer is no', because he bought all the property with money he earned from performing magic and invested it to protect himself in his old age. He still gets his main and regular income from performing magic.

Are we getting close to a real definition of the aforementioned words? Is it practical to say that if your main income is from performing magic you are a professional magician and if you supplement your main income by performing magic occasionally for money you are a semi-pro? I don't know either.

Will someone tell this other guy he should change his name. If he doesn't, I'll have to change mine.

A freely selected card disappears from between two kings and is subsequently found in the case from which the pack was taken.

If you already perform one of the many versions wherein a selected card is discovered between two face up cards the effect described below is a suitable one to follow with, being stronger in effect and there are no preliminaries as the same selection and two face up cards are used.

To commence, have the closed card case on the table with the half moon cut-out uppermost and nearest you. It should be slightly towards your left just clear of the action — the best position will be evident after rehearsal. The two kings, say clubs and spades should be face up on the table, an inch or so apart.

Pick up the two kings, one in each hand as shown in (1) and lightly squeeze the long sides between the thumbs and second fingers releasing the grip of the second fingers with a gentle snap leaving the cards still held between the thumb and fingers of each hand. This action puts a longitudinal bridge in the cards with the faces concave.

Drop both cards face up onto the table, one atop the other.

Next, have the selection signed and drop it face up on top of the two kings, and pick up all three cards and hold them face DOWN in the left hand.

The right hand now apparently pulls out the selection from the bottom of the packet and puts it face up on top of the other two, not squared, but overlapping to the right. Actually two cards are taken as one at the outer end — a simple matter if the left thumb pulls back the top card an eighth of an inch or so.

Take the double in the right hand holding it between the thumb and index finger about the middle of the long side bring it under the card in the left hand as in (2). Push it further under and 'snap' it upwards. During the above actions secretly transfer the king below the selection in the right hand to beneath the king in the left hand by pushing it to the left with the right finger tips and pulling it square under the king in the left hand with the left fingers. Note the position of the left forefinger which gives some cover, both during the transfer and to the fact that there is only one card in the left hand at a time when there should have been two.

The position is now as the spectators believe it to be, except that the bottom king in the left hand is face up.

You now appear to push the selection in between the two squared kings but in reality it goes beneath. For those not acquainted with the move the outer end of the selection is pushed in between; the two cards at their inner ends. Do not make it look too easy — a little acting is required — but not too much.

With the three cards squared change to the position shown in (3) and squeeze the long sides between the thumb and fingers which, due to the bridge put in the kings at the beginning of the trick, will cause the cards to form a tunnel into which the right index finger is inserted as shown in (4).

Now for a move which I call the Butterfly Vanish — the cards spread out like the wings of a butterfly.

Press firmly down with the right forefinger at the same time raise the left thumb. This will cause the kings to split open as shown in (5). Again note the position of the left forefinger hiding the extra thickness of the double card.

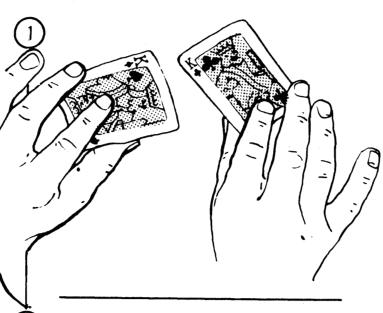

The left second finger buckles the bottom card of the double (the selection) into the gamblers palm and the right hand tosses the two kings onto the table. Without hesitation the left hands with the selection palmed and its back to the spectators picks up the card case, thumb on one side and the fingers on the others (6) and turns over bringing the case uppermost. The palmed selection is hidden by the case.

The right thumb pulls out the flap and then goes under the palmed card as the first two fingers go into the case. Simulate the action of actually pulling the card from inside the case and hand it to the spectator for confirmation of his signature.

Incidently, this can be used for the last ace in Roy Walton's Cannibal Routine.

Credits to Alex Elmsley the idea of vanishing a card between two others and Ed Marlo for the production of a selected card from a card case.

Fred Robinson

QASIS

The tricks in this issue are from the repertoire of one of Britain's foremost close-up workers, though he would most probably deny it. Gordon Bruce hails from Glasgow which was lucky for him, because in that same city Roy Walton manages Tam Sheperds which is a branch of Davenports, who, as everyone knows, sell magic tricks.

It was to this magic shop when a schoolboy that Gordon was a regular visitor and gradually became aware that the man behind the counter did a special kind of magic which could not be bought. Aware that this boy had a genuine interest in magic Roy guided him through the undergrowth of the technicalities of the cardman's jungle and also made him aware that magic like other pursuits has certain ethical standards. These ethical principles are far more subtle than the usual rules of magical societies, which vary between societies as does their treatment of transgressors within the same society. It is rather more a matter of conduct --like not butting in on another's performance not giving gratuitous explanations of other magician's tricks or moves -- not giving illrehearsed imitations of other magicians pet effects especially in areas where the originator is likely to be performing. In the latter case it is a bit off-putting when he accedes to a request to 'show' a trick, to be told that so-and-so is doing it.

Those guilty of the above and similar behaviour are unlikely to be invited to sessions comprised of magicians who respect the confidences of each other and should they accidently venture into such a group aware of their proclivities will be sufficient to put up the shutters.

OASIS

Let me hasten to add that the foregoing remarks do not apply to Gordon who is welcome wherever he happens to be and that one top flight magician, a stickler for magical ethics gave him the lowdown on one of his pet close-up effects proves a point. One that I have eventually succeeded in making.

A professional double bass player with the Scottish National Orchestra his work occasionally brings him to London where we discuss the important things in life — like persuading him to release sufficient material for a complete issue of Pabular. On the last two occasions we have been joined by Alex Elmsley who is still way ahead of most, showed some unpublished near miracles to prove it.

Having made only one appearance this side of the border at a magical function, and not being a member of any magical society, Gordon is perhaps better known for his excellent illustrative work in Andrew Galloway's The Ramsey Classics. Furthermore, prior to this issue few of his ideas have reached the printed page. It is a personal pleasure to have the opportunity to make better known a close-up performer who has long been known only to a few.

One of the most entertaining card effects to appear in this magazine was Jan Heins Terragram which required that a card be secretly placed under a person seated on a chair. This simple matter, when performing impromptu becomes more of a problem in a set routine. Jan has sent the following methods which provide a solution. For the first method reserve a chair by putting a magazine or paper, with the card beneath, on the seat. When offering your helper a seat remove the magazine, keeping her (ladies are best for this trick) eyes averted as you assist her into the seat. In the second method you precede the trick with a prediction effect. With the prediction in a sealed envelope request your helper to sit on it — the card is hidden beneath it. When ready to reveal your prediction move close to lady and ask for the envelope, and immediately she stands take the envelope leaving the card behind. Actually the lady only leaves the seat for a few inches, and when you have possession of the envelope ask her to sit down again. No-one will see the card.

Jan's gag with the mouse and flycatcher caught the imagination of Simon Lovell who is working it in conjunction with R.A.R's King Rat Effect. Simon is working both close-up and cabaret in Berwick on Tweed during the summer season. Make a point of having a word with him if you are in that area.

Brian Glover writes to say that Piet Forton included 'Triple Flip' (see February issue) in his mini-lecture at the Hughes Weekend — very effective, was his verdict. He was full of praise for the work of Derek Dingle -- aren't we all. I missed the function but caught Derek in London and during a session asked "What do you do for laymen?" He responded immediately by asking one of that ilk to think of a card which was later found in an otherwise empty card case. Next a chosen card was found underneath the helpers beer glass. That was all just a couple of tricks -- and all over in about three minutes. Simple plots which are instantly understood by laymen were required in that particular situation and that was provided by one who has found by experience what really entertains non-magicians.

COIN ASSEMBLY

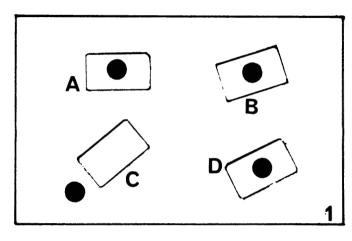

Gordon Bruce

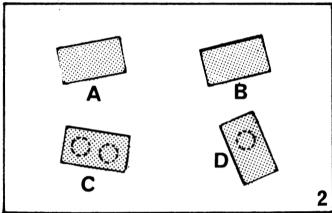

Whilst I devised the moves used in this routine, several other people have independently had similar ideas. Some of these moves have recently found their way into print, and so at this time I take the opportunity of publishing my own routine. Briefly stated, the effect is the time honoured one of four coins assembling under a playing card. One interesting feature is that at no time does the magician pick up a coin and "vanish" it. No extra coins are used and the magician is not one, but four moves ahead of the spectator before the effect apparently begins.

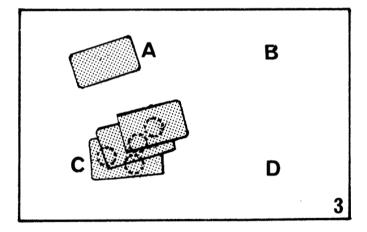

Place four face up playing cards on the table in a square, A,B,C,D. Cards A,B and D each have a coin lying on them, while at position C the coin lies off the card to the side. Fig (1)

A large coin is concealed in your left hand (not palmed) and it stays there throughout the trick until the climax.

1. Using the right hand, turn card B over towards you so that it is now face down. As you do this, the right thumb slides the coin up into the right hand. This action is screened by the card and the right hand fingers. You have apparently turned the card face down on top of the coin.

- 2. The right hand moves diagonally across towards card C and picks it up. The card hides the coin which lies on the right fingers. Use the card to scoop up the coin on the table. The right thumb holds the coin against the face of the card as you turn the card face down. Simultaneously, release the coin from behind the right hand fingers and it drops to the table. Apparently it is the same coin, but in reality you have switched it for the first coin. Place the face down card (and the hidden coin still held by the right thumb) over the visible coin at C taking care that the two coins do not talk.
- 3. Turn over card A, stealing the coin into the right hand as you did at B.

- 4. Turn over card D, fairly this time leaving its coin underneath. See Fig. 2. You still have a coin concealed in your right hand. You are now about to begin the effect, yet in steps 1, 2 and 3 you got one move ahead each time. The large coin in your left hand is the fourth move ahead.
- 5. Snap your fingers with your right hand. This helps to give the impression that the hand is empty. Slowly pick up the card at C, to show two coins. The right hand holds the card face up lying across the fingers and concealing the coin.
- 6. Use the card to scoop up the two coins The right thumb holds one coin against the face of the card. Turn the card face down, releasing the hidden coin from behind the right hand fingers. There are now two coins on the table and one still held under the card by the right thumb. This is really the same switch as in 2. Place the card and the hidden coin over the two visible coins at C. During all this, say, "If we have two coins here one must have vanished from over here." Pick up the card at B to show the coin has vanished. Transfer this card to the left hand.
- 7. Snap your right hand fingers once more. Lift the card at C to show three coins. Hold this card face down in the right hand and use it to turn the card at D face up. Really you do a Mexican turnover. If done smoothly this will not only switch the cards but will conceal the coin at D and leave it under the face up card. Do not worry about this move, there should be no suspicion. You have just shown that the coin has arrived at C, no-one expects there still to be a coin at D.
- 8. Both hands hold a face up card. The right hand scoops up the face up card and coin at D, trapping the coin between the cards. At the same time, the left hand drops its card face up on top of these two. The right hand turns the three cards face down, and holding them in a slightly fanned condition, places them over the three cards at C. Fig. 3.
- 9. Snap your fingers. The right hand grasps the three cards together and slides them across the table towards you. The fourth coin slides from between the top two cards and silently joins the three on the table. This should look as though all four coins were under the cards.
- 10. Turn the three cards face up. Place them in the left hand momentarily loading the large coin under them. Place the three cards and the large coin in the centre of the table as the left hand draws attention to the card at A. Lift the card to show the coin has vanished. The last line is purely for magicians. Say, "Of course you realise that I use an extra coin. If I could eliminate that I would have a really good trick." Flip over the three cards to reveal large coin.

Notes: The large coin climax can be dispensed with should you wish to do another routine with the four coins. No-one has ever commented on the discrepancy when you do the Mexican turnover, but if it worries you, you could use four jokers or four blank cards so that no 'change' of card occurs at this point.

Effect: The performer removes the A-2-3-4-and 5 of diamonds and the corresponding hearts from the pack. A spectator is invited to take the five cards of either suit. The performer takes those left and turns away saying he will arrange his cards in a certain order and then invites the spectator to lay his cards face up in row in any order he wishes. The performer immediately deals one card face downwards on each face up card beginning at one end of the row and continuing in rotation to the end of the row. When his cards are turned face up they are found to match those of the spectator — in other words they are all pairs.

Method: The method is direct — but not easy. It requires the ability to deal seconds, middles and bottoms without changing the grip. The best method to use for this purpose is undoubtedly that originated by your Editor. However, if you are not familiar with this, use your own favourite method.

For those still reading proceed as follows. After the spectator has made his choice pick up those remaining in numerical order with the five at the face and tell the spectator he may shuffle his packet or arrange them in any order his little heart may desire. Pick up the pack in the left hand and with the five cards in your right either go below the table top with them or turn your back and say you will arrange your cards in a certain order.

When the cards are out of sight get the five to the bottom of the pack, the three at the top, the four second from the top and the ace somewhere in the centre of the pack with the two above it and holding a break below the ace.

This seemingly complicated arrangement can be quickly achieved by using the Ovette/Kardyro move to get the five on the bottom of the pack (this can be done with the cards in sight as you put the five cards on top of the pack). The slip cut is used to bring the ace and two to the centre holding a break below the ace as you do so. The three and four will be left at the top after this procedure.

Bring the pack into view and ask the spectator to deal his five cards face up in a row on the table and invite him to change the order if he so desires.

Note the relative position of the ace and two and start dealing from the end of the row which ensures that a card would be dealt on the ace before the two. For example, if the spectator's cards were in the following order

you would deal from right to left, dealing centre, bottom, top, centre, top.

It should now be clear that it is always possible to deal in sequence and match the spectator's arrangement by using second, middle and bottom dealing. Here is another sequence which requires a second to be dealt which is not needed in the above two examples.

Notes: A practical method of dealing seconds, centres and bottoms from the same grip is explained in Marlo's Centre Deal. Unexpected Card Book p.240.

Four of the spectator's cards could be marked so allowing him to shuffle his cards and deal them face down.

POCKET PALM

Gordon Bruce

I tirst sent an explanation of this method of producing a palmed card from the trouser pocket to Dai Vernon some ten years ago.

It gave me considerable pleasure to hear that he used it during his Californian lecture seven years later and it is an opportune time to describe it once more for two reasons.

It first appeared in Epilogue which at that time had a circulation of 100 copies and has more recently been incorrectly described in the 'Magic of Francis Carlyle'. In view of the above a repeat explanation seems warranted. So here it is.

There are many tricks which finish by the performer apparently removing a card from his pocket while it is really palmed in the hand. The procedure used is not usually convincing and only serves to weaken the effect. When the performer stuffs his hand into his pocket the procedure is inartistic and clumsy, and I doubt if the spectator really believes that the card was really in the pocket.

Of course, some tricks of this type convince the spectators beforehand, e.g. Francis Carlyle's 'Homing Card'. The following is the procedure used by the writer.

- 1. Begin with a card palmed in the right hand, gripped by the little finger tip and the base of the thumb at diagonally opposite corners. Don't bend your hand around the card; the card should fit the natural contour of your hand. Also, it helps to point the right thumb towards your second finger.
- 2. You're about to remove the card from your pocket. As the hand approaches the pocket bend the first finger in slightly and raise the thumb as shown in (1).

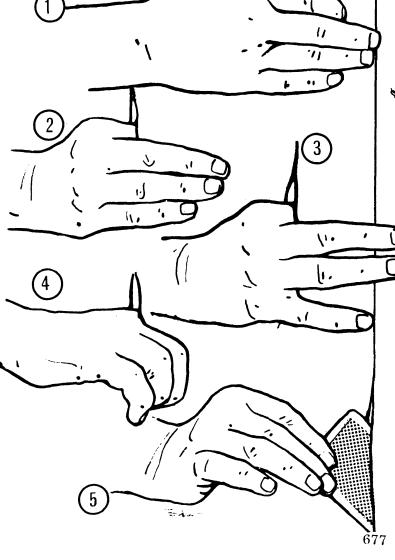

- 3. Insert the thumb and first finger only into the pocket. The other three fingers are flat against the trousers, outside the pocket, as in (2). Once the first finger and thumb are inside the pocket the other three fingers can be spread against the cloth of the trousers (3). This convinces the spectators that you did not have a card palmed.
- 4. Tilt the right hand so that the fingers point towards the floor and move the wrist slightly forward. Then move the whole hand down until the lower long edge of the card touches the bottom edge of the pocket opening (4).
- 5. Now move the back of the hand forward, allowing the card to fall inside the pocket and grasp it between the thumb and first finger.
- 6. Remove the card from the pocket, and as it emerges it is seen to be held by the finger and thumb at the extreme corner (5).
- 7. The whole action takes only 2-3 seconds and as only the thumb and first finger go into the pocket there is no possibility of it being suspected that during the action a card has been introduced into the pocket. Another very important detail is that once the finger and thumb are inside the other three fingers are spread open. This point was made earlier in the text but a second mention will help to emphasise the importance of this detail.

Gordon Bruce

Remove a 2" sponge ball from the left hand pocket and display it while commenting on its peculiar properties. Remove a coin from the right hand jacket pocket. Apparently drop the coin into the left hand. In fact you "Ramsay's Favourite" coin vanish (see The Ramsay Legend by Andy Galloway, p.29). Push the sponge into the left hand through the thumb crotch. Turn the left hand so that its back is towards the table, squeeze the sponge several times, simultaneously making a munching sound with your mouth, open the left hand to reveal the sponge only. Comment that the sponge has eaten the coin. Offer to repeat it. Place the sponge on the table. The right hand reaches into the jacket pocket and apparently removes another coin, really the same one. Repeat the above vanish etc.

The third time, duplicate the actions of the Ramsay vanish, but really put the coin into your left hand this time.

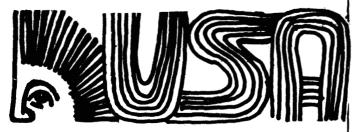

As you do your munching bit, the right hand goes to the pocket for another coin. Open your left hand to show only the sponge, the coin being hidden underneath it. Hold the sponge between the thumb and first and second fingers. Make a hiccoughing sound and simultaneously push the coin up from behind the sponge with the left thumb. The right hand meantime has left the pocket, secretly holding a coin — no need to palm it, as long as you do not flash it.

The right hand apparently removes the coin from the sponge as you apologise for the Little Metal Eater's table manners. Really, the left thumb pulls the coin back down behind the sponge, as the right hand places its coin on the table.

Pick up the coin and replace it in the right hand pocket. As soon as the right hand enters the pocket, the sponge once more hiccoughs as the left thumb pushes up the coin. The right hand has meantime grabbed a stack of about twenty coins which are lying loose in the pocket. Remove the right hand from the pocket, and this time it really does take the coin. Place the coin centrally on the table.

Comment that the Little Metal Eater has been eating too much all day. Close the right hand into a fist. The left hand picks up the sponge and pushes it into the top of the right fist. Squeeze the sponge and release the coins onto the table.

Some good news and some bad news this time. First, the bad news. My good friend and magic teacher died March 31, 1979. Eddie Fechter, owner of the Forks Hotel (tavern) passed away on Saturday evening, about 6.30, after spending two weeks in Roswell Park Memorial Hospital. His five-year fight with leukemia came to an end shortly after he sold his business at the Forks Hotel.

The new owners have agreed to keep the magic going and already have hired Eddie's magic bartender, Karl Norman. Fridays and Saturdays will still be the big magic nights at the Forks Castle EAST.

Yes, the close-up convention will still be held at the Forks Hotel and by the time you read this the 9th F.F.F. (Fechter's Finger Flicking Frolic) will be history. Plans are already under way for the tenth. If I can coax Bob Read and your editor, Fred, to attend next year, that will be a minor miracle.

Good news — Tom Mullica invited about fifty of his best friends to attend the first anniversary of his opening of what is to be considered one of the last real magic bars owned and operated by a magician. About thirty showed up, including myself, and we had a fantastic time. If you ever get to Atlanta, Georgia, you have to stop at 3166 Peachtree Road and see for yourself. What you see you won't believe and I mean it! Tom can't last at the pace he goes. Monday through Thursday he does magic, slapstick, comedy, sight gags — you name it, from 8.00pm to 11.45pm but on Friday and Saturday he goes until about 1.30am.

Does he repeat anything? Well, I saw him two nights and the only thing he repeated is the vent part in the show. This is his tribute to Jay Marshall and Duke Stern, and it is super. (He will fool you with the vent, too). His place can seat 25 at the bar, 25 in the balcony and room for about 35 standees. His bartenders, waitresses, and doormen are used very often, unsuspectedly by the lay audience. Now get this — I haven't told you the best part - it's all done to music. He controls it without anyone suspecting. All the music is mostly swing — to us old guys a treat to listen to. It's not what you would think with music, like a stage show — this you have to be there to appreciate. It's different but the magic will fool the best magicians. (Egg Bagwow!!!)

Who showed up to help him celebrate? Here's a small list. Gordon Miller from Abbotts, Roger Klause, Al Goshman, Paul Gertner, Phil Willmarth (Parade editor of the Linking Ring), Rick Johnsson, Charlie Reynolds (consultant of Doug Henning Specials), J.C. Doty, Dan Garrett, Jim Ryan, Dave Lederman and Jon Racherbaumer — plus some Atlanta magicians.

Those who entertained were most of the above and the new Jon Racherbaumer (no beard) did an ace routine which he calls "his answer to McDonald's aces" that really knocked us out. He says it will be in print this summer — look for it.

Good news! Corında is alive and well and living in London at a recent meeting over lunch it was seen that he is still busy expanding the Arts of Mentalism -- still creatively performing with an enthusiasm that his younger devotees can do nothing but admire -- and (the object of the meeting) about to launch Mastergimmick No.2. Readers will remember that Mastergimmick No.1 was put out by the Corinda Studio about twenty years ago, and in those days Corinda was specialising solely in mentalism. Around that period Bob Nelson had built up a highly proficient organisation called Nelson Enterprises which was a counterpart to Corinda's Studio, and between the two virtually all that mattered in mentalism at that time was available from one or the other.

Nelson had available a hush-hush apparatus called Nelson's Secret Invention. Its principle differed widely from Mastergimmick No.1 though both had the objective — they were both information transmission systems for mentalists.

Mastergimmick No.2 is also such a system and promises incredible feats for those who will take the trouble to master it. The complete equipment costs £49.50, but the explanatory booklet which is available for £2 for those wishing to assess the possibilities of the system before purchasing the apparatus.

Both are available from International Magic Studio, 89 Clerkenwell Rd, Holborn, London EC1.

CARD IN ENVELOPE

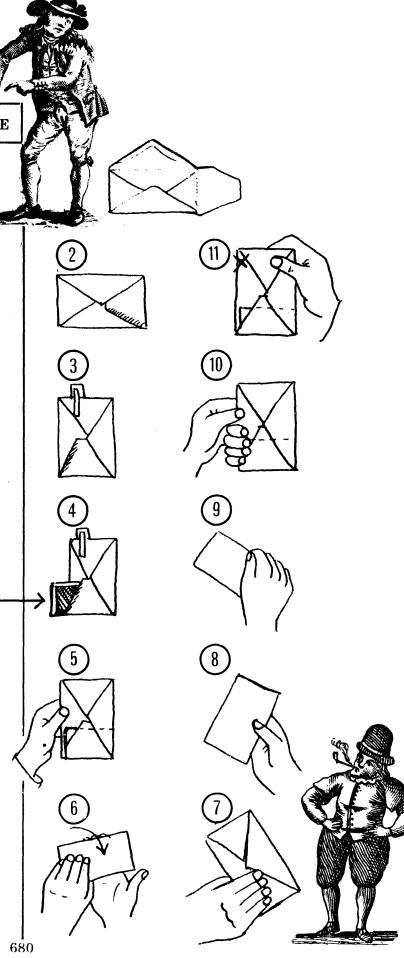

Preparation: The best envelopes to use for this method are Basildon Bond No.2 size. Prepare the envelope as follows: Place the envelope flat on a table, address side down with the flap at the top. Carefully separate the small section at the right hand side from the large bottom section and fold it out to the right. Fig. 1.

Now fold it back to the left hand side so that it now overlaps the right hand sloping edge of the large bottom section. Lastly, moisten the flap and press it down in the normal manner of sealing an envelope. The envelope is now as shown in Fig. 2 and you will see that a pocket has been formed at the right hand side, ready to receive a playing card. Finally clip a pen in your right hand inside pocket and slide the envelope under the clip on the outside of the pocket, Fig. 3. Notice that the pocket is at the bottom of the envelope with the opening on the left hand side.

Loading the Card: Have a card selected signed and returned to the pack. Control it to the bottom of the pack and palm it in your left hand. Give the pack to the spectator to shuffle. As he shuffles, the left hand reaches under your jacket and slides the palmed card into the pocket, pushing it in as far as possible, Fig. 4.—Having loaded the card, the left hand slides the envelope free of the clip and removes it, keeping the address side to the audience. Remember, this must look as though you are removing the envelope from your pocket; therefore the left hand must move the envelope upwards, and then bring it into view.

Showing the Envelope: The following actions show the envelope to be quite fair. Bear in mind that the purpose of these actions is to show both sides of the envelope in a natural manner, without exposing the pocket or the card which has been loaded into it.

The left hand has just removed the envelope from the pocket and holds it as in Fig. 5 (performer's view). Turn the left wrist inwards and lay the envelope on the right hand which is held palm up. The envelope is now address side up, the flap end of the envelope lies on the fingers, and the opening of the "pocket" is towards the right wrist.

Place the right thumb on the envelope to grip it. Now turn the right hand inwards at the wrist, raising the envelope to a vertical position, address side towards yourself. If you have positioned the envelope correctly as in Fig. 6, then the right hand fingers will cover the pocket and the protruding corner of the card. Fig. 7 (spectator's view). The position in Fig. 7 is held only briefly, then, in a continuing action, turn your right hand back again so that the envelope is flat across your hand once more. Fig. 8.

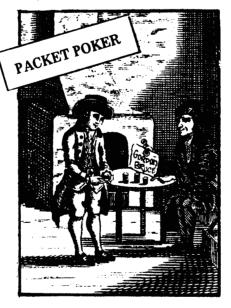

You must now transfer the envelope to your left hand without exposing the other side as follows: Close the right fingers into a fist and turn the back of the hand upwards at the same time. Fig. 9. The right hand swings inwards at the wrist, so that the back of the right hand is towards the spectator. The left hand now takes the envelope between the first finger and thumb as shown in Fig. 10. The right hand releases its hold and the left hand moves the envelope back into the position in Fig. 5. The above actions are very casual and take but a few seconds.

Opening the Envelope: You now open the envelope, keeping the address side to the audience all the time. From the position in Fig. 5, the right hand takes the envelope at the centre of the top, short edge. Fig. 11. The left hand forefinger and thumb now begin to open the envelope by prising open the top left hand corner marked X in Fig. 11.

Once the opening at the corner is wide enough, grip the flap between your thumb on the outside, first and second fingers on the inside. The right hand holds the envelope firmly while the left hand fingertips peel the flap open, without tearing the paper. Only the top half of the flap is glued down, so this should be easy. Continue this opening action to the left which pulls the lower half of the flap over the corner of the card. The sound of the flap scraping over the edge of the card is indistinguishable from the sound of opening the top half of the flap. Toss the envelope onto the table for the spectator to remove the card.

In actual fact, you have opened the envelope upside down, but no-one will notice this fact. The glue used in the manufacture of the envelope is weaker than the gum used to seal it, so that it is easy to open the envelope without tearing.

This is a different handling of an effect called "Pocket Poker" published in Epilogue by Roy Walton.

Stack a Royal Flush in Spades as follows: 10, Jack, Queen, King and the Ace. The Ace of Spades is face up on the bottom of the face down packet. Place a Joker face down on top.

- 1) Remove the packet from your pocket as you explain that you always carry the Perfect Poker Hand with you. Ask if anyone knows what the perfect hand consists of. A few may say "A Royal Flush". However, you explain that in poker, the Joker is 'wild', therefore, in theory, with 5 Jokers, the best hand is 5 Aces. As you talk, show the cards as Jokers using the DUPLICOUNT. After showing and discarding 3 Jokers, the last two cards are handled as one. The 5th Joker is tossed face up onto the face down packet on the table.
- 2) Do a 5 card Ascanio Spread showing 4 face down cards and a face up Joker. The left thumb holds the face up Joker in place while the right hand places the block on top.
- 3) Square up the packet, give it a snap and do another 5 card Ascanio Spread to show that the Joker is now the Ace of Spades (really two cards as one).
- Remove the double with the right hand and deal it face up onto the table.
- 5) Immediately start to deal the other cards onto the Ace of Spades, turning them face up to show that the other Jokers have also changed to form a Royal Flush the Perfect Poker Hand.

THE DUPLICOUNT

This count allows you to count four cards as four and yet show only the one card. As you will see, it is not restricted to four cards but it is best used when only a small number of cards is involved.

- 1) Hold the cards face down in the left hand. The right hand turns the top card face up sideways onto the packet. Let's say this card is the Ace of Spades.
- 2) The right hand takes the Ace at the outer right hand corner, 1st finger above, 2nd finger and thumb below. See Fig. 1. Push upwards with the thumb and down with the 1st finger turning the card face down lengthwise. Do not replace the card on the packet, hold it face down in the right hand. This is card "A". See Fig. 2.
- 3) The left thungs starts to deal the next card, card "B", to the right hand side. The right hand slides its cards between card "B" and the left thumb, allowing the right hand to clip the new card between the 1st finger and the 2nd finger. See Fig. 3.
- 4) Leave the 1st card under the left thumb. The right hand draws card "B" to the right hand side until the right thumb slides off card "A". See Fig. 4.
- 5) Now, the right hand moves upwards with card "B", using it to flip card "A" face up sideways onto the packet. The left thumb moves to the left hand side so that the card can clear it.
- 6) The right hand drops its card face down onto the table.
- 7) Repeat the above actions from step 2) onwards to show the remaining cards.

Notes: The move is really a slow motion top change. Although it is illogical, it is visually deceptive and if done smoothly without 'jerks' it gives the illusion that the cards are all identical.

The DUPLICOUNT is particularly deceptive when used with blank cards or visiting cards. Another effective use is with a double backed card and another ordinary pack for an all backs routine.

Lucerne, Switzerland. Yes, I've just been there. I was booked to work in a hotel for one night only. The opening night of the hotel. There were three acts. A Scottish pipe band, a local brass band, with yours truly sandwiched in the middle. They told me all the high society of Lucerne was to be there and they were.

After the show I did a little close-up around the tables. Nothing different. Sponge balls, Ambitious card etc. In fact the things I've been doing for years. I know they work. The man responsible for engaging me was one Fugi Fuchs. Yes, that's a name. When I first met Fugi he was built like a beer barrel. Over the years he never quite convinced me that it wasn't a money belt he was wearing. These days he is a lot slimmer, but doesn't seem to be any poorer, so maybe it was just plain fat. Fugi is a magic nut, who owns a hotel, (not the one I was working in, although I wouldn't be surprised to find out that he did). He also owns a restaurant, and a joint he calls a wine cellar, which is a long room in the basement, with one long table down the centre where he entertains his customers. He plays for laughs and probably owns more magic props than any three magic shops. Does that tell you something? He's a lunatic, and has a knack of making you feel inferior because he has the ability, like many Continentals, of being able to converse in Lord knows how many languages. If you ever get to Lucerne, hit that wine cellar, you'll like it. Remember the name, Fugi Fuchs, because by 1984 you will be hearing it quite a lot. 'Nuff said.

I've had quite a bit of correspondence lately from Pabular readers, all of it complaining about my attitude on things magical. It seems I annoy a lot of people. Tell me something I don't know and I'll answer your letters.

I had intended going to the F.I.S.M. Convention in Brussels next month but at the moment it doesn't look like I'm going to make it, but for those of you who are going, have fun. The Americans will be there in large numbers, which brings me to something I read in Abracadabra recently. The boys in Birmingham are organising a shindig in their honour. If you can make it, be there. If there is one thing they can really teach us about close-up magic, it is that one ingredient which is almost a forgotten art over here, MISDIRECTION. Once in a while, they throw up a good one, and who knows, he might just be there in Birmingham.

It looks as if Paul Daniels has inherited the mantle of the late David Nixon with regard to magic on television in this country. For my money David was the greatest stand up talking act in this country (I'm talking about magic acts) and Paul could be even better. He has a producer, John Fisher, who knows his way around a thumb tip, and he seems to have collected Ali Bongo on the way, as his magical advisor. This could be a triple alliance which will make magical history on television if the TV companies will come up with the money to enable it to happen. Paul's technical ability is unquestioned, so we might see a little more close-up on TV than we have been accustomed to in recent years. According to the press, there are several shows already in the can, to be screened in the coming weeks. Good luck all.

Talking about television, I had a call from Charlie Reynolds, and in case you don't know the name, he's the guy who lives in New York, and is married to Regina. Ah! now you remember. He tells me that Ziegfried & Roy are planning several spectaculars for the goggle box. Now if their act is anything to go by this should be something to behold We have seen most of the Doug Henning specials over here, and with luck we will eventually see the Z. & R. shows also. These days when a TV company makes a "special" it usually costs so much money that they just have to sell it worldwide to get their money back. In order to do this, the shows usually are really special, with big name guests, and lots of ballyhoo to go with it.

This of course is a good thing for the viewing public in that the quality of production of those shows is better, much better, than average. But it does present problems for locally produced shows which are not intended for worldwide distribution. How can a show with a modest budget, compete with a show costing close to a million dollars. I don't know the answer to that one either.

Goodbye,

"Presto 35B (Presto Magic). This clever idea, cooked up by geniuses Peter Crush and Roy Woodgate is, they claim, the first of its kind and I believe them. Since they wish to keep it exclusive to purchasers and are not divulging what it is or what it does, this review must concentrate on whether it is of any practical use. Let me state right away it is, being an item you almost certainly carry in your pocket that is cleverly faked to produce astounding effects. The concept is original, ingenious, the skilled manufacture excellent and the possibilities endless. You'll have fun devising your own effects, although there are three routines fully described by Peter Crush with excellent line drawings by Eric Mason to start you off. Precision is a word bandied around, often with abandonment, but it's here in this prop from which you should get pleasure and good magic. Recommended without reserve."

We aren't singing our own praises here! We quote from the review in Abra 1735, 28th April, 1979, under "What's New". We had a phone call from Holland. It was Bob Driebeek, one of the first purchasers of "35B". He was delighted, congratulated us on the invisible faking and told us how he had spent some time with Fred Kaps working on routines with it. He also ordered another one!

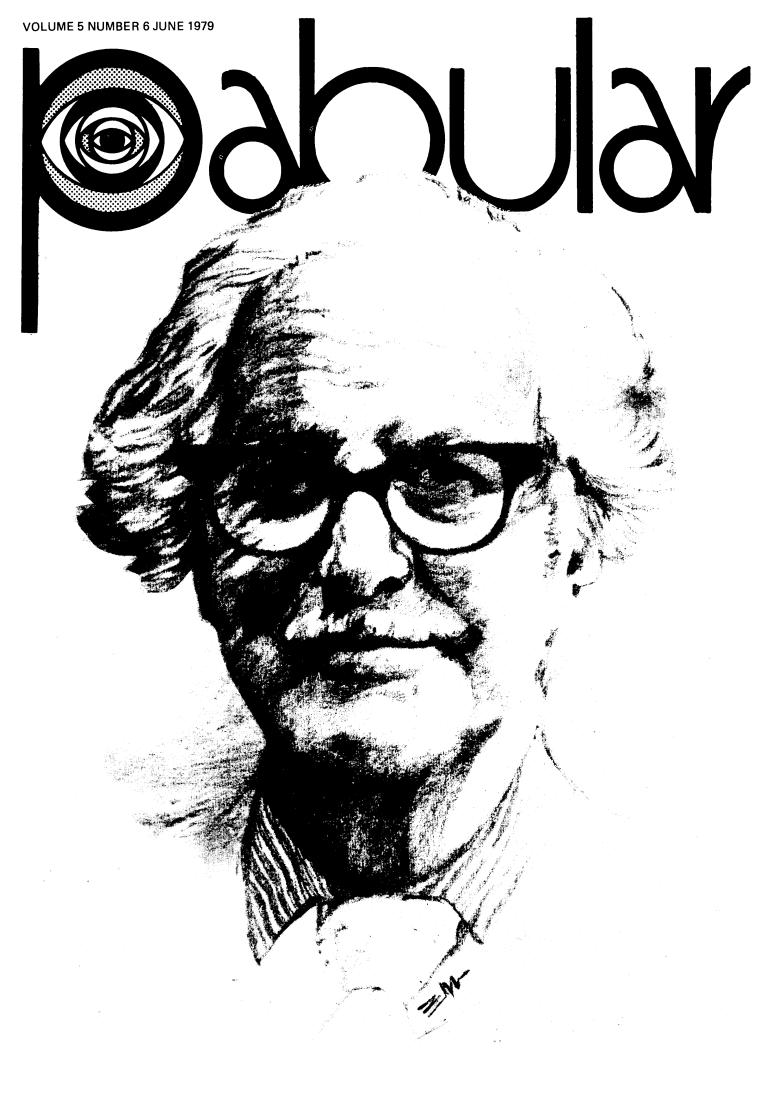

NATURAL MAGIC WITH BORROWED ITEMS, WITH NO "SET UP"

This is our first advertisement in PABULAR. Presto Magic is Peter Crush and Roy Woodgate. We invented "35B". We make it by hand ourselves. If you want a World First Exclusive, unobtainable elsewhere, send £15.00 UK, £16.00 all other countries.

Greetings from the Pabular staff and its readers to 'The Professor' on the anniversary of his eighty-fifth birthday.

In paying tribute to one who has been around so long and earned the respect and admiration of so many, everything that one can say has already been said. However, some of those whose contributions appear within did feel the desire to express their thoughts and pay their own personal tributes.

From Walt Lees.

I have long been a devotee of the work of Dai Vernon, who is without doubt the father figure of modern close-up. It was the publication of the Dai Vernon Book of Magic that first turned me on to close-up some twenty years ago, as it did with so many others of my generation and subsequent ones.

It was not until October 1978 that I actually had the pleasure of meeting him face to face. I was giving a lecture at the Magic Circle and was absolutely shattered to find him sitting in the front row of the audience. This could have been an unnerving experience, but knowing from hearsay that the Professor is a kindly man, I took a deep breath and steamed in. At the finish, he was the first person to come forward and purchase some of my lecture notes. This says more for his good nature and generosity, than it does for my lecture. Afterwards he stayed behind and discussed some of the things in the lecture with me, thus proving that he really is always ready to help and encourage us lesser mortals.

Dai Vernon is one of the great gentlemen of magic, and I am delighted to have met him and to have been asked to contribute a trick in his honour.

From Eric Mason

The first time Dai Vernon came to this country I was one of the many young magicians who gave him a standing ovation for the most perfect performance of magic my memory tells me I have ever seen — he was the Father Christmas of Magic — I wish him many Happy Returns.

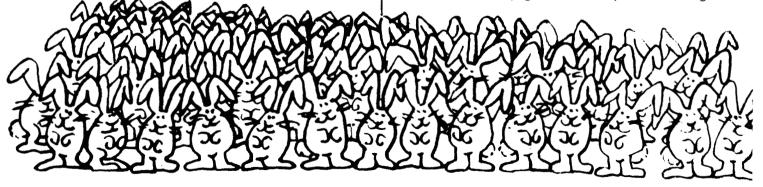

From Roy Walton

I have had the pleasure of meeting Dai Vernon on several occasions and have the highest admiration for him. Whether beginner or expert conjurer, he always has 'time for you', and gives very sound advice on any magical problems you may have. He also has the ability to create an atmosphere of enthusiasm which I have not seen equalled by any other person. After a talk with Dai, I guarantee that even the most jaded of magical followers will go home and start practising. He is a kind and friendly man who has reigned at the top for a long time — long may he reign.

For our part we echo the above sentiments, and are very happy to have had the opportunity to commemorate the event which we hope to celebrate in like manner for many years.

Among the foreign visitors to the capital recently was Rovi from Wales to lecture at The Magic Circle. He generously gave permission for us to publish any of his material we felt suitable for publication. The first one — a Book Test — appears herein. Later — in a nearby inn — he gathered a strong crowd of mostly non-magicians and really entertained them. Afterwards we chatted — and he remarked 'What's the use of small packet card tricks in that situation.' It was obvious — none at all.

Barrie Richardson from the U.S. was also there, making his annual visit an occasion which we eagerly look forward to. He too, entertained a group with a style completely different from the ebullient Rovi. Quietly he took command and entertained, again that word, for something like five minutes, with a trick everyone knows, the title escapes me, but some object appears beneath a handkerchief which no-one ever sees and finally disappears. The style adopted for this intimate occasion differed entirely from the dramatic one he uses when presenting his professional mental act at banquets and the like when his audience can number several hundreds. It was a real lesson in presentation, and a perfect example of the old, old saw — it's not what you do, but how you do it.

Kevin Davie arrived on an extended visit. Within a week was performing his ventriloquial act at the London Society of Magicians and getting the feel of our audiences — he found the audience responses different from those in his native South Africa. Excellent technique, the contrasting voices of his dummies very pronounced and effective. He has a batch of card material for us.

Brian Glover writes to say that there were a couple of Fre(u)dien errors in his trick "The Red Aces" which appeared in the April issue — fourth line, first paragraph should read "will bring them third and seventh from the top.....".

Second and third lines in the eighth paragraph should read "Likewise spell A.C.E.S. forming a separate pile". SORRY.

Some time ago it was mentioned in this column that T.V. was waiting for a personality to emerge performing close-up magic — or words to that effect. One has — we will tell you all next month.

Roy Walton

This trick is a variation of one published by Dai Vernon in the original Jinx magazine. It is comparatively easy to do, free of setups or any angle problems and so useful to have at the back of your mind. How far back, depends on what you think of the idea after reading it.

Working outline

Run through the pack and remove any seven spot, placing it face down onto the table. Explain that this card will help you with the trick, but take care that the spectators do not see the face of the card.

Ask a spectator to mentally decide on a number and say "Do not choose one that is above twenty as you have to remember the card at the position you decide on." Now show the cards to the spectator one by one from the top of the pack counting aloud as you do so, and request him to remember the card that coincides with his mentally chosen number. When he indicates that he has done this, replace the show cards back on top of the pack so that the origina order of the pack is still intact.

Say you will mix the cards, and do so as follows. Undercut about half the pack, injog the first card pulled off and shuffle the remainder on top of the injogged one. Undercut at the injog, run six cards, injog the seventh and throw the balance of the pack on top of the injogged card. Place the pack face down in the left hand getting a left little finger break below the injogged card, square the pack maintaining the break.

Think of the cards below the break as high. Ask the spectator to reveal his mentally chosen number. If it is above seven (higher than seven) you know you must use the 'high' section of the pack, so the break can be released and forgotten. If it is below seven (lower than seven) you know you must use the 'low' section of the pack, so you must cut at the break, either as an open cut or a secret pass.

Have someone turn over the card placed face down on the table at the beginning of the trick and point out that you said it would help you. Carry out a little subtraction sum out loud by using the value of the seven spot and the spectator's number, taking the smaller from the larger, and then use this answer to count down from the top of the pack. When you arrive at the appropriate card, hold it face down for a moment before asking the spectator the name of his card, and then turn it face up to reveal it is correct.

Sometimes the spectator's mentally chosen number will not be above or below seven, it will actually be seven. In fact this will happen more often than not, and the phrasing of your request for a number near the beginning of the routine is designed to help this happen.

If he does say he thought of seven, have him turn the tabled card over to reveal that you have predicted the number he would think of. As he does this, side steal the card above your break into the right hand. Hand the pack to the spectator for a moment, asking him to hold it tightly. Reach into your inside jacket pocket and pull out the palmed card. Ask for the name of the spectator's card and show that it has jumped from the pack to your pocket.

In "Expert Card Conjuring" by Alton Sharpe, he described a Marlo handling of Terry Guyatt's "Drunken Cut". The principle of this was new to me, for although I have met Terry Guyatt I had never seen him perform this particular move.

Although the routine was good, it did involve an elaborate setup. It was as an attempt to eliminate this setup that the following was evolved. In this presentation the setup is much simpler and the effect quite different. At first I was doubtful if it would fool everyone. In this I underestimated the subtlety of the Drunken Cut move. Having performed the routine for a lot of well-versed cardicians, I have been delighted with the results. Try it out, you will almost fool yourself!

Set up the pack, with four aces on the top and four kings on the bottom. The order is not important.

Ask a spectator if he knows how to play Irish poker. When he says no, offer to give him a demonstration. Place the pack face down in front of him and say "First you must give the cards an Irish shuffle." While saying this it is best to leave your hand resting on top of the cards as sometimes an impulsive spectator will pick up the pack and start to shuffle. Keeping a hold of the pack prevents this. "Do you know how to do an Irish shuffle?" you continue, without pausing. When the spectator says that he does not, tell him to follow your instructions. Here you release the pack.

Tell the spectator to cut the pack into two roughly equal piles. Then point to the original top half of the pack and have him turn it face up. Next have him riffle the face up and face down packets together and square the pack.

Now ask him if he knows the Irish cut. Again he says no, so again have him follow your instructions. Tell him to lift off about a quarter of the pack and place it on the table. Next have him lift off roughly the same number of cards and turn this packet face down (or what would be face down if all the cards were the same way round) and place it on top of the first packet. Next have him cut off a small number of cards and place these on top of the others without turning them over. Finally have him pick up all of the remaining cards and turn them over and put them on top of the rest. Then have him turn the whole pack over.

At this point you pick up the pack and say that in Irish poker the dealer takes the first five face down cards, while the other player(s) get the face up ones. Begin to deal the cards into two poker hands. If the first card is face down deal it to yourself, if it is face up deal it to the spectator. Repeat this until you have five cards each. Any superfluous face up or face down cards are placed aside. When the two hands have been dealt, tell the spectator that all he has to do, is to bet that his hand will beat yours.

As both hands will be completely random ones it is quite possible that it will. Here your acting is important. If the spectator gets the best hand, pretend that this was what you intended, to encourage him to play for higher stakes. If your hand beats his, let him think that you arranged it that way as part of the demonstration. Either way, collect up all the cards, mixing them face up and face down and drop them on top of the pack.

Now offer to show how an Irish card sharp cheats at Irish poker. Here you execute the Irish shuffle and cut exactly as the spectator did previously with two important differences. Firstly, during the shuffle take care not to disturb the thirteen or so cards on the bottom of the pack. Secondly at the completion of the cutting do not turn the pack over. Deal out the cards as before giving the first five face up cards to the spectator and keeping the first five face down ones yourself. Discard any superfluous cards during this deal as before. To the spectator's surprise he will get four kings in his hand. Ask him to bet whether or not his hand will beat yours. Whatever the answer turn your own hand over and show four aces.

The above trick is entirely self-working. Sometimes I vary the effect with the following addition.

At the beginning separate the four jacks, queens and tens. Place these in a block just below the centre of the pack. Usually this will mean that at the completion of the first demonstration, provided the spectator cuts slightly above centre, the face down hand will contain a full house or four of a kind or two pairs. This is by no means certain, but when it does happen the overall effect is considerably enhanced.

Rovi

A few days after performing this effect I entered my local branch of W.H. Smith's chain of book shops to be greeted by one of the assistants "What about it now Rovi" — as he pointed to the shelves containing hundreds of books. Fortunately I was able to oblige this gentleman immediately, having (as I invariably do) a pack of cards in my pocket which is, apart from any book, all that is required.

The method used is simple and direct and while it is necessary to carry a few books with you when fulfilling an engagement if the effect is to be part of your regular routine, it is far more effective if performed with a book chosen from a number which you have not had access to previously. Let us assume that you are performing in a room in which there is a bookcase or shelf containing a number of books.

Commence by inviting any spectator to go to the bookcase or shelf and choose any book and let anyone shuffle the cards. Do not make a 'big' thing out of the latter. Get the cards back before your helper rejoins you with the book and run through them quickly, saying "I do not need the Joker." Ostensibly you are finding the Joker which you put in your pocket. Actually it is an excuse to get a pair, say two fives, sixes or sevens either to the face of the pack, or as I do, one at the top and the other at the bottom. With the pack held in face up position in the right hand Biddle fashion I push the bottom card to the right with the tips of the left fingers and then turn the pack face down by pushing it over with the left thumb. If the pair is brought to the face of the pack, turn the pack face down and with the left fingers push the bottom card to the right with the left fingers which turn it face up under cover of the pack and right hand.

It is of course possible to have the faced pair at the bottom set up beforehand, in which case it would not be possible to have the pack shuffled by a spectator. A casual false shuffle retaining the faced pair at the bottom of the pack would then suffice.

Take the chosen book from the spectator and make suitable comments re title, author's name, number of pages etc as you idly flick through the pages. During this apparently innocent action you contrive to note the first few words on the top line of the page which corresponds to the faced pair at the bottom of the pack. Let us suppose they are a pair of fives which would mean glimpsing the top line of page fifty-five.

Drop the book on a nearby table, hand the pack to the spectator and walk well away from both the book and the spectator. As an after-thought ask him if he is quite satisfied with his choice of book, if not, he can exchange it for another. That they never take this opportunity is probably because having an obviously free choice in the first place it seems pointless to change it.

You now instruct the spectator to place the cards behind his back, cut any number of cards from the top of the pack and put them face up under the bottom half, and then bring the pack from behind his back.

It is now important that you turn away making it apparent that you cannot gain any information as the spectator follows your instructions.

Continue by getting him to agree that he cut the pack at whatever point he wished and you could not possibly know the names of the two cards which are now face to face. Still looking away ask him to note these two cards and if they are, for instance, a two and a seven, he is to turn to page twenty-seven or page seventy-two. Satisfy yourself that he clearly understands what is required of him and continue in the following vein. "Should by chance one or both of the cards happen to be a picture card please feel free to make it whatever number you wish. Should you have cut to an ace, you can count it as one or any other single number."

The above remarks impress the audience that the assisting spectator has a variety of pages from which to choose, but the one turned to will be fifty-five and you have knowledge of the first few lines at the top of this page.

Bring the effect to its climax by asking the spectator to concentrate on the words on the top line which you then reveal in your best dramatic manner.

The strong features of the effect are the free choice of book, which the audience, due to the presentation, forget that you ever handled. The direct method of arriving at a given page with the apparent options given to the helper when you are some distance from the cards and the book, and not even looking in his direction.

For many years the effect has been a regular part of my programme, and no doubt will continue to be so in the future.

— THE PIT-A-PATTER OF A TINY FEAT Eric Mason

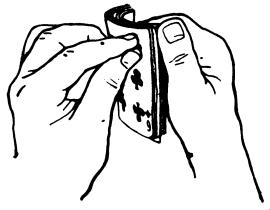

Have a card chosen from a face down pack and have it replaced in the centre getting a break beneath it as you square up the pack. Side jog the card to the right by pushing it out with the left finger tips and clip it between the third and little fingers of the right hand which is also holding the pack with the thumb at the inner end and the first and second fingers at the outer end. Keeping a firm grip on the selection turn the pack face up with the left hand which will leave the chosen card face down at the bottom of the face up pack.

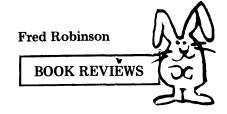

Now do an 'Under Cover' pass beneath the top card of the face up pack bringing the selection to the centre of pack and hold a break beneath it. You now ask if you may use the face card as a 'key' card. Pretend to wind up the pack in the time honoured manner by riffling the corner of the cards sharply with the right thumb on to the tips of the left thumb and first finger which are performing the winding action on the face card of the pack. See sketch.

You will now have to refer to my Arise Comrades described in Pabular Vol.1 No.10 for full details, but before the card is caused to rise pretend to start the mechanism by snapping a corner of the pack with the left thumb.

Perform the rise — and say on completion 'I understand how the mechanism works, but I don't know how your card turns.'

If you perform the Paul Harris 'Invisible Card Rise' explained in his Las Vegas Close-Up book, either before or after this effect, you will have quite a good sequence going for you. A little thought will marry the handlings.

Shigeo Takagi's COIN ROUTINE. Published and exclusively distributed by Jeff Busby Enterprises. Four dollars fifty.

This is a "Coins Across" routine in which there are two phases. Firstly, the coins pass singly using eight or ten coins. This is followed by the instant passage of six coins from one hand to the other.

This routine is a welcome addition to the increasing number of versions of this effect especially for performers whose style of performance is slow and deliberate, and who also like their routines to 'flow' smoothly.

This is the third of Takagi's effects to be released and the manuscript is typeset and spiral bound with an insert containing over thirty of Ton Onosaka's excellent illustrations which ensures that no difficulties will arise in understanding what is required to learn the routine. These, together with the precise text written by Jeff Busby, and the fact that the technicalities required are well within the scope of the average coinman, make it a desirable item for those interested in this particular effect.

Fr Cyprian on the HOFZINSER CARD PROBLEM. Published by Karl Fulves price Five dollars.

A 24-page manuscript is the author's latest published solution to an effect in which four aces are face down on the table and the one of the same suit as a selected card, changes to that card.

The object of this particular exercise is to produce the effect without knowing the order of the aces — a claim made by Hofzinser. Cyprian has detailed his solution which requires no fake cards, can be performed blindfolded, and in addition to not knowing the suit order of the aces the performer does not know the identity of the chosen card. The method explained does not require exceptional technical skill and should the plot appeal to readers and a purchase is made it is a fair bet that many will be soon involved in an attempt to devise their own methods for producing the effect. They are reminded that the author has over two hundred other solutions and has promised to publish another using a contemporary technique. The one under review being restricted to using methods which may have been used by Hofzinser.

There are eleven pages of notes by Karl Fulves which consist mainly of variations on the theme, and provide material for study of the problem.

Jack Avis

During my last meeting with Dai Vernon he performed a version of a Bro Hammon concept. I must admit the ace climax knocked me out.

As this issue of Pabular is being dedicated to Dai to mark the occasion of his birthday I would like to explain my handling of the Hammon concept. However my thanks must go to Jay Malbrough on whose routine I based my handling. For a very good patter presentation refer to Jay's fine publication "The Magic of the Forks Hotel".

Effect

Four cards are shown to consist of two Jacks of Diamonds and two Queens of Spades which change to three Jacks and a Queen, four Queens and then into the four Aces.

Set-Up

On top of the deck place the following cards. Ace of Spades, Ace of Diamonds, Jack of Diamonds, Ace of Clubs, Queen of Spades. The Ace of Spades being the top card.

Routine

Appear to count off four cards into the right hand. In fact the first card taken is a double card push off followed by three single cards. DO NOT reverse count the four cards. Place the deck to one side.

Holding the face down packet from above in the right hand, with the left first finger pull the bottom card to the left until the left second finger tip contacts the second card from the bottom which is also pulled to the left. The left thumb now pulls the top card of the packet to the left which allows the right hand to remove the last two cards, squared as one card, to the right.

The right hand now turns palm up to expose the face of its card. This card is seen to be the Jack of Diamonds. Replace the Jack on top of the left hand cards and at once deal the top card face down onto the table.

Now turn the left hand palm down to expose the face card which is the Queen of Spades. Turn the left hand palm up, buckle the bottom card as the right fingers reach over and appear to pull out the bottom card, however the finger tips move into the break formed by the buckled bottom card and removes the second card from the bottom.

Place this card on top of the tabled card.

The right hand fingers now flip face up the top card of the left hand packet and leaves it squared with the other cards.

Turn the left hand palm down to expose the face card which is the Queen of Spades. With the right hand pull out the bottom card, the Jack of Diamonds, turn it face up and place it on top of the Queen.

Turn the left hand palm up, take the packet of cards with the right hand and use them to scoop up the two tabled cards.

Place the complete packet into the left hand.

Take the packet from above with the right hand and turn it face up to expose the face card which is the Jack of Diamonds.

Turn the right hand palm down and with the left thumb peel the TOP card of the packet onto the left palm.

Repeat the action of showing the bottom card and peeling the TOP card on top of the card in the left hand.

Again expose the bottom card but this time peel out the BOTTOM card and at once turn the right hand palm up to expose the Queen of Spades.

Spread the three cards in the left hand and insert the right hand card beneath the top card, square up the packet and cut the top three cards to the bottom.

Retake the packet with the right hand and repeat all the above actions up to the point where the bottom card is shown for the third time, at this point the TOP card is again peeled off into the left hand. Show the Queen for the fourth time and then drop it on top of the left hand cards.

Flip the complete packet face up, an ACE shows, at once Elmsley Count the packet to reveal four aces.

It must have been about 1956 that I saw Dai Vernon for the first time. He has had a profound effect on my outlook. The spell that he wove has never been equalled — the magic never surpassed.

Some twenty years later I had the unnerving privilege to work for him at the Pabular Ramsay Reunion. As a reminder of the enjoyable time there and his kindness to all the artists I am honoured to contribute one of the tricks we saw that night to this Tribute to Vernon.

Bob Read

HANDKERCHIEF THROUGH GLASS

A handkerchief is threaded through the handle of a half pint mug. The two ends are gathered and the handkerchief is pulled and seems to penetrate the solid glass handle.

Hold the glass by left hand, first finger and thumb on outer surface, remaining three fingers inside glass. Handle projects upwards between first finger and thumb (1).

Handkerchief is passed from the front, beneath first finger, through handle towards body and drapes over thumb and glass (2).

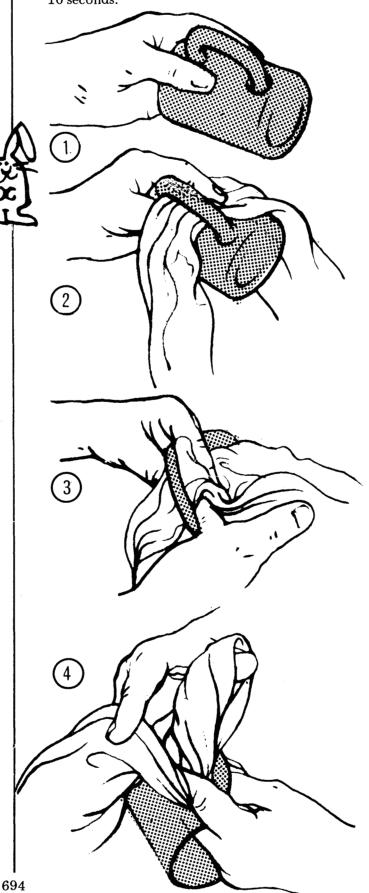

Right hand curls around glass, palm parallel to bottom of glass, fingers pointing to rim of glass on the audience side. Right fingers move over outer surface under hand, until right first finger strikes left first finger through handkerchief, right third finger then takes over, passing below right first finger, below left first finger and up between the left first finger and handle (3). The right third finger is still below the handkerchief, and naturally when it is raised about one inch it drags the hank back from under the handle. The left first finger presses the hank against the glass.

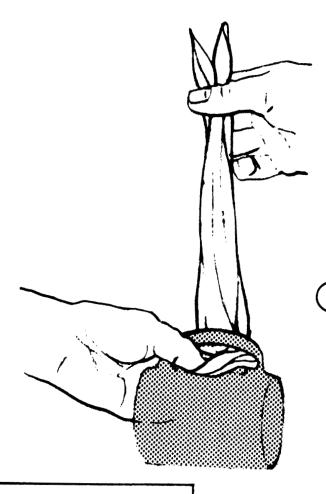

The right hand is raised, and brings up the forward end of the hank, the middle is pinned to the glass by the left first finger, the action of right third finger beneath the handkerchief brings the nearest corner of the handkerchief back out from beneath the handle. The right thumb takes over from the third finger and the hand continues upward (4).

From the front it looks as if handkerchief is still threaded through the handle. In reality the left first finger merely pins the middle of the handkerchief to the glass. This finger then pushes the middle of the handkerchief through the handle where it is gripped at the rear by the left thumb (5).

Right hand tugs the handkerchief a couple of times and it apparently penetrates the handle.

The whole sequence is over in less than 10 seconds.

THE TIRED TRAVELLERS

A Happy Birthday Professor — Here is what may be regarded as a short version your well known 'Travellers' effect. Definitely not offered as an improvement in any way whatever — but it can be performed seated — hence the title.

Effect

Two signed cards travel magically from the pack, one into the left inside pocket and the other into the right inside pocket.

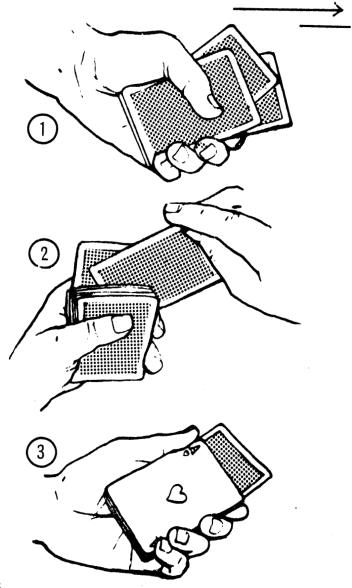

Preparation

Remove the four aces from the pack and arrange them — AD, AC, AH, AS. Put a downward crimp in the upper left hand corner of the top card of the face down pack. Place the four aces face down on top of the pack, the AD being uppermost, and cut the pack. Have a marking pen nearby.

- (2) Turn the pack face down sideways and hold it in the left hand. The right hand now fans the two outjogged aces slightly (1) and flash their faces to the spectators. Give the pen to a spectator and line up the red aces using the right hand.
- (3) Immediately the red aces are aligned as one, the right hand moves forward with the two cards until they are extending from the outer end of the pack for two thirds of their length. This action secretly draws out the AC between them for one third its length the reverse of the familiar plunger move.
- (4) Next, keeping the two red aces squared as one card pivot them around the left second finger as shown in (2) with the right hand and turn them face up onto the top of the pack (3). The spectators, seeing the face up AH will naturally assume that the face down AC protruding from the outer end of the pack to be the AD. A spectator is now asked to sign his name on the face of the AH.

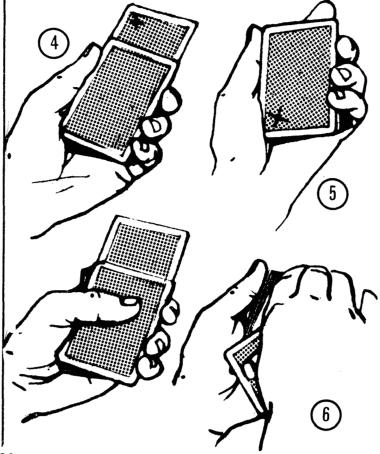

- (5) Double lift the AH and turn the double face down. Take off the top card (AD) and insert it in the front end of the pack BELOW the outjogged card actually it goes below the AS and above the crimped card a simple matter as the crimp provides a space which can be seen if the pack is bevelled slightly to the left, though with practise it can be done without looking
- (6) The card you have just inserted is not pushed right into the pack, but squared up with the other outjogged card. You now ask another spectator to take the pen.
- (7) Repeat the steps 3, 4, 5 and 6. This time the AD is signed and the back of the AS as it extends from the outer end of the pack is accepted as the AH in the same way as the back of the AC masquaraded as the AD during the signing of the AH. This time when you apparently replace the signed card it really does go immediately below the outjogged card.
- (8) At this point you have had the two red aces signed and the spectators believe that they are two cards protruding from the front end of the pack. Actually, because of the slow motion switch, these cards are the two black aces, the two signed red ones being face down on top of the pack.
- (9) You now perform a flourish, which I believe should be credited to the late Dr Daley. The pack is held in the left hand as shown in (4) with the two protruding cards extending for half their length, and the forefinger at the end of the pack with its tip in contact with the face of the bottom card of the two. The right forefinger goes to the outer left corner marked 'X' and swivels the two cards clockwise until they are reversed end for end. This action will be found easier if the left forefinger pushes upwards slightly, and to ensure that the left inner corner clears the thumb crotch as the cards move round, have the pack well forward in the left hand before beginning the clockwise movement.
- (10) The right hand removes the two cards clear from the pack and tosses them face up onto the table, spreading them as you throw so that the spectators can clearly see both cards are black aces.
- (11) The right hand returns to the pack and palms the top card using either the method described by Vernon in his book "Select Secrets" or the right hand top palm from The Card Magic of Le Paul, page 54. Produce this card from the left inside coat pocket and throw it onto the table for verification of the signature.

- (12) The right hand now takes the pack and slaps it face up onto the table leaving the top card (the other red ace) palmed in the left hand using a variation of the sleight described in "Expert Card Technique" on page 57. The left hand reaches into the right inside coat pocket and produces the second red ace which is also tossed onto the table for the signature to be verified.
- (13) The variation of the palm referred to above is performed as follows.

Hold the pack in the left hand as shown in (5). Note particularly the position of the thumb which remains constant until the conclusion of the sleight.

When the right hand approaches to take the pack its thumb hits the top card about half an inch from the inner corner at the point marked 'X' in (5), which causes the card to pivot on the base of the left thumb and swing clockwise until its right outer corner touches the tip of the left little finger. See (6). The right fingers now curl round the outer end of the pack and the right thumb moves onto the pack.

The right hand now moves the pack forward clear of the left hand leaving the original top card, which, is now so aligned with the left hand that it is only necessary to curl the fingers in slightly to complete the palm.

After reading this month's column you will probably call me the 'name dropper extraordinary', because names are what this month has been all about. So, where shall we start? In the last weeks there have been so many American visitors to these shores that it is just impossible to record them all, so let's just mention some of them. The reason they came, is of course they were en route to the F.I.S.M. Brussels Convention.

First one in was the fabulous Goshman: with the christian name (I know he'll forgive me for this) of Albert. I met Albert coming off the plane and wasn't in the least bit surprised to see as it landed that its wheels were actually made of sponge balls. Albert was over for some lectures and the convention and spent a few days in London. Hugh Riley and Mike Caldwell arrived on another plane on another day and I couldn't help but notice that on the plane in which Mike landed the wheels were buckled. Mike stayed a week in London and he could afford it, he didn't pay any rent. He stayed at Billy McComb's place. As Billy was in the United States at the time it's probable that he didn't even know that Mike had taken over his apartment.

Another name to conjure with, Pete Biro, complete with girl friend Bobbie. Pete didn't need any excuses to bring her to Europe; bringing Bobbie was the excuse. In Pete's group was also Larry Jennings. I spent a little time with him and he improves with age. Still fooling around with cards and coins and getting better and better all the time.

Sothebys auction rooms. The big event there for magicians recently was the sale of the first half of the Jimmy Findlay library. After checking some of the prices paid for some of the books, I suddenly realised that maybe I was a lot wealthier than I thought. I'll give you an example. They had three books on sale apart from the auction, one I believe was the bibliography of the Findlay Library, another described the posters in the Findlay Poster Collection and a third that I think was one of the J.F. Collectors annuals. The original price of all three books was around £20. Coming up in the auction someone paid £40 – and that will give you an idea of just how crazy some of those bidding were. Mario Carrandi was there from New York, bidding right, left and centre. Mario must be wealthy and if he isn't he probably will be by the time he turns over those books with even only a small profit margin.

So what else of interest? Yes, Clapper Board. And for those who don't know what that is it is the name of a late afternoon T.V. programme for children shown in this country. A couple of weeks back the subject of the programme was 'Magic in Films' and it was a pleasant surprise to see people like Orson Welles, Dante and one or two others. The big surprise for me was Horace Goldin. I remember seeing this film that runs for perhaps 8 or 10 minutes and to this day I maintain that anyone could go out and perform it exactly as Goldin performed it and paralyze any audience. All one would need to do would be to change the costumes. The tricks and effects still hold up as well today as when the film was made, which has got to be around 40 years ago.

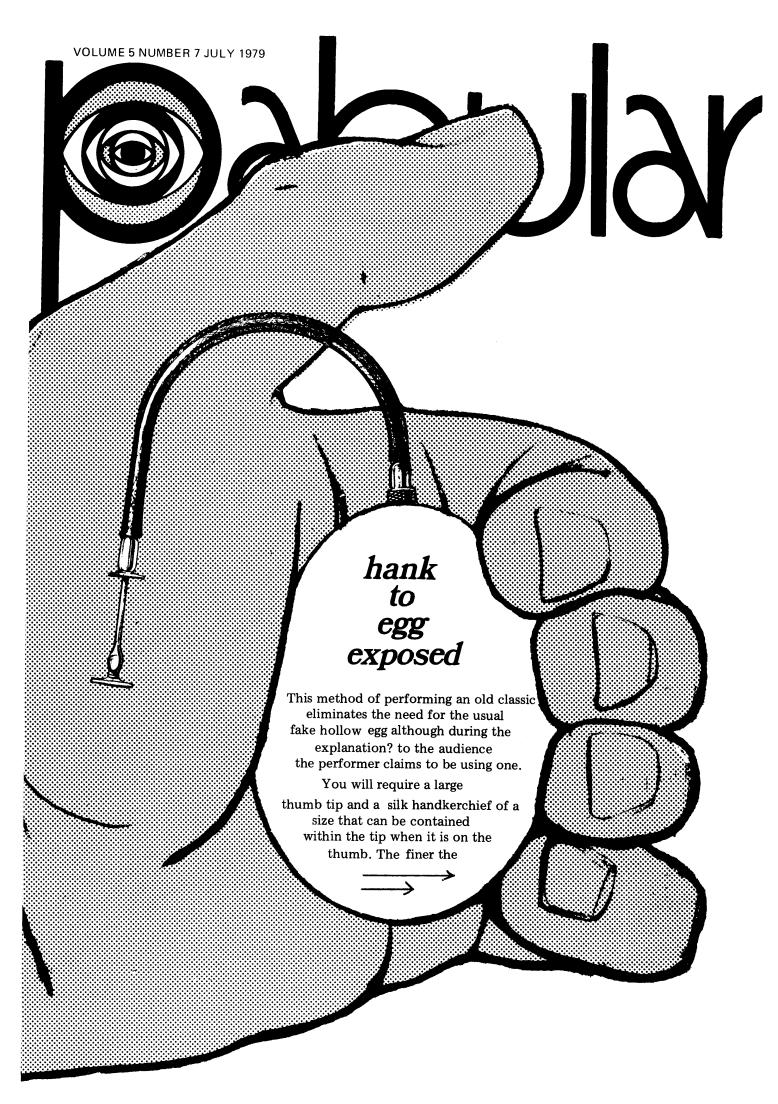

As this issue is dedicated to one Dai Vernon let's wrap up this column with a couple of thoughts inspired not by Vernon but by John Ramsay. The reason I mention it in this context is that Ramsay actually performed the trick I am about to describe to a group of magicians, one of whom was Vernon. John Ramsay walked into a room in which a bunch of magicians were sitting and said "What are you all doing sitting here?" He pulled out his watch, looked at it and said "it's nearly time for tea." At which point he proceeded to wind up the watch which made a terrible racket as if he was using a noisy watch-winder — until he turned over his right hand and opened it, and they realised there was no winder; then he turned his left hand over no watch.

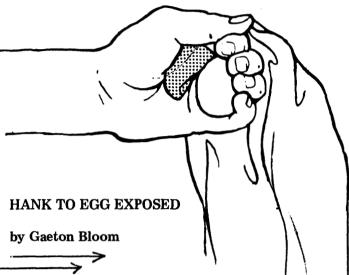

I thought about this for a long time and came up with a method for doing it, and I have since found out that Roy Walton came up with probably exactly the same method. So, with apologies to Roy and some weak excuse about great minds thinking alike, I shall mention the fact that the watch itself could have a noisy watch-winder fitted into it - in fact many old watches are very noisy, so that eliminates the winder. And if the watch itself was simply hanging on a chain or piece of string so that when released it would drop down and swing back under the jacket the illusion could be perfect. The left hand holds the watch, the right hand winds it up. Right hand turns over slowly, opens slowly and at that same moment the left hand just releases the watch and allows it to swing back under the jacket. The left hand opens slowly to show that there is no watch and the effect is over.

texture of the silk the larger will be the silk that can be used. These are placed separately in the right coat pocket and arranged in such a manner that the thumb can be easily and quickly pushed into the tip when the right hand enters the pocket and removes the silk.

Also required is an egg onto which you stick a small piece of silk making it appear to be the usual fake with a corner of the silk showing through the hole in the side. This piece of silk should of course match the handkerchief. Place this prepared egg in the left side coat pocket and with a glass tumbler on the table you are ready to perform.

To commence both hands go into the coat pockets as you remark that for your next trick you will require a handkerchief. Push the right thumb into the tip and grasping a corner of the handkerchief remove it from the pocket and display. As the right hand brings the handkerchief into view the left hand is brought out with the egg concealed in its curved fingers. It should appear to the audience that you are unsure which pocket contains the handkerchief and if the right hand leaves the pocket before the left the attention of the spectators will be centred on the handkerchief and they will pay no attention to the left hand.

The left hand is now brought chest high closing it into a loose fist and the corner of the handkerchief together with the thumb tip pushed into the opening at the top of the fist. Both are left there (Fig.1) and the remainder of the handkerchief gradually pushed through and directly into the thumb tip with the right index finger.

When the whole of the handkerchief is in the tip, close right fingers around the left fist and bring both hands up to the mouth and blow on them. During this action manoeuvre the tip onto the right thumb. Both hands now separate and move away from the mouth and the egg which has been transferred to the right hand is shown to the audience with the piece of silk at the back of the egg out of their view.

You now explain that it is not a real egg—just an imitation plastic one. Bang it sharply on the rim of the tumbler with a force which would break the shell of a normal egg. Actually it is the sound of the thumb tip which the audience hear hitting the glass. You further convince them that the egg is not the real thing by saying that you merely push the handkerchief through a hole in the side as you turn it to show a corner of the handkerchief protruding from the hole (really the piece stuck on the side).

You now offer to teach the spectators the trick in detail. Transfer the egg to the left hand and apparently pull the handkerchief out of the egg. Actually the right thumb is inserted into the top of the left fist which is partially closed and the handkerchief pulled out of the thumb tip through the top of the left fist, leaving the tip behind at the side of the egg.

Explain that the hollow imitation is concealed in the left hand at the outset, and to change the handkerchief into an egg you simply push it into the hole. Demonstrate this by repeating exactly your previous actions — pushing the handkerchief into the thumb tip and getting the loaded thumb tip onto the right thumb as you blow on the hands.

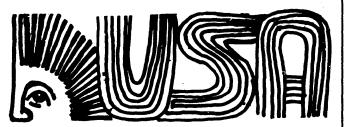

Reveal the egg and caution the spectators that they must take care not to expose the hole in the side of the egg.

Conclude by saying that if you were a real magician it would be possible to change the handkerchief into a real egg. Pick up the tumbler remarking "If I was to tap a real egg on the rim of the tumbler it would break." Suit the action to the words and register disbelief as the egg breaks. Replace the tumbler on the table and let the contents of the egg fall into it. With a puzzled expression registering on your face look at the empty shell (one half in each hand) before dropping them into the glass. Dispose of the loaded thumb tip as you take the applause.

HAPPENINGS By O'Bie O'Brien

Well, it happened at long last — yours truly finally got to meet your editor Fred Robinson. My wife and I were on Pete Biro's El Cheapo but El Goodo Magic Tour and our first stop was the Magic Circle in London.

Our group showed up about six o'clock and my good friend Pat Page pointed out Fred to me. I ventured over and said to Fred, "You have to guess my name, but I'll give you a big clue." On my lapel I had a pin which read F.F.F.F. (these beautiful pins are new this year and only past attendees at our close-up convention can purchase them), and would you believe Fred said, "It can only be OBIE"—it's nice to know that our four "F" motto is catching on in the magic world—only non-Americans with pins are Anthony Brahams and Jos Bema. Well, to make a long story short, we had a good visit and I only wish that I could have joined the guys for the little session they had on Thursday.

Larry Jennings and Ray Grismer were in our group. So Fred, Eric Mason and Gordon Bruce (who took the train down from Glasgow, Scotland) had an all afternoon and evening session. I can't remember if Howie Schwarzman joined them or not.

Here's something Larry taught me on the trip and he said mention his name if you do it — Well Larry here it is. If you remember, on page 34 of Frank Garcia's Million Dollar Card Secrets he has a trick called "Switchcraft" which uses an extra card. Larry's version doesn't, and I wonder why nobody didn't think of it sooner as it's so simple.

Double lift to show say the ten of clubs—replace card(s) on top of deck—take top card and place it underneath the second card—double lift again to show say five of clubs—say "five of clubs goes on the table with glass on top of it — ten of clubs goes on top of glass"

— now snap your fingers, turn over cards to show five of clubs on top and ten on the bottom — so simple I love it.

Larry showed this many times on our trip and the more I saw it the better I liked it. Try it and you will see what I mean.

We have a great time in Amsterdam with the Dutch Magicians as they had arranged an evening get-together that turned out to be the highlight of my trip, especially as Fred Kaps was there. We had dinner with him on Saturday night along with Pete Biro and Larry Jennings.

On Sunday night Fred was into it — doing tricks along with such other notables as Flip, Dick Kornwinder (car fame) and a lovable gentleman by the name of Eddie Taytelbaum — not only does Eddie invent precision made tricks but let me tell you guys he can do miracles with the cards — and on top of all this he is a super gentleman. In fact, he stayed to the very end with Howie Schwarzman, Dick Cook (who was also on our tour), the President of the Dutch Ring (sorry forgot his name), and myself doing tricks till the wee hours of the morning. Next morning we left for Brussels.

How can I call this column U.S.A. Happenings when I'm here in Brussels attending F.I.S.M. I hope you will forgive me this time.

I've got to tell you about some of the people I met during the convention and in the next issue I'll duscuss the close-up contest, if you can call it that.

My first introduction to some super close-up was to Bernard Bilis and J.J. Sanvert. Howie Schwarzman, Larry Jennings and I sat and watched Bernard and J.J. do some great effects of Derek Dingle, Vernon and Marlo plus some of their own. It got so crowded with people trying to see what was going on that, would you believe, we had to stop so that people could pass by to look at the dealers. No sooner had we stopped and Juan Tamariz (from Spain) showed up — if you don't know who he is — Ken Brooke has a card trick he put out called the Tamariz Rabbits which I think is one of the best close-up tricks you can carry in your pocket for children. The only thing extra you have to do is put colour letera film on the apples and rabbits. Mine have red apples, green leaves and yellow rabbits. The yellow makes it stand out for better contrast. If you haven't got it - by all means get it. If guys like Eric Mason, Trevor Lewis, Pete Biro and many more are using it you know it's good; besides Ken will appreciate the business - Right Ken!!

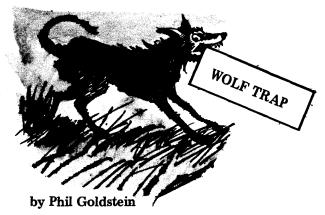

Juan sits down and does his three card monte which is strictly for laymen. He brings out four $50 notes — hands two to each spectator and says we will play a game of follow the queen in which each of you make a bet. Well, he gave Howie Schwarzman his two $50 notes and as he was giving the other two to the spectator on his left, Howard switched them for $10 notes. The first spectator bet and lost — as Juan turned, Howard threw out the $10 and the look on Tamariz's face was worth a million dollars. It broke us all up laughing so hard I thought Bilis was going to fall on the floor. Juan went along with the gag and still beat Howard out of his money. This kind of stuff to me was better than the convention.

I've got to digest a little — all during our trip Ray Grimser is doing his ring and rope and showing many people in Europe the actual workings he put in Genii. Go back and read it, you will find it worthwhile as everyone he showed it to was impressed.

Here it's Friday night and we are all at the trade mart for an evening of magic and dancing. Who do I spot with about ten people around him doing card tricks, none other than Ascanio. By the time I rush over to get a front row view, he has started his all backs routine. The handling was beautiful, then into some 4-ace routines and by this time a big crowd has gathered at his table to watch. Something I enjoyed very much. Got to talk to him the next day and for those of you who didn't know, he is now back doing magic and loves it. It would be sure nice if we could get him to the U.S.A. Even if the language causes a little trouble, I'll even learn Spanish!!

Saturday now and after the close-up contest I had some time to kill before the wife got back from shopping so I sat down to visit with Dai Vernon. Christian joined us and after exchanging gossip I got Dai to show me his centre steal. Well, one thing led to another and Vernon commences to open up — seconds bottoms — the odd middle. Now I get a lesson on seconds without the left thumb and finger holding the top right hand corner of the pack. Vernon's thumb is 1/2 across the left side about half-way down. This is the way seconds should be done according to the Professor. He convinced me, so that's what I've got to practice. To make a long story short, about 90 minutes went so fast and so many people looking on that I hated to leave. If you see Dai get him to show you what he shows kids; the picture of George Washington, it's cute.

I looked around at the large crowd and said "What am I offered for my seat?" Vernon said, "You wouldn't", I said, "Watch me" — Collected $3.00 and left — till next time.

The following was developed as an outgrowth of my Cry Wolf routine (see Pabular Volume 4, number 11). Required are four cards: the Ace and deuce of Spades, and two identical Jokers. At the start, the order of the packet from the face is: AS, Joker, Joker, 2S.

Display the cards, calling attention to their order. Flip the packet face down. State that you'll reverse the order of the cards, to bring the Ace to the top. Siva Count the cards. Double Turnover the top two cards as one, displaying the Ace. Turn the two cards down. Deal the top single card to the table, face down.

State that you'll reverse the order of the remaining three cards, to bring the deuce to the top. In fact, count the cards as follows: hold the packet in Elmsley Grip. Push off the top two cards as one, taking them into the right hand. The left hand's card is now taken on top of the right hand stock — but you steal back the lowermost card of the right hand stock into the left hand. Finally, place the single card now in the left hand onto the right hand stock. The order of the packet is now, from the face: AS, Joker, 2S.

Flip the top card of the face down packet face up, revealing the deuce (as the audience expects). Hold the face up 2S in the right hand. The top card of the face down left hand pair is taken below the 2S. The remaining card from the left hand is placed on top of the deuce. State that you have sandwiched the 2S in between the two Jokers.

Flip the pcket face up, and Eye Count, displaying a face down card between two Jokers. Flip the packet face down. Half-pass the lowermost two cards of the packet.

State that you will cause an unusual transposition to take place. Make a mystical gesture. Spread the packet, revealing the face up card in the centre to be a Joker. Turn the fan over, showing that the cards sandwiching the Joker are now the Ace and deuce. Turn up the tabled card, revealing the second Joker.

A coin changes to another one as it is tossed in the air.

1st Sequence

- 1) Hold a copper coin at the base of the 3rd and 4th fingers, curl the fingers to conceal the coin in the finger palm position.
- 2) With the palm upwards hold a silver coin on the pad of the 1st and 2nd fingers, the thumb almost covers the whole coin move the nail of the 2nd finger to the underside of the silver coin, the thumb allows this to happen clip the sides of the 1st finger and 3rd finger to the edge of the coin and begin to backpalm it (Fig.1) when the coin makes contact with the first knuckle joint of the 2nd finger, release the 3rd finger pressure and allow the coin to relax into the back clip position.
- 3) The first finger moves gently backwards round the 2nd finger to allow the silver coin to remain flat against the back of the 2nd finger (Fig.2). Now toss the copper coin up in the air and catch it again on the upturned palm—contrive to move the copper coin to balance on the pads of the upturned 1st and 2nd fingers, (the silver coin remains back-clipped).

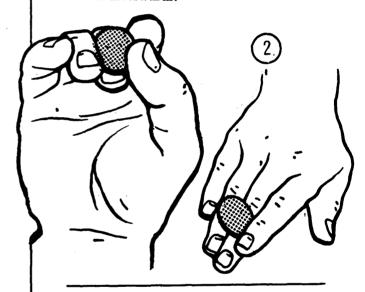

2nd Sequence

Put your thumb on the copper coin and hold it firmly against the 1st finger — use your 1st and 3rd fingers to transfer the silver coin to the finger palm position by moving the 2nd finger to the underside of the silver coin — during this sequence revolve your wrist so that the palm of the hand is downwards, with the knuckles of the hand upwards; this move displays the other side of the copper coin now held between the thumb and 1st and 2nd fingers and the back of your hand is openly shown to your audience — as you slowly turn your hand back palm up again, throw the silver coin into the air and catch it again on the open palm at the same time back-clipping the copper coin — you are now back to the beginning of the first sequence, etc, etc.

The whole sequence should be timed on a slow count of three; one — display the single coin, two — shows the back of the hand, and three — tosses the coin gently.

The move is capable of streamlining some coins across routines — it evolved out of a handling shown to small children — as follows, with a coin back-clipped close your hand into a fist and ask somebody to do the same as you — open your hand flat — close it into a fist — repeat — then with the hand in the palm up position as it revolves knuckles upwards into a fist secretly transfer the coin into the palm — ask your helper what he has in his hand — nothing? — you have a coin — this was of course the simplest of all effects — but the trick would always act as an icebreaker, cause a smile, especially when you gave your coin away to him afterwards.

QASIS

The F.I.S.M. Convention held in Brussels this year resulted in scores of magicians breaking their journey by dropping off in London either on their way out or on their way home — some did both.

As can be expected the close-uppers broke away and sessions were soon in full swing. During one of these Ray Grismer showed a version of the Paul Fox Miracle Gimmick in which the performer finds several mentally selected cards. This brought an observation from Larry Jennings that in his opinion it was more effective to divine one card and showed one from 'Erdnase' to prove his point — both were good. Larry has definite views on others aspects of our craft — one being that an overt show of skill was best avoided and instanced the 'Professor' who never even performed a pressure fan when in action.

It would seem that the merits or otherwise of exhibiting technical skill depends entirely on the effect the performer wishes to create on his audience. If he desires to get a reputation for being clever with cards such demonstrations will undoubtedly help to achieve that objective.

However, such displays are 'out' if it is desired to leave the spectators completely non-plussed. It is self-evident that once the spectators are aware of the performers capability in this direction they will inevitably conclude that technical skill was responsible for the effects produced. So, if the performers aim is to create the greatest magical impact it is logical that they should be oblivious of his digital expertise.

Another day, another occasion, and Larry again in action. This time he included his classic 'Open Travellers' which he claims is eminently successful with lay audiences. If you are a stranger to the effect it is explained in Alton. Sharpe's Expert Card Mysteries.

Howard Schwarzman homed in on most of the sessions. At one he showed an excellent card effect in which a thought of card passes from one small packet of cards to another. It is explained in Howie's 1961 Lecture Notes.

One who missed out on these sessions was Obie O'Brien F.F.F.F. our U.S. correspondent. Just managed to say hello and a couple of other words before he went missing. Sadly I missed the 'Professor' but will make up for this omission when he comes back for the Ron Macmillan's International Day of Magic in December. Also missed John Cornelius — was out when he rang. The same happened when he rang Eric Mason which was a pity — he should see our Art Editor's presentation of his slate effect. Name any card and it appears on the slate plus other puzzling effects. Mentioning Eric reminds me that his coinc ahange impressed Mr Jennings — it is easier than other methods and has the boys in the Blenheim Bar practising Eventually everyone went home — except Gordon Bruce who never missed a session, and somewhere along the line performed a Coin Assembly which caused Frank Farrow to make pleasant noises. He liked the direct method employed and was surprised when told he was selling it — see Pabular Vol.5 No.5.

Just back from lecturing in Chicago Bob Read stopped long enough to produce a large bottle from a very small handkerchief before setting off for the S.A.M.S. Convention and other lecture engagements. First reports coming in indicate he went like a bomb (English variety). Watch out for the glowing accounts of his performance in the U.S. magazines. Bob is building up a considerable collection of old prints, mainly relating to the cups and balls. He has generously offered us the opportunity to reproduce them in Pabular — something to look forward to ere long.

Some time back it was mentioned in this column that one close-up magician had become a household name as a result of appearing on television. Last month a promise was made to reveal the name of who has made it - Paul Daniels. Actually he was already well known before his last series of four shows in which every trick he did could be regarded as a close-up effect. Here is a list of those I remember. Cut and restoring two five pound notes, Rising Matchbox, Three Card Trick, Pricking the Garter, Three Shell Game, Ring off Stick, Out of this World, Coins through Table and the Egg Bag. In the Jictar ratings the final show was fourth and in London specifically No.1. The success of the shows which showed Paul doing the kind of material best suited to his own individual style — the illusions being in the hands of the Moretti's. Congratulations to John Fisher who produced the series and his magical adviser Ali Bongo.

Now for what threatens to be a regular feature of this column — corrections. First Tommy Wonder's 'One in the Eye' Vol.5 No.4. He writes to say. In counting one-two-three, the coin is put in the eye between "two" and "three" i.e. on two and a half, but two and a half is NOT spoken out loud. If this little gag were to be used, people might smile and look up at the performer's face. At least they might be confused a bit, and it would be a little deviation. This distraction from the delicate pointing involved at this point would be fatal. All attention has been brought onto the box and must stay on the box, no little gags here.

Roy Walton writes re: his 'Card School' in last month's issue. The first line in paragraph five. Either the word 'below' should read 'above', or the underlined 'high' should be 'low'. Either of these alterations will make the sentence correct.

Very briefly this effect consists of the performer finding which one of seven black cards a spectator has in mind and then causes the remaining six to change to red. There is more to the effect than the above bare outline which is just a pointer to assist the reader to understand the end objective as he studies the explanation of the methods used combined, with the really important part — the entertaining story without which it would be just another card trick.

A pack of cards which include a joker and the ability to perform the Curry Turnover Change plus a small packet switch to change a packet of six black cards held in the right hand for six red ones on top of the pack held in the left hand.

Commence by giving the pack a casual shuffle and spread the cards faces towards you. Find the joker and cut the pack bringing it second or third from the face of the pack. Next, remove the first seven black cards starting from the right of the face up spread and drop them face downwards onto the table, and then move six red cards to the bottom of the face up pack. Turn the pack face down and hold it in the left hand. The joker is now near the bottom of the pack and the six red cards on the top.

Square up the tabled seven black cards and pick up the packet with the right hand, fingers at the outer end and thumb at the inner, explaining that they represent the seven days of the week. With the packet held close to the table surface extend the left second finger and press its tip on the top card of the packet as the right moves to the right with the other six cards (Fig.1). The tabled card is now turned face up by sliding the left side of the packet in the right hand under it and flipping it over and during this action the right hand continues its movement until it is close to the pack held in the left hand. This is a conditioning action which is repeated with the next five cards each succeeding card when it is turned face up should overlap the previous one, the last one being placed face up at end of the spread.

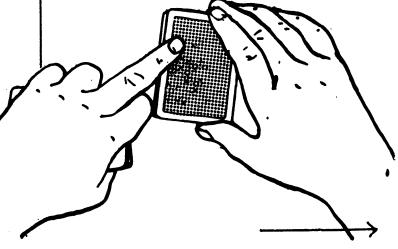

As each card is turned face up remark that it represents a certain day. It is then that the important business of creating entertainment really begins, and as much amusement and fun as possible should be obtained as the face of each black card is exposed.

When turning over the first card, it will of course be a black one, say "Monday is always a black day, it is the day I start the week's work", turn over the second card, saying "Tuesday is also a black day - the mother-in-law comes round in the evening" and when turning the third card "Wèdnesday is no better - my wife insists we go to the cinema, and I hate pictures, another black day". You now get more intense and as you turn over Thursday's card say, with much feeling, "Thursday, the mother-in-law comes round again." Another black day." Continue "Friday is a black day, we always have fish, and I hate fish." As you turn over Saturday's card remark, "Saturday, I do not work, but it is still a black day, nothing but sport on television, and I hate sport." You are now left with one card, and before turning it over say, "Ah, now Sunday that is a good day . . . for some people . . . for me, NO, all day I am thinking, what a black day, (turn over card) tomorrow I have to go to work." Drop card at end of the spread.

A spectator is now invited to pick up and shuffle the seven cards. Meanwhile you remove the top six cards (the red ones) and fan them out faces towards yourself as an example of what you want him to do, requesting him to think of the cards as days of the week and to concentrate on the card occupying the position of his 'black' day, and remember the name of the card. When he understands what is required, replace the six cards back on top of the pack which has been retained in left hand, and take a left little finger break beneath them.

When he has a card in mind gaze into his eyes and suggest that you believe that you now know his black day — but maybe you are wrong — it is not important as you are merely play acting. Request him to shuffle the cards and put them on the table. You then spread them in an overlapping line face down.

Pull one card out of the spread, say the card in Tuesday's position, saying "Tuesday is a bad day." The spectator may deny that this is his black day and you reply "But it is my black day." Gather up the remaining six cards and hold them squared in the right hand with the fingers at the outer end and the thumb at the inner. You now adopt a confident attitude and looking at the tabled card you pulled from the spread say "What card did you think of?" When he replies you flip over the card by sliding the packet beneath it, the right hand continuing to the pack held in the left hand switches the six black cards it holds for the six red ones on top of the pack held in the left hand. Immediately the switch is made (for detailed explanation see Expert Card Technique p.149) the hands spread apart, the right putting the packet of red cards face down onto the table, the left doing likewise with the pack. Both hands are now free and move away from the cards.

The exchange of the two packets will escape detection for two very good reasons. The spectators have seen a tabled card turned over face up using the same action five times previously and do not in consequence regard it with suspicion, and also they are intent on watching the card being turned over. When their attention moves back to the performer his hands are empty — the deed has been done and the cards are on the table, and both hands are empty.

Assuming that the card is not the one chosen affect an attitude of disappointment at having failed, and then suddenly, with obvious delight you remark, "Ah, I have a friend." Pick up the pack as you move the wrong card to a suitable position for performing the Curry Change. Run through the pack to find the joker which you push upwards outjogging it for about half its length from the spread and then find the chosen card — (remember you have been told its name) and cut it to the face of the pack getting the third finger under it in preparation for the Curry sleight. Remove the protruding joker and place it face downwards onto the table without letting its face be seen. Call attention to it saying "This is my friend", turn it face upwards and at the same time the left hand apparently turns the 'wrong' card face down and pushes it away, and in so doing exchange it for the chosen one by means of the turnover change. This should be performed casually, the whole attention of the audience being directed to the joker. The pack is now placed face downwards on the table.

Spread the six cards into an overlapping line and pick up the joker as you ask the spectator his black day. Assume that he says Thursday.

Spread the six cards into an overlapping line and slide the joker into Tuesday's position and immediately withdraw it saying "Oh, that was my black day — what was yours?" He replies "Thursday" and you repeat "Ah, Thursday" and insert the joker into Thursday's position pause a moment and then withdraw it and as you look intently at it ask the spectator the name of his card and when he names it (he will have forgotten that he did this earlier) you show pleasurable satisfaction saying "Good, good" and keeping the joker on a level plane carry it slowly and carefully to the face down card and push it under what the audience believe to be the wrong card, flip it over to reveal the change to the chosen card. This should be done slowly making it obvious that no move takes place.

Look affectionately at the joker and murmur "Ah, my very good friend." Turn to the assisting spectator and say, "Do you know why I know Thursday is your black day?".....because it is the only day you really work." Simultaneously, with the above remark turn the packet face up and spread to reveal that they are now all red faces.

The really important parts of the presentation are when giving reasons why the various days are black days at the commencement of the trick. It is then that every ounce of comedy is extracted creating a fun atmosphere. Later, when the wrong card is chosen the mood completely changes and the performer shows dejection and dismay at his failure to produce the right card. Suddenly his expression changes — he remembers his friend the joker. With its aid the correct card is found and the performer remarks "Ah, my very good friend" and then turning to the spectator concludes with the little leg pull mentioned above, thus ending on a humorous note, which is topped when the six black cards are seen to have changed to red.

Once the switch of the two packets has been made the performer is free to concentrate his whole attention on presentation and really enjoy himself in the process. The two sleights are well covered by misdirection and take place some considerable time before the double climax — a very strong point.

One last observation. The success obtained when performing the effect will be commensurate with your ability to act sufficiently well to convey to the audience that you are having fun, you are dismayed when things go wrong, you are relieved at having found a solution and exhilarated by success. Even with moderate acting talents the 'entertaining' content of the presentation will be considerably enhanced and found to be far more acceptable to audiences than would be the case if it was performed as a straight divination effect which would probably then be regarded as something to be solved, in other words, a puzzle.

Editorial Note: In describing the above effect I have attempted to give some indication of the approach of Tamariz to the presentation of card magic. It has only been possible to give a general outline in what may seem a lengthy description but to include every detail would have made the article unduly long. However, if I have been successful in some measure to show the difference between the average card trick one sees and one which has received the Tamariz treatment — so be it.

What do the following moves all have in common?

The obvious answer is that they all use cards. But there is also something else. Here is a second question, which in a way answers the first. Once you know the mechanics of the above moves, have you ever been fooled by anybody else doing them? Or can you spot them from a hundred paces while blind drunk?

The trouble with all of these moves is, that instead of being subtle machinations to cover secret actions, they follow a recognisable pattern of movement, which only serves to draw attention to that which it is supposed to conceal. The actions are not unnatural in the strictest sense of the term, but they are sufficiently out of harmony with normal procedures to hit the onlooker with some force. So much force that it is a wonder that the spectator does not get a black eye!!

No doubt the reason why these stereotyped procedures are so much beloved by the finger flinging fraternity, is that they are fairly easy to perform. As a result they are often exploited as inferior substitutes for more difficult actions, which require stronger misdirection and better presentation to work effectively. Also a lot of cardicians believe, usually with no sound reason, that they actually fool people. This is because they get used to seeing the moves done by other magicians and so accept their effectiveness as part of the folklore of magic.

So it comes to pass that the basic flaw, inherent in this type of move, is continually ignored. Optical deceptiveness is allowed to become confused with unnoticability. The layman may not know exactly what has been done, but the unusual style of movement will unfailingly telegraph that something untoward is taking place.

Obviously these moves do have their uses. There are times when they are indispensible. But if they are to be used, they must only be used in circumstances which make them appear natural and right. A magician who uses, say, a riffle force, will need to contrive a situation, which appears to justify having a card chosen in this peculiar looking way. Finding this situation will require considerable thought and careful planning. In fact the time and effort expended on planning will often exceed the time and effort required to learn the more difficult moves.

So, before gaily embarking on your next Braue Add-on or Ascanio, think on the following points:-

Is there no better alternative possible?
Is the handling contrived/artificial under the circumstances?
Can the circumstances be changed to make the move look justifiable?

The June issue cover picture of Dai Vernon by Eric Mason has caused considerable comment and following requests we are producing a limited edition, each print signed by Eric Mason.

The prints will be black on 170gsm artist's cartridge, size approx. $10^{\prime\prime}$ x $14^{\prime\prime}$ (picture size $6\frac{1}{2}^{\prime\prime}$ x $9^{\prime\prime}$). The offer is open to subscribers of the magazine. The price, including packing and surface mail postage, will be £5.50 or US \$12.50.

Please write, enclosing your cheque, P.O. or Cash (full refund if not completely satisfied) to reserve your copy now — delivery 2-3 weeks plus postage time).

Just got back from my annual trip to Shangri La, which is English for Bonnie Scotland. Kirriemuir to be exact, and for those of you who may be interested, and there is one, my dear old mum, now in her middle eighties, is just fine. She has no idea what the youngest of her seven children really does for a living. She knows he's written a few books, she knows he has been on T.V. a few times doing magic tricks, but she doesn't really know what kind of a job he has. By her standards, everyone has a job of work to go to every day and at the end of the week you put your hand out and someone puts money in it. She, like most of her generation in this country were brainwashed over the years into thinking that this was life, this was living. A regular job was everything.

And talking about brainwashing, it becomes more and more evident that magicians are being brainwashed into thinking that there are only one or two ways to perform a magic act. You either stand there cracking a few gags whilst performing some effect which you have pulled out of your pocket, or you perform a silent manipulative act or maybe you don a Chinese robe and do a "costume" act. There are variations, of course. Maybe you buy three or four portable illusions and do an "illusion" act.

The difference between my old mother's generation and the magicians peddling their wares today, is that her generation were brainwashed as part of a deliberate policy of one group of people towards another, whereas the magicians of today are actually brainwashing each other. It really is a case of the blind leading the blind.

How long is it since you saw a really original performer? Someone who really brought something of HIS OWN to a really commercial magic act? Something that made that act look different somehow to the others? I can think of a few. The late Robert Harbin. The late Kardoma. The late Douglas Francis. The late Francis Watts. Come to think of it, it is getting late, isn't it. So far all the names I have mentioned are now regrettably no longer with us, and before anyone points out that Kardoma couldn't perform his act under present day conditions, let me say just three things. Piffle. Poppycock, and Balderdash. If old Kardoma were still around, he'd FIND A WAY.

There are of course a few performers around who could hold their own in the aforementioned company. The Moretti's, Johnny Thompson, Jay Marshall (and he hasn't got too long), Jerry Bergman, and a few more. All with one thing in common. They have all brought something of their own to the magic scene. Try it sometime, and if you think that the foregoing reads like something I have already written......so?

LATE NEWS: you will no doubt read about it elsewhere but one of my favourite close-up men is about to hit London. Scotty York by name, gentleman by nature. Scotty is one of the few close-up men who really give more than a little thought to his magic - example: who else would put a coin into a little brass box and make the coin change to the complete inner workings of a wrist watch. . .you think that's good o.k. Now he looks at his watch and where previously there was a watch face there is now the coin. . . yes, the same one. That's originality. He always does an effect with a gold finger, but I won't go into details here because until I saw Scotty perform HIS effect I always thought Goldfinger was a Jewish gynaecologist. If you can get to his lectures, and so far he has two arranged, one in London and one in Birmingham, do so. He is one of the few close-up men who are different. A thought. . . I seem to remember Scotty telling me that some dealer has ripped off his watch and coin trick, which brings me to Ali Bongo.

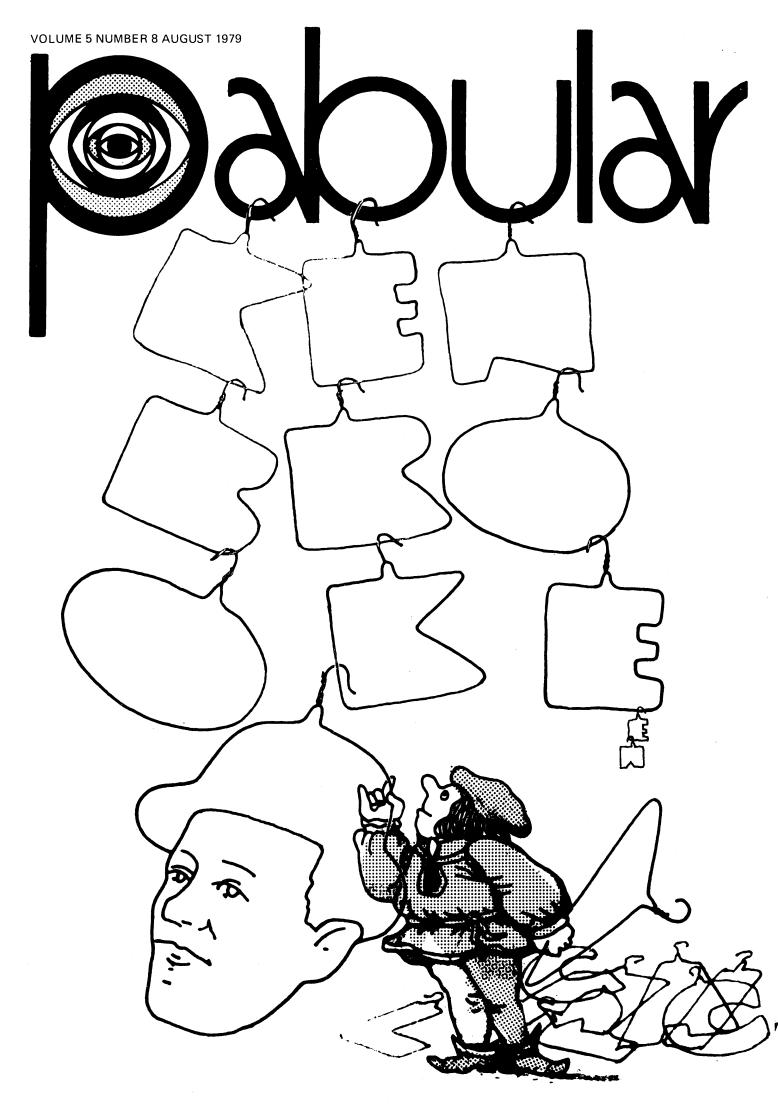

Ali is just back from Japan and he dropped me a line which arrived today, enclosing the Japanese version of an old effect of mine. "Easy Money" it was called. I don't know what the Japanese manufacturer calls his version, but as he didn't pay me anything for the rights to manufacture it...for him...it is easy money.

I have just taken a couple of months off work. . .that's right I haven't done a show in two months until the other night. The tricks were o.k. but I couldn't remember a line. I was halfway through a gag and blew it because I couldn't remember what came next, that's a fact. I had to call a friend of mine the next day to get him to tell me a gag I've been using for yonks.

The following is an extract from the Focus column of Volume One Number Twelve, August 1975: 'When under the name of progress your favourite magic shop has done its last vanishing trick and is no longer there, and you are wheeling your trolley round the magical supermarket not knowing what you want, where to look — or what it does, or how it works — don't ask the blonde at the till. She will only be there to take your money etc.'

The market forces responsible for producing this phenomenon will in turn produce a particular type of magical salesman whose sole concern will be the size of his, or her, commission. Such persons will have no love or respect for magic and almost certainly no performing experience. Furthermore, these people, whose only motivation is financial reward, will not, and cannot be expected to have any code of ethics in the magical sense. Maybe there will be the odd exception. . .maybe!

One cannot envisage these individuals advising youngsters not to let their hobby interfere with their education — refusing to sell them expensive tricks until they had first obtained their parents permission, and not then if a purchase would be likely to bring disappointment — make a special journey to see the first show of someone embarking on a professional career and afterwards, because of their concern for the public image of magic and the personal success of the performer, give the latter guidance and instruction — for free, which are just a few of the many non-profit making actions I recall of another magical salesman — Ken Brooke.

For over a decade Ken, together with Frank Farrow have provided a venue - The Magic Place - where magicians could meet and chat seated in comfort undisturbed by anything not directly pertaining to their hobby, without being pressurised into making a purchase. Into this studio come magicians from all over the world - it would be almost impossible to name one top line performer who fails to drop in when visiting London. Only yesterday in walked Johnny Paul — which is about as near the top as it is possible to get in close-up magical performers. For over an hour he entertained the company with descriptions of various bits of 'business' he uses to entertain the laity and in addition performed his Torn and Restored note.

Within a short space of time Johnny had left us in no doubt the path to be followed by anyone desirous of using magic to entertain people other than magicians. One remark he made gave the clue to it all "magicians say, it's no use going to see Johnny Paul — you don't learn anything". We will pursue the reason why in some future issue.

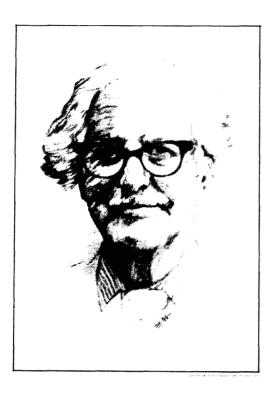

Within a few months such enjoyable experiences as the above will no longer be a part of the capital's magic scene because the sad news is that The Magic Place is closing down. When the door at 145 Wardour Street closes for the last time it will be the end of an era and one which I, together with countless others, will in the future have much to look back upon with pleasure, and say 'things are not what they used to be' — and they won't.

Whatever happens there will always be the British pub. It was in the Blenheim Bar that Piet Forton dropped in. Within half an hour Gordon Bruce joined him, followed closely by yours truly and only minutes later in walked Ricky Jay and an instant international magical session was in progress. Later when the bar filled up with Magic Circle members drifting in from their regular Monday night meeting Ricky performed his 'Remember and Forget' and changed a £1 note into a fiver — faultlessly. Piet gave us the lowdown on his repeat Torn and Restored thread which will appear in this magazine next month — you can see him perform it at the International Day of Magic in December.

Persi Diaconis came over with Ricky. Another session in which we found ourselves in Pat Page's London home (he was away) at eight o'clock the following morning. Plenty of magic, but nothing explained. These two characters don't talk — they hold the cards so close to the chest it's a wonder they can even breathe. Gordon B. was there which reminds me that Bobby Bernard said "The Gordon Bruce issue of Pabular was the most exciting issue of a magical magazine he had ever read".

There have been complaints that Britain's close-up magicians are starved of publicity. For our part we are not in the business of creating magazine heroes. Performers of above-average ability obtain a reputation by the quality of their work which is then reported in the

Hello again from Brussels — I know by the time you read this F.I.S.M. will be well over — however, here is the promised report of the close-up contests.

Twenty-seven scheduled to perform and the quality ranged from pretty awful to the really brilliant. I guess I am spoiled because of my F.F.F.F. convention which is the last weekend in April for any of you good close-up men reading this column.

The big winner was John Cornelius from the U.S. John has been to the last two F.F.F.F. and I had the pleasure of previously seeing his superb magic. He opened with 3 balls being removed from a box - set the box aside vanished the balls one at a time - opened the box to find them back inside - strong part was he stood up to open the box showing he didn't lap them. He did his laser light in glass — he uses a flashlight to show light — then captures it and makes it appear under a transparent glass — two or three different ways. He now makes a 50c piece laying motionless on his left hand leap a foot or more to his waiting right hand above (is this guy normal?). He does a three-way effect and gets a great round of applause.

Only three in the afternoon session were entertaining along with good magic — J.J. Sanvert (France) did cards and won the trophy for card magic. Magic Christian won for micro invention by putting a four linked chain — piece by piece through the table with the chain being examined at the beginning, middle and end — nicely done.

Tommy Wonder (Jos Bema) did his beautiful two cups and balls routine and his other close-up effects which we have seen during the last three years and I thought that either he or Cornelius would be the big winner — I like it and it's entertaining, that's what counts. Tommy came second and was really disappointed that he didn't win — he told me later that he will work harder the next time for 1982 in Lucerne.

Here we are finally back in the U.S.A. at the national S.A.M.S. convention in Hartford, Connecticut, but too late to catch the Thursday afternoon sessions. However, I find that one sees more good close-up magic when four or five people gather together on the spur of the moment and swap ideas — show pet moves etc — that's what F.F.F. is all about.

One of these times Bill Wells and I are talking and we see Dan Tsukalas with a couple of people around him - for those who don't know who he is, Dan retired last year from being the longest pitch man at one place in the U.S.A. He was at Macy's Department Store for years — pitching svengali, paddles and this crazy wooden board called "Xylo Board". He puts a quarter on it, covers it with his hand, it's gone - returns - disappears - borrows a bill - lets you cover it - gone again - recovers, it's back best pitchman I've ever seen — in fact Bill Wells hired him on the spot for next year's I.B.M. convention just to stand around in the lobby doing it anytime he feels like. Bill tells me he is going to have three people doing this type of magic - the mouse - 3 card Monte, and Dan should be interesting in Evansville next year great idea.

Another session — Bob Elliott did a copper and silver routine — which I'm practising my regulation two hundred times before I show it to the lay public. This rule I made for myself about 15 years ago and that way I know exactly what can go wrong and when. Have you a similar rule? If so — I'd like to hear from you. Later Bob was going around ripping the spoon from its handle — fooling everyone — then showing how he did it — that's the kind of guy he is. For those who don't know him he is from the N.Y. area and every Saturday morning for years he met every Saturday morning with Dingle, Roth, Ortiz and Paul Curry to swap ideas and routines. This tells you Bob can do his stuff.

Watch for the name David Walker a young black kid from the Chicago area. He did an ace assembly with four red backed aces and twelve blue backed cards. One by one the red backs go from pile to pile until all four are in the last pile — it was the talk of the convention.

Mike Ammar — winner of the competition — impressed all with the magic he does — from coins to cards, to you name it. He does a four card assembly so fast when you are thinking he is going to do a coin assembly and it's over. This I think won him the contest.

The best close-up was Saturday night at 11.30pm with five good workers — four of them did about five minutes each and the 150 people who jammed the bleachers gave Bob Read a super standing ovation when he finished his 40-minute act. I've probably seen more close-up acts than most of you reading this and to me, Bob Read's performance that night was the highlight of my magic career. I don't think there are enough adjectives in the dictionary to describe what I saw — it was fantastic — comedy — entertainment — sight gags — all these mixed with good magic. Bob's unique brand of humour, his timing, all show his professionalism is at the highest level. Don't miss him if he comes near your area or if he is hired to work a convention that you might attend.

What did he do? Bob walks in with his bag of goodies and bowler hat, sits down at the table to do coins through the table. He tries to put the first coin through and up he comes with a handful of slime. Yes, that's what it was — he bought it at the joke shop in the afternoon for a gag — he got about six different laughs with it and the only sad part about it was that this stuff ruins your pants if you get some on them — which Bob did by accident, ruining a twenty dollar pair of pants.

He now decides to do a card trick — somebody selected a card — he walked away — looked at the table and said, "Let's get rid of the slime and I'll try again for coins through the table." This time he brought up a hunk of wood that held the table together, more laughs, he tried again — stating, "Something very strange is going to happen this time, I know it." Up comes a big furry gorilla hand, more laughs and bits of business.

He gave up the coins through the table and went back to the card trick. What happened on his trying to tell or show the name of the selected card brought many, many laughs; he even did a partial strip to his undershirt with the name of the card printed on it. It was wrong and another laugh from what was printed on the back. The funniest part of the whole sequence was when he played the Hunch Back of Notre Dame. This zanyness went on and on to find a select card — some by magic, most with sight gags and finally he finds the card in a wallet — not only one card but three duplicates of it.

If I were to describe everything he did, it would fill two issues. I hope some of what you read will tell you that he entertains and that's the name of the game, because he got at least a five-minute standing ovation, which was well deserved.

Others on the close-up that I saw were Hirata (from Japan) with: washer-ribbon, matrix, a cute pool cue ball effect in which the balls were on paper and put into an envelope — spectator cuts on lines around ball, cutting out a ball he doesn't know. Hirata vanishes cue ball in handkerchief and when spectator opens envelope, he cut out the 14 ball — cue ball vanished from the handkerchief and in its place was the 14 ball.

Hank Moorehouse doing beggar coins, sidewalk shuffle, haremail and glorpy with his cute ending of a sponge little man.

Larry West with cascade — to his name — an $8 story trick to $18 with Elmsley's — what else!! Stretching the lady with 2 black sixes and red queen — said it has to be done with four cards — your right — he now shows fourth card with his name on it.

Al Schneider — rope with knots — cut and restored — universal card for 3 selected cards — coins across — 1 copper, 3 silver — ring off pencil — okito box — his matrix and cups and balls and lastly close-up zombie.

Next month from Abbotts, the magic capital of the world.

A GESTALT REVELATION

Barrie Richardson

Request the help of two persons and hand them each about twenty cards from a shuffled pack. Retain the rest.

"Now do as I do — shuffle your cards like this, (overhand shuffle) and then turn them faces towards you, like this" (demonstrate by turning your own packet and spreading them out faces towards you). Continue by saying "If I asked you both to look at the cards and remember just one you might become confused because of all the other distractions and have difficulty in concentrating on one particular card."

"Allow me to show you how to focus your perception and deepen an image. Turn your cards face downwards and reach into the end of the pack nearest you and pull out any card about two inches — like so..... — you have both done this. Good! You cannot know the name of the card you have randomly selected."

"Now do this not yet watch me carefully. I pull out the card and place it face up onto the pack. Please do the same without letting me see the face. Now you can get a clear, uncluttered mental picture of a single card. This is what psychologists call a gestalt."

When they assure you that they have a definite mental picture of their cards ask that they turn their cards face down as if closing a book, again demonstrating what is required. As they comply turn away saying, "Please do not let me see their faces."

"Good — cut your cards like this — and shuffle like this (overhand). Here — you shuffle mine (exchange packets with person on the right putting the packet he gives you on the table near him).

Turn to person on the left and take his cards as you ask him to raise both hands in the air. Put his cards onto the table in front of him. Request person on your right to do likewise taking the cards he holds (your original packet) placing them onto the table.

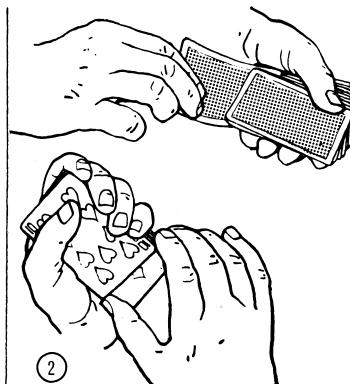

You now begin the build-up. Ask them both to put their hands over on top of their respective packets and to visualise a mental picture of their cards — which only they can possibly know.

Now put a hand on top of each person's hands and gaze intently into the eyes of each in turn as you say, "Your card is red — yours is red also." Pause a moment. "Yours is a diamond — and yours a heart — right!" Another pause. "Yours is a number card — and yours a picture card — right — your gestalt is the Jack of Diamonds, and I believe yours is the two of hearts."

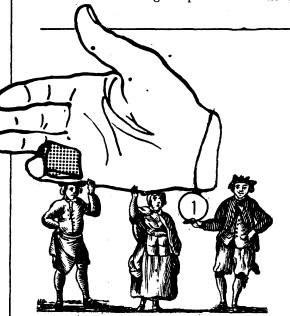

Shake their hands and congratulate them.

The pack is a stripper. Just follow the instructions and general patter lines and the participants will reverse their own selections as they follow your example — pulling the card out from the inner end of the pack with the right thumb and fingers as the pack is held in the dealing position in the left hand (Fig.1).

During the routine both spectators packets come into your possession for a few seconds after they have made their choice and it is then when you peek their cards. When taking the cards hold them face up in the left hand in the normal dealing position and strip out the reversed selection just far enough to glimpse the index (Fig.2). Push it back flush into the packet with the right thumb as the cards are placed onto the table with the right hand.

Please don't reveal the cards by merely naming them at once. THE REVELATION IS THE WHOLE TRICK, so ham it up for all you're worth. Try to get their hearts pumping, or at least a perplexed look on their faces. Imagine how you would feel if someone asked you to think of a card and told you its name without disturbing the pack. Good luck.

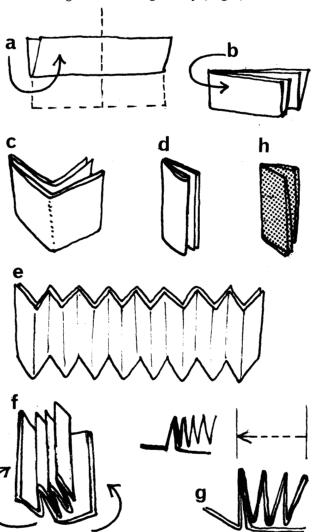

MAKE A NOTE OF IT

Eric Mason

In this effect a pound note is folded into a small packet, and tossed into the air. When opened it is seen to have changed into a giant £5 note. The effect is similar to Mike Kozlowski's excellent 'Hundred Dollar Switch' but the method is entirely different and should be performed standing.

You will of course require a giant £5 note — I have drawn one up for repro. This will be required to be made into a small packet by folding it in half four times as shown in the sequence of sketches (a), (b), (c) and (d). Next fold the packet concertina fashion (e) and then the outside edges as in (f). Crease all the folds carefully and sharply, and if you now hold the four open ends of the note — two in each hand — it can be pulled open like a concertina (g). Prepare to perform by finger palming the folded note along the little finger only (Fig.1).

Display a £1 note as fairly and cleanly as possible making it obvious that nothing else is concealed in the hands as you fold it in half four times (h) and bend the resultant packet gently in half — it will not stay bent but it will put a hump in the middle (i). Hold it in the right hand — hump uppermost — on the pads of the first and second fingers with the thumb.

You now proceed using the same moves as described for the coin change in AMASON in last month's issue, commencing at paragraph two in the first sequence. If you have already worked on this you will have no problems in transferring your skills from the coins to the small packets. Others should refer back and read giant note for copper coin and £1 note for silver coin, and all will be clear.

When catching the £5 note endeavour to let it fall onto the pads of the first and second fingers thus preventing the possibility of any part of the back clipped note being seen protruding through the fingers.

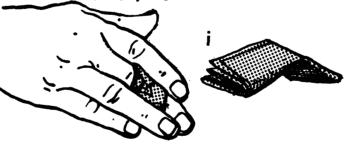

There is a little difference between the back clipping of the coin and the note. With the latter the third finger is brought to the free edge clipping it against the side of the second as in (Fig.2), thus providing a firm grip on it as the left hand pulls open the giant note. During this action the right hand is palm uppermost and remains stationary.

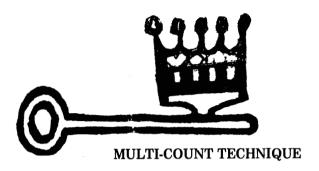

When the note is fully opened it is shown on both sides keeping the back clipped note hidden by performing the back palm move, i.e. the second finger is brought to the other side of the folded note as the back of the giant note is shown and returned to its original position when the giant note is turned back again. In short, when the right hand is palm up holding the giant note the folded pound is at the back of the hand and when the hand turns to show the other side of the giant note the back of the hand is brought facing the audience and due to the back palm move the folded pound note is now inside the fingers. The folded note will not be seen as it revolves around the second finger.

With the giant note held in the palm up right hand the back clipped folded pound note can be transferred into the left hand as the giant note is pulled through the fingers in what the spectators will accept as a necessary action for the purpose of smoothing out the folds.

Both hands have now been seen to be empty after the transformation making the illusion complete. Note SEEN to be empty. On no account should it appear that you are trying to PROVE that they are empty.

The startling effect of the change from a normal sized pound note into a giant fiver is really something well worth acquiring and adding to your repertoire.

Andrew Pargeter

The Multi-Count technique is applicable to the small packet false counts listed below.

THE HAMMAN COUNT — counting an odd number of cards one by one, without changing their number, while all cards below the centre card of the packet remain concealed.

THE ELMSLEY COUNT — counting a four card packet as four cards while the third card down in the packet remains concealed.

THE JORDAN COUNT — counting a four card packet as four cards, the bottom card of the packet remaining concealed.

THE SIVA COUNT — counting a five card packet as four cards while the centre card remains concealed. The Siva Count itself is not explained here, but a way of achieving a similar result is.

VICTOR'S EYE COUNT — counting a three card packet as three while the bottom card of the packet remains concealed.

ELMSLEY and JORDAN VARIATIONS — as described for the originals but with different end results.

FALSE COUNTS — to count pakeets of cards as being more or less in number than they actually are

PROLOGUE

This article is the result of trying to rethink the Hamman Count. It had seemed to me for some time, that this sleight, which is capable of wide application and has already been the stimulus for many small packet card effects, had three main drawbacks.

It is not as easy to do well as many magicians seem to think—it is difficult to perform in such a way that the spectators can clearly see the cards—and it necessitates the performer holding the cards in a manner quite different from anything else he does.

I decided, therefore, to try and devise an alternative handling for this count that would make it easier for the spectators to see the cards, and would enable the performer to use a similar handling for many other small packet false counts.

Whether or not the handling is easier than the original is not particularly of any concern to me providing the technique involved is not beyond the average card man. My main aim has been to unify and naturalise the handling of the sleights now in general use in modern card magic.

I will begin by describing this technique for the Hamman Count as this seems to involve most of the important points which occur in the technique for the other counts, and then continue by describing the handling of these other counts, the basic hold for all the counts is one which approximates to the normal dealing position.

THE HAMMAN COUNT

We will assume that five cards are being used although the same technique applies for any odd number of cards.

Hold the cards firmly in the left hand in the mechanic's grip, and take the inner right corner by the thumb and first two fingers of the right hand in such a way that the first two fingers are as much along the sides of the cards as beneath, thus locking the cards in line with each other (Fig.1). Note the position of the left thumb.

With the left thumb push the top card slightly to the right and then away from you removing it completely allowing it to fall into the Mechanic's grip in the left hand, the other cards being retained in the right hand still held between its thumb and first two fingers.

Bring the right hand cards over the left hand card and repeat the previous move.

You have now counted two cards and are about to count the third in what appears to be an identical action, however you are going to make a switch.

As the right hand cards are approaching the left hand the left forefinger pushes inwards on the outer end of the two cards it holds positioning these cards so that they can be clipped between the first and second fingers of the right hand as it leaves its cards in the left hand completing the switch. The right thumb should immediately reposition itself on the cards now in the right hand, and the cards it holds counted singly on those in the left hand.

NOTES

- 1. The actual switch is similar to the one employed in the regular top change.
- 2. The right hand should be held out in front of the left hand to show each card before it is removed. This tends to keep the spectator's gaze away from the left hand which appears to be carrying out a subservient role, i.e. that of holding the cards which have already been displayed.
- 3. At the point when the switch is made the position of the left forefinger in pushing back its cards covers the ends of these cards, so hiding the exchange. In the original version of the Hammen Count the ends are exposed during the actual switch and an observant spectator may see the move.
- 4. The count does not have to be done quickly, and is, in fact, most deceptive when done very slowly. It is keeping an even rhythm with no perceptive difference between the count and the switch which is most important.
- 5. The right hand grip on the cards should not be too firm, but just sufficient to hold the cards aligned. A certain 'touch' needs to be acquired.
- 6. As the left thumb pushes off a card from the right hand packet the cards below it are held aligned by gripping them between the first two fingers and the palm of the left hand.

THAT CERTAIN SOMETHING..... a collection of card tricks by Roy Walton. Available from L. Davenport & Co, £2.00 U.S.A. 4 dollars.

Containing fourteen effects from one of Britain's leading cardmen the first described is loosely based on a Hofzinser concept and entitled Grown up Hofzinser. The performance apparently divines which of the four jumbo aces laid face downwards on the table matches in suit a chosen card. The climax comes when the chosen card changes into the ace of the same suit and the jumbo card is seen to be of the same suit and value of the selected card, a startling finish. This trick alone is well worth the asking price, and for those readers not having gained the necessary confidence to perform the top change, need not delay any longer. The actions leading up to the moment it is required to make the change provide such powerful misdirection that the sleight can be without fear of being caught. The top change is not a matter of technique alone, but largely depends on its successful performance in channelling the attention of the audience away from the hands which never seem to come together. The routine ensures that this condition is fulfilled plus one other. It is important that the card to be changed is impressed on the minds of the spectators - in this effect its face is displayed on three separate occasions before the sleight is made.

The rest of the effects described may be considered as a bonus. They include a small packet effect using blue backed cards which are alternated, face up, face down. When spread out onto the table the face uppers have congregated in the centre and the backs then shown to have changed to red. The remaining blue-backers are shown to have blank faces. There is a patter theme which provides a reasonable excuse for these shinanigans.

Then follows effects using the Galbraith principle, a faro shuffle, turnover pass, monte throw and similar common sleights. Verdict—something for everyone and value for money.

BODY MAGIC by John Fisher. Published by Hodder and Stoughton £5.95.

This is a hardbound book for sale to the general public and contains no new effects, though even the most diligent magical bookworm will most certainly find the odd effect new to him.

The title embodies a comprehensive collection of over 100 effects in which one's own body, or other persons, is responsible for the effects, or phenomena — call it what you will.

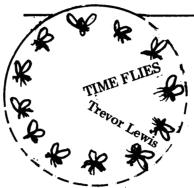

Starting with the eye, there are optical illusions, retinal impressions which are retained and some odd effects possible with these afterimages etc. It continues with explanations of odd effects relating to hearing, taste, smell and touch.

The ground covered makes it impossible to even mention the numerous items in detail. They include, pulse stopping, button on thread sex detector, ouija board, hypnotism, contact mindreading mnemonics, feats of strength etc. The close-up performer and mentalist alike will find not only 'icebreakers', but sufficient information to provide an icebreaking conversation as a lead in to his icebreaker. He will also find innumerable party stunts, and need never be at a loss, whatever the situation, to provide entertainment.

The book is much more than a mere compilation of previously published material. That it is the result of meticulous and thorough research into the subject is evident from the bibliography which lists well over 100 titles of which about a third are non-magical publications.

From these sources the author has produced, not only an informative book, but one which I found immensely interesting and entertaining just to read.

Fred Robinson

Get yourself a watch of the pocket variety. I found one about the size of a dollar or a crown piece. Have this in your right pocket with a coin, half dollar or ten pence. Oh, by the way, any old broken, I daren't say 'second hand', thing will do. Remove the coin from the pocket and conceal the watch in the palm. Don't try palming the thing, just hold it there. Throw the coin from the right hand into the left hand saying "Watch." (don't get ahead of me). Repeat the above a couple of times till you have the spectators undivided attention. Assuming that you now have his beady eyes on you, perform the throw change. (For easy reference, see Bobo's Coin Magic, chapter two, The Bobo's Switch). Let the left hand close on the timepiece as you repeat the word "watch". Open the left hand and let the spectator see....guess. Somewhere someone is going to turn a groove in the back of a watch to take a coin. This way he can push the coin into the back of the timepiece before the final throw. He can now show his right hand empty, or rather gesture with it. before the world shattering climax. So it's not much of a trick, try it with lay people and pardon me, 'watch' the reaction. It's quick, visual and 'punny'.

The following was developed as a solution to a self-posed problem. The performer and spectator each take halves of a shuffled pack of ESP symbol cards. Simultaneously, each removes cards from the top of his group, continuing to deal slowly until the spectator decides to stop. The two cards thus arrived at are compared, and are found to match.

An ordinary 25-card symbol pack is used, with some small amount of set-up. Six cards are removed. These may consist of any symbols, in any order, as long as there are no two identical symbols next to each other. For example, the order of this six-card packet might be, from the top: circle, square, cross, circle, star, waves. Arrange the remaining stock of nineteen cards so that an identical stack of six symbols is at the face, in reverse order to the separated packet. (In our example, then, the face card of the pack would be a circle, then square, cross, circle, star and waves). The six-card packet is in your pocket or in your lap, depending on performing conditions. The pack is in its case.

Introduce the pack, describing its history and use. You can safely state that the pack consists of twenty-five cards, as the spectators will not be able to ascertain that the nineteen card pack you display is short. Hold the pack on your outstretched palm, and ask the spectator to cut off "about half". Ask the spectator to shuffle the cut-off stock, while you shuffle the remaining stock. It matters not what kind of shuffle the spectator uses. When you mix your group, use an Overhand Shuffle, running the last half-dozen cards singly — thus bringing the six-card stack to the top of the half-deck. This stack is now reversed, therefore it is in the exact same order as the packet in your pocket or lap.

Exchange packets with the spectator. Explain that, as each of you has shuffled the other's cards, everything is fair and beyond anyone's control. . . As you explain this, the six-card packet is palmed, and secretly loaded onto the stock you now hold. The situation is now that the top six cards of both stocks are the same.

Explain that you and the spectator will slowly deal in unison, and that the spectator will call "stop" whenever the urge strikes. Proceed to do this. The spectator can, of course, call "stop" at any point, provided this occurs within the first six cards dealt. You can insure that this will happen by making the dealing procedure extremely slow — seemingly for the sake of fairness.

When the spectator calls "stop", both you and he deal the stopped-at cards off to one side. Say, "Just out of curiosity, what is your next card?" The spectator will turn up his next, showing that symbol. You apparently show your next symbol, but in fact use a Double Lift — thus, the two will not match. Gather up the cards from the spectator, placing everything away, so that attention is focussed only on the two chosen cards. Turn them over, revealing the match.

COIN AND COVER Keith Charnley

The only preparation required for this effect is to fold a £5 note into a size sufficiently small for it to be concealed in the fingers and place it in either the right coat or trouser pocket. With a 10p concealed in the right hand in the finger palm position you are ready to perform.

Borrow a wallet from any obliging spectator and place it onto the table loading the fingerpalmed coin beneath it. From another spectator borrow a 10p piece and cause it to disappear using any method which finally leaves it finger palmed in the right hand. With the left hand pick up the wallet to reveal the coin beneath it. Pass the wallet into the right hand and place it back onto the table loading the fingerpalmed coin beneath it.

Pick up the second coin and proffer to show how it was done. Explain that you only pretend to put the coin into the left hand but actually retain it in the right hand.

Demonstrate this by performing the 'French Drop' in an exaggerated manner making it obvious how the coin is kept back in the right hand. Continue the explanation by saying that you leave the coin beneath the wallet as you pick it up, and in showing 'how it is done' you pick up the wallet with the right hand, retaining the coin it holds, revealing the one previously loaded. Replace the wallet on the table loading the finger palmed coin beneath it.

Continue by telling the audience that a real magician would simply put the coin in his pocket and it would reappear under the wallet. Suiting the action to the words the right hand picks up the coin and goes into the pocket containing the note, finger palms it, leaving the coin behind, as the left hand picks up the wallet once again revealing the coin. The wallet is then taken with the right hand which loads the note beneath when putting it on the table, as the left hand picks up the coin.

At this point appear to be in doubt who loaned the coin. Hand it back to the claimant and pick up the wallet with the left hand revealing the note. Pick it up with the right hand, and using that hand only unfold it. As all eyes are on the fiver casually put the wallet in the inside coat pocket, and the now free left hand assists in smoothing out the note, which you examine with an air of curiousity and disbelief. Remarking "This must be mine," refold it and hold in the right hand as the left removes the wallet and flips it open. Apparently place the note inside but actually retain it in the right hand. Close the wallet and act as though you suddenly realise that it belongs to the spectator and say, "Oh — this is yours." As he opens the wallet - as he surely will - casually drop the note in your pocket.

If no-one will lend you their wallet it is of course possible to use other articles such as a cigarette packet, ashtray etc but there would be a loss of spectator involvement and the scope for making the effect more entertaining would be considerably diminished. Using a borrowed wallet one can beg the lender not to go away when he hands it to you — when returning it give it to the wrong person. The business of pretending to put the note in the wallet would also be lost. It is the introduction of these mildly humourous 'bits of business' which makes the trick more entertaining without reducing its effectiveness.

Good news? I have just been reinstated as a member of the illustrious I.B.M. Is that good news? I don't know either. I suppose to be reinstated as a member of something is better than being thrown out of something else. As in the days of King Arthur and his round table, I didn't bother to fight my own battles. . . I had a 'Champion'. In this instance it was Mr Edward G. Love, known to friends and enemies alike as Teddy The Terrible. As far as I can gather, and remember I wasn't there, only one person spoke out against my reinstatement and that was Bayard Grimshaw, former editor of the I.B.M. Budget magazine, former editor of the World's Fair Magicians Only page. I respect his views but I still think he was wrong. He must have been. he lost his case. That's democracy. All I can say is that the next time he gets involved in a discussion of this sort he should get himself a 'Champion'. I know one I can recommend.

Albert Goshman was back in town for a few days en route to and from the Irish Convention. No doubt he sold everything as he usually does, including his suitcase, his balls etc. Albert really is a modern version of the old fashioned mountebank. He packs his bags, hits the road, pitches his wares, and returns home with the loot. The only difference between Albert and the oldtimers is that he does it in style.

Rip offs.... I am not talking about strippers. The other week I saw a magician on TV doing a routine which was lifted straight out of Maurice Foget's act. The most blatant steal imaginable. I know it was a straight steal because I was involved in its creation and I know that Maurice has never published it....

Colin Rose also back in town after visiting most of the European capitals. He tells me he could have stayed forever and has a standing offer to return anytime he likes, but he came home. And do you know why? No, of course you don't, so I'll tell you. He has come home to rearrange his act. . .yes. . .he is going to change the act a little and decided he could do it better while he was at home rather than in hotel rooms etc. Why should he want to rearrange his act? It seems odd that someone who has a successful professional act and can work almost where he likes, should want to stop for a while, come back home and look at what he is doing — but I'll answer that question also. You see, everywhere he went he saw one magician or another doing a piece of his act. Amazing, isn't it? A guy minds his own business, does an original act, and wherever he goes he finds other magicians doing his material, or at least some of it.

Ken Brooke's name has been getting a lot of play in the magical press just recently, one to his apparently impending retirement. Frankly, I don't believe it. Ken isn't the retiring type. He is one of the few people, and there are only a few of them throughout the whole world, whose lives have been so wrapped up in the magic scene that without it he just wouldn't know what to do. If Ken packed it in he would rot. . . and the eleventh commandment says "Ken Brooke, Thou Shalt Not Rot". So don't believe all you read. If he does rest up for a while it won't do him any harm — but I just know he'll be back eventually. I have no idea what he'll be doing, but if he is looking for suggestions (?) how's this for an idea Ken. . . isn't it about time you sat down and wrote something?....like a book, maybe?

> Goodbye, Patrick Page, I.B.M.

Whilst trudging along the long road of everyman, from the cradle to the centre deal, I have encountered two types of magicians that have impressed me. The first type are the entertainers. That is, those magicians who for money or simply for a love of their fellow man, desire nothing more or less than to be as entertaining as they possibly can. The satisfaction that they seek from their magic is the applause of a delighted audience — often coupled with substantial payments for providing that delight. To these people magic is a means of providing entertainment. They view everything that they do from the standpoint of entertainment. They select their material and arrange their presentation with entertainment and only entertainment in mind. Thse gentlemen are few and far between, but to encounter one and enjoy his work is one of the greatest pleasures in magic. I admire and respect them to the full.

The second group, who also have my admiration and respect are the real experts. The technicians, inventors and original thinkers. These are the people who have dedicated their talents to pushing forward the frontiers of magical knowledge. The people who are constantly seeking better, more perfect, more spectacular, effects and methods. The people who are prepared to dedicate countless hours in search of often minute improvements, from which we all sooner or later benefit. In their own way, these people are also highly entertaining but for different reasons to the first group. They too command my respect and rightly so.

Sandwiched between these two small groups, is a third and considerably larger group. This is that group, which although seeking to entertain cannot resist doing a few things for their own amusement. Who in selecting material are not prepared always to pick the most entertaining, because it amuses them to try something else. Who are not prepared to go the whole hog in planning an entertaining presentation, because there are a few clever moves that they want to work in somewhere. Neither are they ready to dedicate quite enough time and effort to become technical experts or originators. They go so far along the road, then cop out, before everything is quite right. In other words they have joined the mass of partially entertaining half experts who clutter up the magic scene, having fallen between two stools and ending up as neither one thing nor the other. These people are easily spotted at magical gatherings. Among entertainers they pose as inventors and technicians; among inventors and technicians they pose as entertainers.

It is worth remembering that a partially entertaining half expert, must by definition be partially boring and half inept.

WHERE HAVE ALL THE ACES GONE

by Al Smith

This is a pseudo second deal expose, designed originally to fool fellow magicians, but, though fairly straightforward, the effect, without the explanation does fool and interest laymen — particularly card players.

Remove the four aces, and drop them atop the deck. False shuffle, adding one card above the aces in the process. Follow up with two faro shuffles — one out and one in. You are now ready to demonstrate your amazing second deal.

Pose the question "Where Are The Aces?" and simply spell as follows:

W-H-E-R-E — turn next card: an ace.

A-R-E — turn next card: an ace.

T-H-E — turn next card: an ace.

A-C-E-S — turn card on "S": an ace.

If you can actually deal seconds, deal a second on the "S" in ACES to keep everything uniform.

The above is what actually happens. What follows now is the "real work" as you "explain" what you did.

Drop the aces atop the deck as before and false shuffle, but this time do not add a card. Follow up with two faro shuffles, this time, one in and one out. You are once again ready to demonstrate your amazing second. Spell as follows:

W-H-E-R-E deal tops on "W" and "H" and seconds on "E" - "R" - "E". Then turn over the top card, an ace.

A-R-E — deal continuous seconds, turn over top card, an ace.

T-H-E — deal as for "ARE".

A-C-E-S — deal continuous seconds and turn over the top card, the fourth ace.

Comments: Both routines work quite well, and the "expose" is actually a decent workout to keep in practice with the faro shuffle and the second deal.

The faro shuffles need not be perfect, of course, as long as the top section of each "half of the deck meshes one-for-one.

It is debateable whether the best course of action is to do the demonstration first and then the real thing (?), or perform as detailed above. Either way, for anyone who is, or thinks he is "in the know", the whole thing is a fine exercise in kidology.

Brian Sinclair

This old classic is enjoying renewed popularity, due in no small measure I think, to the superb handling of the effect by Johnny Paul witnessed by many of us on his recent visit to this country.

I predict that this popularity will rapidly fade away when the boys taken in by Mr Paul's effortless handling of both the technique and his assistants, actually try the effect and are faced with some of the pitfalls. It is a trick, that more than most, requires 'address' and the ability to handle those assisting with some 'humourous' authority.

This version owes a great deal to two great magicians. Edward Victor, whose fertile mind was responsible for many of the 'newer' things in magic, and Patrick Page Esquire who taught me almost everything I know about magic (the rest I stole from him). He it was, who showed me the Topit vanisher, and the importance of 'front', the latter of which, Mr Page has more than 'Brighton'. You will need both for this version.

With the Topit in position, three cards from the pack in use slipped into the left sleeve (faces towards the wrist) and a spectator on either side — begin.

Ask Mr Left to count ten cards onto your left hand, making sure that the audience clearly see the number of cards counted and that both hands are otherwise empty. Spread the cards before his eyes asking him to note one or two, and as you drop your hands and square the cards get a little finger break above the bottom three cards. The right hand takes the ten cards from the left hand with the fingers at the outer end and the thumb at the inner, the latter taking over the break from the left little finger.

Spin quickly round to Mr Right and ask him if he has an inside pocket on the left side of his coat. Make a gesture with the right hand holding the cards towards your own inside pocket to demonstrate. In this gesture the right hand goes just inside the coat and the three cards below the break are ditched into the Topit. IMMEDIATELY bring the hand out, and with it open your coat on the right side and gesture with the left hand as you say "Or have you just the one?" Timed correctly the sudden turn to Mr Right who was a moment before engrossed in watching Mr Left counting the cards etc, the instructive gestures, which provide the misdirection for ditching the three cards into the Topit, will be over before he can focus on your hands. From the front it will look as if you are simply cueing Mr Right.

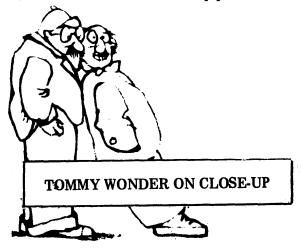

Before he can react to your request, say "Never mind, we'll use your top pocket." Square up the cards and very openly pop them into his outside top pocket leaving most of the cards protruding outside.

Next take the pack from Mr Left and give it to Mr Right asking him to count ten cards onto your left hand. Spread the cards faces towards him for a moment before squaring them up. Turn to Mr Left and open your coat with the right hand ask him to make sure that the pocket is empty. Your left hand drops to your side and the three cards in the left sleeve allowed to drop onto the ten cards already in that hand. The cards are held with one end away from the hand and against the sleeve forming a slide which will ensure that the sleeved cards fall silently and swiftly onto the bottom of the ten card packet. The action is well covered by Mr Left reaching to carry out your instructions. Before he can do so, say "Better still, let's use your top pocket also." Pop the now packet of thirteen cards into his outside top pocket leaving most of the cards showing. The 'work' is now over and all that remains is to build up the effect towards the climax in the usual way causing the three cards to fly invisibly from the pocket of one spectator into that of the other.

Provided that you are not conscious of your instructive? movements the spectators won't be either — success is dependent on the strong misdirection provided by the gestures, which should flow freely and naturally. The secret disposal of the three cards into the Topit as the right hand goes momentarily inside the jacket during the gestures will appear to the spectators quite natural and accepted as part of your efforts to make crystal clear what is required of your helpers. Afterwards no-one will recall that the hand ever went inside the coat providing the timing — the essence of misdirection — was correct. Further misdirection is provided by making your helpers the focal point which is achieved by causing their actions to appear to be of more importance than your own. Who is likely to see or suspect that three cards are falling from the left sleeve onto the ten already in the hand when their attention is on Mr Left who is about to ascertain if your inside coat pocket is empty?

For stage or platform work and other occasions when it would be impractical to slip three cards into the sleeve, a card clip to hold the three cards could be worn near the hip pocket. The cards could then be added as you ask Mr Left "if he has two hip pockets?"

Some time ago the relative merits of performing seated or standing were mentioned in this magazine. The following observations may be of interest and perhaps value to readers.

A professional magician must be able to perform whatever the conditions. He must adapt to the circumstances in which he is required to work, and his tricks must be chosen from those which can be performed in any situation. The amateur would also be very wise not to depend too much on conditions. Performing standing up is obviously preferable — sitting down is SOMETIMES possible — standing is ALWAYS possible, and one is always able to deal with any situation.

There are numerous advantages. Any professional actor will tell you that you can express yourself better, and in more ways when standing. So-called body language is easier to use.

Being higher than the audience makes you look more important and gives you added authority making it easier to command the situation.

The distance between your hands and face is greater than when sitting, therefore misdirection becomes more effective.

When standing it is not likely that a passing waiter will spill beer or food over you. It is also easier to move out of his way.

People will never distract from your performance by leaning over your shoulder and making performing more difficult and tiring.

You will not be surrounded in a way which would make it difficult to leave the table quickly and without fuss. To create a disturbance when leaving a table would not look very good.

On arriving at a table you can start the very second you arrive. Having to arrange a chair for yourself can be a problem and a possible nuisance to the guests.

When performing standing people at other tables can see you. You are advertising yourself and thus increasing the possibility that you will be invited to perform for other diners. If seated you may not be noticed by some people at other tables and miss out on an invitation to perform.

When moving from table to table there is often a tendency for people to follow you around and see the same tricks more than once. This creates problems with tricks like the 'Wild Card' in which, if the same cards are used each time the trick would become progressively less effective. For over two years I have been using the following routine with this particular effect which was specifically designed for 'table hopping'.

At the first table the 8S changes into the 4H. At the next table I show a bunch of 4H (supposedly the same cards used at the first table) and these are changed into AS. At the next table the packet of AS become KH and later the KH changes into 8S.

People who follow me around become more and more impressed as they see a bunch of cards continually changing their denomination.

The idea can be used with most versions of Peter Kane's original conception. You will require double facers as follows — 4H/AS and KH/8S which are available from dealers, and KH/AS and 4H/8S which you will have to make up. Mine are made with Letraset pips. Also required are four little plastic wallets in which the sets of Wild Cards are placed.

Prior to performance I put the four wallets under my cumberbund in the proper sequence with the wallet for the first performance at the front. After showing the trick the cards are replaced in the wallet which is put back under the cumberbund BEHIND the other three. For each performance take out the front wallet and at the conclusion replace it behind the other three. After the fourth performance the cycle has been completed once, but by resetting the cards each time, the cycle can be repeated indefinitely.

What has now become known as close-up magic is almost impossible to define, and only of academic interest, excepting for those responsible for formulating the rules relating to this class of magic when organising competitions in their respective magical societies. The term now embraces what formerly came under such various headings as, impromptu magic, after dinner magic, pocket tricks etc, all of which imply the kind of magic and choice of tricks suitable for occasions where the performer is in close contact with the spectators, and vulnerable to certain hazards not so likely to be experienced by stage and platform performers.

These hazards include comments from spectators desirous of catching the performer out to actually grabbing the performer's hand or apparatus.

There is a world of difference between intimate performances for lay audience and the problems they impose, and what has become to be regarded by magicians as close-up magic when performing for their colleagues. The atmosphere in the latter is one in which the audience is there because they love magic and are sympathetic to the performer and prepared to accept a lower standard of entertainment than would an audience of non-magicians. Furthermore they are prepared to turn a blind eye to unnatural and suspicious moves that would bring a disconcerting vocal comment from uninhibited and less polite members of a lay audience.

In addition to this inbuilt protection a further insurance is provided by the organisers — a luxury not available outside the magicians clubroom. They make every effort to position the performer's table so that he is not subject to having his tricks exposed by spectators being behind him or seated at 'bad angles'.

It is within this artificial environment that magicians perform 'close-up' magic, and as a consequence choose material suited to the conditions provided for a special kind of audience. The end result of their efforts is usually an act which can rarely be performed other than at functions arranged by their colleagues. In short, they have a close-up act which in most cases cannot be performed as a complete unit under conditions outside the magic scene.

There is one place in which similar conditions can be obtained — in one's own home. Here one has a captive audience which can be persuaded to sit in advantageous positions as the magician sets up his table. This procedure seems somewhat pretentious and reminiscent of a tiny tot doing his or her party piece for indulgent aunts and uncles.

Much effort has been expended by many magicians in devising such acts and in consequence have given much pleasure to other magicians, but it is important to recognise that, with very few exceptions, these acts have a limited appeal to lay audiences.

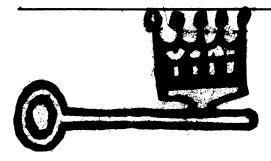

This simple assessment of magicians magic may seem self-evident to those with experience of performing magic outside the cloistered confines of their magic clubroom, but the ambitious youngster may not be so readily aware that the magic he sees when magicians are entertaining each other has little relevance to what is required when entertaining non-magicians. Even as he watches informal groups he may be misled into believing that he is acquiring valuable knowledge without realising that the essential ingredient, is, almost without exception, missing from tricks shown during these sessions — an entertaining presentation.

He will also on occasion attend lectures given by others whose tricks and minds are orientated towards entertaining their fellow magicians, and will in consequence become further indoctrinated, which, if his original intention of joining a magical society was to gain knowledge that would result in making his performances more acceptable to lay audience he will be mistaken.

Let me quote from a personal experience which illustrates perfectly the point I am making. After attending a very successful lecture demonstration by a non-professional three of us, including the lecturer, went for a meal. Within minutes he was entertaining a young lady with tricks and later remarked "That is what I do for laymen." Not one of the tricks he performed was part of his lecture programme.

More recently Johnny Paul, who has been performing close-up magic professionally for several decades, entertained magicians without explaining the methods by which his effects were achieved. All the effects shown were part of his regular programme and was a valuable lesson in presentation. It was apparent when listening to the observations made following the performance that the majority found it less acceptable than the lecture demonstration referred to above.

What the beginner in magic must understand, if he wishes to entertain lay people is that he must be a PERFORMER, and that is something he will never learn by associating with other magicians.

Andrew Pargeter

The Elmsley Count

To perform the Elmsley Count, the grip of the right hand on the cards is slightly different. The cards are held between the right hand thumb and first finger only at the right hand bottom corner, the sides of the thumb and finger being parallel to the lower edge of the cards. See sketch. You may care to try this hold with the Hamman Count, but it is not recommended for more than five cards as it does allow the cards more freedom to slip out of line. The procedure for the count is as follows.

The first card is counted off in exactly the same manner as the first card in the Hamman Count. As the right hand approaches the left, hand to count the second card two movements take place. The left hand forefinger pushes back the first card as it did for the Hamman Count enabling it to be clipped by the right hand. The thumb of the right hand pushes on the edge of the two top cards it holds sliding them to the left as one card.

As they meet the left hand the left thumb and forefinger grip the two cards as one taking them from the right hand at the top right hand corner and the right hand first and second finger clip back the first card. The two cards now in the right hand are counted as the third and fourth cards.

Notes: With practice it will be found that the first card can be clipped back between the thumb and first finger as in the original method, making the count even more deceptive.

When holding the cards in the right hand, the thumb and first finger should press together over the edge of the cards to prevent them from swivelling out of line.

The Jordan Count

The right hand grip is as for the Hamman Count and the first card counted off as already described for this count, but as the second card is counted off the forefinger of the left hand pushes back the first card jogging it towards the performer beneath the second card.

As the two remaining cards are brought over they are counted as one into the left hand and, at the same time, the injogged first card is clipped back by the first and second fingers of the right hand. It is then counted as the fourth card.

Notes: The clipping back of the first card is done mainly by the second finger of the right hand performing a gliding action beneath the card drawing it back until the first finger and thumb fall back naturally onto the card.

This count may, at first, seem to be the most difficult to perform using the multi-count technique, but once mastered, it does overcome the problem encountered by many performers in counting the second card with the orthodox technique i.e. when drawing off the second card it is often found that the third card tends to come with it, leading to an awkward fumbling which destroys the illusive quality of the sleight.

Jordan Variation — The Siva Count

This is a count that was published by Jack Avis designed to hide the middle card of a five card packet as the cards are counted singly as four. The following method achieves a similar result but uses a different setup.

The card to be hidden starts at the bottom of the packet. This is, in fact, an advantage as it can be stolen with a fan add-on move.

The cards are now counted singly from the right hand to the left using the holds described for the Hamman Count, the only 'move' being that the last two cards are placed over as one. The packet is then turned over and the same count is done except that when you come to the third card you actually push over two cards as one and then count the last card over singly.

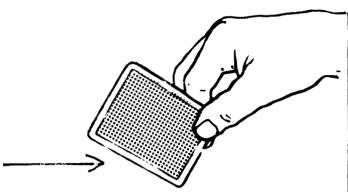

The concealed card is now in the centre of the packet and you can reveal it as you wish.

Note: The two card push-over is the same as the one described in the Elmsley Count.

Edward Victor's 'Eye' Count

This is the simplest of the counts to perform, and if the counts described so far have been mastered, no trouble should be experienced in performing it.

The grip of the right hand is as in the Hamman Count. The first card is counted off in the usual way. The remaining two cards are then placed as one into the left hand while at the same time the original first card is pushed back by the first finger of the left hand and clipped back by the right hand. This card is then counted normally as the third card.

Count Variations

While experimenting with the counts described so far it occurred to me that it would also be possible to introduce a left hand little finger break into the technique and whilst this was not necessary for these counts I found that it could be used to produce variations of the Jordan and Elmsley Counts that seemed intriguing. These will now be described.

Jordan Variation

Start with the normal setup for the Jordan Count. The right hand grip is as described for the Hamman Count.

The first card is counted in the usual way. Now, as the second card is counted off, the little finger of the left hand is inserted under it forming a break. The two remaining cards are then placed as one into the left hand but, as this is done, it will be found that the bteak enables the first and second fingers of the right hand to clip back the second card which is then counted over as the fourth card.

Notes: This count conceals the bottom card of a four card packet and leaves it third from the top as in the Jordan Count. The differences are that it leaves the other cards in a different order and is, I feel, easier to perform.

Elmsley Variation

Start with the setup used in the Elmsley Count and the grip as described in this article for the count.

The first card is counted in the usual way. The next two cards are now pushed as one by the right hand and, as they are taken by the left hand, a little finger break is obtained under them. The third card is now counted over and in the process the two cards above the break are clipped back by the first and second fingers of the right hand. These two cards are then counted as one completing the apparent four card count.

Notes: You must be careful not to spread the two cards as they are clipped back and counted as one.

You will find that at the end of this count the concealed card is second from the top in the packet. This means that the packet can then be flipped over and counted with the normal Elmsley Count and the same card will still be concealed. I feel this has great potential.

The moves with the little finger break described in the above two counts can also be used to produce more false counts where cards are counted as being more or less in number than they really are.

Further Notes on Technique

At the beginning of this article I described two right hand grips that were to be used in the various counts. Variations of these grips are, of course, possible and you should experiment until you find the grip that suits you best.

I find that all these counts become even more convincing if the cards are taken by the left hand with a slight snapping action. This is achieved by rolling the left hand in a clockwise direction by a small amount as it takes cards.

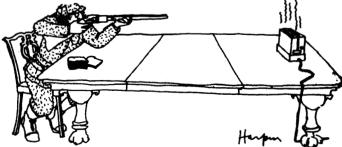

Aim to give the impression that the left hand thumb is taking cards from the right hand even when those cards are actually being placed or pushed into the left hand.

A False Count

To count a packet of cards as less than there are or more than there are the same technique as for the Hamman Count is used, but the switch is done at different points in the count. For example, a packet of seven face down cards can be counted as five if the switch is made on the third count. To count the same number as nine cards the switch is done on the fifth card.

Epilogue

Once the techniques for the above counts have been mastered it will be found that there are many other variations possible. This is because the switch, the push off move from the Elmsley Count, and the injog move of the Jordan Count can be employed in various combinations. I am sure that you will find other possibilities and I wish you as much pleasure in experimenting with this technique as I have had.

ANYTHING FOR A CHANGE

Eric Mason

Here is a sleight I have been using regularly for many years in close-up situations. Briefly stated — a freely chosen card is dropped onto the table, and in the action a substitution is made.

Hold the pack in the left hand in the thumb count position and ask someone to say 'stop' as you riffle the outer left corner, and as you stop on command insert the index finger into the outer end of the pack at this point (see Fig. 1). Note particularly the position of the third and fourth fingers which are curled over the side of the pack exerting a firm pressure on the back of the top card.

The thumb is inserted into the break and pushes the top portion above it causing it to open bookwise and out of alignment with the bottom half of the pack (Fig. 2), as the index finger moves clear.

The left hand turns to give the spectator a clear view of his selection and the right hand removes the cards below it (the original top portion), with the exception of the original top card which remains hidden below the selection (Fig. 3). To prevent its exposure during the action the selection is pushed forward covering the outer end. The index finger also helps in this respect covering the outer ends of the two cards, and if necessary dip the outer end of the pack should any spectators be below eye level in relation to the pack.

Immediately the right hand has moved its cards clear the left index finger tip is brought onto the face of the selection, takes over from the thumb in holding the two cards between it and the remaining finger tips pressing on the back of the original top card. The thumb is now free to move over to the side of the two cards and assists in squaring them as the index finger moves clear and pressure of the second, third and fourth fingers bring the two cards face down onto the face down pack.

The selected card is now second from the top of the portion in the left hand, the remainder of the pack being face up in the right.

Now for a trick. Thumb off the top card of the left hand packet onto the table and place the packet in the right hand face downwards on top of it. As this takes place the left hand moves back to the edge of the table and thumbs off the chosen card into the lap. Right hand next takes the left hand cards and drops them on top of the tabled portion.

Your left hand, which is obviously empty, goes under the table. The right hand slaps down on the pack and the left hand comes out from under the table with the selection.

That is just one use for the sleight — there are endless others.

The following is a handling of Roy Walton's Collectors which I have used continuously over the past year.

Remove the four aces from the pack and in so doing cull the K, Q, J and 10 of spades in that order so that the ten becomes the top card when the pack is face down. The aces are dropped onto the table with the spades on top and spread so that all the faces are visible.

Spread the pack and have three cards selected by different spectators. Close up the spread obtaining a left little finger break under the top card, the ten of spades. Take back the selections placing them face up on top of the pack. With the right hand, thumb at the inner end and fingers at the outer end, lift off the cards above the break.

You now show the faces of the selections separately saying that it is important that they remember their cards. The real reason being that in the action of showing them, a card is loaded face down between each selection by proceeding as follows.

With the left thumb pull off the upper face up card from the packet in the right hand onto the pack picking it up again under the packet. Obtain a break under the new face down card on the pack (the Jack) and pick it up under the packet as the left thumb pulls off the next face up card. Pick up this card under the packet which now consists of five cards — face up selection, face down 10s, face up selection, face down JS and face up selection.

Turn the packet of five over and drop them on top of the pack — the top card is now a face down selection followed by the face up JS. False shuffle retaining the top seven cards in position. Hold the pack in the left hand dealing position and obtain a break under the top five cards with the left little finger. This is easier than it appears due to the fact that there is a natural break four cards down.

Now pick up the four aces and place them still face up on top of the pack. You now perform the "Turnover Move" as follows. The left hand is holding the pack in the dealing position with a little finger break below nine cards and the right hand grips this block of cards near the right long side between the thumb and finger tips, the latter going into the break. The block is pulled away to the right, the thumb pulling the AS about an inch further than the rest of the block (see sketch). The AS is retained between the thumb and first finger as the tips of the second and third fingers turn the rest of the block over and square with the pack. Simultaneously with this action the outer left corner of the AS goes under the left thumb and is snapped upwards. Without hesitation the AS is turned end for end and face downwards (there is only one way to do this without breaking the wrist), and placed on top of the pack.

The whole moves take but a second and should be done smartly — from the point of view of the spectators the performer has merely flipped the four aces over face down and the snapping of one against the left thumb will be accepted as an innocent flourish.

You now spread to show that the top four cards (apparently the aces) have collected the three selections, which you pull out of the spread and drop face up onto the table.

Next remove the top four cards and after squaring them turn them over to show an ace at the face and as you place them face upwards onto the table move the upper three cards over sufficiently to expose the index of the rear card which is the AS. Do not make a move out of this — the spectators will accept that they are the four aces if done casually.

You now obtain a break under the top card, which is an ace, and pick up the three selections. Repeat the actions of Stage 2 exactly, but with different patter. This time you ask each spectator which card they selected.

Now repeat Stage 3 exactly to show the repeat collection. Care should be taken not to expose the faces of the ten or Jack of spades when picking up the supposedly four aces. Remove the selections which are this time fairly between the four aces which can be taken from the top of the pack and shown freely.

Now comes a really startling climax which, although has nothing whatsoever to do with the Collectors, has a very strong impact on the audience. When showing the four aces they are spread over to the right on top of the face down pack which is held in the left hand. In doing this, also spread the four cards below them. Close up the spread of eight cards and take a break below them. Right hand now pulls the block over to the right, its thumb pulling the AS a little further exactly as explained in Stage Four and depicted in sketch. The four aces are now caused to change instantly into a Royal Flush in spades by using the Snap Change which is an adaptation of a Roy Walton move explained in his book 'Late Extra Card Tricks', and is performed as follows. Retaining a grip on the AS move it smartly up and down snapping it on the seven card block which is flipped over during the action. The action should be fast and then spread to reveal the Royal Flush made as soon as the block has turned over. It is the snapping sound of the AS on the block of cards plus the fast movement of the flip over and spread which produces the required effect.

The Turnover Change and the Snap Change achieve the same objective, the latter, mainly on account of the fact that more sound is produced and is more of a flourish makes it preferable to the former when producing the final climax.

Here is a further use for the Snap Change. Have the four aces face downwards on top of the face down pack. Spread the pack and openly outjog the fourth card, and continue the spread asking a spectator to touch any other three cards. As each card is touched outjog it in the same way. Remove these outjogged cards and place them face up on top of the face down pack, and get a break below the three face down aces. Reverse the order of the four face up cards by taking them singly into the right hand.

The ace will now be at the top, and as you explain that the ace is the highest card chosen execute the Snap Change and spread revealing the four aces.

BOOK REVIEWS

Two more booklets from the prolific Phil Goldstein in the same format as his previous publications and both are priced at four dollars plus one dollar airmail postage, from the author at 7070 Franklin Avenue, Suite 101, Hollywood CA 90028 U.S.A.

The Yellow Book of Mentalism contains ten effects of which three have previously appeared in print. There is a limited number of effects available to the mentalist and in consequence he must depend on novel presentations to achieve the appearance of being different and less predictable. The effects include one in which the performer predicts the name of an article a lady forgets to purchase on her visit to the supermarket - excellent for an audience of ladies. A divination of a selected card using a borrowed pack. A prediction envelope is handed out and five spectators invited to call out a simple geometric design which the performer draws on separate business cards - one is chosen at random and is found to match the prediction. A no stooge prediction — suited for an audience of men in which performer predicts the number of pins a spectator says he has knocked down in an imaginary game of bowls. A clever adaption of the Hilliard Telephone Test using the twelve astrological signs and a nailwriter. A novel presentation of Seven Keys to Baldpate which is allied to astrology.

There are three more effects which include a technique for a five-way out effect using billets — one with darts — a special effect for New Year's Eve — and lastly a card effect using an instant stooge.

Presentation and patter with the items add considerably to the value of the material offered.

Goldstein's Gallery (sub-titled 'a collection of polychromatic card magic).

Ten card effects one of which has a couple of variations utilising cards with contrasting coloured backs.

The Picasso Aces is a variation of the ace assembly using blue backed aces and red backed indifferent cards. In True Blue a card selected from a red backed packed appears face up between two blue backed kings. First Raid is an approach to Roy Walton's 'Ambush Plot' — three selections of red backers being caught between the blue backed kings.

Among the other effects subjected to the Goldstein treatment are Oil and Water, Follow the Leader, Brainwave plus others less easily defined. Due to limited space these cannot be detailed but it can be said that the material is up to this author's usual standard and if you are a card man of average ability you will find much of interest.

Rick Johnsson's Strike One, an impromptu miracle with matchboxes. Available in Great Britain from Anthony Brahams, 168 Holland Park Avenue, London W11, £1.75 post free.

This booklet of nine pages and 24 diagrams details a routine with two matchboxes. The two boxes are caused to adhere to each other in several positions and at different angles, sometimes with both boxes closed and at others with one or both drawers half open. At the conclusion both boxes may be examined. There are no difficult moves in what seems to be an excellent bar trick and some will give it the requisite rehearsal and add to their repertoire of impromptu tricks — others will not, and louse it up — it is that kind of trick.

ICONOCLASMS NO. 3

Walt Lees

There are three kinds of people in this world:-

- Magicians.
- Lay people, whose only interest in magic is whether or not it happens to entertain tham at the time of performance.
- People who have no interest in magic, other than that, whether they like it or not magic plays an important part in their lives.

What! You exclaim, throwing up your hands in disbelief. Are there such people? The third group, that is.

Indeed there are. They are that sizable minority of people that could be called for want of a better description, the magically sophisticated semi lay public. But who are they? Well, here are some:-

- -- Magician's wives, families, close friends, girlfriends, mistresses, neighbours etc.
- Regulars in pubs where magicians congregate.
- Showbiz people who frequently meet/work with magicians.

These people are not the lay public, although we frequently make the mistake of regarding them as such. We even equate their reaction to our miracles with a lay reaction. Nothing could be further from the truth. The only thing that they have in common with the genuine, one hundred per cent dyed in the wool layman is that they are not turned on by magic in the same way that we are. In other words they are not sufficiently motivated by it to want to do it themselves.

Take your own family, for instance. How much more magic have they seen than the average person? They even have a magician, good, bad or indifferent under their own roof. Magic, to them, is an everyday thing. Part of the routine of their lives. How often are they dragged to conventions and society events? How many times have they been forced to watch magic on television? They know all the standard effects, gags and presentations. They are just as sick of seeing the linking rings and unequal ropes as the most dedicated magic buff.

The same applies to those people who are always in the pub after the society meeting. They have seen it all before: They stand huddled together at a corner of the bar fending off the wild hoards, who descend brandishing packs of cards and bits of string.

So what is all this leading up to? Simply this. For better or for worse we have created this magically sophisticated semi lay public. Having created them we must make sure that we distinguish them from the true lay public. If we fail to do so we are in for some nasty shocks. For instance, that trick which our kids thought was great on the dealer dem at some convention and just the thing for dad's act; what really appealed to them about it? Was it its novelty? What is novelty to a real layman, who has never seen the original standard version? Or that act on the gala show, the one that brought the house down — the one that had everybody saying "That's how magic should be presented". The wife may have raved over the style, costumes and lighting, but to the real layman is it perhaps just a lot of overdressed nothing? Or that trick that wowed the locals in the pub after the last society meeting, could it be that in a different pub, where magicians do not descend en mass every week, they would wonder why you had bothered?

To the real layman, magic is something totally outside of his normal experience. This alone makes it interesting, and when well presented, entertaining. The magically sophisticated audience, regards magic as normal, they take it for granted. They are entertained by novelty, elaborate presentations and offbeat effects. To confuse the two is to court disaster.

Happy New Year. I don't know about you dear reader, but if 1980 is as good as 1979 was then I'll love a happy new year. It has been a busy year, so busy in fact that I decided not to work at all over Christmas and the New Year. And so for the last 10 days or so I haven't done a thing. All my friends are amazed "Not working at Christmas or New Year?" they said "but that's the busiest time of the year." It was a great feeling to look at them, allow my head to swell a little, and say "For you, maybe."

Actually '79 got better towards the end in many respects, and not just financially. As I sit here surrounded by Christmas presents ranging from socks to after shave I am reminded of one of the sadder events that happened in '79 and that was the closing of the Ken Brooke Magic Place in Wardour Street. Someone once penned a line which pointed out that every cloud has a silver lining — or was it, it's an ill wind that doesn't blow somebody some good! Well, however chilly the wind was that blew down Wardour Street towards the end of '79 it left a warm glow behind for someone and that someone was me because Ken Brooke floored me a few days before Christmas by giving me a present of all the signed photographs which had adorned the walls of The Magic Place. I know that some people will be annoyed about that but I'm not. So a big thank you to both Ken Brooke and Frank Farrow for one of my happier moments of the year. I promise that if either of you decide to open up again you can have them all back if you want them. I won't like it, but you can, I promise. To complement the aforementioned surprise my family bought me a bunch of photograph albums so I had a busy time filling one with the other. (I still have room for more??)

'79 was also a good year for meeting old friends. Lots of visitors from the U.S. — Mike Caldwall, Jay Marshall, Percy Diaconais, Ricky Jay, Scotty York, etc etc, all of them Anglophiles. I mustn't forget Pete Biro who arrived just in time to appear on the evening show at Ron Macmillen's International Day of Magic. Pete's almost round the world trip was marred by the fact that his wife was taken ill and had to spend a few days in hospital, but everything turned out O.K. eventually. Keep well, Bobbie. Write sometime and I won't tell Pete. Mention of the International Day reminds me how impressed I was by The Moretti's version of the broomstick levitation. It gets better every time I see it. Did I mention Albert Goshman? He was there. Albert is fast catching up with Jay Marshall in the number of trips he has made to this country. He arrived, as always, with packed suitcases, new balls, and then departed, as before, with nothing but loot.

If I can harp back to Christmas again, I nearly forgot one of the most important items that Santa Claus threw down my chimney—a video cassette recorder. It was actually a present from a friend of mine. That's the kind of friend magicians need. This one was short, fat, female and talks to herself occasionally, and she knocked me out with the present. In the past I have always hated people with these machines and was sick and tired of them telling me how good they were. Now, you can get sick and tired of listening to me for a couple of minutes.

This machine is real magic and with it I got several tapes of various magicians in TV shows. This, of course is its major value for we magical idiots — the fact that we can tape other magicians performing.

One of the features of it is that you can actually stop and start it, freeze frames. This, of course, can be a problem for the sleight-of-hand man because anyone who tapes a magician performing can stop and start frame after frame and almost see the sleight taking place. In most instances you can actually see the moves. I can't imagine any layman who would take this sort of trouble but I am quite sure there are many magicians who do, finding out how a trick is done or perhaps being able to copy another magician. This is a great pity, but has made my Christmas much happier.

As I pen these words (this is a lie, actually I'm speaking into a tape recorder) sitting in front of me is a number of copies of the old Magic Work of the twenties. It really is surprising the difference of the material between the books and magazines of then and today. The main difference is that most of the writers really did try to come up with original thoughts. There was a genuine attempt to create something new and different. Today there is a tendency for magical creators to use existing material and try and alter, streamline or re-routine it. I'm not sure why, but perhaps it's because there is much more literature around today and we are being subconsciously brainwashed into thinking along particular lines. Maybe the old timers didn't have so much to read so they had to originate.

Give it a try and send it in to our Editor, please. Happy New Year.

It was during 1961 that I first performed the classic broken and restored thread and immediately repeated the effect using the same? piece of thread. The method described below differs from that used by the Niberco Bros. to achieve the same effect and is the one I have performed with great success in close-up situations at tables in hotels, restaurants and similar engagements in many cases when completely surrounded.

The initial preparation is the same as for the well known single restoration but this double restoration requires that two balls are made a little less than an inch apart and approximately a yard from the end of the thread. (See below for details of how to fold the thread if you are new to the effect — Ed.)

The two balls are now squeezed together and the thread rewound round the spool trapping the balls beneath the thread with the last few turns. Place the spool so prepared in the left coat pocket.

When about to perform the effect, the left hand enters the pocket and brings out the spool with the thumb covering the two balls and the index finger on the opposite side and parallel with the spool. The free end of the thread should be clear of the fingers and thumb near the end of the spool projecting from the hand. Attention to these important details will ensure that the right hand can take the free end of the thread and pull it off the spool neatly and with the greatest economy of movement. See sketch (1).

Hold the spool in the left hand and with the right hand pull the thread off the spool horizontally as far as the first ball which will result in the thread being displayed between the outstretched hands.

The right hand now drops the end it is holding and takes the spool, but before actually removing it the left index finger moves around the spool and traps the two balls between itself and the left thumb. (2). The right hand, now in possession of the spool, snaps the thread about three inches from the balls. The spool is now placed aside and the left displays the thread, the two balls being hidden between the tips of its index finger and thumb. So far there is no difference from the classic effect except that you have to keep two balls hidden and it is necessary to squeeze them a little more.

The thread is now snapped into a number of approximately equal pieces — first breaking it about a couple of inches below the hidden balls. Place the thread back into the left hand break again. Repeat until all the thread is in the left fingers leaving the right hand empty. Display the broken pieces between first and second fingers of the left hand.

Right hand next takes all the pieces, except the one with the two balls hidden between the thumb and first and second fingers, and holding them shoulder high roll into a ball using only the thumb and finger tips.

Pretend to attach the resultant ball onto the single piece held in the left hand, but actually retain it between the right thumb and fingertips bringing the bottom ball of the two in the left hand into view. You appear to have attached the rolled up broken pieces onto a single short piece of thread.

Right hand next takes the visible piece grasping it by the ball hidden between left thumb and finger tips. Hold it in a display position allowing the left hand to be seen empty.

The visible piece is now retaken with the left hand, and in the process the concealed ball together with the ball of broken pieces are transferred from between the tips of the right thumb and index fingers to the same position between the left thumb and index finger tips. This is accomplished as follows.

The backs of both hands are facing the spectators and as the tips of the thumb and fingers of both hands come together, the right thumb pushes the two balls it is holding hidden between itself and the right index finger onto the tip of the left index finger. Without hesitation the left thumb presses onto the two balls as the hands move apart completing the transfer of both the visible pieces of thread and the concealed balls. Sketch (3), giving the performer's view, shows the point at which the two balls are being pressed onto the left index finger tip with the right thumb. It is important that at the conclusion of the move that the ball of torn pieces is behind the whole ball which is forward towards the tips of the left finger and thumb, and that the passing of the piece of thread should appear as a normal action with the object of showing all is fair, at the same time allowing the audience to see that nothing is concealed in either hand, without specifically saying so.

The right hand next grasps the thread at the bottom end and bringing both hands on a level plane slowly pull the thread horizontally causing the ball to unwind revealing the restoration.

It would, of course, be possible to do the first restoration with the concealed ball and ball of torn pieces hidden in the right hand, and do the pass over move described above, after the restoration when passing the thread from hand to hand in a continuous move, thus displaying both hands to be otherwise empty. I use both methods, depending upon what I feel is best for that particular performance.

The right hand releases the end it is holding and smoothes out the wrinkles in the thread by pulling it through the thumb and fingertips a few times. This will be more effective if there is some moisture present on the tips of these digits which if dry could be remedied by touching them with the tongue, but personally I do not like using the mouth, other than for talking, when performing.

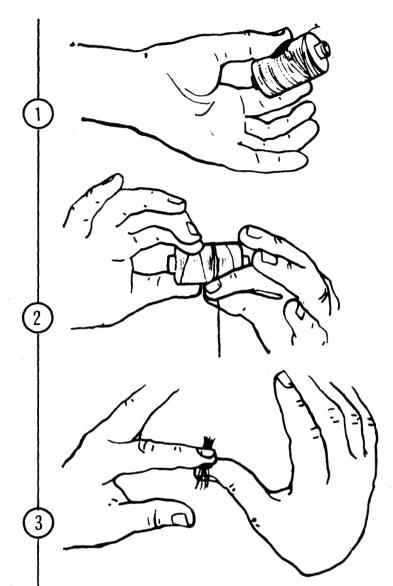

You now repeat the effect by breaking the thread in pieces as before. This time the right hand takes the visible pieces and the ball of broken pieces together and making them into a single ball by rolling them together between the thumb and finger tips.

Continue as in the classic method by pressing this ball onto the thread piece in the left hand, exchanging the two balls and complete the trick for the second time.

AFTER-THOUGHTS

One can discuss the advisability of repeating the effect as it is really strong when only performed once. However, if during the patter the point is made that magicians never repeat an effect, or someone asks for you 'to do it again' a repetition creates a big surprise and certainly increases your reputation.

Occasionally when working in a bar I use a method which I developed enabling me to perform the trick up to four times using the same spool. With this method I am able to, perform at four different tables using the same spool thus eliminating the necessity of setting up each time or overloading the pockets with spools. I do not use a close-up case preferring to work from my pockets using cards, coins, sponges and dice which gives plenty of variation.

The preparation of the spool consists of making a ball about one yard from the end of the thread and three more all about a yard from each other. The thread containing the balls is then rewound around the spool so that the balls line up and the spool placed onto the table with the balls on the side away from the spectators. (See 4).

To prepare the thread for the repeat restoration first unwind about two yards from the spool and leaving the first yard free, wind the second yard into a bundle as follows.

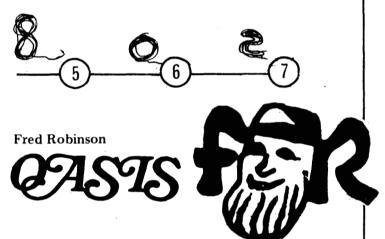

Starting near the spool (about two yards from the end of the thread) wind about one yard around and in between the left index and second fingers forming it into a figure eight which when removed from the fingers will appear as in (5). Fold it in half where thread crosses making a circle (6). Pull this circle into a straight line and pleat it into an 'S' shape (7) and squeeze flat. Wind thread around this bundle four or five times to keep it intact.

Pull off a further yard of thread and make a similar bundle which when completed should be a little less than an inch from the first one.

Rewind the thread around the spool trapping the two bundles against the spool with the last few turns.

So prepared the spool is placed into the pocket or on the table. Every care should be taken in the preparation to ensure that the bundles unwind freely when showing the restoration.

This month's cover design first appeared as a cartoon in the Oxford Mail and is reproduced by kind permission of its Editor.

It complemented a report of the activities of a couple of close-up magicians Johnny Johnston and Mick Moran who have been performing at Sweeny Todd's Pizza Restaurant with success for some time now. Dave Curtis is also working for the same firm in Oxford who require a magician for their restaurant in Bath. It is obvious that no-one will make a fortune from this kind of work, but is fine to gain experience in performing for the lay public and find out that just what is required to be successful in this field by practical experience.

Simon Lovell now almost recovered after being severely burned when escaping from a box around which a bonfire had been built — a sudden gust of wind blew the flames in his direction after he had made his escape. This happened towards the end of his summer holiday camp engagement in which he also does close-up magic. He has been rebooked for next year with a contract to include more close-up magic. He makes the point in his letter that magic means nothing without an entertaining presentation. Without such a presentation magic becomes just a puzzle to an audience — something to be solved. It is essential that the whole audience be entertained — not just the few who enjoy solving problems. Once in company with his agent Simon suggested that he (the agent) should write an article for Pabular re magicians. His reply was short and to the point. "Do you really need a one-word article?"

It was obvious from his expression that the article would not only be short, but also extremely uncomplimentary, and one likely to be shared by other agents and potential bookers seeking entertainers, when they see magicians performing in their own habitat for their fellow hobbyists.

Maybe many who read this column will claim that they perform only for other magicians. Many who have confined their activities to this type of magic have gained a reputation of being top flight magicians within the fraternity.

Regardless of the degree of success obtained in these endeavours there will be a considerable diminution of approval from lay audiences witnessing such performances. The reason for this is simple. Magicians are entertained by expert technique, novel and ingenious methods etc, which lay audiences are, or should be ignorant.

These magicians whose skill and inventiveness has won the acclaim of their colleagues and rely solely on these attributes without any effort being made to provide an entertaining presentation to accompany their effects will find their performances less acceptable to lay audiences.

Undoubtedly many magicians have no intention or desire to perform for non-magicians and will only do so under pressure from someone who is aware that they do tricks. On occasion they will be persuaded to show tricks to friends of a fellow magician, who admire their expertise purely from the magician's point of view, which brings me to the point I wish to make.

Performing tricks to lay people without a presentation devised to entertain them, the magician deprives himself of one of his greatest assets: the opportunities an entertaining presentation provides to employ misdirection.

A spectator having nothing to occupy his mind other than trying to spot 'how it was done' will treat the trick as a puzzle. It has been observed 'that a trick without patter is a mere curiosity' (there are exceptions). I would go a step further and say 'A trick without proper presentation can be a disaster!'

Disaster may seem too strong a word, but it has been my experience (and others) to be told by non-magicians that when watching magicians the fraternity has come to regard as top class, they saw certain actions which enabled them to conclude how the trick was accomplished.

When magic for magicians has reached the stage when it ceases to wholly deceive the non-magician, it may be time to take a fresh look at ourselves.

One who has for many years been advising, advocating, begging, preaching and pleading with magicians in general to change their attitude towards magic is Ken Brooke. The Magic Place having now closed Ken is writing a book and maybe will find room for a chapter on the difference between the approach to magic by the average magician and that of a performer. No one is better qualified to provide the necessary enlightenment for those desirous of improving the magic they perform for people.

Next month will bring this column up to date regarding past events. It will take a little longer to do the same with the magazine which has been failing to meet deadlines. Must do better — at least we are trying.

THE POETRY OF MAGIC

Fr. Cyprian

Hofzinser called card conjuring "The Poetry of Magic". Yet so many people dislike card "tricks". Perhaps it is because the card magic they witness is not poetry but doggerel—trite, empty, boring, and aimless. Card magic has all the potential to entertain and mystify. Yet how often do we see it fail! Here are a few of my own reflections on card magic.

To be effective and entertaining, a card effect must possess three qualities:

- 1) Interest
- 2) Clarity
- 3) Involvement of the spectator.

INTEREST

The card effect has to attract the interest of the spectator. As soon as you begin, there must be something there that will make the spectator want to give you his attention. It may be an interesting storyline or a flash appearance of meaningful cards. Interest must be generated in the performer. Quite often card magic is boring because the performer is boring. He is more interested in entertaining himself than he is in entertaining an audience. Magic is other-directed. It is communication. And that means talking to someone out there and being aware of their response.

CLARITY

Means two things. The cards and what is happening must be seen. If no one can see the "master visible card change" — the effect is dead. If no one can see what you are doing — the effect is dead. Clarity also means that the spectator is aware of where the plot is going, that he is not trapped in a swamp of technique that makes you feel good "because you are so clever"; but which loses him and lulls him to sleep. Make the effect easily understood.

INVOLVEMENT OF THE SPECTATOR

If the spectator is not involved, then the effect probably holds no meaning for him. Involvement means more than "take a card". "Take a card" usually means a challenge to the spectator. You take it, I'll find it! Who cares? Really, who cares whether you find his card? But when his selection becomes a prop for an entertaining sequence of happenings . . . well, then you have a fighting chance of entertaining him. Involving the spectator means letting him do some of the magic. You don't have to do it all. Of course, we know that you are the one who makes it happen; but is it necessary to always be the one who comes out on top? "See how cleverly I found your card . . . see how cleverly I cut the aces . . . see how clever I can be making the cards change colour . . . gets pretty boring after a while. Put the spectator in the limelight. Give him the credit for some of the card discoveries, colour changes, ace cutting, etc. He knows he did not do it. The audience knows he did not do it. They'll give you the credit; but they will also give you credit for being an entertaining and generous person who is enjoying what he is doing. They'll enjoy it too.

In offering your card magic to an audience, you have to be comfortable with the presentation and with the handling. Both ingredients make for good magic. The moves and sleights you choose to use should be natural to you. It is not necessary to do the most intricate and advanced moves. If you are capable of doing some of these and they add to the impact and effect on your audience, then use them. If they add nothing or if the move is beyond you, then do not use a move for the sake of using a move. A self-working effect placed alongside another involving moves in a short routine often brings forth a reaction from the audience out of all proportion to the means used.

Magic does not exist in the mechanics of an effect. It exists somewhere between you and the mind of the spectator. We handle the mechanics and present them to the mind and emotions of the spectator, he reacts, and illusion is born. That is magic.

Ed. Note: The above article first appeared in Fr. Cyprian's lecture notes entitled "Door to Door Card Sharp" with kind permission of the author.

LECTURE NOTES

The latest notes of Fr. Cyprian entitled Door To Door Card Sharp are available from the author at St Francis Retreat House, Box 191, Garrison, N.Y. 10524 U.S.A., price 3 dollars.

First to be explained is Two Deck Brainwave and uses two packs — one red and one blue backed. A freely chosen card from one pack is found reversed in the other. Climax comes when the red backs of one pack changes to blue and vice versa. Ordinary packs used and no difficult sleights used.

In Factory Guaranteed Opener performer cuts to the four aces. This is repeated with some spectator involvement removing some of the 'watch how clever I am' element from the trick. Finally the aces are shown to have changed the colour of their backs with a nice touch with the guarantee card.

If you like performing tricks with scope for acting a part, not overloaded with moves and really entertain Harry The One-Armed Gambler will appeal being a fine example of this type of effect.

Door To Door Card Sharp is another story effect in which the four aces are found from a shuffled pack — again with help from a spectator.

The remaining effects are Glim Deck, Matched Pair and Quitting The Company. The latter being an ambitious card which ends with the card being found in the card case. For those interested in entertaining people with card tricks these notes should prove to be excellent value. Read The Poetry Of Magic elsewhere in these pages for the Cyprian approach to card magic to ascertain if you are 'in tune' with his philosophy. If you are — verb sap.

The lecture notes of Rick Johnson are now obtainable in Great Britain from Anthony Brahams, 168 Holland Park Avenue, London W11, price £2.65, post free.

Everyone must have seen the old nail puzzle — the linking and unlinking of two bent nails. Under the caption Nailed it is explained how to turn this puzzle into a magical effect wherein the linking and unlinking takes place inside a small jar as it is held by a spectator.

Thinking Caps won for the author the trophy for comedy at the S.A.M. Convention way back in 1967. In short one spectator reads another's mind. In the process eleven different articles are brought into play including such diverse items as a toilet plunger, chinstraps, toothbrush holders and various electrical bits and pieces. You will gather from this information that comedy plays some part in the presentation.

First Generation is a method of finding the names of chosen cards using a computer (actually a flap card box). To turn the box into a computer will require a buzzer, switches and other electrical junk from your local TV repair shop's dustbin. Assembled, this will enable a printout of two chosen cards to be made from your computer!

The Second and Third Generation continue the theme all leading into obtaining the maximum amount of fun.

A couple of ring and rope effects include a method of making a plastic ring into an invisible key.

The last item is an adaptation of a Roy Johnson version of Seven Keys to Baldpate making it suitable for close-up performance. It requires that a small box be made up — not too difficult for the average handyman. The unusual and unexpected climax should make the effort of making the box well worth while.

These notes will appeal mainly to magicians who introduce comedy into their presentations and enjoy making up bits and pieces from junk.

SHIV'S EXCHANGE

In this effect the two red kings 'collect' a chosen card which then changes into another selection. The first one collected is found face up in the centre of the pack.

From any pack remove the two red kings dropping them face upwards onto the table.

Have two cards freely chosen — replaced into the pack and secretly brought to the top. False shuffle retaining the two cards in position and slip cut the top card to the centre of the pack taking a left little finger break ABOVE it.

Take the pack into the right hand between the thumb at the inner end and the fingers at the outer end (Biddle position) transferring the break to the right thumb. Obtain a further break with the thumb under the top card.

The left hand now takes all the cards below the centre break and puts them face upwards on top of the original top half.

The break previously under the top card is now in the centre of the pack. Again take the cards below the break and put them face up on top of the rest of the pack. This is the well known Braue Reversal and brings both selections to the bottom of the pack at the same time reversing the one actually at the bottom.

Pick up the two red kings and place them, still face up on top of the face up pack which is held in the right hand in the Biddle position. With the left thumb pull off the topmost king and put it on the bottom of the pack outjogged towards the left for about half its width. (See Fig.1).

The left hand now takes the pack holding it between the thumb on the top resting on the face of the king and the finger tips beneath in contact with the face down selection immediately above the side jogged king.

This face down selection is caused to appear instantly between the face up kings by tossing the pack into the right hand and at the same time exerting pressure with the thumb and finger tips retain the three cards in the left hand. Show the face down card in the centre to be one of two chosen.

Turn the pack in the right hand face down and put the three cards on top with the kings face up and the face selection between them. This latter is now to be secretly exchanged for the other selection which is now fourth down using a switch explained by Garcia in his book Super Subtle Card Magic.

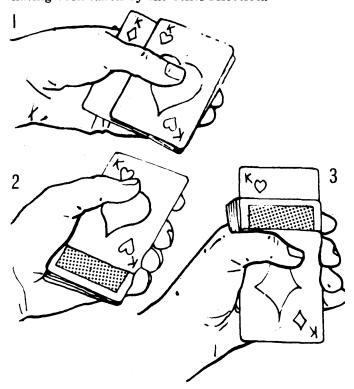

Take a break under the fourth card — this will be easier if the four top cards are fanned out to show all is fair, and getting the break on closing the fan. As the cards become squared immediately lift all four with the right hand between the thumb at the inner end and the fingers at the outer end.

With the left thumb pull off the top king of the four card packet onto the pack so that it is outjogged over the end of the pack for about half its length (Fig.2). Pull off the face down card in the same way but this time square onto the pack. This leaves a face up king with the other selection hidden beneath it. This double, held as one card is placed on top injogged for about half its length. (See Fig.3).

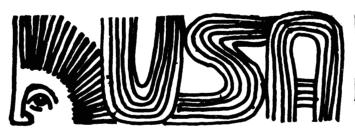

Now for the switch. With the right thumb push the double forward flush with the outjogged king and pull the three cards clear of the pack and spread them slightly. The spectators will still see a face down card between the two kings and believe it to be the one shown previously.

Hand the three cards to spectators for him to discover the change after you have made a magic pass — or whatever. As he looks at the cards and becomes aware of the change secretly reverse the top card into the centre of the pack.

Climax the effect by spreading the pack face downwards across the table to reveal that the card, which a moment ago was between the two kings is now face up in the pack, its place having been taken by the other selection.

HAPPENINGS By O'Bie O'Brien

News this time from Abbotts get together. The best part of the whole convention I thought was the performance of my good English friend, the star of "For My Next Trick" and this year's magic circle M.C. for the Christmas show, Terry Seabrooke.

Terry did his magic and comedy on Friday night and lectured on Saturday afternoon. Terry's unique sense of humour had the audience in stitches laughing. His lecture was entertaining as well as informative. One thing that really broke me up was when the spectator was to select a card. Terry said, "You might notice that one card that stands out different from the others, if you do, grab it." When he fanned the cards, he put the five of clubs three quarters out of the fan. The spectator took it and Terry milked some more good laughs on this seemingly innocent part of the trick. He took it back and said, "select another." This time it was a free choice, and as they went to return it he said, "put it back," paused a second, and then said "face-up", "I take no chances" - more laughs, just great.

For those of you who don't know, Abbotts is in Colon, Michigan and is called the magic capital of the world. This little town of approximately one thousand people including the horses, fills up with a thousand magicians and there isn't a motel in the town. The closest motel is sixteen miles away. What brings them? I don't know, but I can tell you I've only missed twice in thirteen years. I guess it's the American Legion (pub) where everybody meets to talk magic and enjoy each others company, or maybe it's the beer!!!

The close-up was in the four corners of the gym where the nightly stage shows are held. It's not the best conditions, but it's better than nothing.

Tom Mullica, Father Cyprian, Paul Gertner and Howard Flint handled the close-up. I'll tell you one trick that each did that would impress anyone if they saw it.

Mullica had a card selected, returned, controlled and then holding the cards at his left side he asked for any number between one and twenty. As it was picked, he slowly dealt the cards on the table with one hand, and the selected card appeared face up at the selected number. He gave somebody else a chance to select a different number, again it appeared face up at that number. His left thumb control is beautiful.

Gertner was terrific with his cups and balls routine using steel ball bearings which grow to two inch ball bearings for the final loads, plus a three inch ball. His coin routine called "That's Ridiculous" is super.

Father Cyprian did his bullseye effect. This is the trick where the aces appear one at a time underneath a piece of circular sponge. I don't think it's worth $8.50, but who am I to say.

Howard Flint does the funniest signed card in wallet routine. It's Seabrooke's type of magic, laughs and surprises. He openly cheats at trying to find the card by pretending not to see the cards. Under the table, he makes believe the card gets stuck in his zipper. More laughs and bits of business, all the time the card has been in a wallet sitting in front of the spectator who never suspects and is truly surprised as he takes the card out of the wallet.

Changing the subject, but still with close-up, Steve Dusheck had some real stunners that sold out at I.B.M. and S.A.M. this summer. His "Funky": a quarter is shown, your hands are otherwise empty. "Misdirection is the key to magic," you say, as you close your fingers around the quarter. Open your hand and it contains a key. The quarter is now on your key ring.

The trick that really stunned Bob Read and myself is called "Dingbat". Six mini coins are shown on a clear plastic paddle. One is selected. Instantly and visibly the other coins disappear. The effect is self-contained, no pulls, and the real kicker is that you hand out the paddle for examination. I saw it from a distance of four feet and had no idea how it happened. The gimmick and clean up fooled both of us.

Steve doesn't mass produce his items, so if you want one write him. Till next time have a good holiday season.

Increase in Subscription Rates

The rising costs of paper, printing and postage have made it necessary for us to increase our subscription rates, the first change for 2 years. The new rates for 12 issues are UK £8.00, Abroad £9.00 USA $20.00 and will be effective from and including this issue. New subscribers and renewals will be informed from now on.

PADDY CLANCY'S RIGHT ANGLED COIN VANISH

As the title implies this coin vanish requires that the spectators be on the performer's right. It was shown to me by the originator when I was seated on his right — the ideal situation for creating a perfect illusion with this effect.

Commence by apparently placing a coin in the left hand but actually retaining it in the right, in the classic palm position. When shown to me, the originator used the 'retention of vision' move, but any sleight which leaves the left hand closed with the fingers uppermost and apparently containing the coin will suffice. The fingers of the right hand should be curved sufficiently to allow the palmed coin to be caught near the tips of the two middle fingers when the palm releases its grip on the coin. Try this a couple of times and then proceed as follows.

Saying "First I rub with my thumb (pause) and then with my fingers." Suiting the action to the words rub the closed left fingers with the right thumb and as the right hand moves towards the left hand for this purpose let the coin drop onto the fingers (you did try it a couple of times) and it will automatically be hidden behind the left hand when the thumb comes into contact with the fingers of the closed left hand. Sketch (1) shows the position at this stage.

After the pause in the patter line the right hand turns over and its fingers curve inwards pressing the back into the classic palm and immediately moves into the position shown in (2). The movement should be made without hesitation and with due regard to angles in relation to the spectators view.

On completing the rubbing action with the tips of the right finger tips on the left hand, the right hand moves a few inches away from the left to a position between the left hand and the spectators eyes. It should not obscure the spectators view of the left hand but be in such a position that the left hand is just above the right. It is important that the spectator should see both hands at the same time during the following actions.

Keeping your gaze intently on the left hand as itmakes a crumbling action with its fingers and at the same time slowly turn the right hand palm upwards, but not far enough to expose the palmed coin. It is surprising how far the hand can be turned and still keep the coin hidden from the spectators sight, as a check will show. The mound of flesh at the base of the thumb provides considerable cover and the higher the hand is held in relation to the spectators eyes the greater the cover. It is the angle which is important.

In what follows, timing is important. The left hand slowly opens and at the same time look the spectator straight in the eyes and let the right hand drop casually onto the right knee. The strength of the vanish depends on the intriguing ploy of leading him into making the false assumption that the right hand, when palm up was, to his mind, obviously empty. On no account should any indication be given that you want him to specifically note that the hand is empty? In fact, you deliberately focus his attention on the left hand and although he sees the right hand turn palm upwards he will pay little regard to it, falsely concluding it to be empty, and in consequence will disregard the very hand which is stealing away the coin.

ROGER WOODS WRITES: In the penultimate chapter of Jerry Mentzer's excellent book Card Cavalcade Finale there is an idea called "Fancy Coloured (sic) Backs", accredited to Peter Kane, by which poker cards can be transformed by the use of self-adhesive coloured plastic film so that they can be made to have backs in varied colours for packet tricks. Reading this idea set a train of thought in my mind. In the local "Boots" chemists I had recently noticed some self-adhesive labels called "Funstickers" in a variety of designs. I have found that these are perfect for sticking on the backs of standard bridge size cards to create a startling variety of unusual coloured back designs. They are available in various loud colours with wording such as "Pow", "Whaam!", and with designs of comic characters. Also some have "Talk Bubbles" so you can write in a short message. Something a little bit different and unusual to packet tricks.

THE THREE CHAIR ENIGMA — OR, THE LAZY MENTALLIST DEMONSTRATION

PREFACE

The following demonstration was provoked by an automobile accident, which left me somewhat immobilized. My neck and hip were fractured. I could get by on crutches and with a large neck brace. The problem was that I had committed myself to several mentalism performances, and even though I could stand and talk, I could not move about the audience, nor could I even move around the platform in my normal fashion.

I worked out my whole performance without moving more than two feet. I had women in the audience assist me by picking up various items and handing them to different persons in the audience.

The following demonstration seemed to play quite well. I performed it in a light-hearted fashion. A woman assistant became the mentalist, and I just stood by and cheered her on. The audience gave her a good ovation.

The method is probably old, but it is new to me. The demonstration is the type I like, because the method is so very criminal.

EFFECT

Three chairs are on the platform. The performer explains that the first chair is called Chair 1. The second chair is Chair 2, and, of course, the third chair is Chair 3. (This pattern, for some reason, is funny). You invite a woman to be a mentalist. You hand her three 9 inch by 11 inch filing folders. They are closed and appear to be identical. "Each folder has a different message. Please do not look at the messages, but instead, hold one up and think about what chair you wish to place it on. Do the same for the second chair, and put the third one down on the remaining chair." (You are looking away. The chairs are behind you, and, to your left).

"Now, as a mentalist, I want you to quickly select three men to help you. Please point to them quickly. Thank you, gentlemen."

"Do you want to change your folders around? Go ahead if you like. Good."

"Now, Madam Mentalist, I would like you to hand a single 3 inch by 5 inch card to each one of these men. Please don't read your message. Keep it face down. Have you done that? Good! Now, will you take any seat you like. Good. Now, will you switch cards, if you like. Now, you may switch seats, if you like. How are they doing, Madam Mentalist?"

Three men have freely selected a chair. Our mentalist has made a prediction by placing secret messages on each chair.

Let's see how well she has done.

"Gentlemen, for the first time, I want you to read your particular message. Chair 1, I want you to read your message and memorize it. Chair 2, the same, and, of course, Chair 3. Have you memorized your message?" (message cards are collected).

"Madam Mentalist, are you ready for the moment of truth?" "Gentlemen, are you ready for your big line?" "Good."

"Gentlemen, please stand. Chair 1, tell us your message." "A pig in the box." "Say that again." "A pig in the box." "Strange message." Open the folder and hold it up for everyone to see (laughter and applause). There is a large picture of a little pig in a carton, floating in a pond (a magazine ad.).

"Chair 2, recite your message." He does, and his folder matches.

"Chair 3, you are the 'odd man out'"
"What is your message?" "The best organisation in the whole world." He opens his folder, and there is the name in large letters of the organisation which is being entertained.
They applaud.

You thank your assistants, and ask the woman mentalist how she did it. More applause.

SOLUTION

The three folders are marked, e.g. 1, 2, 3. The possible sequence of the folders (e.g. 123, 132, 231, 213, 312, 321) is easily noted as you glance at the seats.

I use filing folders which have the tabs on different places. However, you could use a colour spot, or, even write one, two, or three on each folder.

Since there are six possible seating combinations, you need six sets of cards. You need only make these cards once.

The devilish part is that each card contains three messages. But, your patter about Chair 1, Chair 2, etc makes each man focus on his own message. This is, in fact, what you tell them to do. Furthermore, you ask them to stand and memorize their own message. They are a little excited. They want to do the right thing, and, from their point of view there is no chicanery. They merely memorize and recite the appropriate message.

The diagram below shows two sets of message cards. You must, of course, make six sets which follow an obvious rotation:

Set 1 (Folders 1, 2, 3 on Chairs 1, 2, 3)

Message card

Message for
Chair 1 — "A pig in the box"
Message for

Chair 2 — "Have a coke"

Message for

Chair 3 — "Best organisation in the world"

1, 2, 3 3 cards like this

3 cards like this

Set 2 (Folders on Chairs -1, 2, 3)

Message for

Chair 1 — "A pig in the box"

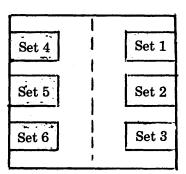

Chair 2 — "Best organisation.

in the world"

Chair 3 — "Have a coke"

The other sets follow the same rotation.

The six sets of cards are paper-clipped to another file folder and are easily pulled out right in front of the audience. Of course, you could have each set in a different pocket.

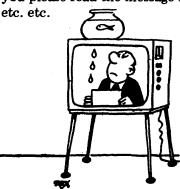

Card sets paper-clipped

Folder is closed and placed inside another folder. This hides the clips, and access is easy.

FINAL NOTE

The important thing is to be direct and very clear in your instructions. "Chair 1, will you please read the message for Chair?",

Trevor Lewis

This will be going into my new book on Close-Up (due out in 1980).

For years finger flingers have been doing the Braue Add On move. I expect that the move has been invented time after time by generations of creative talents (which I guess rules out Pat Page) . . . but read on . . . (a thought . . . if P.P. is supposed to represent 'very quiet' musically, how did that guy ever get those initials . . . or haven't you head of his vile, sorry, violin playing). But to continue. . .

Four Aces face up on top of pack. Spread the aces and take a break below the second face down card. The block of six cards is squared above the left little finger. This is as in the standard version.

Pull off the first face up ace with the left thumb and let it turn face down on the remainder of the deck. Now allow the two indifferent cards to drop on to the deck. (i.e. on to the first face down ace). Continue to pull off the remaining three aces and turn them face down on top of deck. If you are doing this for the magical folk, make it look as though you are doing the normal add on, by taking your time turning over the last card. (If you do the standard add on you'll know what I mean).

Deal out the top four cards face down. The first three will be aces, the fourth indifferent. You state that they are the four aces, but look slightly guilty. (acting...... look as if your pull has just snapped).

While acting out the above charade, the left little finger holds a break below the second card of the deck. Pick up the indifferent card off the table and place it on top of deck and perform a triple turn over. Exclaim "see, it is an ace." Point to the other three and say "you mean you want to see the other three?" Pick up one of the other three face down tabled cards with the right hand and bring it towards the pack. Meanwhile the left hand is holding a break below the third card of the pack (you should have three face up cards on top of pack, an ace followed by two indifferent cards). Turn over the card in the right hand showing an ace. Place this face up on the pack (i.e. on the face up ace). Repeat with the other two face down cards on the table. You will now have six face up cards on top of the deck. Four face up aces followed by two face up indifferent cards. There will be a moment of relaxation from the spectator at this point when he appears to think that you have just led him on into thinking that you had done something. At this moment turn over the six cards face down and deal out the top four cards. The first two will be indifferent, the third and fourth aces. As you place the third ace down 'accidentally' flash the face of the ace in right hand and at the same moment partly push off the fourth card (an ace) from top of deck 'accidentally' flashing its face. Drop both cards together on to the table as you say "would you like to see them again?" You are now set to perform any of the 1.001 four ace routines that adorn the magical pages. Talking about magical Pages, how are you Pat?

TWO FACED

Simon Lovell

Bring the conversation around to double faced cards during a session by remarking on the difficulty of obtaining particular combinations especially in poker sized cards. Say you have solved the problem by making your own as you remove a card from your right coat pocket holding it as in (Fig. 1) with the thumb on one long edge and the second on the other, the index finger curled up at the back with its nail pressing on the back making the face of the card slightly convex.

You now apparently show the other side of the card by turning the hand with its back to the spectators at the same time releasing the long edge from the thumb and trapping the card between the first and second fingers as shown in (Fig. 2). With the card still in this position proffer it to someone to let them examine your handiwork.

Being magicians they will recognise the 'paddle' move, but whoever takes it will turn it over to confirm his suspicion — he may think it is really a double facer and that the paddle move was just a gag. He will hand it back, but before taking it point out the extra face which has been added to the side of existing one as shown in the illustrations. That the card is 'double headed' will escape notice if neatly made. Have fun!

Did I ever tell you that the Italians are anhospitable race? I hope I did, because they are. I have just been to Italy, again, and each time they become more and more amazing. This trip was arranged for me by one Dominic Martorani of whom more later.

The event was a one day convention in Rome sponsored by the local IBM ring under the guidance of their president Fernando Ricardi, and was held in the Beverly Hills Hotel. I took my wife along and it is the first time she has ever been to a magic convention and she didn't understand a single word. One of the hotel staff remembered me from a previous trip (at least he said he did) so Mrs Page was suitably impressed and he got his tip.

The affair itself had two lectures, one by yours truly and the other by Paul Asnar from France, who featured close-up magic with the emphasis on lapping. Both of us also appeared in the evening show and for the record Paul is young, tall, handsome, impeccably dressed and is one hell of a manipulator. His manipulations are of the type to break your fingers and he doesn't miss. He makes me sick.

The following day President Ricardi invited a bunch of us to lunch at his small farm about 40 kilometers outside Rome. I could write a book about that day. His wife Paula treated us to the perfect lunch which seemed to go on forever, there were so many courses, and later that day his daughter Laura drove us back to Rome. I just had a thought: 'Laura, Paula and Fernando'. Sounds like a circus act, but their hospitality far outshines any three ring spectacular.

From Rome to Palermo where we were the guests of Dominic Martorani. We stayed at the only hotel in a tiny village on the side of a mountain called Monreale. Its main claim to fame is in having the second largest cathedral in Europe, and boy is that something to see.

Dominic himself is a character who has accidentally slipped out of the pages of Damon Runyon's books. He is almost an exact replica of a Hollywood type Sicilian. The accent, the bad English, the mistakes in the language, the fantastic sense of humour, all wrapped up together in one little man. I can say little man very easily because he is the same height as me. He has a small magic studio and a small workshop situated in the little village. In magic terms he and his eighteen year old son Franco really shook me up. They make most of their props themselves, the most beautiful props I have ever seen. Anything from shell pennies to zig-zag illusions; you name it he can make it whether it's in metal, wood or plastic — he deals in them

When we returned to Rome we had the pleasure of an evening with Sylvan and his gorgeous wife Irene.

Part of the evening was spent watching video tapes of his TV series past and present. This guy has to be one of the greatest magicians of all time. He does everything. On one of his spectaculars I watched him performing close-up, hands only, cards, cigarettes, billiard ball and coin manipulations behind the credit titles of the show and they were of such a standard that I doubt whether I have ever seen cleaner manipulations done on television in my life. In the shows themselves he will present anything from small object manipulation to big illusions.

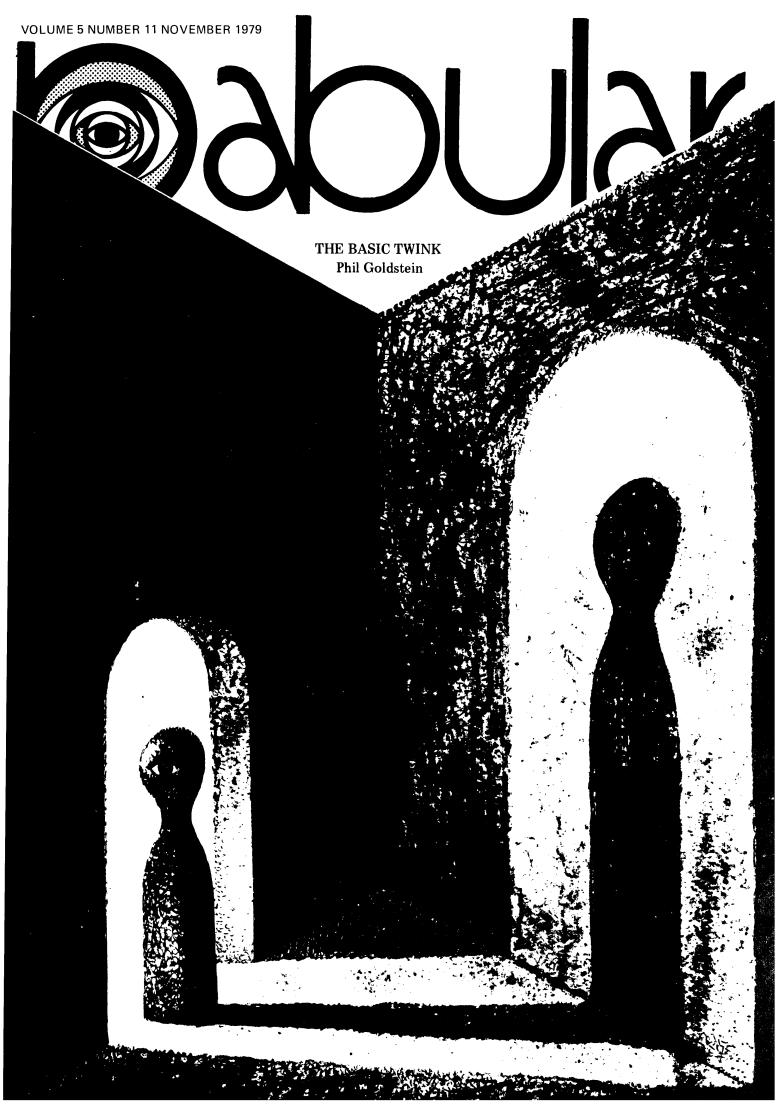

There is nothing apologetic or ingratiating about his style. He doesn't hope you are going to like what he does, he tells you. He makes you like it. He insists on applause. He sells his magic so strongly that he commands attention. I never saw Dante, Kellar, Maskelyne or any of the real big old-timers but in the last 30 or so years I have seen most of the big-time illusion acts and this guy has got to be up there with the best of them.

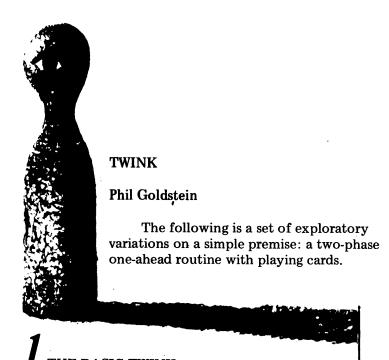

Something special. Sylvan is currently performing one of the greatest ideas that I have ever seen a magician ever do on television. He does the 3 Card Monte at the beginning of his show. It's the classic effect — with a difference. During the performance he is actually operating a 'phone-in from the viewers at home! In other words the viewers are 'phoning in which one they think is the ace! But there's more, much more. Later at the end of the programme he does it again with a well-known personality standing alongside him. Remember this at the end of the programme. He throws the three cards out and leaves them. No 'phone-in at this point — the viewing public are invited to write in, and the first postcard out of the sack gets a prize, somewhere in the region of £4000! This really pulls in the viewers. He's up there in the ratings with best of the shows in Italy. For the record Sylvan throws the three cards onto a black surface which is actually a photocopying machine. A photocopy is taken of the actual position of the face down cards, sealed in an envelope and not opened until the following week when the winner is announced. Like I said, this guy has got to be the greatest!

THE BASIC TWINK

- 1. Explain to the spectator that there are basically only two ways to go about selecting a card: through deliberate decision, or via random circumstance. State that both you and the spectator will have the opportunity to select cards in each of these modes, and that you will always make your selection first.
- 2. State that your first choice will be a random one. Instruct the spectator to hold the pack, and to spread it out face down, so that you can withdraw a random card. Note this card's identity. (You may do this openly). Let's say that this card is the ace of spades. Table this card face down.
- 3. State that the spectator's first choice will be deliberate. Tell the spectator to think of any card as he/she looks through the pack, then to remove that card.
- 4. At this point, you must secretly learn the identity of the spectator's selection. A marked or stacked deck would take care of this, as would the use of a shiner. However, for impromptu work, there are a number of techniques in the literature which will allow you to secretly peek the spectator's card as you take it from him/her and place it face down on top of your card.
- 4a. There is, at this point, the possibility that the spectator has chosen the mate of your card. In this case, leave the two cards on the table. State that you will make your next selection deliberately. Turn the pack towards yourself. Note the face card, and remove its mate, tabling off to one side of the previously tabled pair. Now, pass the bottom card to the centre of the - pack. Tell the spectator that his/her next selection will be a random one. Classic Force the mate card on the spectator. You finish clean.

- 5. It is more likely that the spectator's selection will not mate yours. Let's say it is the two of hearts. Table this card atop your previously tabled one (the AS). State that your next selection will be a deliberate one. Turn the pack towards yourself. Locate the mate to your first selection (the AC), and casually cut it to the face of the pack. It should not appear as if you're cutting a specific card to the face rather, that you are cutting the pack in the course of trying to decide upon a card. In other words, place no emphasis on this action. Now, locate and remove the mate to the spectator's selection (the 2D), tabling this card on top of the two-card pile.
- 6. State that the spectator's final choice will be a random one. Pass the AC to the centre of the pack, and Classic Force it on the spectator. This card is placed atop the three-card pile.
- 7. At this point, the order of the tabled pile is, from the top: AC, 2D, 2H, AS. It is necessary to displace the cards to a position wherein they pair up in mated groups. There are several ways to accomplish this.
- 7a. Pick up the packet and hold it with the left hand from the centre of the left long edge, thumb on top, fingers below. The right hand now apparently takes off the top two cards. In fact, the first half of an Elmsley Count, as follows: the right hand draws off the top single card on the mental count of "1". On the count of "2", the right hand's single card is stolen back beneath the left hand stock, and simultaneously the left thumb does a Push-Off of the top two cards of its stock, which are taken by the right hand. You will now have the deuces in 'our right hand, the aces in your left. (Topologically this is incorrect — the aces would be right, the deuces left, if it were being done fairly. Thus, the spectator could find you out if he/she were following the situation precisely. He/she won't). Turn up the contents of each hand. You're done.
- 7b. Alternatively, you can perform a complete Elmsley Count, apparently simply reversing the order of the cards. Now, you can turn up the top two cards, showing the two mate aces, and then the next two mate deuces.
- 7c. Another alternative is to pick up the four-card packet. Hold the cards with the left hand in Glide position. The right hand removes the next-to-bottom card (2H) and tosses it onto the table face up, then the new next-to-bottom card (2D), tossing it face up with the other deuce. The remaining two cards (the aces) are snapped face up, and all looks fine. (If the above procedure is done smoothly and quickly, the spectator will not realise the topological inconsistancies involved).

- 7d. Yet another handling is to hold the packet with the right hand from above, Biddle fashion. The left hand apparently removes the top single card in fact, the top and bottom cards are milked off, squared as one. Gesture with the card(s) in the left hand, saying, "This is the final selection let's see what it is." Replace the left hand card(s) on top of the packet. The mates are now paired.
- 7e. Still another manner is this: hold the packet in the left hand. The right hand turns up the top two cards, squared as one (displaying the 2D). Use this double card to flip over the next card (2H). Slide the double underneath the single, and flip the block face down. Transfer the block of three (supposedly two) to the bottom of the packet. Turn up the two new top cards fairly, showing the aces.
- 7f. One more procedure is this: at step 5, instead of dropping the spectator's selection onto your tabled one, slide it underneath yours. (This is done casually). This will give you a final packet order, from the top: AC; 2D; AS; 2H. If you then Jordan Count the packet, you will secretly segregate the mate pairs.
- 7g. One final handling is this: at step 5, the spectator's selection is slid beneath your initial tabled card. The third selection is not dropped on top of this two-card pile, but next to it. The fourth choice is dropped on top of the third. Thus, you now have two two-card piles, each with a deuce at the face, an ace on top. Pick up either pile, holding it deep in the left hand. The other pile is taken by the right hand, and apparently placed beneath the left hand stock. In fact, use either a Buckle or Pull-Down action to allow you to secretly insert the right hand stock in between the left hand pair. The pairs are now together.
- 7h. It should be mentioned that there is a wealth of related material in the Marlo "Matcho" series (see "Marlo Meets His Match", Ireland Magic Co., 1959). The displacement techniques used for some of the displays in those routines can be applied here.

$oldsymbol{2}$ twink plus

1. The structure of the effect is virtually the same. There is a small amount of set-up: you must set a pair of mates at the bottom of the pack. (For illustration, we will use the black

- aces). State that your first selection will be a random one. Take the deck, and seemingly give it some random cuts actually, Double-Undercutting the lowermost pair (mates) to the top. The two mate cards, squared as one, are removed from the pack, and tabled.
- 2. The spectator thinks of a card, which is removed, secretly glimpsed by you (let's say the 2H), and placed on top of the tabled card(s).
- 3. You make a deliberate selection (the other red deuce), and drop it onto the tabled pile.
- 4. The spectator gives the deck several cuts, then places an unseen card onto the tabled pile. The order of the packet is now, from the top: indifferent card; 2, 2, A, A.
- 5. To display the cards for the finish, you can simply flip the packet face up, and spread out the top four cards (the fifth the indifferent being hidden squared behind the fourth). A cleaner display (which also helps to further cloud the topologically incorrect order of the cards) is to flip the packet face up, and then deal the cards singly to the table, the last two being dealt as one.
- 5b. Alternatively, you can pick up the five-card tabled packet, and get rid of the top indifferent card by palming it off or thumbing it into your lap.
- 5c. Another procedure is to display the packet as four face down cards by using an Ascanio Spread. The two-card block second from the top is stripped out of the spread, and replaced on top. This displacement will not be questioned by the spectator, as the pairs are not being disturbed. Now, flip the packet face up, and use another Ascanio Spread to display the paired mates.
- 5c. If you apparently reverse the order of the packet with a Siva Count, you can then turn the cards face up and Ascanio Spread to show the pairs.
- 5d. Another procedure is to pick up the fivecard pile, and deal the cards singly back onto the deck (the last two being dealt as one). The top two cards of the deck are now mates, as are the next two.
- 5e. A further variation is this: the third selection is not dropped onto the two-(really three-) card pile, but next to it. The fourth selection is used to scoop up the third, and both are dropped onto the tabled pile. The order of the packet will now be, from the top: 2, X, 2, A, A. Flip the packet face up, and use either a Single Buckle Spread or a Buckle Deal to show the mated pairs.

3 FURTHER TWINK

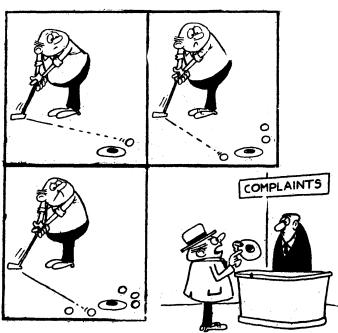

- 1. For this version, the spectator spreads the pack for you to make the first random selection, which is tabled. The identity of this card is immaterial.
- 2. The spectator now makes a deliberate choice. You secretly glimpse it as it is placed on top of the first tabled card. (Let's say this is the 2H).
- 3. You take the deck for your deliberate selection. Spot a pair of mates (say, the black aces), and casually cut them to the face. Now, openly locate the mate to the spectator's selection (2D), transferring it to the face. Remove the two face-cards of the pack (the 2D in front of a black ace), squared as one. Drop the double card onto the tabled pile.
- 4. Pass the lowermost black ace to the centre of the pack, then Classic Force it on the spectator. This card goes on top of the tabled pile. The order of this pile is now, from the top: A; A; 2; 2; X.
- 5. You can finish by dropping the packet back on top of the deck, and concluding as in step 5d of the previous routine. Alternatively, you can eliminate the bottom (indifferent) card by lapping it or palming it away.
- 5a. Another handling would be to turn up the top two cards, showing them to be mates. Flip the pair face down, and transfer them to the bottom of the packet. Turn up the next two, showing the other pair. If you wish to gild the lily at this point. you can flip the just-shown pair face down, Jack on top of the packet. Turn the packet face up, and Ascanio Spread for a final display. Yet another clean-up at this point would be this: after you have turned up the second pair, square the packet (the order now being: face up 2; face up 2; X; A; A. Lift away the top three cards, and drop them onto the pack - thus unloading the face down indifferent. Snap up the pair of aces, drop them face up onto the pack.

4 TWO-DECK TWINK

Without going into detail, it should be pointed out that the above routines can easily be adapted for use with two contrasting decks, the effect being that the performer makes his selections from a blue deck, the spectator from a red—and the pairs match in both value and suit.

5 TWINK ACES

- 1. One further variation on the basic idea. In this version, all four of the selections are random (i.e. not looked at until the climax). There is a small amount of set-up. Place the AH at the face of the pack, with the AS behind it. Place the AC at the centre of the deck, and crimp it at one corner.
- 2. You make your first selection by Double-Undercutting the lowermost pair to the top. Remove the top two cards, squared as one. Table the card(s).
- 3. The spectator cuts to a card at random. That card is placed on top of the tabled stock.
- 4. You take the deck, and cut the crimped AC to the top. (If the AC can't be found, that is because the spectator has chosen it, and it is already atop the pile. In this case, proceed to step 5a). Table the AC next to the already tabled pile.
- 5. The spectator cuts to a final card. Take this card, and scoop up the third selection (AC). Drop these two cards on top of the tabled pile.
- 6. Flip the packet face up. Elmsley Count, to show that you and the spectator have succeeded in locating the four aces.
- 5a. In the event that the spectator chooses the AC, simply cut to any card for your selection, dropping it on top of the tabled stock. The spectator cuts to a final selection, which is dropped on top of all.
- 6a. Flip the packet face up. Jordan Count, to show that you and the spectator have succeeded in locating the four aces.

MARTIN

CASTS CONTRACTOR OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPER

As promised last month, here for the record are a few of the happenings over the last few months.

Monday, September the third, the Magic Circle opened its winter programme with a Pabular evening — close-up magic at the tables with a team of performers — our thanks are due for an excellent show put on by David Beckley, Arthur Carter, Kevin Davie, Ian Keeble Elliott, Walt Lees, Brian King, Mick Moran, Jim Jones, Mike O'Brien, Chris Pratt, Jerry Sadowitz, and Phil Wye.

This column is being written during February 1980 — it's your guess whether we are jumping forwards or backwards to December 1979 which was a good month magicwise bringing with it the Ron Macmillan International Day of Magic.

We did not see any of the scheduled events but did manage to get into session with several visitors. Piet Forton from Switzerland who lectured gave us an excellent tip during one of these. It concerns performing close-up when seated and it becomes necessary to put some object on the table which will not bear examination and there is some danger of a spectator picking it up to have a closer look.

Let us suppose the object is a double faced card which you drop casually onto the table towards the spectators, and lean forward letting your forearms rest on the edge of the table with both hands on either side of the card and a few inches above the surface of the table. The hands should also be some distance from the card.

It should not appear that you are physically guarding the card, the barrier preventing anyone from picking up the card is a psychological one. Anyone feeling the urge to pick up the card is deterred from so doing because they would subconsciously be aware that such an act would be regarded by other onlookers as an unwarranted distraction, which they may resent. The precise position of the hands in relation to the card will be evident after some consideration of the underlying theory — too far forward and someone may be tempted to pick it up, and too much cover given by the hands will appear that you are ensuring that no one grabs it.

Dai Vernon also appeared and brought with him Ron Wilson who also lectured. This meant a long session extending into the early hours with the 'Professor' in fine form — finding a chosen card at any number called — the card trick that cannot be explained — numerous colour changes, and several gambling moves. He was full of praise for a certain Richard Turner who excels in false dealing — seconds, thirds, bottoms, second from the bottom and centres — all having the appearance of being dealt from the top.

Juan Tamarix appeared both in the close-up event and also with Anton in their hilarious Los Manchos double act. Juan stayed over for a few days — more sessions, one lasting five hours. He explained in detail several effects for publication in Pabular. There is no possibility that I will be able to include every detail of the various subtleties which are involved in the presentation of these effects, but I hope to further convey some idea of the Tamarix approach to close-up magic.

Here is one of the many tips which arose during the conversation and concerns the Zarrow shuffle. On reaching the point at which the interlocked cards are about to be disengaged pause a moment and look at the spectator making some comment relevant to the trick, at the same time perform the 'move' and square up the pack.

Not only does this procedure provide misdirection for those whose Zarrow is less than perfect, it also has certain advantages for those able to create a perfect illusion with the sleight. It gives a certain air of casualness and removes the possibility of giving the cards a genuine shuffle. Furthermore, looking at the audience ensures that contact with them is maintained thus avoiding the hazard of losing their complete attention, and in consequence allowing them to give their undivided attention to your action of shuffling which should not be emphasised at the time it is being executed.

One of the fundamental principles of sleight of hand with cards is not to look at your hands when performing a secret sleight, but to look at the spectators and keep them engaged in conversation. How often have you seen a cardman look away when performing the Zarrow shuffle?

Tamarix is engaged in writing a treatise on magical theory and is currently seeking a copy of Neo-Magic by S.H. Sharpe. Please drop me a line if you have a copy going spare, stating price required.

More next month.

Oscar Pladek THE REUNITED MATCH

Book paper matches (used) preferably with same colour of match paper, front and back; 1 match head held between tips of the right index and middle finger (palm side). Spectator available, preferably on your left or in front.

PERFORMANCE:

- 1. Pick up the matches from the table between the thumb and fingers of the right hand. Toss the matches to spectator requesting that he tear out a match. Have him place it on the table and close the cover of the match book.
- 2. Pick up the match with the left hand and examine it to be sure that the torn end is ripped straight and clean. Make sure that it has no loose paper or ragged edges. If not a clean break, straighten the end by tearing off an additional small piece using the right thumb and forefinger.
- 3. Place the torn end of the match between the right thumb and forefinger. Request that the spectator hold out both hands, palm upward.
- 4. Both hands now revolve inward and the match is taken between the thumb and left forefinger and middle finger. Now with some pretended effort, the head is apparently torn from the match as the hands separate; it should appear that the lower end of the match is sticking out of the left hand. The match head is now dropped into the palm of the spectator's left hand. Your right hand now closes as you request that the spectator "close his hand and place his thumb over the top and turn the hand palm dcwn".
- 5. Your left hand now places the stem of the match in the spectator's right hand, keeping the left index finger on the head. Request that the hand be closed, thumb placed over the top and turned down. Your right hand assists him in these actions.

- 6. Now, show both hands unmistakingly empty.
- 7. Place your right hand palm up under the spectator's left hand and request that he open his hand "very slowly". As the match head drops into your hand, have him keep his hand open and turn it palm up. Pick up the match head and place it on the back of the spectator's right hand. (A little juggling act). Now have him clasp his closed right fist with his left hand. The match remaining balanced on the back of his right hand. Both of the performer's hands can be used to assist.
- 8. Again, show your hands empty.
- 9. Pick up the match head from the back of the hand and hold in pinched, but extended between your right thumb and index finger. Reach over with the thumb and index finger of the left hand. As you pretend to remove the match head from the right finger, the left thumb causes the match head to revolve behind the fingers. This vanish is the same as described in "Vernon's Book of Magic".
- 10. Your left hand now pretends to rub the match head on the back of the spectator's right hand. In the course of moving from your left hand to the back of the spectator's hand, the right hand laps, or drops, the match head to the floor.
- 11. As the left hand apparently rubs the match head on the hand, the right hand (without the head now) approaches the spectator's hands and snaps its fingers. At the same time the left hand shows the disappearance of the match.
- 12. Request that the spectator open his hand. The match head has been reunited with its base.

NOTES:

- A: A follow up to this would be the performance of the "decapitation" from the "Stars of Magic" by Francis Carlyle.
- B: At the end of the routine, I pick up the match and bend the paper close to the head. Thus, when examined later, it appears that this was where the magical welding took place.
- C: This effect is much more effective with women than men for some reason. Perhaps because all the action involves them and the restoration occurs in their hands. My personal preference anyway.
- D: Some spectators are reluctant to hold matches in their hands. Probably left over from some earlier experience with someone who asked, "Did you ever see a match burn twice?" If they show concern, reassure them.

GALAXY TELEPATHY

Tony Binarelli

EFFECT

From a pack of cards that has been sufficiently shuffled, a person from the audience picks just one card which he then reshuffles together with the other cards. The pack is subsequently left on the table without the performer having touched it.

A second spectator who had been outside the premises, returns, takes the pack and slowly skims through them under the suggestion of the magician.

He draws out a single card which he lays face down on the table.

The first spectator names his card which is exactly the same which has been selected by the second one.

REQUIRED MATERIAL

A pack of BEE cards, or another brand with normal indexes.

A pack of cards with the same brand, type and back colour, in the JUMBO INDEX version.

EXECUTION (close-up version)

- 1. Put into the pack of cards with normal indexes a single card of the Jumbo Index (for example the 10 of spades), slightly fold the corner of the corresponding card with the normal index.
- 2. Place the card back into the pack and the pack within its case.
- 3. Hand the pack to the first spectator, inviting the second one to leave the room, and ask him to carefully shuffle it.
- 4. When you take the pack back, thanks to the folded corner you can place the ten of spades with normal indexes on top.

- 5. Force by means of your preferred system, this card upon the spectator, ask him to look at it, remember it and impress in his mind its image.
- 6. Hand over to him the whole pack and invite him to return the selected card into the pack and shuffle it with care.
- 7. Call back the second spectator who will receive the pack from the first spectator.
- 8. You can now ask the second spectator to slowly skim through the cards looking at their faces, and observing them with care. As soon as one card has caught his attention, if and when it occurs, he must draw the card out of the pack and lay it on the table face down.
- 9. As soon as the card is on the table, ask the first spectator to name the selected card, and to turnover the card on the table and...everything shall correspond exactly.

IMPORTANT

The suggestions and the presentation are an integral part of the realisation of this effect and I would even say that they represent the technique by which the effect is attained and is transformed from a mere gag into a type of magic happening that the spectators who are directly involved cannot understand.

Therefore, contrary to what I usually do on account of my conviction that each one must find his own personal presentation, I will describe those sentences that I say with the timing and the emphasis required to create the necessary atmosphere to give the spectator who is skimming through the cards the feeling that the vision of the Jumbo Index card is just a fruit of his imagination.

Therefore, turning towards the spectator who must look through the cards:

- 1) The success of the experiment depends essentially on your collaboration and your concentration. Thus, you have to relax and abandon any other thoughts.
- 2) Now, just imagine some large cards ... increasingly larger ones, enormous ones ... gigantic ones ... now start to slowly look at them ... look at the cards one by one ... concentrate on some enormous cards ... so large that they strike your imagination ... if you find one which corresponds to this impression of yours, draw it out of the pack... and keep on in this manner until the spectator finds the JUMBO INDEX card and pulls it out of the pack putting it on the table.

At this point, take the pack from the spectator, put it in your pocket while you ask the other spectator to name the previously selected card. Ask that the card on the table be turned over and, at this very moment, exchange this pack for the one with all the JUMBO INDEX cards which you have prepared in your pocket, and put this deck on the table. This serves the only purpose, should anyone decide to check the pack, of showing that there is no difference between the selected card and all the other ones.

FINAL REMARK

This is an exceptional effect which, therefore, might suitably conclude your programme. Be careful to carry it out with the proper strength and remember to use for the previous effects always the JUMBO INDEX cards.

(The above effect is from Playmagic No.2 and appears with the kind permission of Tony Binarelli).

Entitled PLAYMAGIC NO. ONE the lecture notes of Tony Binarelli are available from the author at the following address—Via Giuseppe Valmarana, 40 - 00139 Rome, Italy. Price 12 U.S. dollars which includes dispatch by air mail.

The higher than usual price asked for these notes is obviously due to the quality of their production. Printed on art paper with 49 excellent explanatory photographs which, together with the text covers some twenty pages the same size as this magazine.

All the tricks are with cards, the first one entitled Latin Lover Opener requires that a card be selected from a blue backed pack to which it is returned. A pretty lady is asked for a kiss (the Latin bit or audience participation) whereupon the selection vanishes and reappears face up in the pack. On being removed its back is seen to have changed from blue to red and on its face there is the imprint of a kiss.

Urania Transposition also requires a card to be chosen. After having it signed it is returned face up into the face down pack which is then spread face up which naturally brings the chosen card face down. The two Jokers are removed from the spread and placed into the empty case. The chosen card is caused to vanish from the pack and is found in the case with the two Jokers.

Wild Card 2000 is based on a Garcia effect which was an offshoot of Peter Kane's original conception. This variation permits eight like cards to change into eight similar cards of a different denomination. Finally all eight cards become Jokers. During these transformations both faces and backs of all the cards are shown.

In Technicolour the ace, two, three and four of clubs are shown face up only to turn face down one at a time. The backs then turn white and finally all four cards are shown to have different multi-coloured backs.

Italian Cut on Aces is based on Dai Vernon's Cutting the Aces. After the usual cutting the aces effect they change into the four kings and the aces being found back in the pack.

The New Dunbury Delusion is a variation of the Charlie Miller origination described in Expert Card Technique.

For novelty there is Telekinesis. One of two packs is given to a spectator to hold. Two cards are selected from the other. A needle and thread are caused to disappear. The pack held by the spectator is opened and the two cards corresponding to the ones chosen are found sewn together by the needle and thread. This effect is recommended as a closer.

Finally there is an explanation of the Perfect Faro shuffle. The one handed slip cut, the Biddle Count and Hamman's Spin Move. This latter gives the impression that you are showing either the faces or backs of four cards whereas only two are seen.

In his foreword the author writes 'I have omitted on purpose any mention of presentation, as maximum performance can only be obtained when this is expressed by one's own imagination and personality'. The methods given in the notes are practical and lucidly explained, leaving only the presentation to the purchaser.

EXTRA CLIMAX CARD TO WALLET

Mary Long

I was trying to come up with an easy method of card to wallet that allowed loading the wallet while the spectator still thought his selection was tabled. In experimenting I came up with a dodge that actually adds an extra climax to the trick.

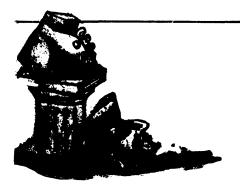

PREPARATION:

Magician signs the back in the centre of 51 playing cards in a deck. The one unsigned card is on top of the deck and the whole works is placed into the card case. You also must have a pen in your breast shirt pocket, and a wallet or some other object you wish the card to appear in, in your inside jacket pocket.

PRESENTATION:

Take the deck out of the case and spread face down on your mat. Don't spread too far as you don't want to expose the signatures. Scoop up the cards and with the faces toward the spectators to "kill" the backs overhand shuffle and bring the unsigned card to the bottom. Spread the cards face up and ask the spectator to touch a card. Obviously a free choice. When he does, push it towards him and take a pen from your pocket and ask him to sign the face. While he's doing that get in position for a Curry Turnover (see Close-Up Card Magic - Lorayne, Pg 215). The position allows your hand to bridge the deck effectively hiding the signature on the back. As you take the pen back remark that to make sure you'll sign the back and do the turnover move. Let the deck continue toward yourself and come to rest at table edge. As you write just relax the fingers and let the card drop. Nothing fancy is necessary. Unless you square up the cards at the finish of the turnover you are in perfect position to lap the card. The deck is placed aside face up and your left hand goes low to open the jacket and grab the lapped card as your right hand returns the pen to your shirt pocket. The left hand comes up with the card clipped and held behind the jacket and transfers it to your right hand and you load and remove your wallet. Lay the wallet on the table away from the deck of the tabled card. Pick up the pack and hold it face down with the right hand over the backs and the thumb on the left front corner. Riffle up the pack and ask the spectator to push in "his" card. Now you ask if the spectator can locate his card just by looking at the backs. When he says yes you explain a very curious thing has happened. You explain that previously you had signed all of the backs but one and he with a free choice had selected that one unsigned card. You fan or spread the cards very wide showing that all the backs are signed. You now bet him the contents of your wallet that he can't even find his card by looking at the faces. Flip the deck face up showing that his card has vanished and for your finish show that it is in the wallet.

One of the most frequently expressed beliefs in magical literature, is that the way to invent new tricks is to think of an effect then to find a way of accomplishing it. No doubt many tricks have been worked out in this way. The question is, is it the best way? Is this how the best ideas come into being? Frankly, I doubt it. Is it not better to start with a method and work forward to the effect?

Consider this. A magician who dreams of accomplishing a specific effect will, if he is of a sufficiently industrious nature, research out all the known magical principles that may or may not help that dream become a reality. If he is lucky he may even find one that is suitable but at the end of the day all he whil have is a rehash of an existing trick. A known effect in a slightly disguised form. A typical case history of such a concoction might run as follows:

Stage one. Magician decides that it would be a good idea to make an ashtray float in the air.

Stage two. Magician studies all known methods of making an inanimate object appear to float such as threads, zombie gimmicks, magnetic repulsion etc.

Stage three. Magician decides that the most practical method from his point of view is an adaptation of the zombie principle.

Stage four. Magician spends some months perfecting his idea.

Stage five. Magician can now feature the Zombie using an ashtray instead of a silver ball. In other words a straightforward rehash. An old effect, using an old method and simply substituting one object for another.

In the above instance nothing new has been added to magical knowledge. The effect of an object floating has not been enhanced. Could the layman care less whether the magician levitates an ashtray or a silver ball or for that matter a chamber pot?

The invention of magic is a creative process more akin to composing music or painting a picture. One starts with the germ of an idea and develops it along different lines seeing where it leads.

Over the years it has been my privilege to meet some of the most inventive people in magic, and sometimes, when I have been very lucky to actually witness the creative process at work. Nearly always the pattern has gone along the following lines:

Stage one. The inventor has noticed or stumbled across some small thing, which fires his imagination. It could be anything. A new move with cards or coins, or an object on sale in a department store, or the way the foam rises on a glass of stout. . .almost anything.

Stage two. The inventor plays around with his new-found toy, trying it this way and that and seeing what uses it can be put to. He also calls upon his memory for any other principles that could be used in conjunction with it. Gradually one or two possibilities begin to gell in his mind.

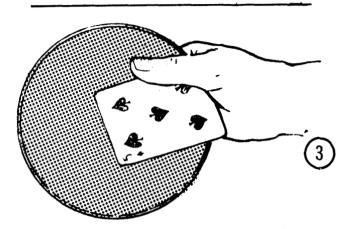

Stage three. At length through this maze of half thought out ideas several effects begin to take shape; nebulous at first but slowly consolidating as he goes on experimenting.

Stage four. At length a definite possible effect materialises. The inventor pursues it until it becomes clear and sharply defined.

Stage five. Having got an effect for his newly discovered method, the inventor concentrates all his energies on ironing out the handling and developing the presentation until he has a brand new piece of magic.

Magic invented in this way is always fresh. Cynics could argue that the inventor may end up with a trick that he does not want. But on the other hand does anybody know what they want until they have got it?

PUT AND TAKE

Palm a card in the right hand in the normal way and clip it between the first and second fingers on one long side and the third and fourth fingers on the other long side as shown in (1). This is similar to the back and front palm when displaying the back of the hand to the audience.

By curving the fingers slightly inwards it will be found possible to release their grip and thumb palm the card as shown in (2). The card can be transposed back and forth between these two positions quite naturally and, of course secretly with ease. So. . . what to do with it.

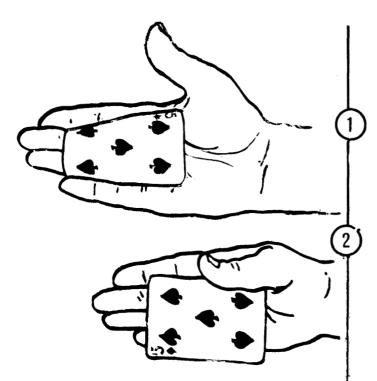

Find yourself a pub — one that has beer coasters on the tables. Have a card chosen, replaced and control it to the top. Bring it into the thumb palm position as described above.

You now reach for the mat, which should be on your right and in the action of picking it up slide the thumb palmed card under it. This is a perfectly natural movement providing the mat is positioned correctly so that the diagonally opposite corner of the card held in the thumb crotch hits the table an inch or so before reaching the mat. Turn the mat over to disclose the selection.

Try this for a change. Instead of disclosing the selection to everyone keep the thumb palmed card against the mat and show it to one nearby spectator and ask him "What is the name of the card on the mat?" He will name the card he sees. See (3).

Again — this time a kicker for those who include the wellknown card under the glass.

After the usual effect replace your glass on a beer mat which should be suitably positioned on your right. Have another card selected and steal it as described above and bring it into the thumb palm as in (2). During these actions suggest by your patter that the card will again appear under the glass. All eyes will be on the glass in anticipation of the effect being repeated and as you murmer something about 'failure' place the pack down to free the left hand which picks up the glass. As you look at the glass the right hand goes for the mat, loads the card under it, and turns it over to reveal the selection.

Mentalwise — sight the top card, say the 8S, and false shuffle retaining the top card in position. Hand the pack to a spectator with the request that he cuts off any number of small packets onto the table. Remember which pile has the 8S on top.

Write the following on a piece of paper 'The eight of spades will now disappear'. Fold the paper and let someone hold it.

Invite the spectator to hand you the packets one at a time, and when you receive the one with the 8S on top palm it in the right hand and load it under the final remaining packet as you turn it face up. Ask that this card be remembered and turn the packet face downwards and as you do so you steal the force card. This is the TAKE part of the move and is done by simply keeping the card in the right hand, held in the thumb palm as the hand r.10ves away from the packet on the table. As the hand comes away the card is covered by the fingers and moved into the holding position of the regular palm.

The impression is that the packet is picked up, the bottom card (8S) is shown, and the packet just put down again; it is mainly timing — 'Put and Take'. As you complete the move ask that the card shown be remembered and that the packet of cards be cut and mixed.

With the packet still face down false count the cards as one more than it really contains, and hand it to a spectator.

Call attention to the spectator holding the paper and have him read it out aloud. The spectator with the packet of cards is invited to count them — one is missing — the eight of spades.

The uses to which this technique can be put are numerous — here is one more. Palm off a known card and spread the pack from left to right across the table and have a spectator part the spread somewhere in the centre. (4). The right hand with card thumbpalmed goes in between the spread halves and loads its palmed card beneath the right hand portion as it roughly squares them. A spectator is invited to note the bottom card (the force) which he takes to be the one at which he divided the pack.

Other uses will suggest themselves if the move is practised with the cards in hand.

Now, where were we? I remember. I'd just got back from Italy. Well I had barely been back 24 hours when I was winging my way to Canada, land of maple leaves and Micky Hades — Calgary was in fact my destination.

The Page boy speaks....

This was my first visit to Klondike Country and this is not a bad description of how I found it. The temperature was 21° below zero and that's cold. It reminded me of all those old Hollywood films, with Sterling Haydn yelling 'Mush' and Andy Devine replying 'We've got to get there before the pass closes'. And Gabby Hayes chipping in with 'Which one, Charlier or Hermann?' Micky Hades drove Ricky Jay and myself on his sledge out to see his studio. If there's a book you want and can't find it try Micky. He has an amazing selection.

I was there to tape some TV appearances for a guy called Dale Harney. He hosts a television show which has been running for three years. He has guest magicians on probably every show and has a clever method of putting them over. He brings on a whole bunch of magic acts, puts them up in the same hotel and tapes them all in a period of around 10 days. It's a two-day job. First day you rehearse, the second day they tape you, and they do three acts a day, all in the same stage setting. So, after the 10 days he has all his guest shots taped for the whole series before a studio audience. He tapes his own contribution at a later date and the editor then cuts all the pieces and puts them together as he thinks fit and — hey presto — you have a magic series in the can. It's real magic.

Most of the acts are either Canadian or from the US and it isn't often they have any performers from this end of the world. By the good auspices of John Shirley in Chicago who was the programme coordinater, plus the heavy pressure of Mike Caldwell my Los Angeles press agent, Dale Harney decided to gamble on me, sight unseen. It worked.

To help minimise the expenses I took an eight-day ticket which meant I stayed in the same hotel for eight days with magicians coming and going every day. It was like being resident host at a continuous magic convention. They were coming and going from everywhere. Mike Caldwell stayed four days just to keep me company. Ricky Jay stayed over a couple of days just to keep me company. There was a girl in the hotel who kept everybody company (it's a joke wives).

Glen Heywood flew in from San Francisco, Reco from Las Vegas, Ricky Dunn following him all the way trying not to burn his fingers in Reco's back pocket. Johnny Thompson's doves flew in from Los Angeles, Johnny rode his bowling ball all the way and never scored once. How can you win with just one ball?

There were others. Danny Orleans from Chicago with Geoff somebody (sorry Geoff I can neither spell nor pronounce your surname, why don't you change it to Patrick Page, it's getting popular).

I must have seen every magic trick in the catalogue, any catalogue, all dressed up in different styles. They had a Scottish act, a Mexican manipulator, a Polish prestidigitator, a childrens' entertainer, an ageing hippy, a class Vegas act, a modest magic dealer, a four-eyed ventriloquist and a fat pick-pocket.

Eat your heart out Ripley. In just one week I saw them all. It was a great week. Thank you John and Dale.

The Book of John

It is a very rare event when a working professional close-up magician reveals one of his cherished routines and it is almost unheard of for such a person to reveal all of the routines he uses to make a living. In THE BOOK OF JOHN, John Mendoza has done just that. As a successful working professional, Mr. Mendoza can and does perform close-up magic for a living.

THE BOOK OF JOHN is not a pretty book for the collector, but rather a book for those who are interested in commercial close-up magic with maximum audience appeal — magic which will send the layman away baffled and entertained...and will also fool all hell out of the magicians having a chance to watch it.

The routines explained in this book are not for the beginner. They do require sleight of hand ability ranging from basic to the very difficult, but they certainly are worth mastering.

The card magic section contains such gems as: Topsy-Turvy Aces, a truly Impossible Poker Demonstration, Uneral-Geniversal Card, Routined Poker Mental, Simple Collectors, Vise-Versa (a very effective card transposition), a handling of Derek Dingle's Open Sesame, Twisting the Aces Again, a culling system, two effects with the D'Amico Spread, All Gone, an entertaining Monte routine with a surprise climax, an elevator effect, a handling for the Jennings version of the Le Paul Card In Wallet, a section containing the complete text of the Automatic Deck, and a very effective version of the Ralph Hull Torn and Restored Card which was formerly sold privately for $5.00.

The coin section contains some exciting routines, each with a surprise climax. The first routine starts as a copper and silver sequence with a change to four silver dollars. Then into a pretty hand-to-hand transposition, after which more coins are produced to segue into a Coins Through the Table which climaxes with the production of a drill bit over a foot long and weighing about eight pounds! The second superb routine features a rapid production of silver dollars which grow larger and larger as the routine progresses, culminating in the production of a silver dollar about a foot in diameter. Two versions of Spellbound are detailed: One performed sitting and the other standing. The seated version features the change of a coin with the stroke of one finger while the stand-up version includes the production of a giant coin which can be performed surrounded. A version of Matrix with critical patter and handling details is explained. Another coin assembly with ungaffed coins, each a different denomination, is included. There are professional handlings of marketed effects such as the Copper/Silver/Brass Transposition, Interlude, Coin Casket, and much more.

But this is not all. Detailed are routines for the Don Alan Lump of Coal, the Chop Cup, a great bowl routine, a really funny ending for a bills and wallet routine with the Cups and Balls which takes only seconds to do and the loads are indetectable!

As a bonus section there is a very effective no-gimmick flash dove production routine and to top it all off, the Three Ring Routine which is guaranteed to produce at least three resounding ovations from the audience during its performance.

Physically, the book is 8½ by 11 inch size with 134 plus typeset pages (only the pages with text for effects are numbered), and spiral bound so that you can study the routines. The book is illustrated with photographs and line drawings, but, to put it quite bluntly, the printing and production are not of the highest quality, though the material certainly is.

If you are already performing close up magic, you'll want this book. If you are thinking about performing practical close up magic, you need this book. Don't pass it by — to have material laid out for you in this fashion by a working pro is invaluable. Learn from John Mendoza's experience.

FOR NUDISTS ONLY

Bob Hamilton

Here is a new presentation for your Nudist pack.

PREPARATION

Set up the pack so that a card face shows at the top and a back shows at the bottom, or put another way, if the pack is in an all blank condition, move one card from the face to the back.

Take a normal card from another pack having the same back design and colour as your Nudist pack, and mark it on the back with a bold cross using a black felt tip marker. Assume this card is the King of Hearts.

With the card face down put an upward crimp in the right inner corner.

Insert this card face down BETWEEN a pair of roughed cards at about the middle of the face down pack. The crimped corner should be at the inner right corner and the 'working end' of the pack at the outer end. Put the pack into the case with the 'working end' at the flap end. You are now ready to perform.

PRESENTATION PHASE ONE

"People often ask me 'what is the difference between a mentalist, a gambler, and a magician?'. Sometimes I tell them, but it's more interesting if I show you."

During this opening spiel remove the cards from the case and hold them in the left hand face down with the working end at the outer end. Casually cut the cards a few times showing the backs—if you cut by picking up a packet with the right second finger at the right outer end and thumb at the inner end you will always cut to a back. Avoid cutting to the marked card. At the conclusion of the cutting sequence make sure that the marked card is roughly in the middle of the pack.

Saying "We'll use these cards" with the pack in the left hand obtain a break below the crimped card with the left pinky and continue "a mentalist would ask you to think of a card, so please stop me as I riffle through the pack." With the right second finger riffle the cards at the right outer corner, and when the spectator says "Stop" lift all cards above the break (standard riffle force) and show the face of the bottom card of the packet in the right hand which will be the King of Hearts. Immediately drop the packet onto those in the left hand and square up the pack.

"Sir, the card you are now thinking of is locked away in your mind. Using the powers of ESP and interpreting your answers to three key questions the mentalist would be able to read your mind. Let's try. Please answer 'Yes' or 'No' to these questions. First, do you like Tandoori milk shakes? No. That tells me your card was a RED one. Second, do you eat yoghurt when you sing in the bath? Yes. That means the card was a HEART. Thirdly, do you believe that I can read your mind? No. That tells me that you are a sceptic, and also that your card was a KING. Therefore the card you are thinking of is the King of Hearts. Correct? Thank you." Use any questions that will cause some amusement — the more ridiculous the better.

PHASE TWO

"O.K. it's heavy going being a mentalist—a gambler would find an easier way. Like all gamblers he would use marked cards. Look, I will show you the faces of the cards and see if you can spot the secret markings." Transfer the pack into the right hand holding it with the thumb on the 'working end' faces towards the spectators. Show faces of the cards by allowing the cards to riffle off from under the right thumb onto the palm up left hand which is positioned to catch them as they fall. This is standard Nudist pack practice for showing the faces of the cards.

"Did you see the secret markings? No—that's good—there are no marks on the faces—gamblers always mark the backs of the cards." Square up the cards and again take them in the right hand, but this time with the backs towards the spectators. "Watch for the mark." Riffle off as before. "Did you see the mark? You did—good. I'll find that card." Square up the cards and riffle again to show the backs as before, but this time slowly, stopping with the marked card at the front of the packet remaining in the right hand. "Here it is—marked with a black cross." Square up the cards that have fallen into the left hand by closing it. The left hand now removes the marked card from the front of the packet in the right hand and puts it face down onto the table without exposing its face to the audience. This is quite easy to do if the left hand squeezes the cards it holds well into the thumb crotch enabling the second finger to be extended to pull the marked card partially off the packet. The left thumb can then move under it on to the face side and the card held between the second finger and thumb can be removed and placed onto the table with ease. Riffle off the remaining cards from the right hand onto those on the left as you say "It seems to be the only marked card in the pack."

Square up the cards now in the left hand. "Wouldn't it be amazing if the only marked card in the pack was the very same card you freely thought of a moment ago? Well look—it is." Turn the tabled card over to show the King of Hearts.

The above sequence has registered the fact that the cards in use have normal backs and faces without it having been necessary to say so. Both faces and backs have been shown twice which makes the following and final sequence seem like real magic.

PHASE THREE

"I know what you are thinking — how can a magician possibly follow that. Well, I agree it would be difficult, but I'll try. What I will do is to make all the cards disappear with the exception of the King of Hearts — watch."

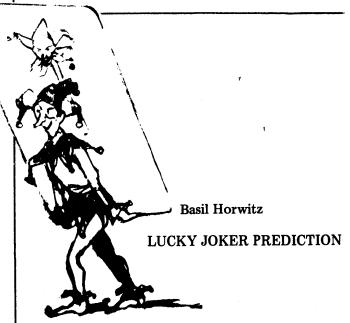

Hold the pack in the left hand positioned as for the left thumb count, with the 'working end' away from you. With the left thumb near the outer left corner riffle down the cards until you reach about half way and aim to stop your riffle between two blanks. Maintain a break at this point — a very small one to avoid exposing the blanks. It also helps in this respect if the pack is held parallel to the spectators. Pick up the marked King of Hearts and push it into the break face downwards and square it up with the rest of the pack using the right fingers.

"Right — here they go." Still holding the pack in the left hand — this time in position for the oldest colour change of them all. With the face card of the pack facing the spectators the right hand covers the pack with its fingers and its thumb going to the rear of the pack. The left index finger pushes the rear card inwards into the right thumb crotch and right hand moves back stealing the card in the process. The right thumb assists by pressing the card in the right palm. The right fingers again covers the face card then move away leaving the palmed card on the face of the pack producing the colour change.

Having explained something everyone knows, we stop at the point where the right hand has stolen the rear card and is covering the pack. Instead of moving away empty to reveal the change the right hand palms the whole pack and the left hand turns with its back towards the spectators. It should appear that the left hand retained the cards as it rotated, but the spectators will notice that your right hand is holding 'something'.

"Look — they've all gone." Turn the left hand palm outwards and wriggle the fingers. You then notice 'something' in your right hand. "No — here they are, but they have all gone." Fan out the cards to show all blank as you say "except one". The marked card will stand out clearly among the blanks. Pull it half way out of the fan. "See — it has the mark on the back." Turn the left hand to show all blanks, "And the face is the King of Hearts." Remove the card and toss it to spectator — "Keep it as a souvenir."

As you close up the fan and put the cards back in the case remark "The trouble with being a magician is — it costs a fortune in cards."

You will require a pack of cards which contains two jokers — something to write on, say a business card — and a pen.

As you casually shuffle the pack request a spectator to think of any card that comes into his mind and commit it to memory.

Run through the pack and remove one card saying "I believe this to be the card which you have in mind." The card you remove is one of the jokers which you slip into the card case without letting its face be seen.

You now ask the spectator to give you his birth sign and the name of the card he has on his mind. Run through the pack as you say "I will find your lucky card which is determined by your birth sign." Take out the other joker with the thought-of card the spectator has just named behind it squared up as one card. It will be necessary to bring them together as you move the cards around apparently searching for his lucky card.

Put the two cards which are squared and held as one on the face of the pack which is then placed face downwards onto the table.

Take your business card and say "I will write the name of your astrological lucky card on this business card. You write 'your lucky card is the joker' and slip the card under the card case.

Pick up the pack and false shuffle retaining the joker and thought-of card in position at the bottom of the pack. Force the joker by asking the spectator to say 'Stop' as you Hindu Shuffle. Show the joker which is at the face of the cards in the right hand. Put this portion below those in the left hand and appear to take the joker and put it into the card case. Actually you perform the Glide and it is the thought-of card which goes into the case to join the other joker placed there previously.

You now ask the spectator the name of his lucky card (you made it obvious that you did not see its face when forcing it). Pick up the card case and invite spectator to read what is written on the business card. When he does so, shake out the two cards onto the table taking care that they fall face down. Slowly push the joker towards him with the index finger asking him to look at it. So far so good and you are ready to produce the climax.

You now ask for the name of the card he is thinking of (he will have forgotten that he named it earlier). Again with the index finger push the remaining card towards him — this time even more slowly than before. Remove your finger and look directly at the spectator. He may pick it up without being asked to do so. If he does not he will eventually look at you and when this happens indicate that he is to do so — without speaking if possible.

This manner of approaching the climax creates suspense and is considerably more effective than turning the card over immediately he names the one he is thinking of — which is of course the one he eventually turns over.

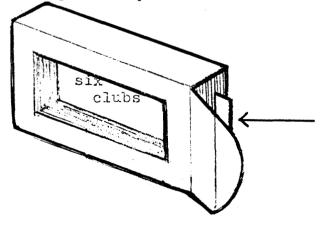

SPECTATOR UNEXPLAINED (After Vernon)

Since Vernon released his "Trick That Cannot be Explained" from "More Inner Secrets of Card Magic", I have always performed this impromptu miracle both for magicians and laymen. . the item is always well received and a true Vernon miracle. Yet despite this I do not see many people including card men working this card effect. The reason I believe is that the brain needs to react very fast and timing is the all important factor.

The way around this drawback is at the stage where the pack is spread across the table to show all the cards are different (really to spot the predicted card and note its position from the top or bottom of the pack) instead of spreading the pack across the table in one long row as laid down by Vernon. It is much simpler and within anyone's scope to spread the pack IN TWO ROWS FROM LEFT TO RIGHT.

The advantages of this will be obvious to anyone when trying out the routine. . in performance the pack is cut into two equal halves (approx.) and the first half is spread across the table as you show the spectator that all the cards are different. . Now is the predicted card is in this half. . its position is immediately located much faster as there are only half the number of cards for the magician to count. Also one can see immediately if the required card is not in this half of the pack. . and can then continue almost without a pause to spread out the second half of the pack below the first and nearer to the performer. Because the performer knows the predicted card WILL BE in this second spread he can concentrate completely on counting the cards position from the end of the row. This spreading and fast counting is the vital part of the trick.

Now having the necessary knowledge for example let us assume the card is in the tenth position from the left side of the bottom row... both packets are assembled with the BOTTOM PACKET UNDER THE TOP ROW PACKET. ALL CARDS ARE FACE UPWARDS WHEN ASSEMBLED AFTER WHICH BOTH PACKETS ARE NOW ONE AND THE COMPLETE PACK IS TURNED FACE DOWN. Thus the predicted card is in Tenth position from the top of the face down pack. . similarly the card can be positioned in the tenth place from the bottom of the face down pack and armed with this knowledge the performer can bring the effect to a logical conclusion. The foregoing will be obvious to those prepared to try out the Vernon routine using this two row spread as nothing is lost and everything to be gained on the performer's side.

I have explained the above to a number of cardmen and also demonstrated the simplicity of working — the results have been pleasing.

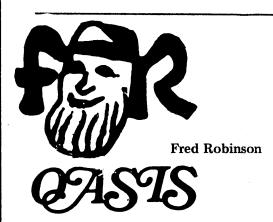

In the Spectator version. . the prediction is made by the spectator and the routine evolves without the magician having knowledge of the predicted card until this is disclosed by the spectator at the end.

In order to bring about this variation we use a gimmicked card case which is apparently another pack of cards not being used by the performer at this time. I believe the principle is the brainchild of Al Koran. The case is cut away at the rear and also the pack of cards with the exception of about the top Ten cards each have their middles removed before being replaced in the faked card case.

This faked case method is widely known... the idea being that when the spectator makes his prediction this is written on the blank side of a business card and the magician then removes the faked case from his pocket, placing the case down onto the table with the open side next to the table. . the magician opens the case flap and allows the spectator to place his prediction card in the centre of the pack of cards. (See sketch). Then the magician merely tilts up the pack to show the remainder of the audience and obtains the name of the predicted card reading through the opening in the back of the card case. The case is then left on the table so that the spectators can see the prediction which should protrude from the case about half an inch. . for ease of removal at the end.

The routine as outlined earlier is now performed using the two row spread and as the performer in reality knows the name of the predicted card he is thus able to control the card as in the normal routine. Once the card from the pack has been arrived at as in the normal routine. . spectator is allowed to remove the business card from the faked pack on the table. . all attention is drawn to the prediction as performer replaces pack into his side pocket. The prediction is read out to match the card. the difference being the prediction was made without apparent influence by the performer.

To begin with — a couple of items of news which are now history. First, the winner of the IBM (British Ring) close-up competition last September was Ken Hawes. In this issue Ken has contributed an article on Close-Upping which contains a wealth of advice to aspirants to the field of commercial close-up magic. This article together with the one on the same subject by Tommy Wonder who also works close-up professionally (see September issue) should put beginners on the right path and save them from what could be embarassing situations due to lack of experience.

More recently — it is now the middle of March — the Magic Circle 'Close-up Competition' was won by Jim Adams with Walter B. Graham second and Johnny Johnston third. The first two performed standing with the last mentioned being seated. Whether or not there is some advantage in standing when performing for these events is a moot point, but it does seem that stand-up performers are mostly the winners in these events, so if anyone is competition-orientated it may be a point worthy of consideration when building their programme for such events. It is certainly an advantage in one respect — the response from the audience will be greater when they all can see what the performer is doing and that is not always the case when all the action is on his table top. However objective the judges may be in allocating marks for originality, technique, artistry etc they will be influenced by the applause a performer receives. This can be extremely important in influencing the decision of the judges whe, as almost without exception, there is no provision made for specifically allotting marks for audience appreciation.

For several months now Len Neil has been performing at Shakespeare's Tavern and Playhouse. This engagement resulted in his being booked on a commercial promotion project covering the larger towns and cities of Canada. This tour led to further engagements of a similar nature on the continent of Europe and one in Hollywood. This was surprising news to me as he had never revealed during our many meetings that magic was more than just a hobby — he did the occasional magical society show and also a close-up spot on a couple of Pabular evenings at the Magic Circle. He was equally surprised by some comments which appeared in this column regarding performing for non-magicians and was concerned that the observations made would upset some of what he called 'purists'.

During the conversation Len made it quite clear that the requirements of the professional performer at Shakespeare's Tavern differed radically from what is seen at magic clubs. Finesse is completely out of the question and tricks requiring that anything at all to be placed on the table were completely out of the question. He summed up by saying that the magical content of the performance however well performed was insufficient to ensure success. To succeed the performer had to sell himself. to sell entertainment and if promoting a commodity sell that also. This assessment of what qualities are essential equipment for those who perform in the above and similar establishments will no doubt cause pains of anguish to those who regard magic as an art form. No such pains are suffered by the practising performer because his work fails to reach some hypothetical artistic heights. He is concerned with making his offering as entertaining as possible to his audience — that is what he is being paid to do. He may, or may not attempt to inject some artistry into his performance, but to impose his own conceptions of what he considers the art of magic to be, at the expense of the entertainment value of his act would be a retrograde step, detrimental to his personal success as a professional entertainer - which is what a magician is, or should be.

The Blackpool Magic Society's 28th Annual One-day Convention was as usual a great success. Unfortunately I was unable to make it, but thanks to Walt Lees who stepped in at the last moment and looked after our readers interests (between beers) at the Pabular stand.

Being unable to attend was especially disappointing as I missed the previous evening's events — the Fiesta of Magic. This was part of the Society's contribution to the Ken Brooke Testimonial Fund they launched as a token of their appreciation of Ken's service to the magical world and his twenty years connection with the Blackpool Convention, both as a dealer and performer. To survive for twenty years as a dealer in magic is a fairly rare accomplishment — to retire with so many friends and wellwishers is positively unique.

Last January Ken invited me to his home to spend a few hours with Fred Kaps. Much reminiscing and just one trick — Fred turned a two dollar bill into two single dollar bills which then changed into coins of that value. It was great to see him in good form and looking so well after being seriously ill. Within weeks the news came that he was back in hospital and we hope and trust that it will not be for long.

Sadly this has prevented Fred from attending a special show arranged by Joe Stevens in which he was to have been honoured and presented by Dai Vernon and Slydini — a great disappointment to all concerned.

The show must go on. To help towards this end Philippe Fiahlo and Bob Read will be travelling out to Las Vegas Desert, the former with some five hours of films and the latter with a couple of new gags. Incidentally the next issue will be the first of many to include a copy of a print from Bob's collection.

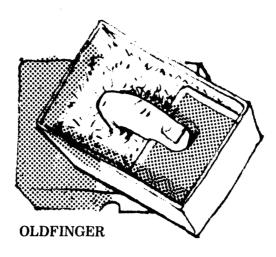

All for now.

Put your thumb tip on and bend your thumb into the hand curling the fingers round it gripping it tightly as shown in sketch. Pressure the thumb out of the tip to displace the air which will cause a loud 'plop'.

To induce a smile in children of all ages — point your first finger and aim it at your victim. At the sound of the 'plop' they may duck, but will most certainly shy giving you time to re-insert the thumb, and show the hand empty if you are brave enough.

Try putting your finger in a bottle and pulling it out again. Better still — find a dyke with a hole in it — remember it is the effect that counts.

Arthur Setterington

This is an item with which I have had some fun. not to mention shrieks from the ladies. It involves a gag which has been on the go for years, but is none the worse for that.

EFFECT

A lady chooses a playing card, looks at it, then replaces it in the pack. The pack is mixed by an onlooker, and the performer then tries to produce the chosen card. He fails miserably, three times.

He has an idea, and from his pocket he removes a cardboard box. Before opening it, he asks the lady to name her card. Opening the box he reveals a layer of cotton wool, exposing a finger which is laid on a face down playing card.

He explains that the finger once belonged. to a gambler who had his fingers cut off for cheating, and the finger now rests on one of the cards which was part of the hand with which he cheated. The lady is asked to remove the card. As she does so (usually very gingerly), the finger suddenly raises itself to a vertical position.

After the excitement has died down, the performer turns over the card and shows it to be the one chosen by the lady.

The mummified finger joke, in which the performer's finger goes through a hole in the bottom of the box is the basis of the effect. The box I use is just over three and a half inches wide, five inches long, and one inch deep. A hole is cut in the bottom of the box, and a layer of cotton wool is laid in the box. A hole is made to allow entry of the finger, and the duplicate of the card to be forced is laid face down at one end of the box, so that the tip of the finger will rest on the card. (See sketch?

Ken Hawes

I've been performing close-up magic commercially for some years now, and I've worked in a variety of venues, from restaurants and private house parties to clubs and pubs, and basically doing the same eight minutes per table at every show.

I didn't sit down and actually work an act out, it just evolved over the years; in fact, when I first started, I used to busk with all sorts of tricks and material and in time, by trial and error, the act just came together naturally.

Experience has taught me several things; the most important thing is to be extremely versatile, and to be able to perform at a high standard whatever the conditions. The act must be one that can be done standing up or sitting down. It's not always possible to stand up no more than it's always possible to sit down. I've done quite a lot of entertaining round the tables of dance floors and disco's, and there are people who would prefer to watch what's going on on the dance floor rather than have their view blocked by a conjurer standing up doing tricks. So here's a situation where you can't really stand. Personally, I would prefer to sit down with my audience at their table and simply become one of them, it's much nicer, more intimate and disposes of any barriers between audience and performer that often occur. After all, close-up entertaining is a friendly, fun business.

The act should never rely on gags and lines. Most places I work these days seem to feature a pop group or a disco, the close-up magician being an added attraction. Pop groups are loud and so are disco's and invariably patter becomes impossible, so the choice of material is important in this situation. The tricks must be visual, and audience participation is important as well. The act must be as entertaining performed without saying a word, as it is with gags and lines, and the performer must 'sell' himself really strong and look at his audience all the time.

The act should be one that can be shortened without appearing to be chopped. If, after the first trick, you find yourself dying then there's no point in prolonging the agony and struggling through the complete thing, start strong and finish stronger. The material should also be angle proof, as very often the performer will find himself surrounded, and it's not really on to ask your audience to move, in fact it's usually impossible for them to move anyway.

If a performer is working in a 'going round the tables' situation, it's advisable to have material that can be reset with the minimum of trouble.

The biggest problem is 'getting on' or working at a table cold. The way to overcome this problem is for the performer to make sure that the situation doesn't arise. The audience at the restaurant or wherever must be aware that there will be a magician entertaining at their table. This can be done in several way, an 'action' photograph in the foyer, or perhaps local press coverage. A good idea is to have table tents printed with the performers name on one side and all other relevant information on the other.

Now it's important for the performer to place the table tent on each table himself, when the people are already seated. This allows the audience to meet him and gives the performer the opportunity to sell himself and what he does and also, of course, the chance to weigh up the potential 'good' tables. And don't forget that you're not obliged to work every table and if you come across an obvious awkward group of people, you merely say (politely) that of course magic isn't everyone's cup of tea and that they're under no obligation to invite an entertainer to their table.

Another good point is to become friendly with the head waiter and his staff. You must be Mr Nice Guy and must not be at all arrogant. The performer should explain to the Head Waiter exactly what he does and stress that under no circumstances will he hinder him or his staff. Experience has taught me that the majority of Head Waiters take their job very seriously indeed, so if the performer keeps on his good side it will certainly be to his advantage.

Sometimes the performer will find himself in the awkward situation of approaching a table, and then realising that he's not really wanted. There are two ways to get over this problem. Firstly to apologise and simply walk away and secondly to actually attempt working. What I do is to state that I realise they're not really interested, but that I'll show them one quick trick and if they like it I'll do some more and if they don't I'll go away. Now while they're thinking about this, I'm already halfway through the trick, and then usually there's no problem once they see it's harmless entertainment and there's no embarrassment involved. In a lot of cases it's a 'fear of the unknown' that tends to make them a bit wary. And don't forget most of the lay public don't even know that close-up entertainment even exists, but if the people really don't want to know, NEVER push it, because one of the attractions of close-up magic (as far as the customers are concerned) is the fact that they don't have to watch it if they don't want to. It is a voluntary service.

Private house parties are a good venue for close-up performers, such as house-warming parties and around Christmas time employers inviting employees up to the house for 'drinkies'. Yet again, the performer can't be choosy about conditions. I've found that working on the floor is as good a place as any. It's almost impossible to find a table that hasn't got food or drink on it, so very often the floor is the only place to work. But you can do 'stand up' close-up magic if there are groups of people standing chatting, etc.

It's advisable to get to the house fairly early to get the 'lie of the land', and also to get to know the guests before the party gets hot. Once the records come on and the lights go out then you might as well go home. Most of the parties that I go to the host uses me as an ice-breaker; it's important to be able to converse with people and it's not a bad idea to do some homework and find out who and what type of people the guests will be. But there's usually no problem here as invariably the guests will be more interested in the performer and his magic than anything else. In my experience, most people ask the same questions:

How long have you been doing magic? How did you start?

Are you a member of the Magic Circle? Do you have to invent a trick to become a member?

Can Tommy Cooper really do magic? Once you know the stock questions, you can prepare the stock answers which I'll leave to your individual imaginations.

I've also found that unlike restaurants and other kinds of table venues, it's easier to successfully perform clever-clever material or magicians magic at private house parties; I suppose it's because the guests, circumstances and atmosphere are right for it to work, but generally when performing for a lay audience, the emphasis must be on entertainment.

Up to now I haven't mentioned material or specific tricks. Now obviously this is for each individual to make his own choice. Personally, I would never do a card trick, but I've seen very good close-up entertainers use nothing else. As long as the plot is simple, the effect strong, and the presentation entertaining then it's not really important what objects are used. Like any other facet of show business, the personality of the performer is all important, more so if you're working as close to your audience. To really make it work, you must give something of yourself to the audience and they will respond by giving something of themselves in return—this is what rapport is. And this is why I do it.

PSYCHIA-TWIST

Phil Goldstein

Yet another version of the "twisting" effect. This one features an unexpected climax. Five cards are required: a joker and four kings. The joker and the king of hearts have blue backs. Each of the other kings has a different coloured back. The more dissimilar the colours and patterns of these backs, the stronger the finish will be.

At the start of the routine, the order of the packet is, from the face: KC, KD, KS, KH, joker.

- 1. Hold the packet face up with the right hand from above, fingers at the outer edge, thumb at the inner edge. Display the cards as being four blue-backed kings, via a Flushtration Count. (Briefly: the right hand rotates palm up, displaying a blue back. Rotate the right hand palm down. The left thumb now draws away the top card of the packet (KC). Repeat these actions twice more. You now hold two cards, squared as one, in the right hand (apparently just the KH). Rotate the right hand to display the back of the card(s), and then place the right hand card(s) below the left hand stock.
- 2. Flip the packet face down, holding the cards squared in the left hand. Ask the spectators if they know which king is the most difficult to work with. No matter what their answer, inform them that it is the king of hearts who causes trouble. The left hand turns palm down, and the right hand apparently removes the lowermost card of the now face up packet. In fact, the left fingers glide back the lowermost card (joker) and the right hand removes the next card (KH).
- 3. The left hand draws the glided card back

- square with the packet, but the left little finger obtains a break in between that card and the three kings. Rotate the left hand palm up once again, bringing the packet to a face down position. These actions take but a fraction of a second. Your attention is devoted to the KH. Explain that the reason the KH causes so much trouble is that he's crazy. Point out that he is, after all, sticking a sword into his head right at this very moment sort of a do-it-yourself lobotomy.
- 4. Drop the KH face down onto the packet. State that the other three kings are far easier to work with, and offer to demonstrate this. As this is said, perform a Half-Pass on the three cards below the left little finger break. The order of the packet is now, from the top: KH, joker, face up kings of S, D, C.
- 5. To demonstrate the cooperative nature of the KC, twist the packet. Now, Elmsley Count. The KC will appear face up among three blue backs.
- 6. To cause the KS to appear face up, twist the packet. The cards are now counted in a procedure which looks the same as the preceding count: simply draw off the cards one by one, reversing their order. The last two cards are kept squared as one, and placed on top of all. The order of the packet is now, from the top: face up KC, face up KD, face down joker, face up KS, face down KH.
- 7. To cause the KD to appear face up, twist the packet. Count the cards with the same procedure as in step 6. Square the backet.
- 8. Explain that the KH refuses to turn face up. Ascanio Spread, displaying three face up kings and a face down card. (This face down card is actually a squared block of two). The right hand strips out this squared pair, holding the card(s) face down. Table the left hand's trio of face up kings.
- 9. Ask the spectators if they know why the KH won't turn face up. They will tell you it's because he's crazy. Agree, commenting, "Yes, he's too busy joking around." Turn over the squared pair (keeping the cards held as one), showing that the KH has turned into the joker.
- 10. Continue, "The other kings are more considerate they save their fooling around until after the trick is over..." Turn over the tabled kings, showing that each now has a different back.

Note that you've only to get rid of the KH to be in a situation where the cards may be left with the spectators. Either before or after turning over the tabled kings (or, for that matter, during that action), the KH can be palmed away or lapped.

THE TAMARIZ AMBITIOUS DOUBLE

Described by Fred Robinson

When the following effect was shown to me during my last meeting with Juan Tamariz I tentatively suggested it would be a good item for Pabular. He was rather hesitant on the grounds that it was rather short and gave the impression that he did not regard it too highly as a trick which would have general appeal to our readers. I think he was wrong, so here goes.

You will require a pack of cards and a minimum of two spectators. Give the pack to spectator 'A', which he shuffles, and ask him to remove any card and retain it, and afterwards give the pack to spectator 'B'. He is also requested to take a card, note its value, and then place it face downwards on top of the pack which he then hands back to spectator 'A'. The latter, after noting his card is asked to put it face down on top of the pack.

Take back the pack and holding in the left hand raise the inner ends of the top two cards (the selections) with the right thumb in readiness for the Tilt move, (see 1) noting how the fingers of the left hand mask the gap on the right hand side and the thumband that part of the hand just below it masks it on the left side.

Ask spectator 'A' if he remembers the name of his card, and as he names it pull it outwards with the right hand, thumb on the back of the card as in (2). Turn it face up by turning it end for end and put it square on top of the other selection. Congratulate him on his good memory as you turn the card face down, turning it end for end in the same way as you turned it face up, and apparently push it into the centre of the pack. Actually you push it below the top card sliding it along the top card of the pack proper creating the illusion that it goes somewhere into the middle of the pack. It is of the utmost importance that the left hand remains stationary throughout the above actions. On no account should it appear to the spectators that you are in any way trying to 'prove' that the card goes into the middle of the pack. Do this casually as you look directly at the spectator - glancing down only momentarily as you push the card into the centre? of the pack.

You now turn to spectator 'B' and as you ask the name of his card life the second card ('A's selection) with the right thumb up to the top card. The cards are again in the position shown in (1).

Show the face of the top card to 'B' for his confirmation and push it into the middle? of the pack repeating the moves used for 'A's card.

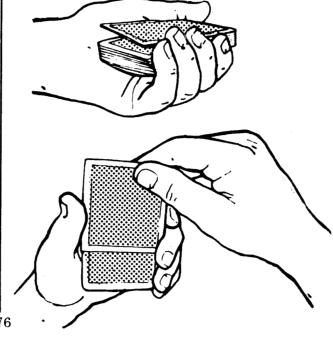

After a suitable magical gesture show that both cards have returned to the top of the pack.

When taking details of this effect there was no third person present, which prevented me from having the opportunity of being a spectator and is possibly the reason why the finer points of the presentation leading up to the climax now escape me. However, the following procedure occurred to me and I trust that Tamariz will approve their inclusion. It is not offered as an improvement, but as a substitute for the part I cannot recall.

Instead of making the magical gesture and keeping the pack in your own hands, hand the pack to 'A' face downwards saying "You did shuffle the cards before we started?" When he replies, request him to take the top card again, but this time not to look at it. This done, he is then asked to pass the pack to 'B' who is asked to do likewise.

Both are now asked to name the cards they chose in the first instance and then turn the cards they are holding face upwards. They prove to be the very same cards.

The advantage obtained by the spectators being allowed to handle the cards establishes a rapport with them which makes it possible to increase the entertainment potential of the effect on account of their involvement in the proceedings. In close-up work this spectator participation activity is more effective from the point of view of entertainment value than if they are confined to the role of being merely onlookers. Singers who encourage their audiences to 'join in the chorus' are aware of the increased appreciation of their efforts such a procedure brings. In this particular routine, not only are the cards in the hands of the spectators for most of the time the climax occurs when they are actually in possession of the cards which considerably enhances the impact of the effect.

The only line of patter given in the explanation is of considerable importance. It is designed to misdirect the spectator's mind after the effect is over.

Remember that when handing the pack to 'A' at the commencement of the trick he was asked to shuffle it. When it was given to him the second time you said "You did shuffle the cards before we started?" What follows in each case is that 'A' removes the top card of the pack making both sets of actions appear substantially the same. When the effort is over and the spectators are reconstructing in general what took place they will, due to the one line of patter, falsely conclude that the pack was shuffled immediately prior to it being handed to 'A' the second time making the trick into a miracle.

Both allowing the audience to be in possession of the cards as much as possible and using delayed misdirection in which spectators deceive themselves when reflecting on the effect they have just seen are a regular feature of the card work of Tamariz so if I have trespassed too far into someone else's field I have kept strictly to the path.

Credit for the handling of the Tilt Move is riven to Ascanio.

Bob Read's collection of prints on magic must rank amongst the best and it includes some examples of the cartoonist's art that probably cannot be seen elsewhere.

He has kindly given us permission to publish a selection over the next months, and the first will appear in our next issue.

We know that our readers will wish to join us in thanking him.

I have been looking at the last couple of issues and suddenly realised that somewhere I could have written in, "and as the golden sun sinks in the west we travel on" etc etc. They really did read like those old fashioned travelogues beloved of Hollywood in my somewhat younger days.

Actually I shall be off again abroad soon and again later in the year but I think that for this issue at least we will give "the travelling Pageboy" a miss. Except for one thing. I spent the Easter weekend in Scotland with my dear old mum. My journey up there coincided with Tom Ogden who was actually going to my home town to do a lecture for the local magi. So we talked for six hours all the way there on a very pleasant train journey.

Change of subject. Walt Lees. I was fascinated to read in last month's issue his breakdown of methods of inventing new effects. The first time I ever read anything along those lines was in Fitzkee's The Trick Brain and all I can remember from that book was that it is possible to take two effects and by putting them together you can create a third and new effect. I didn't agree with Fitzkee then and I still don't. It seemed to me to be an excuse for a lack of true original thought.

Walt's thoughts are much more direct, but I think he missed out one method of the creation of new effects. I personally (that's me folks) have been responsible for the creation of a few, a very few original (?) effects, and I think most of them have been conceived by a different process than those described by Walt. I believe the Bhuddist monks, when they have a problem, and it's usually always the same one, sit down and meditate, and after a period the answer to their problem arrives in an instant. Just one blinding flash of inspiration and they've got it. This requires the ability to make one's mind a complete blank.

I have never been able to do this successfully, and believe me, I've tried, but I do, very often sit down for several hours and think round problems. If there is a logical answer to the problem, I usually find it by this method. I don't sit there with a deck of eards or a bunch of coins trying to work out a solution, I do it all in my head. This of course is the complete opposite to meditation.

But, and isn't there always a but, I have noticed over the years that in the few instances where I have been truly creative or original, it has always arrived in an instant, without the thought process. Now listen to this Walt, and see if you can explain it, I can't. In every single instance, not only did the effect present itself to me, but the method also. I don't deny that I had to play around with a certain amount of experimentation, but honestly, in broad terms, both the effect and the method first envisaged was the answer. The only real problems in the after process was in finding the right materials or finding someone to make the damn thing or some other similar type problem which had nothing whatever to do with the actual creation of the effect itself.

Maybe one of our readers would like to come up with an explanation of this phenomena? There just has to be some deep psychological reason for this happening. What happens? Why does it happen? Who cares?

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

SCOTT YORK'S

SAVER

Occasionally an idea comes along that breathes new life into an ancient effect. Scott York has thoroughly modernized the old "Cap and Pence" to bring it into the 20th Century.

Endorsed by such experts as Fred Kaps, David Roth, and John Thompson as the best method to date. We are proud to release this perfectly made set of gimmicks for Scott's new version of this classic coin penetration.

Most magicians will be familiar with the old penetration of the stack of quarters through the hand effect. This new version is unique and startling because of the following features:

- A "Lifesaver" mint is placed on top of the stack of three nickels prior to the penetration.
- The spectator may remove the rolled up bill from his hand after the three coins have penetrated.
- The "Lifesaver" mint remains on top of the spectator's hand after the penetration.
- Nothing remains to give an inkling of how the effect has been accomplished.
 Everything is clean, including your hands. All is now examinable. The dirty work was done long ago.

You will love the cleaness and subtlety of this modern method. Our precision made apparatus will allow you to perform the effect with ease. Minimal sleight of hand skill is required to perform it.

If you want to start performing this exceptional effect NOW, the gimmicks, along with the professionally written instructions are now available from Busby-Corin, Inc.

The price for the set manufactured in U.S. coinage is $30.00 plus postage. The set is also available machined from U.K. 5 pence pieces for use with a "Polo" mint for $35.00 plus postage.

POSTAGE: Postage via the fastest method is $3.00 to the U.S., Canada, and Mexico. If you wish to have your set insured (Our responsibility ends with safe delivery to the post office.) please add $0.85 in the U.S. and Canada.

FOREIGN ORDERS: Please include $5,00 for Air Mail delivery to any part of the world. Insurance is $1.20 additional.

California residents must include sales tax.

1-2-3 CARD IN WALLET — an exercise in misdirection

Barrie Richardson

A few years back I worked out a method for switching small envelopes for use in a close-up mental stunt. The following trick is a by-product which grew out of the routine. I share this information for two reasons. First, I have no idea whether the methods used are original and unknown to the fraternity, and secondly I want the reader to appreciate that I have only modest skill in card manipulation — yet this particular demonstration has baffled some of the best card men in the USA. The effect depends mainly upon the use of psychology to misdirect the spectators attention from the performer at the time of the 'moves'. These moves, they cannot really be called sleights, are done on the 'off-beat' when the spectators minds are occupied following one of their member's carrying out the performer's instructions.

The above prologue is given because if you want to add the effect to your repertoire you must practice watching your audience, in order to get the right 'beat'. Just follow the steps and you will be successful. Do not change anything until you understand what the spectator 'sees'.

Secretly place any card from your own pack, or one stolen from a borrowed pack, face down in your wallet. Do not insert it in one of the partitions, but loose within the wallet. Close the wallet and put it into the right inside coat pocket. If it is one you normally carry in the hip pocket put it in the left hip pocket.

Before you start the demonstration the right hand steals the top card of the pack which is held face downwards in the left hand in the normal dealing position. To effect the steal the left thumb pushes the top card diagonally forwards and to the right as shown in (Fig.1). The base of the right index finger is brought into contact with the right outer corner and the right third finger tip is brought to rest near the outer left corner (Fig.2). The left hand moves away with the pack leaving the top card gripped between the third finger tip on one long side near the upper left corner and the palm of the hand on the other long side. If you now turn your hand with its back towards the spectators it will appear very natural, loose and empty.

When stealing the card there should be no furtive movements. No-one is as yet aware what, if anything, is to take place, Just keep talking and do not look at your hands.

The presentation starts as you are seated casually at the table. Give the pack to a spectator on your left and say "Please think of any card — remove it from the pack and place it face upwards onto the table." If he cannot find it ask him to name it. Should it be the one you have stolen produce it from any place you wish and end the trick right there.

If you are not so lucky and he places his thought of card on the table ask if he is satisfied with his choice and continue "Please cut the pack into three piles — make them about even."

You now pick up the face up chosen card with the left hand holding it with the thumb on the back and the index finger on the face.

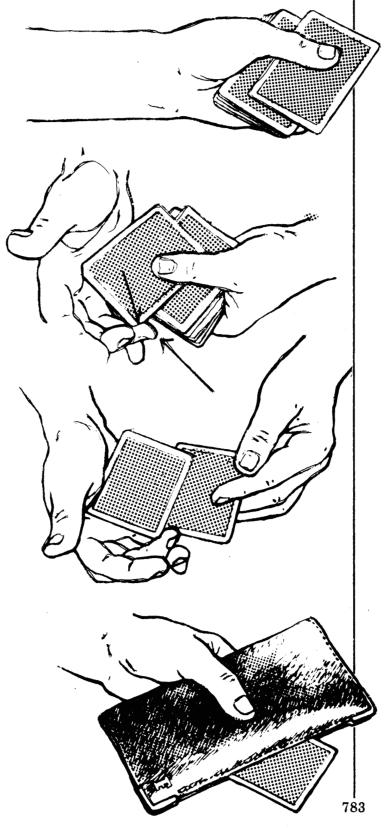

Touch the first pile with the card saying "This is number one." Repeat the action with the other two piles saying "This is number two, and this is number three." The gesture of pointing to the three piles with the chosen card should be a broad one lifting the left hand fairly high after each count. Without saying or doing anything else the spectators are made aware that the card in your left hand is still the chosen one.

"Now I want you to think of a number — either one, two or three." Touch each pile quickly with the chosen card holding it face up. "You are thinking of a number — please point to the pile of that number."

NOW YOU HAVE THEM. All eyes will follow the pointing finger and as you ask the question your hands have come together. You also are watching the pointing finger and NOT your hands. It is now when all attention is focussed on the pile being indicated that the chosen card in the left hand is exchanged for the one in the right hand as follows. The chosen card which is held between the thumb on top and index finger below is taken by the right hand which grips its outer corners between the second finger tip and the thumb crotch. At the same time the other card is clipped between the index and second finger of the left hand where it is held as the hands move apart (Fig. 3) completing the change.

Casually drop the card in the left hand on top of the pile chosen and give the spectator the option of moving it to another pile. They will seldom wish to do this, but if they do it will strengthen the effect. Next ask the spectator to put the other two piles on top of the one with the chosen card on top — square up the pack — cut and complete the cut.

"Please watch this hand." The obviously empty left hand removes the wallet from the pocket and using the left thumb flip it open to reveal the face down card within. "Let me see the card you thought of." As they reach for the pack and start to spread it in search for their card bring your right hand over, ostensibly to remove the card from the wallet. Actually, instead of removing it the right hand releases the card it holds as the left hand closes the wallet trapping the released card (the chosen one) leaving about half of it sticking out of the wallet (Fig.4). Note particularly the misdirection employed. The spectators see a face down card resting in the open wallet and then their attention is directed to the pack as they watch the spectator looking for the card they have been convinced beyond all doubt is in the pack. Even without the misdirection the illusion is so near perfect that the performer's action appear to be exactly the same were he to be really pulling the card they had just seen partially out of the wallet before closing it.

The above takes but a few seconds and the spectator will still be looking for his card so you interrupt him by saying "What was the card you thought of?" When he names it say "Yes — HERE IT IS". Pull the card clear of the wallet and hand it to him. He will immediately start racing through the pack — then he will run through the cards again more slowly and start to worry — Good Luck.

Editorial comment: The methods used in this trick to move the attention of the spectators away from the performer as he performs the secret moves, are excellent examples of how to misdirect an audience by creating a situation in which they are compelled to watch the spectator if they are to follow the sequence of events leading to the climax of the effect. Note the considerable time lapse between the performer picking up the chosen card and making the exchange during which the attention of the spectators has been moved away from the performer to the person who is being asked to think of a number and to point to the pile corresponding to that number. Also the move of apparently removing the card from the wallet is covered by switching the attention of the spectators to the helper searching for the chosen card.

It may seem to be somewhat risky to have a card concealed in the right hand for such a long time at the commencement of the trick but the audience have no reason for suspicion in this respect — their whole attention will be on the person with the pack. There will be no problem with bad angles if the right hand is back uppermost, resting casually on the edge of the table. The success of the trick is almost entirely dependent on the ability of the performer to keep the interest of the spectators away from himself at the time when making the secret moves. Perfect technique, although always desirable, is less important in this routine than misdirection. People only 'see' what they are looking at.

You will require a transparent plastic or glass rod about sixteen inches in length and with a diameter less than that of any finger ring you are able to borrow from a member of the audience. A transparent rod seems to me to increase the effectiveness of the effect as it is obvious that it cannot be taken apart in the middle which some spectators may suspect should the rod be made of wood or other opaque material.

Commence by requesting the loan of a ring and when one is proferred put the wand under the left arm and reach out with the right hand to take the ring. Now follows the only sleight in the routine.

Appear to put the ring into the left hand, but retain it in the right hand which then takes the rod from under the left arm grasping it about three inches from the end. As the right hand travels to take the rod its thumb bends in and pushes the ring up against the third finger and at right angles to the hand which then partially closes into a fist. The ring will now be finger palmed — the third finger being curled around its circumference. The thumb can then be withdrawn. Do not slide the ring onto the rod and do not grasp the rod at the extreme end.

The left hand which was closed when apparently taking the ring is now opened a little to allow the rod to be laid in it (Fig.1). The moment the rod comes into contact with the left hand let the ring in the right hand click against it. This creates the illusion the ring is in the left hand which now makes a crumbling motion as though you are trying to cause the ring to penetrate onto the rod.

DURING THE NEXT MOVE IT IS ESSENTIAL THAT THE RIGHT HAND DOES NOT MOVE AT ALL. If it does move the deception will be destroyed. The left hand, holding the rod tightly is brought near the mouth, blow on it. The action of raising the hand will bring the end of the rod within the right fist (Fig.2).

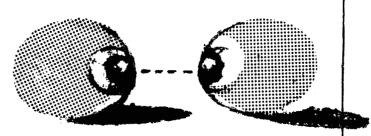

Immediately after blowing the left hand assumes its original position (Fig.1) and the end of the rod will automatically slide back with its end protruding from the right fist, but this time it must go through the ring.

With some practice this threading of the ring onto the rod is very easy and takes but a second. The right hand never seems to move near the end of the rod. In fact it is the end which comes into the hand and just past the ring.

Again make a crumbling motion with the left hand and blow on the hand a second time, but this time the right hand slides up a little nearer to the left bringing the hands closer together. The left hand which is gripped around the rod is opened slightly and the right hand mimes taking the ring from the left at the same time actually leaving the ring on the rod in the left hand.

Look at the non-existing ring in the right hand without letting it be seen that the hand is really empty. Pretend to put the ring back into the left hand. More crumbling motions. Lift the rod out of the left hand to show the ring on the rod.

The whole sequence takes me about 15 seconds. All moves are soft and gentle.

LAS VEGAS CLOSE-UP SEMINAR

Bob Read

So there I was, standing in front of a razor dispenser in the gents at Heathrow. In went 30p, no sign of the razor pack, out came 40p. I tried this again, the same thing happened. I'd made a few bob by the time my flight was called.

With luck like this, I couldn't wait to get to Las Vegas. I was on my way as a result of a transatlantic 'phone call from Joe Stevens. Joe provides the inspiration, enthusiasm and financial backing for the annual Las Vegas Close-up Seminar. This year, the fifth, was to feature the legendary Fred Kaps but due to Fred being unwell Joe figured a complete contrast would be the only substitute — hence yours truly was asked to stand in.

Stand in what? You may well ask. By the time I arrived in Vegas I had been awake for 24 hours. The cultural shock awaiting me, however, soon eclipsed any tiredness, and stimulated the adrenalin to the extent that I totalled 12 hours sleep the entire 5 days. It started in the airport, where I was met by George Joseph. George is a fine, fine magician, specialising in gambling sleights with chips, cards and dice — as you would expect from the security director of the Dunes Hotel. The slot machines start at the airport. Hundreds of them, hungry for nickels and dimes.

Whoever said Vegas was Sodom and Gomorrah with slots was right. Every drug store, grocery store, barbers shop had the obligatory slot. The hotel casinos had hundreds. The place is gambling mad. The first time you'll see 3 lemons come up is on the taxi cab meter. The traffic lights go red, green and 8 to 5 you don't make it across. Hell! the Sunrise Hospital gives better odds than that.

It was only 9.30pm so we adjourned to the cocktail bar in the Alladin Hotel for Pina Coladas served by leggy, mini-skirted waitresses.

Breakfast at 2.30am, food, like everything else, is available 24 hours a day and you don't even have to leave your hotel.

The thump of the machine handles, the crash of the payout, the slip-slide of the cards being dealt for blackjack, poker, baccarrat, the click of the dice on the crap tables and the tinkle of the ball bouncing on the spokes of the roulette wheel provides the constant 365 day rhythm of life in Sin City.

By 11.00am the delegates were arriving in a steady stream at the registration desk.

The roll reads like a Debrett of the magic world — Slydini, Vernon, Cornelius, Skinner, Goshman, Ammar, Harris, Busby, Crabtree, Klaus, Daryl Martinez, Fialho, Johnny Thompson, over 100 of the top names in American magic.

During the short reception on the Thursday night both Jimmy Grippo and Johnny Paul were given tremendous ovations and encouraged by this Johnny performed his superlative torn bill routine. From then on the quality of the magic did not falter.

The 4 days packed two, two-hour close-up sessions, featuring most of the performers mentioned above, plus many others. A lecture by the incomparable Slydini, another lecture/chat/talk-in by the one and only Professor — how can you put a value on two hours with Vernon? A frank and revealing discourse on the road to the top by Siegfried (of Siegfried and Roy)resulting in yet another standing ovation. Their show at the Stardust is without doubt the finest, most exciting spectacular that I have ever seen.

Between times we saw and appreciated over 4 hours of video taped magic of Fred Kaps, narrated by his friend Phillipe Fiahlo.

This crazy Frenchman stole the convention with his short-sighted chink-a-chink, his musical cups & balls and the "Rock of Ages" act — but most of all with his Gallic charm and unfailing good humour (we were dubbed Sangfroid & Read).

Somewhere between events I had the good fortune to witness the skill of Richard Turner. Richard is certified blind (as compared with most magicians who are certified insane), but he does - "any sleight called for" imperceptably. His middles, centres and bottoms — paradoxically have to be seen to be disbelieved. He has total control over independent movement in each hand — in other words, remember the rubbing the stomach and patting the head test - well, he draws imaginary squares, triangles, stars in the air with each hand backwards, forwards on command. He does the one hand weave longways, rolls seven (+) coins across his fingers, and two coins in opposite directions — on the same hand.

As for me, I was honoured to be asked to work a one hour close-up show and the lecture — through which most of the audience sat.

With all the magic of such high quality, it is invideous to pick out individual items — but for snap impressions here goes:

Mike Ammar for card in frozen block of ice.

John Cornelius causing a lightning flash in an unprepared glass.

A young magician from New York who made the little finger of his right hand disappear — yes disappear. Showing his hand front and back — the finger was gone — then it appeared again.

Daryl, Alan Akerman, Louis Simenou and

Larry Joseph with fine card work.

Johnny Thomson with his hilarious egg bag. Dai Vernon forsaking sleights to give a screamingly funny sketch about the balloon going up—complete with new one-liners.

Joe Stevens very wisely leaves most evenings free (not that you'd know it was evening as the casinos have no visible clocks), and with a choice of over 100 shows with big, big names, and the bar and restaurant magicians working, it makes for a full 4 days.

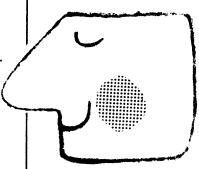

Mike Skinner, Grippo, Johnny Paul and Daniel Cross are among those working bars and Carlton & Co, Bob Higa (with a fine Japanese style act, water fountains and all), Doug Henning and, of course Siegfried and Roy on the big stages.

As well as catching most of the above, I also made it, as did Mel Stover and Elliot Saunders, to old time Burlesque and with Tim Felix (a fine worker from Chicago) to the Waylan Flowers puppet show. It was great. Grotesque dolls, blue humour — the crowd was in an uproar. And to cap it all George Joseph layed on a tour behind the scenes in a casino with 64 remote controlled TV cameras watching the play at all times.

Monday morning at 4.20 I just couldn't face going to bed and getting up in time to catch the 8.55 to Chicago, so TWA, bless them at that time of night, switched the reservation to midday. I left the warm pool, the palm trees, the beautiful weather, the overwhelming hospitality on time for Chicago — but that's another story.

The great advantage in going to the States is being able to see so much skilful magic in one place.

All you young magicians save up the fare, it'll cost about £400 and a bit more for those insatiable slots, and make a trip to an up-coming Vegas close-up seminar. Tell Joe I sent you.

DETECTIVE STORY

Roy Walton

For many years I have played around with the idea of an object having more sides than it should, for example a die with ten sides, a spoon with two bowls etc. (Both these problems easily solved by using the paddle move). It wasn't until recently however, that I thought of a simple story that could be applied to a small packet of playing cards to entertainingly show that they apparently have six sides.

To prepare for the trick, remove the A, 2 and 3 of hearts from the pack together with the Joker and arrange them so as to read from the FACE — Joker, 3, 2, A. Now flip the first two cards face down and you are set. The order from the top should now be face down 3, face down Joker, face up 2 and face A. Place this packet in your pocket or wallet until you wish to perform the trick.

Performing details and patter outline

Remove the packet of cards and hold them so that the 3 is at the top. Explain that you have invented a packet of cards with six sides, and that you will illustrate the possibilities of the invention by pretending that the packet is a book. The backs of the cards represent the text in the book and the faces the pictures. A detective story of some twenty four pages will be shown to be contained in just four cards. For ease of explanation the various phrases will now be numbered and the exact patter given followed by the action.

- 1. "On the first four pages of the book we have three pages of text and a picture of the first suspect in the detective story." Elmsley Count to show three backs and the face up Ace.
- 2. "On the next four pages we have three pages of text and a picture of the detective." Turn the packet over and Jordan Count to show three backs and the face up Joker.

- 3. "On the next four pages we have three pages of text and the second suspect." Turn the packet over and Elmsley Count to show three backs and the face up 2.
- 4. "On the next four pages we have three pages of text and the third suspect." Turn the packet over and Jordan Count to show three backs and the face up 3. As you place the last card on top of the others, injog the one below it slightly (the 2 spot) by a small downwards movement of the thumb.
- 5. "On the next four pages we have all text and no pictures." Turn the packet over and Half Pass the lowermost two cards, the top one of the two being conveniently injogged. Now Elmsley Count the four cards to show all backs. They are all face down anyway, and the count is only used here to adjust their order.
- 6. "On the final four pages we have all the suspects and the detective together for the summing up." Turn the packet over and spread it in a fan to show four faces. The order from the face should be A, Joker, 2, 3.
- 7. "The detective concluded that whilst he first thought suspect No.3 was guilty, the true murderer was No.1." (Tap the Ace at the face). Pause, and then say "disguised as the detective." After tapping the Ace, square up the packet and turn it face down. Apparently remove the Ace and hold it face down, but using the Glide actually remove the next card (the Joker). As you say "disguised as the detective" turn the card face up.

THE IMMACULATE CARD MAGIC OF WALT LEES — four superb card routines. Edited and photographed by Lewis Ganson. Published by Supreme Magic. £3.50.

Having seen all the effects performed by the author, some of them on several occasions, I am able to vouch with certainty that they are practical and equally effective whether the audience be magicians or lay persons. The Ultimate Aces is based on the wellknown Vernon effect. Four blue-backed Aces are placed in a row and three red-backed indifferent cards are dealt onto each. Three of the Aces vanish singly to arrive in the fourth packet one at a time. One thing is missing from this method — that awkward spot with the dodgy move that is a cause for complaint in other efforts to produce this effect.

Four Blank Cards is a small packet effect in which four blank cards become normal cards with a back and face, one at a time. As each card becomes normal it is removed and placed aside until all four have backs and faces.

Nimrod is the name given to any toy walking figure you are able to purchase. Two cards are chosen from separate halves of the pack. After being returned and lost? both halves are spread face down separately in a row. The toy is then wound up and walks over each spread in turn stopping on the chosen card. At the conclusion all can be examined — everything is normal.

The Card That Isn't There is difficult to explain briefly and convey fully the effect created. The four Kings are shown and placed face down onto the table. A card is removed at random from the centre of the pack and placed face down onto the table without showing its face at the same time remarking that although there seems to be a card there, actually there is nothing there at all. A card is then noted by the spectator by letting him peek at one in the centre of the pack. The Kings are picked up and 'the card that isn't there' put with them. Ask the spectator to name the card he peeked at in the pack. Show the card with the four Kings which was on the table when the card was being noted, to actually be the latter. Thus you prove that the card on the table was not there at all.

As can be expected Editor Ganson has done a good job, both with the explanation of the methods and the sixty-one photographs. For the discerning card magician seeking to add to his repertoire of practical card effects this 26 page book is well worth acquiring.

To avoid confusion with dates I have decided to prefix the caption of this column with the month in which it is being written until we get up to date. Not vet decided what to do should we by some miracle get two issues out in the same month.

Bob Read has arrived back from Las Vegas (see his report) and for which he produced a limited number of notes called 'Variations for Vegas Vagrants'. They contain no tricks but a list of all the stuff he does, plus some of the reasons why. The front cover is a reproduction from the Graphic 1892 of three card monte workers in California. The price is five dollars or £2.50 and the entire proceeds will go to St Jude's Children's Hospital, Memphis. This could soon become a collector's item as only 120 were produced so if interested send off now — the address is 32 Regal Way, Kenton, Middx.

Bob is an avid collector of prints relating to the cups and balls. He has a few duplicates and is interested in hearing from anyone in a similar position with a view to swapping. I understand that dedicated collectors do not sell but are prepared to buy. See above address.

The Tenth National Magic Spanish Congress is being held this year in the Canary Islands from 21st to 25th of May. Somewhere to go if you happen to be there on holiday. Information for this event can be obtained from Apartado 10431, Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Canary Island, Spain.

Trevor Lewis has a problem for you. Have a nut in the right hand and a bolt in the left. Close both hands — raise the right hand and open to show it empty — raise the left hand and on opening it both nut and bolt fall from it onto the table, the nut being screwed onto the bolt. How? Give it to the readers and see if any have a solution.

In the meantime here is one way which calls for some skill plus a modicum of misdirection, and a duplicate nut and bolt. With the nuts threaded on the bolts put one in the right outside coat pocket and the other in the left coat pocket. You must also be seated at a table.

Commence by putting both hands in the pockets as though not quite sure which one contains the nut and bolt. Bring out the left hand first with the nut and bolt in view and immediately after as soon as the spectator's and your own eyes are focussed on the nut and bolt bring out the right hand with its nut and bolt held with the second finger tip at one end of the bolt and the other end pressed into the centre of the palm. Held in this manner with it back to the spectators the hand looks naturally relaxed as it would if empty.

Toss the nut and bolt across the table for a spectator to take a look at it, and request him to remove the nut.

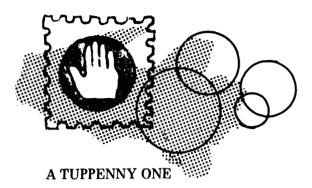

Take the bolt with the left hand and pass it to the right hand which holds it by the ends between the tips of the first finger and thumb. Make some comment about it and place it into the left hand across the palm at the same time release the duplicate which falls onto the base of the left fingers which then immediately close. As the right begins to move to perform this action, look directly at the spectator and ask for the nut which you take in the right hand. Performed casually and with the correct timing it should appear to the audience that you have placed the bolt into the left hand to enable the nut to be taken with the right. A split second before the left fingers close the attention of the spectators is directed to the nut so at the precise moment the 'move' is made they are not looking at your hands.

Explain that you are going to cause the bolt in the left hand to change places with the nut in your right. Prior to, and during these remarks the left hand has turned back uppermost and manoeuvred the bolt towards the heel of the hand where it is held by the finger tips. It has also moved towards the edge of the table enabling the bolt to be lapped when attention is on the right hand.

Hold both hands with the backs uppermost and about ten inches apart and make a magical gesture in which the hands move quickly further apart and back to their original position. During this action the nut is snapped up the right sleeve using the Dr Robert's method explained in Bobo's Coin Magic.

Open the right hand which is empty and say "Well, the nut has made it — now for the bolt." Close right hand and repeat the gesture, and open right hand which is still empty. Express disappointment at the failure of the bolt to pass and open left hand to let the threaded nut and bolt fall onto the table saying "So that's what happened."

All for now.

Arthur Day

I have been doing a trick lately, one of Phil Goldstein's in which five different coins are laid out in a row on the table. A spectator is invited to push one forward out of the line and the outcome is that this one is engraved on the back with the words "THIS ONE". This brings the request 'do it again', which is rather a problem.

After some thought I evolved a follow up which fills the bill. Have five duplicates of your engraved coin (in my case 2p piece) which match in respect of their wear and tear and readily accessible, say in the left coat pocket. With the engraved coin resting on your open right palm the left hand goes to the coat pocket and brings out the five coins, four of which are counted singly onto the right hand to join the engraved one. The spectators are unaware of the one which you retain in the left hand.

After displaying them for a moment apparently toss all five back into the left hand but actually retain the engraved one in the right hand. This is the shuttle move which most of you will know.

The right hand with engraved coin concealed removes the five coins one at a time from the left hand and places them onto the table. There is some scope for misdirection as you pretend to make sure that you do not accidently expose the engraving on one of the coins — remember by tossing the coins from hand to hand you cannot be sure which it is — so the spectators think.

A spectator is invited to mix the coins by shuffling them around and then to form them into a line. You then ask him to push one of them towards you which you pick up with the right hand and look? for the engraving. Look directly at the spectator and as you say "Why did you decide to choose this one?" switch the chosen one for the engraved one when they look at you to reply. Show the engraving, or better still hand them the coin. The switch I use is the one taught by David Roth in his lecture at the Ramsay Reunion, though no doubt you will use your own personal favourite method.

IVOR'S CONTROL

Rovi

Spread out the cards in the normal way with the thumbs on the backs and the fingers underneath requesting a spectator to choose one. Close up the spread immediately the card is removed.

For the return of the card spread out the cards as before, this time the right hand moves away with about half the pack keeping its cards in the spread condition. The left hand moves towards the spectator who is asked to put it on top.

From this point onwards it is important to keep talking and at the same time avoid making what you are doing seem to be of any importance — in other words be casual in your actions.

When the card is placed on the left hand portion bring the left thumb onto it and as the hands move together to put the left hand portion under those in the right hand the left thumb pushes the selected card forwards and right hand fingers hold it from below. With a continuous action the left thumb 'feeds' a further three cards below the selection. The left hand then places the remaining cards it holds on top of those in the right. The chosen card is now fourth from the bottom of the face down pack.

It should appear to the audience that the two halves are placed together with the chosen card somewhere in the centre and the pack cut at some other point. The feeding of the three cards should give the impression that the chosen card is now out of control of the performer and the subsequent cutting furthers the impression. On no account should it be suspected that the three cards are being counted — it should appear that you are casually pushing an indeterminate number of cards from the left hand to below the chosen card at the bottom of those in the right.

It is a bold move and there should be no attempt at finesse. Keep talking and concentrate your attention more on the spectators than the cards and forget about technique and proving that the card is lost in the pack. Your general manner and attitude during the procedure is the important factor. If you don't make your actions look important the spectators will tend to disregard them, especially if what you are saying is interesting and/or amusing.

Two days from this very moment of writing the Annual Collectors' Day will be held at the Magic Circle. I missed last year's event for the first time and at the moment it looks as though I may well miss this year's. It is a great pity because it is one of the few Magic Circle events I don't like to miss. Like all collectors there are parts of it that are liable to be as dry as dust but occasionally someone or something crops up which gladdens the heart.

Like the one before last. Hector Robinson gave me a beautiful photograph of his father, who was, in case you don't know, the late and certainly great Chung Ling Soo. There are so many unanswered questions about. Chung Ling Soo that you could hold a one week seminar on him alone and still not run out of things to discuss. The pity of it all is that so much of it is conjecture. You depend a great deal on the memories of a few old timers, some of whom claim to have seen him. When you consider that he has been dead over sixty years, the guys who actually saw him are indeed knocking on a bit. They would be young men then, interested in almost nothing else than in trying to figure out how thw tricks worked and it is these people we have to rely on for first hand information.

Once in while you get someone like Eddie Dawes who will take a lot of time and trouble and maybe money, trouble and probably money to research a specific point, which is something for which we should all be grateful.

So have you discovered the point of all this? There is one somewhere. Why is it that we allow many of the leading lights in magic to live there lives out without anyone bothering to make notes about their lives, careers, their lifestyles, their mistresses etc. In any other walk of life there are loads of authentic biographies or autobiographies but in our little neck of the woods????????

Why don't YOU as soon as you have finished reading this, go to your bookshelf and have a look and see just how few books you have which are of an biographical nature, and if you have more than half a dozen or so I bet they were published years ago. In recent years Val Andrews has made a valiant attempt to fill in a few gaps. He has done a book on Murray, another one on Dante and I believe he has recently finished one on Chung Ling Soo. Now people like Val need help and it is our duty to help anyone who takes on this kind of task. The financial rewards cannot possibly be compared with those received by the biographer of a well known politician or famous T.V. personality, but the subject matter should be treated (by us) as just as important, but it isn't is it?

A few years ago there was a book published about Tommy Cooper but what about David Nixon? There must be a market for just such a book. I'm not talking about a book for the public but one for us. How about Edgar Benyon, The Great Cingalee, Kardoma, and there is one other person who has been talking a lot about himself in recent years who should sit down and put pen to paper about himself. Are you listening Harry Stanley? I have heard Harry give his talk and I just know he only skims the surface. Someone should collar him and insist that he does something about an autobiography warts and all.

If he ever does, and I'm back to the point again, it is our duty to help. Sooooo. . . if you hear of anyone tackling such a project write to them, relate your little anecdote, lend them the letters, the photographs, let them take photocopies of the playbills you have, and don't please hoard them. Don't do what some collectors do. They keep them as conversation pieces so that at the next magic club meeting they can be one up on their fellow members.

One last word. If you do have the odd photograph of anyone you don't want send it to me. I'll lend it to anyone doing a book.

SCOTT YORK'S SAVER

Occasionally an idea comes along that breathes new life into an ancient effect. Scott York has thoroughly modernized the old "Cap and Pence" to bring it into the 20th Century.

Endorsed by such experts as Fred Kaps, David Roth, and John Thompson as the best method to date. We are proud to release this perfectly made set of gimmicks for Scott's new version of this classic coin penetration.

Most magicians will be familiar with the old penetration of the stack of quarters through the hand effect. This new version is unique and startling because of the following features:

- A "Lifesaver" mint is placed on top of the stack of three nickels prior to the penetration.
- The spectator may remove the rolled up bill from his hand after the three coins have penetrated.
- The "Lifesaver" mint remains on top of the spectator's hand after the penetration.
- Nothing remains to give an inkling of how the effect has been accomplished.
 Everything is clean, including your hands. All is now examinable. The dirty work was done long ago.

You will love the cleaness and subtlety of this modern method. Our precision made apparatus will allow you to perform the effect with ease. Minimal sleight of hand skill is required to perform it. If you want to start performing this exceptional effect NOW, the gimmicks, along with the professionally written instructions are now available from Busby-Corin. Inc.

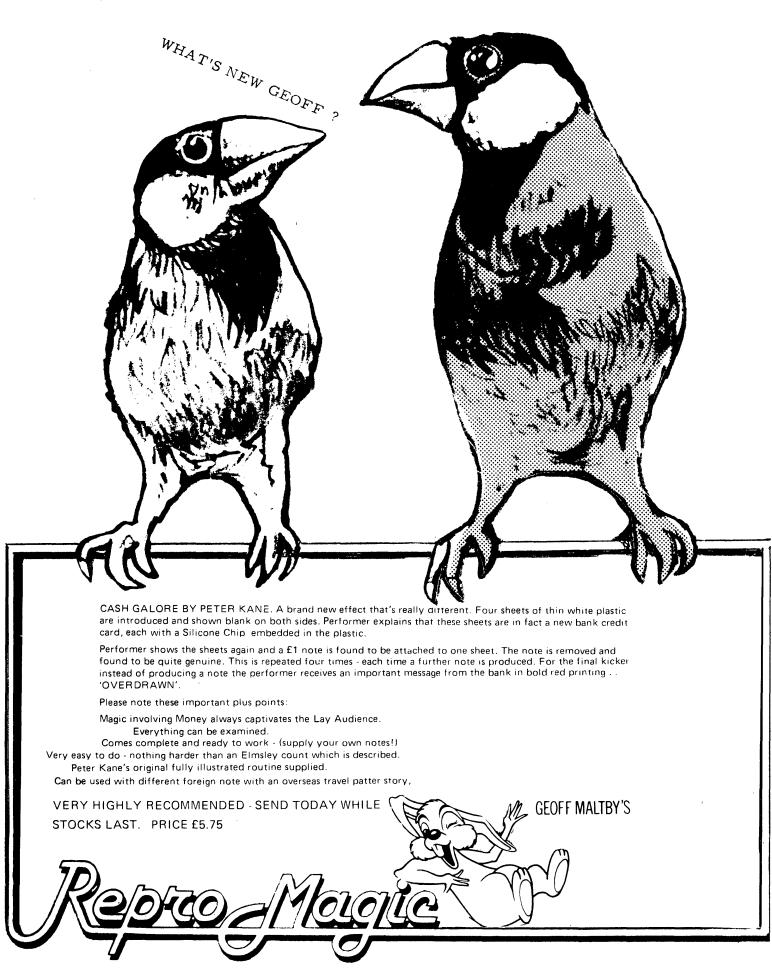

The price for the set manufactured in U.S. coinage is $30.00 plus postage. The set is also available machined from U.K. 5 pence pieces for use with a "Polo" mint for $35.00 plus postage.

POSTAGE: Postage via the fastest method is $3.00 to the U.S., Canada, and Mexico. If you wish to have your set insured (Our responsibility ends with safe delivery to the post office.) please add $0.85 in the U.S. and Canada.

FOREIGN ORDERS: Please include $5,00 for Air Mail delivery to any part of the world. Insurance is $1,20 additional.

California residents must include sales tax.

OVERTURE — An Open Change Of A Card Eric Mason

In order to explain the sleight involved with the effects that follow, take the Ace of Hearts and Ace of Spades from the pack and hold them face up and slightly spread in the right hand with the Ace of Spades uppermost as in (Fig.1). The pack is held face downwards in the left hand in the dealing position.

Obtain a break with the left little finger under the top card of the pack by pushing over the right hand side of the pack for about a quarter of an inch with the left thumb. With the tips of the left fingers push it back square with the pack inserting the tip of the left little finger as you do so. This is standard practice for obtaining such a break when using one hand only.

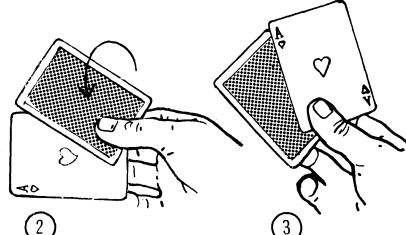

With the left thumb and first finger remove the Ace of Spades and turn it face downwards, end for end, and replace it back in the right hand in its original position (Fig.2).

Pause — remove it — show its face again and replace it back into the right hand, but this time under and to the left of the face up Ace of Hearts (Fig. 3).

The Ace of Hearts is now removed and turned face downwards and it is during this action that the Ace of Spades is secretly and indectectably exchanged with the top card of the pack.

Figure (4) shows how the face down Ace of Spades lines up square with the top of the pack as the left thumb and first finger grasps the Ace of Hearts. Also, the top card of the pack is now between the first and second fingers of the right hand, the tip of the latter having entered the break as the hands came together.

The tip of the left second finger presses on the right long side edge of the Ace of Spades (it is naturally already in position) causing the left long side edge to be pressed against the base of the left thumb. With the right first and second fingers firmly gripping the top card of the pack the left hand moves outwards and revolves back uppermost in the action of turning the Ace of Hearts face downwards taking the Ace of Spades with it, leaving the original top card of the pack in the right hand between the first and second fingers. Figure (5) shows both hands at this stage (spectator's view).

In executing the change the right hand and arm remain stationary — there is no need to use misdirection or wait for an 'opportune moment' — adequate cover is provided by the action of turning the Ace of Hearts face downwards to hide the Ace of Spades as it is stolen from the right hand and added to the pack. The spectators seeing the card in the right hand after the change will assume it is still the Ace of Spades.

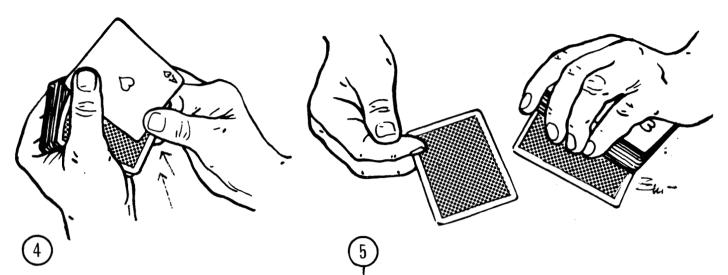

The principle can be used to change two packets of any number of cards, even the two halves of a pack. Divide the pack and hold one half face down in the left hand and the other face down in the right hand. Spread the top card of the half in the right hand to the right and with the left hand turn it face up with the same action as described previously for the two card exchange. Turn it face down, executing the Overture Change as you do so.

Returning to the two card change here is an effect which I use regularly and for the record is entitled

SUBLIMASON

Run through the pack and throw out a red and a black card. For descriptive purposes we will assume them to be the Ace of Hearts and the Ace of Spades.

Have a card selected and returned to the pack. Control it to the top and obtain a little finger break under it as you pick up the two Aces which you hold face down in the right hand with the Ace of Spades uppermost. Spread them into position ready for the Overture Change.

Ask the spectator which of the two cards he would like to become the one he chose. "This one (turn the Ace of Spades face and replace it face down under and to the left of the face down Ace of Hearts) or this one" as you turn the Ace of Hearts face up, at the same time executing the change substituting the Ace of Spades for the chosen card. Return the Ace of Hearts to the right hand face down, under and to the left of the face down card which is now the chosen one, the Ace of Spades being on top of the pack in the left hand.

Should the spectator wish you to change the card on the right to his selection return the other one to the pack after showing it and then turn the other face up to reveal that the Ace chosen has changed into the one he selected.

In the event of him choosing the one on the left (the Ace of Hearts) turn the chosen card on the right face up at the same time switch the Ace of Hearts for the Ace of Spades using the basic sleight.

The spectator will experience some confusion as the card other than the one he indicated changed to his selection, but the other card (the Ace of Spades) is not as he supposes the Ace of Hearts — so you must have changed the Ace he requested into his chosen card.

FOR JOHANN

A couple of years ago Fr. Cyprian's Hofzinser Card Problem was published by Karl Fulves. Here is my solution to the problem using the Overture Change.

The four Aces are withdrawn from the pack and given to a spectator for him to shuffle and place onto the table face down. Neither he nor you know the order or position of any of the cards.

Have him choose a card and note it. It is then returned to the pack and controlled to the top. Pick up the Aces and hold them fanned out faces towards the spectator in your right hand with the thumb on the back and fingers on the face making it obvious that you do not look at the faces.

Ask him to touch the Ace that is of the same suit as the card he chose and move it to the left of the fan without looking at its face. It is now in position ready for the Overture Change.

Get a little finger break under the top card (the chosen one) and switch it for the Ace indicated as the left hand turns the Ace second from the left of the fan face upwards (the one next to the one being switched). Turn the other two Aces face up one at a time. You now have one Ace? face down and the other three face up held in a fan in your right hand.

Remark that you could not have possibly known the order of the Aces or which one corresponded to the suit of the card you selected until you touched it. "Neither do I know the name of the card you selected so please name it". Invite him to take the face down card and turn it over — Climax.

This solution fulfils the conditions of the Hofzinser Problem in the the performer does not know the name of the card selected or the order of the Aces, and no gimmicked cards are used. Maybe Hofzinser had a change of his own to achieve the effect—if so, it is unlikely that anyone has knowledge of it. Whatever method he used it is doubtful if it was any more direct than the one explained above.

Here is another approach to this move that I have been working on for a number of years. I showed it to Harry Lorayne who committed it to memory, but as far as I know has not published it — just to be complete, it is included here.

CUL BON'O?

Locate any four of a kind and cull them to the top of the pack. Ribbon spread the pack face down across the table and have someone pull four cards out of the spread leaving them face down.

After giving them a chance to change any of the four cards if they so wish, gather up the pack and get a left little finger break under the fourth card and a break under the top card with the third finger as you square up the cards.

Next, pick up the four cards with the right hand. The left hand gives a little assistance enabling the top card of the pack to be added to the bottom of the four selections. The little finger break facilitates this secret addition.

Immediately with the left hand pull out the bottom card of the packet and place it face up on top of the packet side jogged to the right at an angle. You are now in a position to Overture Change the three top cards of the pack which are marked off with the third finger break with the four cards under the angled top card of those in the right hand as follows.

Turn the angled top card face down making the switch as you do so, and then turn all cards face up — singly — starting with the bottom card and using the same left hand action which duplicates the one used when making the basic change.

Should one of your four of a kind happen to be included in the original selections, keep track of its position allowing it to become the bottom card of the packet to be switched — switching three for four to end.

The effects given here are just a few of the uses to which I have put the Overture Change. Readers who master the move will undoubtedly find many other applications and will hopefully share them with us.

OASIS for MAY

London's first Psychics and Mystics Fayre happened last month. Every conceivable kind of chicanery, other than honest magic was represented. Tarot readers (not marked cards), sand readers, Kirlian photography, numerologists, crystal ball gazers and even the old button on a piece of thread sex detector was being worked to test peoples 'vibes'. A reporter from the local radio station was also there to interview the operators — her final comment was that she had never before seen so many nutters under one roof. Obviously she had never been to a magic convention.

Magicians are an odd lot. During a recent debate at the Magic Circle on 'Should magic and mentalism be mixed' a show of hands indicated that well over half included some kind of mental effect i.e. a prediction, book test etc in their acts, yet the final vote decided that they were not in favour of mixing the two. The attempt to separate magic from mentalism is confined to magicians and is of no concern to audiences who are only there to be entertained. No doubt most magicians would call David Berglas a mentalist, and happening to be present he was able to say that he attached no such label to himself, adding that he included hypnotism, table lifting and pocket picking in his performances.

Again — let us take the attitude of magicians towards Uri Geller. Here was a man who had a great impact on audiences with 'mental' or is it 'psychic' performances. What was the reaction of magicians? There were inevitably those who jumped onto the band wagon only to fall off again before getting much of a ride, and the 'exposers'. No doubt the latter gentry benefitted both with the publicity they received and financially, but what is the justification in 'giving the game away when no-one is getting hurt. Had Geller been resorting to the unsavoury practises such as those of the so-called psychic surgeons there would have been good reasons for an exposure campaign.

The point I am making is a paradoxical one. Why did so many mentalists — and magicians, who are endeavouring by the use of their acting ability and showmanship, to impress others, albeit momentarily, that they have some magical power wish to denigrate someone who was a success in this area? Surely Geller has proved to be the greatest close-up magician of this era. From the point of view of the layman this is beyond question, but maybe magicians think otherwise because as stated earlier — they are an odd bunch.

Following the above mentioned debate and after the meeting a few were gathered together over a pint and one — a mentalist — claimed that his audiences did not suspect that he was using trickery and was totally against the use of mental effects by magicians on the grounds that if they happened to be his effects — or similar — he would lose credibility.

Doubt was expressed about the possibility of the average mentalist being able to convince a lay audience that his performance was 'genuine'. The general consus of opinion was that the majority would believe that there was 'something in this psychic business', providing the performer had sufficient talent as an actor and they were unaware that he did tricks. Given this — he could convince the majority of his 'gift'.

The gullibility of people who by their very nature have to believe in something is really astounding. They are extremely vulnerable to all kinds of chicanery and will seek the help of anyone they believe are gifted with unusual powers to dispel their fears, give hope of future good fortune, or get into touch with departed loved ones.

That this is so, can easily be proved by anyone willing to have a go. Some time back Walt Lees did so — working an act combining astrology with mindreading. To his surprise and embarrassment he was beseiged by members of his audience with requests for information usually provided by fortunetellers and the like, and only being interested in presenting the act as entertainment ceased forthwith.

It would seem to be that the lesson to be learnt from this is — if you wish the audience to regard you as a magician, i.e. someone having real magical powers, is to become a mentalist. Better not to advertise yourself as such as you may be regarded as being involved in psychiatry — which is not unlikely — one way or another.

It's always a pleasure to know that effects appearing in this magazine are being worked. Recently Stephan Stamm visited this country and has been using Andy Galloway's Pegasus Coin which was the first effect to appear in Pabular being on the front page of Vol. One No. One. Since his return home he has written in praise of Bob Hamilton's For Nudists Only waying 'this fantastic trick will be a regular feature in my programme'. Others to shower praise on this effect are Roy Walton, Gordon Bruce and Peter Duffie. Another boost to our morale came from Jeff Busby who in a recent leaflet observed 'It's a fine magazine. The material is generally good and the graphics and production haven't been equalled by any other close-up magazine on the market'. Mentioning the above gives me the opportunity to say 'Thank you' to the contributors who make it possible by generously presenting us with their pet effects for all to share.

Phil Goldstein writes — regarding the following which appeared in this column a couple of months back. 'It distresses me to read that "no. . . pains are suffered by the practising performer because his work fails to reach some hypothetical artistic heights. . ." There would seem to be an ongoing misconception in magic that one is either entertaining or artistic. To me, the two terms can and must co-exist. There is a modern prejudice which assumes that if something is based on "artistic standards", it is thus by definition be "highbrow" and "boring". I disagree. To create magic that is entertaining is in and of itself artistry, requiring all of the dedication and effort that word suggests. I realise that there is a semantic problem here, but all too often I have encountered magicians who seem to feel that they've no need to reach for any standards, as long as their work "goes over". One need only consider those close-up entertainers who are known specifically for their entertainment value - such as Al Goshman, Bob Read, John Thompson, Del Ray, Ricky Jay, Flip, Harry Lorayne, etc etc etc. Each of these gentlemen is an artist, holding to high standards for the sake of entertainment. I feel very strongly that a magician must "impose his own conceptions of what he considers the art of magic to be" — to not to do this is to produce poor magic. Simply, I believe that one cannot be a good magical entertainer without being a good magician" - end of quote.

I will respond to the above in a future issue when space and time permits a considered reply.

Magicians with seaside engagements are now at their venues. Kevin Davie is in Yarmouth, Isle of Wight with his vent act, and Simon Lovell at the Berwick Holiday Centre. Both will welcome a visit from magicians, especially close-uppers.

Next month's issue will be filled with contributions from Scottish readers when we shall be 'Remembering Ramsay'.

THE M.W. VANISHING PACK

Mark Weston

During my cabaret act, about midway I perform a series of card effects, these are all feature items such as Bullet Hole Through Card etc, at the conclusion of this card routine there remain four spectators holding the last four cards from roughly ten spectators each of whom chose one card at the beginning of the sequence. Unknown to the audience these are the last four cards which will enable me to conclude my card routine with the pack vanish. As I then have no cards with which to continue I pass on to other miscellaneous magic in order to conclude the act. There are certain golden rules to be applied in vanishes of this type, a psychological approach being necessary throughout, the audience are led up the garden path so to speak, the following points must be observed:-

The audience must never ever be aware that the pack will disappear.

The correct amount of misdirection is required, this must be so timed that the performer has all the time in the world in which to effect the vanish.

The timing in performance must be perfect.

Briefly I have the four spectators hold up their cards so that everyone except myself can note each chosen card, during this I turn away from the audience so that I will not see any of the chosen cards, I then tell everyone this is the last thing I am going to do with cards and I am collecting the four cards in a fan still showing their faces to the audience, next I insert the four cards into the pack and the cards are shuffled after which I drape a handkerchief over the pack which is held in my LEFT hand. I tell the audience that I will remove one card from the pack WHICH WILL NOT BE ONE OF THE CHOSEN CARDS, this is checked by a gentleman on my left and the card, despite my statement to the contrary is found to be one of those four chosen cards.

Nevertheless I proceed to remove a second card from under the hank again assuring the audience that this will NOT be one of the chosen cards. . and again the card proves to be another of the four selections. In dismay now I produce a third and fourth card from under the hank and I have accidently found the four chosen cards so audience begin to applaud. . . But I stop them. . . still holding the pack in my left hand covered with a hank, and I tell them the trick has gone wrong and that what I intended to do was make the four cards disappear. . . "BUT INSTEAD I VANISHED THE PACK". . . as I say this I whip the hank off my left hand. . . usually amid gasps from the spectators.

A normal pack of cards.

A coat with an empty left side pocket, this is to contain the pack after the vanish.

Performance

During the run-up to this effect, you will be facing the audience and should take note of a handy gentleman on your left side as he will be important to the vanish, someone sitting at the end of the front row is ideal, and during the action you must time everything so that you are in the exact position in relation to this man at the correct time. The gentleman is never aware of the assistance he gives the performer at any time and he is just as stunned as the remainder of the audience in conclusion.

The actual performance including patter which is an essential part of the routine is as follows:-

"Now hold up your cards please, how many are there?..., Four... when I turn around show the cards to all the audience... don't let me see the cards... come back second house and I'll finish the trick."

"Hide them from me now (turn to face audience) this is card number one (take from spectator as described) and card number two cards three and four." (cards are displayed in a fan).

"I am now going to push the cards half way in the pack like this, (the four cards are inserted half way into pack in readiness for the multiple card shift, I prefer the card shift for this routine but I could use the Hindu shuffle or any similar false shuffle that brings the four cards to the top of the pack in conclusion).

"These are the last four cards. . .this is the last thing I am going to do with cards, so I push the four cards into the pack and then shuffle off like this, (suit actions to words), I didn't always do this for a living. . .used to work on the halls . . .but now I only do one night stands. . .ONE NIGHT'S ALL THE AUDIENCE CAN STAND!"

Cards are now held in left hand mechanics grip style and the right hand covers the pack with a hank from the breast pocket, the performer's right side to audience from hereon until the vanish. Once hank is covering cards the left hand thumb counts the top four chosen cards and a break is held between these and the pack.

We are now approaching the vital part of the routine, so read very carefully from hereon with cards in hand.

Casually cross to the position of the gentleman on your left side but stop just out of his reach. . .so he would have to stretch in order to touch your extended arm. . .about five feet is correct. . .patter to the audience as you cross the floor. . ."Now I am going to take one card" from the pack. . . and THIS WILL NOT BE ONE OF THE FOUR CHOSEN CARDS. . . it will be a different card entirely." Reach under hank with right fingers taking hold of one of the four chosen cards BUT DO NOT REMOVE THIS CARD YET. . .look at the gentleman on your left and say "I want you to look at this card... show it to the audience. . .and make sure it is not one of the four cards."... Now and only now, after you have primed the man and the audience do you remove the card from under the hank. TAKE CARE THAT THE GENTLEMAN OR INDEED ANYONE IN THE ROOM DOES NOT SEE THE FACE OF THE CARD. . . NOW AS YOU HAND THIS CARD TO THE GENTLEMAN YOU ARE GOING TO VANISH THE PACK OR AT LEAST DISPOSE OF THE PACK FOR THE TIME BEING. HERE'S HOW. . . follow the moves carefully:-

The left hand is holding the pack under the hank with a break between the chosen cards. . . the right hand removes one card and this is handed to the spectator on your left as stated. . . now as soon as his fingers take the said card (and he must be made to reach out for the card in order to put as much distance as possible between the man and the performer) the RIGHT HAND RETURNS TO THE LEFT, GRIPPING THE THREE REMAINING CARDS AT THE FRONT OF THE PACK THROUGH THE HANK. . . and the left hand which holds the pack DROPS TO THE LEFT SIDE AND DISPOSES OF THE PACK INTO THE LEFT COAT POCKET...THE LEFT HAND THEN IMMEDIATELY RETURNS TO ITS FORMER POSITION TAKING HOLD OF THE THREE REMAINING CARDS AND ALLOWING THE RIGHT HAND TO FREE ITSELF FROM THE LEFT AND ITS HOLD OF THE THREE CARDS . . .THE DEED IS DONE. . .

You have ample time to effect the vanish, timing being the important thing. Now the audience are saying that you have found one of the chosen cards, so you say, "Well that cannot be right. . . what about the six of clubs: is this one of the four? (remove another chosen card from under hank and display) it IS. . . well the trick's going wrong." (remove next two cards one at a time) "What about the four of spades. . . (audience begin to clap because you have found four lost cards. . .so you stop them) — is this one of the four?" "IT IS?...Oh, well the thing's gone wrong. . . NO. . . NO don't clap, . . just throw bricks wrapped in pound notes. . . I must get a card that is not one of the four." (remove last selected card and display. . .keep left hand in same position fingers spread to simulate the pack under the hank). As you bring out the last selected card you will need to hold up your right hand in order to stem the applause as you say... "NO THE TRICK'S GONE WRONG... what I set out to do was make these four cards vanish...but instead I vanished the pack." (here you whip off the hank and take a bow).

This is a very difficult routine to explain on paper, hence you really need to see it in action and remember the vital points. What is happening from a practical viewpoint is that during the act all eyes are on you the performer. . .by conditioning your audience when the first card is removed from under the hank they are curious to see this card so they take their eyes from you and try to see the gentleman with the card. . . every person in the audience will follow the card with their eyes until the card is shown or seen by everyone, there is further delay as the gentleman looks at the card before he shows the card around. . .the man always hesitates because you have assured him "IT WILL NOT BE ONE OF THE FOUR CHOSEN CARDS." He knows you would not tell a lie, and your words conflict with his thoughts on the four selections . . .he does not know if you have made the mistake or himself. . .so he puts the blame on himself naturally. . . all this gives you more time for the disposal of the pack. Try the routine and don't be afraid of it. . .it is the best pack vanish I know.

The following is a solution to a self-posed problem. Extending from the performer's breast pocket can be seen both ends of a cord. A finger-ring is borrowed, and wrapped in a piece of paper. The paper is set on fire. When the paper has been consumed, the ring is nowhere to be found. The cord is withdrawn from the performer's pocket. There, at the centre of the cord, is the borrowed ring - tied onto the cord.

Neither the cord nor the ring are gimmicked. The ring is legitimately borrowed, and there are no duplicates involved. The performer's hands do not come near the ends of the rope until it is withdrawn from the pocket (and, in fact, the cord may be taken out by a spectator).

There is a gimmick involved: the performer's coat. U.F. Grant, Al Koran and John Cornelius have all created ingenious routines using prepared coats. To prepare for this effect, two slits must be cut into the lining of your jacket. One slit is through the back of the breast pocket, allowing access to the interior of the coat. The second slit goes from the inside of the coat into the left side pocket. Each slit should be at least two inches long.

The starting situation is as shown in figure one. The ends of the cord extend from the breast pocket, and the audience assumes the rest of the cord to be bunched up inside that pocket. In fact, the centre of the cord goes down through the first slit, and through the second slit into the side pocket. The length of the cord is approximately five feet, but this will depend on the size of the performer's body. Use a cord of medium weight - thicker than string, but thinner than rope.

Place a pack of matches into your left coat pocket, and a piece of paper in another pocket. and vou're set to start.

Any ring may be borrowed, but you will find some rings to be easier to work with than others. A large setting can get in the way, and a small diameter can also provide difficulties. Therefore, the ideal ring is a man's wedding band. However, you will find that the handling about to be described will function with just about any ring.

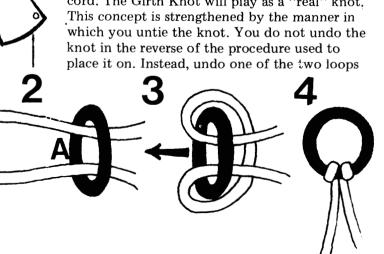

The ring is now apparently wrapped inside the paper. In fact, it is stolen out of the folded paper, using any of the age-old folds used for coin vanishes. (See the notes at the end of this write-up for alternate possibilities). The right hand holds up the paper packet, and the left goes into the side pocket (with the concealed ring), to obtain the book of matches.

During the brief time that the left hand is inside the pocket, the ring is tied onto the centre of the cord, using a Girth Knot, which does not require the ring to pass over the ends of the cord: the centre of the cord is pulled through the ring (refer to figure two). The thumb and forefinger grip the ring at its far side (point A in the illustration), and the middle and ring fingers spread and push the loop around the ring (refer to figure three). Tug on the ring, causing the loop to tighten into a knot (see figure four).

The above actions take but a moment. The left hand comes out of the pocket with the matches. A spectator is handed the matches, and told to light one, and set the packet on fire. The paper is burned; the ring is gone.

The ends of the cord are drawn out of the breast pocket, bringing the ring into view. You may, if you wish, have a spectator pull the cord out. For a bigger display, have two spectators stand on either side of you, and each pull an end of the cord in opposite directions.

The impact at this point is very strong. Remember, from the audience's vantage point. your hands have never come anywhere near the cord. The Girth Knot will play as a "real" knot. This concept is strengthened by the manner in knot in the reverse of the procedure used to place it on. Instead, undo one of the two loops of the knot by drawing the end of the cord up through the ring — much in the manner you would use to untie an Overhand Knot. The fact that this takes a lot of movement and a significant number of seconds will point out the impossibility of the ring having gotten tied onto the cord in the first place.

NOTES: Instead of a folded piece of paper, you may choose to vanish the ring from a small envelope — a slit in the bottom of which allowing you to steal the ring. (For some subtleties with this, refer to my "Thither", which appeared in Genii, December 1977).

An alternate approach to vanishing the ring is to use a Rattle Box. The excuse for going to the pocket is an idea shown to me by Roy Kissell, in conjunction with a next-of-boxes routine: you bring out a rubberband, which is then wrapped around the box. After appropriate patter, the box is opened, found to be empty, and the ring re-produced on the cord.

Al Smith SECONDS OUT

Peter Kane's "Audio Card Session" Vol.2 contains an interesting item which very neatly combines the Si Stebbins Set-Up and the second deal. Having worked the effect as per the tape I can testify as to its effectiveness. However, I'm sure the idea has been by-passed by many because of its reliance on the second deal, which is surely one of the most under-rated sleights in the whole card spectrum. The following version of Peter's effect (called, incidentally, "Son of Tetradism") dispenses with the second deal, and so should appeal to some. It features instead, a fairly well-known subtlety. Simply stated, the effect is that of a quadruple coincidence.

Stack the deck in either Si Stebbins or Eight Kings: actually, any recurring stack will suffice. Ace to king repeated four times will work, though the arrangement is a little obvious, of course.

False shuffle and spread the deck for a free selection. Have the card removed, placed down unseen to one side, and cut deck at point of removal as you square. If you are using the Stebbins or Eight Kings stack, a glance now at the bottom card will tell you what the selected card is. However, this is not necessary in actual performance.

With one card out of the deck, 51 remain, of course, and, 51 being divisible by three (17) makes the rest of the trick a natural. Mention this "51" business and proceed as follows:

Reverse deal 17 cards into a face-down pile. Deal another 17 to form a second pile, but deal as follows: thumb off 4 cards, without reversing their order, and drop onto the table to form a new pile. Repeat with 4 more cards — then 5 — then 4. The final 17 simply drop onto the table to make up the last pile.

Turn over the top card of each pile to show three entirely different and unconnected cards. (Actually, faint traces of the stack can be seen, but no-one is likely to notice it). Continue dealing and turning. The fifth card in each pile will match its mates — three fours for example. And to cap it all, the kicker comes when the selected card is shown to be the fourth member of the quartet. It sounds a little unimpressive in cold print, but is really very strong and totally inexplicable.

The strength of the Kane version was in the (apparent) uniformity of the deal of the first two piles. That uniformity is lost here, but most of it can be regained if the following method of dealing is adopted — first pile only remember.

Thumb off 4 cards, drop to table. Repeat twice: and then reverse deal the last 5 cards. Conclude as stated. Or:

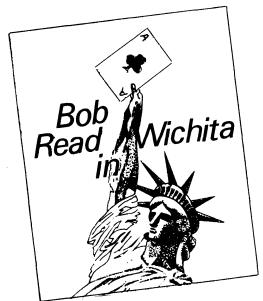

Thumb off 4 cards and drop onto table face-up. Repeat: 4 then 4 then 5. Leave this pile face-up. Conclude as already related, but deal from the face of this pile. Also, to improve the layout, make this the centre pile of the three. Offer no explanation for the face-up pile — none is necessary. Or:

Reverse count the first pile as follows: count fairly quickly 1-2-3-4 — drop to table: then 1-2-3-4 — to table: then 1-2-3-4 — to table: and finally 1-2-3-4-5 — to table. This is the normal reverse deal broken down into stages — apparently for speed and ease.

Follow up as follows for the second pile: 1-2-3-4 (reverse) then 1-2-3-4 (reverse) 1-2-3-4-5 (no reverse) and 1-2-3-4 (reverse).

There has to be a discrepancy in the dealing procedure, whether it be as described here, or the second deal approach used by Peter Kane. The important thing is to decide on a deal and stick to it. But make sure the deal is performed nonchalantly — do not draw any attention to it. The important thing is the selected card. Go to town on the freedom of choice. The deal will then be regarded (if at all) as just something that has to be done — and the sooner it's done and out of the way the better.

Comments: Credits: Chatter: The idea of the displacement deal comes from Les Johnson (The Phantom). My main contribution is to write the thing up and show that a number of different combinations are in fact possible. Peter Kane, as is so often the case, is the instigator of the whole concept.

Do you agree? The most inefficient companies in the world are suitcase manufacturers. I've had every conceivable model. The "Distorted metal rim won't close", the "Tear off handle" type, the "Metal prong on straps which snaps" version. I've even used the "Will lock/won't lock guess which", the "Punctured top/hole in the side" and the Mark I-Mark IV prototypes of the "Round corners nothing will fit" line.

I've crossed the Atlantic 6 times in as many weeks — with a different case on each occasion.

Mind you, the one with the bloody bones, plastic fish, ice cubes and wierd cups and balls goes with me on the 747—the other one with non essentials like clothes, money, papers—travels in the hold.

This time the act was on its way to Wichita to appal the adults and frighten the kids at the Joe Stevens Mid American Conclave.

This is the real Joe Stevens country. Joe is Mr Magic in Wichita, where he runs a successful magic shop, is big in community events, and is known to every media head and personality for miles around.

The cases and I — both battered — were picked up at the airport and whisked to Joe's fine home, where a barbeque was in full swing.

Big Obie O'Brien, Johnny Thompson, David Copperfield, Roger Crabtree, Roger Klaus, Ralph Marcom, Art Emerson, Gene de Voe and about 60 other finger licking finger flingers were all there.

The following day really started at 7.00pm at a press reception and party in which Joe introduced everybody who was anybody and a nobody masquerading as a somebody. I was the only one I'd never heard of — but I fooled 'em by wearing the 1940 gas mask that I took as protection against the volcanic dust.

At 9.30pm we adjourned to the Little Theatre, banked seating for 250, good views for all, where Ralph Marcom was in his element as an assured compere and introduced some excellent acts. Notable amongst these were Howard Hale, a fine manipulator with some clean off-beat steals and Lance, a youthful 19 going on 45 sophisticate with a delightfully superior air, presenting an unhurried clever silent act (or as I once saw an oriental dancer billed — a different slant on all the old tricks). Both Howard and Lance are worthy of a place on any bill — young and refreshing.

Not quite as young but just as refreshing was Art Emmerson (Peter Kane's agent) with a mental act, direct material and nice story line.

Everyone partied through to Saturday and, somewhat hungover, attended the John Cornelius lecture in which he casually performed miracles and tried to set light to his shirt.

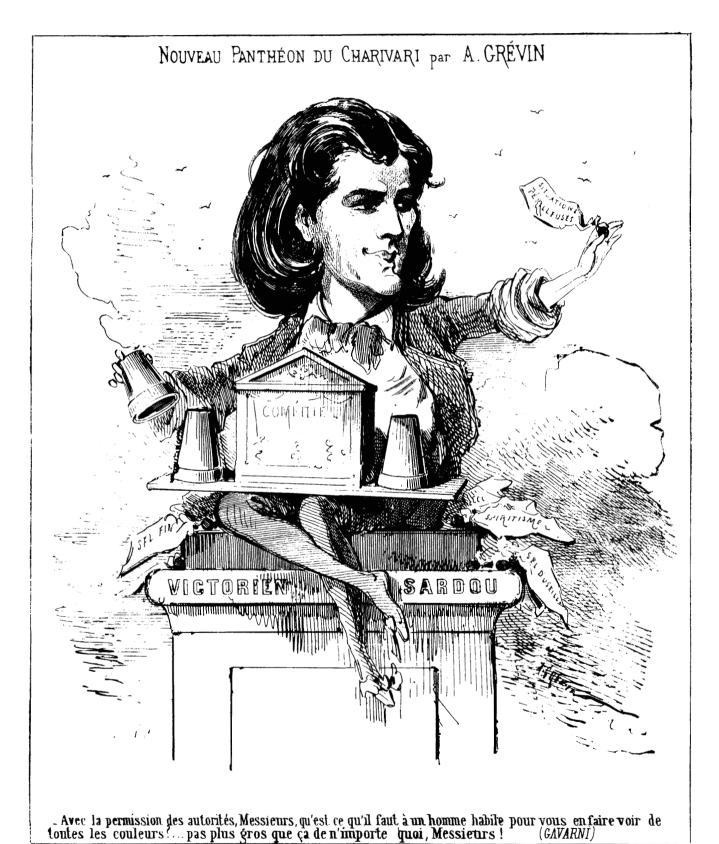

This gave way at 3.00pm to what for me was the highlight of the entire week. The Foan Family Circus Show. Foan consists of 7 (unrelated) young people who each in their own right are talented speciality acts but gestalt like when working together create a very funny, poignant happening which exudes no harm or ill will, no blue humour or snide jokes, no sarcasm or cynicism. Magic well done and laced with a gentle endearing humour.

There were at least 4 very competent jugglers in Foan, but it was only towards the end of the show when Julio Foan (Barrett Felker) did his solo 4 minutes did you realise you were watching a world beating class act. The kid was terrific. Throwing up seven balls, seven hoops, clubs — such talent — me, I was just throwing up.

Other very funny skits were David Copperfield doing the Dancing Handkerchief which ran amok and strangled most of the cast. The Jugglers anonymous running gag about compulsive jugglers, the sub trunk with a clever use of 3 ball juggling which continued over the cloth even as the change was taking place — think about it! The "12 days to Christmas" using standard effects — hilarious.

The whole act was well dressed and choreographed and was linked by a looker called Kathi de Francis who played piano, sang and provided a counter balance of charm and grace to the boys crazy antics. As I said to someone afterwards — "That's not a show — it's an emotional experience" — beautiful people.

After the break came the big show, lecture and close-up and I'll tell you about that next month.

FALLING PIPS

Tommy Wonder

The performer commences by removing his cards from the case and spreads them face downwards across the table as an introductory gesture. Gathering them up he bangs them on the table with some force — apparently to square the pack. The audience notice that the pips on the face card are now in a jumbled mass on the bottom half. Remarking that the cards must be of poor quality spread a few to show that they are similarly affected.

Closing the spread he then bangs the pack again on the table which causes the pips on the face card to resume their proper positions and when he spreads the cards face up across the table the pack is seen to be quite normal, and proceeds to use them for his next trick.

Preparation: You will require five cards having blank backs. I use the 8S - 6H - 7D - KD and the 6S. Line them up in this order face downwards, and with Letraset prepare them as shown in the sketch. The crumpled king is made by splitting another king and cutting out some parts which are then pasted on.

These five prepared cards are added to an ordinary pack in the order stated above so that reading from the face of the pack there will be the prepared back of the 8S followed by the other four prepared cards and then the rest of the pack face up. It will be necessary for the ordinary cards matching the prepared ones to be removed from the pack before placing in its case. With a felt tipped marking pen in your left jacket pocket you are ready to begin.

Performance: Remove the pack from its case and spread the cards face downwards across the table and gather them up rather unevenly which gives a reason for squaring them up by banging them on the table. This is done with the face card towards the spectators, the jumbled pips being at the end which comes into contact with the table. Watch the spectators and continue hit the pack on the table until you see they aware of the fallen pips. You then notice? what has happened and remark on the poor quality of cards these days as you show all the prepared cards in the following way.

With the pack in the left hand push off the top card (8S) and take it with the right hand. Repeat this with the next two cards (6H - 7D)

— each card going below the one previously taken. The next card (KD) is only pushed half way over to reveal the last of the prepared cards (6S) which is only pushed over a few millimetres, just enough to enable a left little finger break to be taken below it. Having displayed the cards push them back onto the top of the pack with the right thumb crotch so that when the set is more or less square they are thumb-palmed in the right hand. Pushing up with the left little fingertip as the set is being squared will assist in getting the set firmly into the right thumb crotch.

Both hands now move to the right bringing the back of the pack facing the audience and during this action the 'set' is turned over sideways. The right hand takes full possession of the pack and hits the end on the table a few times and the cards shown back to normal.

Naturally the spectators are suspicious — they will think (rightly) that the pack is not just an ordinary one, and will be more than usually alert at this point. To attempt to dispose of the prepared cards immediately would be a problem, so I go straight into my ambitious card routine by getting a card chosen right away — making sure that it is not one of the faked ones.

Taking the pen from my left coat pocket I have the chosen card signed, and as this is being done I get a little finger break under the five prepared cards which are at the top of the face up pack. Next—the pen is taken back with the right hand which passes it to the left which is holding the pack and as the right hand picks up the signed card the left hand puts the pen in the left pocket and at the same time leaving the 'set' with it. All eyes will be on the signed card which is the focal point. The action of putting away the pen will pass unnoticed being relatively of no importance.

At the end of the card sequence I hold the pack face down in the left hand and both hands go into the pockets in search of the card case. The right hand brings out the case and the left with the pack together with the set which has been added underneath it.

The pack is put back into the case and I am 'reset' — an important consideration as much of my work involves repeat performances as I move from one table to another.

The novel nature of the effect makes it an ideal opener — the attention of the spectators is engaged immediately the cards are out of the case by banging them on the table, and seeing the unusual effect this produces arouses their curiousity ensuring that they will continue to be interested as your act gets under way.

The Page boy speaks....

Yes, it's a young man's world. . .I was watching some video tapes last night in the company of Miss Terri Rogers and Val Andrews and I was quite surprised when Bill Bixby mentioned that David Copperfield was only in his early twenties. I thought back to when I was in my early twenties and realised that at that time I was still trying to learn magic and trying to figure out what to do in 'my act'.

That's how one thought of it in those days ...'my act'. Fifteen minutes was about right for most of the work I was doing then which was mainly in pubs or bars, and here is this young man Copperfield with his own TV show doing everything from small sleight of hand tricks to large scale illusions, woven into mini-plots with stage settings undreamed of by even the big time illusion acts of old.

We also had a look at Doug Henning who struck oil in recent years at an age when I was struggling to feed a wife, a child, a mother in law, a cat and a goldfish, and not too successfully either. I have never actually thought of age as such, with regards to myself that is, but recently, and I promise you every word of this is true, I was working in a military establishment and was talking to a young soldier and the conversation went like this:

Soldier: It must be a strange feeling for you to be in a military establishment rather than a night club or a restaurant or somewhere.

Me: Not really, I was once in the navy.

Soldier: Really...when was that?

Me: Oh, a long time ago. . .before your time.

Soldier: When. Me: 1947.

Soldier: (pausing for thought) Yeah. . .that was before my time. . .as a matter of fact my Dad was only four then.

END OF CONVERSATION

It suddenly struck me that to this young soldier I was an old timer. Can you imagine? ME. . .impossible. I walked back into my dressing room and burst out laughing. There was I thinking I still had something to offer and here is a young man looking at me probably in the same light as he would look at his grandfather.

If we may come back to the video tape for a moment, we have Messrs Copperfield, Henning, Siegfried and Roy and no doubt several others, all hitting the highspots with more or less the world at their feet. All are still young men, and they have one thing in common: they are not doing anything that they could call 'my act'. They are thinking bigger. They are in another world. . . the world of big business which can make them extremely vulnerable, but can result in them having financial rewards which in the past could only have been achieved by perhaps a film star. . . yes, it's a young man's world. . . good luck to them.

Then we looked at a video tape of an old film clip of Horace Goldin. It was taken not more than five to ten years before he died. . .he was near the end of his career and he was sensational. And I thought, yes it's a young man's world, but I'll bet there are still quite a few old timers still around who can teach them a thing or two, because they have something a young man can never have. . .experience. . .the ability to adopt a frame of mind which says "don't worry, you can do it, you have done it before many times".

And I thought to myself again — good luck to the young men who are making it big. . .but to hell with them at the same time. . .I am still making a living, my wife is happy, the kids are grown up, the cat, the goldfish and my mother in law are all dead. . I am not an old timer. . . I'm a survivor. . .and long may you and you and you survive.

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

This manuscript holds a somewhat unique status in that small but ever growing body of literature of the card magic of Larry West.

Those familiar with Larry's card magic may be surprised to find that these pages do not contain a single Elmsley Count!

Those familiar with Larry's card magic may be surprised to find that these pages do not contain a single Elmsley Count!

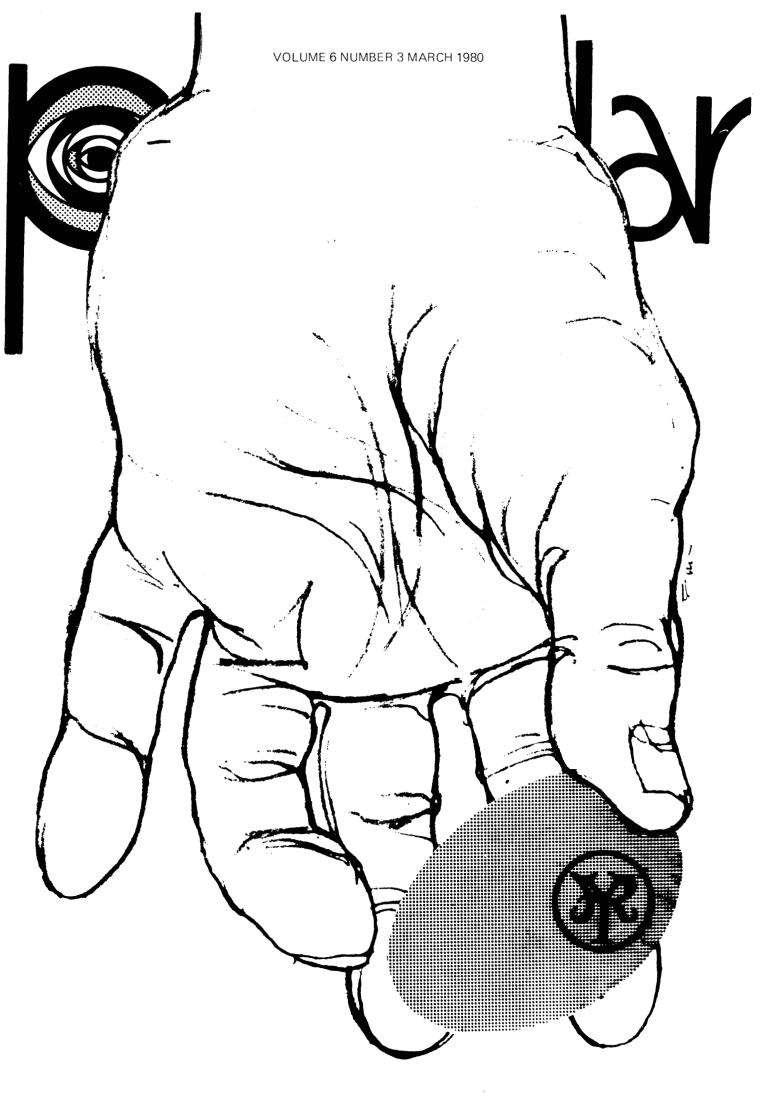

Nor will you find any Jordan, Hammon or Siva counts or indeed any other false counts. Instead you will find tive effects involving two decks of cards. Only one of the effects, 'Trance—position Supreme' employs any gimmicked cards(and these are supplied with the manuscript). There are no complicated sleights. All of the mystery in these effects is accomplished by psychological subtleties. The use of words and psychology is employed in lieu of sleights and gimmicks to achieve apparent mental control over the spectators' minds.

Send for your copy of this manuscript today. Together with two regular decks you are ready to read and learn with enjoyment the strange pearls of mystery formed in the weird mind of my friend the indomitable Larry West.

In this 'Remembering Ramsay' issue all the tricks have been contributed by his fellow countrymen. Only the two tricks described by Andrew Galloway are from the master of close-up magic himself, and give further insight into the subtle methods used by John Ramsay and the way in which he succeeded in deceiving the minds, expecially those of magicians who for so many years sought to discover his secrets. They failed to do so for one very simple reason - they were unaware of the principles of misdirection he employed and in consequence believed that the secret lay in the moves and sleights that John used. What they did not realise was that their minds, as well as the objects used, were being manipulated.

It was not until the appearance of 'The Ramsay Legend' and later 'The Ramsay Classics' that magicians in general became aware of the part misdirection played in deceiving them. We owe a great deal to Andrew Galloway for deciding to divulge the real secrets of his mentor.

The above mentioned books have been responsible for keeping alive the name of Britain's greatest master of close-up and in doing so have also provided valuable information on what is the real secret of successful deception — misdirection.

Considering the importance of misdirection remarkably little has been written about it, and pointers to its use in explanations of effects seldom appear. If one takes a comprehensive look at magical literature over the last half century it becomes evident that the energies of magicians have been largely expended in devising moves, sleights and ingenious mechanical apparatus. The object of many of these innovations is to avoid the necessity of employing misdirection.

It would seem that once the need to use misdirection has been eliminated some advantage has been gained. To make this assumption can lead beginners into believing that technical skill and/or precision engineering is all that is required to achieve complete deception. This is not so, for the simple reason that the spectator with a logical turn of mind can often form some idea of the underlying principles used to bring about the effect i.e. whether it was sleight of hand, previous preparation etc. Should you be performing in a close-up situation there is always the danger of such a spectator voicing his suspicions. He may not say a word, or know precisely the methods used, but if he is conscious that at some particular instant the performer did 'something', or he suspected that the effect achieved was dependent on some piece of apparatus, the magic will have gone out of the trick. When the climax arrives such spectators will be reflecting on their suspicions and trying to relate them to possible solutions, and in consequence will be less appreciative of the performer's efforts.

The only possible way to avoid this situation is by using misdirection in one of its many forms. Misdirection is a very complex subject and requires more space and time than is available at the moment — maybe we can pursue it later in depth.

There will probably be readers who will argue that there are experts among our fraternity who can perform certain sleights so perfectly that they are indetectable under the closest scrutiny — so what is the advantage to be gained by using misdirection. This argument requires at least two separate answers.

First — regardless of a performer's technical expertise there are occasions, due to many factors, when his sleight is less than perfect. When this happens it is a matter of no concern to the performer who has built in misdirection to cover the sleight enabling him to carry on regardless. The performer who has made no such provision is in trouble. The second answer is a question. If the readers claim that the sleight they were watching was indetectable how can they be sure that it was actually being performed? Let us assume they were watching an exhibition of second dealing in which the performer showed the top card and proceeded as follows. The first few cards were dealt slowly, as he explained that the illusion depended upon the cards being dealt fairly rapidly and then speeded up the deal for the next few cards. When he finally stopped dealing showed the same card still on top of the pack. It would be a simple matter for the 'expert' to have a duplicate card with an identifying mark on the back some way down from the top of the pack, and after dealing fair seconds slowly, proceed to deal from the top at speed until he reached the marked duplicate. Perhaps you think that experts are above such ruses. Believe me, they will stoop to anything to fool their fellow magicians.

One last word. It is because JOHN RAMSAY was the supreme master of misdirection that we are remembering him at this time. That's all.

FERLY DEFRAGMENTATION ETC.

EFFECT

A card is freely selected by a spectator who then signs it before returning it to the pack. The performer removes an envelope from his pocket and from it takes a folded slip of paper which he says contains a prediction. The spectator is asked to read out the message and informs the performer that he is wrong. Meanwhile the performer has torn up the envelope so he restores it and takes from it the chosen signed card.

PREPARATION

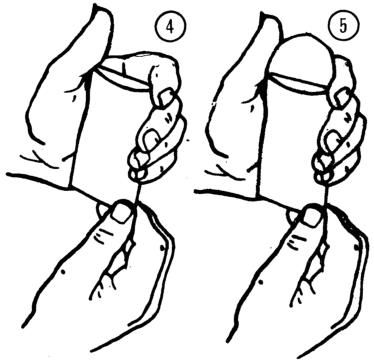

You will require two pay size envelopes sufficiently large to hold a playing card. One is sealed and a tear made across it on the face side near the bottom as shown in (Fig.1). Into the other put your prediction i.e. the name of a card on a folded slip of paper. The flap of this envelope is folded back and inserted into the tear of the other and both brought together as shown in (Fig.2). Put them into the inside coat pocket on the left side, or under the clip of a pen which is in that pocket (Fig.3).

WORKING

When the chosen and signed card is returned to the pack, control it to the top and palm it off into the right hand and hand back the pack to the spectator for shuffling. The right hand goes into the pocket and loads the palmed card into the sealed envelope via the tear. The flap of the other envelope acts as a guide to facilitate this operation. Bring out the envelopes which are from now on held as one and take them into the left hand which holds them as shown in (Fig.4), with the tear concealed by the hand.

Squeeze the sides of the envelope(s) which will cause the one containing the prediction to gape open. Allow the audience to see the folded slip of paper — they will also see that the envelope is otherwise empty. Now with the right fingers remove the prediction and drop it on the table. As it is being removed pull the envelope containing it forward sufficiently to disengage its flap from the tear and push it back again square with the sealed one. The tear will now be covered with the flap enabling the left hand to return to its original position with its back towards the spectators without exposing the tear.

Recap on what has happened so far, and invite the spectator to pick up the folded paper and read your prediction as the envelope is torn up in the following manner.

The right hand takes hold of the bottom right hand corner of the envelope(s) as shown in (Fig.4) and the left hand moves up and pushes the flap of the empty envelope upright (Fig.5). The left fingers now are hiding the tear. With the hands still in position moisten the flap and seal it down.

The actions throughout the above procedure can be made to appear exactly as they would if only one envelope was being handled.

Turn the envelope(s) over bringing the tear of the loaded one facing you and fold them in half so that the loaded one is the inner one of the two. Crease them sharply and hold them in the left hand. With the right hand unfold the outer empty one only and tear it into halves along the crease. The half in the right hand is now placed in front of the other half in the left hand which has the envelope containing the card folded behind it. In placing the halves together the torn edges should be lined up with each other.

Holding the complete package in the left hand with the torn edges uppermost — repeat the procedure. You will now have the four quarters of the torn envelope in the left hand with the twice folded loaded envelope concealed behind them.

The right hand now takes three of the torn quarters from the front of the package emphasising that the envelope is really torn. These three quarters are now returned to the left hand, not in front of, but into the torn quarter left there which acts as a pocket.

This pocket of pieces is palmed off into the right hand and the loaded envelope unfolded to reveal the restoration. The torn quarters are disposed of by pushing them into the restored envelope through the tear and you are now clean.

By this time the prediction has been read out and your trick has apparently failed, at least as far as the prediction is concerned, unless by chance you wrote the name of the card chosen in which case you are presented with a bonus.

Regardless of whether the prediction was right or not, the real climax comes when you tear open the restored envelope (along the tear already there) and pull out the chosen signed card.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

This excellent effect will certainly be the subject of many variations. I have seen the originator use a playing card to act as the prediction and even an empty envelope, having apparently forgotten to enclose the prediction. In the latter case the tearing up of the envelope is an act of annoyance at his forgetfulness.

It seems to me that the greatest possible impact would be obtained if the card chosen was forced. This would give three totally dissimilar effects following in rapid succession, a correct prediction, the torn and restored envelope and the transportation of the chosen card. There can be few effects in magic culminating in such a manner, and even fewer in which the final effect is comparatively stronger than the preceding ones.

One other suggestion. When using a folded slip of paper on which the prediction is written it may be better to have it sealed in some way so that it takes the spectator a few more seconds to open it and read the message. This would enable the envelope to be torn up casually and without haste as the prediction is being opened and read, and in consequence the presentation would benefit in two more ways. The heat would be off the performer during the tearing and there would be a smoother and quicker transition from the revelation of the prediction to the restoration of the envelope.

ROY WALTON — who was aware that the above effect was to appear in this issue sent the following for inclusion. It is short, but sweet — very much the latter.

The working follows the original pattern until the prediction is produced from the envelope. This proves to be in the form of a white visiting card which is placed onto the table. An envelope is torn up and the pieces held in the left hand — this is done in a manner conveying that it is no longer required. Spectator is asked to turn over the card and read the prediction. It says 'LOOK IN THE ENVELOPE'. You do a double take as if you can't believe your ears, and then restore the envelope and pull out the card.

Playtime 2. Tony Binarelli. Price 12 dollars and available from the author at Via Guiseppe Valmarana, 40 - 00139 Rome - Italy.

These well produced lecture notes are similar in format to Playtime 1 reviewed in the November issue Vol.5 No.11 and the text is accompanied by 21 photographs.

Italian Cutting the Aces No. 2 is a version of the same effect described in Playtime 1. The need for a duplicate set of aces has been eliminated and although it requires no set-up some advance preparation is required which necessitates it being an opener.

Doctor Jekyll - Mister Hyde has two presentations. One designed to obtain audience acclaim for the performer's skill, and the other with an entirely different objective — a thought reading effect. In the first effect the top card of the pack is turned face up. This card is then found next to a previous selection after a faro shuffle. The technique is the same for the mental presentation in which the performer divines two cards being 'thought of'.

Reverse. Three packs of differing sizes are examined and put into separate transparent plastic cases and handed to as many spectators. From a fourth pack a card is chosen and put back into the pack face up. On opening the cases the first two packs have a face up card corresponding to the chosen one, but the face up card in the third pack is wrong. This wrong card is signed by the performer on its face, and by the spectator on its back and placed on the head of a small statue. A fuse in the head of the statue is lit, and in a blaze the card is blown up into the air and transformed into the chosen card bearing both signatures.

There are four further effects one of which there is a stage version of Galaxy Telepathy. The close-up method appeared in Vol.5 No.11 of this magazine.

The material offered is not for the card man specialising in impromptu card tricks. The methods used to obtain the effects are extremely diverse, and in general require prior preparation. Use is made of wax, roughing fluid, marked cards etc to achieve the effects and if one is amenable to the use of these devices and willing to take the extra trouble entailed these notes have much to offer.

MINERVE

Sonny Day

Showing some of my magical friends some card tricks someone commented "You must have a lot of skill to do that." My reply "I don't need skill — it's just MY NERVE." Hence the title.

MINERVE is a locator made by cutting out the figure from one Joker card and sticking it over the picture of another Joker of the same design. Jokers which are coloured and of simple design are best for making this practical locator which has many applications. The centre being raised makes a 'thick' card, and also when in the middle of the pack it creates a break which can be found by sense of touch when cutting the pack either by the ends or sides.

TO LOCATE: Start with the 'Minerve' on the bottom of the face down pack. Spread the pack and have a card selected, and as it is being noted square up the pack and cut it bringing 'Minerve' to the centre. Cut at 'Minerve' and have selection replaced on the bottom half and replace the top half and square the pack. Bring the chosen card to the top by cutting at the break. To ensure that the break is a good one the left thumb exerts a slight downwards pressure on top of the pack.

I leave it to you what effects you produce — two of my own favourites will be found at the end of this article, but first here are a few variations on the standard cut which may be used to bring the chosen card to the top of the pack.

TWO HANDED CHARLIER: Hold the pack in the left hand as for the Charlier one-handed pass with the pad of the thumb on one long side and the tips of the fingers on the opposite long side. Relax the pressure of the thumb and the portion below the break will fall. The right hand pulls this portion away and places it on top of the rest of the cards completing the cut. It is not advisable to perform the regular one-handed Charlier.

THROW CUT: Hold the pack in the left hand in the normal dealing position, but with the tips of the fingers clear of the half above the break and only in contact with the bottom half. Raise the thumb, and with an action which is more of a jerk than a throw, toss the upper half above the break upwards and to the right and catch it in the right hand. Replace it in the left hand under the half which was retained in that hand.

DROP CUT: Hold the pack in the right hand with the fingers at the outer end and thumb at the inner end. Relax the grip slightly allowing the bottom half below the break to fall onto the waiting left hand which is held some six inches below. Place the half in the right hand under those in the left hand to complete the cut.

SPECTATOR CUT: Under cut the pack to bring the 'Minerve' card with the chosen card immediately below it to a position about one third down from the top of the pack. If the pack is then held in the left hand and a spectator requested to cut, he will, nine times out of ten cut at the break bringing his selection to the top.

FLOURISH CUT: Hold the pack in the left hand in the dealing position, but with the first finger at the outer end about a quarter of an inch from the right outer corner — somewhat similar to the mechanic's grip. Extend the right first finger and press it lightly against the bottom inner right hand corner and raise the half above the break holding it momentarily between the left and right first fingers. Move the right hand to the right and turn it palm uppermost to catch the top half. Complete the cut by putting the left hand half on top.

DOUBLE UNDER CUT: Under cut about one third of the pack with the right hand and have chosen card returned on top of the portion remaining in the left hand and drop the right hand packet on top. Under cut about one third as before and complete the cut. Using the Two Handed Charlier bringing the chosen card to the top and the 'Minerve' card to the bottom.

In all the above variations it is possible to check whether or not the chosen card is at the top after the cut without having to look at the pack. Just feel the face of the bottom card for 'Minerve'.

Now for the two effects mentioned earlier — the first being CUTTING THE ACES.

This is a routine devised by H.E. Burnside. The handling is easy and the effect created is out of all proportion to the skill required.

Start with 'Minerve' on the bottom and the four aces on top of the face down pack. Patter about how gamblers cut the pack in various ways as you demonstrate cut the pack twice using one of the methods described bringing an ace to the top.

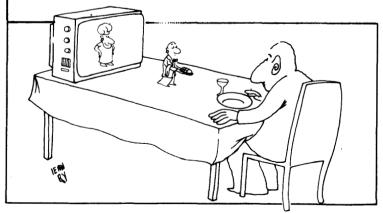

Show the ace and toss it face up onto the table. Cut twice more using a different method — show the ace and throw it to join the first one on the table.

Now prepare for the SPECTATOR CUT (to see if he is lucky???). If he is not lucky, continue to cut to the other two aces using different methods. Either way, you can cut the last ace behind your back, or blindfolded.

The second trick you claim to be the FASTEST TRICK IN THE WORLD. Have a card selected and returned (see TO LOCATE). When the card is in the centre of the pack under 'Minerve' patter about it being the fastest card trick etc and explain that to find their card you must know its name. Then say that when you 'snap' your fingers would they please name their card, and you will try and find it BEFORE they finish.

Prepare for the THROW CUT. Snap your fingers (right hand), and simultaneously do the THROW CUT. As you catch the top half of the pack with the right hand push the top card of the bottom half (the chosen one) over to the right with the left thumb, and with the first finger of the right hand turn it face up.

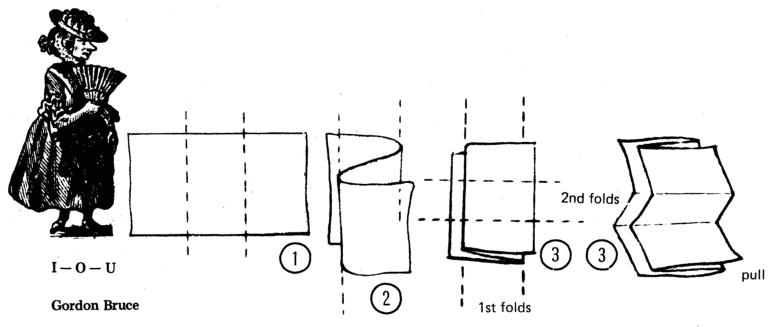

That is 'Minerve', and I hope it helps you to enjoy your magic.

The her Gjotherion C' Magnusson

From The Bob Read Collection. Number three in a series of six Tuskspelare i Paris.

The underlying idea here is to perform the Card in Wallet effect without tipping the finish ahead of time. No palming is involved, and a further bonus is the inclusion of a restoration and transformation.

PREPARATION

The twentysix cards at the face of an otherwise ordinary pack have I. O. U £10 boldly printed on their backs. Any wallet normally used for this effect is in the right inside coat pocket. A pen is also in the same pocket.

You will require a £10 note which is folded, zig-zag fashion, along the dotted lines as shown in (Fig.1) which will then appear as in (Fig.2). The dotted lines in the latter indicate where further zig-zag folds are made which result in the folded note appearing as in (Fig.3). By grasping the corner of the bottom of the note which is at 'A' with the left thumb and fingers and the other bottom corner which is under the first fold at 'B' with the right thumb and fingers, the note will open out as shown in (Fig.4) when both hands are pulled outwards in the directions indicated by the arrows.

Put the folded note on your lap, in your waistcoat pocket — or any other preferred place where it can easily be taken into the right hand secretly, and without arousing suspicion.

ROUTINE

Spread the pack face upwards and have a spectator withdraw a card making sure it is one of those pre-printed.

Hand the spectator the pen and ask him to sign his name across the face of his selection.

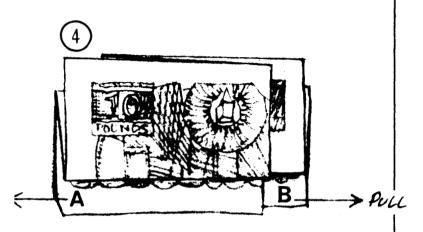

Pick up the signed card and show the spectator the printing on the back to show he has actually signed an I. O. U.

Place the card face up on the top of the face up pack and act as though the whole thing is just a gag. Apparently deal the card onto the table turning it face down, but really deal the second card. This is a 'necktie' second, in which the outer end of the pack is angled upwards sufficiently to prevent the spectator from seeing what is really a switch. Immediately the card is on the table point up the I. O. U. on its back and in a semi-serious manner remind him that he really did sign an I. O. U.

Retrieve your pen with the right hand and pass it over to the left hand which is still holding the pack. Open the right side of your jacket with the right hand and drop the pen into the inside pocket and at the same time thumb off the chosen card from the face of the pack into the wallet. It need not go all the way in just yet. Replace the pack on the table.

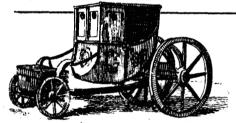

During the above actions you have secretly obtained the folded £10 note and continue by pointing out that the I. O. U. is completely legal, but you would not think of holding the spectator to it. As you patter to this effect tear up the card into quarters keeping its face from the audience. Square up the four pieces and fold them in half, and half again. This 'locks' them together. During the tearing and folding transfer the note which has been hidden behind the right fingers into the left hand.

When the folding of the torn pieces is completed switch them for the note leaving them behind the left fingers and pull open the note as explained earlier as you say "I'd rather have the money." The transformation of the torn and folded card into the fully open note, can, and should be made to appear instantaneous.

The right hand places the note on the table, and the left hand goes into the inside pocket to get the wallet into which you are going to put the note. Before removing the wallet you complete loading the card by pushing it right inside and leave the torn card behind in the pocket.

Open the wallet and find the chosen and signed card inside and kid the spectator that he still owes you £10. Grab the £10 note and put it in your wallet.

UNSUSPECTED EXTRA

Andrew Galloway

It happened when Ramsay was in his late seventies, during one of his lectures to magicians. After performing a few of his specialities, John announced that he would like to show them one of the first coin tricks he learned — the Vanishing Penny in a Glass of Water, and while he realised that they were all conversant with the method, it was a lovely effect and seldom seen.

John showed a glass of water and a handkerchief. He then went to his pocket for a coin as he gave the handkerchief to a spectator. A moment later he was puzzled to hear sniggers from the audience and then noticed that they were all looking at the hand which he thought held the penny. Imagine his embarrassment when he saw that he had mistakenly taken out the glass disc instead.

Mumbling an apology John threw the glass disc onto the table. After a moments thought, he said he would do another trick with a coin and handkerchief.

A penny was borrowed from the spectator which John covered with the handkerchief giving it to the spectator to hold. He then asked him to hold the handkerchief over the glass and release the coin. This being done, the handkerchief was removed to reveal that the coin had completely dissolved.

The spectators were non-plussed — the crafty devil had led them up the garden path having fooled them with what they believed was a new method for an old trick. They were partially right, John had sold them true enough, but the working was the same.

He actually had two glass discs in his pocket, finger palming one and bringing out the other at his finger tips. The visible one was tossed aside, and as the onlookers were thinking 'poor old soul, he's past it', John was calmly switching the other disc for the borrowed coin under the handkerchief.

John explained to me that he could not have got away with this in his younger days, as he did make that kind of blunder. As he got older he accepted the fact that he was not quite so sharp, and it was reasonable to suppose that others might expect him to make the occasional mistake, so John decided to take advantage of this assumption.

The subtle thinking behind this ruse was quite exceptional — like John Ramsay himself.

THE CHANGELING

Andrew Galloway

One of the last tricks which John Ramsay worked on was this shortened version of 'Spellbound' which brought into use a few of his favourite moves.

Briefly the effect was that a copper coin held at the fingertips of the left hand was lightly stroked by the open fingers of the right hand causing it to change into a silver coin.

This coin, when dropped onto the empty palm of the left hand was instantly transformed back into the copper coin.

PREPARATION

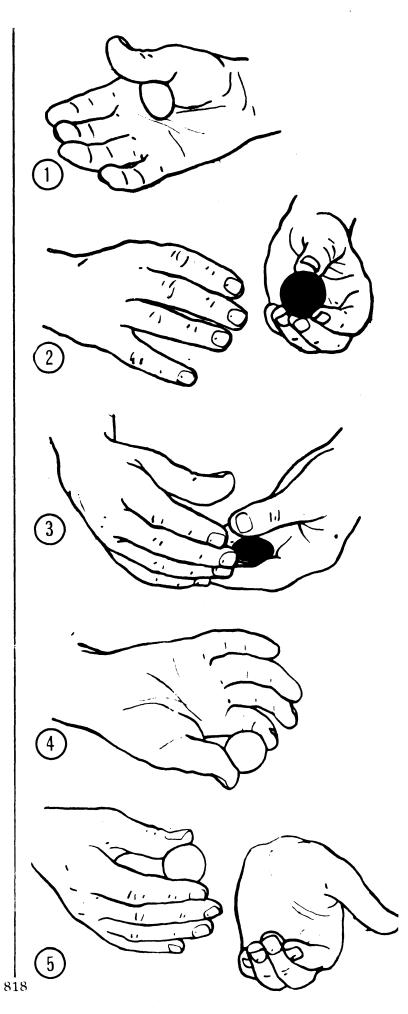

You will require a copper and silver coin. John used a half-crown and an old English penny, but for descriptive purposes we will call them copper and silver. Have both coins in the right outside coat pocket — the silver coin at the rear and the copper near the front.

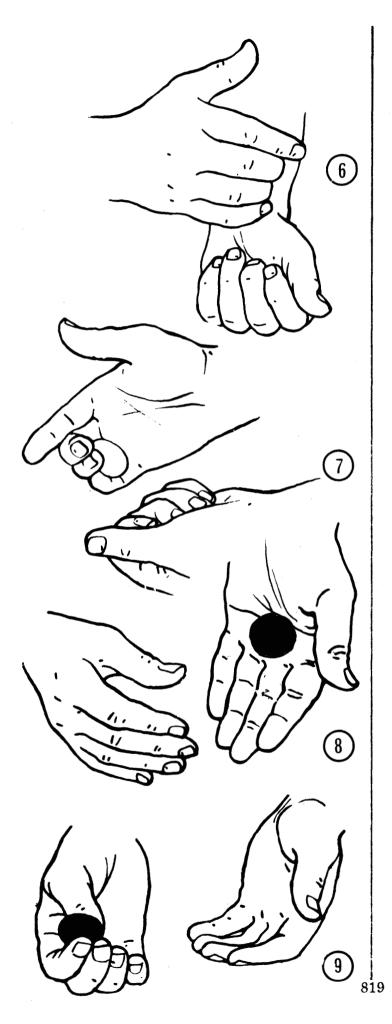

METHOD

1. The first sleight employed is the Ramsay Palm fully described on page 39 of the 'Ramsay Classics'. A brief explanation follows.

The coin is held between the tips of the thumb and first and second fingers of the right hand. Bend the two fingers inwards sliding the coin along the underside of the thumb. Continue to push the coin inwards where it is gripped between the base of the thumb and the palm as shown in (Fig.1). In this particular effect this is carried out with the hand in the pocket, so you will have all the cover you require.

- 2. When ready to perform, reach into the pocket with your right hand and Ramsay Palm the silver coin, and then pick up the copper between the thumb and forefinger. Remove the hand and display the copper coin. Transfer it to the left thumb and forefinger, turning it over in the process. This allows both sides of the copper coin to be seen and also that the left hand is otherwise empty.
- 3. Take the coin back with the right fingers, and turn the left hand palm up. Replace it back into the left hand which holds it as shown in (Fig.2).
- 4. The right hand, with its fingers slightly apart, also shown in (Fig.2), approaches the left, more from the front than the side and cover the copper. Immediately the back of the right hand obscures the coin the left fingers relax their grip letting it fall into the curled fingers. See (Fig.3) for a side view. The Ramsay Palmed silver coin in the right hand is now grasped by the edges between the left thumb and fingertips and the right hand moves back to its original position revealing the transformation from copper to silver. The right hand actually places the palmed silver coin into the position just vacated by the copper. During this move the left hand stays perfectly still, its thumb only relaxing sufficiently to release the copper coin which falls into the curled fingers in the finger palm position. To the audience it should appear that the open fingers of the right hand merely brush lightly over the copper for an instant to effect the change, after which both hands are again in the position shown in (Fig.2). Only the coin has changed.

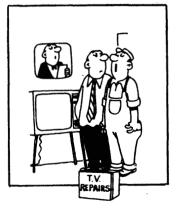

- 5. The left hand now transfers the silver coin to the right hand which holds it as shown in (Fig.4) and shows both sides. The copper coin remains concealed in the left hand, finger palmed.
- 7. You now apparently drop the silver coin onto the left palm and close the fingers over it. Actually, your right thumb releases it, letting it fall onto the slightly curved fingers of the right hand, and at the same close the fingers of the left hand. See (Fig.6) for the spectator's view at this point and (Fig.7) as seen from the rear. The copper coin is on the left palm under the closed fingers.
- 8. The left hand now moves a few inches to the left and then opens to reveal the change from silver to copper (Fig.8). If you try these actions to the mental count of three it will help to get the timing correct. On 'one' the silver coin is seemingly dropped into the left hand, on 'two' the left hand moves away and on 'three' it opens to show the copper coin.
- 9. With the right hand pick up the copper and display its other side keeping the silver coin concealed in the finger palm, but allowing the palm to be seen empty (Fig.9).

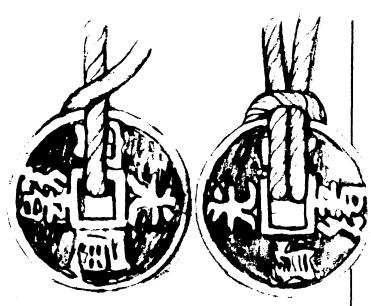

REMARKS

A careful study of the text and illustrations will convey how Ramsay gave the impression that both hands were empty at all times except for one coin, without resorting to sleeving, back palming etc.

The change described in steps 7 and 8 is adapted from an excellent coin vanish, which, if I remember correctly was taught to John by Max Sterling. Fred Kaps is the only other magician I have seen use it, and in his hands the effect is all that could be desired.

"You've been juggling with the vertical hold, haven't you?"

QUADRUPLE INFLATION

Alex McFadzean

One of the many excellent effects for which magicians have to thank Ken Brooke is Fred Kaps fine close-up coin trick in which, after some preliminary effects with normal sized coins further coins are produced magically, each succeeding coin being larger than its predecessor, the final one being a really giant coin.

Inevitably its appearance resulted in similar routines being 'invented' and the required Chinese coins being offered for sale. The routine to be described follows the general pattern of the original, but instead of the productions following each other in rapid succession they are interspersed with other effects.

You will need a purse with snap fastener and a purse frame similar in design with the bag removed, a piece of rope about three feet six inches, a large patterned handkerchief and four Chinese coins which will be referred to by number for descriptive purposes. No.1 being the smallest and No.4 the largest.

Your jacket should have an inside pocket on both sides. I might add here that Johnny Ramsay advised me to have my suits made with a pocket on both sides. Mine also has a small pocket directly below the one on the left side.

To set up for performance put No.1 coin in the purse and No.2 coin behind it. Put these into the left trousers pocket.

Fold the handkerchief twice making it a quarter of its size and fold it around No.3 coin. Put this package into the left inside pocket.

The purse frame is placed into the outside breast pocket with one leg of the frame resting on the edge of the top of the pocket for easy removal. Put the length of rope into the small pocket below the one containing coin No.3 in the folded handkerchief.

No.4 coin (the giant one) is kept hidden and placed on the lap when ready to perform. In the original version it was kept in a special holder beneath the coat, but in fairness to those who purchased the effect it is not described here. One suggestion is to keep it behind your table mat and release it onto your lap as you take your seat.

Lastly — you will require a spectator to be seated on your right and slightly forward.

Commence the trick by removing the purse with No.2 coin concealed behind it from the left trouser pocket. Call attention to the purse as you rest it on the table still holding it with the left hand. Open it with the right hand which then takes the purse holding it with the fingers on the inside and the thumb at the rear gripping No.2 coin. Turn the purse upside down and let No.1 coin fall onto the table.

Invite spectator to take a look at the coin and as he does so casually place the purse, with the No.2 coin concealed beneath it onto the left hand, and close it. Right hand now takes the purse and drops it into the right outside coat pocket, leaving No.2 coin finger palmed in the left hand which is resting naturally on the table. The attention of the audience is on the spectator who is examining the coin and they will hardly be aware that you have disposed of the purse which is no longer required. However, you pass some remark about the coin and LOOK DIRECTLY at the audience as you ditch the purse. The left hand does not move from its position, but remains resting naturally and relaxed concealing No.2 coin. As Johnny would say - hold and hide.

Take No.1 coin from the spectator with the right hand and as you do so close the left hand very slightly (just enough to grip the coin No.2) and turn it back towards the audience. Now perform Ramsay's coin through hand effect, saying "Not only does the coin pass through the hand it also grows." As all eyes are on No.2 coin classic palm No.1 in the right hand.

When they recover from the surprise of No.2 coin say, "I have another purse" as you remove the purse frame from the outer breast pocket with the right hand. Take it with the left hand and hold it up for all to see. As all eyes are focussed on the purse frame let No.2 coin in the right hand drop from its classic palm position into the finger palm. With the right hand open the frame and take coin from it. Toss the coin onto the table beside No.2 coin and return frame to pocket.

The right hand next removes the rope from the small pocket and throws it onto the table requesting the spectator to "Take a look at it." Keep your own eyes directed towards the rope and spectator and casually remove the handkerchief from the left inside pocket with the coin No.3 hidden behind it. The handkerchief is placed onto the table with the coin concealed beneath it.

You next take the rope with the right hand and the coin No.2 with the left and thread the rope through the hole in the coin. Transfer the coin to the right hand which holds it above the hole between its thumb and fingers while the left hand evens up the ends.

The left hand now takes hold of the bottom edge of the coin gripping both the coin and the rope between its thumb and fingers. With both hands still holding the coin raise the hands and look at the ends of the rope making some comment about them being even. Under this misdirection the right hand twists the coin anti-clockwise bringing the side of the coin facing the audience towards yourself and the hands lowered to their original position. The action of twisting the coin will cause the halves of the ropes to cross over immediately below the bottom edge of the coin (Fig.1). The left thumb and fingers grip the rope firmly at the point where the halves cross while the right hand takes the end of the right hand side rope and pushes it through the hole in the coin. The right hand now lets go of the rope and is passed through the loop just formed and grasping the end of the rope pulls it back through the loop. Continue to pull until the loop is tightened up against the bottom of the coin (Fig.2).

The action of threading the rope twice through the coin takes only a few seconds and if performed without fuss no-one will suspect the subterfuge used. All the movements used are natural, and necessary to achieve what you are supposed to be doing — simply threading the rope through the hole in the coin twice.

Take the coin with the right hand keeping the looped part hidden and place it under the corner of the folded handkerchief nearest the spectator taking care not to 'clink' it against No.3 coin. Give the ends of the rope to the assisting spectator to hold.

Next you pick up No.1 coin and say "I am going to link this coin into the one under the handkerchief." Both hands go under the handkerchief and put it on top of No.3 coin which you then push nearer to No.2. It does not matter if they 'talk' — you are supposed to be linking them.

What you really do is to open the loop on No.2 coin and release it from the rope. Leave this coin under the handkerchief, but palm No.1 again and bring the hands from under the handkerchief.

After a pause ask the spectator to slowly pull on the rope. Everyone will be expecting to see two coins linked and on the middle of the rope. As the rope is being pulled your left hand picks up coin No.4 and holds it just hidden behind the table top with your forearm resting naturally on the table. You also lean forward as if with interest as the middle of the rope comes into view, but really to give more cover to No.4 coin.

When the middle of the rope comes into view the spectators attention will be on the handkerchief wondering if the two coins beneath it are now linked. Reach over with the right hand and taking the far corner of the handkerchief pull it back to reveal No.2 and No.3 coins.

The appearance of the larger coin is a surprise and provides more than adequate misdirection to enable No.4 coin to be lifted above the table edge and taken with the right hand behind the handkerchief.

Two things now happen simultaneously. The left hand picks up No.3 coin — looks at it in disbelief — and drops it back onto the table as the right hand lays the handkerchief on the table with No.4 coin hidden beneath it. The timing of these actions are important — the handkerchief should be laid on the table (as casually as possible) when you are looking at No.3 coin.

Continue by remarking that whenever the big coin appears (No.3) the small one (No.1) disappears, but I can always find it. Remove purse frame from outer pocket and produce No.1 coin from it. Remember you had it palmed in the right hand.

You are now ready for the climax. Call attention to No.1 which you are holding by saying "This is a big coin." Pick up No.2 coin saying "This is bigger still" and as you pick up No.3 say "This is the biggest of all — except for this one." Remove the handkerchief to reveal No.4 coin.

This being a 'Remembering Ramsay' issue here is a Ring off Rope Johnny frequently showed. The ring he used was a glass one which he fixed onto the centre of the rope in a similar way to that explained above with the coin. Holding the ends of the rope — one in each hand — he would swing the ring over his head so that it hung behind his back. He would then put both ends of the rope into his mouth which would leave his hands free to go behind his back and take the ring off the rope. This is one Ramsay trick that anyone can do.

"...AND THE CARD CAME BACK"

Peter Duffie

This is an effect I've used for some years. The plot is that of the recurring card, but with a surprising climax.

Remove from the pack the following cards. Joker, Ace of Hearts, Ace, King, Queen, Jack and Ten of Spades and put them face downwards onto the table in that order with the Joker at the face on the bottom of the packet. Place the remainder of the pack face down at an angle of 45 degrees and slightly to your right.

As all presentations are individualistic I'll leave that aspect to you and proceed with the working.

Pick up the packet and hold it face downwards in the right hand in the Biddle position — fingers at the outer end and thumb at the inner end. You now show the packet as containing four Jokers and the Ace of Hearts using the Hammand Flustration Count as follows.

Turn the right hand over to show the Joker and then turn it down again. With the left thumb pull off the top face down card of the packet into the left hand. Repeat this twice more. You have now shown three Jokers one at a time and taken them into the left hand. Show the Joker again and turn the packet face down as before. This time you actually take the Joker into the left hand by pulling it off the face of the packet with the left fingers taking a break with the little finger below it as you do so. The three remaining cards in the right hand are kept square as one card and the face card shown—the Ace of Hearts. This/these are then dropped face down on top of those already in the left hand. Reading from the top of the face down packet the order of the cards is King of Spades, Ace of Spades, Ace of Hearts, Joker above the little finger break, and Queen, Jack, Ten of Spades below it.

Deal off the top card face down onto the table saying, "The red Ace — that leaves four Jokers" as you count the remaining six cards as four into the right hand. This is done by taking the top three cards above the break as one and the remaining three on top, one at a time.

You now show that the Ace has returned to the packet in the same way as you showed the packet to contain four Jokers and the Ace at the beginning, but this time only three Jokers are shown with the Ace. Display Joker at the face and pull off top card with the left thumb. Repeat. Show Joker again and pull off with left fingers taking a break below it. Show the Ace with two cards hidden behind it and drop as one on top of the packet. Deal the top card onto the table. Count the remaining five cards as three by taking the three cards as one above the break and the other two singly, saying, "That leaves me with three Jokers."

Again show that the Ace has returned as before using the same procedure. This time you show the Joker at the face and pull one card off the top only, and then pull the Joker out with the left fingers. The Ace with the two cards hidden behind it are then dropped onto the packet. No break is needed this time. Deal the top card onto the table and count the remaining four cards as two by buckling the bottom card and taking the top three as one and then taking the single card on top.

Show that the Ace has returned once more by showing the Joker at the face and pulling it off with the left fingers. Show the other card to be the Ace (actually three held as one) which you place on top. Obtain a break above the Ace i.e. below the two top cards. Take the cards with the right hand holding them in the Biddle position, its thumb taking the break.

Pull off the top card with the left thumb and drop it onto the table cards immediately slapping the left hand on top of all four cards. Simultaneously with this action the right hand has moved over the angled pack and released the two cards below the break allowing them to fall onto the pack.

Finally drop the card remaining in the right hand onto the back of the left hand which is covering the four tabled cards with its fingers spread out. Ask the spectator to guess the name of this card. Whatever his reply, turn it over to reveal the Ace of Spades. Remove the left hand and invite the spectator to turn over the four cards which complete a Royal Flush.

Over the past few weeks I've been once again (you've guessed it) in the United States. My reason for being there this time was to attend the S.A.M. Passadena convention. Let's throw in a few things that come to mind.

I was booked to appear on one of the shows which I did fairly successfully and to do some close up which I also did ditto. Appearing on the close up made it difficult to see the other acts, but I did manage to catch John Cornelius who is very, very good. Most of his stuff is his own, more or less, but the thing that caught my eye, and everyone else's, was I have just realised how difficult it is to describe but let's try. Do you remember the thing David Roth did with a tuning fork and a glass where he transferred the sound from his hand to the glass? Well John Cornelius does it with light . . . yes you read correctly . . LIGHT. He actually makes a light appear under a glass . . . a flash of light that is, and the glass is empty, before, during and after the effect, and before you start asking questions of each other he does it either on the table or the palm of his hand.

Dai Vernon is still as active as ever. He was at the convention talking, talking and talking, and everyone was listening, listening and listening. Albert Goshman deserves three cheers so I'll say it . . . Hip Hip Albert . . . He has at last had his operation and has had a new plastic hip joint inserted you know where so that he no longer looks as if he is a misshapen sponge ball. It took a lot of courage but he did it. At the moment he has to use a walking stick but his doctor tells him that as long as he takes things easy he should be able to make it vanish soon.

I managed to catch two close up workers at the Magic Castle. Peter de Paula and Johnny Platt. The first is a young good looking guy who does coin and card tricks well. He has been influenced by Slydini but fortunately does not copy his style which so many others have tried to do unsuccessfully. Johnny Platt I have seen many times. He is into his seventies and the Magic Castle still employ him. Can you imagine that? There has to be a reason and there is. He's good, very good. He is probably doing the same stuff he has been doing for yonks and he really knows how to do it, plus the fact of having a good rapport with his audience. The vanishing cane in newspaper was his opener (I think) and he closed with the Cups and Balls. Inbetween he did a thumb tie and a card trick and a coin trick... .now there's variety for you. I almost forgot, he started with Squash and and after the C and B the glass of wine appeared under one of the cups and if I am not mistaken it was the self same glass . . .

In Los Angeles I had a chat with Channing Pollock. For everyone, particularly in Britain, who keeps wondering what has happened to him, he now operates in an executive capacity for an oil and gas exploration company and spends most of his spare time indulging himself on his hobby which is stringed instruments with particular emphasis on the violin. Yes, he actually plays the violin so watch out Norm Neilson. . .

In Kansas City for the Midwest Annual Magifest (I think that's what they call it) I saw Bob Olsen do close up. He didn't fool me, but he made me laugh. His close up act has to be the zaniest of all time.

As well as all this I did a lecture in Chicago and went to the Abbott Convention in Colon Michigan, but that is another story

But it is a funny thing; of all the close up magic I have seen in the last few years, both here and in the U.S. and in many other countries very little of it comes even close to some of the magic I once saw performed by a little man from Ayr, Scotland.

GASPERS GALORE

Kevin Davie

This is not a cigarette production. I was showing tricks in a pub to a man who later volunteered to show me one which he had learnt from a fellow soldier during the war who won many cigarettes doing it. At the cessation of hostilities, the soldier revealed the secret to my acquaintance.

When the man took the cards from me I noticed he had a badly mis-formed little finger. It protruded outwards at a right angle at the middle joint. I cannot remember whether it was on the right hand or left, but as it has nothing to do with the trick — forget it.

The trick itself, like most good tricks is simple. It is the discovery of a thought-of card in a surprising manner. It has a number of strong points, plus an interesting approach to secretly changing a card. Any pack may be used and there is no prior preparation.

Commence by spreading the pack face up so that only the first seven or eight cards at the face are exposed, and ask a spectator to think of any one. As soon as he indicates that he has one in mind proceed to spread the rest of the cards. Correctly done, this will create the impression that he could have thought of any card in the pack.

Put the pack face up behind your back and tell the spectator that you will bring 'hem out in batches, and when he sees the card he is thinking of to tell you, but not to name the card.

Proceed by bringing out the first batch of seven or eight cards, one from the face of the pack and the rest from the bottom. Continue with this procedure until the spectator informs vou that he sees his card. The card he thought of will be at the face of the batch.

Bring the rest of the pack from behind your back turning it face downwards as you do so and place the batch containing the selection face down on top holding a break below the selection. Collect the rest of the cards and put them face down on top of the pack.

Put the pack behind your back and request the spectator to concentrate on the card and you will attempt to find it by sense of touch. Cut the pack at the break bringing the selection to the bottom, and pull it out for about half its length to facilitate the change which will take place later.

Bring out the top card and show it, claiming it to be the one mentally selected and immediately, before the spectator has time to deny it return it behind the back and replace it back on top of the pack changing it for the selection which is conveniently protruding from the end of the pack. This card is then brought forward and dropped face downwards onto the table as you are asking the spectator if he is quite certain that you are wrong. You will find that the spectator will be unaware that the card went behind your back — he will be occupied answering your question and be off his guard, thinking you have been unsuccessful.

The finish to the trick is optional. The soldier used to put three or four cards aside and then bet that one of them was the right one. This way he got more cigarettes. Personally I usually give the spectator the pack and ask him to find the card and form a clear picture of it in his mind. He will fail to find it so you remark that if it is not in the pack it must be the one on the table. Push it towards the spectator with the index finger and for the first time ask him to name the card he thought of when he does so, ask him to look at the tabled card.

SIGN THERE

Kevin Davie

There is a trick in which a card is chosen, signed and lost in the pack, and is eventually found in another pack having a different coloured back.

In the following effect the card disappears and is found reversed in a pack with a different coloured pack which has been in its case in an inside pocket. Now for the difference — the back of the signed card matches the pack which has been in the pocket at all times — say a blue backed one, whereas it was chosen from a red backed pack.

A minimum amount of preparation is necessary. Take any card, say the three of diamonds, from a blue backed pack and add it to the face of a red backed pack. Remove the red backed three of diamonds from the pack.

Put the blue backed pack in its case with the face card next to the side of the case to which the flap is hinged. Push the flap in between the top card and the rest of the pack, and then pull out the top card so that it protrudes for about half its length. Put the pack so arranged into the inside coat or shirt pocket on the left side with the cards facing outwards.

You will also need a pen which will write easily on the surface of a playing card. A felt or nylon tipped one is fine.

Begin by forcing the blue backed three of diamonds which is at the face of the red backed pack using a method that will not expose that it is an odd backer. Personally I use a method described in Lorayne's 'Close-up Magic'. However, if you are not acquainted with this method, the Hindu shuffle method would suffice for the moment.

Whatever method is used the three of diamonds must be at the face of the pack at the conclusion.

Hold the pack in the left hand in the 'glide' position with the three of diamonds facing the audience and give the pen to a spectator and have him sign the face of the card. Turn the left hand so that the face of the signed card cannot be seen and apparently pull it off the pack and lose it by pushing it into the centre of the pack. Actually it is 'glided' back and it is the one above that the audience see pushed into the pack. If the Lorayne method of forcing was used the spectators have now twice seen that the chosen card has a red back — or so they believe.

Sometimes I spread the pack face down and remark that the card is now lost in the pack. This further reinforces the idea, without actually saying so, that the selected card was red backed.

The next move is to secretly palm the three of diamonds from the bottom of the pack into the right hand without its back being seen and then introduce it into the blue backed pack in the pocket. I use the 'Palm Steal' described elsewhere in this issue, and hand the pack out to be shuffled. The right hand, with its palmed card goes to the pocket for the blue backed pack into which it loads the chosen card. Both the chosen card, and the one originally left protruding to act as a guide for the loading operation are pushed down into the case and the pack brought from the pocket.

You now explain that earlier you reversed one card in this pack. Remove the cards from the case and cut them bringing the reversed three of diamonds near the centre. Spread them face down in a tight fan sufficiently for the index of the face up three of diamonds to be seen without exposing the signature on its face. At this stage the effect will appear as one of coincidence.

Pause a moment for this to sink in, and then slowly pull the card from the spread revealing the spectator's signature. Pause again, as they are wondering how the signed card the spectator has in the pack he is holding managed to escape. Show that the signed red backed card has a blue back. This revelation will cause them to think that maybe the red backed three of diamonds is still in the pack — after all it never left the spectator's hands. Inevitably the spectator with the pack will search for a three of diamonds, but he will be too late — you removed it before the trick started.

"That's Bugs, he's in showbiz."

HIGHLY-SKILLED ACES

Kevin Davie

With a complete lack of modesty the performer promises to give a highly skilled demonstration of pasteboard prestidigitation. He begins by putting the four Aces in different places at random in the pack. He now subjects the pack to a series of fancy cuts and flourishes in an extravagant manner. Each series of cuts is supposed to produce an Ace, but instead of the Aces appearing it is an indifferent card e.g. the Jack of Spades, which is produced each time — not so highly skilled. However, the performer redeems himself — the Jack of Spades immediately turns into an Ace.

As many flourishes and false cuts as possible should be introduced into the routine. I have not described the ones I use as all cardmen will have a number in their repertoire. To create the best effect the false cuts should be as different and 'showy' as possible.

Begin by controlling the Aces to the top of the pack through the use of your favourite multiple shift, and immediately obtain a left little finger break above the bottom card, say the Jack of Spades, which will be the recurring card. Cut the pack several times ending up with the Jack of Spades at the top of the pack and the four Aces immediately below it.

Announce that one of the Aces is now on top of the pack. Remove the top card (the Jack of Spades) with the right hand and stroke it wit the left thumb with the same action as used for the Hofzinser change, but DO NOT make the change. Show the face of the Jack and appear surprised, saying that normally when you do this (repeat the action, this time make the Hofzinser change) you get an Ace. Show the Ace and place it onto the table.

Cut the cards several times taking care not to disturb the top stock. Push the top two cards over the right side of the pack and get a break with the little finger below the second card. Take the top card (the Jack) in the right hand between the thumb on the back and the first finger on the face and flip it over on the pack face up. Appear concerned that the wrong card has again been produced and flip it over face down and then lift off the top two as one and show the change by flipping them over. Tip them back face down and deal the top card (an Ace) onto the table.

More cuts and flourishes still retaining the top stock. The next change is a slight variation of a sleight which appeared in 'The Magic of Faucett Ross'. Under-cut about half the pack and spread this bottom half fanwise in the right hand. The left thumb pushes the top card of the half it holds (again the Jack) over the right side and using the fan tip it over face up.

Next push both the Jack and the Ace below it over the side and tip them over together using the fan showing the change. There is no need to keep the two cards in perfect alignment. This makes an effective and varied change of card and adds much to the routine. Put the Ace on the table with the other two.

Some further cuts etc and you are ready to produce the final Ace, using a method described in 'Expert Card Technique'. It is called 'There it is' and can be found on page 167 of that book. Lift off the top card between the first finger at the outer end near the right corner and the thumb at the inner end also near the right corner. Turn the card face up — it is once again the Jack of Clubs. When making this turn the right hand is kept close to the pack so that when the face of the card is visible to the spectators the backs of the third and fourth fingers are close to the right outer corner of the pack. The left thumb pushes the top card of the pack (the last Ace) slightly over the side enabling its right outer corner to be gripped between the third and fourth fingers of the right hand. The Jack of Clubs is now replaced face down on top of the pack and this action brings the Ace into view sticking out from the back of the right hand. End of routine.

RELATIVE RISE

Keyin Davie

This is a rising card trick that isn't. Spectators remember it as a rising card, even though the chosen card remains stationary.

The original idea belongs to that very clever card man — Al Leech. I have decided to include it here for two reasons. It is too good to lie forgotten, and it formed part of my programme, together with the other effects described, during my summer season engagement in the Isle of Wight.

The effect is achieved without the aid of gimmicks, can be done impromptu, and best of all, the most important part of the effect takes place in the hands of a spectator.

Begin by controlling the selected card to the top. If you already use your favourite method in too many tricks, you may like to use this one. Have someone name any card and spread the pack face up to show that it is somewhere in the middle. Close the spread taking a left little finger break below the nominated card. Move the pack to the overhand shuffle position transferring the break to the right thumb. Shuffle off all cards above the break and throw the remainder on top.

Hold the pack face downwards in the left hand in the normal dealing position. With the right hand take a thumb break at inner end and cut off about one third of the pack as you announce that you will attempt to find their selection. With the left thumb riffle off about half the cards it holds and place the cards held in the right hand in the centre of those in the left at the point where you stopped the riffle leaving them protruding. During this action the left thumb releases a single card which is allowed to go into the break between the chosen card and the rest of the block. (The position at this point is shown in the sketch).

In this condition the cards are placed into the case, with the original right hand packet with the selected card left protruding. If pressure is retained on the front and back of the case the protruding block will remain in position.

Give the pack to a spectator instructing him to grip it firmly between his thumb and forefinger. It will be necessary for you to keep your own grip on the case until the spectator understands what is required of him and has a firm grip.

You now instruct the spectator to slowly release the tension of his grip. The block of protruding cards will then fall down into the case, with the exception of the selected one which remains in view. All can, and no doubt will be, examined.

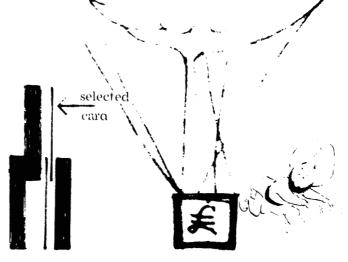

One final point. With some packs it may be necessary to remove three or four cards to ensure that the protruding block falls down freely.

QASIS

JULY OASIS

Today the telephone rang. It was Ken Brooke with the sad news that Fred Kaps had passed away the previous day, 22nd July. Although I was aware that Fred would not be with us much longer, it did little, if anything, to diminish the sense of loss, both personal and to the magical fraternity as a whole. Never again will Ken ring, as he did many times in the past, to say 'Fred is here — are you coming over', and never again shall we have the priviledge of seeing the superlative magic of this master of his craft.

We who have had the good fortune to witness the skill and artistry of Fred Kaps will have our memories and it is we who will be asked by those less fortunate the unanswerable question, and one posed by many times by ambitious youngsters when listening to their elders praising other legendary figures in the world of magic. The words may differ, but the intention of the questioner is always the same. They are anxious to know what qualities these men possessed which placed them above their contemporaries. The answers they are given are also pretty much the same - some vague reference to their success being due to their 'personality'. Not a particularly illuminating or satisfactory answer to an enthusiastic youngster, and furthermore, not only is it misleading, it is denigrating to an artist who has spent years in perfecting his art.

To say that Fred Kaps had more than a fair share of good looks — a fine physique — a charm which spilled over the footlights to the audience — elegance of movement — style — presence — authority etc would be true, but to give the impression that these attributes, which were a part of his whole personality, were the only reasons for his success, would be to discount other factors of importance. I will endeavour to explain some of these with the hope that it will be of some assistance to beginners who are seeking enlightenment on the real secrets underlying the magic of Fred Kaps.

The general idea is to outline Fred's approach and attitude to magic insofar as I have been able to understand it. In no way will it help anyone to become a Fred Kaps any more than growing ones hair and beard long can one become a Ricky Jay. However, if I am able to convey a little of what went into making Fred Kaps the superb magician he was by sharing my own thoughts and experiences with others less privileged than myself, I shall feel that it is the best tribute I can pay to the man whose performances and company throughout the years have been a pleasure and inspiration far exceeding all other magical experiences.

One of Fred's featured effects was the Homing Card and only a few days ago Howard Lyons told how Fred used the effect during a lecture in the U.S. First performing it in the manner of the average magician and then with his own presentation. The method used was standard and the technique required well within the scope of the average card worker. Those present during this lecture were indeed fortunate to have had a practical demonstration of the importance of how an effect can be enhanced by acting out the plot.

This particular effect provides ample opportunities for the performer to register various emotions as the unwanted black picture card persists in returning to the packet of red spot cards he is holding. He can appear angry, annoyed, disconcerted, frustrated, adopt an air of disbelief or one of sheer helplessness. All these and possibly other emotions can be displayed by the performer during the course of this one trick. Take the opportunity of seeing Fred performing it on video-tape — dozens of magicians have recorded it — and note the manner in which he acts out the plot. Only a little imagination will be required to realise that without the acting element the effect would be just another card trick.

It is only by appreciating that the acting in Fred's presentation of the above effect is the predominating factor, will we understand his approach to magic. We also become aware that he was an actor of considerable skill.

It should hardly be necessary to point out the futility of attempting his style and mannerisms which were a part of his personality. The important lesson to be learnt is that without acting there is no communication with the audience, the entertainment content of the effect is reduced, and there is little left for the spectators to enjoy unless they like solving puzzles. Most important of all, the audience will have no sensation of having experienced something akin to real magic.

If there is one element in the performance of magic — particularly the intimate kind — which distinguishes the top flight performers from the rest of us, is in the extent to which misdirection plays an integral part in making their magic so deceptive. Such was the mastery of Fred Kaps in the art of misdirection that few magicians were even aware that they were the victims of anything other than the manipulative skill employed.

It was during impromptu sessions that Fred would occasionally reveal his expertise by fooling his friends using misdirection alone to achieve an effect. He revelled in catching one 'off guard' and immediately repeating an effect. Ken Brooke takes particular delight in reminding me of the occasion when both David Carre and myself were victims of this particular ploy. Three times in quick succession the complete pack vanished and each time Fred stood up to reveal that he was sitting on it.

Another occasion, this time at Ken's flat. Fred, who was on my left, spread out the pack face up and inquired if I could see the card I had chosen and returned to the pack. It was missing. He called my attention to a face down card resting on the table near my elbow — it was the missing card. Ricky Jay, also present remarked 'That's O.K. once' implying that it could not be repeated successfully. Fred replied with some emphasis 'I can do it when I like, to whom I like, as often as I like.' A few moment later as Arthur Day, another guest, was looking through the pack for a card he had chosen I felt my arm being nudged. You have guessed — he had done it again.

The above are just a couple of examples of magic for fun amongst magicians and all were aware that they had been victims of his uncanny skill using misdirection alone, but how many magicians are aware of the misdirection employed in his presentation of the Homing Card.

From the very commencement of the effect when the unwanted black picture card first appears amongst the red spot cards, it was the acting which created the entertainment which in turn so absorbed the attention of the audience as they followed the plot, that they were so completely unconcerned as to how they were being deceived. Even magicians lost their critical faculties and neglected to watch for the 'moves'. They had been misdirected by the entertaining presentation.

In all the tricks I have seen him perform it would be difficult to name one in which misdirection in one form or another was not used. Misdirection is a very complex subject, but it can be broadly defined as anything a performer does which is designed to prevent exposing the method used to achieve the effect. The 'anything', with few exceptions, demands of the performer some acting ability if the misdirection is to be effective. It is only when one realises that it was because Fred Kaps was an actor of considerable skill that it becomes apparent why he was able to make a trick both entertaining, and by the employment of calculated misdirection, to cover any secret actions and produce an effect approaching real magic.

Every magician who has seen Fred Kaps perform will be well aware of his great technical skill, and most have mistakenly believed this to be the reason why he received so much acclaim. Undoubtedly its played its part, particularly with magicians, but it was always subservient to the matters of acting, which is the only means by which an effect can be given the appearance of real magic.

Surely it was this point that he was trying to put across in his U.S. lecture — what else? To beginners who take a similar attitude towards magic by following this approach will outstrip their contemporaries who misguidedly believe that the way to success depends upon technical skill or ingenious apparatus which can be 'examined'. Proof that neither are essential was evident to those who saw Fred's presentation of the almost self-working Chinese Wands.

It is by no means suggested that by becoming an actor, even an accomplished one, one can achieve the magical statue of Fred Kaps. There still remains one indefinable attribute which defies analysis. Jay Marshall explains it this way: 'you've either got it or you haven't'. Whatever this elusive element may be Fred certainly had it, but to attribute this success solely to this 'gift' would be untrue and unfair. One cannot discount the time and effort expended in his attempt to reach perfection in all the necessary skills which are essential to becoming an accomplished magical performer.

These skills are far too numerous to list here, but every serious student of magic will gradually become aware that the most important of them lie in the area of presentation. Without a presentation which makes the performance entertaining to his audience there can be no real success. It is only when one views the performances of Fred Kaps from this angle does one begin to appreciate that there is considerably more than a high degree of technical skill to account for his prowess.

Much more could be written regarding Fred's magic and no doubt others will express their thoughts on his work. In the meantime, may I suggest that you refer to Pabular No.7 Vol.1. On pages 82 and 83 you will find valuable information for those whose ambition it is to perform magic for the layman. They are the lecture notes of Fred Kaps and appeared with the kind permission of Jay Marshall. Study them, and act on the advice. Whoever does so will automatically adopt the right attitude towards his magic, and escape the many pitfalls which lie in the path of the beginner struggling to find his way to becoming a successful performer. I know of no other single article which deals so completely with the professional attitude towards performing magic for laymen. It spells out clearly and concisely the attitude and approach to be adopted by magicians who, even if they have no intention of becoming full-time professionals, are desirous of raising the standard of their performances above those given by the average magical hobbyist.

These notes, together with the video-tapes of his performances form a valuable legacy for magicians of the future. To those for whom magic, to quote 'Professor' Dai Vernon, is not something 'just for kids' will realise their worth and be able to obtain an insight into Fred's thinking about magic in general from the notes, and the tapes will provide lessons of incalculable value on the art of presentation.

We who had the privilege and pleasure of sharing his company, and see him perform in 'close-up' situations for non-magicians will treasure their memories of these occasions. When asked to perform — he never did until asked — he was always ready to do something, whatever the situation. One was never conscious that he was prepared for such requests and he most certainly never made any overt preparation. He was always ready to perform whether seated or standing and never moved his position or made any request for the spectators to do so.

I find it impossible to imagine Fred fumbling through his pockets for props or asking a spectator to move. There is nothing particularly entertaining watching a performer searching his various pockets before he eventually finds the required article. In certain circumstances it would be unpardonable to disturb people by asking them to move or even shift their drinks out of the way. When someone asks to be shown a trick they do not expect an exhibition of your personal belongings or to take part in a game of non-musical chairs. Such procedures can only detract from the effect you produce upon the spectators and it would be somewhat presumptious to take it for granted that they would accept with tolerance the 'stage wait' and the request to move. There are of course exceptions, but remember that you are the centre of attraction the moment the request is made and your actions and behaviour from then on are important.

Here is how I have seen Fred react to such a request. He looked at the person with a smile and said 'Sure' and immediately began to perform. That is, he was performing from the very instant he smiled and said 'Sure'. By performing I mean acting — the smile was a part of the act — a professional one. The subsequent remarks kept the attention on himself as he unobtrusively removed the object to be used from his pocket. Such was the approach of Fred Kaps when asked to show a trick, and a procedure anyone can adopt to ensure that at least they start off on the right foot even if they get out of step later on.

All that is required is to choose a trick entertaining to lay people which can be performed in any situation whether seated or standing with the audience on all sides. Keep the trick in the same pocket at all times.

When asked to do a trick you will be able to pass pleasantries with those around you as your hand goes to the pocket containing the trick. This would be impossible if your mind was otherwise occupied wondering what trick to do and which pocket contained the necessary props. It would prevent proper contact with the onlookers being maintained at a time when you should be creating a favourable impression. Even to look away from the spectators to the prop you are about to use results in some loss of contact. Keep your gaze on the audience until you actually bring the prop into use.

It could be argued, quite successfully, that the above has no relevance in four-ale bars or magic clubs, but there are times when one is invited to perform by people who are both sober and sane. On these occasions it is important and desirable in the best interests of magic and magicians in general to make your efforts a pleasureable experience for the onlookers. This is made easier by getting the spectators with you from the very beginning so why not try the Fred Kaps approach which can be used by anyone regardless of their style or personality.

Fred has left us, but his name and influence on magic will live on. Future generations of magicians will be asking the question mentioned earlier. Hopefully they will obtain some idea of what went into making Fred Kaps the finest and most complete magical performer of this generation.

On behalf of Ken Brooke and myself, I wish to express our gratitude and thanks to Mr and Mrs Bob Driebeek for their hospitality and many kindnesses when we attended Fred's funeral which took place on the 29th of July. Bob's thoughtfulness and generosity on this sad occasion will long be remembered by both Ken and myself.

PALM STEAL

Kevin Davie

This sleight developed out of a close study of the many methods available for palming cards. A problem with most of these methods is that the hand containing the palmed card and the pack are soon separated after the palming action and for the movement of either the pack or the hand containing the card to escape attention and consequent suspicion that 'something is happening' requires effective misdirection.

In one of his versions of palming moves Dai Vernon provided an approach in which these movements were covered by a natural and logical action. It appeared to the onlookers that the right hand removed the pack from the left hand and placed it onto the table.

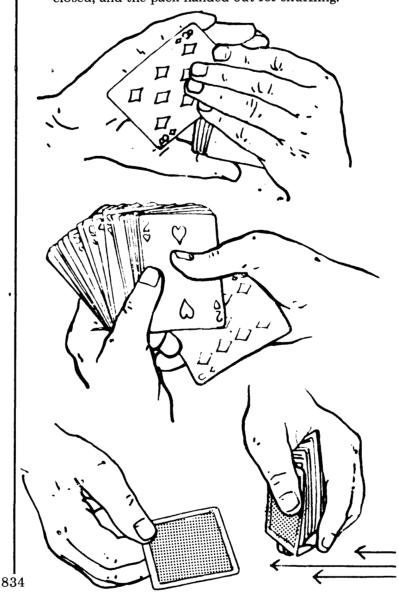

Other cardmen have used different approaches. For example, one handling employed by Paul le Paul was to push the chosen card into the pack from the outer and swivelled into alignment with the left palm. The card was left palmed in the left hand as the right pulled the pack clear and replaced it face up in the left hand covering the palmed chosen card. This method has the advantage that there is a reason for separating the hands i.e. turning the pack over, and the timing of the separation of the left hand with the palmed card from the pack can be done at the performer's discretion. Furthermore the move requires minimal misdirection for successful accomplishment.

The palm about to be described also takes place during a natural action which provides plenty of cover for the secret move, and like Le Paul's version, there is no hurry to remove the hand with the palmed card away from the pack.

The sleight is an extension of the side steal. For descriptive purposes we will assume that the card to be palmed is on the bottom of the pack. Begin with the pack held face downwards in the right hand with the fingers at the outer end and the thumb at the inner end. Perform the swivel cut by swinging the top half of the pack over to the left with the first finger and taking it with the left hand. The right hand completes the cut by placing its cards on top of those in the left, and as it does so the left fingertips make contact with the chosen card and pushes it out diagonally into the right palm. It has to be sufficiently angled so that it is free at the inner end, so allowing the thumb to move from its position at the inner end to the face of the pack as the right hand turns bringing the pack upright with the face of the pack towards you. The chosen card in the right palm still has one corner in the pack. It is released as the thumb and fingers of the left hand spreads the cards. As far as the spectators are concerned, the performer merely cuts the pack and moves them into an upright position to examine them.

The final action depends on the particular trick being performed. Usually the spread will be closed, and the pack handed out for shuffling.

THE LOLLIPOP TRICK

Kevin Davie

This is a sucker trick — hence the title. After showing a few tricks offer to teach anyone interested how to do a trick. When someone expresses their wish to learn a trick they become the focal point of attention and the spectators become relaxed and off guard. The trick is over and done before they adjust to the new situation sufficiently to be interested in catching the performer out.

Only two sleights are used, the double lift and the Hofzinser top change. Everyone knows the former as there are dozens of descriptions to be found in our literature. The Hofzinser change was developed by Cy Endfield and can be found in Part Two of 'Entertaining with Cards' edited by Lewis Ganson. For those who are not acquainted with the sleight, and those who do not recognise it by name, here is a brief description.

A card held with the right fingers by the right inner corner is exchanged for the top card of face down pack held in the left hand in the dealing position. To make the change the left thumb pushes the top card over the side of the pack as is done if about to deal, but with the pack held vertical. (Sketch shows the position of both hands at this point). Left hand moves towards the right hand card bringing the pack square beneath it and its thumb over the top. The right hand now grasps the top card as the left hand moves outward taking the original right hand card with it. The illusion created is that the card in the right hand is gently stroked with the left thumb. The angle at which the pack is held is important. At the start it is vertical and changes to an horizontal position as it moves under the right hand card and back again to the vertical at the conclusion of the stroking action.

Due to pressure of the left thumb as the card is taken together with changing the angle of the pack there will be a slight snapping sound as the pack clears the card now in the right hand. This will be accepted by the spectators as being caused by the card escaping from under the left thumb.

The complete action takes but a second and should be done casually. Only the left hand moves, the right remaining stationary throughout.

Smoothly done the change undetectable, but there must be a logical reason for stroking the card. Charlie Miller overcame this objection by accidently bending the card to be changed, thus giving an excuse for stroking the card — to straighten out the bend.

Assuming you have someone who is keen to learn a trick, begin by saying that the first thing to be done is to have a card chosen. Point out that a good method for doing this is to let the spectator cut the cards and look at the top card of the pack. After he has completed the cut take the cards from him, and say that the person doing the trick must not see the top card. Look away and double lift showing the second card as the top one. Allow this card to make an impression and then turn them face down.

Explain that the performer marks the card looked at by bending the outer left hand corner as it is pushed into the pack. Of course he does this secretly. Show the pack with the bent card in the middle saying that normally the hand covers this bent card so it is not seen. Continue by giving the pack a shuffle as you tell the spectator that shuffling the pack makes no difference as it is always possible to find the chosen card because it is bent. The shuffle is a false one which retains the selected card on top of the pack.

Demonstrate the point by removing the bent card from the pack and show its face long enough for all to see that it is not the chosen card. Remark that all that has to be done is to take the bend out and the trick is done. Do the Hofzinser change — to the audience you are merely straightening out the card. When someone says that you got the wrong card, tell your pupil that if that happens when he is doing the trick all he has to do is to give the card a little shake and it will change into the right one. Shake the card and show that it has changed into the one chosen.

FUMDUBULATORS

Stunts, gags, jokes, ideas and miscellaneous selected items will appear under the above heading as and when material is available. Contributions from readers welcomed — credit will be given.

Starting with a couple of my own ideas. The first requires a set of Yakity-Yak teeth and a skull — you probably possess both; if you have a penchant for comedy the following could make an amusing finish.

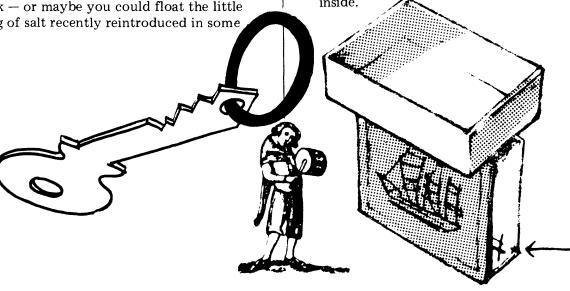

Produce the teeth magically from under a handkerchief, using your own method. When all eyes are on the teeth bring the skull up from your lap and produce it from beneath the handkerchief as you remark "So that's where it came from!" Pick up the teeth and stick them in the mouth of the skull. This could be done standing. Produce the teeth allowing them to operate on the palm of your left hand. Right hand, with handkerchief, drops to your side and skull is stolen from stooge. Use of a rubber skull should make life easier if you can find one.

The second idea makes use of the Kaps Floating Cork principle. If you have this effect try it out using a bag of crisps. You know what can be loaded as you put a crisp into your mouth. Take another crisp and cause it to float a la cork — or maybe you could float the little blue bag of salt recently reintroduced in some brands.

A couple from Arthur Day, still with the bag of crisps. When someone invites you to take a crisp, pull out a small potato (previously palmed), saying "One they missed." If you buy your own, ask someone if they would like one as you are opening the bag. It is essential they keep their eyes on the bag so construct your patter and actions towards this end. When the bag is open shake it and bring it up to eye level and peer through its side murmuring "That's odd. . ." Take out the potato which you loaded when bringing the bag up to eye level. The hand is obviously empty when it goes into the bag, making the trick more effective.

The second is "The Irish Key Ring" — the sketch tells all. Piet Forton, over from Switzerland, showed me one he had made up the same day he had received details from Arthur.

This one comes from Fred Snooks. Tear one of the striking surfaces from a matchbox cover and dispose of it. Place the remainder on the table or bar counter with the open side uppermost. Balance the drawer lengthwise on top, as in sketch, and challenge someone to cause it to fall into the normal position inside the cover without touching either the cover or the drawer, blowing on it or shaking the table. When they admit failure drop a spot of liquid on the spot marked X which will cause the side of the cover to open allowing the drawer to fall inside.

This part of Bob Read's article on the U.S. Wichita Convention was squeezed out of the Ramsay issue for space reasons; apologies to Bob and readers alike. We are glad to continue it here.

Last time I promised to mention the Close up at Wichita and I'll begin by saying how much I enjoyed the company of Bob Sheets and his lovely lady. Bob busks as a jester and in the car park and later in the theatre foyer he was persuaded to do his rings/cups and balls/card stab routine for the assembled 'tip'. Also spent time with 'Doc'(?) who does a cute card on ceiling incorporating a dollar bill which ends up pinned to the card. A neater way to collect the loot I've yet to see.

There were two close up sessions featuring Bro John Hamman with unbelievable and direct card work and revealing a latent talent for comedy - Steve Aldrich (another damn Foan - is there no end to their talent), Roger Klaus who is also making a big name for himself as an instructor, Steve Spillman, the Bad Boy Boy of Magic, Johnny Thompson doing the great egg bag routine, John Cornelius with a bowl/rings/Svengali routine which he used to pitch, and yours truly with the usual garbage. Which reminds me of the time Ron Wilson said 'Bob, don't apologise for a single trick. You apologise for the whole damn act.'

At 7p.m. David Copperfield gave of his valuable time and answered questions on his rise to fame and philosophy on magic which he did with unfailing good humour and humility. A fine showman.

The evening then deteriorated with a $10 a head lecture by Bob Read which was particularly notable for the generous introduction by Mike Caveney. Finally, at midnight the calibre of the entertainment rose rose to an all time low with a powerful lecture by that wild and layed back guy Steve Spillman - featuring the 100% commercial bill/lemon routine described in 'Spill at the Bar Grill'.

After all that I had a day's rest and was then off to New York where I met amongst others, Karl Fulves. He was younger, better looking, and more charming than I'd ever imagined. Ever read Dorian Gray Karl? But as Wilde once said, that's another story.

First of all let's clear up a couple of mistakes which crept into the last issue. First, I didn't do a lecture in Chicago, and second I didn't attend the Abbot Convention in Colon, Michigan. Both Chicago and Colon and also New York were on my itinerary but due to illness in my family I had to fly home a little earlier than planned.

Actually, I had written two columns for this magazine while I was in the U.S. and the last effort was the editor's selection from both of them. That accounts for the mistake. My last U.S. trip seems such a long time ago that it is pointless to go over it at this late stage. What will Posterity think when it reads in an April issue of a magazine about a trip I made in July and August? It will assume I am talking about the year before. There is no way it can possibly understand that I am talking about the future in the past tense. Do you think Posterity will take the trouble to check out the fact that although this is the April issue I am actually talking about events that took place three or four months later, and you must add to that the fact that I am actually talking about them in November.No, I don't think anyone will ever try to work out the facts. I can't, you can't, the editor can't. Let's change the subject.

I attended the British Ring I.B.M. Convention in September as a dealer. This is my first British Ring I.B.M. Convention for years for reasons which are too humorous to mention. I liked it. I don't intend to go over the events because they will have been well covered in other places, but I will tell you of one event which you haven't reac about and and it isn't normally the type of material you would read about in a magic magazine. Are you ready?

So I'm standing in the mens' room doing what comes naturally. Suddenly a voice says "Just the man I'm looking for". I look sideways and see a face I recognize. He didn't wait until nature had taken its course. He stands along side me and says: "Can I ask you something about your Three Card Trick?" I check out nature, look sideways again, and say "Yes".

So help me, he reaches into his pocket and pulls out three card and starts to demonstrate the fact that he doesn't know one end of a deck of cards from the other, and in the course of this demo one of the cards slips out of his hands and lands approximately twelve inches in front of my feet. He looked dismayed.

I looked at him and said "Pick it up" AND HE DID.He looked at the card, shook it a little, and said, among other things "Could you exchange this one for me?" So I said "It's plastic coated, dry it on the towel." He turned away from me to do just that, and I naturally, disappeared. Do I have to inform you that he was an amateur?

As I write this Maurice Fogel has just walked through the door. He opened it first. I don't know why he bothered to come here because with his reputation he should be able to know what I am thinking about from wherever he is. I just asked him 'How are things Maurice?' and he looked me straight in the eye and said 'Mentalism is dead. In fact not just dead - it has been murdered. There are too many incompetent mindreaders. Audiences today expect something better than a ten minute conversation climaxed by a guy holding up a playing card and saying 'This is the card you thought of.'

Actually, I don't agree with him. I don't think that any branch of entertainment can ever be called dead. I think it is a case of the performer adapting himself to his conditions and times. It is very difficult in this day and age, in most places of entertainment, to hold an audience 100%. You have to fight to gain attention. You have to fight to hold their attention, and you've literally got to have a finish which demands applause. Singers have got it made. Audiences are preconditioned by the fact that they know the melodies and lyrics and they know when the end of a number has arrived. They applaud automatically even when they haven't been listening. With magic acts it's different. You have to have their attention all the time. Mindreaders may think they are having a bad time - but just think of what a comedian has to do. He has got nothing going for him. But most of the comedians I know of are making a living.

Why shouldn't the mindreaders be able to?

another exclusive import from Martin Breeze

There he goes again that boastful fellow - or is he just enthusiastic? We will never know. The big news this week is the arrival of a large and exciting package containing a number of Al Schneider's latest book entitled "Al Schneider on Close-Up". You may already have heard about the story behind my discovery of the book. I was at the SAM Convention in Pasadena, California. I took a brief wander around the dealer hall and stood for a while in front of Al Schneider's stall. He was doing a show. He wasn't demonstrating. He was entertaining an enthusiastic crowd with skilful and wonderful close up magic. We were all enthralled and when the crowd had thinned we had a chat together. I wanted to buy the rights to all the tricks and bring them back with me to the U.K. "Impossible", he said. "How come?" I replied. "Well, all the magic you have seen will be published in my new book Al Schneider on Close-Up. published in my new book Al Schneider on Close-Up.

"Can I have the exclusive rights to this book in Europe and the U.K.?" I asked. "Sure thing! Buy several hundred copies and you can have the U.K. rights". I did. The first ten copies arrived by airmail just before the IBM Convention at Brighton and were snatched up as they hit the counter. Now a big and heavy parcel has arrived and at £15.00 post free to the U.K. this book is most definitely the biggest bargain in magic. I can assure you that it contains the best new close up magic that it has been my privilege to witness. If you buy the book and don't agree send it book and no to witness. If you buy the book and don't agree send it back and no questions will be asked.

Another dealer, a good friend, has indicated that he will have supplies of this book but I doubt if they will ever arrive as there is no doubt that because of my massive investment I have sole U.K. and European rights.

The book is packed with effects using all the popular magical objects, salt cellars, coins, rings, cigarettes, Himber Wallets, and several pages have been devoted to the philosophy and approach to creating close up magical performances that entertain. The book is beautifully produced, well-printed on glossy paper, has 143 pages and well over 350 clear and concise photographs concise photographs.

I have not felt so impressed by a book since John Mendoza's Close Up Presentation and his Book of John (I have rights on an exclusive basis for Close Up Presentation and also the Second Book of John which is anxiously awaited plus also Mendoza's Magicassettes which are now in production in the USA). So there you have it my magical friends. A book you will be delighted to own and which will provide you with some excellent magic to add to your own performance. Not pipedreams that have never seen the light of day but magic that earned Al Schneider a hefty ovation and that is something you rarely see in the dealer room of any convention. Remember just £15.00 post free anywhere in the U.K. or £15.75 post free to Europe.

This manuscript holds a somewhat unique status in that small but ever growing body of literature of the card magic of Larry West. Those familiar with Larry's card magic may be surprised to find that these pages do not contain a single Elmsley Count!

Nor will you find any Jordan, Hammon or Siva counts or indeed any other false counts. Instead you will find tive effects involving two decks of cards. Only one of the effects, 'Trance—position Supreme' employs any gimmicked cards(and these are supplied with the manuscript). There are no complicated sleights. All of the mystery in these effects is accomplished by psychological subtleties. The use of words and psychology is employed in lieu of sleights and gimmicks to achieve apparent mental control over the spectators' minds.

Send for your copy of this manuscript today. Together with two regular decks, you are ready to read and learn with enjoyment.

POCKET SLATES ROUTINE Tommy Wonder

This is a very fast moving routine to produce 4 messages on two pocket slates. I have used it from time to time. It starts very simple, in fact so simple everybody thinks he sees through it, but after the first message, the other three seem to appear simultaneously.

Two slates and two flaps are needed. The messages I paint on with water paint. This can be washed off later, it is clearer than chalk and does not get smeared after a few performances. Any messages which are not too long can be used, and for convenience I number them from 1 to 4.

Message 1 and 2 are painted on the flaps, messages 3 and 4 on the slate themselves.

The flap with message 1 is placed message downwards on top of message 4 in the slate. Likewise, message 2 on top of 3.

Slate 4/1 is placed on top of slate 3/2 (flaps uppermost), and both are placed in the pocket.

Performance:

Take both slates from the pocket and hold slate 3/2 in the left hand and slate 4/1 in the right hand. Both with flaps uppermost.

The right hand shows both sides of the slate it is holding several times by simply turning the wrist. The left hand slate is not shown both sides, but just moves a little from left to right and back again a few times.

This is done as you say, "These slates are completely blank on both sides, as you can see."

This statement, together with the manner in which the slates are shown will cause the audience to become very suspicious. That is needed for what follows.

Slide the right hand slate underneath the left hand slate and immediately turn both over and let them rest on the left hand. Flat 1 will automatically fall from the top slate.

A magical gesture is made over the slates with the right hand which then removes the top slate to reveal message 1 on the left hand slate. Right hand immediately places its slate under the one in the left hand bearing the message. Flat 2 will now fall.

The appearance of message 1 will not impress anyone — they will think it was already on the side they have not seen. With everyone thinking that they have seen through the trick you are now way ahead of them. At the end they will find it impossible to backtrack.

Make another magical gesture and lift off the top slate and there is message 2. This will be a small surprise, but the really startling climax comes when you turn over both slates. Messages 3 and 4 will be staring them in the face.

The appearance of message 1 gives your audience a false solution. If they were to see through the complete trick, they would first have to throw away their first solution and start afresh.

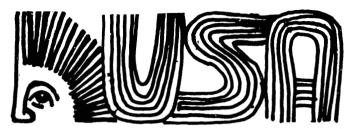

Resetting is easy. Hold both slates with flaps uppermost. Slate showing message 2 in the left hand and slate with message 1 in the right hand. Put right hand slate on top of left hand slate and place both in pocket. When they are out of sight just move flap 1 over the slates and place it in the other slate against message 4. You are now ready for the next performance.

Some comments:

At first I used to show the slates on all sides, and then made the messages appear. The routine was not so deceptive. I think it is just a little bit too much, to have 4 messages appear, the slates must be mechanical or something.

The method I use now for the first message is (at least in the eyes of the spectators) a very reasonable method for a message to appear on unprepared slates, (although not deceptive). It brings them in the right mental state for the greater impact of the last 2 messages.

I use this sometimes when I want some special topical message to appear, like I did last year at the night of New Year. First message was 1979, I said, "Oh sorry, it's already 1980 (and 1980 appeared on the slate), and for 1980 I wish you Good (message 3) Luck (message 4).

Hello again from the land of magical opportunities.

Just got back from Tannen's Jubilee. The big hit as far as close-up magic and lectures was none other than England's Bob Read. This man never fails to get the audiences attention and the minute he does, he has them in the palm of his hand.

Bob had to do six close-up stations and I saw three of them. The first two were limited to about twelve minutes. The last one he did his complete routine and the round of applause he got I think brought tears to his eyes.

Bob did his $100 Glass thru Table,
Transfero Tumbler, Bottle Production, his Cups & Ball routine, (which is the best entertainment
I think for Cups & Balls) and George Sands,
"Ropesational". Bob's handling of Sands routine makes a person want to go home to learn the routine and immediately put it to use.
All I can say is that you people in England, and especially London, are lucky to have a man so close by who can be the hit of a convention.
If you haven't seen him, you're not into magic entertainment.

I attended a performance by another great Englishman by the name of Maurice Fogel. I went to see Maurice and I wasn't disappointed. He did a short lecture tour two years ago in the States and people are just beginning to see how good his material can be, if presented correctly.

Mr Fogel really shows you want can be done with a nail writer and the one ahead principle. This was my first time seeing Maurice work and sitting with Art Emerson, we agreed it was a superb performance.

The last trick he did in which a colour, a country and a non-living name were revealed, after having been chosen by three ladies, shows why he is known as one of the world's greatest mentalists. Great show Maurice! For the hundred-plus who saw his performance and the standing ovation he got was well deserved.

Some of the others on close-up were Benjamin, Al Goshman, Meir Yedid, Daryl Martinez (who was also great), Father Cyprian, Peki, Stan Lobenstein and F.I.S.M. winner John Cornelius. Getting back to the U.S.A. we have a convention here called NYCAN (New York-Canada Conclave) which held its 45th convention last weekend. The first Eddie Fechter cup was given out to the person judged to be the most entertaining at close-up. Eight people competed and the cup was won by Ray Mertz, a regular at the Forks Hotel on weekends.

Ray was especially glad to bring the 1st award to Buffalo, the home of a truly great legend and teacher of magical entertainment, Eddie Fechter

Till next time, keep in mind April 23-24-25 1981 for our 11th F.F.F.F. and if things work out OK, Bob Read and Joe Riding might be in attendance.

GRANDMA'S TRIPLE CUT

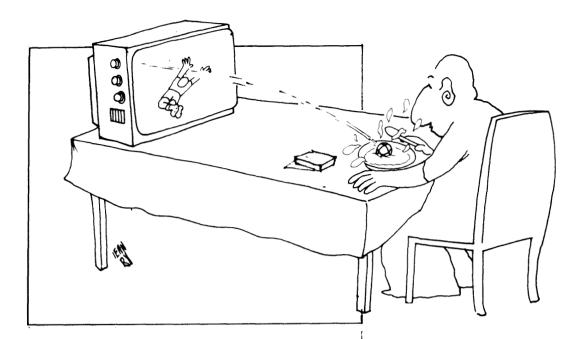

Steve Kuskie

This is a one-handed triple cut that you will be able to do immediately. It is easy, and attractive to watch.

Hold the pack in position for the Charlier one-handed pass. Mentally divide the pack into three equal sections, A, B and C, from the top down. You may wish to outjog section A slightly, but with practice this won't be necessary.

Drop section C into the palm as when starting the regular Charlier pass, levering it up until it clears and is at right angles to the remainder of the pack. Section C is then pushed and held against the remaining portion, freeing the forefinger for use to separate A and B. B drops into the palm, then C, and finally A. Voila.

This flourish can become a shuffle of sorts if, after dropping B, A is brought above C and the forefinger again used to separate C into two portions. The lower half of C is dropped into the palm, followed by A, and lastly the remainder of C to end. You can, if you so wish, take this even further.

OUTWARD BOUND

Roy Walton

The basic effect of this trick is a simple transportation of cards from one place to another. However, by altering the conventional layout pattern, and by paying due attention to the timing in its presentation, the effect becomes quite strong for an audience.

I am not sure who invented the switch move used in the effect, but think it may have been Charlie Miller. It is a good sleight and worthy of greater use by the fraternity.

Before commencing, secretly place the Ace, Ten, Jack, Queen and King of spades on top of the face down pack, the Ace being the top card.

Handling details and presentation outline:

Hold the pack face up in the left hand in the dealing position and get a left little finger break above the lowermost four cards (above the QS). Start to spread the pack from hand to hand pushing the cards over from the face with the left thumb, as you explain that you are going to do a trick with the four two-spots.

As you arrive at each two upjog it for just over half its length. When all the four cards are outjogged close the pack into the left hand in a casually squared state. As the pack closes into the left hand, grip it above the left little finger break between the first two fingers and thumb of the right hand, the thumb going onto the face of the pack and the two fingers into the break.

Hold the pack above the break firmly with the right hand and immediately move the left hand upwards to strip out the protruding two spots carrying the four cards below the break in the hand, adding them to the rear of the twos as they are stripped out. Before moving the left hand, pivot it downwards slightly, the pivot point being at the outer short end of the pack, and then move forward stripping out the jogged cards. The stripping action should be rapid and takes place immediately the pack has been casually squared into the left hand. Place the stripped-out cards together with the four secretly added below the face-up pack and then turn the pack face down. At once, thumb off the top four cards without altering their order and drop them in a pile a little to the right onto the table.

Say, "As well as the four twos I am going to use five completely unimportant cards." As you explain this, turn the pack face-up and get a left little finger break above the lowermost five cards of the face-up pack. Actually, the break must not be less than five, but it can be more, so there is no need to thumb-count precisely five cards, just estimate a little more than five and take your break at this point.

Start thumbing over the cards as before and upjog any five cards you wish. Make some remarks about them completely unimportant establishing this phrase in the spectator's minds. For example, as you upjog the third one, say that one is even more unimportant than the previous two.

When you have the five cards outjogged, strip them out adding the block below the break using the sleight already described. Replace them below the pack and turn it face down.

Thumb off the top five cards into the right hand without altering their order and put the rest of the pack aside — it is no longer required. Place the bottom card of the packet of five held in the right hand in a central position on the table and arrange the other four cards around it in the form of a square.

The timing of the following part of the trick is important for maximum effect.

Pick up the packet of twos? and place them on top of the centre card of the array saying, "The twos are here." As soon as the twos? are down immediately turn the four corner cards face-up saying "but jump to here."

Turn the centre heap face-up and leave them slightly spread as you continue, "leaving five very unimportant cards in the centre, unless you are playing poker, that is." On this final line spread out the five cards to reveal the Royal Flush.

OASIS FOR OCTOBER

Algonquin McDuff from Vancouver, U.S., writes — I recall some time ago an article by Albert Graham on the problems of the close-up worker.

Do you think anything has been done since then to improve matters? Isn't it about time you reiterated the sentiments expressed? I could add a few other problems — close-up in huge rooms is not on! Either the audience is too big and can't see, or it's too small and the entire production is dwarfed. Organisers should work from a pool of magicians — and simply suggest to the audience that they will see a selection of 6 workers from say 15. That way no-one is disappointed. The teams would work 5 or 6 handed.

I'm prompted to write because I do enjoy your magazine, perhaps fewer card tricks would be better.

Mr McDuff also enclosed a cutting from The Linking Ring. It was an article from the pen of that interesting writer, one Rick Johnsson, castigating the organisers for their treatment of close-up workers at their functions. Briefly, he mentions occasions when he was pressed into doing ten twenty-minute consecutive shows, no-one to introduce the performer, being interrupted with the request to move on to the next table when approaching the climactic point in a routine, no proper tables provided, etc.

The solution to these problems lies mainly with the performers themselves, particularly those whose services are in demand who have the muscle. It is they who will be listened to with respect if they play merry hell and refuse to appear again unless steps are taken to provide all possible facilities for the close-up performers. Even better, write to the organisers — who no doubt are doing their best having regard to their experience in matters of organisation and suggest possible improvements which could be implemented, also what about congratulating those who do make it a pleasure to appear at their functions.

There is of course, no satisfactory solution at large conventions when there is only one large room available, although it might be an idea to have the close-up late at night on the last day of the convention, commencing about 11.00pm or midnight. This would considerably reduce the numbers as many only attend the close-up sessions because nothing else is happening at the time. If you think the idea a crazy one — who are the people wending their way back to their respective hotels in the early hours of the morning — and who were those in days of yore who congregated in someone's hotel bedroom for highly secret sessions long after the other registrants were safely tucked in bed? You know the answer.

Friend McDuff must be a relatively new subscriber as he seems to be unaware that his idea of working from a pool of performers has already been explained in this column and is used every year when I organise the Pabular evening at The Magic Circle. This gives me the opportunity to express my thanks to Anthony Brahams, Stephan Blood, Kevin Davie, Johnny Johnson, Brian King, Jim Jones, Ian Keable Elliott, Mike O'Brien, David Walker, and Phil Wye. These ten performers entertained at four tables for approximately one hour. The session started with a performer at each table and as each performer finished his place was taken by one from the pool. At no time was a table vacant for more than a moment, no performer was under pressure either to finish or start at a table and no whistle was blown. I only have someone's word for this - having left the scene for a quick one. It is also possible to overorganise.

Juan Tamariz sends details of an annual event which will be over by such time this issue reaches you. The registrants are limited to around thirty and they really get down to business. The following is an extract from his letter.

Next 30th-31st October and 1st November we'll have the Jornadas de Cartomagia de El Escorial. Roberto Giobbi (Switzerland), Christian (Austria), Reinhard Muller, Dieter Ebel, Ritter (Germany), Dick Kornwinder and Eric Eswin (Holland), and other cardmen are coming... (plus Ascanio, Camilo, Cachadina, Varela, Trueba, Jose Laraz and many others from Spain)...

The topics to discuss are: 1) Forcing (one of the stronger weapons in card magic...)
2) Outs In Card Magic (!) 3) Travelling Cards
4) Coins And Cards... Each year the level of the workshops and discussions are growing, and in Spain there are, now, a very young generation of cardmen with a real background of solid basic knowledge. I hope they can give a new and interesting approach to card magic...

Throughout the many and varied writings of Jon Racherbaumer, constant reference is made to Robert Walker and his "Crux" manuscript — a treatise, as yet unpublished, larger than the encyclopaedic "Greater Magic". This gargantuan work is seemingly devoted entirely to the trick about to be described here. The theme being, basically, that of the Dai Vernon classic "Twisting the Aces", although I am led to believe that, as with most of the contemporary versions of the effect, the aces have been cast aside in favour of the A-2-3-4 of one particular suit. This, as will be seen from what follows, makes the routine easier for the audience to follow. Whatever.

I mention Walker and "Crux" simply because in an effort of the size Racherbaumer reports what follows here must have been included somewhere along the way. However, not having access to "Crux", and not having seen the following method anywhere, I hesitate not to include it here.

An almighty illogicality rears its head in one sequence, but this occurs so far into the trick, no-one will notice it — despite the glaring nature of its presence. However, the major advantage is that all the counts in this version are Elmsley Counts. Too often in previous handlings, the action has been slowed down by the performer having to stop and think whether he should be doing an Elmsley, Flexible, Siva, Jordan, Normal, Abnormal, or Whatever Count. Phew! So much for a fairly extensive preamble: Here we go:

Run through the deck and remove the A-2-3-4 clubs. At the same time, get 4H to top. Via any of the addition moves currently in favour, arrive at the following position: A-2-3-4 (face up) 4H (face down) — back to back with the 4C. All in dealing position in left hand. Reverse count the four(?) cards into right hand, so the position becomes: 4C-4H-3-2-AC. Clubs are face up, 4H face down. Transfer the cards back to left hand dealing grip. Now:

With right hand, slide out lowermost card — 4C — and whilst exhibiting this card, calmly turn the left hand palm-down, thus surreptitiously turning the packet of cards completely over. Place the 4C onto the (apparently) face down packet. Actually, a check at this moment would reveal the 4H face down and the three remaining clubs face up. Your patter at this stage should be something to the effect that the 4C is a difficult card to handle, or some such trivia. Flip the 4C face down, and prepare for an Elmsley Count.

Seemingly the whole packet is face down, so now perform the E.C. to show the AC has reversed itself. This should be a normal E.C. but Flip AC face down and normal E.C. again—last card to top—to show four backs—the packet is apparently as it should be: all cards face down. Normal E.C. again—last card to bottom—to reveal 2C face up.

the face up AC.

with five cards instead of four — last card going to bottom of packet. As stated, three backs, and Flip 2C face down, E.C. — last card to top — four backs are seen once again. Another E.C. will reveal the 3C to have reversed itself — last card to bottom this time.

Now, after your preliminary comments, the whole point of the exercise is, of course, to show that, although the A-2-3C are fairly obedient, the 4C is not.

Flip the 3C face down, and E.C. — last card to top to show all backs. Now: Do a normal reverse deal/count of three cards from left hand to right. Casually flash these cards — A-2-3C and make any excuses you can think of for the misbehaviour of the 4C. Place these three cards below the card(s) remaining in the left hand.

Flip the top card (now 4C) face up and continue with appropriate pattern, during which time, double lift the 4C and 4H — back to back — taking the cards with the right hand. At the same time, flip the three cards remaining in the left hand face up and add them, still face up, below the 4C.

You are now in the same position just prior to the earlier crafty turnover and are all set for a repeat of the sequence already detailed — however, tackle it slightly differently: so:

Simply pause momentarily and then flip the 4C face down atop the (face down also) 4H. The fact that a back is seen and not a face, as, in fact should be seen if there were no shenanigans, passes unnoticed. This, incidentally, is not the discrepancy I mentioned earlier. Standby for that. O.K.

With cards apparently face down, E.C. again — last card to top — three backs and a face up AC are seen. Say something like, "Here comes the ace again." E.C. once more — last card to top — and this time two backs and the face up AC and 2C are seen. Comment: "And closely following is the two." Now:

Prime the spectators by saying, "And after the two (don't mention the ace) comes the three." This, of course, is true, anytime — three does follow two, and the spectators will expect and will be looking for the three. And they will see it.

The next E.C. — last card to bottom — produces the anticipated three. Everybody is looking for it — they see it — and they're happy. What they will not see (but should) is the ace. This is the descrepancy, the illogicality. BUT: because of what has gone before, and the way you follow up, no-one misses the ace. It's the three, they're after, and they get it.

So: Position now is 3-2-AC face up: 4H-4C face down. Normal reverse count to show A-2-3 face up. One card — apparently the 4C — remains in the left hand.

Square A-2-3 in right hand and add to back of 4C (actually 4H), but injogged slightly. As you square the packet push the 4H (only) forward, and as the A-2-3C run completely flush with the 4C, remove the 4H completely and drop it onto the table. Amidst further chat about the awkwardness of the 4C, drop the A-2-3C face up atop the deck. This conveniently gets rid of the hidden 4C, which lands face down atop the face down deck. Now: To conclude:

Show the reason for the obstinacy of the 4C: It's the 4H!!

BOOK REVIEW

Bob Read's 100 DOLLAR GLASS THRO' TABLE available from the author at 32 Regal Way, Kenton, Middx, England, at £2.50 or 5 dollars.

In the original version, a sheet of paper was moulded around a glass tumbler which was then used to cover a coin and a spectator invited to guess 'heads or tails'. This was repeated a few times with the idea of keeping the attention of the spectators on the coin. Before covering the coin for the last time the glass was allowed to slip out of the paper onto the lap and only the paper shell going over the coin. This shell was then smashed flat and the glass produced from under the table.

The above description will enlighten the uninitiated and also serve to point out the superiority and advantages of the routine under review over its ancestor. The preliminary non-magical guessing game designed to provide the necessary misdirection has been replaced by a series of magical effects which are a logical and entertaining build-up to the climax.

A piece of newspaper is rolled up into a small ball and placed into the pocket only to reappear under the glass when it changes into a pound note or dollar bill. This is then re-rolled into a ball and an attempt made to cause it to penetrate the table from below into the glass, but on lifting the glass a potato is revealed. Finally the glass? is smashed through the table and when it is brought to the surface the note is inside.

Not only does this routine possess considerably more scope for providing entertainment than the original it can be performed standing and in any situation providing there is a table. There is also a clever little touch which leads the audience to believe that the glass is still under the paper covering after it has been stolen away, plus an optional gag which requires an additional small prop.

All is revealed in a booklet of eight large glossy pages. Accompanying the text are 28 photographs ensuring that every phase of the trick is understood. There are few tricks which, when performed in close-up situations, have an unsuspected climax with sufficient impact to bring an audible gasp of amazement from an audience — this trick is such a one.

The performer writes a prediction on the back of his business card. This is placed aside. A small twelve-page calendar is introduced. The sheets are torn from the calendar's backing board, and spread face down for a spectator to make a free selection from same. Another spectator is asked to call out a number from one to thirty-one. These two pieces of information are combined to produce a date — say, July 24. The prediction message on the back of the card is found to read: "I forecast the date of July 24. Signed, (performer's name).

The method combines a classic mentalism technique with a clever idea devised by the late Hen Fetsch, which allows you to force the name of the month. The procedure was used by Fetsch in conjunction with an impression device, for a demonstration of thought-reading ("Date Man Duplication", Phoenix 238, 1951).

The calendar is prepared. The front sheet bears the layout for January, as would be expected. However, all eleven of the other sheets are duplicates for the month of July. Thus, when the stapled sheets are torn from the backing board, and spread for a selection, the spectator can only pick July! When you fan the sheets, if your approach is confident and casual. you can be certain that the spectator will draw from near the centre of the fan — thus, the force month of July will not be suspect (as July occurs near the middle of the range of months). If, however, you are unsure about this, simply give the sheets an open mixing prior to the selection — so that there will not be any surprise no matter where the July sheet happens to turn up. Of course, you must see to it that the one January sheet is not taken. Simply keep this below the others, and do not spread it out thus, it cannot be taken.

There is no need to "prove" that the months are all different. The audience assumes that all twelve sheets are different. The only reason they might think otherwise would be if your own guilt tipped them off. . .

Having taken care of the choice of month, what about the choice of date? This is a legitimately free selection — which is added to the prediction message ex post facto with the use of a nailwriter. This can be in your pocket, in any of the various holders that have been described and/or marketed in the past. When you put away the eleven unchosen sheets, you put on the writer. Pick up the business card (which has the entire message written out, except for the date number). Say, "Before we check to see if I've been accurate with the month, let's take this a step further." Turn to a spectator, and have him/her call out a date. If the date is over 28, turn to the first spectator with the month sheet and inquire if there are enough days on the sheet to cover the named number. (Of course there will be, if you use a force month with 31 days). During the question you write in the number with the nailwriter. If the named date is under 29, your stall is in the form of asking the first spectator to place his/her finger onto the named date, so that it won't be forgotten.

Of course, the forced month could be combined with a number force to allow for a totally forced date, predicted with no nailwriting. However, there are few number forces as quick and clean as the month force, and to go into anything too complicated here would bog down the presentation and thus lessen the impact of what is, after all, a very fast routine.

The routine can be expanded one more step, if desired, by using an idea first put into print (I believe) by Eddie Clever. In your pocket, have a handful of coins of random values, but all with the same year of issue. These are tossed onto the table, and a spectator allowed to pick up any one of the coins. Again, the key here is bold confidence manifested through casual behaviour. If you convey the sense that you have nothing to hide, the audience will assume that the dates on the coins are all different — that the coins are an arbitrary group that just happen to be on hand. With this extra force, then, the prediction message is expanded to include a year, as well as the month and day.

PRESENTING

by ANDREW GALLOWAY

Author of The Ramsay Legend and The Ramsay Classics.

A Treatise on Misdirection with Cards and its use in many Practical Effects.

Ramsay, Vernon and Slydini — the greatest names in natural magic — have all stressed the vital part played in its performance by misdirection, and in particular, visual misdirection.

In fact Dai Vernon has said that it is the true secret of magic.

Now, this unique work explains how to apply that powerful weapon to the most popular branch of the Art — conjuring with cards. The basic technique is clearly and concisely described so you can easily adapt it to your own methods to make your tricks look magical.

The book is in two sections:-

Part 1—takes five standard sleights: the Palm, Double Lift, Glide, Pass and Top Change, revealing how proper misdirection, correctly applied, can provide cover for the moves making them more deceptive and easier to execute.

The Buckle Count and False Count, among others, are also discussed in . . .

Part 2—containing twelve of the author's favourite effects, all of which are practical and well within the capabilities of the competent cardman.

They include a subtle and easy transposition which won the Magic Circle's Cecil Lyle Award in 1973; a very direct version of the Cards Through Newspaper; a Brainwave routine with an ordinary pack, and a simple method for the Cards Across in which misdirection has a dominant role.

The lucid step-by-step instructions explain when and how to apply effective misdirection to every essential move, making each item a virtual lesson in magic.

Finally, for easy reference there is a brief summary outlining the key points covered in the volume.

What the experts say . . .

ROY WALTON—"Andrew Galloway has written an unusual book on card magic — it contains good tricks! Not for him, the complicated plots that audiences find difficult to follow and conjurors difficult to present. His aim has been to explain good straight forward tricks with maximum audience appeal and without undue digital skill. He has succeeded admirably."

FRED ROBINSON (Pabular) — "The information regarding misdirection divulged by a recognised authority on the subject, makes this book of inestimable value to the serious cardworker."

You can make the physical prediction a bit more elaborate by having the prediction card sealed inside an envelope. This would of course be of the slit or window variety, giving you access to that space on the card where the number must be written. Alternatively, a solid envelope with a carbon insert can be used, the number being added to the card with a stylus writer, via the carbon.

The impact here stems from the speed with which the number can be added to the prediction message. You have so little to write, you can hand the prediction to a spectator with only a moment's contact. The message is too long and elaborate to suggest such quick contact would be of any function, so this momentary handling of the card will not seem to be of any significance to the audience — in fact, many will forget that you ever touched the card again after the initial writing of the message.

AMONG THE DEALERS

Offerings from Busby-Corin, Inc. 1351
Francisco Blvd, San Francisco, Calif.94123 include Shigeo Takagi's NEW ONE CUP
ROUTINE priced at 50 dollars and only available from them. To this five dollars to cover parcel post should be added by U.S.A. customers and seven dollars fifty for Sea Parcel Post to places outside the U.S.A.

To be fair to purchasers of the original routine it was decided not to reveal the further effects possible with the new cup. This 'pig in a poke' situation makes it difficult to convey to readers whether or not it would be a worthwhile purchase.

For those who bought the original and found it a worthwhile purchase will welcome the extra climaxes made possible with the new cup. Without giving the game away — some idea of the impact one should expect it to have on the spectators is to equate it with the Chop Cup which is best performed standing. The new Takagi routine, which is performed seated, should provide three distinct points towards the close of the routine which the performer should receive applause. The climax to the original routine was the production of a large ball and the cup? shown to be a solid block of wood having no interior. To this a further climax has been added by Tagaki and this is topped by additional one by Jeff Busby. Those not acquainted with the effect may like to know that the routine commences with various transpositions and penetrations with a small ball.

The apparatus consists of two small and two large brightly multi-coloured crocheted balls, the cup and wand, both the latter being latheturned quality props which will give pleasure to those who demand the best in their properties.

The instructions consist of two separate booklets and two sets of illustrations containing over forty line drawings.

The second offering by this company is the LARRY JENNINGS CARD IN ENVELOPE WALLET. The basic idea comes from Paul le Paul who was undoubtedly responsible for the effect becoming one of the classics. The method of getting a signed card or cards into an envelope which is within the zippered section of a wallet is general knowledge, but it was Larry Jennings who designed an improved style of wallet which enabled the envelope to be shown inside the wallet, and also eliminated the suspicious fumbling associated with this trick when removing the envelope. This wallet is fully explained with an accompanying diagram in Alton's Sharpe's 'Expert Card Mysteries'.

Purchasers of this wallet are therefore not buying a secret, but making an investment. Professional workers who insist in using only properties of the highest quality which do the work required in the most efficient manner possible, and those who are thinking of adding this effect to their repertoire this wallet leaves nothing to be desired. It is recommended without reservation.

Included with the wallet are comprehensive instructions which include tips, historical information, routines and methods of other magicians etc. This booklet can be purchased separately for five dollars and is well worth the modest outlay.

Two different models are available. One in soft calfskin with a choice of colours — black, dark brown or grey at 65 dollars, and the other in genuine Monitor Lizard skin lined in leather. This model is available in two styles of black — either large or small grained polished skin, and also in brown skin with black accentuated markings at 100 dollars. An extra 6 dollars is required on foreign orders for shipment via Air

Parcel Post. Insurance is advised for foreign orders where the country accepts insured mail and is an extra 1 dollar 50c. Money refunded less package and postage free if dissatisfied and wallet is returned safely.

Dateline Scotland. For those of you who may not know it I am a Scotsman. This means that from time to time I return to the scene of the crime and that is what I am doing at this very moment. I decided not to accept any work over the Christmas and New Year period and visit my little hideaway north of the border.

This means of course that I haven't seen any magic for the last ten days or so. Not that there isn't any magic going on up here it's just that I tend to avoid it when I am having a holiday. Now, when I have a holiday I tend to watch TV a lot, which means I can catch whatever magic there is on the gogglebox over the festive season.

I've been thinking about magic on television and I have come to the conclusion that magicians watch it for four reasons.

- 1. To be entertained.
- 2. To look for new material for their act.
- 3. To be aware of which effects NOT to do in their acts, at least for the next few weeks.
- 4. Those who, performing magic for a living like to keep their eye on the box in case one of their pet effects or routines are performed.

The first category we can ignore. The second I just don't understand, although

I remember Goodliffe quoting a concert secretary who, when discussing a magician said 'He is very good. He does all the latest tricks you see on TV.' The third lot are the intelligent ones trying to keep ahead of the game. The last category, in which I include myself, are those who rarely or never appear on TV. They can spend a long time developing an effect for their act, until they have what they consider a good solid four or five minutes which is their own. The effect may be old, or standard but they have added something of themselves to it, and suddenly overnight someone does it on a late TV show and if it is a particularly strong effect, it's always goodbye, goodbye, goodbye. Especially if it has a strong comedy or surprise element.

I never used to worry about what David Nixon did on TV because technically David was not all that strong. As a live performer doing his regular stand up act I thought he was one of the greatest, but when finding new material for a weekly TV series he was limited in what he could do.

Today, David has a successor, namely Paul Daniels. Now here is a force to be reckoned with. He has technical ability, knowledge, style, and he is also very funny. To the public he is a 'name'. He is capable of doing anything. Siegfried and Roy are doing things which are outside the scope of most working pros, but because of his performing ability, Paul can do anything he wants to.

Is there a point to all this? Yes there is. It's something I have said before and I'll say it again. Do your own thing. Find your own effects. Develope your own routines. Maybe, just maybe, Paul Daniels will force us into devising our own original routines, effects or presentations. I hope so. He has got me thinking. He's so good he scares me.

The Loc-Kit is a series of effects done with beautiful little brass padlocks. They link and unlink, vanish, transpose and re-appear. You receive six little brass locks, a mini close-up pad (it is gimmicked) and a full 12-page book of instructions written by the one and only JOHN MENDOZA. The five effects are all practical solid entertaining magic. Your own imagination will create many, more effects and routines. I heard all about this when I last telephoned the USA. You should see my telephone bill. Some people have five figure bank balances — I just have five figure telephone accounts. This effect is just £5.75. As you read this let me tell you that I have only a few in stock but more are on order. Remember the best in Close-up Magic that's new comes from Martin Breese.

AND HOW ABOUT THIS FOR FANTASTIC VALUE. This costs just £3.25 and you get two packs of cards and a book. This is what you get ... Universal Deck ... new deck of trick and odd-ball gag cards, double face, double back, blank face, mis-indexed, mis-coloured, double blank and both horizontal and diagonal split faced cards for the magi who wants to design his own card effects. A "Clip" card, see thru joker, mark card, wrong and wrong again, a card will a 52 in miniature and colourm 14 of diamonds, a zig zag card (with melting pips) and even a "You are out of Cards" card PLUS a full one way deck — the extra deck matches the Universal deck supplied and will withstand thorough examination. PLUS book 101 Tricks with Cards — brand new book of professional card effects all performed with the above decks. Good tricks, the kind you pay £s for individually. I WAS STAGGERED BY THE LOW PRICE THAT I COULD OFFER THIS FOR AND HAVE ORDERED A TERRIFIC SUPPLY OF THESE. Wholesale orders for ten sets or more are 1/3rd off — group together with other club members and buy cheaply this way.

You won't be seeing my ads in Abra for a while so if you want to know all about the newest and latest effects and props for the advanced close-up worker then make certain that you send 50p for my latest catalogue or if you want my NEWSLETTER Martin Breese in Exile send 50p as well and you will receive a voucher worth one £1.

IT'S A PITY: The JUAN TAMARIZ ROUTINE and PRESENTATION for Find the Lady.

Described by Fred Robinson

It must be about three years ago since I first saw Tamariz perform this effect. Since that time I have seen the effect many times and it never fails to create a considerable impact on the spectators, whether they be magicians or lay people. Not only are they mystified they are entertained throughout the routine. Simply stated this is what the audience sees.

A Queen and two Deuces are shown and two spectators are each given two £1 notes the performer has one only. After freely showing the three cards and getting one of the spectators to bet that the top card is the Queen — after convincing everyone that the Queen is really on top. The spectator loses one £1 — the Queen is the middle card. The other spectator is then the victim — after being convinced that the Queen is now in the middle, he also loses £1, the card having returned to the top.

The climax comes when the performer discards one of the cards leaving just the Queen and one other card. After some byplay one is invited to bet which is the Queen and the other puts his £1 on the one not chosen by the other spectator. Therefore one of them must be the winner and take all. Not so — neither card is a Queen. Performer turns over the discard — it is the Queen — the performer is the winner and hastily grabs the money.

The method is delightfully simple requiring no technical skill, leaving the performer free to concentrate his efforts entirely on the presentation. In addition to two red deuces and the Queen of Clubs you will require a duplicate Queen with a matching back.

These four cards are prepared by rubbing some wax on the centre of the face side of both Queens covering an area of about one inch square. The backs of the deuces are similarly treated. Place each Queen with its waxed face square on the back of a deuce and press them firmly together. You will now have two double cards which can be handled as single cards — yet can easily be separated when held between the fingers and thumb if a gentle pressure is applied as the top card is pushed with the thumb.

The wax required is that normally used for plugging the ears to keep out noise. It is a malleable wax and can be bought in this country from Boots, and is sold under the trade name of Muffles.

Credit for using this kind of wax for this effect goes to Spanish magician Roden, but the routine and presentation was conceived by Tamariz.

Prepare for performance by putting the two doubles near the top of the face up pack — say one about three down and the other about sixth from the top. These positions are not critical — but having them near the face enables them to be found quickly. Put the pack in its case, and with five notes (bills) readily available you are ready to go into action.

Begin by chatting about the game you are about to play, remarking about the various names it is known by — Find the Lady and the Three Card Trick in this country, and the Three Card Monte in America. During these introductory remarks the pack has been removed from its case and is face up in the left hand.

Saying you will require three cards push the cards singly off the face of the pack into the right hand until you reach the double and drop it face upwards onto the table slightly to your left. Continue pushing the cards over and when the second double is reached split it into singles dropping the Queen slightly to your right and the two in the centre. Put the pack aside out of the way.

Having acquainted the spectators that the object of the game is to win money by betting on the card they believe to be the Queen when the cards are turned face downwards. To do this they will need money so you give two notes to a spectator on your left and two to a spectator on your right. Drop the remaining note onto the table on the spectator's side of the three cards. It is preferable that one of the participants be a lady so we will assume that the one on the right is of the gentler sex.

So far the patter has been of an introductory nature, but as soon as you have given out the money you remark with a little laugh, "At the moment you are winning." This mildly humorous remark is intended to get a reaction from the audience and is the start of making the routine a piece of entertainment in which the entire audience become involved as they witness the play-acting between you — the PERFORMER — and the spectators with the money. The word performer has been emphasised because without establishing a continuing rapport with the audience throughout the routine by acting out your part in the plot little success will result. Performer in this context is just another word meaning 'actor'.

Any reader taking the view that the entertainment derived from merely presenting the audience with a puzzle to solve and a good trick requires no further embellishment need read no further. The 'purists' ceased to be interested when they learned that waxed cards were used.

Returning to the actual working, pick up the double on the left of the row with the right hand saying "a two". Show its back and place it face up on the fingers of the palm-up left hand. The fingers of this hand should be spread open and the hand itself held well forward from the body. Extend the index finger of the right hand and use it to tip the card over so that it falls face downwards onto the left palm.

Repeat these actions with the two and finally with the Queen, naming each card as you do so pointing out that the Queen is the important card — the one to watch. On no account should the left fingers curl around the cards which would tend to partially destroy your objective. To impress upon the onlookers the total fairness of the procedure, the actions throughout are performed slowly and deliberately and the manner in which they are done, should be made to look important and interesting.

The cards are now taken with the right hand which holds them slightly fanned with the backs uppermost. The thumb is on the back of the topmost card and the fingers on the faces.

The first phase of the trick now begins. Turning to the lady say, "Would you say that the Queen is the top card?" Whatever she replies show the cards once more as follows. With the left hand remove the bottom card (the double) saying, "two" as you show its face. Turn the two cards in the right hand faces towards the spectators saying, "a two in the middle", and turning them faces down again drop the two on top of the double in the left hand. Show the face of the Queen retained in the right hand before dropping it face down on those in the left hand, as you say, "the Queen goes on the top." The important card.

You next ask the lady if she would bet on the top card being the Queen, as the left thumb presses down on the back of the Queen causing it to adhere to the two immediately below. Make sure that the two cards are square with each other before doing so.

When she agrees to bet on the top card the left thumb pushes it (now a double) an inch or so over the side. Point to it with the right index finger saying, "this one". As she agrees take the cards into the right hand, thumb on top and fingers below as before, and with the left hand split the double at the bottom by pulling the bottom card back a little so that the cards appear as a fan of three. Without a suspicious move the Queen has moved from the top to the centre.

To immediately show the faces of the cards and take the ladies money would be extremely amateurish and untheatrical. You have both the onlookers and the lady well and truly hooked so make the most of it. First take the bottom card away with the left hand and show its face saying "Not the Queen". Lower the card to the horizontal and put those in the right hand on top of it, and immediately retake the top card with the right hand, and as you show its face say "neither is the top card -I am sorry — IT'S A PITY — you lose — (show the top card to be a two, and replace it back on the top) the Queen is in the middle." Display the cards in a fan faces towards the spectators showing the Queen to be in the middle.

The business of showing the three? cards in the manner described may seem protracted and repetitious, but it is essential to the presentation that the lady is convinced that the top card of the three shown is really the Queen. In fact, she must be made to agree that this is so, not once, but twice before she makes the bet. Although both she and the audience are fully convinced of the position of the Queen they will still feel that, despite the obviously fair and open manner in which the cards have been shown, they are about to be caught. Note that I mentioned that the audience is also convinced - their curiousity has been aroused and they are awaiting the outcome with almost as much interest as the lady punter — in other words they have become involved.

The manner in which the patter line is delivered by Tamariz when the lady is shown that she has backed the wrong card needs to be explained. It is said with exaggerated mock sympathy and very obviously hypocritically. This helps to give this phase of the trick a 'fun' ending, and so eliminating any suggestion that he has scored a point.

At the end of the first phase when you have taken one of the lady's notes display the cards faces towards once more saying, "the Queen is really in the middle." Pull it halfway out to emphasise the fact and turn to the man with the money on your left and get him to agree — he now becomes the focus of attention. Keeping the fanned cards faces towards the spectators but angled towards the man with the money square up the cards either side of the Queen which is left out-jogged for about half its length. Saying to him "the Queen really goes into the middle" as with the right fingers you slowly push the Queen square with the other cards. Immediately the cards are square, keeping the right hand over them bring the cards down with their backs uppermost and make a suspicious movement suggesting that you may have altered the position of the Queen.

Say to the man, "Would you bet on the middle card being the Queen?" Naturally he will be reluctant to do so having seen your suspicious 'move'. Fan out the cards showing the Queen really is in the centre, again pulling it out halfway.

You now repeat the squaring of the outside cards and this time invite the man to push the Queen in square and as he is so doing say, "slowly...slowly", thus pointing up that the Queen is really going into the middle.

When the Queen is in square, squeeze the cards causing the Queen to stick to the two below it as you say, "the Queen is not the top card, neither is it on the bottom — would you agree?" This he will do — has he not pushed the card there himself. Continue "you would bet on the Queen being in the centre?"

When he agrees to wager one of his notes on the centre card fan them out splitting the top double in the process and take them in the right hand holding them with the thumb on the top and the fingers below. Again you do not immediately show that the Queen is on the top, but build up a little suspense by taking the bottom card with the left hand and saying as you show its face "not the bottom card." You next remove the middle card taking it below the one just shown saying "IT'S A PITY - neither is it the middle card (show the card to be a two) you lose." Finally show the card remaining in the right hand to be the Queen and put below those in the left hand. The order of these cards is now, a double, a single two and the Queen.

You now explain to the audience that you always win because you cheat a little, so this time the lady and gent will bet against each other using only two cards, a deuce and the Queen, the winner taking all the money.

As this is said the left thumb splits the double pushing the top card (a Queen) over the size where it is taken by the ends between the right thumb at the inner and the right fingers at the outer end and dropped casually onto the table to your right. Do not look as it is being removed and dropped but keep your eyes and the attention of the spectators on the cards in your left hand. Immediately the right hand is free it takes the Queen from the bottom of the cards in the left hand leaving the two deuces held in that hand squared as one card. This last action should be timed to coincide with the last words of the above patter line i.e. 'a deuce and the Queen'.

You now proceed by telling the man on your left that you will make three movements. The first is not important, the second is not important, but the third is very important. With the right hand holding the Queen make a sweeping action (as though imitating a dive bomber in action) finally leaving the Queen under the two deuces in the left hand. Tamariz accompanies this action with a sound which would do credit to a demented banshee — you must invent your own.

Saying, "That was the first movement" you remove the Queen and repeat the business saying "that was the second movement." Again take the Queen, but this time pause with the two hands close together and look your 'victim' straight in the eyes and say "Do you think the lady will win?" When he looks back at you, turn your gaze towards the lady and he will follow your eyes and at that moment you put the Queen on TOP of the card(s) in the left hand. This obvious (to the audience) bit of misdirection will cause some laughter and more will follow as the man realises he has been caught. Secretly press down on the back of the Queen with the left thumb making a double of the top two cards.

You now invite him to guess whether the Queen is on the top or the bottom. When he makes his decision drop the OTHER card face downwards onto the table and say to the lady "This is your card... I am sorry... very sorry... IT'S A PITY... you lose." Turn the card face up to reveal a two.

Turn quickly to the man with your right hand outstretched as though congratulating him say, "It's O.K." as you shake his hand "It's O.K. for ME... for you IT'S A PITY because I win." Show the card in your left hand to be the other deuce and turn over the two? discarded earlier and show it to be the missing Queen.

Don't forget to pick up your winnings — it's your money anyway.

ASTERIOR OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

OASIS FOR JANUARY 1981

A Happy and Prosperous New Year to everyone. This will be the last time that I am able to express these wishes in this column.

Due to other commitments and interests I am no longer able to devote the time and energy required to fulfil the duties of being Editor of Pabular. It has of late become obvious that there was no possible way in which I could bring the magazine back up to date.

I wish to thank all the faithful contributors who have so generously given of their best and so established the reputation of Pabular throughout the world of close-up magic. My hope is that they will continue to do so.

Your new Editor will be Walt Lees and he will be delighted to receive your contributions. His address will appear at the bottom of the back page but in the meantime make a note of it -5 Essex Mansions, Essex Road South, London E11.

Walt needs little introduction to readers having had one issue devoted to his own effects and his iconoclasms will have given a clue to his magical thinking. He is currently much in demand as a lecturer and has a stage comedy act which was an instant success. Having also had experience in this field, being Editor of INFO for a period, readers may rest assured that the standards of Pabular will be maintained and probably improved. Anyway, here's wishing him luck.

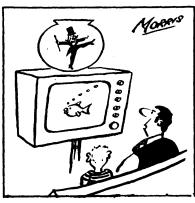

One of the rewards of editing a magazine with a policy devoted to publishing practical magic is to hear that readers are actually regularly using material they have found in Pabular.

Over the past few months this has happened to me on several occasions. Roger Crossthwaite wrote to say that he regularly used Andy Galloway's Pegasus Coin and my own Behavioural Bluff. Incidently Roger won the Magic Circle Close-up competition, and you may like to know that he also sent a batch of his effects for Pabular. Tommy Wonder over recently besides treating us to a performance of his excellent Cups and Balls and Ambitious Card routine, expressed his delight with Keith Charnley's Coin and Cover. Eddie Taytelbaum was enthusing about Eric Mason's original sleights and Walt Lees iconoclasms. Vincent De Jong is working Bob Farmer's Jazz Pieces. When Barrie Richardson was in Germany he saw someone performing his mental effect The Three Chair Enigma. Eric Eswin busy working on a Pabular index has made good use of Barrie's version of Seven Keys to Baldpate.

I trust the above does not seem too self-indulgent, but it does at least make it seem that one's efforts have not entirely been in vain.

Just received the news from Obie O'Brien that Bob Read is to be Guest of Honour at Fechter's Finger Flicking Frolic April 24-24-25. He thinks everyone should know — so do we.

That's all — over to you WALT.

"Have you been playing with the buttons again?"

BOOK REVIEW

DIVERTING CARD MAGIC by Andrew Galloway. Available from the author post free £6.50 U.K. £7.00 Europe and 18 dollars airmailed to the U.S.A.

It may be somewhat unusual to begin a review with quotations, but they are relevant to the subject matter of the book, and will help to give authority to my own opinion on the importance of the information imparted. Being quoted from memory they may be less than word perfect, but the message they contain will be clear.

Of David Devant's performance someone (I forget who) wrote 'Everything he did was ordinary — only the result was extraordinary'. I do not recollect any explanation being given why this recognised master of magic was able to produce such an effect on someone who knew something of the secrets of our craft.

What was the 'secret'? How was he able to achieve such an effect on his audiences? Did the answer lie with the methods he used? Was his technique so perfect that the necessary moves remained hidden from the onlookers?

Countless magicians have asked themselves these and similar questions when watching the performances of their more talented contemporaries. Perhaps the answer lies in the following quotation from the master himself.

'Calculated misdirection is the most important thing in conjuring'.

Was this the reason why everything he did seemed ordinary? Obviously the spectators could only see what they were looking at, and if their attention was 'diverted' from the secret moves necessary to produce the effect everything they saw would appear to be ordinary.

So far so good. A question still remains. What exactly is calculated misdirection? There is no simple answer to this question as misdirection takes many forms. This is how Andrew Galloway defines one of the basic and most important kinds of what may be termed 'calculated misdirection'.

'Visual misdirection relies on the natural tendency for the eye to follow a moving object, which IS VIRTUALLY IMPOSSIBLE TO RESIST by even the most determined observer'. This quotation is taken from Part One where the author proceeds to give detailed instructions on how to use visual misdirection in a calculated manner.

In the space of six and a half pages of text, the reader is given the necessary information explaining how to keep the eyes of the spectators away from his hands at the moment the vital sleight is being made. This information alone is worth many, many times the price of the book. It is impossible to estimate its value, particularly to the beginner, who will, for the first time have access to the real secret enabling him to perform the Palm, Double Lift, Glide, Pass and Top Change in an undetectable manner. He will escape the trap of believing that spectators can be wholly deceived by the use of technique alone and so escape spending countless hours in the endeavour to make his sleights 'invisible'. He will learn from the commencement of his studies that the application of misdirection to cover, or hide his moves and sleights, is the real secret of making his tricks appear magical. To be made aware of this one fact alone is of great value — to be given a virtual blueprint on how to actually apply it is a value which cannot be estimated. Even the most enlightened card worker will find in this thought provoking chapter considerable food for thought.

In Part Two the author gives his personal methods for achieving twelve effects. These are all 'oldies' and no claim is made for the originality of any of the effects. The object of this chapter is to provide further examples of how misdirection is utilised in each trick. However, all the tricks are worthy of inclusion in the card magician's regular programme and include such favourites as the Cards Across, Sympathetic Aces, Lie Detector, Brainwave (using an ordinary pack), Solo Aces and the Colour Changing Pack to name only half of them.

There is an intriguing new use for the Bluff or Mock Pass and an extremely natural Table Palm which has the advantage of not appearing either contrived or difficult to execute.

It is, however, to the Comments on Misdirection appended below each trick that we must return. These provide clear instructions just where and how to apply effective misdirection.

Perhaps a few examples will assist in reaching an understanding of what the book is really all about. In the comments certain points in each trick are indicated where misdirection is required and definite instructions given, such as — follow the right hand with your eyes — address the audience — don't look at the hands — look at the spectator, etc, etc. In short, you are told exactly HOW TO DO the tricks in a way that will ensure that 'everything you do will appear ordinary' thus ensuring that the result will be 'extra-ordinary'. That is magic.

To sum up. It is my personal belief that Diverting Card Magic is one of the most important textbooks on card magic ever to appear. The information regarding misdirection divulged by a recognised authority on the subject, makes this book of inestimable value to the serious card worker. I cannot praise it too highly and confidently predict that it will become recognised as a classic work on the subject of misdirection as applied to card magic.

WALT LEES REPORTING

One of the major events in any close-up worker's diary these days must be the International Magic Day organised by Ron MacMillan. Where else can so many topliners be seen under one roof in one day? If you count the get togethers and night before events it would be two roofs, but this is merely being pedantic.

The conditions are far from ideal at the Empire Rooms, where the events take place. The tables are too big and too close together. The artistes have to perform their acts six times without a breathing space and a lot of the spectators have to stand on their seats in order to see. And yet somehow everybody does see and all the performers do manage to get round, without any apparent signs of strain or fatigue. It must be magic!

This year there were twelve performers in all, each working for about ten minutes at every table. The average number of tricks performed by each was six and it is not proposed here to list all of the seventy-two items seen or detail who did what. Instead, here is a brief summary of the overall impression that the different acts made on the reporter.

First on our table in the 12.30 session was Gert Malmros of Sweden. Gert has a smooth, quiet manner and is such an obviously likeable person with a ready smile, that is certain to ingratiate him with any audience. His magic too is smooth and clean. Without any haste and in an almost leisurely manner he somehow performed nine routines in as many minutes, including the one that has almost become his "signature tune" — the coins to glass, with the glass in the performers coat pocket.

Ron Wilson followed, the only English performer in the session. Ron looks like every layman's idea of a magician, with his slim build and mephistophillian appearance. He scored strongly with his Optical Deck routine, this is the pack which is a sort of combined Nudist, Svengali and Kuller Pack. First the cards are all blank on both sides, then it is a blue backed pack with normal faces, which somehow changes to an all alike pack with red backs. This was a dealer item some years ago, but Ron seems to be the only person around doing it today.

What can anybody say about Al Goshman that has not already been said a hundred times. Without a doubt he is one of the great masters of misdirection. He is also, without a doubt, one of the most professional performers around. By this I mean that he can be relied on to be where you want him, when you want him. You do not have to dig him out of the bar two minutes before the show starts. Neither does he require ages to reset between each table. Nor does he overrun his time; if you ask for ten minutes you get ten minutes, no more and no less. Magicians everywhere can learn a lot from Goshman — misdirection, presentation, clarity of diction and professional discipline.

Piet Forton promised something different, and delivered it. Explaining that in Switzerland it is difficult to find audiences he demonstrated how he has become his own spectator. Donning a costume that was half that of a typical magician down one side and half that of a Dick Emmery type female down the other he was able to be both magician and spectator, depending on which side was the audience. The result was hilarious, the magic was good too. A signed card placed in the pack appeared in the handbag of his alter ego, while money placed in the handbag was later produced from the card case. As is to be expected from a three-times world champion the technique was flawless.

A blast of mouthorgan music brought Juan Tamariz, bounding up to the table. Tamariz must be about the only magician I know who performs sleight of hand whilst accompanying himself on a musical instrument. It sounds impossible but nothing is impossible to this zany Spaniard. It is difficult to put into words the impression that Tamariz makes on his audiences. To me he looks a little like Mr Punch, but with a touch of impishness like a mischevious demon. He also does some very fine magic with cards and coins, that provide a unique combination of skill and magical humour. The best assessment I can make of his work is to quote the words of Al Goshman, who remarked to me, "I've appeared with Juan all over the world, but this is the first time I've had an opportunity to see him work. Boy! He's good!" And Al does not bestow praise like that lightly.

Finally came the Welsh Wizard himself, a regular favourite at these events — Rovi. Rovi to me is an enigma in magic. Just when I think that I have got him weighed up and know most of his stuff, he confounds me completely by producing some new miracle that I just cannot explain. Up he popped again, in cracking form with ten minutes of top class original card magic most of which left us all completely bewildered.

The above was just the morning session. At three thirty there was a second session, with a further six acts. The report on this must be briefer as I was dragged in at short notice to replace Carmillo, of Spain, who was not well. Consequently I did not see this part and am indebted to Ian Keable-Elliott for passing me his own notes.

Roxy from Italy is a very smooth cardician, whose routine, with a gambling flavour, incorporated some dazzling technique. Neat, precise and elegant are the words that should be used to describe both the performer and the material.

Also from Italy was Paviato Aurelio, a youngster who is fast carving a name for himself in magic's hall of fame. Specialising in coin magic but also including some card stuff, Paviato certainly got all the boys tongues wagging.

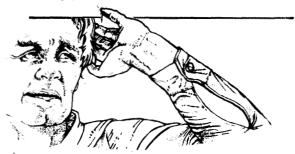

The Itallians seemed to be taking over this session. Next on was Count Della Ragione, one of magic's real characters. Now he is resident in the U.S.A. Although his son was born in England when he was playing the "Pigalle' so is a British subject. I did not see his act on the close-up, but I did see him working impromptu at a party a couple of nights later. His pocket picking and novel violin playing (instead of the proper thing he makes his own instrument from a table leg and a bit of string with a matchbox for sound) were a riot and his routine for vanishing an ashtray by placing it on his head sensational. This routine is similar in conception to the paper balls over the spectator's head. In this case the performer vanishes an ashtray by placing it on his own head, everybody knows where it is except the "stooge".

Ger Cooper, the reigning World Champion stage manipulator, showed his prowess at the close-up table. Again very favourable comments from all the boys but unfortunately I did not see the act.

Also unseen by me was Dick Koornwinder, but as I did follow him around from table to table I could not help noticing that the famous Koornwinder, Car was very much in evidence. Dick has had much experience grafting in department stores with the "Squirble", so certainly knows how to project to the large audiences at this type of show.

As has been hinted several times above, the sixth performer was a certain Walt Lees about whom the least said the better.

Before finishing this report, mention should be made of Steven Hamilton, who joined some of the above performers on the Saturday night in an informal session. Using cards and coins, he made a big impression and showed that he can certainly hold his own among the top international performers. I think that we will be seeing a lot more of Steven Hamilton.

SHARP SHARP

By Steve Kuske

Other poker demonstrations are pseudoserious or plain entertainment. The layman will see this as a genuine demonstration of card cheating as done by a real mechanic — and it is, only better.

Effect: An examinable deck is shuffled by the spectator till sundown. The magi then riffle shuffles the deck a few times. The spectator fairly cuts the deck. The magi then deals poker hands and deals himself a full house.

Please consider the problem before reading the method. This trick involves no palming, switches, lapping, stocking, jumping the cut, or trick cards.

Method: This is a method right out of Expert Card Technique that cheats us to get a few good cards. The method is altered to deliver you a pat hand, and therein lies the merit of this trick. Take a new deck that has a borderless back design and throw away Queen, Jack, Ten, Nine and eight. Remove the Aces, Kings, any Jokers and edge mark them in a manner suitable for your lighting working conditions. I use an eraser and remove a think crescent of ink on opposite corners of the backs.

Performance: Let the deck be examined and shuffled. As you riffle shuffle the deck your goal is to space the marked cards more or less evenly throughout the deck. Of course the edge markings show where the marked cards are if the cards are spread slightly. After the cut you then deal 6 hands of poker, using a second deal to save the marked cards for yourself.

Comments: The dealing of 6 hands is a strength of the trick as you can brag that you will beat your opponent and 4 of his pals as well. Dealing yourself a pat hand gives the trick real punch, so practice the shuffling so as to give yourself a high percentage of success. The borderless back design of the cards makes a so-so second deal look like a great one, and also makes the demonstration appear more fair as casinos use borderless playing cards. It is hard to deal the cards with a steady rhythm. The trick will look more smooth if you deal your opponents cards face up, and pause to make comments.

THE LADY VANISHES

By Jan Heins

Here is a trick for the non-expert which has proved to be very effective for lay audiences and has on occasion fooled magicians.

Take any Queen (actually any card will do, but a Queen makes sense of the title of the effect) and apply glue to about two-thirds of its face surface. Stick it onto the card and put the rest of the cards inside the case.

Prior to performance place a duplicate of the card in some apparently inaccessible place — say the coat pocket of your intended victim.

To perform, remove the cards from the case and rest them on top of the case — face downwards. Apparently show the bottom card by raising the end of pack, but it is the card stuck to the case which they see. This is a simple matter unless you have the case the wrong way around.

Hand the pack out to be shuffled. Perform your favourite magical gesture and have victim search the pack for the noted card. When he cannot find it — suggest he looks in his pockets.

Alternatively you could turn your back as he shuffles the pack and looks for his card. When he fails to find it take the pack from him and ask the name of the card. You look through the cards and accuse him of removing it. This he will deny and you reply by saying, "You are sure you did not put it in your pocket?" Persuade him to feel in his pockets where much to his surprise he will find the card.

The effect is best used as an opener as the case is already in your hand which makes the procedure quite natural and preferable to performing it later on in the programme when the action of picking up the case and resting the pack on it would look extremely suspicious.

DAI VERNON'S "CENTREPIECE"

Described by Phil Goldstein

Some time back, Dai Vernon posed the following problem: the four Aces are shown and placed into the centre of the pack. The performer now deals out two four-card hands. When these are turned up, it is seen that the performer has dealt himself the four Aces—apparently from the centre of the deck.

I published a solution under the title "Poker Angle" in the March, 1978 issue of S.O.B. Jr., and a modified version, "Bi-Angle", in the October, 1980 issue of New Tops. Recently, Dai developed his own routine, based on my solution. The result is a most impressive demonstration of card table artifice.

To begin, state that you will remove the four Aces from the pack. In fact, five cards are taken — the Aces plus an indifferent card. The indifferent card is positioned fourth from the face of the packet. Fan the cards face up as four, using a Single Buckle Spread (the indifferent card being hidden squared beneath the third card). Just the four Aces will show. Square the packet, and table it face down.

Pick up the pack, obtaining a break beneath the top two cards. The Ace packet is taken and apparently inserted into the centre of the pack. Actually, it goes into the break, but via the Depth Illusion ("Tilt") technique, the audience will believe they are in the middle.

Dribble the pack to the table, to prove (to any informed spectators) that no breaks are being held. State that you will retrieve the Aces by using the legendary Centre Deal.

Pick up the pack, and deal out two hands, turning the cards face up as they are dealt. The first card is dealt to the spectator. On the next, perform a Second Deal, giving an Ace to yourself. Deal the next card normally to the spectator. Second Deal an Ace to yourself. Deal the next card normally to the spectator. Deal the next card (an Ace) normally to yourself. Second Deal the next card to the spectator. Finally, deal the next card fairly to yourself — the last Ace.

It is true that the above routine requires some skill in Second Dealing — but, properly presented, you will be given credit for far greater skill.

IN ANTICIPATION By Neil Somerville

Most prediction effects involve a force of some kind, and unless the force is skillfully performed the impact of the effect is considerably lessened. The beauty of the following effect is that no force is used — in fact it is the very freedom of choice given to the spectator that makes the effect so strong.

This is what happens. The performer hands the spectator a pack of cards to examine and shuffle. When they are satisfied that the cards have been well mixed, they are asked to spread them face down on the table and to remove ANY card and place it, still face down, to one side.

The performer then recaps on what has been done, and tells the spectator that before he began the experiment he had a feeling that from out of the entire pack they would remove a certain card. He admits that he might be wrong in this, but he thought that the card they'd remove would be the six of diamonds and he turns over a business card he has been holding and shows the six of diamonds written down.

The spectator is then invited to turn the selected card over for the first time and it proves to be — the six of diamonds!

The method is very simple. The performer uses a marked pack of cards and a thumb writer. Knowing that, the working should now be obvious.

The spectator is given the cards to examine and shuffle and is told to remove one card keeping it face down on the table. The performer simply reads the marking on the back of the card, makes a note of it on the business card with a thumb writer (the initials of the card will do, i.e. 6D), and patters to the effect that he anticipated that the six of diamonds would be the card they'd remove from the pack.

It's as simple as that, and yet to the spectator it's almost a miracle for the spectator knows that he could have removed ANY card from the pack and yet you had anticipated the very card he did remove.

Whilst the above method is perfectly adequate the following variation and embellishment may find favour with some subscribers who have a liking for more sophisticated means for achieving their effects, and also are not averse to a little extra preparation.

You will require a packet of small envelopes into which your business card will fit snugly. From one of these remove about an inch square from the bottom left hand corner of the address side and put the envelope on the bottom of the packet which hides the cut out.

Put a secret mark on the backs of the Ace to ten of diamonds denoting their value — a pack with a geometrical back design will make this a simple matter. These marked cards are returned to the pack so that reading from the top of the face down pack they become every other card. A quick way to do this is to put them on the top and give the pack an in-faro.

Commence the performance by shuffling the cards — false shuffle with faces towards the spectators retaining the set-up. The spectators seeing the face card changing will accept that the cards are well mixed. Put the pack face downwards onto the table.

Remarking that you will make a prediction write the following on your business card. The brackets indicate a space to be filled in later:

You will stop at the () of diamonds.

Place it writing side hidden onto the table, and take the packet of envelopes and remove the prepared one. Open it out keeping the cut-out towards yourself and put your prediction card inside so that the space in your message registers with the cut-out. Seal and drop onto the table address side undermost.

Put the pack infront of spectator and ask him to take one card at a time from the top of the pack and to stop any time he wishes. Demonstrate what is required of him by removing the top card and put it onto the table, otherwise he may keep the cards in his hand after removing them and this is not desired.

'When the spectator stops, one of the marked cards will be either on top of the pack, or on top of the pile of cards he has removed. Pick up the envelope and point to the marked card saying, "This is the last card you removed" or "This is the card at which you stopped," whichever applies — at the same time filling in the blank space through the cut-out with your nail writer making your prediction tally with the marked card.

You now put the envelope back onto the table (they will not remember that you even touched it) and pick up the marked card dropping it face upwards onto the table.

Next invite the spectator to turn the top card of both the pack and the pile of the cards he removed and call his attention to the fact that if he had stopped one before or one later the card would have been a different one.

Pick up the envelope and tearing open the end pull the card part-way out. Invite spectator to take the card and read the prediction.

By putting the pack onto the table for the spectator to remove the cards one at a time, slows up his progress and he is almost certain to stop before he reaches the end of the stack. Should he reach the end of the stack before he stops, all is not lost. Stop him and take the pack, remarking that you want it to be a completely haphazard 'stop'. Ask him to continue as before with the cards already removed and to stop anytime he wishes somewhere in the middle.

PIET FORTON'S FAN CLUB Described by Fred Robinson

This is a new and original method of producing two freely selected cards. The fan club theme provides scope for producing more entertainment than is usual in effects wherein selected cards are eventually found. Such effects often lack opportunity for spectator involvement on the way to the climax which often lacks interest.

In addition to an ordinary pack you will need to have a pen at the ready. One which will write clearly on the face of a card — a fibre or nylon tipped one is preferred to one with a ball point. Watching the magician struggling to make a legible mark on a playing card can hardly be regarded as entertainment.

Although this effect may be performed at any time it is best used after the spectators have shown some appreciation for one of the tricks. It would be somewhat presumptive to expect anyone to want to be a member of your fan club just because you claim to be a magician. So introduce it after a trick has gone really well.

When this happens, ask a couple of ladies if they would like to join your fan club, and should they show some reluctance, point out that you do not make a charge, or use any other means which you think may persuade them to do so.

When they agree, spread out the cards face up across the table and get them each to choose a card for you to sign. When the cards have been removed talk about the cards they have chosen, and use it as an excuse to tell their future etc. They will most likely enjoy this much more than any trick you have done, or one likely to do.

You now sign the cards after asking their names, telephone numbers and any other relevant details which may, or may not, be of use later on. Give them back the signed cards, and acting as though you have just had an afterthought (apologies to Harry Lorayne) suggest that they might like you to do one trick with their membership cards.

Whatever the reply pick up the pack and holding it the left hand riffle off the bottom quarter of the cards and ask one of the ladies to push her card part-way into the pack. Riffle off a few more cards and get the other lady to do likewise. Plenty of audience participation here.

Using the Multiple-Shift control the two cards to the bottom of the pack, and with a false shuffle apparently lose them somewhere in the pack.

With the right thumb take a break above the two chosen cards and with the left hand pull the top half of the pack forward and hold it in position with the left index finger. Sketch (1) shows the position at this point.

The left hand now takes the upper portion between the thumb on the face card of the exposed part of the overhanging top half and the fingers on the back of the card, removes it, and making a one-handed fan turns it face upwards. The right hand next places the bottom half onto the fan sliding the two chosen cards below the break in between two adjacent cards of the fan. See sketch (2).

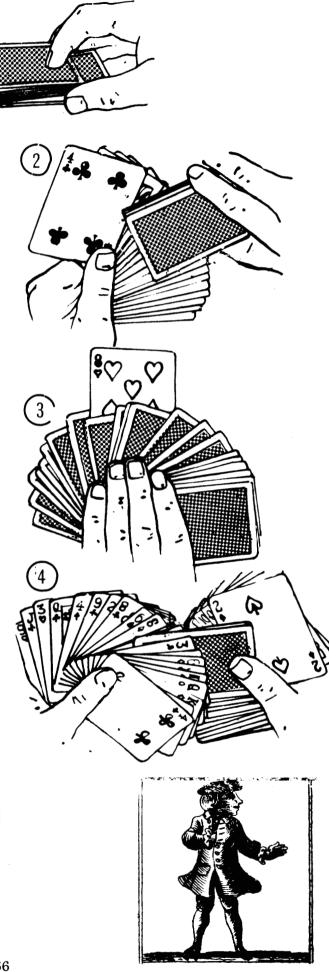

Now for the difficult bit. The left hand tosses the bottom half into the air and ends up with the backs of the fanned cards facing the spectators with one of the selections sticking out from the top edge of the fan, face outwards. Sketch (3). Meanwhile the bottom half has been caught with the right hand.

The other selection which is hidden behind the one in view is dealt with as follows. Make a one-handed fan with the half in the right hand holding it deep in the thumb crotch and bring the edge of this fan just below the edge of the one in the left hand. With the left thumb pull off the hidden selection from behind the other onto the right hand fan. See sketch (4).

Both hands now bring their respective fans up with the backs of the cards towards the audience, each with a selected card showing faces outwards protruding from the top edge. This makes a nice display for the climax.

Give your fans their membership cards back — with thanks.

Finally a couple of hints. It will help when pulling the hidden selection from the left hand fan onto the right hand fan if some downwards pressure is applied with the left thumb — it will help to release the card. It will also be found that if the one-handed fan made with the right hand is to be done smoothly it will depend largely how the bottom half is caught. Catching the half with a downwards grab from above will be found to give the best results especially if it is caught with one end well in the thumb crotch.

L'ESCAMOTEUR MANQUANT SON TOUR, FAUTE D'UN COMPÈRE

From the Bob Read Collection - Number Six in a series of Six

So, what's new? Not much. Last time out I mentioned the fact that I happened to be in Scotland. This time I'm back in Merry Old England. December was, possibly, the busiest month for work I have ever had in my life. January was one of the quietest, but I haven't been lazy. I have taken the time to sit down at my tripewriter and put down some of the many thoughts I've had over the years.

What I am about to say are not those very thoughts I have been putting down. Those thoughts are for another project. I remember reading that Sir Walter Scott was a compulsive writer. He never had a spare moment, and right up until he died he was writing. I am the opposite. I am a compulsive thinker. I love to sit down and just think I am not talking about daydreaming, I am talking about creative thinking, searching through one's own mind, taking a thought from way back and trying to up-date it.

How many times have you had a good idea for a trick, thought about it for a while, and then discarded it as being just a good idea, but not very practical? Then two years later someone else has had the same idea, but he has either been lucky or given it a lot more thought than you because his version of the same idea is very practical indeed.

To get back to what I started to say. Some people are compulsive writers: I am not. When I sit down to write something it usually flows fairly easily but it can literally take me weeks to force myself to sit down at the typewriter and actually start. This could be a considerable drawback to anyone who is creative (I am not talking about me).

I usually scribble notes on pieces of paper to remind me of various ideas. What happens then is that I lose the scribbled notes, or rely on my coat pocket for weeks until they resemble something like old wallpaper. By then, of course, they are completely unreadable and I end up by throwing them away.

The answer, of course, is a notebook. Not a small one you can slip into your vest pocket. A big one, a thick one. Most important, when you do make an entry, is not to abbreviate it too much, otherwise the next time you look at it you'll wonder what the hell 'palm card behind card case' means!

I used to keep a notebook, but that was years ago. I found it a few weeks ago and was amazed to find a note in it referring to a new card effect. Yes, I have actually invented a new card effect, and what's more since reading that old notebook I think I have come up with a method. Don't get excited, I'm not going to reveal all — I'm simply going to point out the advantage of keeping a notebook.

Most of the magicians I have known and respected have kept one. I remember seeing Fred Kaps' notebook, It was a large exercise book and I remember him saying that he took particular care that he would still understand what he had written when he read it again six months later. Which means: don't make it too short — explain all in the notes.

Has it been worth reading all this way just to find out that all I am trying to say is that you should keep a notebook? Maybe you already have one? I don't, but ??????????

HOW ABOUT A LITTLE ROOM SERVICE AROUND HERE?

I have sold so many 'ROOM SERVICE' and made so many telephone calls to the United States to get further stocks that I feel I could do with a little room service myself! Good news folks they have just arrived and by the time this ad is published you will have received that long awaited parcel. Thank you for your patience. What is 'ROOM SERVICE'? Ah:

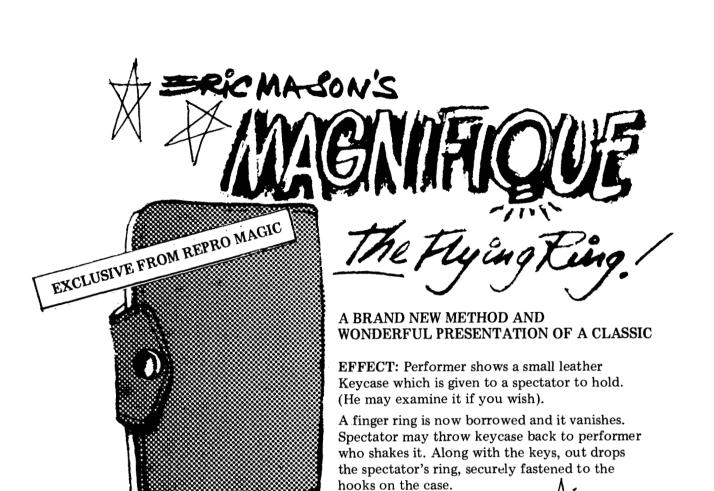

Al Schneider's latest is entitled 'FUSION' ... a simple rope effect in which four ropes mysteriously fuse into one examinable long piece. Nothing added or taken away, £3.25. Mickey Hades'ULTIMATE FINGER CHOPPER' now available from me ... so impressive I actually cut my finger last night - £9.50. Really, it is the finest version of the finger chopper. Everything can be minutely examined and if you are defter than I am then you won't cut your finger off! A noted Irish professional, Tony Sadar, has purchased 'RULE OF THOUGHT' from me. It is a brilliant effect and I predict that it will go straight into his programme. At £10.00 it is mentalism at its most effective and relatively inexpensive. No details revealed but if you know me trust me, this is something for the professional. Stock awaited now. 'ZIG ZAG DECK' is here to stay. Seen on British TV but not by me. I was too busy on a buying trip in the United States. the deck. Show both sides and then place full pack into the Zig-Zag. divide the deck into three with two cards and then ... push the middle to one side - £13.25. Virtually self working. No skill required but still baffling. 'MIKE DONATU'S THREAD' now available exclusively from me. Everyone says it is the world's best: The very fine stuff - breaking strain around 4 oz. One packet £1.00. Slightly thicker $l\frac{1}{2}lb$. strain, violet colour, total non-shine suitable for dancing cane (buy it in Woolworths now folks) or Nemo Rising Cards or Floating Ball at £2.00 per packet, (about 4 yards). Mike Donatu demonstrated his Floating Ball and his Floating Stick on my stall at the Magic Circle Day of Magic. We sold everything immediately including the demonstration models! Everything you need for Cabaret performance of two now classical effects. Really good. Only a few in stock as Mike is sooooo lazy. 'FLOATING BALL' £15.00 plus £1.50 postage and 'FLOATING STICK' £12.00 plus £1.50 postage packing etc. One or two 'ROPE CUTTING SCISSOR CASES' from the United States. They clip on your belt and hold the scissors and also just a couple of similar cases designed to hold a pack of cards. £4.00 each plus 25p postage. CLIMAX' has arrived in from the States - a very clever item - using a bunch of miniature colour changing knives. £3.25 plus 25p. postage. Also just arrived four sets of knives that change colour visibly. They match the Kaps Knive set of three. You receive one faked special knive plus one white and one red plus excellent routine for £12.25. Kaps Knive set almost similar package includes 3 knives one feked, the world's best routine (in my opinion) £12.25 again and about a dozen sets in stock. More on order. CLIMAX' back in stock again. Do a knive colour change and various moves and finally pour a big handful of miniature knives out of your hand. different colours - £3.25.

LOC-KIT' from Bob Brown and John Mendoza is back in stock again. See previous issue of Pabular for details - £5.75 (it is magic with mini padlocks). 'PEEP IN A BOTTLE' a quickie from Eric Mason. Excellent idea with good instructions - typical Mason brilliance at £3.25 post free. 'ZIP IT UP' purchased from me and used almost immediately by Paul Daniels on T.V. Silk vanishes from small purse ... you unzip the purse and it turns into a.... giant zip

And best of all John Mendoza's 'BOOK OF JOHN (VERSE TWC) probably in stock by the time you read this ... price 50p cheaper than from anywhere else. Received the Mendoza Magicassettes have to edit briefly before I release 3 hours with John Mendoza!

All the best from Martin Breese and Anne Barclay at 31, Richmond Way, Hammersmith, London W.14, England - Telephone 01 003 0578.

PLEASE NOTE THESE VERY IMPORTANT POINTS

 Keycase may be in the spectator's possession when the ring vanishes.

2) Spectator's actual ring appears in the keycase.

- 3) NO REELS USED. No threads to break.
- 4) Keycase may be examined before and after.
- 5) May be performed at any time with no set-up required.
- 6) Perform under any conditions.
- 7) Easy . . . Simple . . . Direct.

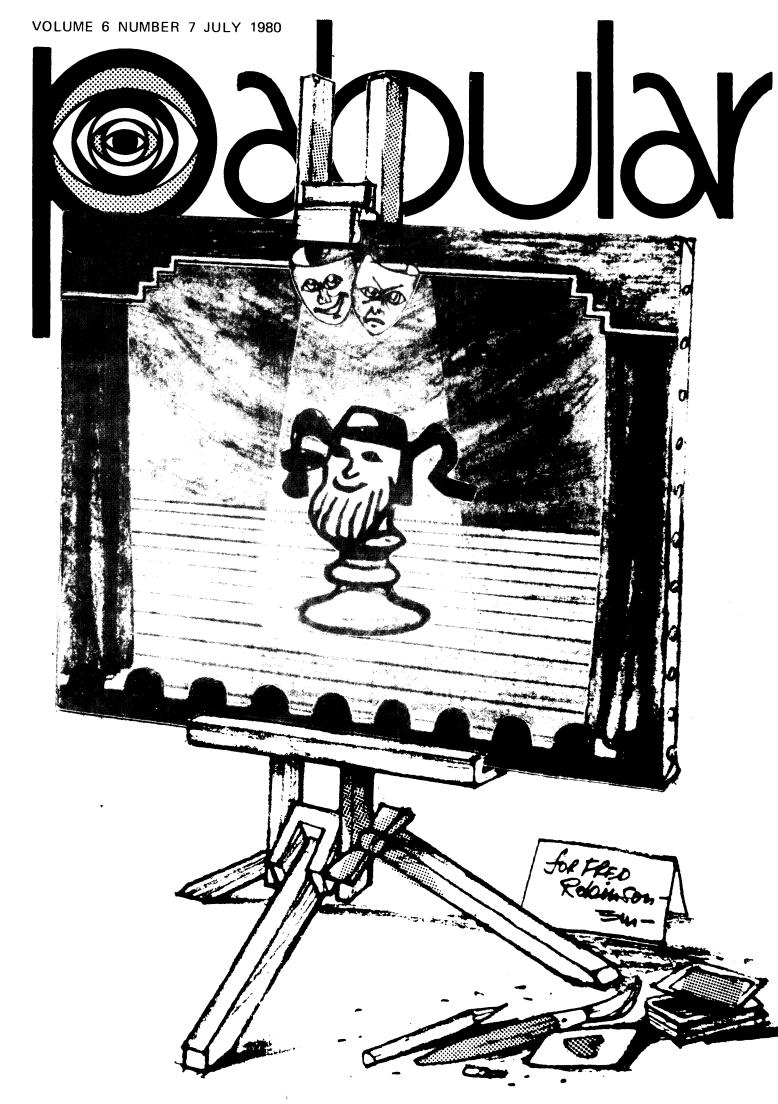

This fabulous new routine and NEW Principle combines all the advantages of Koran's "Flying Ring" with these extra Plus Points: No reel to set or risk breaking. Keycase may be examined before and after; the natural gimmick is innocent and undetected.

I have not been so excited about a new effect for a long time. If, like me, you love and perform the Classic "FLYING RING" you will rave over this Magical new method and Presentation.

EDITORIAL

This is a tribute to Fred Robinson issue, which has largely been compiled by Eric Mason. We would like to thank all of those who have contributed.

Fred, in addition to being editor of 'Pabular' since its formation, is also widely known and respected as one of the world's leading technicians with a pack of cards. It was Dai Vernon who once said that he had spent a lifetime chasing all over the world to track down gamblers and technicians and learn their secrets. And yet he admitted that nowhere had he encountered Fred's equal when it came to false dealing.

What is it that has enabled Fred to achieve this level of perfection, apart that is, from a lifetime of study and practise? Nobody could claim to know all the answers to this one, possibly not even the man himself. There are, however, certain facets of his character that become apparent to those who know him well.

Firstly, Fred is a perfectionist. He is continually seeking improvement and is never content to leave any of his stuff alone. He is always finding a welter of minute details, many of which a lesser person would disregard or fail to see as significant.

Another of his characteristics is a readiness to believe that certain things can be accomplished, when everyone knows that they are just pipedreams. That is, until months or even years later, Fred accomplishes them. He nags away at things and never lets an idea go. He hears a story over the grapevine of a magician somewhere or other who can do some seemingly impossible move. Everybody knows that it is just a tall story — everyone that is except Fred. He believes it and tries for it, first this way then that. He gets nowhere but he does not give up. Few others try and those who do generally fall by the wayside, but Fred goes on and on. . . and on. He has a relentless tenacity which sooner or later turns the pipe dream into a solid reality.

Other characteristics that those who know Fred soon become aware of are inventiveness and an ability not to be hidebound by conventional thinking. Many of his originalities have a refreshingly unconventional approach. They are not just variations on other people's ideas. Fred builds up his material by drawing on his own resources most of the time. He is one of magic's few original thinkers. He also has an understanding of the sheer mechanics of the way in which cards behave that shows a level of observation seldom seen and rarely surpassed.

Add to all of the above an almost ruthless self-criticism and an endless enthusiasm for improvement and new knowledge and you have some idea of the driving force behind the man.

Fred keeps promising or threatening to write a book. Many cardworkers are hoping that he will. Future generations need the skill and knowledge of a man who has done so much for magic.

It is with deep regret that we learned of the passing away of Lewis Ganson. Lew was, without a doubt one of the greatest magical writers of all time. Future generations will refer back to his works for many years to come. His contribution to close-up magic has been of a value that just cannot be estimated. We are all poorer for this sad loss.

END GAME PLUS

Roy Walton

Fred Robinson has been a good friend of mine for many years and it is a friendship I value highly, he has great technical ability combined with humour and a shrewd assessment of what is good and what is bad magic. Fred does the most amazing things with cards in a quiet natural way, and is a perfectionist, quite willing to devote the considerable time required to master the sleight of hand tasks he sets himself.

Tell Fred the Pass is obsolete and he will demonstrate that you are wrong, and by that demonstration, prevent you ever making the statement again. He excells in fake deals, king of the dealers, without ever having sold a trick!

END GAME PLUS

Some years ago I published a trick called 'End Game'. At that time I did not describe an alternative handling at the conclusion of the effect as it involved a sleight not in common use by card conjurers. As Fred is a specialist in this particular move, it seems appropriate to describe the routine here.

WORKING OUTLINE

Run through the face up pack and look for any spot value card from 4 to 10 inclusive. When you have found one, remove it, plus a quantity of cards behind it equal to its value i.e. if you remove a five spot, remove a further five cards with it, the five spot being at the face of the group. Place the packet face down on the table. Repeat this procedure with a further three spot value, no values being repeated. Place each packet face down in a separate position on the table.

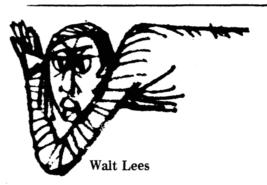

Pick up any of the four face down packets and place it into the left hand in the Glide position. Twist the left hand to show the face card of the packet and draw attention to its numeric value — let's say it's a five spot.

Appear to draw off the five spot and place it face down on the table but really carry out the glide so that the second from face really goes down. Count the remaining cards without altering their order, pointing out that you have exactly the same quantity of cards as the value of the one placed on the table, and place these on the table a little below the single card. Repeat this procedure with each of the other three packets until you have a face down layout on the table something like the diagram:

Pick up the four single face down cards and mix them up, finally dealing them in a line from left to right on the table. Now change the face down multi-card packets around a bit, finally leaving each in a carefully squared packet on the table, the actual positions being of no importance.

Pick up any one of the multi-card packets and drop it on top of any of the face down single cards as freely nominated by a spectator. Repeat with the other three packets, dropping each on one of the remaining three race down cards in any order the spectator requests. Point out the complete freedom of choice given to the spectator.

Pick up any of the packets and place it face down in the left hand. Count the cards out loud from the top of the packet, dealing them in a heap on the table, but Bottom Dealing on the second card dealt. Deal until one card remains in the left hand. Say the number you have counted out loud is five, slowly turn the remaining card in the left hand over to show it is a five spot. Repeat this procedure with each of the other three packets. The spectator has thus apparently married up every packet with its correct quantity card.

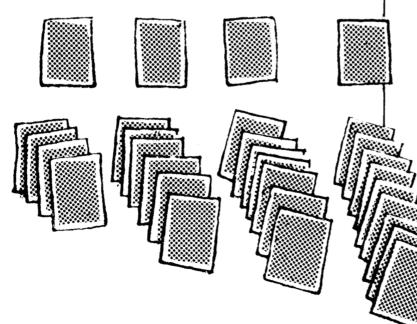

EVEN BREAK

Inspired by T. Kardyro's "Fifty-fifty Mental Selection" described in Al Sharpe's "Expert Card Conjuring", the following can either be presented as a mind reading effect or as a gambling type challenge, where the performer always wins.

The basic effect is simply that the performer shows two cards and requests a spectator to remember one and forget the other. The cards are mixed around by the performer, who then buries one in the pack. The second one is left in full view. The spectator names the thought card and the performer shows that this is the one left in view. This is repeated a number of times and the performer is always right.

METHOD

Not being a mentalist, I present the trick as a gambling item, beginning by offering to show the audience how to make some easy money. As I say this, I remove four coins — a 2p, 5p, 10p and a 50p and hand these to a spectator saying, "Here's some money for you to bet with." Next remove your wallet and from it extract a £1 and lay it on the table.

Pick up a pack of cards and double lift the two top cards as one, turning them face up. Use these two cards as one to flip the next card also face up. The spectator sees two cards. Ask him to think of one only and forget the other. Turn the cards face down again so that the indifferent card ends up on top.

Thumb off the two top cards and without putting the pack down, mix them around, keeping track of which is which. Return them to the top of the pack so that the indifferent card is on top.

Say, "I will now lose one card in the pack." Here you remove the top card and without showing its face push it into the centre of the pack. "That leaves one card on top," you continue, "will you bet me 50p against this pound that the card on top is the one that you remembered? If I am wrong you win a pound, if I am right I get the fifty pence."

Both the cards are, of course, on top although the spectator thinks that one is lost in the pack. When he agrees to the bet, have him name his card. If it is the one on top, simply turn it over and collect the money. If it is the one that is second from top, double lift, show the card and turn the two face down as one; again collecting the money.

Commiserate with the spectator on his loss saying that it is after all a fifty-fifty chance. Put the fifty pence on top of the pound note and say, "Would you like another go, this time to win the whole £1.50 or just 10?"

Cut the pack to bring two fresh cards to the top. This time you do not double lift. Simply turn the two top cards over (it is best to use one to flip the other one over as in the previous method to maintain consistency) and request that the spectator remember one and forget one.

Turn the two cards face down again and mix them around, then place them both on top of the pack face down. Remember which is which or glimpse the faces during the near action. Get the pack into position for the tilt move. Form the gap below the two top cards. Then take the top card and remove it and without showing its face push it into the gap. This is where you can glimpse if necessary.

To the spectator it appears that you have pushed one card into the centre of the pack and left the other on top. In fact both cards are together on top. Ask the spectator to name his card. If it is the top one simply turn it over. If it is the other double lift and turnover to show the second one.

Collect the 10p coin from the spectator, making a suitable comment and place it together with the fifty pence on the £1 note.

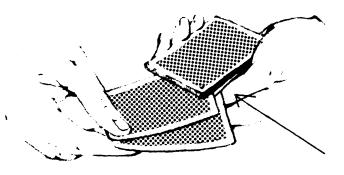

Offer the spectator a chance to win £1.60 for 5p.

Cut the pack once more, bringing two fresh cards to the top. Turn these over and show them as in the previous method and again request the spectator to think of one and forget the other. Again turn them face down and mix them around remembering which is which.

Now comes a move described by Gordon Bruce in a trick called "The Tired Travellers" from Pabular Vol.5 No.6, June 1979. The two cards are at the moment in the right hand, face down in the position shown in Fig.1. The left thumb riffles down the left hand side of the pack to open a gap somewhere near the centre. The two cards in the right hand are inserted into the gap but outjogged towards the audience for half their length. During the actual process of inserting the cards the left thumb riffles off one card. Because of the way that the two cards are spread in the right hand, this one card released by the left thumb will slide between them.

The pack is now held squared in the left hand in a dealing position, with the two known cards projecting for about half their length from the outer end. These two outjogged cards are separated by one card in the pack which has half its length sandwiched between them.

Align the two projecting cards as one, this can be done quite openly, and take hold of them with the right forefinger and thumb in the centre of the outer end. Pull them forward about an inch, then keeping them in perfect alignment swivel them to the right withdrawing them completely from the pack and placing them on top. During this action the indifferent card, trapped between them will have been drawn forward from the pack for half its length (by a sort of reverse plunger action) and will now be outjogged from the front of the pack. To the audience it will look as though both cards were temporarily inserted into the pack, then one was returned to the top, while the other was left in the centre. In fact both cards are now on top and it is an indifferent card projecting from the pack. This card is pushed flush.

Again ask the spectator to name his card and either turn over the top one or double lift and turnover as necessary.

Collect up the 5p placing it with your other winnings and offer the spectator a chance to win £1.65 for 2p.

Suggest that the spectator himself might like to nominate the two cards to be used. Hand him the pack and allow him to shuffle then have him cut it into two face down piles.

Pick up one pile in each hand and turn them face up showing the two face cards of each pile. Ask him to remember one and forget one. Turn the left hand pile face down and apparently withdraw the bottom card putting it face down on the table. Really make the glide leaving the known card on the bottom of the face down pile and placing an indifferent card on the table in front of it. Put the left hand pile down behind the indifferent card. Next draw off the actual bottom card of the right hand pile, simulating the moves of the glide. Place this card on top of the indifferent one and place the right hand pile on top of the left hand one. In this way one known card is on the bottom of the pack, the other, together with an indifferent card is on the table.

Pick up the two tabled cards and mix them about, then remove the indifferent card and place it into the centre of the pack. Place the pack on top of the tabled card and have the spectator name his. Either turn the pack over to show the correct card on the face or execute the glide if necessary to withdraw the second one.

COMMENT

The beauty of this trick lies in the fact that much of the time the spectator's card will be the one which is correctly positioned. If you are very lucky you may get through the whole routine without using the double lift or glide to reveal the card, but this does not happen often, although you will find that with some people you can accurately assess which card they will choose most of the time!

ALMOST REAL MINDREADING

Barrie Richardson

I am flattered to have been invited to submit a trick in honour of Fred Robinson. Fred is one of the most knowledgeable and skilled cardmen in the world. However, his philosophy on magical presentations has been even more stimulating to me than the outstanding technical moves he has taught me over the years. I have learned from Fred that the method is of little consequence. . .the effect is everything. "Misdirection is 90% of the secret of magic — entertainment is the goal."

EFFECT

A pack of cards is mixed and spread in a very haphazard manner on the table top. You pick up a small handful of cards (8-12) and invite several spectators to do likewise. The actual number of spectators is unimportant and it is of no consequence that they all take different amounts of cards. Remember to say "Thank you" to each spectator as they co-operate by taking the cards. It is more effective to ask first one spectator to take a few, then ask another and so on giving an air of casualness to the whole procedure.

Address the spectators who have taken cards, "Now fan your cards in front of you like this." Here you hold your own cards, faces towards yourself in a small fan. "If I asked you to think of a card, your eyes would wander and then settle on one card," you continue. "You might be influenced by colour or value. Let's each select a card in a more random fashion."

"Please do as I do. Cut your cards and complete the cut. Now carefully turn over your top card. Be careful and hold your ards up like this, so nobody else can see. Please don't peek at one another."

You demonstrate how to turn the card over by holding your own small packet up close to your eyes and then quickly turn over the top card.

Continue talking, "Say the name of your card to yourself two times. Good! Now quickly turn it face down again and stick it face down in the centre of your pack. Now mix the cards again. Once more. Good."

Turn to one of the spectators and say, "Please put out your hand, Paul (or whatever his name is) and you too Dave." Hold their wrists or touch their palms with your fingertips as you reveal their cards.

(Note: In honour of Fred Robinson — the revelation is everything. This is the heart of the trick!) It should go something like this. "I feel that your card is red, Dave. Yours, Paul is also red. Paul yours is a picture card, I think, and yours, Dave, is a spot card." Lift their hands as you look at them one at a time and reveal the actual names of the cards. This must really be sold strongly. For heavens sake, do not just reel off the names of the cards.

Now turn to another spectator, who looked at a card and say something like, "Jim, please hold out both your hands. Hold his fingertips and reveal his card, working up to its identity in stages. . .a black card. . .a spot card . . .a spade. . .a high value. . .the ten of spades. YOU ARE DOING A MIRACLE, NOT A BAR STUNT.

Continue in similar vein with the other assistants, if any.

WORKING

Now to the method. Bear in mind that the really strong point about this trick is that it actually involves several persons in the presentation. Using three (or more) persons gets a group dynamic going, which can be very positive. It is direct, mystifying and easy to do.

The solution is simple: so simple that most readers will never try it. This is a great pity, as the impact of the presentation is enormous.

The pack is stacked. I use the 3-ahead (S. Stebbins) system, but the eight kings or any other stack, where looking at one card tells you the identity of the next will do. The stack is unimportant. What is important is the subtle way that it is used, a way which will throw even the knowledgeable off the scent.

Start by giving the pack a false shuffle, or failing that a few cuts then spread the cards in a wide, untidy ribbon across the table. Illustrate to the spectators what is required of them by taking a block of cards from the spread. Allow the spectators to do likewise. They do not have to take all the blocks from the same point in the spread, provided that each just grabs a handful of consecutive cards from somewhere.

When you have each spectator cut his cards in order to bring a random one to the top of his packet, the face card of the packet will tell you the identity of the one on the top.

To sight the face cards you simply follow the presentation outlined above and have each spectator hold his packet face out, close to his eyes while he quickly turns over the top card and turns it back. This is a beautiful subtlety as it is the very act, which the audience believe makes it impossible for you to see the cards, which in fact enables you to do just that.

Do not worry about anyone noticing the red, black sequence. They do not if you keep them busy.

The same effect can be done with large cards — close-up as well as for a large group. For some reason it seems to be more entertaining with big cards.

If you know some mnemonics, you can have six different persons take a packet.

Finally the trick can be done completely impromptu without stacking the cards. You must be able to memorise about 25 cards. You need not remember the order — all you have to do is remember which card follows the preceding one. This, believe it or not, is not difficult. Certainly it is much easier to do than Fred Robinson's "Invisible Pass".

TRANS COLLECTION

Steven Hamilton and Peter Duffie

EFFECT

Four aces are shown and three selected cards placed amongst them. Four kings are shown and placed face up in the pack. In an instant three three chosen cards vanish from among the aces and reappear among the kings. The transposition is clean, startling and instantaneous.

METHOD

Remove the four kings and the four aces from the pack and place them in two separate piles on the table. Then get a break with the left little finger below the top three cards of the pack, which is face down in the left hand.

An easy way to accomplish this is to down-jog the third card from the back of the pack while apparently searching for the aces and kings. Then having placed the latter on the table, flip the pack face down into the left hand and obtain the break as you square up the cards. This eliminates any messy riffle counting or spreading off of cards in order to find where to make the break.

Pick up the four kings and place them face up on top of the deck to show them and in the process pick up the top three cards of the pack face down below them. (The packet should be held in the Biddle grip, by the short ends, the thumb is at the inner end and the fingers at the outer). With the right thumb also pick off the top card of the pack below the break and use the thumb to maintain a break between this card and the other three. You are now ready to go into Ed Marlo's Atfus Move.

Draw the first three kings one at a time from the right hand onto the top of the face down pack. The cards are taken from the right hand by the left thumb and as each king is drawn onto the pack it overlaps the previous one to the right about half an inch. After the first three kings have been taken, the remaining block is quickly added as one card and the whole lot squared on top of the pack. The single card held by the right thumb is released on top of the three face up kings and the remaining four cards lifted clear and placed face up in a neatly squared pile on the table. To the audience this pile should contain the four kings. In fact it was one face up king on the front followed by three face down indifferent cards. The other three kings are face up on top of the pack, concealed by one face down indifferent card. With practise you can allow the tabled packet to spread very slightly, allowing the white borders of the face down cards to show.

Get a break with the left little finger below the top four cards of the pack. This can be done either by feeling for the natural break below the bottom face up king. Or the break can be taken at the beginning of the Atfus move described above and maintained throughout. The latter is probably the more certain way.

Now pick up the four aces, with the right hand and place them on the deck overlapping each other for half their width to the right. The en! of the cards should line up with the ends of the pack. The right hand should maintain its hold of them.

The left thumb pushes the top four cards of the pack proper slightly to the right then draws the top single card back again. This enables the right finger tips to trap the three face up kings below the aces. The whole block of seven cards can now be flipped face down on top of the pack (a sort of book closing action) thus effectively adding the three kings to the top of the aces.

Thumb off the top four cards, without reversing their order, into the right hand and place the packet face up on the table. There will be an ace on the face, with three kings below it. All the cards will be the same way round.

Spread the pack between the hands, face down to allow three spectators to each take a card. As the pack is squared after the selection, get a little finger break beneath the third card from the top.

Pick up the "ace?" packet from the table and turn it face down. Fan the packet and place it in the left hand. The left hand still holds the pack, but the two can be kept apart. Simply hold the four card fan by the extreme tips of the left forefinger and middle finger underneath and the very end of the thumb above. The left little finger is still maintaining a break beneath the top three cards of the pack (aces). Fig.1 shows the position.

Insert the three selected cards face up among the face down "aces" so that they are interleaved card for card. Square up the "aces" selection packet on the pack below then turn over all of the cards above the break. Without pausing lift off the top four cards (aces) and place them on the table. A good dodge for doing this is to leave the selected cards projecting forward for about an inch as they are inserted into the fan. Then square the packet along the long edges only. Next turn the whole packet over, end for end. Place it on top of the pack. Push the projecting cards square with the right thumb at the rear and in the same move lift off the four cards above the top projecting card. These will be the aces only although the audience think that the packet also contains the three selected cards.

After placing the ace packet face up on the table, pick up the "king" packet with the right hand, the thumb taking a break at the inner end. Place the pack on top of these cards. Pull down the bottom three cards with the left little finger and hold these cards back, while the right hand cuts off the top half of the pack and completes the cut by inserting it into the gap above the bottom three cards in the left hand, but beneath the rest of the pack.

Place the pack on the table, then pick up the ace packet. Wave this over the pack, then spread out the aces, to show that the three selected cards have disappeared. Toss the aces one at a time onto the table, showing that there are no concealed cards amongst them.

Ribbon spread the pack across the table. The four kings will be face up in the centre with three cards interleaved face down. Remove these face down cards and show them to be the chosen ones.

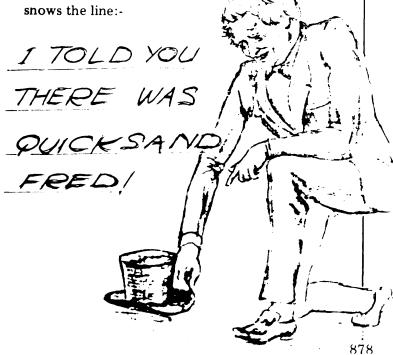

CREDITS

The "Collectors" theme is by Roy Walton. The addition of the second packet is by Alex Elmsley, and is published in "The Card Classics of Ken Krenzel".

Here is a gag that I have been using for a couple of years. It started as an ad lib, but now I set it up deliberately.

At some point in your performance a hat is "accidently" knocked on the floor so that it lands crown upwards. Look at it for a second and...well the drawing below

BACK HANDER

Arthur Setterington

EFFECT

The performer steers the conversation towards the party pieces, which some people like to do. He comments on the skill shown by someone he saw, who was able to balance three or four coins on the back of his hand, throw them into the air and catch them singly as they came down, without dropping any. He tells of how he practised but failed, even using one coin, and demonstrates his lack of skill. He says that he cannot place one coin on the back of his hand, toss it upwards and catch it ten times in succession.

He starts by placing a coin on the back of his hand, tossing it and catching it. He manages to do it four times, then explains that he can never manage a fifth. He shows the reason. . . the coin has disappeared!

WORKING

The whole effect is dependent on surprise. No hint that a trick is to be performed should be given. It is simply one of those "betcha" stunts, at which the performer claims to be most inept.

Giving details of the method is far more difficult than the trick itself.

Stand with the legs slightly apart. Place the coin on the back of the hand. Toss it up slightly and catch it. It will be seen that the hand travels in an arc, and if allowed to do so, finishes near the knees.

The moves are slightly exaggerated, so that the hand travels the full distance each time. As this is a one handed juggling stunt, the left hand is held back just behind the left thigh.

The coin is caught three times and by now the spectators are used to the repeated actions of the swinging right hand. In catching it for the fourth time the hand continues downwards. The hand is slightly opened and the coin is thrown between the legs and into the waiting left hand. The right hand is immediately closed. It is at this point that the performer explains that he has never done it five times, and opening his hand, shows why.

AMULATION

Phil Goldstein

The performer displays two small boxes, one red, one blue. A finger ring is borrowed from a spectator, and placed inside the red box. A mystical amulet is placed inside the blue box. The boxes are tabled some distance apart from one another. Attention is drawn to the fact that the boxes at no time have come into contact.

The magician states that he will cause the two objects within the boxes to transpose. The gestures are made. The blue box is opened. Apparently, the performer has failed, for the amulet is still inside. The red box is opened, and found to be empty. The performer exclaims, "Ah — now I understand what happened: the amulet did not pass across — but the ring did! Look inside the amulet." And indeed, the spectator's ring is found to be inside the amulet.

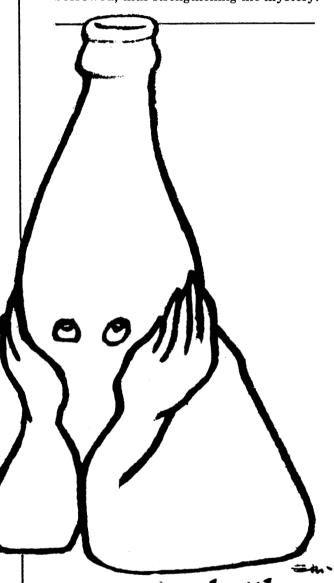

The above plot, while original with me, was stimulated by Alan Brown's "Restless Spirit" [Pallbearer's Review, June 1968]. In order to perform this routine, you will require two similar boxes. The red box is gaffed — it is a Rattle Box, as sold by the dealers. The amulet involved must open and close easily and quietly, and be large enough to accommodate at least a wedding band. Line the inside of the amulet with felt. At the start of the routine, the amulet is in your pocket.

Introduce the boxes. Borrow a ring (small enough to fit inside the amulet). The ring is placed into the red box, and secretly stolen out, using the standard technique of a Rattle Box. As the box is tabled, it is rattled — thus indicating to the spectators that the ring is inside. As this action is done with one hand, the other hand (with the ring) goes into your pocket, loads the ring inside the amulet, and comes out with same.

The amulet is displayed, and placed inside the blue box. The work is over. Both boxes can be rattled. At the conclusion, both boxes can be opened by spectators.

T.A. Waters suggests a slightly more elaborate approach, involving two identical amulets. One is shown at the start of the routine — displayed, and then tabled. The second amulet is in your pocket. The ring is stolen as in the above routine, and loaded into the pocketed amulet. That amulet is now exchanged for the tabled one, via any of a variety of coin-switching techniques. The loaded amulet is then placed into the blue box; the empty one is gotten rid of. By this extra effort, you will be able to have the amulet apparently in play before the ring is borrowed, thus strengthening the mystery.

a peep in a bottle

ERIC MASON

This is really a peep into anything! But apart from using it to entertain young children, the older ones like myself will find it a useful 'put off' for 'the do this again coin in the bottle trick merchants (!)' who need to extract themselves from the many challenges (possibly)—requests to do this particular trick over and over again.

Cards on Demand by Al Smith. Obtainable from the author at 17 Osbert Road, Rotherham, South Yorkshire, England S60 3LD. Price £3.50 post paid in U.K. or £6 overseas by airmail. I.M.O. only — no personal cheques.

Offset printed, A4 size, this book contains some 25 items on 40 pages with line drawings by Les Johnson.

Quite how long Al Smith has been around on the magic scene, I am not sure, but in the last two or three years he has begun to carve quite a name for himself as an originator and lecturer. Certainly he will need no introduction to readers of Abra and Pabular, where his contributions have caused favourable comment.

This book will do much to enhance his reputation, containing as it does, nothing, which cannot be performed by anyone of average ability.

These days, when so many books of card magic are coming out one after the other, it is necessary to establish some criterion, by which an originator can be assessed. After all, anybody can string a few moves together and call the result a new trick. One of the things that I personally look for is subtle thinking and an acid test of this is when the author can invent strong effects that require little or no sleights. It is far more thrilling to evolve a self-worker than something that involves careful handling. Al achieves this in the first trick in the book. This alone, to my mind, establishes him as a writer worthy of study.

Every trick in this book is practical and effective. The sleights are fairly basic and used efficiently to produce the maximum effect. "Cross Over Aces" and "The Perpetual Ginsberg" are object lessons in subtle simplicity.

Do not get the impression from this that all of the tricks are easy. There is nothing that will not require study. But then there is nothing in the book that is not worthy of study. I defy any practical cardworker to be able to go through this book and not find something that he will immediately want to add to his repertoire.

Highly recommended.

PRESENTING

DIVERTING CARD MAGIC

by ANDREW GALLOWAY

Author of The Ramsay Legend and The Ramsay Classics.

A Treatise on Misdirection with Cards and its use in many Practical Effects.

Ramsay, Vernon and Slydini — the greatest names in natural magic — have all stressed the vital part played in its performance by misdirection, and in particular, visual misdirection:

In fac Dai Vernon has said that it is the true secret of magic.

Now, this unique work explains how to apply that powerful weapon to the most popular branch of the Art — conjuring with cards. The basic technique is clearly and concisely described so you can easily adapt it to your own methods to make your tricks look magical.

The book is in two sections:-

Part 1—takes five standard sleights: the Palm, Double Lift, Glide, Pass and Top Change, revealing how proper misdirection, correctly applied, can provide cover for the moves making them more deceptive and easier to execute.

The Buckle Count and False Count, among others, are also discussed in . . .

Part 2—containing twelve of the author's favourite effects, all of which are practical and well within the capabilities of the competent cardman.

They include a subtle and easy transposition which won the Magic Circle's Cecil Lyle Award in 1973; a very direct version of the Cards Through Newspaper; a Brainwave routine with an ordina, y pack, and a simple method for the Cards Across in which misdirection has a dominant role.

The lucid step-by-step instructions explain when and how to apply effective misdirection to every essential move, making each item a virtual lesson in magic.

Finally, for easy reference there is a brief summary outlining the key points covered in the volume.

What the experts say . . .

ROY WALTON—" Andrew Galloway has written an unusual book on card magic — it contains good tricks! Not for him, the complicated plots that audiences find difficult to follow and conjurors difficult to present. His aim has been to explain good straight forward tricks with maximum audience appeal and without undue digital skill. He has succeeded admirably."

FRED ROBINSON (Pabular) — "The information regarding misdirection divulged by a recognised authority on the subject, makes this book of inestimable value to the serious cardworker."

Every time I think of Fred Robinson I always think of two other magicians, T. Nelson Downs and Bert Douglas. I never saw T. Nelson Downs but I did meet Bert Douglas once when he was in Britain on a holiday from Canada.

Downs was an American. Douglas was a Scotsman from Aberdeen who emigrated to Canada after the first world war. Fred Robinson is as English as they come, but all three of them had three things in common. Firstly, all three of them worked for railway companies. Downs, I believe I read somewhere, was as a young man a telegraphist with a railway company in Iowa. Bert Douglas was for many years a guard on a train travelling back and forth across Canada. Fred Robinson was a railway signalman for something like forty-five years.

The second thing they have in common was a passionate love for, and interest in, things magical. Downs, as we know, became an internationally acclaimed performer. Douglas, for quite a number of years, was a prolific writer on things magical and Fred became editor of Pabular.

The third thing they apparently had in common with regard to their railway work, was time. All three of them had occupations which involved long periods of inactivity which enabled them to devote their thoughts to you know what.

Downs spent his time practising his coin sleights, Bert Douglas told me he spent many happy hours sitting in his little caboose at the tail-end of a trans-continental train scribbling away at his many books trying to invent some original ideas for brother magicians, many of which were very successful.

Fred's passionate interest was cards. He was, and still is, a devotee of Erdnase. 'Expert at the Card Table' was his bible. I don't know who invented the riffle pass but I do know he was in there way back with his version, and he is still the only person that this writer has seen who can do it, if I may steal a modern phrase, full frontal, invisibly. His second, centre and bottom deal are as good as any I have seen. Fred himself would be the first to admit that the ability to do a few sleights well doesn't make one an authority on card magic. Fred does have a pretty wide knowledge of that subject and is quite willing to share it with anyone who shows more than just a passing interest. He also has a very attractive daughter, Annabel, who has a magic act, a very good one too. Did I mention that for many years Fred also did kid shows? I didn't? He did. Which brings me to one of my favourite kid show stories.

Fred and Annabel were booked to perform their respective acts at a kids' party at a social club. After the show, or rather right at the end of the show, the club secretary mounted the platform to thank them for the entertainment. He brought them back on stage to receive an extra round of well-earned applause which led into 'Three cheers for Uncle Fred and Annabel'. Can you picture the scene? All the kids screaming their hip-hip hoorays with the exception of one little boy in the front row who was standing up with both hands around his mouth yelling 'Fraud! Fraud it's a trick!'

The kid couldn't have been more wrong. There is no fraud about Fred. He is one of the most straightforward men I know. In case you are wondering what this is all about it is the fact that Fred has relinquished his position as Editor of Pabular. He has been with us since the beginning. Thank you Fred. And in the same breath may I say 'Welcome' to Walt Lees.

Goodbye, Patrick Page

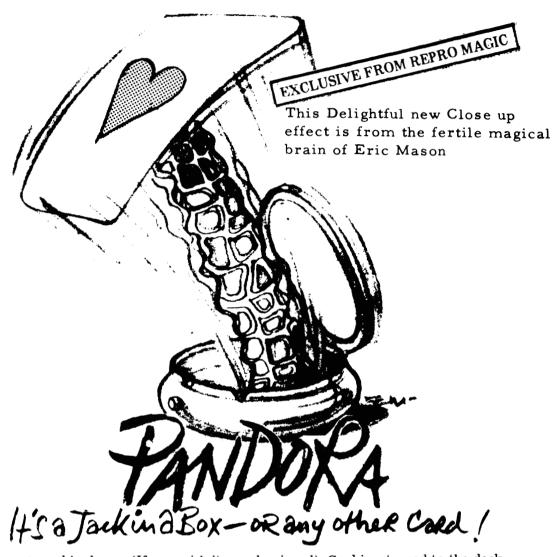

Last months ad came to an abrupt stop virtually in mid-sentence as I had run out of space. So now no chat just fact ... Sold out of 'COMMAND PERFORMANCE' by Michael Ammar Issue One and Issue Two, £4.65 each. This is brilliant close up magic by someone that Mendoza/Vernon and many other names have a great deal of respect for ... I met him in the United States and he fooled me badly. Please place your order for these lecture notes cum books and I will despatch immediately second batch arrives. Al Schneider gave me the U.K. exclusive rights to his CLOSE UP book. I priced it fairly and left with egg all over my face when ANOTHER DEALER offered the same book at a lower price. Anyhow Al Schneider was very upset and to prove it he has given me the exclusive rights to all his publications right now. I have Al Schneider ON COINS (virtually a coin classic) at £7.50 and Al Schneider ON CLOSE UP at £12.00. Thank you Al for backing me up when I ran into problems. 'MEPHISTO DOVE FANS' aren't much good for close-up workers but if you work with doves then they are highly recommended at £19.75. Other dove material: 'MEPHISTO'S GLOVES TO SILKS TO DOVE' - £15.00, 'MEPHISTO DOVE HARNESS' £7.00, 'MEPHISTO SHOULD I USE DOVE' (Handbook) £6.25, 'MEPHISTO MULTIPLYING SILKS TO DOVES' £11.25 and really new in via my suitcase from the United States ... 'WONDERGAS DOVE HARNESS' - a new principle with many unusual and practical features. For experienced dove workers only £7.50. I worked my way around the States with Ken Brooke's Malini Egg Bag and Dirty Deal (contact Paul Stone for prices not me) and 'THE DEVANO RISING CARDS'. I have been taught a beautiful handling by the late Lewis Ganson and wherever I went the 'DEVANO PACK' did me proud. This is not just advertising but I must say that they are foolproof, work every time and as smooth as silk. Beautiful item that knocks the audience out every time ... £5.50 plus something for postage please. Get 'GIPSY CURSE' from Repro as well, it has an amazing impact on your audience.' (What's all this Martin, free advertising for your competitors)! I had one sample Magic Blotter in from the United States. Everyone who saw it raved about it. Eventually I sold the sample but there will be more. Desk type blotter unit crafted in wood. It changes blank paper into a real pound note and then can be rigorously examined. A collector's item and something you will love ... £20.00 as soon as the parcel arrives here. I fool people (and magicians) with 'CABALA' from the masters of craftsmanship Milson Worth in California. A solid heavy stainless steel ball penetrates a sheet of glass inside a beautiful hand crafted wooden case. The ball penetrates visibly and then everything can be fully examined. In a fine wood and made to last forever, £18.75. Just a few 'EXPANDING DECKS' in Bicycle cards. Once called Macro Micro I believe. A mini size deck changes visibly into a full poker size deck. No sleight of hand and an amazing impact £3.25 but again, just a few in stock but more on order. Precision 'CASINO DICE' in stock. Red and Green, £3.00 per pair.

What is a CLONE? What is a sponge ball? Who knows? Put two eyes and a nose on a sponge ball and when it starts to duplicate itself etc., what have you got? A very clever routine using little faces called 'CLONES'. £6.25. A friend showed this to me in California and at last I have found it - CLONES - the first person to buy it in this country phoned me up to sing its praises. Get 'CLONES' ... have only a very small quantity but more awaited. American customers love my ads I am told and say that they would love to be able to buy American tricks from me, now believe or not they can. I have just opened up what will, I am very certain, be another thriving magical business in Oakland, California. Blake Edward Maxam a professional magician and actor will be handling all the enquiries o watch my advactising for full details of fine American mugic and European magic selected by the one and only Martin Breese soon available

By now the cat is out of the bag. Most of you will know that Fred has relinquished the editorial chair and yours truly is at the helm. The last issue, which was a tribute to Fred Robinson, was planned long before he announced his retirement as editor. We were going to bring it out secretly and surprise him. Instead he surprised us.

This issue is also a tribute to F.R. It seems that while Eric Mason was collecting material in this country, that globe trotting funny man, Bob Read, was similarly occupied in America. (Bob crosses the Atlantic so often these days that if he is not careful he will begin to look like David Frost). So this issue is a U.S. tribute to Fred, and we are grateful to Bob and his friends for the excellent material submitted.

So, without any more ado, I am going to hand over the editor's desk to Rick Johnsson. Rick, of course, is well known to I.B.M. members for his monthly column in the 'Linking Ring'.

Over to you, Rick......

"The British are coming!!! The British are coming!!!" cried my child bride. Timing not withstanding, the expression was totally ludicrous, echoing, as it was, down the halls of that old hotel on Russell Square. Looking back on the event, it seems fitting that that was the beginning of an unforgettable final evening in London.

The "British" in question, in this case, were Bob Read and Pauline who had just arrived at our hotel to whisk us off on a carefully planned evening's entertainment. In what turned out to be par for the course for our entire trip, our plans were thwarted, distorted and finally aborted......but were obviously guided by some fortuitous master plan, for we wound up spending the whole evening drinking ouzo, dancing on table tops, drinking ouzo, eating souflakia, drinking ouzo, meeting fine people, drinking ouzo and seeing some great magic.

One of the great joys of that evening was having the chance to meet and spend time with Fred Robinson. Although I know different I keep telling myself that it was the suicidal intake of ouzo that allowed Fred to fool me so badly.....so many times. In a fit of pique, I threatened Fred. I swore that if he fooled me again I would force some of my material on him and make him publish it. Throwing caution to the wind, Fred countered with some miracle with a deck of cards that vanished from beneath his foot. I didn't get mad, but I swore to get even.

That was better than two years ago and following my family motto of never doing today what can be put off until tomorrow, I have successfully lulled Fred into a false sense of security.

When Bob Read called me to let me know about this special issue honouring Fred, I KNEW that the time had finally come. All I can say is that Fred brought it on himself!

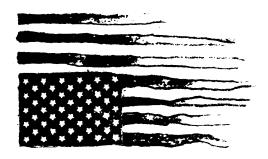

Excelsior!!

We have received several excellent contributions in foreign languages. This causes some concern at Pabular, where we have only just learnt to talk English proper.

We would like, indeed are desperate, to hear from anybody, who would be prepared to do a little bit of translating for us. At the moment we need people, who can translate any of the following languages into reasonable English: German, Spanish and Itallian.

We do not ask you to produce a beautifully finished translation, all ready for printing (it would be nice if you could, and very helpful) — all we want is a run-down of what the articles say. This can either be written or put on cassette.

We would be pleased to hear from anybody, who would be prepared to do this kind of work from time to time. Please contact Walt Lees at the address shown on the back of the mag.

YOURS, MINE & OURS

Rick Johnsson

This is a rapid-fire series of card changes and surprise with more magic crammed into one minute than you might think possible. It is simplistic, but it's cute, commercial and plays well.

For those of you who will want to use it the following bare bones description will more than suffice......for those of you who won't, it seems a waste of time to give a blow by blow.

PROPS

- ... A deck of cards with the ace of spades pencil dotted on the back.
- ... A duplicate ace of spades.
- ... A blank card with "MY CARD" printed thereon.
- ... A blank card with "YOUR CARD" printed thereon.
- ... Two stands, matchbooks or little glasses against which to rest the cards.
- ... A pocket card rise gimmick.

SET-UP

- ... Load the card rise gimmick with the undotted ace (face out) in your outer breast pocket.
- ... Set up deck (from top down).
 - 1. "MY CARD"
 - 2. "YOUR CARD"
 - 3. Dotted Ace.
- ... These cards and the deck are face down. . cut the deck bringing stack to the middle.

PROCEDURE

- ... Spread deck face down between the hands to locate dotted ace. "LARREVERSE" the ace and the two cards above it to the top.
- ... Show ace, call it "MY CARD".
- ... Triple turnover-deal off "MY CARD" face down to right.
- ... Cut deck, hold break above dotted ace and "YOUR CARD".
- ... Riffle force to the break and move cut off half to bottom.
- ... Double turnover, show ace and call it "YOUR CARD".

- ... Double turnover, deal off "YOUR CARD" face down to the left.
- ... Turn "MY CARD" around to face audience.
- ... Turn "YOUR CARD" around to face audience.
- ... Bring attention to your breast pocket.
- ... Pull on gaffus....ace rises.

PATTER

"This little burst of genius is called 'Yours, Mine & Ours'. Don't bother asking me why... that'll be evident in a minute. First I'll run through the cards and pick one at random. Just so's you won't forget, this is MY card."

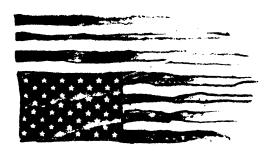

"Now comes the good part. . .Say 'When!' I can tell by your face that you already have a pretty good idea what this card is. . .Right! It's YOUR card."

"Wait a minute, your card looked a great deal like my card didn't it? How can that be... No! Everything's cool...This IS MY CARD over here and YOUR CARD is really over here. Oh! Remember OUR card?...Watch!...I thought you'd get a rise out of that...YOURS...MINE...& OURS...Ain't togetherness grand!"

For those not familiar with the card rise gimmick, mine is just a cardboard envelope to just hold the card. The envelope is really merely a sleeve, closed at the bottom. Take a large needle and thread it with some strong thread and as per the illustration, run the needle and thread through the sleeve at a point about a quarter of the way down from the mouth toward the sealed bottom. Tie a tiny paper clip to the bitter end of the thread and pull the thread all the way through the sleeve until the paper clip snugs up against the sleeve. Tape the paper clip to the surface of the sleeve. . .Thus the thread cannot pull loose.

Now you can slide a card into the sleeve and since it will push a loop of thread down into the sleeve, you can see that it is a simple matter to pull on the loose end of the thread and the card will rise out of the sleeve.

If you have made the sleeve correctly it should fit into your outer pocket and not "peek" out. Before placing it into your pocket run the needle down through the bottom of the pocket and through the lining so that it hangs down inside your jacket in the same manner as a pull. Put your coat on now and let your left hand fall naturally to your side. At this point 2 inches above the bottom edge of your coat, pin a small safety pin to your lining, allowing the thread to pass through this pin. To the end of the thread fasten a bead.

THE VOICE OF EXPERIENCE

Sam Schwartz

During a recent visit to New York, Bob Read spent an absorbing afternoon in the company of Sam Schwartz. As well as being a fine close-up worker on his own account (just see his rope and ring work), Sam has also organised the close-up sessions for the last 17 years at Tannens Jubilee. Knowing that Pabular, and in particular, Fred Robinson champion the cause of table workers, Sam kindly submitted his recipe for a successful close-up show:

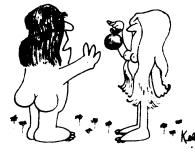

- 1. We arrange for the close-up session to run for approximately an hour and a half. Attention span and tolerance have their limits.
- 2. We try to keep the audience in each room or location to approximately 60 people. Normally we arrange to have another event running at the same time as the close-up, this draws off any people who are not interested. In this manner we hope that the real enthusiasts will not be crowded and all will be able to see. I feel that "theatre" type set-ups for a large number of people destroy the intimacy of close-up magic.
- For the past several years we have held the close-up session in five separate rooms. The minimum number of performers is double the number of locations. I divide the available time by five (the number of locations) and 'schedule' the performers within that time slot. In other words, if 20 minutes is my time allotment, then I arrange with the separate performers, for instance, Al Goshman and "X". The separate performances of Al Goshman and "X" will not exceed 20 minutes. I may allow Al 12 minutes and "X" 8, or Al will receive 14 minutes then "X" will receive 6. This time schedule is very important. It not only gives the performers time to rest and reset, but also assures that there will be no wait or bunching of performers at any one location. To achieve that, I assign captains.
- 4. For want of a better word, I have used the designation "captain". Actually, they are guests who have volunteered to assist me. Each captain is knowledgeable about magic, serves to introduce the acts, knows the order in which they will appear and the time for each performance. The captains and I synchronise our watches. The close-up starts at the same time and consequently the captains are aware when there has been any lag or delay. The captains use their discretion and will suggest, when necessary, that a performer cut his allotted time. The captains are the most important part of the organisation. It is they who keep the session moving on track.

- 5. I feel that approximately 10 minutes is sufficient for any close-up performer. I have met some who felt they needed lead-in time. My answer is that the previous performer "did the warm-up so be prepared to go on with your blockbuster".
- I supervise the entire session. I know generally what effects will be performed and try to avoid duplication, whether it be a particular effect or style of presentation. I try to arrange a comedy or novelty performance to follow a serious classical demonstration. There are times when I have alloted time for a performer to do one effect, if it is novel or of such quality as to be entertaining to both magicians and lay people present. I know where each performer should be at any one time. About 45 minutes into the close-up session I am in a position to know whether my scheduling is working according to plan. If not, I make adjustments and advise the captains of any change.

Let me digress for a moment. One year, an inexperienced captain was so enthralled by the magic that he neglected the schedule and permitted the performers to exceed the time limit. I shall never forget my difficulties that day.

Some general observations — At each location there is a table, three chairs, a pitcher of water, glasses and a tablecloth for my "lapping" friends. I expect that the performers will bring their own close-up mats. Each performer is given written instructions advising him at which location he is to start, whom he is to follow, and from what location to what location he is to proceed. When there is a language difficulty or the performer is unfamiliar with the location, I assign helpers.

SPLIT SECOND GORDON BRUCE

This effect is dedicated to Fred Robinson. I well remember Roy Walton telling me about this man, who could deal seconds, centres and bottoms — all from the same grip!

I also remember travelling to London to meet him and witness this for myself. There was this benign, white haired gentleman, smoking a pipe and peering over his glasses, who combines flawless technique with a casualness and an extremely disarming manner, which belie his skill.

Fred has a high reputation among card experts all over the world. He probably knows more about false deals than anyone that I have met. Perhaps one day, he will "tip his mitt" and write a book. If he does, and you are truly interested in the finer things, make sure that you are at the head of the queue — behind me!

DESCRIPTION

This is a "hybrid" deal, which I have used as a novelty poker deal for laymen. In recent years, Paul Harris has popularised the effect of magically splitting a card into two. The technique to be explained, fits ideally into the splitting effect and will be explained as such. I will also give details of the original poker deal.

First the splitting effect. It makes an ideal lead-in to many four ace routines.

Stack the pack, from the top, as follows: 2H (top card), AH, AD (face up), 2S, AS, AC (face up), rest of pack.

1) The pack is face down in the left hand. Turn the top card (2H) face up on the pack. When you turn this card over, be sure to use the same actions as you would for a double or triple lift. Practise turning singles as well as doubles, to keep the action consistent. You will be less likely to be caught later on when you do turn over several cards at once. I am a great believer in practising the NATURAL EQUIVALENT of any move or sleight. This, of course, is not a new theory, but it does bear repetition.

Call attention to the red two.

- 2) The 2H is face up on the pack. Now turn over three cards as one, to apparently turn the 2H face down again. Use exactly the same moves as when turning over the single card.
- 3) You will now deal two cards simultaneously from the top of the pack, giving the effect of splitting the red two into two red aces.

The pack is held as in fig 1. The left thumb has pulled the top card down slightly, exposing the second card as for a "strike second deal".

Please note that in practise, this action is delayed until the right hand is over the pack and about to deal. The figure is merely an exposed view to teach the technique of the "Split Second".

- 4) The right hand comes over the pack. The first and second fingers are extended to the left and the third and fourth fingers are curled in towards the palm (fig 2).
- 5) The right thumb strikes the second card at the outer right hand corner at the point marked X in fig 1.
- 6) The edge of the top card is also in contact with the right thumb. The left thumb releases pressure on the top of the pack, so that the right hand can draw the top two cards off the pack together, holding them between the thumb and first finger as shown in fig 3.
- 7) When the cards are clear of the pack, the right hand third finger opens out away from the palm and presses down on the back of the top card of the pair. This is the difficult part to explain clearly, although a trial will show that it is quite easy to do, once it is understood.

Pinch the lower card between the right forefinger and thumb, so that it is firmly gripped. Fully extend the second finger beneath the cards and the third finger above. Pull the forefinger and thumb backwards, towards yourself. At the same time, press downwards on the top card with the third finger. These actions, when performed together, will have the effect of causing the top face down card to be snapped face up, by rotating it round the inner short end of the bottom, face up card. The upper card will travel round the lower one. The start of the action is shown in fig 4.

The cards end up as shown in fig 5. The original top card is now gripped between the second finger on the face and the third finger beneath. It is now the bottom card of the pair.

Despite the lengthy description, the "Split Second" is quite easy and can be done extremely rapidly. Indeed, the actual technique should be done quickly, although the routine must be performed in a relaxed, casual manner.

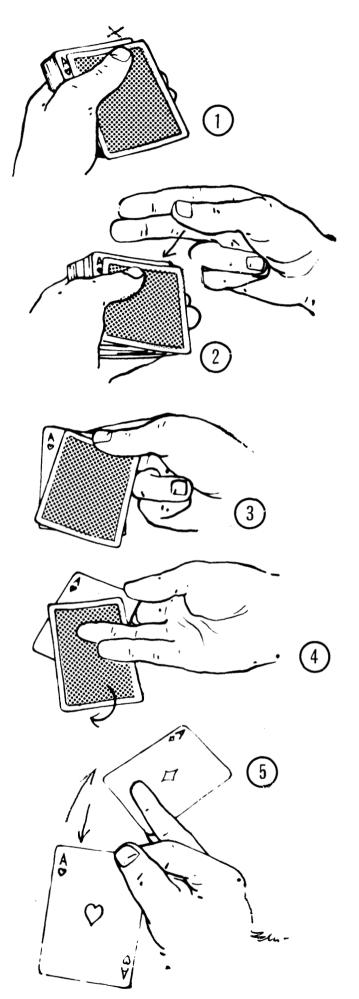

- 8) Drop the two aces on the table. Lose the top card in the pack, either by a slip-cut or a double-under-cut.
- 9) Turn over the new top card of the pack (2S) and repeat the sequence, apparently splitting the card into two black aces.

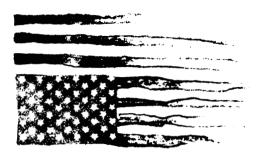

When properly performed, the "Split Second" is instantaneous and visibly startling — making a flashy introduction to an ace routine.

THE POKER DEAL

This is a quickie, which uses the "Split Second". I perform it if the subject of cheating at cards comes up.

- 1) As you talk about cheating at cards, cull four aces or a royal flush to the top of the pack.
- 2) Give the pack a perfect riffle (or faro) shuffle, so that the cards end up 2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, and if a flush 10th from the top.
- 3) Patter about how a card cheat has the ability to know which cards he deals to the victims, while they do not know what he holds.
- 4) As you say this, deal five "Split Seconds". This gives the spectator five face up cards, while your own five cards lie face down.
- 5) Should the spectator happen to get a good hand, take the credit and pretend that you made it happen. Then show that your own hand is the best. If he gets an indifferent hand, simply show that you have won.

HOW I PRACTICE ESP

- 1) Spectator shuffles. Take deck and make a wide face-up spread on the table.
- 2) Call attention to how well mixed the cards are as you point to the section near the face of the deck. Secretly look at the top cards. Count the number of cards in the first three changes of colour and turn this into a three digit number. (Example: a card of one colour, 3 of the other, then 2 of the first would be thought of as 1 3 2).
- 3) Memorise value and suit of next two cards.
- 4) Close deck and turn it face down on table.
- 5) Look away and name colour of each card before turning it over. The first colour is always the opposite of the first memorised card.
- 6) When you've used up your 3 digit number you then name colour, suit and value of the next two cards (the memorised ones).
- 7) Stop. "It takes a lot out of me."

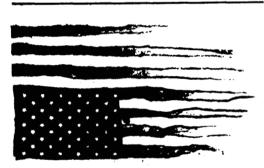

REVIEW

Eric Mason

To hand from Ray Grismer is a collection of creative magic culled from his lecture material. Most of the things he does are original to him with his own methods for performing standard effects — the notes also include many answers to questions commonly directed to the magician as well as over 70 short tips and ideas. CHARTS consists of more than a dozen effects that are within the capability of the readers of this magazine. Ray asked me to include the first trick in his book as part of our tribute to

Fred Robinson in this issue — it should wet your magical appetites. CHARTS cost 5 dollars. Also available are some individual items that were deemed to be good enough to be printed as separate tricks. These include SHORTY, a fine short change routine: LOOPY, one of the most unusual ring and rope moves ever invented: HANDY, a simplified approach to the torn newspaper prediction, and THIRTY, a version of the thirty card trick — a magical classic which can be done on stage or close-up. SHORTY is 3.50 dollars, LOOPY costs 2 dollars, HANDY 2 dollars, and THIRTY 2 dollars - a superb collection from a very nice man whom Dai Vernon is proud to record that 'in his formative years he was a pupil of mine'.

PENATRING by Algonquin McDuff

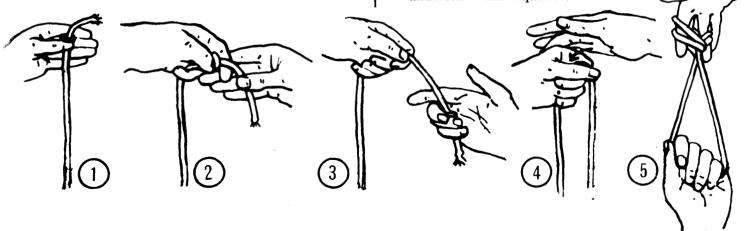

- 'The Amazin Algonquin'

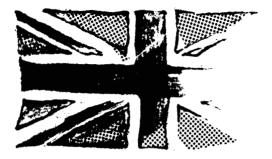

This penetration of a rope, by a finger ring, was inspired by reading Ray Grismer's excellent routines in Charlie Miller's Genii column. It can be incorporated as a variation in any series of ring/rope effects needing no gimmick props—just a gentleman's plain gold ring and about 30 inches of white rope.

1) Before starting, the rope is held in the left hand with about 3 inches protruding above the thumb and first finger. The right hand clearly threads the ring on the rope and allows it to drop into the left fist. This is shown in fig 1.

- 2) Only the left thumb stops the ring from falling through. The left hand turns clockwise to allow the end of the rope to be gripped by the right thumb and third finger. At the same time it should appear as though the left hand is adjusting to grip the ring. See fig 2.
- 3) Lower the right hand pulling the rope through the left fist at the same time raise the left hand as though sliding the ring to the centre of the rope. However, allow the ring to drop into the right hand immediately prior to raising the left fist, as in fig 3.
- 4) Look at the left hand, which holds the centre of the rope, and gently pull the end of the rope away from the right hand leaving the ring behind.
- 5) Open the right fingers, transferring the ring to the right thumb clip, and place the middle finger of the right hand lightly on the back of the left hand. Turn both hands over and in doing so drop the ring in the space between the left thumb and first finger. This is a well-known move for loading a coin, and is shown in fig 4.
- 6) Continue this movement the right hand sweeping round the left fist and pick up the ends of the rope on the way round.
- 7) Keep hold of the ends of the rope, with the right hand which is now higher than the left. Tie the ends in a knot with practice this can be done smoothly and hold it delicately between the right thumb and first finger. There is obviously nothing in the right hand. Fig 5 shows right hand tying knot.
- 8) Slowly pull the centre of the rope away from the left fist the ring has disappeared. Open the fingers to reveal the ring lying on the left palm.

Although it doesn't sound like it, the trick can be performed quickly — 20 seconds — and looks very startling. The important point to watch is the steal of the ring by the right hand. Keep the attention on the left hand as it moves up and to the left — anyone who has seen Mr Robinson do the coin in tie trick will understand this sequence.

FRED TRICK THE GREAT

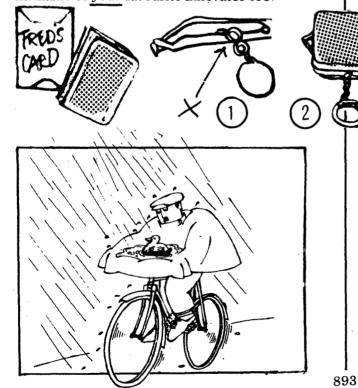

Eric Mason

You say, "I would like you to think of any playing card you like — not necessarily the first one to come to mind, any card — and I will name it!"

A card is thought of by your victim — "Have you done that? — I name your card FRED!" you say, and depending on the reaction to this you ask gently what it is and continue by spreading the cards you hold face up disclosing an envelope with the words FRED'S CARD written on it.

Turning the pack and the envelope over you show that there is a card in the envelope which has a different colour back to the rest of the pack and it is the card that has just been named!

The mechanics for this effect already exist in Pabular Volume 4 Number 1 pages 460-464, Sept. 1977. All I have done is written FRED'S name on the envelope! Of course you can write the name of your favourite innovator too!

"RIP-OFF" RICK JOHNSSON

NEEDED

3 key chain type coin purses . . . crossed catch type (with link chain . . not snake chain).

3 pieces of paper money.

1 I.O.U. (same size as the bills).

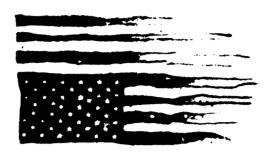

If you open the purse and take the second link (see arrow) in chain and place it between the "jaws" (see X) of the purse and snap the purse shut, the purse will look something like Fig.1 No-one will notice this except you. The late Duke Stern called this a fantastic new principle. If someone opens the purse and then shuts it, Fig.2 changes to Fig.1... a very subtle difference but the key (pun intended) to this beautiful mystery.

If three purses are set as in fig 1 and a spectator opens one secretly and shuts it again . . . it ain't no secret to you as to which one he opened. He can shuffle or jumble them around so that he doesn't know which is which What? Won't the chain come loose in the jumbling process? No way! You can adjust the crossed catches at the top of the purses so that there's no chance of the link being ripped off (pun again intended).

The basic routine involves placing a bill in each purse and setting the purses. Give the spectator an I.O.U. and instruct him to, while your back is turned, to remove a bill from one of the purses, replacing it with the I.O.U..... jumbling them up before he asks you to turn back around. Ask him to lay them out in a row in front of you. Glimpse the missing link and bring the trick to its obvious conclusion. . . which includes getting your money back from the spectator.

As for the discovery part of the trick, you can use "Laser Beam", "Beam Shot", a burglar alarm made like both of the above, a dowsing rod, a magnifying glass (looking for fingerprints) complete with Sherlock Holmes hat and pipe, or just your own sensitive fingers, hovering above, but not touching, the purses.

The point is that if you don't dramatise it a bit, it's little more than a puzzle. . .albeit a good one.

BIDDLE-KARDYRO CASED

Phil Willmarth

I have been enjoying a correspondence with Fred Robinson, and one of the primary topics has been presentation. Combining the Biddle-Kardyro steal with Al Leech's Case Card Location seems an obvious, serendipitous thing to do, but I have never seen the idea in print nor have I seen anyone else do it. Most importantly, it is a departure from the you-take-one-I'll-find-it card effect and provides ample opportunity for presentation.

EFFECT

A selected card is shuffled into a packet of four indifferent cards. Clearly showing all five cards again, the performer squares them up and has a spectator trap them between his hand and the table.

A portion of the pack is cut off and placed in the middle of the remaining stock in an extreme out-jogged position. The entire arrangement is put into the case in that condition and held in the performer's right hand, pressure on the case holding the out-jogged stock in place.

The spectator is still holding the packet of cards against the table and the performer grasps one corner of the packet, then asks the spectator to name his card. As he does so, the performer lets the corner of the packet slap against the table, the out-jogged packet drops into the case, and the chosen card is discovered sticking up from the otherwise cased pack. Of course, when the packet of cards is spread, only four cards remain . . . the chosen card has been shot from the packet to the case!

METHOD

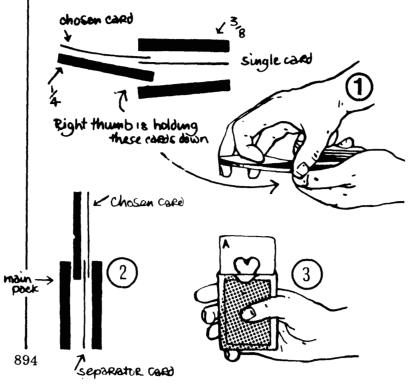

The card is forced, four indifferent cards are chosen, and the chosen card is controlled to any interior position in the five card packet by cutting the packet face up. (Removing the four cards is necessary to permit the out-jogged packet to fall freely into the case at the climax; indeed, if the case fits tightly, you may wish to remove six cards).

Drop the cards onto the face of the deck and pick up half of the deck (using half the pack makes the subsequent steal easier). Slowly count the top five cards into the left hand a la Biddle-Kardyro. Of course, the known chosen card is stolen to the bottom of the half deck. The packet of cards is tabled face down and a spectator asked to trap the packet against the table.

Assemble the pack, dropping the tabled portion on the held portion so the chosen card remains the first face-down card. Cut off about a quarter of the cards, getting a break at the inner left corner under the chosen card as you do so. Riffle to about the middle of the main stock and retain the last card long enough to slip the chosen card between that retained card and the already riffled-off portion. (See fig 1). The smaller block of cards is out-jogged in the pack with the chosen card isolated from the other out-jogged cards by one card. (See fig 2).

Case this arrangement and hold it in place by pressure of the right thumb on the face of the pack. The little finger should extend under the case so as to support it when pressure of the thumb is released. When that is done, the out-jogged packet will drop leaving the chosen card still revealed in its place. (See fig 3 for position of case in hand).

Snapping the small packet seems to "shoot" the chosen card invisibly from the packet to the pack. Case Card may be found in The New Pheonix, 335, pages 148-149. The Kardyro-Biddle move may be found in Bert Allerton's The Close-Up Magician and a variety of other places.

Magic Manuscript

For the past two years a small newsletter/magazine has been published bi-monthly for magicians. It was full of interviews, news, tricks, articles, reviews, and columns. This small journal had such magicians as David Copperfield, Harry Lorayne, Paul Harris, Fantasio, J.B. Bobo, Tom Ogden, David Ginn, and others contribute interviews, tricks, articles, etc.! After two successful years THE MAGIC MANUSCRIPT is going BIG!

THE MAGIC MANUSCRIPT has two goals: To be a beautifully produced magazine and to be full of high caliber magical material!

The magazine will be exquisitely printed on the best of papers. Its design will be extraordinary! Look for things like full color photographs, and other "firsts" for magic magazines, in THE MAGIC MANUSCRIPT...

Some of the best, "big name" magicians in the world will be writing for THE MAGIC MANUSCRIPT. Interviews, views, news, reviews (very honest!), tricks, stories, columns, ideas, cartoons, and more in every big, big issue! Two of the major features starting with the first issue will be:

- THE PAUL HARRIS CLOSE-UP FORUM: This decade's #1 magic genius writes on magic! Original tricks, ideas and thoughts on magic, and chit-chat in that fantastic way only Paul Harris can! Plus, the forum will present material by some of the top close-up workers in the world, like John Mendoza, Phil Goldstein, John Cornelius, Fr. Cyprian, Tom Ogden, Howard Schwarzman just to name a few! Worth the subscription price for any close-up worker!
- BOB BROWN ON THE BUSINESS OF MAGIC: Bob Brown will be featured on our first cover in full color, along with a complete color pictorial and story inside! One of the most successful magicians around talks about promotion, the use of an assistant, publicity material, etc., etc. A very interesting and educational article.

Fantastic Magic by Fantastic Magicians! All in a large, beautiful magazine. Full of photographs, many of them full color, and also expertly illustrated by two of the best magic artists around! YOU don't want to miss even one issue.

COMMENT

You may steal two chosen cards to the top of the deck and load both into the break when out-jogging the packet. When pressure is released, both cards will remain out-jogged, perfectly aligned. Apparently strip the card out and table it face down. Actually, push the face card of the pair back into the deck and table the second chosen card. Ask for the identity of the second card and apparently change the first selection to the second.

I like to work this as a sucker effect following an effect in which the Joker is used. The Joker is simply dropped on top of the pack at the conclusion of the previous trick and, thus, appears instead of the selected card. I ask the spectator holding the packet to give me the selected card so I can do something else with it as I apparently strip the Joker out of the deck and toss it on the table. Of course, the selected card is not to be found in the packet or in the deck. When the Joker is found, we all know where to look for the selection. This is excellent for those situations where you are asked, "Show that 'Card Cannonball Trick' to Fred, he'll love it!"

OIL COLOURS STEVE KUSKIE

Three pink-backed kings and three blue-backed aces are made to magically interlace, separate, and interlace once more.

PREPARATION

Needed are 3 blue aces, a blue KH, a pink KH, and 2 other pink-backed kings. Arrange the packet from the face thus — K, blue KH, K, A, A, pink KH, A.

Phase 1: Hold the parcel face up and deal the first 3 kings singly making a pile on the right. False count the face up aces in an Elmsley action by pushing off a single, a double, and then the last ace. Place the aces face up to the left. Take the uppermost card of each pile and use them as scoops to turn each pile over. False count the ace pile as before to show all blue backs. False count the kings showing all pink backs (a la Victor Count) but place the last card on the bottom so the order of the kings is now pink, blue, pink. As a check the colour of the aces from the top is now blue, blue, pink, blue.

Place the aces on the kings for the first miracle. Take the pile into a right hand Vesser grip getting a break under the second card. Pull off a double into a left hand mechanic's grip and then pull off the others singly displaying the interlaced condition. The pink cards are dealt to the right during this process and may be freely shown. Fan and display the aces, hiding the extra king.

Phase 2: Turn the aces face down into the left hand. Turn the kings face down into the right hand with the KH lowermost. Deal the cards alternately face-down into a pile, starting with the right hand. Lastly place down a double from the left hand. Turn the parcel face up for the second miracle. Deal the kings face up onto the table placing the KH uppermost. Spread the aces, hiding the pink KH. Turn the aces over and count them as before, showing them all blue. Turn the kings face down and show them all pink, counting as before. Arrange the kings so that the KH is in the middle.

Phase 3: Place the face down aces on the face down kings, the colours now being from the top blue, blue, pink, blue, pink, blue, pink. Hold the parcel in the left hand. Double lift and hold the double face up in the right hand. Use it as a lever to turn up the next three cards singly. These cards are dealt down. As the next blue card is turned up, the lowermost card of the double is dropped on top of it. Single buckle with the left hand and take up the double into the right hand. Turn up the last card to end. If the blue KH is stolen away, the rest are examinable.

The following items are all available from Martin Breese, who submitted them for review.

CASSETTES

Paul Diamond (Two Cassettes): Price £7.50.

No doubt those readers who attended Harrogate I.B.M. Convention a few years ago, will remember the huge impact of this big man from Los Angeles. Tipping the scales at what must be in the region of twenty stone and bursting with ebulience and good humour, Paul Diamond was one of the undoubted hits of that gathering. A professional to his fingertips, he scores heavily both as a stage and close-up performer. 'Performer' is the operative word in the last sentence. Paul Diamond does not just exhibit his tricks, he squeezes every last drop of entertainment out of them.

On the cassettes, he describes several items from his repertoire, explaining not only the methods, which are fairly basic, but much more importantly, how to present them. His analysis of a mental effect with five E.S.P. cards is an object lesson in professional showmanship. Even if you use none of the actual tricks described on these two tapes, you will learn a lot about exploiting magic in a commercial situation. This is worth more than all the new tricks in creation.

It is only fair to warn the reader that a couple of the items described, do require faked coins. These coins are available from dealers, and Martin will be delighted to obtain them for those interested. This, however, is only a minor quibble. The real value of these tapes lies in what they tell you about showmanship and entertainment in general. Cannot be too highly recommended.

An Audio Card Session with Peter Kane (Two Cassettes): Price £7.00.

Peter Kane is an occasional contributor to these pages. He is also the inventor of "Wild Card", "The Gipsy's Curse", "The Gun Trick" and "The Nemo Card Castle". In addition he has written several best selling booklets on close-up magic. Altogether a truly enviable record.

There is no doubt that when it comes to inventing new, off-beat, original effects, Peter has few equals. His reputation has spread and his ideas are widely used. That this reputation is deserved, few can doubt.

On these tapes are described the "Elongated Lady" and a lovely routine in which a chosen card appears between two jacks on the table. Both are supplied with written instructions and one with line drawings, a useful adjunct to the verbal directions. It does seem that the spoken word has limitations in conveying the more complex ideas and Peter and Martin are to be congratulated for taking the extra time and trouble to ensure that, where necessary, additional written information is included.

One of the real joys about cassettes, is the little insights that they give into the man behind the magic. Indeed, the interview, which Martin conducts with Peter does give a valuable portrait of one of Britain's finest magical brains.

I enjoyed these two cassettes a lot and especially liked the handling of "The Card under Glass", which is a highly commercial item and should find its way into the repertoires of many "table hoppers".

Peter Kane fans will certainly not be disappointed in these offerings, while newcomers, who have never heard of him, have a real treat in store.

THE INTERNATIONAL MAGIC STUDIO (RON MACMILLAN) 89 CLERKENWELL ROAD, HOLBORN LONDON E.G.1. I've done it again. I missed the Annual Collectors' Day at The Magic Circle. I overslept. I had a couple of dates the night before out of town, got home late, hadn't mentioned to my family that I was going to the Circle next day so no one bothered to wake up the old man. So that's that.

The Page boy speaks....

I did however get to see and talk to Bob Albo. who was one of the guest speakers from the U.S.A. I had breakfast with him and Mrs Albo a couple of days later at their hotel. In case you don't know it Bob has written and published the first three volumes of a series of six which are destined to become real collectors'items. If you want to know about about old magic props, get hold of the Albo books. One day they will be essential reading.

Another visitor to these shores recently was the tall dark and handsome David Copperfield, I spent a day with him and Terri Rogers doing a short tour of the London magic shops. Coincidentally they screened one of his TV Specials a couple of weeks ago which was more than interesting. Last year I was in Las Vegas where there must have been at least five or six big magic acts appearing and they were all doing similar things. You know, big cages, wild animals etc. but Copperfield doesn't appear to be going in this direction. He seems to be leaning towards magical sketches. Taking one strong effect and building a whole sequence of happenings around it, complete with dancers or other performers where necessary. All sorts of themes are used from gangster type scenes to boy meets girl scenes, and for David it works. I say that because I can't see it working for anyone else at present. You have to be young, you have to be good looking and you have to be a good mover. D.C. is all of these things and he or his advisers are to be complimented on the attempts they are making to avoid the band wagon.

Having said that, brings me to the thought that someone, somewhere, must be looking for a short stocky Scotsman to promote into a big star. He isn't young. He isn't good looking, and he moves like constipated turtle, but at least he's good to his mum, and compared to Messrs Copperfield, Henning, Siegfried and Roy etc., he has one big advantage . . . he's different . . . no? O.K. forget it.

Video tapes were we talking about video tapes? No? Well it's about time we did. because that appears to be the latest thing. Every time a magician appears on TV you can bet money on it that someone somewhere is taping the show. There is nothing wrong with that in itself. I think it is a good idea that people who are interested in magic should build up a library of tapes with magicians' acts on them. But there is a snag and that is when a friend wants a copy of that tape. Snag? Yes, snag. Who is there who can give you permission to give away a performance of a third party which maybe contains something which may be uniquely the performer's?

It's bad enough giving it to a friend but I have seen videos of professional acts for sale. That, surely, must be wrong. If you think about it, a video tape which teaches something is no different from a book. I'm thinking of all the teaching tapes which are currently being advertised in the national press. Everything from languages to cookery is being offered on videotape so why not magic? I'm talking for laymen.

Every so often a book written by a magician will appear on the book stalls. The magic press will comment on it and depending on its contents and who is the author, they will decide that it is either "a good introduction to magic for beginners" or, if it contains some secrets which they personally think should not be given away, they will scream blue murder and expulsions will follow . . . although I can only think of two instances offhand where this has actually happened.

But what about video tapes? What will the magical fraternity make of video tapes being offered to the public that expose magic tricks? Remember this . . . many of the classic books of magic have been published by non magical publishers and are available on the bookshelves of many well known bookshops and a video tape that teaches is not all that different from a book. Well . . . what are you going to do? Scream? It won't do you any good. The people who are promoting such tapes are very big companies. (Did I mention that it is happening already?) They are not interested in the views of a minority but in the spending power of the majority.

Let's all close our eyes and it will go away . . . honest . . . it will.

Performer picks up an empty bottle and gives a short whistle into it. Immediately he places his empty hand over the bottle top "to stop the sound escaping". When performer lifts his hand the spectators hear the whistle escape, noisily and audibly.

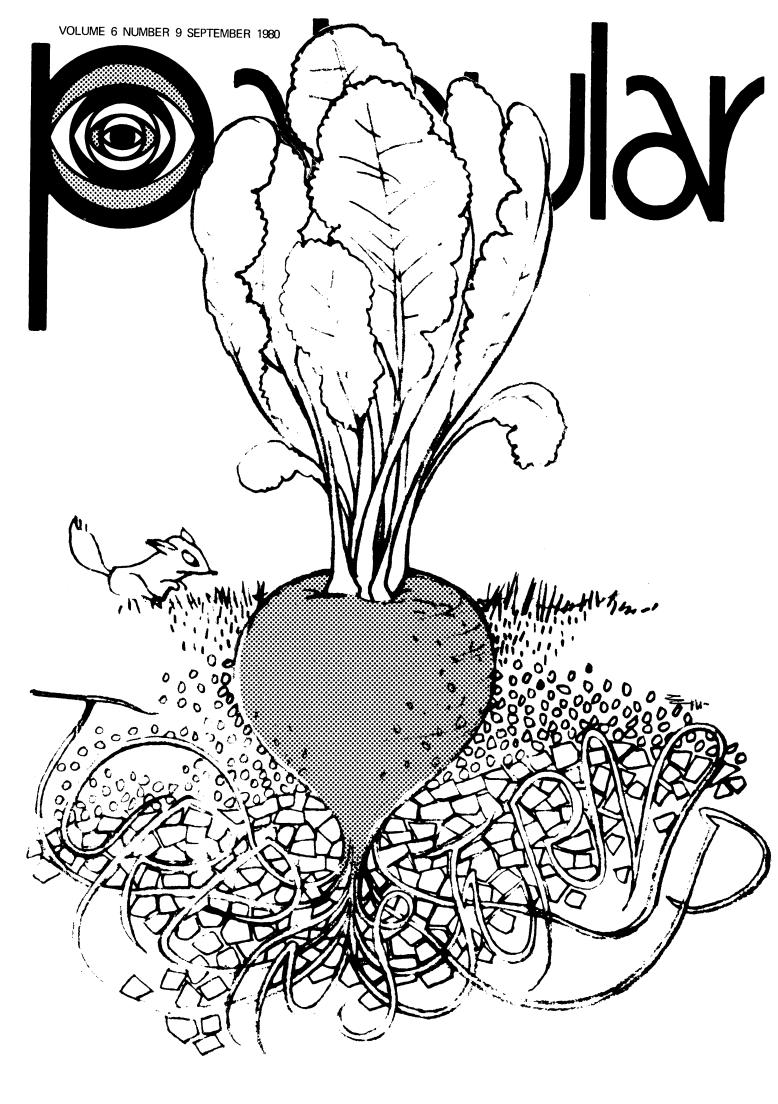

Entertaining and Different. Send for yours now.

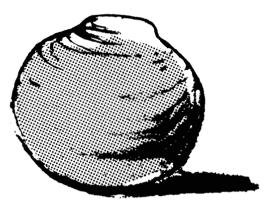

This cute and mysterious effect makes an ideal lead-in to the coin in bottle - or work it on its own. Either way you will find it entertaining and different. Eric Mason has been performing this effect for many years. The simplicity and directness of the effect combine to make this one of his most popular magical interludes.

TURPIN'S TURNIP

Dick Turpin

This is the method used by Dick Turpin, the well known London busker, to produce first a large object such as a swede and then a glass of water or beer from a borrowed hat.

Readers may be familiar with a similar method described by Hugard in The Modern Magic Manual. Also certain similarities will be noticed with the Malini hat loading techniques described in the Vernon on Malini book by Lew Ganson. It is, however, pointed out that Dick Turpin was working this effect over forty years ago. Long before either of these two books were written. Dick was at that time working with Howard Spencer, busking in various pubs in and around London. It is possible that Dick learned some of the routine from him, but it is stressed that this handling has been made very much Dick's own by almost daily use for some thirty years.

Also of interest is that this is one of the few instances, in which a "Topit" vanisher is used to produce objects rather than cause them to disappear.

EFFECT

The performer takes a ladies headsquare or thick silk handkerchief and lays it on the table to act as a cloth. He then borrows a silver coin and a gentleman's soft hat. The coin is spun in the air a few times finally being tossed on the table and covered with the hat. The audience are asked to guess whether the coin is heads or tails. This is repeated a couple of times, then the coin is picked up and the hat placed down. The coin vanishes. He then picks up the hat, as though expecting to find the coin beneath it. To everybody's amazement - instead of the coin under the hat is an enormous swede or turnip. To the audience this is an absolute knockout, but there is more to come. Turning the hat over and covering it with the handkerchief, the magician makes a few magic passes, then produces a full glass of liquid.

REQUIREMENTS

- 1) A "Topit". This, for the benefit of those who do not know, is a large cloth bag similar to that shown in figure one. It can be either black in colour or else can match the lining of the jacket. Many magicians have these made in their coats as a matter of course. Dick does not. He makes his own out of black flannel. This means that they have less give than the marketed model, which is possibly an advantage when a heavy load is to be concealed.
- 2) A ladies headscarf. This should be at least twenty four inches square and should be of a fairly thick nylon. Avoid thin silky ones.
- 3) The hat. This should be of soft felt or tweed. When Dick was working before the last war and in the forties and fifties, most men wore hats so it was easy to borrow one. Nowadays the performer would be wise to have a suitable hat himself just in case one is not available. However, always borrow the hat if you can.
- 4) A large tumbler with a suitable rubber cover.
- 5) A swede, turnip, cabbage or any other large item which will just fit inside the average hat. Dick would usually visit the local greengrocer on his way out and purchase something the right size.
- 6) A small handkerchief, which is pushed down out of sight in the performer's outer breast pocket. This is simply to hold the pocket open for the vanish of the coin in the routine.

The "Topit" is under the jacket on the right hand side as shown in Fig.1.

This is the opposite side to the one where a "Topit" is normally worn for vanishing objects. No doubt it would be possible with some thought to adapt the routine to enable the "Topit" to be worn on the left, but this description is of what Dick Turpin actually does.

It is important that the "Topit" does not hang too low. There should be at least two inches between the bottom edge of the bag and the bottom of the performer's coat. Remember that the "Topit" will be holding a heavy load, which will cause it to sag somewhat, so allow for this when positioning it.

Fasten the "Topit" in the normal way, with three safety pins attaching it to the coat along one side. A fourth safety pin fastens the centre, of the opposite side, to the waistband of the performer's trousers. This keeps the mouth of the bag open all the time. This is shown in Fig.1.

Fill the glass with liquid and then place the rubber cover over it. Wipe it dry and place in the bottom of the "Topit". Next place the swede into the bag, so that it is on top of the glass. It is best to empty all the pockets on the right side of the coat, to prevent any unnecessary bulges. It is surprising that even with this bulky load, provided that the jacket is left open, nothing suspicious will be noticed, however a few small objects in the coat pockets will have the effect of causing the jacket to bulge.

Place the scarf in the left inside coat pocket and you are ready to go.

WORKING

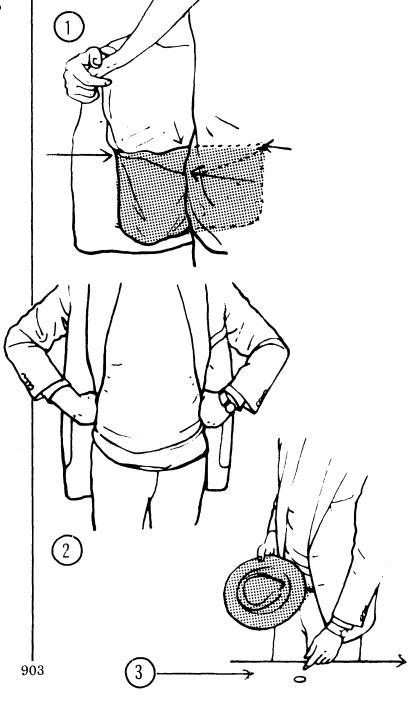

Start by removing the scarf from the inside pocket. Open it out and spread it on the table to represent a cloth. Next ask for the loan of a suitable hat and a silver coin. Place the hat on the table, crown upwards slightly to your left. Take the coin in the right hand and toss it into the air and catch it. There is a certain bit of psychology in doing this. It is necessary to get the attention of the audience onto the coin rather than the hat. It is the coin that appears to be the important object and the one that they should be watching. The hat should be casually put down as though it is of no significance and without looking at it; while the coin is tossed in the air and caught and the performer follows its motion with his eyes. Dick will often seemingly forget all about the hat at this point and perform a short impromptu sequence of vanishes and productions with the coin. This is optional, but if it is omitted, the coin should be tossed up and caught several times.

Finally the coin is tossed and caught in the right hand, which immediately turns palm down and slaps the coin onto the table, in the middle of the scarf. The hand remains on top of the coin, concealing it, while the left hand picks up the hat and places it over the coin and the right hand. As soon as the hat covers the spot where the coin is, the right hand is withdrawn. A spectator is now invited to guess whether the coin is heads or tails up. One important detail to mention here, is that at no point has the performer shown the hat to be empty. Nor should he do so. When covering the coin as just described, simply pick the hat up in the left hand, by the crown. Do not even look at it or mention it. Just place it over the coin with the minimum of movement.

While you are inviting the spectator to guess whether the coin is heads or tails, take a step backwards, away from the table and adopt a stance similar to that shown in Fig.2.

Notice in Fig.2 how the performer's hands are positioned. The back of the hand is on the waist. The fingers point to the back of the performer. Also notice how the jacket hangs. Although it is open and being held open by the wrists, it will automatically hang so as to conceal the "Topit". In this position it is the easiest thing in the world for the right finger tips to seize the load. However, this is not done just yet. You are just getting the audience used to seeing you adopt the pose. This time you do nothing.

When the spectator has made a guess at the coins position, the performer moves forward slightly and lifts the hat by the crown, with the left hand. The hat is immediately passed to the right hand, which holds it as shown in Fig.3.

Notice how, in Fig.3, the thumb only is visible and the hat is crown towards the audience. This is the position that it will be in after loading the swede later. Again you are familiarising the audience with the position. Incidently, when picking up the hat and transferring it to the right hand, allow it to be clearly seen that both hands are empty. Do not comment on the fact, or in any way draw attention to the hands, simply ensure that everybody sees them during the course of the action.

As soon as the left hand has placed the hat into the right, it returns to the table and picks up the coin. The left hand tosses the coin in the air and catches it while the right hand replaces the hat on the table, slightly to your left.

It is important that when you first pick up the hat to reveal the coin, you give the impression that some magical feat has taken place. Should the spectator call heads and the coin is heads, say, "See I can make it whatever you say!"; if it were tails you would simply have said, "See! Whatever you say, I make it different!" Obviously this is a barefaced bluff, but if it is done in a positive manner the audience will accept it at its face value.

Offer to repeat the trick and take the coin in the right hand. Toss the coin in the air, following its progress with your eyes. Catch it in the right hand and slap it on the table, covering it with the hat exactly as before. Once more adopt the posture depicted in Fig.2, and invite the spectator to try again. Whatever he calls, lift the hat exactly as previously taking it in the right hand as in Fig.3. The only difference this time is that you are not quite so particular about allowing the audience to see your hands empty. Use the same speeches as given above, to cover either eventuality, when the coin is revealed.

By now the audience may begin to suspect that you are just bluffing, when you claim to be controlling the coin. But even so, they cannot be altogether sure. This is psychologically important as it keeps their minds on the coin rather than the hat.

Toss the coin with the left hand and place the hat down exactly as before. Offer to repeat the trick once more. Repeat the tossing of the coin and the placing of the hat over it. This time, however, when you get into the position shown in Fig.2, the right fingers get hold of the swede and lift it slightly out of the "Topit".

Move the swede very slowly and carefully, as the right hand gets a firm grip on it. It is important that you do not disturb the cloth of the jacket and cause it to move. The actions must appear to be as clean as those that have gone before. Have the spectator call heads or tails. As he does so, lift the hat to reveal the coin. Keep your attention on the coin and say whichever speech is appropriate.

While this is going on, the left hand brings the hat up to the right, which takes it as in Fig.3, loading the swede in the process. Do not, however, bring the right hand out from beneath the coat, until it is completely masked by the hat. The swede is supported by the right fingers behind the hat and is not released at this stage.

If you have followed the above description carefully, you will understand clearly how the audience cannot catch the loading move. The reasons are:

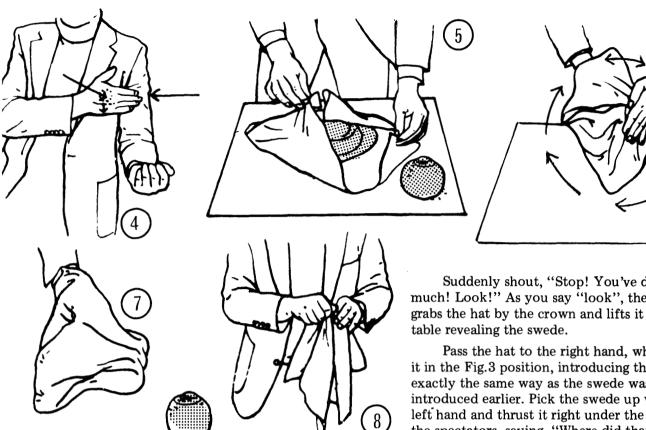

- They have been conditioned to regard the coin as the important object. Consequently they believe that if anything magical happens, it will happen to the coin.
- They have come to accept as natural, a certain sequence of actions and postures on the performer's part. Nothing has differed in any way from the two previous demonstrations, so they are expecting nothing this time.
- They are somewhat perplexed by the trick that the performer is apparently doing. It seems weak and a little pointless, or at best a somewhat barefaced bluff. Their minds are occupied wondering whether or not they have missed the point. They are a little confused so do not have time to worry about the hat.

The coin is picked up by the left hand and tossed in the air, while the right hand places the hat, this time with the swede beneath it, onto the table. The manner of placing the hat down should match exactly what has gone before. Practise making no noise and keep the speed consistent.

Take the coin into the right hand and toss it and catch it. Fake transfer the coin into the left hand, really classic palming it in the right. Close the left hand as though holding the coin.

With the right first and second finger pinch a portion of the coat sleeve just above the left bicep and pull the sleeve up slightly. This is shown in Fig.4.

It will be found that if the right hand is correctly positioned in Fig.4 the palmed coin will be directly above the opening of the breast pocket. Without any delay and with no perceptable movement of the right hand, release the coin so that it falls into the pocket. This is an old move, well known to most magicians. The important thing is to divide your attention between the left hand, which seemingly contains the coin and the audience. Avoid looking at the right hand.

As soon as the coin has been ditched, finish pulling up the sleeve for an inch or so. Bring the right hand over the left and stroke the back of the left hand with the right finger tips. Slowly open the left hand showing that the coin has vanished. Pause for a moment to allow both hands to be seen empty.

Explain that the coin is now floating invisibly in the air and that you will make it become visible under the hat. Reach up into the air with an empty right hand and grasp an invisible something. Slide the hand under the hat allowing it to be clearly seen empty in the process. Withdraw the hand.

Select a lady in the audience, who is likely to be a bit giggly, and ask her to wiggle her fingers over the hat and say, "Diggle, diggle, diggle!" Demonstrate what you mean. When she does so, step back and adopt the Fig.2 position. Do not try to grab the glass just yet. The glass will be deeper down in the "Topit" than the swede was, so it will not be possible to take it quite so impercetibly; a slight covering action is required. This is done after the lady has done her bit. Lean forward and peer closely at the hat as though looking for something. As you do so, say, "You didn't diggle enough! Diggle some more!" As you lean forward, the hand goes deeper into the "Topit" and contacts the glass. As the lady starts to "Diggle" and we hope giggle a bit, you straighten up getting into the Fig. 2 position, with the glass held in the right hand.

Suddenly shout, "Stop! You've diggled too much! Look!" As you say "look", the left hand grabs the hat by the crown and lifts it off the Pass the hat to the right hand, which takes it in the Fig.3 position, introducing the glass in exactly the same way as the swede was introduced earlier. Pick the swede up with the left hand and thrust it right under the nose of the spectators, saying, "Where did that come from?" While you are doing this, the right hand places the hat with the glass beneath it onto the table. It does not matter at this stage, which way up the glass is, just get it down as quickly and noiselessly as possible. Hold the swede up in the left hand as though the trick was over.

When the inevitable applause has died down, begin to fold the corners of the scarf up onto the hat as shown in Fig.5. Do this slowly and deliberately, telegraphing to the audience that there is more to come. Place the left hand palm down, flat on top of the hat, then with the palm up right hand, reach beneath the hat and the scarf until the glass is felt to be resting on the right palm. This position is shown in Fig.6.

Revolve the hands in the directions shown by the arrows in Fig.6, causing the hat to turn crown downwards. Replace the hat on the table and withdraw the hands. This is just a way of turning the hat over without revealing the presence of the glass. The hat is now crown downwards on the table covered by the scarf. Place your right forefinger in front of your lips, motioning everybody to be very quiet.

With the right hand, reach beneath the scarf, into the hat and feel for the glass, turning it right way up. Then bring the right hand up to the position shown in Fig.7. Wriggle the fingers about a bit as though implying that there might be a rabbit in the hat. Do not say so, just let them think it.

Place the left hand on top of the right, but above the scarf, push the right hand down into the hat. Keep the hand wriggling slightly as though it were a live rabbit. When the right hand is level with the brim of the hat, withdraw it from underneath the scarf. At this moment, seize the glass, upright through the scarf, with the left hand and lift the glass and scarf into the air as shown in Fig.8. The right hand comes up and begins to work the rubber cover off the glass. You have plenty of time to do this, as everybody is expecting to see something in the hat. This being the case they will all peer into the hat for a moment. This provides the misdirection for the right hand to begin to remove the cover from the glass. It is notnecessary at this point to get the cover right off, iust loosen it.

All of the above stage takes but a few seconds. By the time the audience has twigged that the hat is empty, the cover will be part way off the glass and the hands will have separated momentarily. The performer says, "It's not there! (pointing to the hat) It's here! Cheers!" On this last line, the scarf is lifted off the glass, by the left hand, which also finishes peeling off the rubber cover at the same time. The performer holds the glass of liquid aloft while the left hand stuffs the scarf and the rubber cover into a convenient pocket. Of course, you reach under the scarf with the right hand and hold the glass before removing the cover entirely.

That is the routine as Dick Turpin has performed it for many years. You may ask, what about the borrowed coin, how do you return it? The answer is that if you are a busker, you don't!

EDITORIAL

A short look back at the annual jaunt to Blackpool. Once again it was a truly memorable occasion. Congratulations to Harry Dewhirst and his cohorts, who seem to have really come to grips with the organisation of what is turning into an event that nobody can really afford to miss. This year, in addition to an excellent magic show, we had as an added bonus an hour and a half of Ken Dodd in cracking form. What an object lesson in showmanship he gave us. Great stuff!

Of most interest to Pabular readers, was the close-up. Eight performers took part, but because of the numbers present and the time allowed, any conventioneer only saw four. This meant some disappointments for some people. I was looking forward to seeing Ali Bongo do close-up. Although I have appeared with him many times it is all of twenty years since I last had a chance to watch him. This year I did not get the chance either. On the other hand, I did get to see Ger Copper, with a slick, elegant manipulative style of working. Very continental in approach, he made a big impression, with his cups and balls and coin work. Also his good looks and pleasant manner.

Brian Glover, an occasional contributor to this magazine, offered some smooth card work. Brian has some good ideas, perhaps he will let us have some more one day? Pat Conway, followed and featured his famous rope routine. He also had a very baffling item with matchboxes and drawing pins, which had the boys guessing. Finally Harry Nichols bounced in with more or less the same act that won him the competition at Brighton. Harry is a very lively and entertaining performer. He certainly made a big impression on the lady, who was assisting him. His was, to my mind, the most commercial performance that we saw at our table. In the distance I could see Bob Little with his bashed up cups and thumb tips and Piet Forton, dressed as a jester and accompanying himself on the penny whistle or some such instrument.

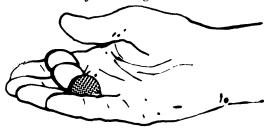

The winner of the Magic Circle competition this year was Roger Crosthwaite. Roger made a big impression in the sixties, with his series in the Gen. He then seemed to keep a low profile for a number of years although I did occasionally meet him when he came to town. Recently he went to America for a year and spent a lot of time at the Magic Castle. Well, Roger has now burst back onto the magic scene and is making a very big impact wherever he appears. He has recently recorded some video material for Joe Riding and is currently resident magician at the Elms Hotel, Worcester.

The good news is that Roger has sent us a wealth of top class, commercial, close-up magic, which will be appearing in these pages shortly. Do not miss it.

Bob Read recently shot across the Atlantic for a one night stand. Not for a magical audience but to entertain the lay public. As usual he stormed them. Well done Bob! It is nice to know, that with all the talent and experience that they have over there, there are still a few British lads who have something to offer.

We have been very lucky to secure a number of items from Dick Turpin. Dick is one of magic's real characters. Now in his seventies, he has spent a whole lifetime busking in the London area. Often working under the most appalling conditions, Dick has learned his magic the hard way. The tricks that he has given, have been explained in great detail, so that the important points have not been missed out. Study the one in this issue paying particular attention to the finer details. You will learn a lot about magic.

Finally, how nice it was to see Ken Brooke making a brief comeback at Blackpool. Ken always was one of the best in the business. It is nice to know of his trip to the U.S.A. to be honoured by The Magic Castle.

A DECEPTIVE CLICK PASS

Keith Charnley

This is a utility move that can be used in many coin routines, especially "Coins to Glass" etc. In effect it simulates the sound and actions of a number of coins being dropped from the right hand into the left or left to right. In reality the coins are retained in the hand, which apparently released them. It is the sound that makes the move so convincing.

Keith Charnley uses the move for four coins, but it can be used for any amount within reason, from two upwards. Although there are probably good arguments for saying that three coins is the lowest number for best results.

The coins are spread across the roots of the fingers as in Fig.1. As the hand is turned to seemingly drop the coins into the other one, the lower coin is pinched between the third and fourth fingers. This action is shown in Fig.1. With the pinched coin projecting at right angles to the fingers, it acts as a shelf. The other coins land on top of it in a stack, making a sound that simulates the dropping of coins from one hand to the other.

All that remains is to close the left hand and move it away as though holding the coins. The right hand meanwhile retains the stack in a finger palm.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This move might be good as a switch for the stack of pence trick.

THROUGH THE CENTURIES OF TIME Roy Walton

The principle used in this trick is a very old one but an effort has been made to alter the handling to give a more puzzling effect, and to add a presentation that gets away from the cold location of a selected card.

Needed is a blue backed pack of 53 cards (52 plus Joker), and a red backed 3S. To prepare for the trick, remove the blue backed 3S from the pack and discard it, as it is not needed for the effect. Now take the blue backed Joker and place it above the red backed 3S and put these two cards into your right hand trouser or jacket pocket. Place the remainder of the blue backed cards into the card case and you are set.

PRESENTATION OUTLINE

Remove the pack from its case and hand it to a spectator for shuffling. After he has done this, request him to deal the pack into two face down heaps, dealing alternately in conventional fashion. As he is doing this, quietly palm the two pocketed cards into the right hand, the back of the Joker being against the palm.

When he has completed the dealing, pick up the heap onto which the last card was dealt and hand it to the spectator. Alternatively, point to the appropriate heap and let him pick it up. As the pack originally contained 51 cards, the heap handed to the spectator will contain 26 cards.

Point out that it would be impossible for anyone to know the number of red cards in the half pack he has in view of the shuffling and dealing that has been carried out by the spectator. Now ask him to carefully count how many red cards are in the group. Also say, "Ignore the Joker, of course." This line is put in to justify the fact that when the pack was dealt into two face down heaps, observant spectators may have noticed that the last card dealt ended on the first heap and the total quantity of cards in the pack must therefore have been odd.

Whilst the spectator is counting the quantity of red cards, square up the remaining face down heap and in this action add the two palmed cards to the top of it. To cover the palm action say to the spectator, "Take care not to miss any red cards out," which will serve the purpose of misdirecting other spectators to his action for a moment. No need to misdirect him, he will be busy counting.

After he has completed his counting, take the cards from him and drop them face down on top of the heap already face down on the table. Pick up the complete pack and hold it face up in the left hand.

Say you will remove a black card from the face of the pack that occupies the position of the unknown number arrived at by the spectator in his counting. Ask the spectator to reveal his number and count out loud from the face of the pack ignoring red cards and only counting black ones until you reach the black card on the last number of his total (it will be the 3S). Remove this card and place it face up on the table. Turn the remainder of the pack face down and place it on the table, allowing it to spread out slightly.

Say that you are now going to turn the card chosen by chance, into a unique card that will be different to all others in the pack. Using the most dramatic voice you can conjure up, say, "To do this, I am going to use a magic spell handed down through the centuries of time from generation to generation by word of mouth, its powers are endless and its value priceless - I can think of nothing I value more highly thna this incredible spell." Change your voice to a casual light-hearted throw-away style and continue, "Unfortunately I've forgotten it at the moment, but I've found snapping your fingers over the card is just as effective." Do this, and say, "There you are, a unique card, it may not look very unique from the face but how about from the back." Turn the card over on the final line to reveal the red back.

A selected card is lost in the deck — a truly inspiring start, but, there's more; please read on. Two X cards are held by the performer in one hand, whilst the remainder of the deck is "dribbled" to the table from the other. At a point about half-way through this dribble the performer quickly plunges the two X cards into and out of the flow. This action completed, one face down card is seen to be caught between the X's. It is, what else, the selected card.

METHOD

The method may seem just a little prosaic and obvious to some, and, perhaps, not worth the trouble. Sorry. The trick plays well with laymen and has fooled magicians and magic club members. Well versed card-mongers usually get the general idea (know-alls) but, as a rule, are interested in the finer points. Here we go.

Tell the audience that for the next amazing feat you need to eliminate a few cards — 40 to be exact. To this end, thumb spread the cards from left hand to right, assuming you deal normally from left to right. Invite the spectator to call "stop" three times. Each time stop at the appropriate card, thumbing the selection face down to the table.

Then, with three cards on the table, square the remainder of the deck, and in the action of placing it to one side, palm the top X card: pick up the three tabled cards and add the Xtra card to them. Thus by a quite surreptitious add-on process, you now have 4 cards not 3 as the spectators believe. Any palm will do, but I suggest the following as being misdirectionally(?) perfect. Assume you are going to palm the card in your right hand.

After you have dealt the third selection to the table, square the deck in the right hand, and place it to one side, performing the one hand top card palm in the process. At the same time, pick up the 3 tabled cards with the left hand, commencing left to right.

Now, with three cards in the left hand, and the deck in the right (one card in palm position, remember) drop the three cards back on the table to your right. Table the deck above the three and immediately drop the right hand (plus palmed card) atop the three. Slide the three (?) cards toward you, over the table edge, square, and place in dealing grip in left hand. Easy, direct, and completely deceptive. O.K.

Now tell the spectator that of the three chosen cards he is to further choose one, leaving two for your use. Take the top card of the packet and place it, unseen, to the bottom. Repeat until told to stop by the spectator. At this point, buckle the bottom card and triple lift to reveal a face for the first time — assume 6C. This is the spectator's card. Triple lift again, turn the card(s) face down and deal the 6C (apparently: actually an X card) to the table. Immediately, turn up the new top card of the packet — another X — place it flush with the remaining card(s) of the packet, and remove and reveal the lowermost card — yet another X card. This is a strong point, a cast-iron "prover". Provided your palm-add-on went unnoticed, the face down card must be the 6C, since the spectator can quite clearly see two "non-6C" left in your hand. Now: square the two (?) cards and table them.

Pick up the face down card and insert it into the deck — unseen, naturally. Give the deck to the spectator to shuffle. This isn't really necessary, but it does keep him occupied and stops him, and others, paying too much attention to the cards still on the table. Anyone who has ever put two cards as one or three as two on a table will know just what to do to keep things moving at just the right pace to keep the spectators too busy to notice the true state of affairs.

You now take the deck from the spectator, and hold it about 12 inches above the table in a Biddle-type grip, thumb at one narrow end, fingers at other narrow end — forefinger curled across the back of the top card if comfortable. Pick up the two (?) cards with your other hand — thumb on face, fingers on back — in preparation for a fanning movement.

Allow the deck to dribble from the fingers of whichever hand you're using to the table. (The "Dribble" concept is too well known to need a description here). As the cards drift to the table, quickly draw the three cards through the flow, spreading them, fanwise, as you do. The end result is that you are left holding two face up cards, with one face down card between them. Seemingly, you have gone fishing and caught another card. Pause here for the scene to register — this really impresses laymen. Then invite the spectator to remove the face down card. It is, of course, his.

CREDITS: COMMENTS: CHATTER

"Sandwich Catch' effects have been around for a while. This particular sample was inspired by an unpublished version by Roger Curzon who has overhauled completely a Harry Lorayne idea — "Apocalypse" Vol.1, No.1.

However, the foregoing handling is my own and the addition of the dribble notion — as opposed to an in-the-hands-riffle, common to both the referred-to items — is, I believe a definite plus. Try it.

One final point: When "going through the dribble" watch you don't knock the cards all over the place. A bit messy.

Bob Read

On a couple of occasions recently I have been to Germany. While there I had the pleasure of staying with Han Witt-Wittus and his pretty wife, Andrea. Hans is a professional magician, performing in a variety of roles from the Gardner-Wittus comedy act to solo TV spots.

The Wittus converted farm house is also the home of the largest known collection of magic sets, about 400 or so ranging from German and French sets some 150 years old, to the smallest magic set in the world — and probably the least known — contained in a match box and produced in the 1940's for the clothiers Dunn & Co.

You may know that I'm very interested in street performers and itinerant magicians, a subject that thwarts serious research due to the paucity of written evidence. It was a particular thrill, therefore, to accompany Hans to his performance of street magic in both Brussels and Dusseldorf.

For the sake of future historians (that's a paradox isn't it, like "nil growth" or "a real false eye" — but back to the plot. . .) here's a description of the act.

In the driving snow, Hans, who had in this instance been paid by the town fathers, took up position under a 12 foot blue umbrella, on the periphery of a street market. It was near Christmas and the market was well lit and brightly decorated and was laced with train rides, roundabouts and stalls selling tasty frankfurters and waffles.

Initial curiosity was aroused by Hans chalking a 12 foot circle around himself on the ground as his stage, and reaching into his battered brown Gladstone bag he pulled out, then pulled on a black tailcoat and slung over his shoulder a handwoven Khelin braided bag.

Starting into his introductory remarks, Hans tapped open an opera hat on the hand of an obliging spectator and plunged a couple of rag tipped metal rods into a bottle of parafin in the shoulder bag. A short fire eating routine followed with plenty of by-play and the crowd started to fill out. Hans swung smartly into the Unequal Ropes and was getting some good laughs by the time this finished, and gave way to a Uri Geller parody with a bending tablespoon. The giant card trick in one performance was replaced by the Sponge Balls, Chinese Sticks or

Egg Bag in subsequent shows, "just in case" said the professor "anyone in the audience stayed to see me again".

The crowd was about 50/60 strong by now and thoroughly enjoying the show despite the cold, miserable weather.

A kid was picked from the audience and was made a balloon dog accompanied by lots of lines and bits of business, and finally into a short version of the linking rings finishing on the chain of 6.

The whole act lasted about 12 minutes and was enthusiastically received. Hans collapsed his top hat, folded his tailcoat into the portmanteau, tugged on an overcoat and we repaired to a local hostelry for a mug of mulled wine.

There will be a tendency for some...NAY!...most people to write this off as a "cute" manoeuvre with little or no practical value... they'll be wrong! Others who play with the idea for any length of time will look back on the time spent as a rewarding and PAINFUL experience. They'll be totally correct.

Karl Fulves once asked me how I ran across this idea. I never answered him, as the explanation involved a rubber room, active restraint, Valium and occupational therapy.

Take any 4 playing cards and hold them in your left hand, well squared, in a LOOSE and modified dealing position with the left thumb lying along the left side. Your left forefinger is curled under the packet with its tip lightly touching the bottom card of the packet.

Your remaining fingers are along the right side of the packet which is held a little higher in the fingers than they would be in the normal dealing position. Assuming that this explanation has not lost you completely, here's the remainder of the scam.

But first!! A word of pre-explanation might well be in order to better explain what I'm going to explain. First, I'll tell you what's supposed to happen and how it's done and then I'll explain why it doesn't work. . .for most people. . .most of the time.

With the cards held as just described, your right hand approaches the packet from the rear. Your right middle finger presses against the ball of the right thumb and as the hand comes to within an inch or so of the rear end of the packet the middle finger is allowed to slip off the thumb in a forward direction.

This is just my way of trying to describe the normal flicking or thumping action one might use to flick a winged invader off your sandwich at an all-day singing and dinner on the ground type event. Since your finger leaves or breaks contact with the thumb at a tremendous rate of speed AND the end of the packet is close by and in the path of the finger's travel, your finger will rap the end of the packet with considerable force. If all conditions are right, a card will apparently "jump" out of the far end of the packet for about a third of its length or better. . .this as the result of the jarring thump or flick. Fig.1 shows an end on view of the flicking action. The middle finger is on the point of contacting the cards.

The word "apparently" is the operative one here, for if you are able to achieve this effect, close examination of this protruding card will show it to be a perfectly aligned double.

This whole process probably won't work for you the first few hundred times you attempt it or at best success will be spotty. A few tips and hints will make the process easier. There are a number of reasons why the process you're doing or using isn't working:

Grip Too Tight...If you're holding the packet too tightly, the centre two cards can't jump out.

Grip Too Loose. . . If you're grip is too loose, the whole packet will shoot out of your hands as you thump.

Wrong Part Of The Finger...The point of impact between the finger and the cards must be at the cuticle of the finger nail.

No "English"... Using billiard parlance, you must put "draw English" on your thump. Do not follow through with the thump. As soon as the cuticle makes contact with the edge of the cards you must STOP the forward thrust of the thump.

Cards Too Sticky...'Nuff said!!

If you find that your finger hurst after a few times of attempting this. . . you're on the right track. . . No pain, no gain!

By the time you've played around with this and gotten the hang of it you'll realise that you can do automatic triples and quads as well. The physics involved cause all of the cards except the top and bottom ones of the packet to "jump" out. For a triple, use a 5-card packet, and so on.

What you do with this is up to you bit I find it a nice utility device to use when I need a flashy, small packet double. Just so's not to leave you with a card projecting from a packet, here's a crisp additional piece of handling.

Assuming you've been doing this with a face up packet, reach forward with your right hand and grasp the projecting card (?) at the upper right (non-index) corner, thumb on top, fingers underneath, remove the card(s) by pulling it forward. As soon as the double clears the packet, use the double to lever the packet over book fashion, face down. Then flip the double over in the same manner onto the top of the packet.

PANDORA - Eric Mason

I first saw Eric perform this effect several years ago and state quite objectively (not in any way prejudiced by the fact that he is a colleague on this magazine) that this is one of the funniest and most startling ways of producing a selected card that I have ever seen. In effect a card is selected and returned to the pack. The card can be marked if so desired. A small box is shown, it is circular with a hinged lid, rather like a ladies powder compact, but smaller. It is placed on top of the pack and opened. Out pops a jack in the box type of snake with the chosen card stuck to its nose. It is as quick and clean as that. There is no fumbling, palming or anything of that kind.

The impact comes because the card is bigger than the box that it is seen to come out of. I have seen this effect performed for laymen and magicians. Always the result has been a gasp of amazement followed by a huge laugh as the audience realise the impossibility of what they have just witnessed. There are no awkward angles and you can be as close as you like. This is good commercial magic and at £5.25 great value. Cannot be too highly recommended.

A PEEP IN A BOTTLE - Eric Mason

Another off-beat idea from Eric. The price is £3.00.

In effect, the performer picks up an empty bottle — any bottle that happens to be lying around. He blows into the bottle, making a whistling sound then quickly places his hand over its mouth. A few seconds later he removes his hand and immediately the bottle repeats the same noise, giving the illusion that the sound was somehow trapped inside.

Although only a quickie, this would make a great way of "getting in" in a commercial situation. Just walk up to a table, pick up a bottle and do the trick. It is a good attention getter. Alternatively it could be used as a lead in to the coin in bottle. Highly recommended.

MAGNIFIQUE - Eric Mason

This is a version of the Al Koran "Flying Ring". A borrowed ring vanishes from the performer's fist and appears in a key case.

The difference between this method and the original is that Eric's version eliminates the use of a reel. This means that the key case can be in full view, even held by a spectator, before the ring vanishes.

The apparatus is well made and sure-fire. There is no getting set and everything can be examined before and after the trick. It does require a bit of handling practise but is well worth adding to your repertoire, especially if you "work the tables" and need a method that can be immediately repeated without having to retire to the 'gents' for ten minutes. Good value at £6.50.

TENKAI COP

The following is an extract from a letter written by Andrew Pargeter

Playing about with the Tenkai Palm I have found that it enables one to do a very easy bottom palm. With the card to be palmed on the bottom of the pack do a one-hand fan with the cards in the right hand. The left hand is now brought over palm up to sweep the fan closed but is inserted above the bottom card. It will now be found that as the fan is closed the bottom card goes into the Tenkai Palm position and the right hand can immediately take the pack by its ends, from above, providing cover for the palmed card. This probably isn't a new move but I haven't seen it described before.

THE

Magic Manuscript

David Copperfield: "A first class publication. I enjoy it and recommend it."

Daryl: "Well on its way to being the best magic magazine ever!"

Tom Mullica: "Absolutely fantastic – get it! The best thing since sliced bread . . .

Paul Harris: "I'm impressed '

Do you know of any of the above magicians? They are just four of the many who have seen the first big issue of The Magic Manuscript and like it! Some people more than just like it, too! In many ways The MM just can't be explained in an ad — so do yourself a favor and, at least, send for a copy so you can decide for yourself!

But, although it is impossible to give you an exact idea of what The MM is like in an ad, here's a bit of info. The first big issue had Bob Brown & Brenda on the cover in full color. Inside you'll find an eight page full color feature on and by Bob Brown. You'll also find The Paul Harris Close-up Forum with chitchat, articles, and magic tricks by Paul. Other close-up stars to be seen in the pages of The Forum include John Mendoza, John Cornelius, Phil Goldstein, Karrell Fox, Tom Ogden, Harry Lorayne, Tom Mullica, El Duco and many, many others!

Paul Osborne on Illusions, Bob Brown on The Business of Magic, Larry Becker on Mentalism, Edwin Hooper on England's Magic, Howard Schwarzman on "everything" — are all just a few more of the many features in The MM. Of course we've got current and honest news and reviews. Plus articles on doves, advertising and promotion, tricks, editorials, cartoons and lots of ads — and more, too!

You probably won't believe the extreme high quality of The Magic Manuscript — in both production and content — until you see it. Our first issue has 64 pages on the slickest of papers. The pages of full color are beautiful — a real first for a magic magazine! Our art work and design make the good reading all the better, too. Our second issue has Karrell Fox on the cover and promises to be even bigger and better! You don't want to miss another issue of The MM, so send in today! You can send $2 for a sample copy or request more free information, too.

I don't actually have the article in front of me at this moment but I was reading just a few days back that Derek Lever's magic magazine is sponsoring an 'Inventor of the Year' competition. May I say congratulations Derek and the best of luck. This is something which is now long long overdue, some kind of impetus to force magicians into being original. It's practically an impossibility for anyone to be one hundred percent original but anything that pushes them in the direction of thinking for themselves can't do anything but good.

The only tiny fly in the ointment is that I gather the competition is restricted to subscribers of Derek's magazine. Well, if the magazine is sponsoring the competition this is only fair, but I do think the idea is worthy of wider notice. In the past 'Abracadabra' magazine did the odd competition for originality and every year the I.B.M. gives an award. Unfortunately the I.B.M. award is lumped in with all the other awards in one competition. In other words a whole bunch of performers all get up on stage to perform their acts and afterwards a panel of judges decides who had the funniest act, who had the most original idea

I think Derek's idea is much better where the competition is strictly for originality. Now, the title of Derek's competition (if I remember rightly) is 'Inventor of the Year'. One of the problems with this idea is who is going to decide. Quite often a panel of judges will be appointed and some of those judges are not too well up in their subject. I remember on one occasion in another country when Jay Marshall and I were coopted onto a panel of judges for some competition or other and I had to point out to the rest of the judges that one performer whom they had completely overlooked had had one of the most original ideas I had ever seen in my life. Now I don't want you to think that I am showing off that I knew something they they didn't but it was a fact. It is quite possible that there were other areas that they knew about that I didn't, but in this instance here was a man who had come up with something completely original and just by a stroke of luck one of the judges (who just happened this time to be me) and a member of the panel hadn't even happened to know that it was a completely original idea and the remainder of the panel hadn't even noticed it.

Now if we can get back to Derek Lever's idea. I hope you have thought about it seriously Derek, I am sure you have and I wish you every success very sincerely but make sure ahead of time you have all the angles covered. I say this because there is usually someone afterwards who starts screaming that that was published in Hoffman.

Your title 'The Inventor of the Year' can cover a multitude of sins. Make sure your rules are simple and clear. In an originality contest the word itself can cover either an effect, a presentation, a combination of effects, and probably several other areas. I am not quite sure what the word 'inventor' covers. To me it seems that the man has to think of something completely new and that is going to be very difficult. At least it's going to be very difficult indeed to find perhaps six or eight or perhaps a dozen guys to come up with bran new inventions enough to make a series of articles in a magazine. If you had used the word'originality' it could have covered all those other things I have mentioned and perhaps created a little more impetus and forced one or two guys to putting their pet effects ideas or routines into your competition. Anyway, whatever happens, good luck and try if possible to keep it going as annual event or every other year.

If we may stay on the subject of originality how about The Magic Circle? Every year they have various events, and one that comes to mind is their Close - up competition which is always well attended, and usually has more than enough entrants. I can think of one occasion only when the number fell below half a dozen or so they usually have that or more. Perhaps they could sponsor something of an originality competition. I don't mean in their magazine. I mean perhaps an annual event when one Monday night in the year everyone who has something original to offer can turn up and compete with all the others at whatever their own particular brand of magic is and have a crack at this originality idea.

This issue is the first one-man Pabular by Roger Crosthwaite. He will already be known to many of our readers by reputation, if they have not been lucky enough to see him work. Roger is a great performer, with a manner calculated to win over any audience. He also has a wealth of experience and is a very deep thinker.

Although a clergyman by profession, Roger is also a very busy entertainer, with considerable professional experience of commercial performing. Last year, he won the Magic Circle, close-up competition, which was no mean feat, considering that he was the twentieth performer and the audience had been sitting there for three hours. Roger has sent us lots more material, which we will be releasing from time to time. It is all first class, audience tested, commercial stuff. Thank you Roger.

I am now going to stick my neck out and make a promise that I do not know if I shall be able to keep. Several recent reviews of Pabular have criticised us for publishing too many card tricks. So, to show that we do listen to criticisms and that we do try to do something about them, I will now promise you that THE NEXT ISSUE OF PABULAR WILL NOT CONTAIN A SINGLE CARD TRICK. Goodness knows how we shall do it, but we will have a good try.

DOING THE SPLITS

Roger Crosthwaite

This is a variation on Las Vegas Split by Paul Harris. It uses the Hofzinser Change, but this time to exchange a single card for two from the pack. The other move used is a variation of the Marlo/Curry turnover. This was described in Heirophant (Ressurection issue) on page 19 as the Breakless Curry Change.

Marlo makes the point that the Curry change has been avoided by many cardmen as being a difficult technique to execute flawlessly. In nearly every case, misdirection, other than the natural one of the other hand doing something simultaneously, like turning over another card, was necessary. Certain technical tipoffs remained. When Marlo published his modification some of the usual fingering hook-ups were eliminated. The usual breaks are not held, on the card or cards to be exchanged. No doubt Marlo was referring to the third finger placement of the left hand, under the top card. Indeed the whole grip of the left hand on the pack can create problems. This no doubt led Marlo to develop his variation.

I want to explain my handling of the change in relation to this particular routine. Just for the record, the earliest description of the Curry change that I can find is given by Jean Hugard in More Card Manipulations Vol.2. There is a description on pages 4-6.

In the Marlo/Curry change, the left hand third finger under the top card is replaced by the little finger. This enables a much neater, compact change to take place.

In this routine, a break is required under the top two cards in the left hand. I would refer you here to Paul Harris's book Las Vegas Close-Up where in a chapter called 'Splits Unlimited' he has a move called Curry Split based not on the Marlo/Curry change, but on the original Curry change.

Let us now go into a description of:

DOING THE SPLITS

EFFECT

The patter theme that I use is similar to the Las Vegas Splits routine. First, however, I would like to stress that if you are using a patter theme, based on a well-known card game — in this instance Black Jack — it is important that you know something about the rules of the game. I would refer anybody who is getting into this routine, to read about Black Jack in Scarne on Cards by John Scarne (chapters 15, 16 and 17).

Les us now move to the routine. I will first of all outline the patter, then I will go into a detailed description of the working. Some of the patter is based on Harry Lorrayne's ideas.

; "Gamblers are frustrated, because they cannot show off their skills. If they did no-one would play with them. . . or they'd get shot! Magicians, of course, can show off their skills as much as they like. No-one worries, indeed the audience applaud all the more. Gamblers and magicians have quarrelled for years, over which are best at handling a deck of cards. So one day, the world's top gambler and the world's top magician decided to settle the matter once and for all, by playing the world's most popular banking game, Black Jack."

"It started as an even match. The magician and the gambler each winning one round. Then the gambler bet the magician that he, the gambler, would beat the magician on the very next hand. The magician accepted the bet, on the condition that he was allowed to shuffle and cut the cards. The gambler agreed. The cards were shuffled, cut and dealt. The gambler received a count of twenty, a black ten and a red king. The magician received a count of four, a pair of twos."

The performer illustrates the above by dealing one card face down to his imaginary opponent and one card face up to himself. Then he deals his opponent a second card face up and a face down card to himself. (Scarne suggests that it is better to deal the dealer's first card face up. This allows the other players more time to study the dealer's up card and hence speeds the game. Magically it is more effective in building suspense). The performer now turns up the gambler's face down card and announces a count of twenty. He then turns over the magician's face down card and announced a count of four.

"The gambler was just about to pick up his money, when the magician, knowing full well the rules of the house, picked up the red two and actually split it down the centre with his own bare hands, just like this! He divided the red two into two red aces! He then picked up the black two and divided that into two black aces."

Illustrating the story, the performer picks up the red two and with an apparent tearing action, splits it visibly into two red aces. The black two is also split, into the remaining two black aces.

"The gambler said that while this was all very entertaining, the four of a kind aces only had value in poker. They were of no rank at all in Black Jack." "Once again the gambler started to pick up the money, but the magician reminded him that the house rules required him to receive one additional card for each split ace. The gambler had no choice but to allow the game to continue. One card was dealt from the shuffled deck onto each face up ace. The cards were turned over and the people cheered. The magician had won the game and his bet, with four Black Jacks."

The performer, who has dealt four cards from the pack, face down onto the face up aces, now turns these cards over to reveal the four jacks. This is the first climax.

The performer continues, "I am going to show you exactly how the magician did it. You see, he was using marked cards. These are the only blue backed cards, in a complete set of reds."

Each hand is turned face down to show blue backs. The remainder of the pack is ribbon spread face up, then turned over to show all red backs. (Second climax).

METHOD

Required are two decks of cards, one red backed and the other blue. Also needed is a close-up pad, or, if you wish to dress the thing up, a regulation Black Jack board or mat. If you use the Black Jack mat, you will, of course, deal the cards into the appropriate spaces.

Preparation

- 1) Discard the four aces and jacks from the red deck.
- 2) On top of the face down blue deck, place the following stacks: 10S, 2H, KH, 2S, AH, AD, AS, AC, JC, JH, JS, JD.
- 3) Place the blue deck in its own case.
- 4) The red deck, minus the aces and jacks, is on your lap as you sit at the table.

Performance

- 1) Introduce the gambler verses magician theme, and remove the blue deck from its case, placing it into the left hand ready for shuffling. Say "The magician accepted the bet, on condition that he was allowed to shuffle and cut the cards. The gambler agreed. The cards were shuffled and cut. . ." At this point in the patter, false shuffle and cut the pack, retaining the top stock.
- 2) Spread the cards between the hands, from left to right, retaining a left little finger break beneath the sixth card from the top. This will be the ace of diamonds. The cover for doing this is simply showing and squaring the deck.

- 3) On the line "...and dealt..." deal the first card face down to the imaginary gambler. The second face up to yourself, the third face up to the gambler and the fourth face down to yourself. After the deal, you will be left with a two card break, above the left little finger.
- 4) Patter, "The gambler received a count of twenty, a black ten and a red king. . ." Pick up the gambler's faced card and, holding it in the right hand at the inner right corner, with your thumb on top and first finger below, use it as a lever to flip the tabled card face up from right to left. If necessary, you can turn the left hand palm down and use it to steady the face down card at its inner left corner. Use the left first finger tip to do this. The action is similar to the Mexican Turnover but the cards are not exchanged. Make sure that you do not lose the left little finger break in the process. Both the gambler's cards remain face up on the table.
- 5) Continue, "...the magician received a count of four, a pair of twos." Repeat the actions of 4 above, to turn both of your own cards face up. Leave the face up twos on the table. Now pick up the gambler's cards, turning them face down. Hold them in the right hand between the first finger and thumb at the inner right corner and insert them into the deck at its outer left corner. Push them flush into the deck, using a squaring action of both hands. Retain the break below the top two cards.
- Continue the patter, "The magician. . . picked up the red two. . .he divided the card into two red aces. . ." Perform the two for one Hofzinser change. This is done in the following way. Pick up the red two, face down in the right hand. The card is held by the inner right corner, with the first finger tip beneath and the thumb on top. This is the normal Hofzinser grip. The deck is in the left hand. The left little finger tip holds a break below the second card from the top. The grip and mechanics of this change are exactly the same as for the single Hofzinser as described in the Little Salt Man routine. The only difference being that the break is held beneath the second card from the top instead of being directly under the top card. At the completion of the exchange, the two red aces will be held in the right hand, at the inner right corner. They will be held by the first and second finger beneath and the thumb on top. The left little finger will be holding a break beneath the top card of the deck (Red two).

Without any pause, the left hand turns palm down, allowing the left thumb and first finger tip to pinch the double card at its outer left corner (see Fig.1). Moving simultaneously,

- the left hand turns palm up, snapping the top card face up, while the right hand turns palm down, snapping the bottom card face up. As this card turns over, the right second finger tip moves below the card and takes over the grip of the right thumb. This exactly positions the card for it to be dropped face up on the table, to the right of the black two. The left hand's card is dropped to the left of the two. Credit for the snapping action goes to Paul Harris, who uses it most effectively in his own Las Vegas Split routine. What the spectators see, is that you take the card between your right and left hands and bending it to breaking point, appear to split the card down the centre into two red aces.
- Patter, "...he picked up the black two and divided that into two black aces." Double undercut the top card of the pack to the bottom. Your left hand now holds the deck in the usual mechanic's grip with the right first finger curled around the front end. With the left thumb, push off the top card (ace of clubs) and hold it face down with the right hand at its inner right corner. The thumb should be on top and the second finger below. Slide the left side of this card beneath the right side of the left hand tabled ace (AH). Lift up the ace, almost immediately dropping it face up onto the face up black two. Now do the same thing with the ace of diamonds, dropping it onto the two tabled cards. As you are moving the aces with the right hand, the left little finger obtains a break beneath the top card of the pack. Do not show the face of the ace in the right hand, merely act as though you were using it simply to emphasise the fairness of your actions. Réplace it onto the deck.

The left little finger now holds a break beneath the two top cards of the pack, in readiness for an In The Air Turnover Change. The right hand reached over and picks up the tabled packet, holding it face down, in a dealing position. The right hand moves towards the left and with the thumb deals the top card, the two of Spades into a position between the left thumb and curled first finger. The card is at an angle of forty-five degrees to the top of the deck. The left side of the card is held well into the crotch of the left thumb. The outer left corner of the card is even with the left side of the deck, resulting in a slight diagonal angling (to the left) of the outer end of the card (see Fig.2). If the left thumb were to bend slightly at its first joint, and move in a quarter turn towards the inner end of the deck, the top card would move flush with the rest of the deck. This will help you to check out the correct position. Both hands are now turned palm down and your right hand drops both its cards face up onto the table. At the same time, the left hand executes a Marlo/ Curry turnover change. This is done by the left first finger moving out from between the top card and the rest of the deck. The left thumb retains the top card in place as the left second and third finger tips move upwards very slightly, releasing the two aces face up onto the table (see Fig.3). It is important that there should be no flutter of the left fingers as the change is made. All the left fingers remain practically immobile as in Marlo's Breakless Curry Change. Only the secret moves should be made, ie. the left thumb exerting a slightly increased pressure at the outer left corner of the top card and the left second and third fingers moving slightly upwards.

Retaining the little finger break beneath the top card of the pack, both hands now move forward, palm down and grip the outer long edges of their respective pairs of cards. The first fingers should be beneath the cards and the thumbs on top. They are now turned ninety degrees outwards. Your thumbs pull towards your palms and the first fingers push the lower card of each pair inwards. The lower card in the right hand (AH) is dropped slightly to the left of centre of the close-up pad. The lower card in the left hand (AS) is dropped slightly to the right of centre followed by the ace of clubs and ace of diamonds to the right and left of the two already tabled.

The patter here is, "The gambler said. . . four Black Jacks." Execute a table slip cut, losing the top card (2S) in the deck. False shuffle retaining the four jacks on top. Deal one jack face down onto each ace from left to right. After the deal, bring your left hand, holding the pack, back to the edge of the table. With your right hand, turn the jack of diamonds face up, followed by the jack of spades. Take advantage of the audience reaction on seeing the first jack, to pause and show it all around. As you do this, allow the left hand to relax into the lap and exchange the deck, while the right hand turns over the jack of spades. Bring up the pack with the left hand and in one smooth action, the left thumb goes beneath the pack and flips it face up as you place it face up into the waiting right hand. Your right fingers are at the outer end of the deck and your thumb at the inner (Biddle grip). You are now set to ribbon spread the cards, when the time comes.

Once the left hand is free of the pack, it turns over the remaining two jacks.

ADDITIONAL NOTES

The Zarrow or Vernon Triumph shuffle can be used in this routine for the false shuffles and are quite in keeping with the gambling theme.

In stage 7, the tabled Marlo/Curry change could be used in place of the in the air change given, however, I have found the latter to be more appropriate in the context of this particular routine.

For good work on the original Curry change, see Lorrayne's Close-Up Card Magic, chapter five.

In Las Vegas Close-Up, Paul Harris suggests the use of a Curry change for the split. He has another interesting handling called Lickerty Split, which is an adaptation of Anneman's Jinx Change. This, he says, is the preferred usage for the second split in his own routine. In any case, a study of all his split ideas would be amply rewarding for anyone seeking to adapt the present routine for his own use.

The routine is quite strong enough without the colour change second climax. This is more suitable for the set show and is best omitted in commercial situations. When using the pack switch, do not oversell the idea that you are using a blue backed pack. Just let them keep seeing the blue cards throughout the routine. The actual exchange of packs should be executed calmly and without haste. Look directly at the audience as you make the exchange, do not peep into your lap. Your let hand must know exactly where the deck lies if the lap.

An additional kicker can be added if desired, by having the backs or faces of the four Black Jack hands change at the end. This can be done by having the switch packet on the right thigh. Use Gene Maze's Unit Grip Switch. This can be found in Appocalyse Vol.4 page 45. Alternatively use Marlo's Kick or Switch from Kabbala Vol.1 No.9 page 67.

The routine takes about two minutes to perform.

PERSONAL NOTE

In 1955, the same year that Cy Enfield's Entertaining Card Magic was published, I remember going to an I.B.M. convention. I was seventeen at the time. Some six years earlier I had first met Cyril Goulding, who will be remembered by many folk at the Magic Circle. He would have been about thirty in those days. He gave me many lessons, teaching me the pass, how to force a card, and many other things. In addition he gave me his own thoughts and ideas and spent many hours coaching and helping me. He helped me a lot at that crucial time in my development and there is no doubt that he was the inspiration behind much of what I do today.

It was when I was eleven that Cyril Goulding showed me the Curry Turnover Change (1949). He had learned it from Fred Kaps, who was a personal friend. At the convention I noticed a group of magicians, playing about with cards on the floor. I remember that Gus Southall, performing on the carpet, did a multiple Curry change. That is he exchanged two, three or four cards. This set me thinking and I began to explore a multiple card change. I am not claiming any originality for the way in which I hit upon a similar method to that of Marlo. I think that I could only claim originality if the thing was in print. There is absolutely no question at all that Marlo was the first to describe in print the use of a little finger break for the Curry change.

Just for the record at this time, I would like to pay tribute to John Gilliland and Mike Kelly. These were two fellow cardworkers in the Pentacle Club. Between the years of 1955 and 1963, I had been thinking about what I had seen Gus Southall do. Along with John and Mike, I spent many hours, and together we developed the idea of using a left little finger break. We discovered that with this method, it was possible to do a packet exchange, in much the same way as the exchange of a single card. As I say, I am claiming no originality for this. I lid write it up in my own personal notebooks for that year, which I still have. I am not sure of the Marlo move.

I want to start by outlining part of the act, which I did in the close-up competition, at the Magic Circle. The part that I call The Little Salt Man. It gives me the opportunity to describe my handling of the Hofzinser Top Change. This differs in some respects from the version described by Lewis Ganson, in Cy Enfield's Entertaining Card Magic Part 2.

It is important, when performing this change, that an excuse is given for the stroking action, of the left thumb. This action is the distinctive feature of the change. The change can take place in ful view, with the hands being burned.

I want us to look at every movement, in the description of this change, for, although, as Lewis Ganson points out, the mechanics of the move can be learned in a comparatively short time, a good deal of practise will be needed to acquire the knack of performing the combined movements that produce the illusion of a card changing, as it is being stroked. As Lewis Ganson says, "One of the reasons why this change is so effective, is that you draw attention to the card, through the stroking action. The card apparently changes, while it is being closely watched. It changes right under their very noses!"

So let us now come to the beginning of:

THE LITTLE SALT MAN

EFFECT

I use this as part of a longer routine. But of course it can stand on its own. Indeed, if you are performing commercially, you do not always have time for long routines, involving the discovery of several cards. It is often much better to just produce one, effectively.

Anyway to return to the effect. This is simply that a card is chosen and lost in the pack. The salt pot (little salt man) fails to find the card. Salt is then poured onto the wrong card and it changes into the right one.

Sometimes I will have the card signed. I do not always get cards signed but sometimes it is quite effective. Certainly in a commercial situation there is something special about a signed card. You can always sign it yourself as an autograph. Incidently, on the subject of signed cards, I find that the Edding 400 Permanent Writing Pen is excellent. It dries quickly, makes a good sharp line, shows up clearly and does not smudge.

METHOD

The card is controlled to the top of the pack. Any method of doing this can be used to taste.

The salt pot is to hand on the table, on the right, of the close-up mat within easy reach of your right hand. Make sure that you do not have to stretch for it. If you are working in a restaurant or similar situation, make sure prior to starting that the salt pot is correctly placed.

After the card has been replaced, if you are using anything other than the Riffle Pass, I think that it is best to pause with the pack prior to the control. This is certainly so if using an overhand shuffle control. Before cutting to the jog, pause, pick up the salt pot and pour out a little salt as if to check that it is working. Spiel about the magic properties of salt.

You can toss the salt pot up with your right hand, catch it again and replace it on the table. This pause is very important. It creates a distraction from the pack. As soon as the card is replaced in the pack, folk will be watching for some kind of move at that point. So if there is a delay and you simply hold the break, you have gained a psychological advantage. This advantage becomes stronger if their attention is then diverted away from the pack to some other object such as the salt pot.

Spread the cards, face down across the table from left to right. Pick up the salt pot, introducing it as "the little salt man". Hold it in the right hand, with the fingers at the front and the thumb at the back. Sprinkle a small amount of salt, not too much, over the spread of cards. Say that doing this turns the cards into a cardboard conveyer belt.

"Along comes the little salt man," you say. And you start him walking along from the right hand end of the spread, manipulating him with your fingers. When he reaches the centre of the spread, he stops at what you say is a "precise and particular point". This is any card in the centre of the spread.

As you say "...point" the "little salt man" should be resting on a particular card in the centre of the spread. Your left hand reaches across to the front of the spread, just in front of the salt pot and with your left thumb, at the outer left corner of the card, on which the salt pot is standing and the first finger underneath that card, you withdraw it from the spread. Slide it away from the other cards. With your right hand you move the salt pot onto the card. The patter here is, "Along comes the little salt man, moving along the cardboard conveyor belt. He stops at a precise and particular point." (As you say "point", the card is slid out as just explained. You pause in the patter for as long as this takes).

Both hands now move back to either end of the spread. You close the spread up, by moving both hands in towards the centre. The chosen card going to the top of the squared pack. The right hand picks up the cards and places them into the left, in a normal dealing position. While you are doing this, the patter continues, "And of course, amazingly and incredibly. . ." By the time you have got to the word "incredibly" the cards should be squared up in the left hand. "The card the little salt man has chosen. . ." As you say this you lift up the salt pot and place it to the right of the card ". .is the chosen card!" With this, you pick up the discovered card (in the right hand) with your thumb on top and your first finger below. The card, of course is still face down. Turn the card face on to the audience and hold it at about the level of your own face.

The audience will quickly realise that the little salt man has not found the card at all.

At this point, I want to go back just a couple of moments in the routine, to the point where you are lifting the salt pot off the face down card and placing it to the right. Under cover of this action, the left thumb pushes the top card of the pack, very slightly to the right, enabling you to gain a left little finger break beneath it. This is in readiness for the Hofzinser top change.

Notice from the expressions of the audience that you have found the wrong card. Rotate the right hand at the wrist, tipping the card backwards towards yourself, so that you can see its face. The palm of the hand will be facing the audience and the back of the hand will be towards you. Just move the hand enough, so that you can peep over the top short edge of the card.

Say, "Naughty little salt man!" As you say this, tilt the card forwards again, so that it is face down and bang the top of the salt cellar with the card. Turn to the spectators on your left and right and say, "Of course it's not your fault Agatha, and of course it's not your fault Bill. It's the little salt man's fault. So the little salt man will have to put it right!" As you say this, bring the card, held in the right hand, over to the left. You hold it with the left thumb, on top of the pack. The card is held by the left inner corner against the outer right hand corner of the pack. The left thumb is pointing towards the outer right corner of the deck. (See Fig.1).

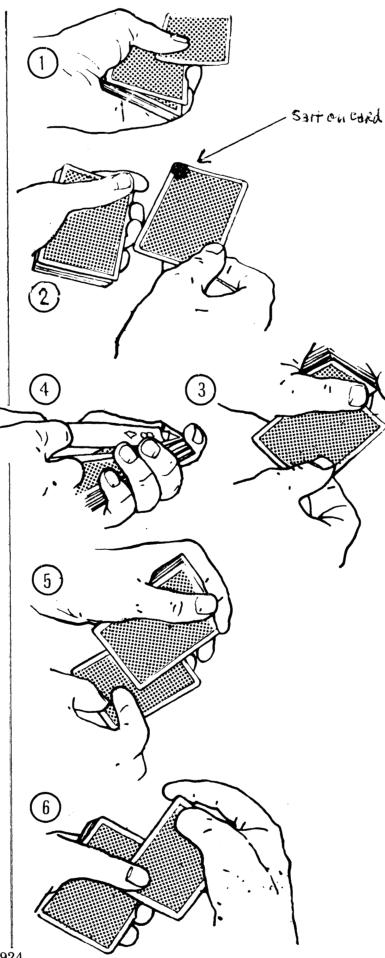

At this point the right hand can release the card temporarily, to allow the right second finger to snap the outer end of the card. This establishes that it is a single card. Do not say so, of course.

Take the salt pot in the right hand and pour a small quantity of salt onto the outer left hand corner of the card. Say, "The little salt man will have to put it right! A little magic salt on the card may do the trick." Place the salt pot back on the table, in the same position as it was before.

Bring the right hand to the outjogged card and retake it in the Hofzinser grip. That is with the thumb on top and the forefinger beneath at the lower right hand (non-index) corner. Release the pressure of the left thumb, enabling the right hand to move the card away. The position will be that shown in Fig.2.

In this case, the cover for the stroking action, is the stroking off of the grains of salt. The card is held in front of the body at about waist height. It is important that the right hand and the card do not move from this position during the change. I would like to emphasise that point. It was emphasised in the original description in the Enfield book and it is an important point. The movement takes place with the left hand only. Cy Enfield suggests that you keep the right elbow pressed firmly against the body, to anchor the right arm and avoid a tremble. In fact, if I am seated at a table, I often rest my right elbow and forearm on the edge of the table.

Bring the deck, in the left hand, beneath the card in the right. Remember that the chosen card is on top of the pack, with a little finger break beneath it. The left thumb strokes across the back of the card, diagonally to the left and away from the body; just as you would do, if you were really only stroking away the grains of salt. In practising this move, it is important to get the rhythm of the stroke. As the left thumb strokes the top of the card, the left hand rotates at the wrist for a quarter turn, whilst at the same time moving, with the thumb, diagonally to the left and away from the body. This action causes the card to bend at its outer left hand corner and then to snap straight again as the thumb slides off. The position just prior to the snap is shown in Fig.3.

My chief addition to the change, is the action of the right second (middle) finger tip. This action takes place at the start of the stroke with the left thumb. As the left thumb starts the stroking action, simultaneously the right second finger tip enters the break below the top card of the pack. (See Fig.4). In order to enable this to be done, the left little finger must hold its break slightly further up than would normally be done. This will make the break wider than normal and also prevent the fingers colliding. The purpose of placing the right middle finger into this break is to produce a double snapping sound at the end of the stroking action. As the left thumb completes stroking the card and slides off the end of it, there will be a snapping sound as pressure on the card is released. When the change is made later, it will also produce a snapping sound, but this sound will not be exactly the same as when the change was not made. Thus there is something which can tell the audience that some chicanery has taken place. With my addition of placing the middle finger into the break beneath the top card of the pack, this discrepancy is somewhat lessened. What will happen, is that a fraction of a second before the left thumb produces its snap on the top card, there will be a second snap produced by the middle finger releasing the top card of the pack, as the pack is moved away from it in the stroking action.

The result of all this is to produce a longer more sustained snapping noise during the stroking process. This noise much more nearly approximates the sound made by the actual change. In fact it is almost impossible to tell the difference between the two sounds.

In the Enfield version of the change, it is necessary, just prior to making the actual move, for the left thumb to push the top card of the pack very slightly to the right. This version avoids doing so, because of the break. The change can be made, without any surreptitious action of the left thumb. It also has the advantage in some tricks of enabling the single card in the right hand to be exchanged for more than one card from the top of the pack.

When you are ready to make the change, having carried out one or two stroking actions, instead of letting the top card of the pack slip off the right second finger, grip it firmly between the right first and second fingers. At the same time, the right thumb releases its pressure on the card it is holding. As this card is now no longer being held in place by anything, instead of merely being stroked by the left thumb as it has so far, it is actually carried along by the thumb and at the completion of the stroking action will end up on top of the pack. Its place in the right hand will have been taken by the card gripped between the right first and second fingers. This action is shown in Fig. 5.

As soon as the new card in the right hand is clear of the pack, the right first finger is moved from on top of the card to beneath it. The right thumb then takes up the position previously occupied by the right forefinger. It is necessary to keep the movement of the right forefinger as small as possible.

On completion of the change, do not show the card straight away. Take it on top of the pack, holding it with the left thumb at the inner left corner against the outer right corner of the pack. This is similar to the way the card was held when putting salt on it earlier. (See Fig.1). Snap the corner of the card once or twice with the right middle finger and thumb to establish that there is only one card. Now with the right hand, reach across and take the projecting card by the outer short edge, about one-third of an inch from the left corner. The thumb should be on top and the second finger beneath. Place the right forefinger, so that it butts against the left corner of the card. Now from this position, you can spin the card down onto the table. (See Fig.6).

Say, "See what the magic salt has done!" Get one of the spectators to turn over the card. Then pick up the salt pot and give it a kiss!!!

POST SCRIPT

I have found this to be a very appealing routine, mainly because of the "little salt man", the mistake that he makes and the apparently impossible way that matters are set to rights. Do not, however, forget to get rid of the wrong card on top of the pack. There are any number of ways of doing this. A simple cut is one of the best.

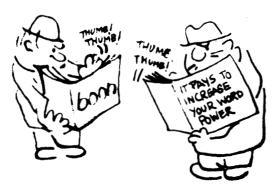

Concerning the best moment to make the change and whether it is best on the first or second stroke of the card. Do not forget, you are stroking away salt, so you must simulate that action. I make the change, when I feel the cards to be in exactly the right position. Sometimes I need one stroke to get them there. I will make the change sometimes on the third stroke, sometimes on the first and sometimes on the second. It all depends on the exact situation and the feel of the cards.

As said earlier, this is a change, which can be done when the hands are being watched very closely. It is a challenge, a change, and it is imperceptible.

It may appear to some folk that giving detailed positions of the salt pot, the hand movements and the spread, is unnecessary. I would very much challenge that assumption. Indeed, one of the great problems with close-up magic is that often things just do not flow into a smooth routine. This is so usually because the performer has not thought out in advance and has not practised where he will place say the deck of cards at a particular point; or how he will hold the chosen card. So, when he comes to do a specific sleight, his hands are in the wrong position. To quote the words of Dai Vernon on page 112 of Lewis Ganson's Dai Vernon's Ultimate Card Secrets. Vernon says "Of utmost importance in performing any 'steal', 'pass' or such move is how you 'go into it'." Then he goes on to speak specifically about the pass, but this can be applied, of course, to any move. It is so important in the descriptions of moves, that attention be given to each and every detail. For instance, in the "Little Salt Man", the way that you hold the card prior to the change. The way that you pick it up off the table. The card already needs to be in the correct position in the right hand. It must not need adjusting prior to the move. Then there is the positioning of the salt pot. All of these things are crucial to the smooth running of the routine.

Many readers will already know all of these things, but after watching several performers recently, it is certainly something worth repeating. I certainly concur with everything that Dai Vernon says on the subject.

Roger Crosthwaite

I got the idea for this routine after reading a stunt called "Ice Dice" by Phil Goldstein. It was in a book called Card Tricks for People Who Don't Do Card Tricks. The title intrigued me and I found it to be an excellent booklet.

The following routine is one that has been used in commercial situations with some success. There is a certain amount of dealing involved but this is not excessive. Certainly it is not one of those long, drawn out, dealing down effects, which magicians love and lay audiences cannot abide.

This version is based on an idea by Jon Racherbaumer dated August 14th 1975. It appeared in No.7 of "Sticks and Stones, a leaflet for the left hand". The trick from which this stems is "Psi Chic Spell". Apparently, he showed this effect to Ed Marlo and Dave Solomon, who worked out a streamlined version, which also appeared in the same leaflet. My trick draws heavily on these two sources.

The trick involves a pair of invisible dice, which have a strange effect on different people, depending upon who handles them. To present the routine, you can pantomime having invisible dice or alternatively use ice cubes as Phil Goldstein suggests or do as he does and use transparent plastic cubes. Personally, I prefer using the ice cubes or else pretending to have invisible dice. The only other bit of preparation is that you find out the first name of one of the spectators. If you can do this secretly so much the better. If not it is still a strong effect.

Introduce your pack of cards, and hand it to be shuffled. As the cards are being shuffled, bring out the pair of "invisible dice". Have the "dice" examined to make sure that they are not loaded or in any way faked. Tell a spectator to shake the "dice" between his hands in the time honoured fashion. He is then instructed to throw them and remember the total "showing". This is, of course, just an entertaining way of having a spectator think of a number and restricting his choice from two to twelve. I find this much more preferable than merely having the spectator think of a number. The idea of using the "invisible dice" dresses the thing up and creates opportunities for comedy business. You could, of course, use normal dice if desired, or oversized ones, but this would be moving away from the "Ice Dice" theme.

Take the deck back and hold it in the left hand. The right hand moves in to take the top card of the pack, the third and fourth fingers are curled in against the palm. The first and second fingers are extended, in a relaxed position. The tip of the right second finger touches the tip of the right thumb.

The right thumb and second finger separate slightly, in order to take the top card. The tip of the right thumb will contact the deck just at the point where it will touch the tip of the left forefinger. Ask the spectator to remember the card laying at the position which matches the number on the "dice", ie if he totalled seven then he remembers the seventh card. The right hand takes the cards from the top of the pack one at a time, showing the faces and not reversing the order. Do this fairly slowly so that the spectator has sufficient time to remember the card. To assist him/her count the cards aloud as you show them.

For the sake of clarity, let us imagine that the spectator has totalled nine and is remembering the ninth card, which we will assume is the eight of clubs. Of course, you do not know either the card or the number. You continue to pass the cards into the right hand, until you have reached the number ten plus one card for each letter in the person's name. For instance, say the person's name was Fred. There are four letters in Fred so you would pass ten cards plus four cards making fourteen in all.

One point on handling here. I personally would not count the fourteen cards aloud in this instance. When I get to ten or so, my voice begins to drop and by the time I get to thirteen it has more or less faded out. I would not actually show or mention the fourteenth card but would just push it slightly to the right and get a left little finger break beneath it.

All the cards from the right hand are now replaced on top of the pack, so that you now have a left little finger break under the fourteenth card (or whatever number is appropriate). In this instance the ninth card down is the eight-of clubs.

It is now necessary to get the fourteen cards to the bottom of the pack. This can be done by means of a double cut or pass etc. Place the pack face down in the left hand and weave shuffle. This is not a faro shuffle. Simply cut the pack into two unequal portions and shuffle them together leaving the stack untouched on the bottom. Then give the pack a false cut or two. The false cut that I prefer to use is one, which although I have not seen it in print, I do not believe to be my own origination. Here is a brief description.

The cards are held in the left hand, in the standard dealing position. Get a left little finger break near the centre of the deck. This is not a normal flesh break, because the entire first phalange of the little finger is pushed right into the pack, as if you were going to perform the Classic Pass. All of the left fingers lie along the long edge of the pack and the thumb lies along the opposite side. The second and third fingers only are curled slightly further over the pack than the forefinger. They rest on the white border of the top card.

Reach across with the right hand from above. The thumb is at the inner end and the right first finger curls on top of the pack while the other three fingers take the outer short end. The thumb and fingers grip the lower portion of the pack, as if you were going to make the pass. You do not however do this, you simply lift the lower half of the pack upwards and to the right. The left thumb moves aside very slightly to allow the lower packet to clear the upper. The packet must move slightly to the left in the first instance before moving to the right in order to clear the upper. When the cards are clear, the packet in the right hand will appear to have come from the top of the pack. Drop this packet onto the table. The right hand then returns and takes the rest of the cards from the left, placing them cleanly and firmly on top of the tabled packet. The fingertips of both hands then square up the cards. The pack is then replaced into the left hand.

The actions of this move are indistinguishable from a genuine cut. Practise by first doing a genuine cut then match the actions exactly when doing the false cut. To make the initial movement to the left, as the lower packet clears the upper, as small as possible, hold the pack at an angle of more than forty-five degrees to the floor. The more parallel the pack is to the floor, the greater will have to be the movement to the left.

Immediately the right hand packet clears the left, the left third finger tip presses down on the cards, pushing them into the palm, where the bottom half should be. Also the little finger tip is brought up alongside the other fingers. The left thumb returns to its former position.

Ask the spectator what his "Ice Dice" total was. You do this ostensibly so that you can show that his card no longer remains in that position — that it has been lost in the shuffle and the cut. When he tells you his total, if it was nine you can ask, "Was that a six and a three? Or was it a four and a five?" This will usually get a laugh.

You now hold the pack in the left hand and count off the given number of cards one at a time into the right, without changing their order. Take them one at a time into the right hand, thumb on top and first and second fingers beneath. As each card is counted off, turn the hand slightly to show the face of the card to the spectator and so that you can just see it yourself. Say, "I want you to make sure that your card is no longer in the same position." As a subtle touch, you can add, "But if you do see your card at any of the other numbers, don't tell me!"

When you have reached the number required, show the card in that position, in this example the ninth and say, "There you are! That is not your card?" You now replace the nine cards on top of the pack, keeping a little finger break beneath them. You could if you wanted, go on and show one or two further cards, provided that you can maintain the position for the break beneath the ninth.

Double undercut or riffle pass the nine cards to the bottom of the pack. Then do a second weave shuffle as explained before, taking care not to disturb any of the bottom cards — now a stack in this example of twenty three cards.

Take the pack into the right hand, in position for the overhand shuffle. The backs of the cards should be towards the palm of the hand, so that they will be shuffled face outwards. Begin the shuffle by peeling off approximately ten cards, try not to take too many more. Then run the next ten or so cards singly (see footnote). One of these cards should be the chosen card. Continue with the shuffle until all the cards are exhausted. In the given example, on completion of this shuffle the thought of card will be fifteenth from the top. It will always be eleven plus the number of letters in the spectator's name from the top, regardless of what number he thought of.

Of course at this stage you still do not know the identity of the card. Say to the spectator, "The ice dice have a strange effect upon you and your name. Your name is?..." The person says, "Fred" or whatever. You now deal the cards one at a time onto the table, spelling one card for each letter as you say, "Y.O.U.R...N.A.M.E...I.S...F.R.E.D..." Take the next card off the pack, holding it face down in the right hand. Ask the spectator the name of the thought of card, as he tells you, flip the card face upwards in the right hand and toss it onto the table.

FOOTNOTE

The number of cards to be run singly depends very much on the number of letters in the person's name. To be on the safe side run at least five more cards than there are letters.

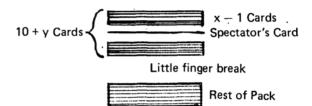

The figure below shows in algebraic form how the card gets into position.

Skating on Ice Fig.1

x = "Ice Dice" number

y = Number of letters in spectator's name

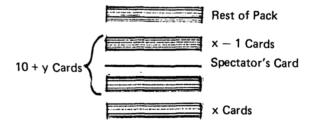

A Position of card in relation to little finger break, before cut

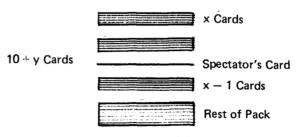

B Position of card after the cut

C Position after a further x number of cards have been cut to the bottom of the pack.

D The shuffle reverses the order of the cards.

Card is now x + 10 + y - (x - 1) from top = x + 10 + y - x + 1 = 11 + y from top.

PARTIAL BRAINWAVE

Roger Crosthwaite

When Roger sent in the "Ice Dice" routine described above, he sent in this item, which he uses as an added kicker to that trick. However, we felt that it was sufficiently adaptable to be regarded as a separate item in its own right. Basically, it is a Brainwave Pack, adapted to fool people, who know the Brainwave. It can be used in any effect where a Brainwave might be used as a clincher, but where the spectator has in fact only a restricted choice of cards.

In the "Ice Dice" effect, he only has a choice of eleven cards. So what you do is prepare a pack with different coloured backs by roughing the backs of twenty-two cards. The cards are then paired back to back so that their combined faces total twelve and minor suits are paired with minor suits and major with major. That means hearts and spades are always paired, as are clubs and diamonds. Thus, the nine of diamonds would be paired with the three of clubs etc.

This stack of cards is placed on the bottom of the face down pack. Eleven of the cards are face up. The pack to be used for the "Ice Dice" effect is prepared by having the duplicates of the eleven face up cards, in the second pack, on top in any order. They run from number two to number twelve (remember the spectator cannot choose number one, the dice theme precludes this).

Perform the "Skating on Ice" trick as explained, except that you cannot allow the audience to shuffle the cards at the beginning.

When the trick is concluded and the thought card revealed, lay it on the table face up with the remainder of the pack fanned face up beneath it. Explain that you knew all along which card the spectator would choose. As you say this, pick up your partial brainwave and fan it face down, keeping the bottom twenty-two cards tightly bunched. Close the fan and cut a quarter of the pack to the bottom. Turn the pack face up, spread it and look for the card that fronts the chosen one, ie if the chosen card is the four of hearts you would look for the eight of spades. Separate the key card from the face down one behind it and slide this card into view.

Lay the face up pack in a fan next to the other one and turn over the face down card just withdrawn and reveal it as a duplicate of the spectator's thought card.

As stated earlier, this modified brainwave can be seen apparently front and back. No doubt readers will find other applications of the idea.

BOOKS

T.K.O's (Technical Knock Outs) by Don England as told to John Mendoza. Published by the Thinker's Press U.S.A. Price £8.75.

Somewhat unusual for a magic book, this is a normal commercial paperback size, with line drawings, cartoons and an attractive cover. It has been produced by a commercial organisation and is therefore, in presentation, slightly superior to most magical literature.

More importantly, the contents. The fact that the book has a foreword by no less a person than Ed Marlo says much about the type and quality of material to expect. However, even if you are not a hardened card man, there is still plenty in this book that you can and will use. Personally, I had never heard of Don England before seeing the book. Now that I have read it. I would like to read more. He has some great, off-beat material much of which is capable of being highly comical. For some reason, his thinking reminds me a little bit of Pat Conway — or rather what Pat Conway would have been like if he had gone into card magic in a big way! He has the same sort of crazy, off-beat imagination that involves things like levitating a pack on a mini "Zombi Gimmick", penetrating a card with a cigarette and performing a mini "Zig-Zag" with one of the cards. There is also some skilled stuff as well, including a one shuffle version of "Roll Over Aces" and a beautiful vanishing pack effect.

The tricks are explained briefly with little advice about presentation. There are also one or two references to other publications, without which, you will not be able to do some of the tricks. This practice of saying "do the such and such move", and referring to another book where that particular move can be found, is deplorable in a book of this price and quality. However, it only applied to a couple of the twenty-nine items, so there is still plenty more to go at. It seems a shame though that an otherwise excellent book should be marred in this very minor way, just for the sake of saving a couple of pages of writing.

On the whole I enjoyed the book immensly, and so will anybody who likes novel card magic.

Last month we reviewed Eric Mason's 'A Peep in a Bottle' and 'Magnifique'. We omitted to say that they are both obtainable exclusively from Geoff Maltby's Repro Magic, 46 Queenstown Road, London SW8. Our apologies.

THE

agic Manuscript

David Copperfield: "A first class publication. I enjoy it and recommend it."

Daryl: "Well on its way to being the best magic magazine ever!"

Tom Mullica: "Absolutely fantastic – get it! The best thing since sliced bread . . .

Paul Harris: "I'm impressed '

Do you know of any of the above magicians? They are just four of the many who have seen the first big issue of The Magic Manuscript and like it! Some people more than just like it, too! In many ways The MM just can't be explained in an ad — so do yourself a favor and, at least, send for a copy so you can decide for yourself!

But, although it is impossible to give you an exact idea of what The MM is like in an ad, here's a bit of info. The first big issue had Bob Brown & Brenda on the cover in full color. Inside you'll find an eight page full color feature on and by Bob Brown. You'll also find The Paul Harris Close-up Forum with chitchat, articles, and magic tricks by Paul. Other close-up stars to be seen in the pages of The Forum include John Mendoza, John Cornelius, Phil Goldstein, Karrell Fox, Tom Ogden, Harry Lorayne, Tom Mullica, El Duco and many, many others!

Paul Osborne on Illusions, Bob Brown on The Business of Magic, Larry Becker on Mentalism, Edwin Hooper on England's Magic, Howard Schwarzman on "everything" — are all just a few more of the many features in The MM. Of course we've got current and honest news and reviews. Plus articles on doves, advertising and promotion, tricks, editorials, cartoons and lots of ads — and more, too!

You probably won't believe the extreme high quality of The Magic Manuscript — in both production and content — until you see it. Our first issue has 64 pages on the slickest of papers. The pages of full color are beautiful — a real first for a magic magazine! Our art work and design make the good reading all the better, too. Our second issue has Karrell Fox on the cover and promises to be even bigger and better! You don't want to miss another issue of The MM, so send in today! You can send $2 for a sample copy or request more free information, too.

The Exciting New Books from WALT LEES

"FOUR PROFESSIONAL CARD TRICKS"

Ever since it first came out, this book has received rave notices from the reviewers. Jack Griggs in 'The Budget' and Al Smith in 'Abracadabra' and 'Pabular' both said that it should be COMPULSORY READING for all cardmen.

The book teaches, in a humourous manner, EVERYTHING that you need to know to perform four OUTSTANDING pieces of sheer magic with a normal pack of cards. They are:-

'The Case of the Off-Colour Collectors'. Three selected cards placed fairly into the pack INSTANTLY appear between four different coloured kings which have been in full view throughout.

¹Computor Dating ¹. A spectator matches up the kings and queens by magic. A GREAT COMEDY PRESENTATION.

'Everywhere and Goodness Knows Where'. The Joker changes, time and again. Several of the changes happen in THE SPECTATOR'SOWN HANDS.

'Travellers Without Luggage'. This is my own version of Larry Jennings' 'Open Travellers'. At the recent Cambridge Convention I was repeatedly asked to dem this one. As one man in the crowd said, 'It's the nearest thing to real magic that I have ever seen!'

In writing this book, a lot of time and trouble was taken to give the fullest possible details of PRESENTATION, MISDIRECTION and TIMING. The thinsgs that really matter and yet are so often glossed over in magical writing.

This book has been written to enable YOU to learn and perform some truly top class magic.

Well, by the time you read this, another IBM Convention will almost be upon us. This year the venue is Great Yarmouth and this will be the first time the IBM have held their annual shindig there.

There is always a first time for everything. Do you remember the first convention you ever attended? Hold it, let me rephrase that. Have you ever attended an IBM Convention? No? Lucky you. Don't misunderstand me. I don't mean that you are lucky not to have attended a convention What I am trying to say is that you still have something to look forward to. When it happens, it will, or should be, one of the happiest experiences of your magical lifetime.

You will walk around for days in a daze. You will make friends of complete starangers. You will see and meet famous magicians at close quarters. Performers you may only have seen on television. People you may only have heard about or read about in magazines. Authors of books which are sitting at home on your shelves.

You will find out the real meaning of "a magic session". When you sit goggle eyed watching some of the close up workers in the foyer of your hotel, and you suddenly realize that it is four o'clock in the morning, stagger upstairs to your room and collapse on the bed, but not to fall asleep. Oh no. You will start looking through all the lists of tricks and books that the dealers have bombarded you with.

You'll start playing with some of the tricks you have bought. If you are sharing a room with a friend you will start comparing notes about the days happenings. Eventually you will have to go to bed and you will think to yourself"Let's get some sleep". Then you will suddenly remember that next morning at 9.30 there is a lecture. You look at your watch and say to yourself "God - it's five o'clock". Now, and only now, will you fall asleep.

But not for long, because you will be up again around 8.15 in time to have breakfast and get a good seat at that lecture. At breakfast you will stagger around the hotel dining room bleary eyed, looking for somewhere to sit. You will bid good morning to other bleary eyed strangers you have seen around the convention.

You will meet the 'Characters' of which there are many. Some of them are lovable types, and thay attend almost every convention. Everyone knows them, everyone likes them. There are others who apparently specialise in one trick only. It's their favourite and they always have it with them. And the person who introduces you is sure to say "Show us your floating toilet roll Bill". And he will.....he will.

There are of course the others, the ones to be avoided. They come in all shapes and sizes but I am not going to tell you too much about them, because one of the joys of regular conventioners is in unloading one of these bores onto people like you.

You will meet the dealers. The men and women who sell magic tricks for a living and without whom the convention just wouldn't be be the same. You will find out that they are all, without exception, after your money. But some of them give super value and some don't. You will find out that the phrase 'value for money' to magic dealers covers a multitude of whims.

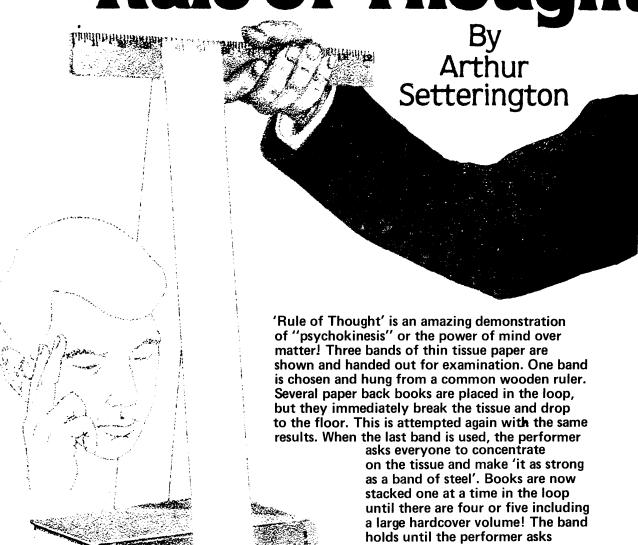

A few words of advice when buying tricks. Don't buy a trick just because you like it, buy it because you relly need it. I have a cupboard full of tricks I like, but it wasn't until much later I relized that I didn't really need them.

You will have one hell of a time, and when it is all over you will bid goodbye to people you never knew before, some of whom will become life long friends.

So you have never been to a magic convention? Lucky you

Goodbye, Patrick Page

COINTRAPTION

Johnny Johnston

This routine by J.J. was featured in his award winning close-up act at the Brighton Convention and in the Magic Circle close-up competition.

EFFECT

The general effect is a sort of reverse coins through table. Four coins held under the table come up through the table-top one at a time by means of a magical trapdoor. Finally a sponge ball also comes up through the trapdoor, but grows too big to go back.

REQUIREMENTS

The first thing that is needed is a trapdoor. This is illustrated in Fig.1. The actual size is fairly flexible, provided that the width of the door is slightly larger than the diameter of the coins to be used. The one Johnny uses is made of brass. The outer door-frame is roughly 3 inches by 2¼ inches and the door itself is 1½ inches by 1½ inches. The door is held in place by a single hinge along one of the long sides. It opens in one direction only (upwards). The underside of the door and frame have been covered with green felt to eliminate noise. This size is ideal for use with the British 10p coin. If other coins are to be used, then the dimensions will need to be altered slightly.

The door need not be of brass, however. Wood or perspex could also be used, but it does need a certain weight to work effectively. Cardboard may be alright for practise and to try out the routine but is not recommended for actual performance.

You will also require two Goshman-type spongeballs of matching colour One should be the standard 1½ inch type. The other should be the largest size obtainable.

Apart from this, five matching coins (silver) and a normal size, flexible close-up mat are all that is necessary.

SET UP

The trapdoor is on the table, beneath the mat. It is on the left hand side of the performer with the hinge upwards and to the left. The two sponge balls are on the performer's lap.

One coin is palmed in the right hand. The other four are in the performer's left.

ROUTINE

Open the left hand to show the four coins. Hold one back in the classic palm, while the other three are tossed into the right hand. Open the right hand showing four coins. This is the standard Shuttle Move.

Drop the four coins from the right hand onto the table, well to your right. Pick up one of the coins in the right hand. Show the coin and place it beneath the table top. Tap the coin against the underside of the table. Slap the left hand palm downwards on the close-up mat, roughly over the point where the trapdoor is. With the right hand, snap the coin sharply against the underside of the table and at the same time release the palmed coin in the left. Raise the left hand, showing that the coin has apparently penetrated the table top.

Bring the right hand out from beneath the table, with its coin classic palmed.

Offer to demonstrate how the trick was done. Explain that you need a trapdoor in the table top. Say that as most tables are no longer fitted with trapdoors you are forced to supply your own. Here you fold the mat in half to the right revealing the trapdoor lying on the table.

With the left hand, pick up the trapdoor by the short edges, fingers at the outer end, thumb at the inner. This is the same as the Biddle Grip with cards except that the trapdoor is held nearer to the left hand side so that the whole of its surface is visible. The grip is shown in Fig.2. Rotate the left hand at the wrist so that the trapdoor is brought to chest height and is held with the hinge nearest the floor in an upright position. This is also shown in Fig.2.

Use the right forefinger to poke the trapdoor open. Curl the other fingers inwards towards the palm as you do this, to help conceal the palmed coin. Use the right forefinger to close the trapdoor, then turn the whole thing over and lay it on the left palm, hinge side down, to show that there is nothing concealed on the underside. Do not say that this is the reason, just do it. You are now going to load the palmed coin beneath the trapdoor as you turn it right way up and place it on the table. Johnny uses a variation of a move described by Bob Ostin in his book, "Fingertip Fantasies". The way that it works in this routine is as follows:

The trapdoor lies, hinge side down on the left palm. The right hand, with the coin classic palmed, seizes the door-frame by the short edges (Biddle Grip). This is shown in Fig.3. The whole thing is now turned over, using the right long edge as a fulcrum. The direction of the turn is shown by the arrow in Fig.3. At the finish the trapdoor is hinge side up, lying on the left fingers.

During the turning over of the door-frame, the coin is allowed to drop from the right palm onto the left fingers. This part of the action is hidden by the back of the right hand. At the finish the trapdoor lies on top of the coin. This move was originally intended to load a coin beneath a card. It is ideal for this trick.

With the right hand, lift the trapdoor off the left fingers, taking the coin beneath it and place it down on the table. It should be placed left of centre and well to the front. As you pick the trapdoor up, the right thumb goes on the centre of the door on the top (hinge) side. The other fingers curl underneath and support the hidden coin.

Place the trapdoor down in the position stated above. The hinge side should be to the rear (performer's side). Straighten up the close-up mat and offer to demonstrate how the trapdoor works.

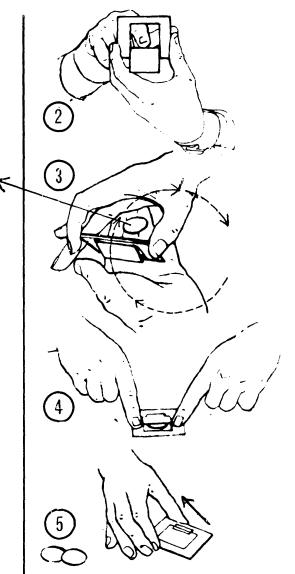

Pick up one of the so far unused coins with the right hand and fake transfer it to the left. Any fake transfer will do, provided that it leaves the coin classic palmed in the right hand. Alternatively the coin could be finger palmed in the right hand and transferred to the classic palm during the next few actions.

The empty left hand goes beneath the table top and taps with the knuckles on the underside. If the performer wears a finger ring on that hand, it can be tapped against the table, giving the impression of a coin.

Bring the empty left hand out from under the table. Position the left and right hands on the short edges of the door-frame as shown in Fig.4. Remember that the right hand has a coin palmed.

Press down on the door-frame with both fingers, simultaneously. This will cause the door to open slightly as it pushes against the coin beneath. As the door begins to open, use the right forefinger to lever it completely open. A coin is revealed framed in the opening.

Pick up the coin, in the left hand, and display it. Pick up the trapdoor with the right hand, by the right corner of the actual open door. That is the corner at the end nearest to yourself.

The left hand places its coin to one side, near the first coin to penetrate the table. The right hand displays the door for a few moments, then returns it to the table, in more or less the same position from which it was picked up. The right forefinger flicks the door shut.

The next two actions take place at the same time, the larger movement of the left hand helping to divert attention from the smaller one of the right.

Firstly the movement of the left hand. It crosses over to the right side of the table and picks up one of the, as yet unused, coins. The coin is picked up by the edges between the fingers and thumb, so that when the hand rotates to a back up position it will be ready for the "French Drop".

The right hand, meanwhile, has just finished putting the door down and closing it. It now draws the trapdoor towards the back of the table, loading the palmed coin at the same time. The position of the right hand and the manner of holding the door are shown in Fig. 5. With the door so held, simply let the coin drop from the palm, onto the table, then move the door backwards to cover it. Do not look down as you do this move. Keep looking at the audience and talking about the next coin that is going to pass through the trapdoor. If anybody is watching the right hand, it will appear to have moved backwards slightly to avoid colliding with the left.

Hold the left hand's coin, face on to the audience. Place the right forefinger on the extreme right edge of the coin and rotate it 180 degrees in the direction of the arrow shown in Fig.6. This appears to be a way of showing that the coin is unfaked or whatever. More importantly, it justifies or at least provides a reason for holding the coin by the edges.

Mention next, that you can put the trapdoor anywhere that you like. As you say this, move the right forefinger to the centre of the rear edge of the door-frame. With this finger, daintily push the trapdoor forward across the table top to a point slightly right of centre and well to the front. The concealed coin will slide along quite happily beneath the trapdoor.

The right hand comes back and apparently removes the coin from the left. Really the "French Drop" is executed and the coin is finger palmed in the left hand. The empty right hand goes beneath the table and pretends to pass the coin up through the table top. Again, if a ring is worn on that hand, it can be used to advantage to simulate the sound of the coin striking the underside of the table top.

Bring the right hand out from beneath the table, allowing it to be seen empty. Place both forefingers in the Fig.4 position. This time the coin will be hidden by the left curled fingers. Press down and open the trapdoor exactly as before, revealing the coin.

Now comes a very clever loading move, which incorporates a subtle throw off. Leave the visible coin in position, do not remove it from the trapdoor. Refer to Fig.7. The right hand takes the outer long edge of the door-frame as shown in the figure and using the rear long edge as a fulcrum, rotates the frame backwards through 180 degrees, causing it to end up hinge side down on the table with the door closed. Notice the position also of the left hand in the figure.

As soon as the trapdoor is upside down on the table, it will be in the position shown in Fig.8.

At this point the right hand moves to the long edge farthest from the performer and again rotates the trapdoor on the rear long edge exactly as before, but this time, because of the position of the left hand, the trapdoor ends up on the left fingers, covering the concealed coin. It will, of course be hinge side uppermost and the coin will be directly beneath the actual door. The whole thing will now be in position to go into the move shown in Fig.9. The hinge will be more or less on the left hand side.

Use the left fingers to slightly open the door. With the right hand, take hold of the partly open door as shown in Fig.9. The thumb is underneath the door, clipping the coin against it. The fingers are above.

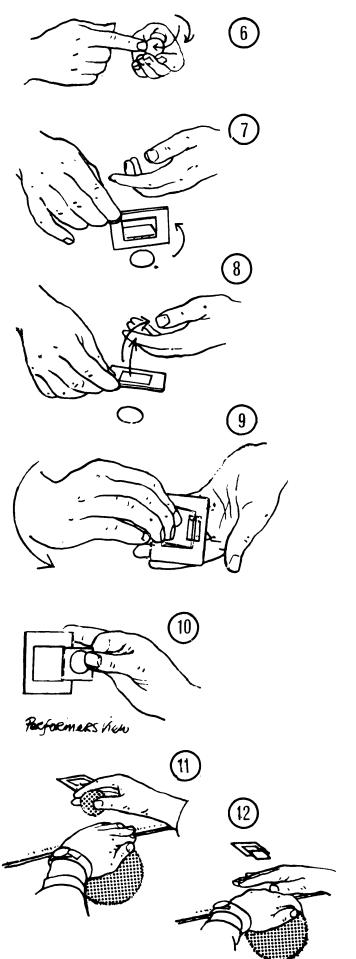

By rotating the right hand at the wrist in the direction of the arrow shown in Fig.9, the trapdoor is lifted out of the left hand to the position shown in Fig.9 (performer's view). Allow both hands to be seen empty. This is a very subtle throw off, because for some reason, it seems impossible for anything to be concealed. The principle is rather like that used in the old "Flipover Box".

Tilt the right hand so that the frame swings shut until it hits the thumb. Remove the whole lot with the left hand, fingers at the front, thumb at the rear. The thumb clips the coin behind the door, while the fingers completely close the whole thing up. Place the trapdoor on the table, to the left and near the rear. The hinge is towards the performer.

The right hand picks up the last coin and the performer offers to explain, how it is that the coins are able to come up through the trapdoor without being seen.

Explain that the reason is because you are able to make them invisible. As you say this apparently pick up the last coin with the right hand and transfer it to the left. Really this is a fake transfer and the coin is lapped. Use any method of doing this that you can do well. You can either lap the coin before apparently placing it in the left hand, or you can fake transfer it to the left and lap it from the right hand afterwards. Both methods have their advocates. The important thing is for both your hands to be completely empty, while the audience believe the coin to be in the left hand.

Tell the audience that the coin is now invisible. Open the left hand, showing it empty, but act as if it contained a coin. Place the empty left hand under the table and in the process, pick up the small sponge ball. Tap the left hand under the table (note: do not use the finger ring, if you are wearing one, to simulate the sound of a coin. This would be a dead giveaway!). Bring the left hand out from under the table, keeping the sponge ball concealed in the finger palm and place the hands in the position shown in Fig.4. Press down on the door-frame with the right and left forefingers as done previously, causing the door to open.

Then repeat the backward loading movement which was shown with a coin in Fig.7 to 9. This time you are loading a sponge ball but the method is identical, except that you cannot follow through to the Fig.10 position. When you reach the position in Fig.9, simply compress the ball against the underside of the trapdoor with the left fingers. Do not allow the door to open as in Fig.9.

The right hand takes the trapdoor, with the sponge concealed beneath, from the left. The left hand then, with a large sweeping action, brushes all the coins to one side, while the right hand quietly places the trapdoor on the table. The sponge is beneath the trapdoor and squashed flat by pressure of the right fingers. The larger movement of the left hand diverts attention from the right anyway. And the audience think that the trick is over so they are not paying particular attention.

Look down at the trapdoor and as you do so, slide the right fingers off the actual opening part and onto the frame only. This will allow the door to burst open and the sponge to pop up. A sudden and surprising climax.

Under cover of this unexpected appearance, the left hand quietly drops out of sight below the table top and seizes the large sponge, by nipping a piece of it in the thumb crotch. The hand then comes and rests on the table top as in Fig.11. The sponge is just below the spectators line of vision.

The performer pretends to be surprised by the sudden appearance of the small sponge and says something like, "I don't know where that came from! But it won't go back there... because it's too big!" As this line is delivered the following actions take place:

The performer takes the ball in the right hand and moves it back across the table until it contacts the left. He does not look at the ball during this action but keeps his attention fixed on the open trapdoor as though wondering where the ball came from.

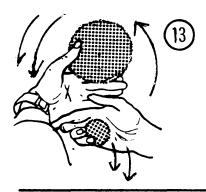

When the right hand meets the left, the position will be that shown in Fig.12. Notice in the figure, how the right hand is beginning to compress the ball.

When the hands are in the Fig.12 position, the performer leans forward to get a closer look at the trapdoor. As he does so, both hands quickly turn palm upwards as a single unit i.e. the right forefinger remains in contact with the left little finger throughout the action. This rotation of the hands is shown in Fig.13 and during the action the small ball is lapped.

The larger ball will come into sight, but will not be noticed for a few moments because the performer is leaning forward and attention is on the trapdoor. Also the audience are not really expecting anything more to happen. Even if they were, they would expect the door to be the centre of the action, not the sponge ball.

The switch of the balls is timed to take place during the line of patter given above. On the punchline, "...because it's too big!" the left hand moves over the opening in the rapdoor with the large ball and makes a pretence of finding it impossible to push the ball through. A fitting climax to a routine that has proven its worth over many performances, both before magicians and laymen.

EDITORIAL

Well, here it is. The first ever non-card issue of Pabular. They said it could not be done! Well, we have done it. Next month, no doubt we shall return to sanity, in the meantime I would like to thank those contributors who made a special effort to supply the material for this issue. Well done lads!

We are frequently being criticised for including too many card tricks. But we can only publish that which is sent in by our contributors and if most of them send in card material, the reason must be that most of them want to read card material. Our aim is to publish what you want to read. If you want to read more coin magic, great!! Send it in and if it is good enough we shall be only too pleased to print it. At the end of the day, it is the generous people, who are prepared to share their ideas with the rest of us that dictate our policies. So if you feel that we are missing out on the sort of magic that you would like to read, get out a sheet of paper or a cassette and send us some. Let us think positive!

What close-up magic needs these days is a bit more positive thinking. Especially is this true in the U.K. One group of negative thinkers, who a lot of us are getting tired of, are the "Close-up will never be commercial in Britain" brigade. These dismal jimmies sit round in corners at magical clubs, bewailing the fact that things are different in America and it will never be like that over here. When talking about restaurant work, they trot out the tired old cliche, "If they're not busy they can't afford you and if they are busy they don't need you!" No doubt this was quite amusing, when it was first said, but I am sure that it was never meant to be taken seriously. True, things are different in the U.S. but only because the magicians over there have made it that way. It did not just happen on its own. It happened because enough people wanted it to happen, badly enough to get up on their feet and do something about it.

Thank goodness there are a few people in this country, who have also been prepared to do the same thing. Most of them are comparatively young (although not all). Rovi and Mick Chardo have been doing it for years. If they can get work, then work must be there to be got! The field is wide open at the moment.

I am sure that all over the country there are success stories. If so, we would love to know about them. Why not drop me a line sometime and tell me about your successes in promoting close-up magic. Let us stamp out the defeatists once and for all!

One person, who certainly is not a deafitist, in any sense of the term, is Gordon Bruce. He was in town recently and showed me a card trick. (We can mention them in this issue — we are just not explaining any). In effect, a red backed pack of cards was ribbon spread, face up across the table. He then pushed out one card at random from the centre of the spread and invited me to push out four others of my choice, all face up. I was then told to memorise the five cards, which were replaced in the spread, still face up. The pack was squared, turned face down and respread across the table. Five cards had blue backs and, you've guessed it, these were the ones that I freely chose. A sort of impromptu "Brainwave". He challenged me to work it out and I have come up with a method, which he says is not the same. Gordon will not tell me how he does it. So if anybody has any ideas or can think of a method, please let me know, especially if it turns out to be better than his! I forgot to mention, no fake cards are used.

Have just had a letter from Ken Brooke. Ken was always a good friend to Pabular, when he had his studio in Wardour Street. In his letter, he takes me to task for saying that the "Nemo Card Castle" was invented solely by Peter Kane.

Ken says that he did in fact purchase the original from Peter. He then passed it to Jim Hooper. In Ken's own words, "...although he used part of Peter's idea, it was Jim Hooper's invention."

Also on the subject of errors/mistakes, Andrew Pargeter telephoned to say that the item published under the heading "Tenkai Cop" in Vol.6 No.9, had after all been in print before. It seems that a couple of years back, Andy worked out the idea and mentioned it to Fred Robinson in a private letter — one not intended for publication. Fred thought the idea was a good one and assumed that it would be O.K. if he passed it on to me to use in Pabular. In the meantime, Andy, who had never expected to see it in print, came across the same thing in one of Harry Lorayne's books. The move is also used in Gert Malmros' "Disappearing Aces", published recently.

Andrew has asked me to make it quite clear that the item was not intended to be a contribution to Pabular. So please do not write and accuse him of plagiarism. Also apologies to Andrew and the originator of the move, whoever that is.

CAMBRIDGE CLOSE-UP

It was Sunday 28th, June that the Cambridge Pentacle Club held their Midsummer Convention. Roy Gilbert, Dara Kaka and their many helpers are to be congratulated on an excellent day, which to an outsider, appeared well organised and smooth running.

Obviously Pabular, being a specialist magazine, only reports those events of particular interest to close-up enthusiasts. For this reason, no mention can be made of how good Billy McComb was, or what a sterling job Len Blease did as compere. Neither are we permitted to review the acts of Klingsor, Colinski and Flame, and San Yen. The comedy of Terry Burgess and Alan Merril will have to be ignored, as will Julie Llusion and Dennis and Jean Collins. All of which is a pity. The excellent lectures of Richard Stupple and Klingsor will have to go by without even a mention.

Perhaps we can sneak in a mention of Billy McComb though. Although working on the stage a good ninety percent of what he does is really close-up magic. The coin in bottle, the gipsy thread, the linking finger rings. Even the larger things - the egg bag with a shot glass and the sucker silks can be done close-up. When he comes on, everything he needs is in his pockets and when he goes off nothing is left behind. I suspect that he can work completely surrounded and to any audience from two upwards to many hundreds without changing a thing. Angles are not important not is distance. This must be the ultimate in modern commercial performing. By the way, I forgot to mention that he is entertaining as well — still I expect most Pabular readers will know that already!

Now to the close-up proper. There were two sessions with three artistes taking part. Each performer worked once, to an audience of about sixty people. Once I got into trouble for saying about a show that the audience were in tiers, but I expect that you know what I mean.

The first performer was Mark Leveridge from Bristol. His magic is fairly lightweight but extremely well presented. He has the knack of winning an audience over, in a deceptively effortless way. His presentation is clean cut and has that all important clarity, both of diction and movement that ensure that every effect obtains the maximum impact. Working mostly with cards and ropes and rings he scored well and retired to good applause.

Vic Allen, the madman from Clacton came on next, working with only a pack of cards and doing exactly what he would do for laymen in a commercial show. Vic's personality and approach are the show. What he does hardly matters. He had the audience laughing heartily and retired to loud applause.

Finally came Roger Crosthwaite, another crazy performer. Wearing his dog collar and the sort of hat that only vicars seem able to find, he very quickly subjected the audience to the full force of the Crosthwaite treatment. Balloons had to be kissed, a false moustache is donned for some reason or other. Oranges and boots are hurled at the audience and salt is poured over everyone and everything. In the end, he turns himself into a bishop and one wonders why he stops short at sprouting wings and a halo and producing a harp! Along the way though, we do see some immaculate card handling, including the Think-a-Card, Card to Case loading move and the use of the Hung Card Servant all described in the "Commercial Card Magic of Roger Crosthwaite". The audience loved it and it made a fitting close to the show.

Two business cards are shown and stapled together at each end. A banknote is borrowed, folded into a narrow strip and slotted between the cards. A spectator holds each end of the note behind his back. The performer goes behind the spectator and in a second, removes the cards, still securely fastened together. The spectator can examine the cards and the note. Incidently, the business cards can be signed by the spectator to eliminate the possibility of substitution.

REQUIREMENTS

Some business cards.

A pocket stapler.

A banknote, either supplied by the performer or borrowed from the spectator.

WORKING

The performer apparently takes two business cards. Really he takes three. The best way to do this is shown in Fig.1. Take out the stack and double lift two cards with the right hand, holding them by the short ends. Then table the stack and lift off a single card with the left hand, holding it in a manner corresponding to that, in which the other hand holds the double. If the cards are concaved slightly, the double will not be noticed.

Place the cards together, face to face so that all the printing is on the inside and staple the ends together. When stapling, the single face down card should be on top and the double face up card(s) on the bottom. At this point, you may, if desired, have the top card signed. Hold it yourself, while this is being done.

Take the banknote and fold it lengthwise, until it forms a narrow strip. Thread this strip between the double card(s) on the bottom of the stapled packet.

Hand the whole thing to the spectator, requesting him to hold the note by both ends behind his back (alternatively a cloth could be placed over his hands). The performer goes behind the spectator (who reaches beneath the cloth) and creases the bottom card (the one securing the banknote) lengthwise. This folding of the card, followed by a slight downward pull, will cause it to be released from the staples. It can be quickly folded up and disposed of, either by sleeving or finger palming.

The two remaining stapled cards can be handed to a spectator, who may examine them to his hearts content.

HONG KONG COIN VISIBLE RELEASE

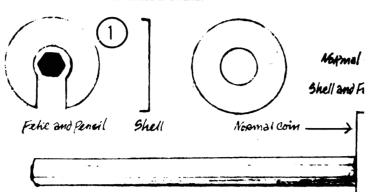

Being the visible escape of a coin from a pencil, the coin is the Hong Kong or Chinese coin type with a hole in the middle. Three such coins are used in the effect, the three identical coins are placed onto a pencil. . .on the word of command the middle coin of the three visibly penetrates the pencil leaving just two coins on the pencil in conclusion.

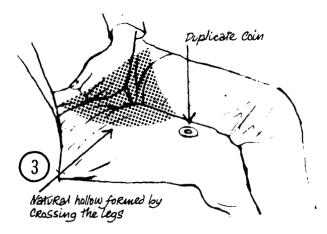

To understand the principle of the release a look at Fig.1 shows the feke and the pencil. the pencil must be hexagonal. Now with the feke only and the hexagonal pencil. balance the feke in the position shown on the flat side of the pencil. The feke will remain in this position so long as the hands are still. Now slowly revolve the pencil in the fingers and almost immediately the coin will turn with the pencil and because the weight of the feke is at the bottom the feke will release. . . this is the principle of the release.

REQUIREMENTS

One pencil hexagonal type. Two normal HONG COIN COINS. One feke as Fig.1.

One Shell to match the two normal coins and to house the feke also the standard coins. i.e. The standard coins plus feke are all the same diameter. The shell is so made to suit and take both feke and standard coins.

PRESENTATION

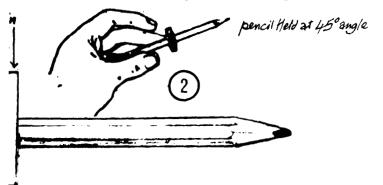

The feke and shell are placed together in the match pocket on the right side (the pocket inside the right side coat pocket). . the remaining two normal coins are placed in the pocket proper.

The performer should be seated at the close-up table.

The pencil is taken into the left fingers, Fig.2, and the right hand reaches into the right coat pocket removing a normal coin. this is placed onto the pencil after first showing the coin to the audience. Next the feke and shell are removed from match pocket. . . shell side to audience this unit is placed feke side down on top of the first coin on the pencil. . . at this stage the coins and pencil may be shown all around. . . finally the last coin is removed from the right coat pocket and this is placed onto the pencil so that we have a position as in Fig.2.

Note: The angle of forty five degrees is important at this stage. . the coins are allowed to drop onto the fingers of the left hand. . pressure of these fingers stops the feke from releasing prematurely. . or rather the weight of the coins on the fingers prevents release.

Now with the left hand holding the pencil and coins as Fig.2 the left hand slowly brings the pencil to a horizontal position. . this is the position for the release. By slowly revolving the fingers the coins will separate and during this separation the feke will drop from the pencil. . as soon as the coin drops from the pencil the left hand is brought to a vertical position whereupon the shell will now fall over the coin nearest the fingers to leave just two coins on the pencil.

At the conclusion of the release the released coin needs to be displayed to the audience or preferably examined. . this may be accomplished as follows:

As this routine is performed seated at the close-up table, the left leg should be crossed over the right leg forming a hollow within which items may be lapped, in this case the feke coin is dropped into the hollow. . the pencil being held in the correct position so the feke will arrive in the hollow when released. However, a duplicate coin is in position between the legs under the left leg, at the bend in the leg, Fig.3. All that is required of the performer, . is that the pencil should be correctly positioned so as to release the coin over the hollow formed by the legs and as the coin drops the right hand immediately picks up the duplicate coin from the lap dropping this coin onto the table for all to see or examine. The two coins left on the pencil are not suspect.

REVIEWS

CASSETTES

"A Session with John Mendoza" (3 Cassettes price £7 each U.K., £7.50 Europe and 15 dollars U.S.A.). Available from Martin Breese.

Ninety-five per cent of the material on these three tapes is card magic. There are a couple of coin items, both of which are first class but the tape is primarily angled towards the card worker. Being an enthusiast for this type of magic, I naturally had a lot of fun playing around with the various items described. This is purely a teaching tape, where the mechanics of the trick are explained and very little advice given as to presentation. In other words, it is orientated towards the student, who wants to learn to do some new tricks.

It is very difficult to analyse Mendoza's work. Much of the material is not new and yet he does seem able to give it that extra something. Perhaps his talent is for streamlining, that is simplifying the mechanics and getting straight to the effect. Most of the effects are very direct and to the point and the mechanics are pretty basic (a good Zarrow Shuffle and Double Lift will see you through most of the items). As Mendoza says on the tape, most of his magic is not difficult but it only works effectively if it is done well.

I was a little surprised by his continual assertion that the magic on these cassettes is suitable for commercial situations. It is certainly not the sort of material generally associated with that kind of work. However card buffs at all levels should find something of interest.

TRICKS

"Spectacle" by Phil Goldstein. Price £3. Available from Martin Breese.

All readers should be familiar with the work of one of magic's most prolific inventors. Phil Goldstein is one of those people, who seem to have a bottomless pit of novel magic. The thing about Phil is that his standard is so consistantly high.

This is a novel packet trick with four cards, in which the backs change colour one by one. At the finish the audience catch you trying to conceal an extra card in your hand. However, this turns out to be a picture of a pair of spectacles, which you need to do the trick. The spectacles are on a card with two holes stamped through it, so that there could be no possibility of it playing any part in the mechanics of the effect.

The special cards are good quality "Aviator" backs and the instructions are well written and nicely presented in the form of a four-page booklet.

BOOKS

"Four Professional Card Tricks" from the Repertoire of Walt Lees. Price £3.95 plus postage, U.K. 25p. Obtainable from the author at address shown on back of Pabular.

Obviously I cannot review my own book, so I have reproduced a letter from Al Smith, who had one of the first copies.

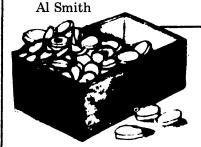

Dear Walt: 'Thanks' for sending me a copy of "Four Professional Card Tricks". I needed a bit of time to go through it. I have to say that it's one of the best books I've ever read. And the key word there is 'read'. Most of us tend, not unnaturally, to skip technical descriptions until the moment of truth — that is, when we are actually learning the move or whatever. But, due to the way you have tackled the subject, I was able to read through the book from start to finish, and enjoy every page. You've given so much information, advice, hints, tips, and just good old fashioned common sense (which, sad to say is not always so common) that if you had left out the tricks, the book would still have been a hit.

And this is not just flannel. I'm sorry the fotoz didn't quite turn out to be as perfect as they might, but you can't win 'em all. A bit sad that anyone glancing at the book might be put off a bit by this fall-off in production. If so, their loss. I know a bit about the problems of having suitable fotoz taken, and their subsequent reproduction, so I know the troubles you must have had. Oh well.

No comment about the actual trix themselves. They're all familiar plots, the handling is very clean, almost antiseptically so, but, again, it's the way you set about showing how they should be performed. But I'm getting nowhere, here. If you really want me to write an appraisal of the book, just say so. Otherwise let me just say that you have a real winner here, otherwise I'll be going round in circles forever.

Before I do finish though, let me just say that your comments on 'Tilt' and the 'One Hand Top Card Palm' are the most valuable tit-bits I've come across in a long time. Should be compulsory reading. Great stuff.

PRECOINITION

Phil Goldstein

(Phil sent in two versions of this excellent effect. The first requires a fake, which is not readily obtainable in U.K. The second eliminates this and can be made up by anybody who care to. -Ed.)

The mentalist displays a prediction message. A small box is now introduced, and a spectator invited to look inside. The performer comments, "Inside the box you will notice that there are various coins from different countries around the world. In a moment, you will select one of these coins. I have attempted to predict your choice. I am convinced that my prediction is correct; this in spite of the fact that you may take as much time as you wish in selecting a coin. Please, look them over. You may recognise some of the currencies represented. Your personal feelings concerning the country of origin for any particular coin need not sway your decision. When you have made up your mind to choose a coin, please remove it from the box — but, for the time being, keep your selection hidden in your fist, and then close the box."

This done, the prediction message is handed to a spectator, to read aloud. The note says, "I predict that the coin selected will be an Italian fifty lira piece." The spectator is asked to show the coin he/she is holding — and, in fact, it is the one predicted.

GAFFED BOX VERSION

The routine just described is a presentational variation on the Corinda Money Box, which is described in the fifth installment of the classic "Thirteen Steps to Mentalism". In the original version, this electronic box is used to secretly inform the performer as to which of four coins in the box has been removed by the spectator. The basic routine, and several alternate presentations offered in the book, are demonstrations of an apparent telepathic nature.

Here, the approach is for a test in precognition. The box, as stated, holds only four coins. The patter, however, is designed to suggest to the audience (other than the participating spectator) that the box is full of many different coins. Thus, instead of the one-in-four odds actually existing, the audience assumes much higher odds to be involved. This aspect was used in the original Corinda presentation. By using a mixture of coins from different countries, the implied diversity of the spectator's choice is expanded.

With the box, as per the details in Tony Corinda's book, the performer is able to know which of the coins has been chosen before the spectator reveals that information, Thus, obviously, only a four-way set of outs is needed. The simplest approach is probably to use two double-envelopes, one in either side of a Himber Wallet. With this set-up, the envelope is initially displayed in the wallet. After the selection is made (but before it is revealed), the proper envelope is taken from the wallet, and the proper message taken from the envelope, and handed to a spectator. At this point, all attention is on the prediction message and the coin in the first spectator's fist. Both of those items are clean. The rest is in the presentation.

NO GAFF VERSION

I must add that there are, of course, other methods to secretly learn which coin has been removed from the box. In addition to Corinda's electronic approach, there are ways to rig a similar box using magnetism, and/or other similar principles. However, it is possible to perform the above routing without a gaffed box.

Bear in mind that the audience believes that the box contains a large assortment of coins, thanks both to the implications of the size of the box (it is large enough to hold dozens of coins), and your spoken suggestions—that there are various different countries and values represented.

Therefore, you can easily present the effect with an ordinary box — say, one which held cigars. The patter is given as in the original routine. The spectator removes a coin from the box, and holds it in his/her fist. The audience, unable to see into the box, assumes that there were many to choose from.

You now walk over to the box, and openly raise the lid. Peering inside, you comment, "From these varied possibilities — different countries, different values — you have selected a coin." In the brief moment it takes to say this, you discern which of the four coins is missing. The audience will assume that such a brief glance into the box would not let you know which coin had been taken — after all, who could spot which coin was missing from such a large gathering?

Yes, some few critical spectators may think you have just learned the identity of the chosen coin. Too, the participating spectator is aware of the situation (as he/she knows there are only four coins in the box). However, don't forget that this is a prediction effect. So far as the audience knows, you have already committed yourself in writing to a single outcome. Thus, knowing the chosen coin would be of no apparent help here. The effect perceived by the majority of the audience will be the same as in the version with the Corinda device.

In either case, the true strength of the method lies not in the technical methodology, but rather in what the audience believes they are perceiving. Thus, it is up to the performer, though presentational management, to sell the effect to its best advantage.

THE DRINKS ARE ON ME

Dick Turpin

Although this method of producing a glass of liquid is not new, it is rarely seen these days. In Dick Turpin's hands, it is a real stunner and never fails to get a huge reaction from any audience. Like most of Dick's magic, there is some very sly misdirection. Acting is more important than technical skill.

EFFECT

The magician places a coin on the palm of his hand and covers it with an empty silk handkerchief. The coin suddenly transforms itself into a glass of wine or beer.

REQUIREMENTS

A wineglass or stemmed beer glass and a tightly fitting rubber cover such as those sold by most magic dealers.

A holder for the glass. This consists of a strip of flat elastic sewn at either end to the waistcoat. It should more or less run along the top of the lower left hand waistcoat pocket and be of such a size that the glass can be inserted, upside down as shown in Fig.1.

Ensure that the glass is far enough back, to be concealed by the jacket, when the latter is unbuttoned. Dick mentioned here, that he has sometimes made the holder with round elastic. When this is done, the ends of the elastic should be knotted, to prevent them being tugged free of the stitches.

When a waistcoat is not worn, it is possible to dispense with the elastic holder altogether. Dick sometimes does this and simply sticks the stem of the glass into his belt as in Fig.2. This, however, is a more difficult variation as the glass is harder to free.

A large silk handkerchief or headscarf and a coin.

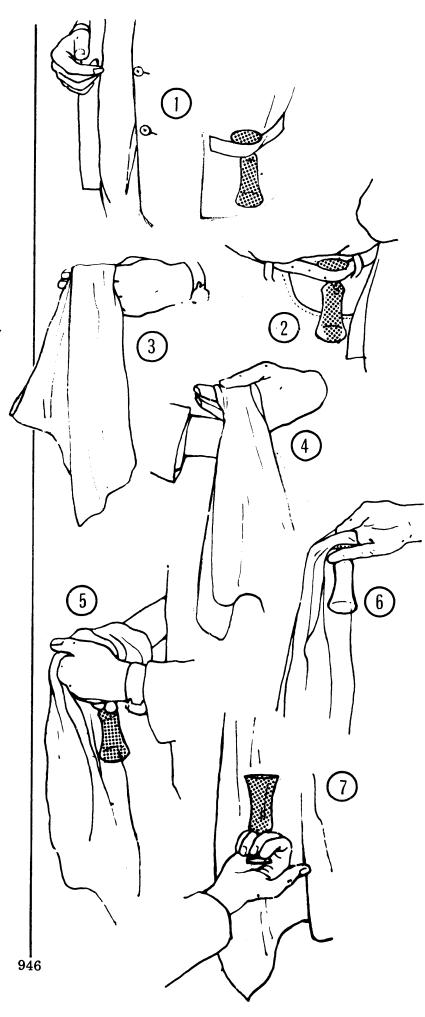

SET UP

Fill the glass with liquid and place the rubber cover in position. Wipe the outside of the glass and cover until they are quite dry. Then insert the glass, upside down, into the holder as in Fig.1.

Tuck the handkerchief into the outer breast pocket. Have the coin in the left hand trouser pocket. Unbutton the jacket and you are ready to start.

WORKING

First remove the handkerchief from the pocket and place it into the left hand as in Fig.3. It is clipped by one corner only, in the thumb crotch. The bulk of the handkerchief is draped over the back of the hand (audience side).

Say that you are going to demonstrate the amazing vanishing coin trick and as the coin is going to disappear, you had better use your own money.

With the right hand, feel in the right trouser pocket as though looking for a coin. Acting is most important here. The audience must really believe that you are genuinely searching for a coin. If the actions are in any way exaggerated or over emphasised, they will be tipped off. At the same time, it must be made clear to them, what you are doing. Behave as though you expect to find a coin there.

After a moment or two, realise that you do not have a coin in that pocket and bring out the empty right hand. Without pausing, the hand goes straight to the lower right hand waistcoat pocket and feels in there. Appear slightly puzzled that there is no coin and withdraw the hand, still empty.

Quickly reach across with the same hand to the holder and remove the glass, still keeping it upside down. The handkerchief screens this action from the audience as Fig.4 shows. To them, it will look as if you are simply searching in the pocket on that side for a coin. This is why acting is so important. There are no moves as such. You simply take the glass and hold it behind the silk as in Fig.5 (an exposed view of Fig.4). It is clipped by the stem between the second and third fingers.

Move the left hand back slightly, so that it can place the handkerchief onto the right fingers. The folds will conceal the glass. Fig.6 shows the position. You must not look down at your hands as this move is done. It should look as though you have merely passed the handkerchief into the other hand, to leave the left free to feel in the trouser pocket on that side.

Reach into the left hand trouser pocket and remove the coin. Appear relieved that you have been able to find it. Act but do not overact. Lay the coin on the exposed palm of the right hand—the silk should be merely draped over the fingers and clipped against them by the right thumb.

Take the corner of the silk from between the right thumb and fingers with the left hand. Move it upwards and backwards as though to cover the coin. As you do so, curl the right fingers tightly in towards the palm. This will have the effect of causing the glass to turn upright. The base of the glass should rest on the palm of the hand, covering the coin. Fig.7 shows the position.

Release the handkerchief from the left hand, so that it falls over the top of the glass. For the first time, the audience will be aware that there is something beneath the handkerchief that they did not know about.

Bring the left hand up to the rim of the glass and remove the silk, peeling away the rubber cover in the process. The audience will be confronted with the spectacle of a full glass of liquid, seemingly from nowhere. As the foot of the glass is on top of the coin and the fingers are curled over, holding it in place, the coin cannot be seen.

While all eyes are on the glass, lift it up with the left hand saying, "Cheers" and take a drink. Meanwhile the right turns back outwards and palms the coin.

Take the handkerchief from the left hand with the right and stuff it into the trouser pocket, getting rid of the coin at the same time.

H's a Jack in a Box - or any other cond!

So now you've been to your first I.B.M. Convention, and if you don't know what I'm talking about read last month's column. Exciting wasn't it? Or was it? I personally ALWAYS enjoy I.B.M. Conventions. I usually make some money, meet old friends, make one or two new ones, see a few magic acts I have never seen before and occasionally see an act I never want to see again.

The Page boy speaks....

All of those things were a reality at Great Yarmouth. It was a quite convention with no real knockout act which we hadn't seen before. The most enjoyable act for me was Eddie Schuyer. I remember him from many years ago when he was billed as Eddie Schuyer & Partner and I remember two distinctly different acts.

But the act he brought to Great Yarmouth was something again. There were four people in the act. Eddie & Partner plus two of the loveliest longest legged, smartest, beautifully turned out young females I have seen in a magic act for a long time. Having said that, let me not undersell Partner. She may not be as young as the other two but she is just as attractive and longy leggy as they come.

The really interesting thing about this act is the fact that all four of them perform magic. There is no doubt as to who is the guv'nor, but to see four people all performing magic in one act is quite something. Thank you Eddie Schuyer, thank you Partner, and most important thank you long legs, all four of you.

For the close uppers, John Cornelius and Tommy Wonder were probably the standouts. No doubt there were others but I didn't catch them. Of the commercial items being offered I am afraid I must plump for an oldie, namely Ted Biet's Rising Card Gimmick. This has been around a long time but still looks good when handled properly.

The most exciting act of the convention must have been Geraldini from Norwich. In fact a local act. Well. .wouldn't you call nearly being blasted out of your seat exciting? And I was sitting in the back row. The people down front are still recovering from the fall-out. He took four curtain calls.

Change of subject. Wanna hear a funny, but one hundred percent true story? Honest, cross my heart, it really happened exactly as you are about to read, just ten days ago. Here we go.

I had just finished the act, the audience were applauding, the M.C. marches out on to the floor and in an aside, unheard by the audience behind the tumultuous ovation I was receiving, he says, "Don't go off. .stay there." So I stayed there.

From now on you are listening to the M.C's dialogue:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I must apologise for a slight interruption in the show at this point."

(He turns to me)

"Patrick. . . I want you to do me a personal favour. There's a guy over there (he points to a spectator) who has been telling all his friends over there that you can't show those steel rings all single and separate. . .What I want you to do is to bring him up here on to the floor and show those rings to him one at a time and prove to him once and for all that they are separate."

END OF M.C's ANNOUNCEMENT

So there...get out of that...if you can. In fact it was a compliment from the M.C. in that I'd worked with him many times and he'd watched me perform the ring routine countless times and he, naturally, assumed that the rings were single and separate...which is as it should be.

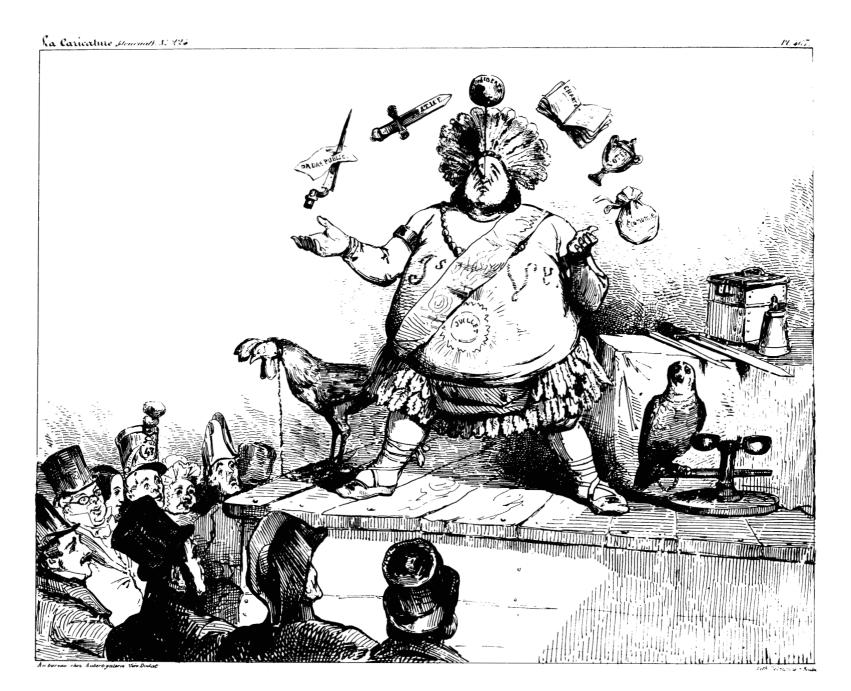

But I was still stuck with this problem. What happened was that although I had no idea what I was going to do I did invite the spectator out on to the floor, but by now, having been pinpointed by the M.C. HE WAS TOO EMBARRASSED TO LEAVE HIS SEAT. Inwardly I thanked God, said a fast goodnight and beat a hasty retreat to the dressing room.

When the M.C. came off he apologised to me and added. . . "but the guy got me so mad I wanted you to prove to HIM that the rings were separate."

Goodbye,

Magic Manuscript

David Copperfield: "A first class publication. I enjoy it and recommend it."

Daryl: "Well on its way to being the best magic magazine ever!"

Tom Mullica: "Absolutely fantastic – get it! The best thing since sliced bread . . .

Paul Harris: "I'm impressed"

Do you know of any of the above magicians? They are just four of the many who have seen the first big issue of The Magic Manuscript and like it! Some people more than just like it, too! In many ways The MM just can't be explained in an ad — so do yourself a favor and, at least, send for a copy so you can decide for yourself!

But, although it is impossible to give you an exact idea of what The MM is like in an ad, here's a bit of info. The first 'big issue had Bob Brown & Brenda on the cover in full color. Inside you'll find an eight page full color feature on and by Bob Brown. You'll also find The Paul Harris Close-up Forum with chitchat, articles, and magic tricks by Paul. Other close-up stars to be seen in the pages of The Forum include John Mendoza, John Cornelius, Phil Goldstein, Karrell Fox, Tom Ogden, Harry Lorayne, Tom Mullica, El Duco and many, many others!

Paul Osborne on Illusions, Bob Brown on The Business of Magic, Larry Becker on Mentalism, Edwin Hooper on England's Magic, Howard Schwarzman on "everything" — are all just a few more of the many features in The MM. Of course we've got current and honest news and reviews. Plus articles on doves, advertising and promotion, tricks, editorials, cartoons and lots of ads — and more, too!

You probably won't believe the extreme high quality of The Magic Manuscript — in both production and content — until you see it. Our first issue has 64 pages on the slickest of papers. The pages of full color are beautiful — a real first for a magic magazine! Our art work and design make the good reading all the better, too. Our second issue has Karrell Fox on the cover and promises to be even bigger and better! You don't want to miss another issue of The MM, so send in today! You can send $2 for a sample copy or request more free information, too.

THE PERCY PRESS GLASS OF WATER PRODUCTION described by Owen Griffiths

This is our first publicatio and just 3 months after release it is almost sold out. It has received enthusiastic reviews in all the leading magazines. Jeff Busby in the U.S.A. had us rush copies to him as did Lloyd Jones and big names in magic. We still have a few copies of this valuable first edition - but hurry or you'll miss out.

The book gives full details of the effect Percy Press performed for over 50 years in the streets of England. 50 years of experience behind just one routine. 50 years in getting it right. It has to be great - it is!

Owen Griffiths has written the book and the illustrations and design are by JAT and Eric Mason. Over 16 line illustrations and two colour printing.

SIMPLE OSCAR

Phil Goldstein

The following is an approach to the Peter Kane "Wild Card" effect. No gimmicks are used. Six cards are required: two jokers, and four matching cards. (For illustration, we will say that the matching cards are kings of hearts). At the start of the routine, these are in order from the top: K,J,J,K,K, when face down.

- 1. Hold the packet face down. Fan the cards out as five, as you state that you will use but five cards for the routine. Close up the fan.
- 2. Grip the packet with the left hand, pinch fashion (thumb on top, fingers below, as in the standard handling of the Elmsley Count). The right hand removes the top single card. Hold this card up to the audience, so that they can see that it is the KH. Table the card off to one side, face down.
- 3. Perform a Spirit Count, displaying (apparently) four jokers. The last card of the count goes to the top of the packet. The order, at the conclusion of this count, will be J,K,K,J.
- 4. Hold the packet face up in the left hand. The face card (joker) is apparently removed in fact, use a Necktie Second deal to remove the card second from the face. This card is tabled face down. The left hand retains the balance of the packet. The right hand reaches over and picks up the tabled king. This card is turned face up, and slid beneath the tabled card at centre. Grasp the two face-to-face cards at the outer end, and rotate the pair towards you, turning them over. Snap your fingers. Push the top card off to the right. Beneath it is a KH—the first joker has transformed. Move this KH off to the left.
- 5. Repeat step 4.
- 6. Repeat step 4. Obviously, this time when you Necktie Second you must take care not to expose the fact that you still have two cards in your left hand, as the audience believes you - have only one. As the card second from the face is taken by the right hand, the left must immediately draw its two cards square as one.

- 7. You now hold two jokers, squared as one, in the left hand. State, "This final time I must be careful, for you now know what to look for. . ." Pick up the KH at right, and drop it face up onto the left hand card(s). The three-card stock is held square. The right hand openly removes the lowermost card of the face up trio (a joker), and replaces it face down on top of the left hand card(s).
- 8. You now apparently turn the packet over. In fact, utilise the following false turnover: the left thumb digs beneath the packet, and revolves the cards over book-fashion (Fig 1). In a continuing action, the right hand grasps the packet from the outer end (Fig 2), turning the cards inward. The packet is actually turned over twice but, if done in a fluid action, it will play as simply turning the cards over. Thus, the audience will believe the lowermost card of the (assumed) pair to be a joker.
- 9. The right hand lifts off the top two cards, as a unit, exposing a joker face up below. Say, "Oh I forgot to snap!" Replace the right hand card(s). Snap your fingers. Now, the right hand removes the top single card, revealing the lowermost card to have changed into a king. (Actually, the left hand holds a squared pair a KH above a joker).
- 10. Table the right hand's card, face down. The right hand takes the two cards from the left hand, squared as one, and uses this two-card block to scoop up the other three kings. Flip the packet face down as you inquire, "How many kings does that give us?" Invariably, the spectator will say "four".
- 11. Say, "No, you forgot about our original king. . ." The right hand removes the lowermost card of the face down packet, and seemingly uses it to flip over the lone tabled card. In fact, perform a Mexican Turnover. Thus, the card flipped face up on the table is a KH. Replace the card now in the right hand face down on top of the packet.
- 12. Flip the packet face up, as you comment, "One king to start with, and four over here, gives us five in all." Perform a Jordan Count, displaying four KH's in your hands, to conclude.

Once again we are late and will not take space to offer excuses and apologies. It is certainly not the lack of material that is causing the delays as we have some really first class stuff that in fairness to our contributors and subscribers we want to get into print as soon as possible. As the editor and not the publisher I will do my very best to see that each issue, when it does arrive, is worth waiting for. If you do have a query on your subscription or our publishing dates please write to Nick Bolton (not me!) whose address is always on the back page.

This issue is a one-man melange by Phil Goldstein. Phil must be just about the most prolific inventor/writer of all times. Also, he is a professional performer working under the name of Max Maven. The experience, which he garners in front of live audiences, sets his stuff apart from some other ideas men, whose actual appearances are even more erratic than those of Pabular! As Phil, being a very knowledgable chap, has mentioned some moves, which other, less knowledgable chaps may not know, I have put an appendix at the end of the magazine, explaining them. These explanations must be brief as space is limited.

Not so long ago, at the invitation of Bob Irons, I journeyed to Derby to see Steven Hamilton give a lecture. Steven, who I have known for many years now, mixes regularly with such illuminati as Roy Walton, Andrew Galloway, Gordon Bruce and Peter Duffie. Occasionally, one of these prophets descends from the north, to be received like Moses from Sinai, by those lesser mortals, eager for fleeting glimpses into that magical Valhalla, centred around Glasgow! Seriously though, Steven had the unenviable task of maintaining the very high standard, which has almost come to be taken for granted, from that part of the world. Needless to say he gave a very creditable account of himself, really knocking out those who were getting their first taste of the "Glasgow experience".

The British Ring convention came as usual in September. It was nice to meet a lot of our readers in person. Sadly though, a lot of familiar faces were not there. Roger Crosthwaite was there, but developed a virus infection. He soldiered on through the late night close-up show on the Saturday, but was far from well and in fact went into hospital for treatment on the following Monday. It was nice to meet Owen Griffiths for the first time. He is transcribing some of Martin Breese's cassettes into booklets. These will be published from time to time. The Percy Press Glass of Water production, reviewed in this issue, is the first.

John Cornelius of the U.S.A. gave a lecture on close-up, which I am reliably informed was first rate. Unfortunately I was not able to catch it. I missed him at F.I.S.M. as well. I seem to have turned missing Cornelius into an art form!

This year, I had to miss much of the close-up. This is because Mike Gancia, who organises it, was compering the main Gala Show and could not be in two places at one time. He asked yours truly to assist with the running of things. In actual fact, the whole thing was so well arranged that I had little, or to be more accurate, nothing to do. One of these days I will describe, or better still get Mike to describe, just how the whole thing is run. Believe me, it is an eye-opener. Over the years he has built up a team of stewards, time keepers and behind the scene "runners" second to none. The whole thing is co-ordinated to a master plan, which is carried through with precision and certainty.

I did not see all of the acts in the close-up competition. Of those that I did see, Mark Leveridge (the winner) and Johnny Johnston (second) were so equally matched that I should have hated to have made a decision between them. Of course, this was only on one table. They have to maintain the standard on all four. It is no good being brilliant on three tables and making a pigs ear of the fourth. Not, I hasten to add, that either of them did. The decisions are taken solely by the judges. Each one making up his/her own mind without any consultation with the others. Indeed the judges all sit at separate tables, so strictly speaking, each one sees the performer in front of a different audience.

In the evening, the late night close-up went on far too long. Frankly I thought that for a show, which starts at 12.30, seven acts each doing roughly 15 minutes was just too many. At the start of the show the audience were crammed in like sardines. At the finish there were about six masochists left at each table. Of the performers that I saw, Tommy Wonder and Bob Little made the biggest impact. Bob's zany humour is just right for this type of show at that time of night. I do not think that he actually does a single trick — I certainly do not remember any. He just fools around and gets the laughs. Tommy, on the other hand, is a very smooth and effective performer. His magic is slick and well presented. Regular readers will know all about the quality of his stuff anyway. I have a beauty by him for the next issue. A close-up version of Everywhere and Nowhere. Do not miss it. It is brilliant. I will not mention all of the performers' by name. Just one other - Hans Van Senus - who worked in Chinese costume. He did some of the most skilful sleight of hand that I have ever seen at a convention. Beautiful stuff!

REVIEWS

From REPRO MAGIC of 46 Queenstown Rd, London SW8 comes "Tetrad One" by Peter Kane. Price £4.50.

Suffice it to say that for most people, who know what is good in magic, the name of Peter Kane will be sufficient incentive to rush out and get this.

Unlike most of Peter's other stuff, this is not a single trick. It seems that some years ago he invented a children's card game called "Tetrad" which was marketed commercially by Arnolds of Leeds. The game is played with double faced cards, bearing simple geometric designs in various colours. The pack contains thirty of them.

What Peter has done is to apply his extremely fertile brain to the various magical effects, which can be accomplished with this pack. Purchasers will receive a "Tetrad" deck plus a sixteen page booklet explaining its construction and six possible effects.

All of the effects are of a mental nature and are extremely strong and well thought out. My own personal favourites were "The Tetradic Square" and "The Subliminal Force". However, once you have read the book and your eyes have been opened to the many possibilities with the "Tetrad" pack you will enjoy experimenting for yourself and seeing what you can come up with. Highly recommended, especially to mentalists and those who enjoy experimenting with new ideas.

Gert Malmros presents.... This is a series of four booklets, each priced £1.50 and available from Martin Breese and others.

Each of these booklets contains one effect/routine, described in six or seven pages with line drawings by Conny Ray. The effects are "The Chink a Chink Coins", "Coin Assembly", "The Jumping Coins" and "Disappearing Aces". Of these, "Coin Assembly" does require a faked coin (copper/silver). The others all use normal coins/cards.

Gert has been a personal friend of mine for many years now, and I have seen all of these effects performed by him on several occasions. In his hands they are beautiful magic. The moves are not difficult but much practice will be required to obtain the smooth perfection of the originator.

All of the effects/routines require that the performer be seated at a table with the audience in front. If you are going to work regularly under those conditions, you will certainly find something worthy of study in this series.

"The Percy Press Glass of Water Production Routine" described by Owen Griffiths. Published by Martin Breese, price £1.50 U.K. (Europe £1.75 and Airmail U.S.A. 4 dollars).

This is a small, nicely produced booklet of some twelve pages, measuring 6 inches by 8½ inches with soft board covers. The design of the book is simple yet very artistic as would be expected from the combined talents of Eric Mason and Jat. There are some sixteen drawings to help explain the text.

The book, which is based on a transcription of the Percy Press cassette, is well written. The descriptions are clear and easy to follow. The modus operandi has been broken down into simple step by step instructions, leaving the reader in no doubt as to how to prepare, how to perform and what to say. There are two priceless tips for anybody contemplating busking type work. One is the construction of the table and the other is how to position the load for easy access, when stealing. These two hints alone are worth far more than £1.50.

As for the trick itself. This is very simple in effect. Attempting to cause a borrowed coin to penetrate the solid table top, under cover of a hat (borrowed), a large glass of liquid is produced. It can be performed under almost any conditions. I remember seeing Percy do this some thirty years ago. I was completely bowled over.

If I have any criticism at all to level at this booklet, it is the fact that I wish that there had been a section explaining the timing and misdirection. The relevent information is all there but it is necessary to study the text, very carefully, and to read between the lines to extract it. However, I have no doubt that anybody taking the necessary items in hand and running through the working would soon "get it together" for themselves.

Martin Breese says that this book was produced for the benefit of those working street parties during the Royal Wedding. In this he does himself a disservice. It is a much more important book than that. It is the fruit of a lifetime's experience, of one of the world's leading exponents of itinerant performing! As such it must find its way into the possession of every serious student of impromptu/close-up magic.

The Commercial Card Magic of Roger Crosthwaite. Written by Walt Lees. Price £4.75, post 32p, obtainable from the author at 5 Essex Mansions, Essex Road South, London E11 1JP.

The first time I saw Roger Crosthwaite perform was in the 1980 Magic Circle close-up competition when, last on, he literally took the Circle by storm with a blistering display of sheer originality and zany presentation which left him as the winner by such a large margin that the other competitors stood paralysed on the starting line. In the process he completely transformed my ideas on the presentation of close-up magic, primarily because of his unique combination of technical ability allied with entertainment. Also I was very much fooled.

It was to find out how much that I looked first to "The Commercial Card Magic of Roger Crosthwaite". I was not disappointed nor upset, for it was not through a stooge and a duplicate card that he produced his stunning effect of having a thought of card found in a card case, but a 'Think-a-Card' selection followed by a rear palm. Such things are usually restricted to the thoughts of academic magicians, but here was this man having the effrontery to do it in a roomful of magicians completely undetected.

It is this trick, which to my mind, is the cream of the book. An unbelievable effect by anybody's criteria, and an added bonus of a minutely detailed description of how to do the 'Think-a-Card' selection, in which both Walt Lees and Roger Crosthwaite have taken immense trouble with the psychology behind, and the finger work in front, which constitute the choosing and discovery of a thought of card. Worth the price of the book alone — a cliche, but in this case, true.

The other tricks in the book bear the unmistakeable Crosthwaite stamp: that is to say presentation is at the forefront. They are more suited to the close-up table, mat and attentive audience than the atmosphere of impromptu pub magic. Weird paraphernalia, such as tweezers, goggles, oranges and fluffy toy dogs abound, whilst Crosthwaitian mannerisms (kissing and dusting the cards) are liberally used. Apart from the 'Eidetic Prediction' (described above and my vote for the best named trick along with Open Travellers — of all time), there are two versions of 'The Geiger Mystery' (which uses the patter of radioactive cards, a geiger counter and the card box as a decontaminator chamber to produce an effect analogous to Alex Elmsley's 'Between Your Palms'), 'Roger's Angels' (a sandwich effect with the 4 Queens whose backs change, with the production of a toy dog as an unexpected climax) and 'Thanks to Kaps' (a card previously selected by the performer matching one thought of by the spectator). New sleights comprise the aforementioned rear palm, a multiple shift and a simple but unsuspicious and convincing means of doing the double lift, which doubtless will be ignored by most readers. For good measure there is a gimmicked box thrown in, so that it appears empty, when it actually contains a card.

There is no doubt that the routines as set out work wonders in Roger's hands. Whether they would be as successful for anybody else, I am less sure. But it is the breadth of thinking behind the presentation of an entertaining card trick that this book reveals and should be devoured by anybody striving to go beyond 'take a card, and I'll find it in your beermug'. For those of you who prefer to stick to this latter type of effect, still buy it, so that you can do 'think of a card and I'll etc. etc.'.

A final word must be given to Walt Lees who is responsible for getting the talents of Roger Crosthwaite on paper. The book is well produced with 47 large, double column pages, ample photographs and illustrations and a style which renders the following of instructions for any sleight or trick, simplicity itself.

Ian Keable-Elliott

"I take back everything I said about this sweater you knitted for me."

This routine, as with my "Simple Oscar", is an approach to the Peter Kane "Wild Card" plot. Again, no gimmicks are employed, and additionally there is a surprise finish.

You will require six cards: two jokers, and four matching cards. (For illustration we will say that these are kings of hearts). One of the kings has an odd-coloured back. Across this back, in large letters, print the word "original". The starting order is, from the top, with the cards face down, K,J,J,K,K, odd-backed K.

- 1. Hold the packet face down. Fan the cards out as five (the lowermost odd-backed card being hidden squared beneath the fifth) as you state that you will work with five cards. Close up the fan.
- 2. Grip the packet with the left hand, in the pinch grip associated with the Elmsley Count. The right hand removes the top single card, holding it up to face the audience. This KH is tabled face down to your right.
- 3. Display the remaining cards as being four jokers, via a Spirit Count. This count will also serve to hide the odd-coloured back. At the conclusion of this count the order of the cards is, from the top: J,K,K, odd-backed K,J.
- 4. Hold the packet face down in the left hand. The right hand removes the lowermost card, and uses it to flip over the tabled card (king). Replace the right hand card to the top of the packet, flashing its face (joker) as you do so.
- 5. State, "Remember, over here we have one king, while here we have four jokers." As you say this, the packet is counted face down as follows: Hold the cards from above with the right hand (Biddle Grip). The left hand milks off the top and bottom cards, squared as one (this action can be aided by a Buckle or Pull-Down action). The next card is drawn off onto the left hand card(s) by the left thumb—but a left little finger break is held beneath it. The next card is drawn onto the left hand stock, and the last card placed on top of all.

Finally, cut the three cards above the break to the bottom. During these actions (which appear to be mere counting and toying, taking but a moment) only matching backs will show — the odd-coloured back is hidden. The order of the cards is now, from the top: J, odd-backed K.K.K.J.

- 6. Flip the packet face up. Hold the cards in your left hand. The face card is now seemingly removed with the right hand in fact, use a Necktie Second to take the card second from the face, dealing this card (a king) face down to the centre of the table. The balance of the packet is retained in the left hand.
- 7. The right hand picks up the face down card at right. Tap this card on the back of the tabled card at centre. Now, use the right hand card to flip over the central card, revealing it to now be a king. During this, the left fingers "brace" the card being flipped over (Fig 1). This is in order to condition the spectators for a subsequent Mexican Turnover. There is one slight alteration of the standard actions of the Mexican Turnover: the left hand is kept palm up, so that the backs of the fingers brace the card. The reason for this will be obvious shortly. Move the revealed KH off to the left. The right hand's KH is tabled to the right, face down.
- 8. Repeat step 7.
- 9. This time, the left hand again holds the balance of the packet face up. The right hand approaches the packet from the outer end (as in the Necktie Second action previously), and removes the lowermost card of the packet, turning this card face down at centre. Pick up the card tabled at right, with the right hand, and as before use this card to tap the tabled card. Now, apparently flip over the tabled card. This time, however, perform a Mexican Turnover. The KH thus revealed is tabled at left with the first two. The right hand card is thought to be a KH; in fact, it is a joker. The left hand is holding two cards, squared as one: the odd-backed KH beneath a joker.
- 10. Drop the right hand's card face down onto the left hand stock, as you comment, "This time I must be careful, as you know what to expect.." The three-card packet is held square. The right hand apparently removes the lowermost card—but in fact takes the centre card of the trio. This can be done with a Glide, Buckle, or Pull-Down action, or you may prefer to utilise the Annemann/Christ Alignment technique. In any event, the left hand holds its two cards squared as one (face down joker above odd-backed KH), as the right hand gestures with its single card (face up joker), saying, "Watch this last joker closely..."

- 11. Replace the joker beneath the left hand card(s). Tap the packet. Lift off the top single card, displaying the KH (actually two cards held as one). The right hand card is tabled, face down.
- 12. The two cards in the left hand, squared as one, are placed onto the tabled three KH's. Pick up the entire packet, and turn it face down. Ask, "How many kings do we now have?" The spectator will answer "four". As this is going on, you must rearrange the cards in this manner: holding the packet with the right hand from above (Biddle Grip), the left hand takes top and bottom cards, squared as one. The next card from the top is drawn onto the left hand stock with the left thumb. The last two cards in the right hand are dropped together on top of all. The result of these "toying" actions is this order, from the top: K,J,K,K, odd-backed K.
- 13. When the spectator says, "four", respond, "No, you're forgetting our original king of hearts, over here. . ." The right hand removes the top single card of the packet, and apparently uses it to flip over the face down card at right. In fact, perform a Mexican Turnover. This leaves a KH face up on the table. The face down card in the right hand (now a joker) is replaced on top of the packet. Flip the packet face up.
- 14. Say, "Actually, we have a total of five kings." Jordan Count the packet to show four KH's in your hand, along with the one on the table.
- 15. Hold the packet face up in the left hand. The right hand removes the top single card. Gesture with this card to both the left hand stock and the tabled KH, saying, "One original, and four duplicates. Do you know how to tell which one is the original?"
- 16. Continue, "It's easy you just look at the label!" Here, the card in the right hand is seemingly used to flip over the tabled KH. In fact, use a Wild Card Turnover Switch as follows: the right hand's card scoops up the tabled KH. Both cards are turned over, the hand turning palm down. Release the uppermost card (the odd-backer), and in a continuous motion replace the right hand's card (now normal-backed) on top of the left hand stock (which you've flipped face down). This leaves a single card on the table the odd-backer, bearing the printing for all to see.

Note that in both this routine and "Simple Oscar", you can start the routine by having a card selected (forced) from a complete deck, then introduce the (apparent) four jokers, explaining that you save jokers from old packs, because of their remarkable abilities. In this way, you imply that the trick would work with any selected card, thus strengthening the trick and at the same time making the effect less contrived in structure.

EITHER AURA

Phil Goldstein

The following two-person mentalism routine is presentationally derived from Charles Cameron's "The Spirit Tells" (Cauldron #3, 1967); the method, however, is quite different.

The medium having been sent out of the room, the performer begins by offering a brief discussion of auras — psychic "vibrations" that emanate from individuals, and in turn from objects they come in contact with.

A small wooden box is introduced. This box can be closed with a small metal hasp, through which there is a padlock, which is at present not locked. The key to the padlock is given to a spectator to hold. The box is opened, and placed onto the table.

The spectators decide on a "target item" for the test — any common object belonging to any person in the room. For example, a wristwatch is nominated. This item is held over the open mouth of the box — so as to allow the object's aura to be absorbed into the box...

A spectator delivers the box to the medium, who — following a few moments privately with it — returns the box to the spectator. The padlock is now shut through the hasp on the box.

The spectator brings the box back to the assembly. The person holding the key unlocks the box, and finds therein a slip of paper, upon which the medium has written, "I sense the vibrations associated with timepieces — perhaps a wristwatch..."

* * * * * * *

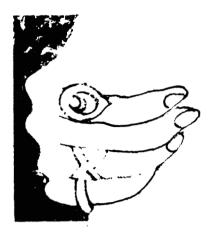

The method, in addition to being deceptive, has the added feature of requiring virtually no effort on the part of the medium; all of the work is actually done by the performer.

The box is a loader. Certain Lippincottstyle boxes will function, as will the old Watch Box, various types of Prediction Chests, and so forth. The performer must be able to have secret access to the interior of the box after it has been locked closed.

In addition to the already named props, the performer will need a billet index, prepared with slips of paper describing various common objects — pen, watch, glasses, cigarettes, coins, and so on. These should be written out by the medium, in his/her own handwriting.

The handling is obvious. During the initial build-up, the performer sees to it that an object is nominated from among those covered by the billets. During the time that the box is in the hands of the medium, there is ample time for the performer to obtain the correct billet from the index, holding the slip finger-palmed. Upon receiving the box, of course, the medium simply shuts the padlock through the hasp, and returns the empty box to the spectator.

When the spectator returns to the room, he/she naturally hands the box to the performer, who inquires, "Who has the key?" Under cover of this misdirection, the billet is loaded inside the box. The rest is in the presentation.

JAN-KEN-PON

Phil Goldstein

The following is a close-up mentalism routine. The plot is based on an old children's game, known as "Paper-Scissors-Rock". I should mention that in Pallbearer's Review, volume 8, #4, Bob Neale detailed some lovely effects using this same game as a premise. The Neale material, however, is quite different in both effect and method from what I am about to describe.

The routine involves a set of cards bearing pictures, as shown in the illustration. (The observant reader will notice that the picture shows a pair of Zen Scissors; these are not strictly necessary. . .). The three items have a cyclical relationship, which forms the structure of the game. Each object can "defeat" one of the two othes, and can in turn be "defeated" by the remaining one. ROCK breaks SCISSORS; SCISSORS cut PAPER; PAPER wraps ROCK. The popular children's version involves "throwing" the choices, via hand gestures. By using printed cards, you explain to the spectator, you keep the players honest. After all, one can easily alter a hand gesture - but a printed image stays constant. . .

To perform this routine, you will actually require four cards — the three shown, plus a double-backed card. The three picture cards are marked on their backs. Also needed is a Himber-style wallet. In one side of this, place an envelope inside of which is a large piece of paper bearing the word "Rock". In the other side of the wallet is another envelope, the paper within bearing the word "Paper".

At the start of the routine, the double-backed card is in your lap or pocket. The three picture cards are in one side of the wallet.

To begin, openly remove the cards from the wallet. As you do this, briefly call attention to the envelope, stating that you will return to it later. Close the wallet and place it aside. Showing the cards, discuss the rules of the children's game, and offer to play a version with the spectator.

Hand the packet to the spectator, allowing him/her to remove any one of the cards at random. From the remaining two cards, you take one. Naturally, as the backs of the cards are marked, it will be a simple effort to arrange for yourself to win, by picking the card bearing the picture that will "defeat" the spectator's choice.

Offer to give the spectator another chance, explaining that this time you will choose first. As this is stated, palm the double-backed card, and load it onto the packet. Now, mix the cards (without exposing the fact that there are four). Remove one card for your selection, placing it onto the table. Now, during the previous mixing you must arrive at the following situation: the order of the three cards you now hold must be, from the top: double-backer; "losing" card; remaining card. In other words, if the card you have tabled is the Rock, the order of the packet would be DB,S,P—for it would be the Scissors that you intend to force, to cause the spectator to lose to the Rock you initially selected.

The three-card packet (which the spectator believes to be only two cards) is held squared. Explain, "I have already made my choice. One of the two remaining cards in my hand will win over my selection; the other will lose. It's up to you to pick the right one. Which would you like — top or bottom?"

The spectator makes a choice. If "top", perform a Double Turnover to display the losing choice. Thanks to the double-backer, this single face up card can be dealt to the table, and a back still shows atop the card(s) in the hand, so all looks fair. Turn over the initial card you tabled for yourself, showing your victory.

If the spectator chooses "bottom", openly transfer the top single card (DB) to the bottom. Now, turn over the top single card — again forcing the losing choice.

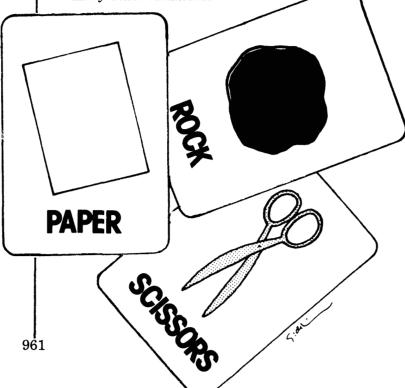

The above procedure will stand repetition, as the actions are reasonably consistant for the two situations. Thus, you can play the game several times, each time making your choice first, then having the spectator choose from the (apparently) two cards that remain. Similarly, you can let the spectator pick a card first, and then allow him/her to choose your card from the remaining ones — using the same technique just described to force (in this case) the winning card as the spectator picks for you.

After you have beaten the spectator several times, offer to explain how you are able to win every game. Say, "It's really quite simple. . . I can beat you, for the reason that I always know which item you are going to choose. As I can accurately predict your selection, I thus am always able to know which item will beat you. Here — I'll prove it. In that envelope within my wallet I have made a written prediction, which will prove I know how to beat your choice. I want you to choose any one of the three items, verbally. My written prediction will take care of your choice!"

The reader may wonder how the two outs in the wallet will cover three variables. The answer is this: should the spectator choose "Rock" or "Paper", you will obviously open the wallet to the proper side and remove the prediction showing that you correctly forecast his/her choice. If "Scissors" is named, you will take advantage of the flexible interpretation offered by the verbiage in the preceeding paragraph. Say, "I knew you would say 'Scissors' — and, as promised, I made a written prediction of just the choice I would need to beat you!" Open the wallet to reveal the "Rock" prediction, thus proving your precognitive accuracy.

I might point out that the above routine is but one of several that I have developed along these lines. There are many other related routes. The reader may wish to consider variations allowed by making the extra card a duplicate of one of the pictures, rather than a double-backer. Also, by adding lapping switches, there are several interesting approaches possible. The routine just described is offered for its functionality; experimentation will lead to many other variations.

BRASSO PROFUNDO

Phil Goldstein

The performer displays a length of cord, and a brass nut. Two finger rings are borrowed, along with a pocket handkerchief. The nut is threaded onto the cord. The rings are threaded over both ends of the cord. As the nut is wider than the rings, it acts as a stopper, preventing the removal of the rings. A spectator holds each end of the cord. The centre of the cord (with the rings and nut) is covered with the handkerchief. Showing his hands empty, the performer reaches beneath the hank — and extracts the borrowed rings, apparently by penetrating them through the brass nut. All materials are left with the spectators, should you desire — for you to finish clean.

There is a gimmick involved. As the reader may have surmised, the above is a new presentational dressing for a classic device, the Spirit Nut. For this routine, you will require a Spirit Nut which is a bit larger than those commonly found today. I have at hand a hexagonal Spirit Nut, purchased in the 1960's (manufacturer unknown) which is perfect just a bit wider than the average finger ring. In addition to the gaffed nut, you will require a matching ungimmicked nut.

At the start of the routine, the Spirit Nut is introduced, along with a length of cord. (A shoelace is preferable, as the stiffened ends of the lace will make the handling easier). The nut is openly threaded onto the cord. Two rings are borrowed, and threaded over both ends of the cord. This action is done by a spectator, and during this you get ahold of the "fair" nut, in Finger Clip position in the left hand.

Using both hands, take hold of the ends of the cord. The clipped nut is secretly threaded onto the cord under cover of the action of handing the ends to two spectators to hold. As the spectators raise the ends of the cord, slide the left hand down the cord toward the centre (carrying the clipped nut down the cord). The right hand picks up the handkerchief, and drapes it over the threaded items at the centre of the cord.

The handling from here should be obvious. Reach beneath the cloth, and pull apart the Spirit Nut. The pieces of the Spirit Nut are now stolen away — either Finger Clipped, or tucked into your coatsleeve. The finger rings are easily removed — and the "fair" nut is left on the £ord, (and can of course meet with the strictest scrutiny from the audience. . .

37th PARALLEL

Phil Goldstein

The following is a mentalism demonstration that will function for either stage or close-up. It is impromptu, involving no gimmicks or sleights. Nevertheless, it is a difficult piece to perform properly. In the wrong hands, it will appear to be nothing more than a contrived mathematical novelty. (As it happens, such is exactly what this is — but, with some effort, it can be made to seem much more than that...)

Required are three pieces of paper, and a pencil. These may be of any type, and may be borrowed. Two spectators are involved. The performer states, "Over the years, I have found that many people have a natural facility for psychic interaction. In the majority of cases, these talents lie dormant. One theory holds that one can best explore these dormant capabilities by constructing a test procedure that is coloured by emotional considerations. For this reason, I propose a test involving simple mathematics. . .

"At this moment, I am thinking of a number. I shall write this down on this slip of paper. Now, let me give another piece of paper over to you. I will ask you to perform a series of brief and simple computations, and we shall see if I am able to provoke a mental rapport with your decisions. . .

"I want you to decide upon a single digit." Please write this down three times. Thus, you now have a three-digit number, with all three digits the same. Do not tell me what it is. Now. on a separate part of the paper, please add those three repeated digits together. For example, if your number were 999, your added total would be 27. Now, please divide this second figure into the first. Again, as an example, if you had started with 999, you would now divide 999 by 27. Whatever total you now have, put a circle around it, and keep your writing out of view for the time being. . ."

The performer now turns to the second spectator, and asks, "Do you have any idea as to the number upon which this person is now concentrating?" The spectator will say that he/she has no idea as to that number. The performer encourages the second spectator to attempt an intuitive guess. That guess is written on the third slip of paper. This done, the mentalist recaps what has transpired. The papers are compared, and amazingly, all three numbers are the same — not only is the performer's prediction accurate, but the second spectator \ has successfully intuited the first participant's number.

A CLASSIC WORK ON CARDS

Diverting Card Magic

by ANDREW GALLOWAY

Author of the Ramsay Legend and The Ramsay Classics.

What the experts say about this unique book:-

RICKY JAY — "A lucid explanation of misdirection and card effects by Andrew Galloway, one of the very few people I've ever met who does real magic, not just tricks.

HARVEY ROSENTHAL — "Diverting Card Magic will appeal to the expert and beginner alike. The material is top-notch. Every trick has been well thought out from the perspective of misdirection and entertainment value. A valuable addition to any magic library.

FRED ROBINSON (Pabular) — "In Part 1 the reader is shown how to keep the eyes of the spectators away from his hands at the moment the vital sleight is being made. This information is worth many many times the price of the book. It is impossible to estimate its value, particularly to the beginner, who will, for the first time, have access to the real secret enabling him to perform basic sleights in an undetectable manner. Even the most enlightened card worker will find considerable food for thought in this chapter.

In Part 2 the author gives his personal methods for twelve effects. The object of this chapter is to provide further examples of how misdirection is utilised in each trick. In short you are told exactly HOW TO DO the tricks in a way that will ensure that 'everything you do will appear ordinary' thus ensuring that the result will be 'extra-ordinary.' That is magic.

To sum up. It is my personal opinion that 'Diverting Card Magic' is one of the most important textbooks on cards ever to appear."

The method depends on an old and obscure mathematical force, combined with a classic psychological force. If the procedure outlined above (tripling, adding, and dividing) is followed, it will guarantee a result of 37. Happily enough, 37 is also the target of a tested psychological procedure.

When the second spectator confesses ignorance as to the first participant's number, the performer says, "Don't feel bad — after all, you are new to this sort of thing. I will give you a little help. . . It is a two-digit number, less than fifty. Both digits are odd, and they are not the same. Please write down your guess. . ." Given these conditions, the spectator is far more restricted than it would appear. In fact, there are only seven answers that will meet the restrictions: 13, 15, 17, 19, 31, 35, and 37. Of these, it is a psychological likelihood of overwhelming percentage that the spectator will choose 37. In this event, of course, you have a perfect three-way match, and can make the most of it.

Should the second spectator write down a different number, do not despair. If 35 is chosen (and this is the second most likely case), you can congratulate the spectator on making such a remarkably "close" guess. Similarly, should 31, 13 or 17 be chosen, you can point out that the spectator "received" one correct digit, a significant accomplishment for a first-time experimenter. . .

Should 15 be chosen — and this is entirely unlikely — you will simply observe that mentalism is quite difficult, as proven by the lack of success of the spectator — as opposed to your own perfect results!

Again, the technical basis of this routine is quite simple, but I assure you that the presentation is not. It depends on your building the idea in the minds of the spectators that they are witnessing something impossible — rather than something "cute".

APPENDIX

SPIRIT COUNT

Phil Goldstein

This one defeated the combined brains of Pabular. None of us knew it! However, the following count, when smoothly executed produces the desired result.

Start with the cards in the Elmsley Grip as given in the text. The packet is back upwards and horizontal to the floor. With and horizontal to the floor. With the left thumb push over the top card so that the right hand can grip it between the first and second fingers on the face and the thumb at the rear. This is exactly the same grip as the Vernon Elmsley Count in "More Inner Secrets of Card Magic". Raise the right hand to chest height and hold the card face outwards to the audience.

Drop the right hand once more and, with the left thumb, push off the top card of the packet, taking it above the one in the right hand, as shown in Fig 1. Raise the right hand once more, allowing the faces of the cards to be seen. You can let them splay out "accidently" so that the two blank faces show. Drop the right hand once more. With the left thumb, apparently push over the third card on top of the ones in the right. In fact, perform the basic switch used in the Jordan Count (Fig 2). That is, push all of the left hand's cards, in a block, onto those in the right. Simultaneously let the left first and second fingers seize the lowermost card in the right hand and hold it back. Anybody familiar with the Elmsley/Jordan type counts will know exactly what is meant here. Hold up all of the right hand's cards once more, but this time take care to keep them tightly squared.

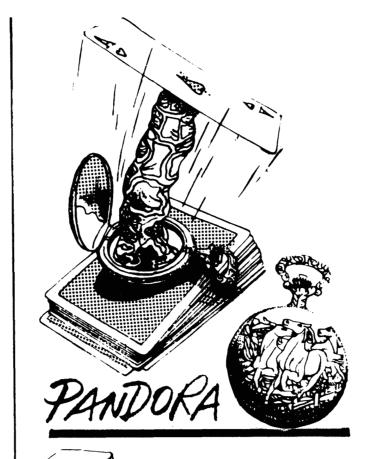

Finally, raise the left hand to show the face of the "last" card and drop it on top of the pile in the right. Whether or not this is what Phil meant by the Spirit Count, I do not know. It does look effective, though, as a trial will show.

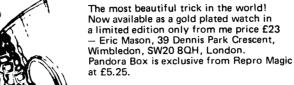

NECKTIE SECOND

This just means a crude, easy second deal, where the left hand tilts the back of the packet towards the performer as the move is made. Some performers will use the Glide as a substitute. Personally, I prefer the text method.

P.S. Since writing the above, I have discovered the "Spirit Count". It is credited to Gene Castillon and described in Jerry Mentzer's "Counts, Cuts, Moves and Subtleties". As it turns out it is identical to the method which we

If the above dozen reasons aren't enough to make you interested in THE MAGIC MANUSCRIPT'S Close-up Forum, you aren't a serious close-up worker!

Why? Because in each issue of The MM you'll find the best in close-up magic. And the above names are just some of the columnists and contributors — giving you great tricks and articles in each issue. The Forum is one of the few steady sources of high quality close-up magic available to the magician today! And it is just a part of a beautiful magazine with lots more in it, too!

The first few issues of The MM saw The Forum include such things as The Cheap Juggler, a novel coin trick by Paul Harris on The Cups & Balls along with Paul's own commercial Cup & Ball Routine, Paul Harris on Inventing Creative Close-up, a manuscript quality trick by Paul Harris (The Bizarre Stretch) which you'd probably pay $5 for in manuscript form if it wasn't in The MM, lots of other fabulous Paul Harris material (tricks and articles!), Fr. Cyprian discussing "Close-up Encounters of What Kind?" with a few tricks to show you what he means, some Phil Goldstein items, Tom Ogden's hilarious Ronald Reagan Card Trick that will keep your magic abreast of the times, a clever item by Karrel Fox, a fabulous twist on Ring Flight to greatly improve the trick, and LOTS, LOTS more! And just think of what's to come!

Magic Manuscript

I paid a visit to the Magic Circle last week, and it was my first visit for quite a while. I didn't actually visit. . .for pleasure, I was there at the request of Mitch Devano, the Monday night host. One of the judges in the annual Close-Up Magic Contest couldn't make it, so would I stand in? I said 'yes', and there I was with a front row seat.

The Page boy' speaks....

I won't go into details of all the effects that were performed, you will probably read that somewhere else. Rex Cooper from Luton was the worthy winner, and if big daft Ali Glennon would get some discipline into his performance he could be a force to be reckoned with. But he probably never will, he's too busy enjoying himself to worry about little details like that.

One thing pleased me, and that was the fact that there were quite a number of youngish performers having a go. That's good. One thing didn't please me. Their total lack of understanding of what the hell they were supposed to be doing. That's bad. Many of the performers were trying to perform material which was way beyond their technical abilities.

I can understand them putting in the odd line or move, just to please a magical audience. That is acceptable. What is unforgivable is to treat the event as unimportant. I'm not suggesting that they didn't think the event was important, but from some of the performances, that's the way it appeared.

There were perhaps thirteen or fourteen contestants. . . I would think that at least a third of them shouldn't have been there. Rex Cooper, sat down and performed four or five magic tricks well. That's why he won. Some of the others were trying to run before they can walk. Performing magic isn't all that difficult. . . understanding it is.

Having read this far, you're no doubt wishing someone would set alight to my soapbox. You're welcome to try, and I'll be happy to go down in flames, but for God's sake, sómebody has to say something, sometime. A magician is someone who performs magic... MAGIC, you remember? Tricks 'n things... you know...fool people...it's where spectators are supposed to say to each other, "Hey! How'd'e dodat?" and not, "I see England have made it into the World Cup finals."

If you want to be a good magician, all you have to do is to take a few classic magic effects, learn how to do them as they were presumably intended to be performed, AND DON'T TRY AND IMPROVE THEM. To bring something extra to a classic, requires either a considerable amount of experience, or a touch of genius. If you are a beginner, you have no experience, are unlikely to be another Robert Harbin.

Once you have a certain amount of performing experience under your belt, you may be able to bring something into your performance which is your own. It could be a move, a subtlety, a line of patter, a certain style, but whatever it is, it will be YOURS... then, and only then, someone may say about you..."he's VERY good."

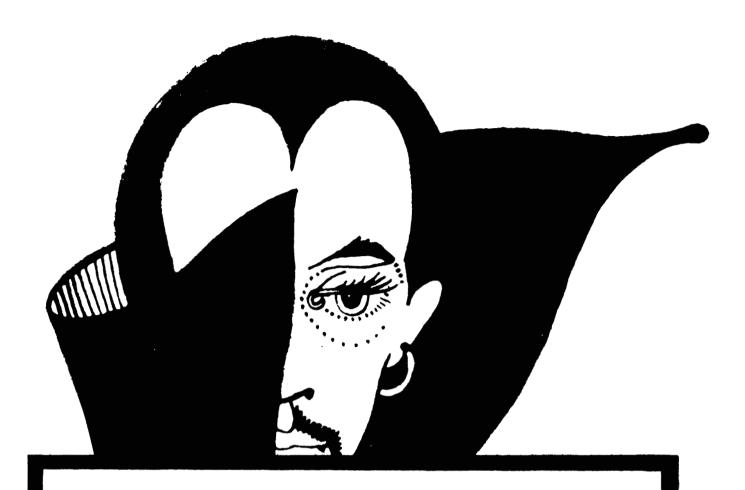

Whatever happened to misdirection? Goodbye,

Patrick Page

THE TAMARIZ TURNOVER

- A new look at the double lift by Juan Tamariz

Tamariz says, "I developed this move in 1968 and used it in various tricks and routines. It featured in my lectures many times. In 1976, I showed it to a well known American cardician. Two years later, an incorrect explanation appeared in a leading American magazine, described as an ANONYMOUS move. So to set the record straight, here is the correct explanation and for an added bonus a subtle addition by that great magician Ascaneo."

First the basic technique. It is necessary to start in the correct position. Fig 1 shows the starting position, the little finger is holding a break beneath the two top cards.

The three points to note in Fig 1 are:-

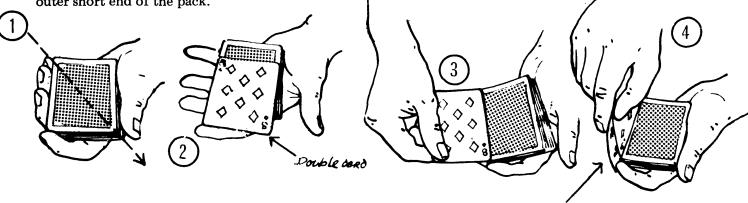

- 1) The pack is dead horizontal to the ground, not tilted in any direction.
- 2) The dotted line shown in the figure points directly to the right ear of the spectator on your extreme left. The pack must be held so that this line always points that way, throughout the move. This is most important, otherwise he may get a flash of what follows.
- 3) The left forefinger is curled against the outer short end of the pack.

In all double lifts it is advisable to cause the spectators to look away from the pack at the exact moment that the two cards are turned over as one. Tamariz accomplishes this by a very simple but effective expedient. He explains that he is going to show the spectators the card on top of the pack. As he tells them this he glances down at the card and taps the back of it with the right forefinger, as though to emphasise which card he means. The forefinger is then raised about eighteen inches, with his eyes following it. This movement should not be exaggerated or affected but at the same time it should be done with sufficient force so that the eyes of the spectators also follow it. It is natural for the eye to follow a moving object. Tamariz has utilised this principle to draw the eyes of the audience upward and away from the pack.

The finger stops in front of the performer's face, so that the spectators' eyes are now in line with the performers and he has eye to eye contact. When this happens he holds their attention with some conversational remark or question about the trick that he is going to perform. Whilst the attention of the audience is thus held, the hand drops casually back to the pack and turns over the two top cards as one. The actual mechanics of this part of the move are not important. Tamariz has numerous different ways that he uses, what matters is the misdirection to cover the move.

Now study Fig 2. This shows the position of the two cards as one on completion of the double turnover. Here again there are several important points to notice:-

- 1) The cards extend about one inch beyond the outer short end of the pack. This is the opposite way round to most double lifts, where the cards usually project at the inner end.
- 2) The fingers of the hand have opened out, so that the pack is just resting on the palm of the hand and not gripped at any part. This takes some confidence to do as there is a natural tendency on the performer's part to worry about the double card splitting. However, if the pack is held dead horizontal and the hand is steady this will not happen.

3) It is only when this position has been arrived at that the performer looks down at the card for the first time. The audience should have missed the actual turnover and positioning of the card, so this is the first time that they will see it. The open position of the hand gives an impression of fairness and casual handling that the printed word cannot convey. When Juan Tamariz does this move, nobody suspects anything.

Now comes the method of turning the card face down again. This is the real convincer. Remember, though, to keep the dotted line shown in Fig 1 pointing towards the left hand spectator's right ear.

The fingers are allowed to curl around the pack once more, the left forefinger returning to the outer short edge as in Fig 1. The right hand takes the double card(s) about ½" from the right outer corner. The thumb is on the face of the card(s) and the first three fingers are underneath. The two cards as one are now brought to the position shown in Fig 3. It is important that the double card lies at the extreme right hand edge of the pack and that the short edges of the double are in line with the short edges of the pack.

Begin to turn the card over "bookwise" to the Fig 4 position. You now apparently release the card so that it just falls onto the pack. That is what you apparently do. In reality a very pretty piece of deception takes place.

A fraction of a second before the card is released, the right fingers move forward about an inch, taking the top card of the pair with them. The right thumb does not move and holds back the face card of the pair. The short ends of this card are still in line with the short ends of the pack. Thus, when the two cards finally land on top of the pack, the upper one will be outjogged about an inch, while the lower one will be flush on top of the pack.

Release the cards as soon as the fingers have moved the top card forward, so that the finger movement and the releasing of the card blend into one single action. It is important that the cards be released and allowed to fall. Under no circumstances must the right hand place them on top of the pack. The whole sequence is designed to give a casual, almost negligent appearance. This would be utterly destroyed were the performer to carefully place the cards down.

Before going any further, there are one or two details that must be got right:-

- 1) The separation of the cards prior to their release is the key to the whole thing. Obviously the movement of the top card must be forward only. There must be no sideways movement. A trial will show that the top of the pack can itself form a guide to slide the card on. In other words, if the bottom long edge of the double card is kept gently resting against the top card of the pack throughout, the separation will be a forward movement only.
- 2) The exact moment to release the card(s) is very important. Release it(them) too soon and the audience will see everything. On the other hand a belated release will destroy the illusion of nonchallance. A good guide is to close the pair "bookwise" onto the pack, until an angle of ninety degrees is reached (i.e. they are vertical to the pack) then just take them a fraction of an inch further before letting go.
- 3) Finally there is the follow through with the right hand. As soon as the cards have been released, the performer apparently dismisses them from his mind and gestures with the right hand, away from the pack as the card(s) fall(s).

This gesturing with the right hand is not a big or exaggerated movement. It is simply a movement of the hand upwards and away from the pack, while you address some remark to the audience relevant either to the card or the trick in general.

By now the two cards will have landed on top of the pack. The face card of the pair, the one the audience were shown, will be flush on top of the pack (see post script at the end of this article). The top card of the pair, the one that the audience did not see, will be lying face down on the pack but outjogged about an inch as in Fig 5. Notice how the left fingers have opened out as soon as the card(s) have landed. Again giving the impression of openness and fairness.

Return your attention to the cards, then with the right hand lift off the top card. The card should not be slid off or dealt off the pack and of course it should not be pushed flush with the pack. Hold the card by the extreme outer right corner and lift it vertically off the pack, allowing everybody to see that there is only one card.

Post Script

Let us return to the point where the two cards have been released from the right hand and are allowed to fall bookwise on top of the pack. Ideally when they land, the face card of the pair will land flush on top of the pack. This is what should be aimed for. Sometimes, however, the card may land as in Fig 6.

The performer should strive to avoid this as it is an obvious giveaway. One way of guarding against its happening is to kick the face card of the pair backwards very slightly as the cards are released from the right hand. The right thumb does the kicking. When you do this the card will either end up flush on the pack, or more frequently stepped backwards very slightly at the rear (i.e. injogged). Although this is not ideal, it is permissible as it cannot be seen by the audience. See Fig 7. When this happens, use the left forefinger to push the pack backwards (towards yourself) until it lines up with the card. This is done before the top card is lifted off by the right hand.

This then is the Tamariz technique for the double lift and a more artistic handling would be hard to find. In 1975 Juan showed the move to Mr Ascanio, who developed:

The Ascanio Addition to the Tamariz Turnover

This will require a lot of practice to perfect but Tamariz demonstrated it so we know it can be done!

Follow the above instructions until the position shown in Fig 2 is reached. It is here that the essential difference occurs. This difference is shown in Fig 8. The double card, instead of lying on top of the pack as in the standard method is balancing on the forefinger of the left hand. The inner short end of the card rests on the pack. The tip of the forefinger is in the centre of the projecting card and about 34" from the outer end. With the card(s) so balanced the forefinger is moved forward (away from the performer) about 1/2". This will cause the double card to move forward without separating, greatly adding to the illusion that it is just a single card. Do not attempt to move the finger back again as this will merely cause the cards to separate.

Continue with the basic move until the position shown in Fig 4 is reached. At this point lift the projecting card with the forefinger as in Fig 8 and move the finger back and forth a little thereby emphasising that the card is just a single one, before lifting it off the pack and proceeding with the trick you are doing.

Study this onc insely, folks! It is an object lesson in how a sleight should be tackled.

HOLY SMOKE!

by David Ben

Effect Mas

Magician removes a rolling paper from a packet and then proceeds to place invisible tobacco in it to form a cigarette. He lights the paper, burning it up in a flash and transforming it into a real cigarette. Magi lights the cigarette, blows some smoke into the air and then removes two half dollars from the smoke. The half dollars are then placed inside the left fist and squeezed. The hand, when opened, reveals that the halves have transformed into a one dollar bill. The hands can then be shown empty both front and back.

Set-up

In your right jacket pocket place 1 cigarette, a lighter, and a crumpled up 1 dollar bill. Cut out a piece of flash paper the size of a cigarette paper and place it in your packet of cigarette papers. The packet of papers and two half dollars are placed in your left jacket pocket.

Stage One — Production of Cigarette

The left hand enters the left pocket to get the package of papers. While in the pocket the hand gets the 2 halves into the Downs Oblique Palm (Lower Downs Palm). The papers are removed from the pocket along with the secreted coins. Open the packet and hold it from the top pinched between the left second finger and thumb. The coins will remain perfectly hidden. The right hand removes a paper, really the flash paper and the left hand places the packet on the table. Both hands come together as if rolling a cigarette. Hold the paper in the left hand while the right hand 'sprinkles' invisible tobacco in the paper. The right hand goes to the right pocket to remove the lighter. While in the pocket the right hand Slydini Palms the cigarette and then withdraws the lighter from the pocket and places it on the table. Hold the paper with both hands and pretend to lick and close the paper as if you have finished rolling the cigarette. The right hand, with the coins still oblique palmed, picks up the lighter and lights the flash paper. While the paper flashes and burns, extend the cigarette and you will have completed a beautiful flash production of a cigarette. The left hand still holding the lighter, lights the cigarette, and then places it on the table. Take a few drags from the cigarette and then pick up the lighter and packet of papers in the right hand and deposit them in your right jacket pocket. Finger palm the crumpled $1 bill in the right hand and withdraw the hand from the pocket.

Stage Two — Production of Coins

With the bill still palmed in the right hand reach up to your mouth to take the cigarette away. Take one last drag and blow the smoke into the air. With the coins still palmed in the left hand reach up in the smoke and slide a coin to the fingertips as if you produced the coin from the smoke. Pinch the coin between the left second finger and thumb and place it on the table. The remaining coin in the left hand will be perfectly concealed in the oblique palm during this action. Repeat this same sequence to produce the second coin from the smoke and place it on the table also.

Stage Three — Transformation of Coins

The final stage is solely Ross Bertram's "Hush Money" (Magic and Methods of Ross Bertram, p.51). After the coins are Downs Palmed, take the cigarette and wave it over your left hand for effect. Open the hand revealing the $1 bill. Return the cigarette to your mouth and then unfold the bill. Use the initial 'clean up' suggested in Ross' fine book. Place the $1 bill with the coins in your right trouser pocket and dispose of the cigarette as you wish.

Observations

No originality is claimed here, only the routining. Several points make this routine particularly effective, the most important being the 'one ahead' principle. Because the left hand never once returns to the pocket, the coins that are produced should be a surprise. Especially since all the steals are logically covered and then delayed. The productions and transformations should proceed very smoothly. Practice this routine a little and you will be able to present a very pretty magical effect.

Editorial Note

Not everybody will be familiar with the Ross Bertram effect. This need not, however, occasion too much difficulty. There are numerous alternatives in magical literature and the reader will not have to look very hard to find a clean method of switching two visible coins for a note concealed in the right hand.

Obviously the text method is preferred but as David says, the routining is the most important aspect.

EDITORIAL

January 1982

Here we are at the start of Volume 7. At the moment we seem to be running approximately a year late. Let us hope that we can keep sufficient issues in the pipeline to pull back on that.

Pat Page, who has never, as far as I am aware, missed a single issue, has done much over the years to liven up Pabular. I do not actually get to see Pat's column until the magazine arrives. He sends all of his articles straight through to Nick Bolton. Consequently, his is always the first column that I turn to. He always has something pertinent to say, even when he is just talking about his travels. I hope that he sticks around for many more volumes.

Last month, Pat's travels took him, amongst other things, to the Magic Circle Close-Up Competition. One of his comments about the competitors was that ". . .at least a third of them shouldn't have been there." If one were to be pedantic, one could say that any member has the right to enter the competition, so there is no reason why they should not have been there. Of course, we know that this is not at all what Pat meant. I interpret his meaning to be, that at least a third of them should have had more sense than to enter. This prompted me to wonder about competitions in general and just why does anybody enter them. Especially people who must surely know that they have not got an act of sufficiently high standard.

On the face of it, there should be only one reason for entering a competition, and that is to win. Obviously not everybody is going to win, but everybody who enters should be a potential winner. However, there are people who enter knowing that in no way are they potential winners. Some of them do so with good reasons. I have attempted to list a few of these possible reasons below:

- 1) Pressure from the organiser. Sometimes, if a competition is scheduled to take place and entries are a bit slow coming in, it is not altogether unknown for the organiser to "persuade" one or two friends to enter in order to make up the numbers.
- 2) As a "Shop Window". This is when a newcomer enters, because he knows that he is reasonably good and just wants to let the others see him work, in order to gain acceptance. In some competitions, as with the Magic Circle, there are people who are taking entrance examinations etc. These people are not looking necessarily towards winning any prizes. They just need to notch up a certain number of marks in order to pass their own individual test.
- 3) As a prelude to a more important competition. Say that a person has an act, which he intends to enter in a major competition somewhere. It makes sense to knock it into shape by entering smaller local competitions.

These, then, are some reasons why a performer may legitimately enter a competition, without necessarily looking to win it. No doubt there are others. However, all of these reasons, with the possible exception of the first, would suggest a certain ambition to achieve a reasonable standard. And even the first category would normally produce performers who the organiser felt would uphold the good name of the event.

So we are still left with the question of why so many substandard performers turn up year after year in different competitions. Is it that competitions really do not matter? After all, if twenty men sit down and perform their acts and one is voted the best, what does it prove? Does it make him a good magician and elevate him in the sight of his colleagues? Not necessarily. It merely means that of the twenty people who chose to enter, that particular panel of judges, on that particular night, in front of that particular audience, thought that he was to some extent superior to the remaining nineteen. In front of another audience, on a different night, the result might not have been the same. The whole twenty entrants might be the twenty worst magicians in the country anyway. Winning proves very little. Nor are the rewards much to write home about. A small cash prize possibly, a worn out tin cup or shield on loan for a year, your name on some scroll or plaque. Then what? Do people rush to book you? Do all sorts of doors fly open before you? No, they do not. It would be interesting to see lists of major competition winners over the last twenty years. Some have gone on to greater things, but a good proportion seem to have disappeared completely as national figures. Often winning a major award seems to be a one way ticket to obscurity. Just think how many I.B.M. Shield winners in the last twenty years have walked off the stage after the Gala Show, and the following year have never been seen at a major convention. Then think how many people are regularly seen over and over again, and yet have never won a competition of any importance in their lives.

Winning a competition may have provided a useful springboard in some people's careers. I rather fancy that those people would have got where they did just the same had they not won. The competition may have helped them, but rarely has it been a turning point.

If we accept that what has so far been said is true, we are left with the question: do compeitions matter? Are they important? If so, what is their importance? Does it matter if their standard is high or low?

My own personal view (and this is only a hypothesis) is that competitions are important and do matter. I believe that ever since the dawn of time people have always enjoyed competing with each other in contests of skill/strength etc. Also people have enjoyed watching these competitions. Perhaps it might go even deeper than that. Perhaps we obtain some kind of tribal reassurance from competing/watching the fittest compete. It might be a sort of collective show of strength. Perhaps this is one reason why we feel let down when a competition is below par, or annoyed with a competitor, who we think is not fit to be representing us.

One of the things that set magical competitions apart from the jousting tournaments of days of yore, is that the losers do not suffer physical pain. That privilege is left to the audience! Perhaps this is why the weak are less reticent about entering than they would be if it were say a lion taming contest. After all the only thing that can get hurt is their pride. If they have not got enough of that to make them want to produce a creditable act, then the injuries will be purely cosmetic anyway.

Perhaps the answer is to introduce a system of forfeits, whereby the people with the lowest marks have to pay for the prizes won by the triumphant. Or alternatively they could always have compulsory pelting with rotten vegetables.

"The Complete Walt Lees CANNIBAL CARD ACT", by Walt Lees. Forty pages, ninety nine photographs. Author's publication. Price £4.75 plus postage 32p.

The title of this book, and the very colourful and highly descriptive front cover will, I'm sure, make casual observers wonder just what lies between the covers. A sub-heading — 'Top Class Card Magic' — says it all, however.

The fearless and intrepid Editor of Magic's sometime monthly magazine has done it again. Three books in almost as many minutes. First came 'Four Professional Card Tricks', breathlessly followed by 'Roger Crossthwaite's Commercial Card Magic'. And now, this third opus — in the same style and format as the previous duo. Sad to say there is less of the Lees humour in this tome than has been evident recently, but the material is as strong as ever.

The book features a complete eight to ten minute commercial routine of card magic, the centrepiece of which is the late Lynn Searle's 'Cannibal Cards' effect. But, as ever, with Walt Lees, there's a lot more to it than that.

The routine kicks off with a couple of strong and direct card effects which, though having nothing specifically to do with the Cannibal Cards, sets the scene for what is really the meat of the routine, and introduces the 'Cannibals', loosely disguised as the four jacks. The black jacks appear first — magically (how else?) and promptly change into the red jacks. The black jacks then reappear, and a small packet effect follows.

Following this comes a very clear description of the Card Circle, developed from the one popularised a few years ago by Dai Vernon, and then we're into the Cannibal Cards segment itself. The Cannibals effect is really just a series of card vanishes embellished by a nonsense story. In recent years there have been many versions, some impromptu and some using highly gaffed cards. In keeping with the rest of the routine, the Lees Cannibals features only regular cards. It is not difficult either, relying entirely on standard moves.

A 'Collectors-type' ending reproduces the Cannibals victims, and a fancy triple cut rounds out both the routine and the book.

No review can do justice to any book — even granted unlimited time and space. This one is no exception. The foregoing doesn't sound like much to get excited about. Only the bare bones (pun intended) have been mentioned, but like the proverbial iceberg, a closer examination will reveal much more. Every conceivable scrap of information is given to enable the reader to actually perform the whole routine, rather than merely execute the mechanics. Details such as how to choose assisting spectators, who to look at, and when to look; what to do whilst looking.

All this and more is covered from 'A to Z'. And for me, as with his previous books, this is where Walt Lees scores. Technically there is nothing in the book to daunt the average card fan, and, strictly on a technical level, there is not a lot to excite him either — though I exclude the Card Circle, the triple cut, and a chapter on the elusive Double Lift from this, which are worthy of the closest study. But Walt shows how it is possible to use standard techniques and present entertaining and mystifying magic. The accent is not on technique, but, as it should be, on presentation. And here the book scores heavily. Excellent value, well worth a close look.

Roy Walton's THE COMPLETE WALTON Volume 1. Published by L. Davenport and Co. Price £12.50.

This is a hard-backed book of 226 pages $(8\% \times 5\% \text{ inches})$ with 62 line drawings by Julia Walton.

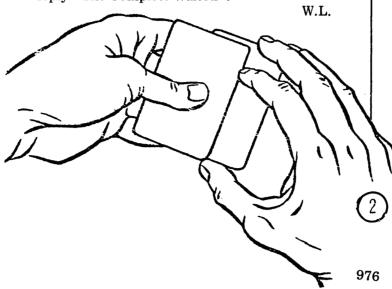

For a number of years now, the latest Roy Walton book has always been an event eagerly awaited by those who know what is best in card magic. Magicians all over the world have almost come to take for granted his prolific output of consistently high grade magic. Perhaps, because this output has been scattered pretty widely over various publications, many, myself included, probably failed to realise just how prolific it has been. That is why I was completely knocked out when presented with this large book! I was even more knocked out when I realised that this was just part one and that there would be a similar sized book to follow next year. There is no doubt in my mind, that when these two volumes are out and about, they will do much to establish Roy Walton in his rightful place as one of the world's foremost innovators with a pack of cards.

The book contains 113 effects and 13 descriptions of useful sleights. It comprises of the complete texts of seven of Roy's books, plus two new chapters, one on sleights and the other containing ten previously unpublished items. These two chapters alone are worth buying the book for, even if you already have every one of his other books. Please do not think that this is just a straight reprint of those books. The whole thing has been revised, updated and given extra illustrations.

It would be impossible to praise the work of Roy Walton too highly so I will not try. He is one of the very few British close-up workers who enjoys international respect. If you have never read any of his books, I would urge you to buy this one (and envy you the treat that you have awaiting you). If you have read any of his stuff you will want this book anyway, without me saying more.

If the above reads more like a sales spiel than an appraisal, I make no apologies. I have written and published a few books myself, which I would naturally prefer to sell. But I would have no choice, if approached and asked what was the best buy of 1981, other than to reply "The Complete Walton".

In 1964 Ramon Varela, a very accomplished Spanish magician, published in Misdirection magazine an effect which I immediately liked. Unfortunately it did not suit my requirements. Now follows my adaptation of that effect. I hope it brings pleasure to yourself and your customers.

THREE INTO ONE WON'T GO by John Fells

Effect

Three blue backed cards are shown one at a time. They are all aces of clubs. However one of the aces is later found to have turned face up between the other two, and when its face is fully disclosed it is found to be, not the ace of clubs, but three miniature aces. When the faces of the other two aces are shown they are found to be blank. What is more when the three ace card is turned face down it is found to have a red back.

You will require

Two blank blue backed cards.

One blue backed ace of clubs.

A red backed card with a specially printed face as shown in Fig 3.

Preparation

Rub with melrose the faces of the specially printed card and one of the blank blue backed cards.

Alternatively treat with roughing fluid.

Place both these cards face to face and they will temporarily join together and become one.

Set-up

Place the two prepared cards together on the table with the blue back showing. Place the other two cards face down on top. The ace being the top card of the group.

They can all now be put away in a plastic holder or wallet face down till the effect is to be performed.

Presentation

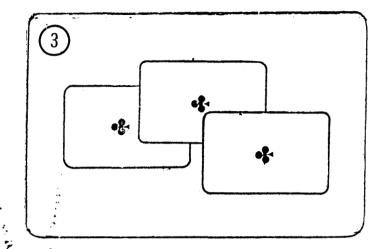

Remove the cards from the wallet face down being careful not to expose the bottom face up card.

Hold face down in dealing position in left hand.

Take the cards from the left hand by placing the index and fingers of the right hand underneath the inner right corner of the cards with the thumb on top.

Fan the three cards (?) by spreading the fingers and thumb in opposite directions: as you say "I like to show you a little something. . ." Due to the way in which the cards have been prepared they will move together as one. Close the fan and hold the cards face down in the right hand as in Fig 1. Count the cards into the left hand as shown in Fig 2 reversing their order. The ace of clubs will now be face down on the bottom and the double card will be on top.

As you do so, you say ". . . with this, one, two, three cards." Hold the cards face down in the glide position in the left hand. IMPORTANT. The new few moves must be performed smoothly and without hesitation. Turn your left hand palm up and show the ace of clubs. Turn your hand palm down again, perform the glide and remove the blank face card which goes face down on the table "and they are all in fact aces of clubs". Again turn your hand palm up, show ace of clubs, turn your hand palm down again and remove top card (double card) and place on top of tabled card. Finally turn your hand face up again as before, show ace of clubs, take it with the right hand which then slides it beneath the two (?) tabled cards and in this way uses it to pick those two cards (?) up. Place all three into the left hand which immediately palms the bottom card (ace of clubs) while appearing to square the cards. The right hand which has not lost its grip of the cards moves forward with them and places them on the table, at the same time the left hand laps the ace of clubs and immediately returns to the tabled cards and assists the right hand to spread them, first only a fraction on the table (forcing the two prepared cards apart) and thus exposing the centre face up card as you say "But the mystery in these cards is that they seem to perform on their own. For instance on this occasion the centre ace appears to have turned itself face up." Show the face of this card and also turn the two face down cards face up. "In fact they have done more than that, all three aces have joined together, and this ace in its embarrassment has developed a red back." Turn the centre card face down and show the red back.

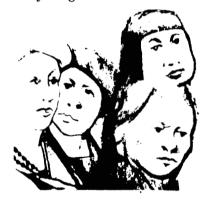

DUMBO

by Wally Boyce

This is just a quick little gag/bit of business. How or when you use it is entirely a matter of choice.

The scenario is this. At some point in the act the magician asks the audience, "Have you ever seen an elephant fly?". . .

... After a slight pause the wizard continues, "Well! This is an elephant fly!" and so saying, produces, magically or otherwise, a very long ZIP FASTENER!

THE OLD-TIMERS KNEW A TRICK OR TWO!

 Recollections of Horace Spencer, as told by his friend and associate Dick Turpin to Walt Lees.

Horace Spencer was the brother of Stanley Spencer the famous painter. He seems to have been in many ways the "black sheep" of the family, prefering to spend much of his time busking around the London pubs. He was by all accounts a very fine magician, especially in the rough and tumble atmosphere of publand in the 1930's depression.

It was during this time that he met up with Dick Turpin and they decided to work together as a team. He taught Dick many of his own effects and together they survived those difficult years. It is interesting to compare the work of Horace Spencer with that of the legendary Max Malini. Both were opportunists, quick to take advantage of any situation, in which they found themselves. Also both were adept at creating situations and secretly preparing well in advance for something that would seemingly be done "impromptu".

Here are a couple of examples of how Spencer would prepare for a piece of "impromptu" magic. And how he would use it to advantage.

The Vanishing Cane

Spencer always carried a vanishing cane, ready for use. He would treat it as a normal walking stick and would casually put it in the umberella stand of any pub, that he happened to be working. Whether or not the cane that he used was a spring steel one, or whether one of the older type, which had to be pushed closed, is not clear. Nor is it important. What matters is the way in which the cane was utilised to Spencer's financial advantage.

If the particular pub happened to play well, and there were rich pickings, Spencer would depart, "absent mindedly" leaving his stick behind. This would provide him with a perfect excuse to return the next day and enquire whether he had left it there. He would then go and find it in the hat stand, all the time conversing with the barman from across the room. Naturally everybody would be aware of him, because of his raised voice.

When he found the cane, he would make some remark to the effect that it was a very expensive one and that he did not want to risk losing it, so he had better send it home now. As he said this, he would make sure that plenty of people were watching, and vanish the cane.

In this way, he was able to row himself into that lucrative establishment on two successive occasions. Normally most publicans would not give a busker permission to work their premises as frequently as that.

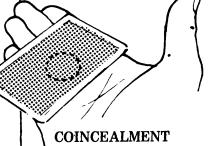

The Rubber Eggs

Although it was no doubt possible to obtain magicians rubber eggs at the time, Spencer preferred to make his own. He would obtain small, white balloons from toy shops and partially inflate them. In this state, they closely resembled the peeled, hard boiled eggs, which were sold in some pubs at that time. These were frequently displayed in large bowls of pickle vinegar on the counter.

Spencer would walk into the pub and, while the barman was serving another customer, would quietly drop three of the partially inflated balloons amongst the eggs.

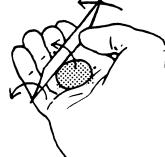

He would then order his drink, usually selecting something that was near the other end of the bar. Then, when the barman went to get it, while he was as far away as possible, Spencer would call out to him, "I will have three of these eggs as well. Have you got a bag to put them in?" Setting things up in this way gave Spencer a pretext for talking in a loud voice, causing several people to look in his direction. When he "noticed" them looking, he would address them to the effect that he always enjoyed a pickled egg or two for his supper. He would continue to converse with them, until the barman returned with his drink and the bag (apparently pubs used to have paper bags to wrap snacks in, in those days). Spencer would then carefully select his three balloons from the bowl, drop them delicately into the bag, and then appear to be at a loss as to what to do with it. Finally, with some comment that he had better send the eggs home now, he would screw up the bag, bursting the balloons in the process. Quite how he did this cleanly is not clear. Perhaps he had a convenient pin concealed somewhere. Alternatively he may have set fire to it. Again this is not important. The lesson is how he used this very simple means to attract the attention of the whole company and row himself in.

In the next issue we will tell you how he managed to get himself into the lounges of pubs where buskers were only permitted in the public bars. Also we will tell you how he used to throw money away in the street!

by Paul Hallas

The above just goes to prove that I can come up with titles just as corny as anyone else. In fact this is not a trick at all but a move. It is a move limited only by your imagination, which is another way of saying I haven't quite figured out what to do with it yet! It will probably feel quite at home in a "Matrix" type of effect.

Basically you are showing a card in your hand, the card is turned over, and yet a coin in the hand is never seen. It is so easy to do it is laughable. (Like most of my magic).

A card is placed over a coin that is fingerpalmed in the right hand and the hand fully opened. Then again, if you wish a card with coin concealed behind it can be placed onto the outstretched right palm. That covers most variations I think. Either way, the result should look like Fig 1.

Now comes the turnover: place your left hand in your pocket — you don't need it. Start to curl the right fingers. At the same time bend in your right thumb and lift the card from the rear end. When the card is at right angles to the palm, part of the coin will probably be visible to you but entirely hidden from the front. See the totally unecessary Fig 2. At this point the thumb presses onto a fingertip through the card, and moves forward slightly. This angles the card so that the coin is no longer visible to the performer. The thumb moves away and the fingers are outstretched again. If done correctly you appear just to have flipped the card over, the coin will not have been seen. It can be done very fast or very slow. In fact it is more or less the same move as the one used to show a business card blank on both sides except that you do not turn the hand over.

This is a "sucker" trick. In presenting this classic, it is necessary that the audience should be really convinced that I have "goofed". They must really be made to believe that I produced the wrong cards. In the end everyone will know that they have been "led up the garden path" and that it was all planned. In most sucker tricks it is usually all too obvious that the magician is only pretending that the trick has gone wrong. To really convince people requires an understanding of how you would act if the mistake were genuine. Acting alone is not enough. It is necessary that the effect be constructed and the moves chosen so as to give the maximum scope for you to play the part. The routine plus the moves plus the acting should form a harmonious whole.

I will try to elaborate on this in detail when we come to the key points of the routine. Set up

Reading from the face of the deck 9C-2H-2C-Double face card showing 9C-any court card. (The double face card that I use is 9C/2D. The regular 2D is removed from the pack). Obviously not everybody will have the necessary double face card. Once the routine is understood it can be adapted to be done with other cards.

Routine

Ask someone to say stop when you hindushuffle the cards. This way the 9D is forced. After the card is seen by everyone, the deck is reassembled, bringing the 9D somewhere in the middle of the deck. As you assemble the deck, act a bit startled, look intently at the side of the deck for a second or two (pretend you have lost control of the chosen card), shrug your shoulders as if saying, "Ah well, we might still try it." (This is all of course SILENT acting). Place the deck face down on the table. Make a magical gesture, and spread the deck from left to right. This will reveal the face up 2D (really the double facer). This whole procedure up till now is very clean and would be very strong magic, if you had indeed produced the chosen card; alas you have not. People will not be too amazed that the trick went wrong, since they sensed you make a mistake at the beginning, (this is why the little hesitation was important when you assembled the deck).

So you have produced the wrong card. Let us think now what you would normally do when your best card-revelation misses.

Outwardly you would try to stay calm — inwardly: PANIC. Many thoughts would flash through your mind, the very first, which enabled you to put matters right, you would probably use. It is highly likely that this second attempt at finding the right card will not be as flashy and as effective as your best card-revelation. So to ensure that the audience think that you "goofed", do just that.

Find the second card in a less flashy and effective way.

The face-up 2D (double facer) is pushed out of the spread. The left hand gathers the cards at the left side of the 2D; the right hand the cards at the right side. The right hand cards are placed UNDER the left hand cards. (At this point you have on top of the deck: 2C-2H-9C. The picture card is on the bottom). The deck is face-down in the left hand.

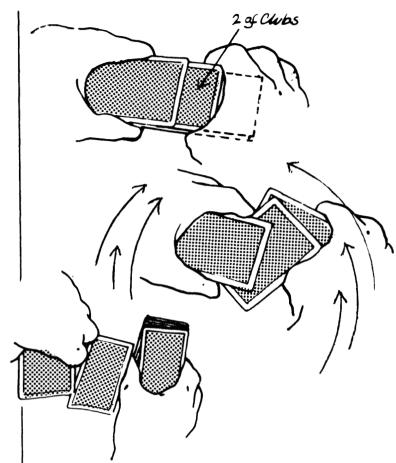

Cut off about 1/3 of the deck and while you do so, peek at the card you cut at. Do not hide this peeking, although do not make it too obvious either. You do not have to remember this peeked card. You only peek it to give the audience the impression that you are improvising to find the correct one. The cut-off portion is "weaved into the rest of the deck. Hold the deck vertically, faces to the audience. The upper card of the right portion (the 2C) is pushed further to the left as in Fig 1.

Now lower the left packet and move the right packet upward. The 2C will swivel into view between the right thumb and the left forefinger (Figs 2-3). After everybody has seen the 2C let it fall from between your two hands face-down on the double facer, already on the table. The right packet is placed under the left packet (which leaves the 2H and 9C somewhere in the middle).

The audience have two reasons to think you are really messing things up here. Firstly because the method used is not as magical for laymen as the method used for the first card (magicians may think otherwise because the second method is more novel to them), thereby showing that you were groping for a method — any method — to produce the card. Secondly, this card is also a 2, making the audience believe you think that they have chosen a 2 (what do they know about controlling cards?). "Wow, this magician thinks we chose a 2, he is on the wrong path altogether." The production of the third wrong card will strengthen this belief.

Fan through the deck, faces towards you, cut the 2H to the top. Turn the deck face down in the left hand and show the card you cut at openly, namely the 2H.

. The least effective method to produce a card would be to openly take it out of the deck and show it, this is what you have done. You do not seem to care anymore about producing it, in a fancy way, after two failures. You are just frantically searching for the chosen card. This would be the normal procedure, which a none too competent magician might employ if he were in trouble.

Now in utter disbelief at your own mistakes, ask them if they chose the 2S. Whilst asking this, there is the perfect moment to do the top-change. The 2H is changed for the 9C, which is thrown, face down, on top of the other two cards on the table.

The top-change is not seen because nobody is interested in the cards anymore, they are more interested in you, a helpless soul, making things worse and worse for yourself. Also it is not seen because you are asking the question about the 2S.

When the audience say that they did not choose the 25, adopt an attitude of giving up. Pretend all is lost and that the trick is over.

This pretending that the trick is over is important. It sells the idea you have really 'loused' the whole trick up.

Ask them which card they did choose. After they tell you, look through the deck and shrug your shoulders. Pretend that you do not understand how the trick could possibly have gone wrong.

Three two's were produced in successively less interesting ways. You did not find the chosen card. The trick seems to have ended. When doing this trick I have never come across a layman who thought that all of this was just a set-up. They have all been convinced that I really blundered. For a sucker-trick I think that this is essential. If they are not truly convinced, then it becomes just another trick.

Many times after the effect is over people say, "I thought you missed! You fooled me! It was all part of the trick!" They are fooled by the acting more than by the mechanics. They usually do not consider the technical part to be important. I believe that by convincing people you missed — really missed — they will enjoy sucker-tricks (so long as it is not done in a smart-alec, conceited manner).

On the table are the double-facer (2D showing) — a face down 2C — a face down 9C (which is believed to be 2H). The deck is face down in the left hand with 2H on top.

After letting the audience tell you that the 9C was the chosen card, pick up the 9C from the table (it is thought to be 2H). Rub it against the left sleeve. Peek at the card while saying, "The card was the 9 of . . ." The audience will say, "Clubs." "Ah, yes clubs." Rub the card a little more and show it to be the 9C. (This asking of the suit of the chosen card gives the idea you could change the card to whatever they say, implying real magic).

When it is shown and people see the chosen card, they start to realise that you fooled them into thinking that you had missed. There will be relaxation and a perfect opportunity for another top change.

The 2H is placed face down on the table (supposedly the 9C). When you make the top change keep a left little finger break beneath the 9C. The left hand turns palm down (with the deck in hand) and picks up the second card, while the right hand places down the 2H.

Turn the left hand palm up again. Make a double lift. The right hand now has the 2C back to back with the 9C. The snap change is performed UNDER the sleeve. (This is an idea of Al Leech, it makes the snap change more magical). Both cards are dropped onto the deck. The 9C only is taken in the right hand again. With this card the double facer is turned over. Actually the Mexican turnover is performed. So the 9C ends up face down on the table, the double facer ends up in the palm down right hand, 9C side showing. The audience will assume that the face down card is the 2D.

Let someone on your right rub the card on the tablecloth and turn it over. When the spectator turns over the card, all eye's will be on him.

In the meantime the right hand has turned palm up, at the same time adjusting the double facer to keep the 9C side visible.

As the spectator turns over the 9C on the table, make the top change, and turn the left hand palm down immediately. The 2C is placed face down on top of the 2H already on the table. Take the 9C from the spectator and fairly place it face down on top of the two cards on the table.

By now the three two's have all been changed into the 9C. The method of changing them is stronger each time. The first changes while face down, the second card while face up. The third is seemingly changed by the spectator.

All top changes are well covered, either by the psychology of the specific moment or when attention is at another spot.

People are usually anxious to take the 3 cards from the table to see for themselves, if they are really all 9C. This must be avoided. I do it this way. I stretch my hands forward in front of the 3 cards, so that in order to take the cards they would have to go underneath my arms. This will prevent them.

As my hands go forward, the left turns palm up while the right covers the deck and immediately palms the double facer (9C side is against the right palm). The deck is turned face up, immediately, and the front card is colour changed into the 9C. This colour change can look good, because it seems impossible to have stolen a card from the deck, since it is face up for only a moment before the colour change occurs. Now the deck is turned face down, and by the Hindu shuffle it is shown to contain only 9C's.

When doing the Hindu shuffle, I only show a 9C 3 or 4 times. Also I never show the same person a 9C twice in a row. I show the 9C to different people, so the deck is not held in a fixed position. Done this way I have found it to be deceptive.

After you have shown the last 9C, the right packet is placed under the rest of the deck (9C is on the bottom now).

The deck is again turned face up, the right hand takes the double facer. While this card is being taken, the left hand turns palm down again, in order not to flash the face of the deck.

While saying it was all an optical illusion, rub the double facer (9C side showing) over the 3 cards on the table. Then the double facer is slid under the 3 cards and they are turned over. Actually this is the Mexican turnover again, but this time 3 cards are turned over. The double facer is added to the 2H and 2C, and is now 2D side showing, and the regular 9C is held back in the right hand.

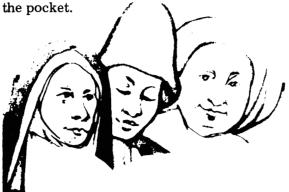

While the three tabled cards are turned over, the left hand turns the deck face down, (by turning it with the fingers, so the hand itself stays palm up).

The right hand holds the regular 9 face down and immobile. From now on. The left hand, with the deck, goes to the front and to the right. In this movement it passes the right hand and top changes the card in the process.

The left hand turns the deck face up and places it on the table, and spreads it to the left. The first few cards are not spread to hide the regular 9. This is done while saying, "As you see, there is not a single 9C in the deck."

Then turn over the card in the right hand saying, "Neither is this card the 9."

Then while explaining that there has never been a 9—that it was all imagination—the deck is scooped up, the top card (the 9) is palmed in the right hand and produced from

The Page boy speaks....

I wonder how many readers of this magazine actually go out and perform close-up magic regularly? It appears to me, and many others before me, that most members of magic clubs go there to amuse, amaze and entertain each other. I am not suggesting this is bad. I think it's very good. They enjoy their hobby, which is what a hobby is for, fun. But they don't as a group contribute very much to the hobby.

There are, however, some magical hobbists who take things more seriously. They are genuinely interested in improving their skill, knowledge or understanding of misdirection, or whatever. The first group do little more than provide an audience or sounding board for the second group who really only want to see magic performed for them or have it explained to them. In other words they want to learn new tricks most of the time.

Let's assume that I am right. Actually, know I am right but I do realise that there are more than a few of the first group who will disagree with me. If I am right, can anything be done to bring the two groups onto the same wavelength? Answer — no.

Not only is the answer no, but in my arrogant opinion, the answer should be no. They are two different groups with different interests and different aims. The first group could never bring themselves to try and understand the meaning of the word misdirection, and the second group tend to look down their noses at the latest version of the paddle trick.

I don't often discuss magic tricks as such in this column but I would like to impart a little of my close-up experience for the benefit of the aforementioned second group. The first group, of course, will be able to appreciate it but the beauty of this one shattering piece of knowledge is that only the second group will be able to benefit by it. Are you getting the impression that I am with the second group?

The effect is the Sponge Balls. Have you ever had to perform close-up in an after-dinner situation where there are perhaps ten people sitting around a circular table? This is almost the norm for a banquet-style function. Usually the table is cluttered up with glasses, bottles and a vase of flowers, a candleabra and lord knows what else. The first problem you come up against is the fact that you can't do anything on the table top because the people sitting at the other side of the table are about seven feet away trying to see through a maze of glasses, bottles etc.

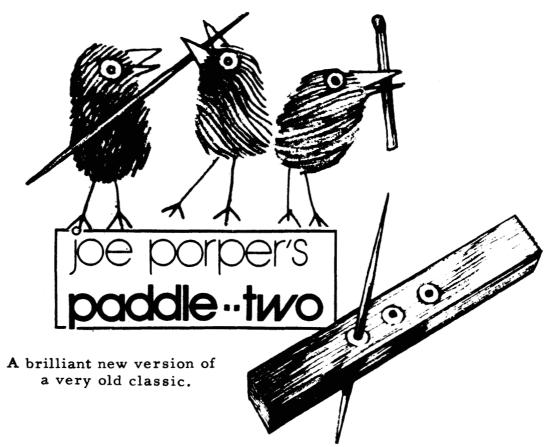

Solution coming up. Instead of placing the sponge balls on the table top, turn three glasses mouth down on the table and use the bottoms of the glasses as a working surface. The taller the glasses the better. The logical sequel is to carry a small board, perhaps twelve by five inches and to lay that across two upturned glasses as a sort of raised table on top of the table.

That's it, folks. It's a gem of an idea, it really works, it is 100% practical. And you know who can't use it.

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

A paddle is shown with three holes right the way through. A tooth-pick or match is placed into the centre and immediately jumps to the end hole. This is repeated several times.

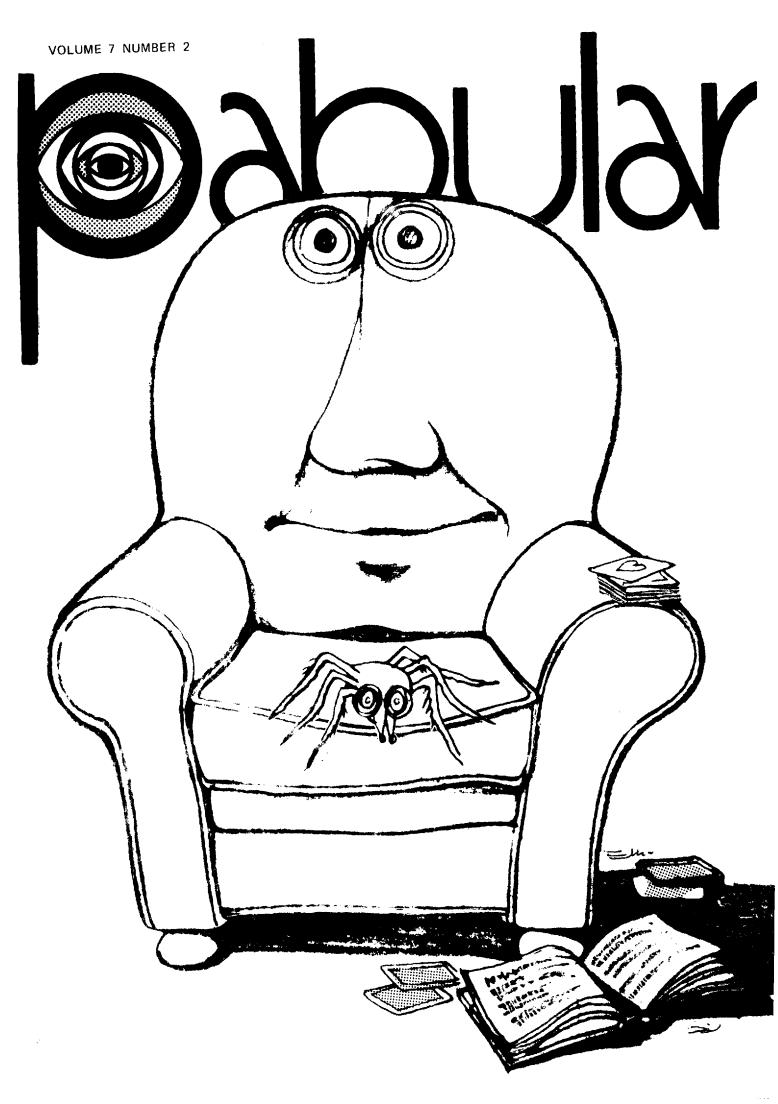

The brilliant new addition to this trick which lifts it right out of the ordinary is that at the end the spectator may examine the paddle and match to his hearts content - there is nothing to find.

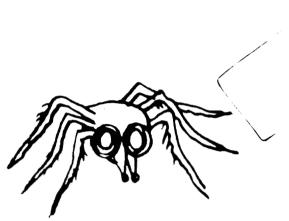

This really fools the 'knowing ones'. Very highly recommended this brand new effect is exclusively available from Repro Magic.

Be among the very first to work this smashing new effect. Send for yours today. Very easy to do.

THE ???? IN WALLET

Pat Conway

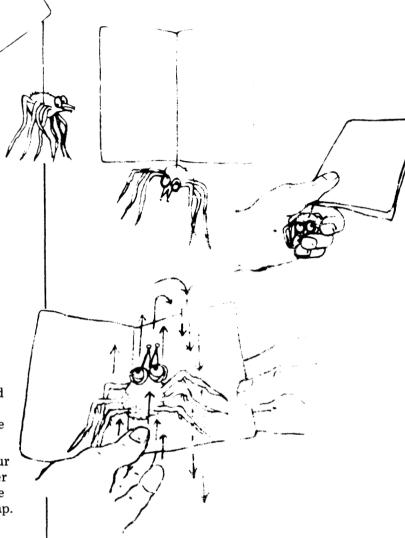

This is a great commercial gag, which Pat has kindly donated. Anybody who works for lay people should get a lot of mileage from it.

Go to your local toy shop and buy a rubber spider/creepy crawly. This should be about the size of a golf ball and capable of being concealed comfortably in a finger palm position. Take a piece of thin, round elastic about six inches long (the actual size will vary from performer to performer). Thread one end of the elastic through the centre of the rubber spider (you have first made a small hole) in the appropriate place.

Attach the other end of the elastic to your wallet at the point shown in Fig 1. It can either be threaded through a small hole, drilled in the wallet, or stuck down with a small adhesive flap. The hole is probably preferable as the elastic will be under tension when in use. Adjust the length of the elastic so that it is a little shorter than the length of the wallet.

Open the wallet as in Fig 2 and stretch the elastic, so that the spider can be positioned as shown in the picture. Then close the wallet and place it in your inside coat pocket, so that the spider is the first thing that you will grasp as you remove the wallet.

When you are ready to perform the gag, reach inside your coat and grab the wallet. The hand should hold it as in Fig 3 with the fingers concealing the spider. Open the wallet flat as in Fig 4 and at the same moment release the spider. Because of the tension of the elastic it will be catapulted over the front of the wallet, where it will dangle down as though from a web, bouncing up and down. The effect is, to say the least, startling. It makes an ideal intro for any small trick that can be carried around inside a wallet.

TAKE ME TO YOUR LEADER

Keith Bennett

This is a very short, clean and straightforward "Follow the Leader" effect. There are no fishy moves nor is there any excessive card handling. No set-ups or extra cards are required.

EFFECT

The performer removes four red cards and four blacks from a shuffled pack. This can be borrowed, if desired. The condition of the cards is not crucial to success. The cards are placed in two separate piles on the table. All of the red cards are in one pile and the blacks in the other. By altering the positions on one of the red cards and one of the blacks, the remainder are caused to transpose. This is repeated a number of times.

WORKING

Remove any four red cards and any four blacks from the pack. Drop the red cards face upwards in a pile on the table. Next place the blacks face up on top of the reds. This should be done as part of the removing process and not as a separate action. In other words, go through the pack and remove four red cards first of all. Then, having placed these on the table, remove four blacks. In this manner, the position of the eight cards in the pile is arrived at naturally, rather than appearing contrived.

Pick up the pile and place it, face downwards, into the left hand. With the left thumb, spread off the top four cards. These are taken by the right hand, which holds them in a small fan. Casually turn them, face towards the audience, showing four reds. Ask, "Do you know why these are called playing cards?" Pause and wait for an answer. While waiting, look enquiringly at the spectator(s). It is this business of asking a question and waiting for a reply which starts the misdirective cover for the critical move. As you look at the audience, relax and casually return the cards from the right hand to the top of the packet in the left. In the process, the left little finter obtains a break beneath the top three red cards. When you have heard whatever answers the audience suggest to your question, provide your own. Say, "They are called playing cards because they like playing games!"

As you say the line, the right hand casually retakes the three red cards, above the left little finger break. Hold the packet between the tips of the right fingers and thumb. This is a similar grip to that used in the Vernon version of the Elmsley count.

Separate the hands about eight inches and using the left thumb push the remaining five card packet into a similar fingertip grip. Do not make a move of this. Just casually do it, while gesturing in a natural manner. Follow this up by rotating both hands in unison at the wrists to bring the palms towards the floor and, of course, the cards face upwards. This will allow the audience to see the reds in one hand and the blacks in the other. Or so they should think; if you have carried out the above actions with the right air of nonchalance.

Rotate the hands back to their original position again, turning the cards face down once more. Making a remark such as, "For instance, these cards like to play 'Follow the Leader", replace the three cards from the right hand beneath the five held in the left.

If the above action is to be executed without arousing suspicion, it must be performed in a casual, guileless manner. There must not be the least suggestion of any chicanery. The timing will come from the three lines of patter so far given. These are all that need be said, and indeed all that should be said. The action should have been completed with the words ". . . 'Follow the Leader'. Remember that so far nothing magical has happened. Nothing has been done that should arouse suspicion or require explanation. The trick, as far as the spectator(s) is concerned, has not even started. The only thing that could give you away is your own manner. The whole of this move should be a casual gesture, with no emphasis placed upon it.

The packet will now read, from top to bottom (with all the cards face down) one red, four blacks, three reds. The audience should believe that there are four blacks followed by four reds.

Say, "I'll show you how they play it." With the left thumb, push off the top four cards, face down into the right hand. Place these in a face up pile, reasonably square so as not to betray the presence of the odd red one. Many performers would contrive at this point to perform an Elmsley/Jordan type count to show four blacks. If your acting and timing have been correct this is totally unnecessary. Indeed to do so would not only be a tacit admission of lack of faith, it would also serve to arouse suspicion. The audience would wonder why you were taking the trouble to keep showing that which you suppose they already know. It is far better that they be allowed to assume what they have no reason for disbelieving, than to have their suspicions aroused by excessive "proof" and handling.

The four cards remaining in the left hand are squared and placed face up alongside the first pile, to its left.

Take the top card of each pile and place it face up on the table, in front of its pile i.e. towards the spectator(s). Explain that these are the "leader" cards. The other cards always follow them. So saying, turn the two piles face down and replace them behind their respective "leaders".

Change the "leader" cards over, so that they are in front of the wrong piles. Next turn over the top card of each pile, showing that it matches the new "leader". In other words, that the piles have somehow changed places. Place these two cards face up on top of their "leader" cards.

Leave the face up cards where they are. This time, exchange the two face down piles. Having done so, turn over the top card of each pile and show that once more they match the face up cards. Place them on top of their respective "leaders".

The position will now be that on the table, face up, are two piles of cards (three in each). Behind these are two face down cards, which match their respective piles. Casually turn these over and show them.

The final move is an optical illusion, which is credited to Dr Jacob Daley. It brings the effect to an extremely strong climax. It must be performed smoothly. When it is, the result is very striking. The effect is that the audience see you change the last two cards over and deal the red onto the black pile and vice versa. The cards still, almost visibly, change colour. It is one of those stunning optical illusions, which fool you, even when you have them explained.

Assuming that the right hand pile contains the red cards, (which it will if the directions so far given have been faithfully followed), pick up the red card between the tips of the right first and second fingers. Take the black into the left in a similar grip. Both cards should be face down at this point.

Rotate the hands slightly towards yourself, so that the cards are tilted sufficiently for their faces to be seen by the audience. Once the fact that the cards match their respective leaders has been grasped, bring them back to a horizontal position.

You are now going to apparently deal the right hand's card, face down onto the left hand pile. At the same time you are going to deal the left hand's card onto the pile on the right. In the process, however, the cards will be switched.

To perform the switch, bring the hands together so that the right hand can now take a hold of the left hand's card between the second and third fingers. Simultaneously, the left hand can grasp the right hand's card between the first finger and thumb. In this manner the two cards can be changed over.

Separate the hands and cross over the wrists. Deal the card in the left hand, face down, onto the right hand pile. At the same time, deal the right hand's card onto the pile on the left.

Obviously the above move needs to be performed very smoothly. There must be no hesitation or noise as the cards are exchanged.

Uncross the hands and with the right hand turn over the top card of the right hand pile, while the left hand turns over its top card. Do not finish there, however. Do the last move one more time, causing the cards to end up back where they started. In theory this double exchange of the last two cards should be bad magic. The two changes apparently cancelling each other out. This, in point of fact is not the case. The optical illusion gains from the repetition.

February 1982

First of all, an apology to those readers who normally renew their subs at the International Day in December. This year we were denied the stand that we usually have. Obviously Ron MacMillan has every right to do this, if he chooses.

Nice to see that Paul Daniels was in the top ten Christmas television shows. Mind you, with the plum spot on Christmas day, it was hardly surprising. None the less, it is still pleasant to see a magician well up in the ratings and to see the B.B.C. having sufficient faith in him to give him that spot. Of most interest to close-up workers, no doubt, would be his handling of the Glide in one of the card routines. The manner, in which he approached the sleight, was diametrically the opposite one to that of myself and I believe most other cardmen. He performed it very slowly and deliberately, calling attention to the "fairness" of the action. Amazingly enough, it worked. The lay people watching with me were totally unsuspecting. There is no doubt that Paul Daniels is a very deep thinker when it comes to magic. A much deeper thinker than most magicians possibly realise or give him credit for. His handling of this simple sleight showed this very clearly indeed.

A very nice gentleman (judging by his letter) called Verner Seitz, wrote from Copenhagen on several matters. One was the "Spirit Count" mentioned in Pabular Vol.6 No.12. He pointed out that this first appeared in Kabbala Vol.3 No.4.

Mr Seitz also suggested that we might try to put together a Fred Kaps memorial issue of Pabular. I wonder how readers feel about this. Would it be presumptuous of us? I would like to hear from anyone who knew Kaps and who has any personal experience of him, his approach to magic, his thinking and ideas. We did publish an article by him some years ago, setting out a basic philosophy of magic. It is a great loss that he was taken away at such a comparatively early age. I now throw the matter open to our readers.

Had a 'phone call from "The New Cresta Hotel", Hobs Moat Road, Solihull. They are having a Magical Extravaganza from 3rd-6th March. This opens at 8.00pm each evening and the cabaret is from 9pm to midnight. The acts featured will be Alan Shaxon, Mark Raffles and Shahad Malik. The compere will be Simon Lovell, an occasional contributor to these pages. There is no close-up as such, but no doubt Simon will be only too pleased to make contact with fellow enthusiasts.

The prospectus for Blackpool has just arrived. Those who did not attend the British Ring convention at Great Yarmouth will find much of interest. Those who did may have to keep ducking out and looking at the tower just to remind themselves that they are at a different convention (with at least nine performers the same). Still, Blackpool is always an enjoyable event and one not to be missed.

Just after Blackpool, on March 6th to be exact, Martin Breese is putting on a one-day close-up convention. The venue will be The Royal National Hotel, Bedford Way, Russell Square, London W.C.1. Starting time is 10.00am. Lecturers/teachers include Bobby Bernard, Ted Lesley and John Mendoza. Performers include Ralph Brackman, Ken de Courcy, Graham Jolley, Stephen Tucker and Steven Hamilton. Host and compere Pat Page. Admission is to be by ticket only; tickets are available from Martin at £15.

All in all, it looks like being a good line-up and should be an interesting and enjoyable day. Pabular will be represented too.

John Mendoza will be in the country all week, and is holding a series of mini-lectures and private lessons. Tickets for these are very limited. It is suggested that interested readers contact Martin personally for details.

MAGIC SHOES

Vic Allen

This is a gag that Vic has used extensively for some years. Whilst having absolutely no magical content, it has proved to be of great value in commercial situations. This is because it enables you to walk away from one table to a laugh, thereby creating a much easier opening to get in at your next.

When you are ready to terminate your stay on a table, point to your feet and say that you are wearing your "magic shoes". Offer to demonstrate the power of the shoes. Look down at your shoes and, in a tone of voice which suggests giving a direction or command, say "Toilet!" and proceed to walk off in the appropriate direction.

One little point of presentation to get the maximum out of the gag is not to turn your head in the direction that you are about to make your exit. In other words keep looking at your feet, while they turn to face the appropriate direction and start to move.

Vic says that one of the spin-offs from this particular gag is that often, when he walks up to a table, somebody will ask if he is wearing his "magic shoes". This tips him off to the fact that he has worked for this particular group before.

SIMPLICITY CARD IN WALLET

Rovi

When Rovi first showed me this, I was in two minds about whether or not to use it in Pabular. The reason for this was that I wondered just how many readers would appreciate its value. The method seems almost naive, until you try it out and discover just how effective it can be. It is then that you realise that the naivity was just superficial. The trick is really very subtle and just the sort of thing that makes the lay public flip in commercial situations.

A ball pen and a wallet containing a duplicate card (say the AH) are in your inner jacket pocket on the left hand side. At some point in a sequence of card effects, force the real AH from the pack onto a spectator. This should be done with either a fan force, or a ribbon spread force, not a slip force or anything like that.

Have the card noted and returned to the pack. Control it to the top and palm it off in the right hand. With the right hand go to the inner jacket pocket, ditch the card and remove the wallet.

Now for a most important detail. Do not mention the wallet. Simply place it on the table and immediately return to the pocket and remove the ball point pen. Do not so much as glance at the wallet. To the audience it will simply appear that the pen has fallen down inside the pocket and that you removed the wallet in order to get hold of it. While your right hand has been thus engaged, the left has simply passed the pack to the spectator. Remark that the trick is better if they actually sign their name on the card. Ask them to find it in the pack and sign it. It is while the spectator is looking for the card that you remove the wallet and the pen.

By the time you get the pen out the spectator will have been through the pack and failed to find the card. In all probability they will assume that it has been overlooked and will start to go through the pack again. Ask what is the problem. When the spectator says that he cannot find the card have somebody pick up the wallet and look inside.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Notice how Rovi has taken a simple—almost blatent—ruse and by several very subtle touches has contrived to throw off even the knowing ones. The points which are worthy of study are:-

- 1) The wallet is not introduced too early on. It could have been in view all the time and the performer never gone near it. That, however, would have left only one solution a duplicate card. The wallet is introduced at the right time and in such a manner that afterwards the audience will be unsure exactly when it did come out.
- 2) The introduction of the pen. Although the card is not signed people will remember afterwards that a pen came into it somewhere and will be unsure about this point. Also the "intention to have the card signed" psychologically prepares the audience to reject the idea of a duplicate.
- 3) The wallet is taken out without the least pause or fumble. How often is this the case with most other methods? Thus no attention falls on it until the climax.

4) Obviously the force used must not destroy the illusion that any card could have been chosen.

DOUBLE FORCE

Rovi

This is an application of the standard Back Slip Force. It compels the spectator to select one of two predetermined cards from the pack. Although the actual mechanics of the force are well known, this particular application does have a certain ingenious subtlety about it, which makes it worthy of attention. Rovi uses it extensively in his own work.

Secretly note the values of the two top cards of the pack. Execute the normal Back Slip Force (see "The Royal Road to Card Magic" or any one of innumerable other books if you do not know this). After making the move, do not simply extend the left hand packet towards the spectator for him to take the top card. Instead, place both packets face down on the table and allow him to look at the top card of either heap. As you will know the values of the top cards of both piles, it does not matter which one is looked at.

Obviously this force could not be used in those effects where a particular card must be taken. On the other hand, it can do very much to create the illusion of freedom and casualness. For some reason people do not seem to realise that the top card of the right hand pile would have been, if everything was fair, the original top card of the pack.

AN APPROACH TO MAGIC

Roger Crosthwaite

"Magic must be above all entertaining—visual—simple and uncomplicated. The magician must first and foremost be an entertainer. No matter how perfect his sleights and moves (and make no mistake about it, they ought to be perfect) unless he is an entertainer he will KILL magic."

This is something I once said to Lewis Ganson. He quoted it in an editorial for one of the 'Gens'. I would like to elaborate upon it a little and try to explain exactly what I mean by ENTERTAINING, VISUAL, SIMPLE and UNCOMPLICATED.

My dictionary defines entertaining as giving pleasure, diverting and/or amusing. Therefore, I feel that it is the function of an entertainer to give pleasure, to divert, to amuse. Many magicians, when learning a new trick, will slavishly follow the instructions. They neglect the matter of developing an entertaining, diverting, amusing presentation. They fail totally to appreciate the need to give pleasure to their audiences. It is very important to realise that the tricks which we read or buy are not, in themselves, entertainment. They are the tools, from which, with careful thought, entertainment can be fashioned.

As a first step towards entertaining, it is necessary to develop one's own distinctive style. The presentation can then be moulded to fit that style. It is tremendously important to discover the kind of person that you are and then to magnify that personality in terms of your magic. In my own case, I discovered quite quickly that the large paunch, which I was developing, coupled with my general bigness was something that could be played upon and sold. Something around which I could build an image and fit the type of magic that I liked doing. In my younger days I had tried to perform a silent manipulative act, after the style of Cardini. It was completely foreign to me. The first time that I walked out in front of an audience I felt uncomfortable and "wrong". They, of course, quickly sensed this. It did not suit my appearance and therefore was no way that I could look the part.

No book can tell you how to be entertaining. No trick can make you entertaining. It is you, that must make the trick entertaining. I have seen some incredibly entertaining magic, which has been very simple. It was entertaining because the performer had studied himself in sufficient depth to discover those aspects of his character which needed to be rounded out and developed. He then selected effects, which would capitalise to the maximum, on his character. As an example of this, let me mention that I frequently feature balloons in my work. This is because I am rather a balloon-like person. A balloon in my hands seems to become almost an extension of myself.

Please do not run away with the impression that, in order to give pleasure and amuse, one needs to be naturally funny. It is amazing how many naturally funny people can also be boring, unless they discipline themselves and channel their humour in the right direction.

One means of giving pleasure to an audience is to take their minds away from the problems of ordinary life. The harsh realities, which crowd in upon people. Provide instead a phantasy way of escape, which opens the door into a fairy story world, diverting from the tensions of everyday living.

People will not be willing to enter your phantasy world of magic, if the things that happen there are easily explained. Your magic must be deceptive. Magic, which fails to deceive an audience, insults their intelligence. Instead of being carried along with you they will merely look down on you.

The problem that you are now faced with is that, in order to carry the audience along with you, you must baffle them completely. At the same time, if you are not careful, the very business of fooling them can alienate them. It was Bill Nagler who pointed out that the old adage "it's fun to be fooled" is just not true. On the contrary, one of the best kept secrets in magic is that it is NOT fun to be fooled. Most people find the experience of being fooled a threatening one. Fooling a person demeans them psychologically. It is a form of relational one upmanship. If you have come along to be entertained and the person, purporting to entertain you, merely indulges in the activity of making you feel mentally inferior, then obviously you will resent his performance rather than enjoy it.

This resentment and alienation will be increased if the performer assumes a challenging manner. As Al Schnieder says in one of his books, many performers adopt a challenging approach without realising it. This is usually a sign of lack of confidence. If an inexperienced magician feels nervous or uncertain, he will keep trying to prove to the audience that what he is doing is good. Any casual remarks, that the spectators may make, will be instantly seized upon and the unfortunate person, who happened to make the remark, shown to be wrong. To the audience this appears to be a put down. They see the performer as implying "I'm better than you, because I can fool you!"

I can remember my own early performances and the lack of confidence, which I felt. This confidence can only be gained through performing experience. First thoroughly learn your magic and then perform it frequently until you KNOW that you can do it. Only then will the need to prove that you are doing it well, cease.

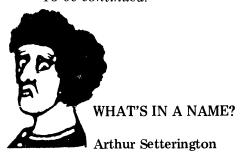

Bill Nagler, a psychologist by profession, defined four basic approaches to magic, which would eliminate the challenge element and enable people to be fooled without feeling demeaned. One was the CONSPIRATORIAL approach, where the performer takes the audience into his confidence and enlists their moral support in trying to defeat some inexplicable happening, which is making his life a misery. Another was the TRIUMPHANT approach. This is where the magician, in attempting to perform a "miracle", gets into a mess; things go wrong. In order to extricate himself he uses a bit of magic. Thirdly there is the DISTANT approach. This is where you distance yourself and the audience from the actual effect by weaving it into a story. The story becomes the important thing and the magic merely the means of illustrating it. The audience are not being directly challenged to solve a mystery. Finally there is the NON-MAGIC approach. That is where the magic is introduced merely as an incidental afterthought to the comedy or whatever.

I agree absolutely with Nagler. For this reason I never tell an audience that I am going to fool them. I suggest instead that we are going to have some fun together. Also I will often make a point of putting myself on the same level as the spectators, by pretending to be just as baffled and surprised as they are. In this way the challenge element is eliminated.

An entertainer needs to know that his audiences will like him. They must like him as a person. If not, the challenge element will always be present. The performer will be forced into a situation of magical one upmanship. On the other hand, once you have got the audience to like you, you can get away with almost anything. You must, however, be able to win them over quickly. Especially is this true in commercial close-up work. The initial rapport which you generate with your audience is crucial. In these situations you have to "move out" towards the other person(s). That initial contact is important. It will create a rapport, which changes potential resentment into something that will be received with pleasure, and a willingness to enter the phantasy world of the performer.

To be continued.

EFFECT

The performer shows a number of white cards. One of them bears his signature. This one is laid aside. A spectator is asked to write his signature on one of the cards. This is replaced in the packet, which is squared up.

The performer, holding the packet of cards in his left hand, places them behind his back. Next, taking the card bearing his own signature in his right hand, he pushes it into the packet.

Bringing the cards into view, the performer spreads them, showing that his signed card is next to the spectator's. The two cards are removed and the effect repeated. Afterwards, everything can be examined.

REQUIREMENTS

A number of white faced cards. Business cards could be used if desired.

PREPARATION

On two of the cards the performer signs his name. The signatures should be identical. Place these two signed cards on top of the pile, face down.

WORKING

The top card is removed from the pile and is shown to carry the performer's signature. It is placed to one side. The other cards are fanned and shown to be all blank. The second signature is hidden, because the fanning only exposes the unmarked portion of the card, which bears it. Care should be taken to ensure that this is the case.

A spectator is allowed to take any one of the cards, except the signed duplicate on top. He is asked to sign his name on the chosen one. While this is being done, the performer squares up the remainder of the packet. He then cuts the cards and completes the cut, maintaining a little finger break above the second signed card. He helpfully cuts the packet for the return of the spectator's card. This goes in on top of the performer's signed duplicate. The cards may now be cut several times by a spectator. Ultimately the performer places them behind his back. Picking up his original signed card, which was placed aside at the start, he takes it behind his back and apparently pushes it amongst the others. Really he places it, writing side downwards, on top of the packet.

When the cards are again brought into view, they are fanned and the two signed ones seen to be together in the centre. They are removed, the packet squared and, with the extra signed card already on the top, you are all set for a repeat.

The procedure is carried out, exactly as before, except that when the performer places his signature card behind his back, he does not put it on top of the others. Instead, he pushes it under the watch strap on his left wrist.

The cards may now be given to the spectator, to allow him to find the two signed ones together in the centre.

ED. NOTE

Any effect that can be performed with business cards have got to be useful. This is a particularly good one which gives an excuse for leaving one of your cards with a spectator.

MORE RECOLLECTIONS OF HORACE SPENCER

As related by his associate and friend Dick Turpin to Walt Lees

BUSKING IN THE SALOON BARS

At the time when Spencer and Dick Turpin were working together, most landlords would allow buskers into the public bar only. The lounge and saloon bar customers were considered too refined for that sort of thing. Buskers were strictly barred from these rooms.

This fact irked Spencer, who considered himself a gentleman and knew also that the pickings would be richer in the more expensive bars.

It was partly to overcome the problem that the Spencer/Turpin alliance was formed. The system was very simple. As was their normal practise, they would ride around on the top deck of a bus. In this way they were able to see in above the normal smoked glass of the different pubs, until they spotted one that was full. They would then get off at the next stop and walk back. Spencer would walk into the saloon bar on his own, and order a drink. He would also attempt to engage the landlord in conversation.

Dick, meanwhile, would hang about outside for a while. Then fifteen minutes later would walk into the public bar and ask permission to work it. He would commence performing. Spencer, in the other bar, would by now have engaged the landlord and possibly one or two other people in conversation. Suddenly, glancing into the public bar, he would "notice" Dick.

With a look of delighted surprise, Spencer would exclaim, "Good Lord! That's Turpin! He used to be one of my pupils. I taught him everything he knows." This would surprise some of the people, as up to now Spencer had made no mention of being a magician. However, he would soon tell them that he was indeed a leading society entertainer and regale them with one or two stories of his theatrical triumphs. Then he would say to the barman, "I have not seen old Turpin for years! I really can't let him go without buying him a drink. When he's finished through there, would you be so kind as to ask him to come round here?"

The barman would go into the Public Bar, and when Dick had finished going round with the hat, would say, "There's a gentleman in the other bar, who would like to see you." Dick would look through the opening or whatever into the saloon and would exclaim, "My goodness! It's Mr Spencer. I haven't seen him in years. He taught me all these tricks you know. A very fine magician is Mr Spencer."

Dick would then go through to the other bar, where he and Spencer would exchange pleasanteries; Spencer making sure all of the time that the landlord and one or two other people were involved in the conversation. Then Dick would be asked if he would be kind enough to perform one of the tricks that Spencer considered very good. Spencer in the meantime exhorted anyone and everyone to watch. Then Dick would cadjole Mr Spencer into performing some of his marvels. The outcome was that, after half an hour or so, Mr Spencer would suggest to the landlord that just this once, as he had entertained them so well, Turpin might be allowed to go round with the hat. Spencer would then toss in a silver coin, more or less obliging the other customers to follow suit.

"Simon Says...." The lecture notes of Simon Lovell. Available from the author at 145 Hillside Grove, Chelmsford, Essex. Price £2.50 inc. postage (Overseas £2.75 Airmail £3.30)

Five 8 inch by 12 inch duplicated sheets. The writing is on both sides of the paper, making ten pages in all, one consisting of diagrams. There is also an additional sheet making a frontispiece.

Obviously these notes were designed and intended to be sold only at lectures. They are certainly not produced in a commercial foremat. However, the material contained in them is complete in itself and can be enjoyed by anybody, regardless of whether or not they have seen the lecture. For this reason they are being reviewed here.

The first item, entitled "The Thoughts of Chairman Lovell" contains much that is the result of solid professional experience on the subject of performing close-up magic for money. This is a game that Simon knows inside out and he pulls no punches in this section. Everybody undertaking this kind of work would benefit from a perusal of these pages.

The second item is "The Modern Cabaret Act. . . And How to Sell it". This too has much priceless information on the problems faced by the professional cabaret performer. It also tells you how Simon managed to get himself a good agent/manager and how you can do the same. This one page could literally be a milestone in the career of a budding performer.

The third item has some sage advice on the subject of dealing with hecklers, together with some strong one-liners. This is followed by six tricks/gags. These include the famous "Alsation Under Beer Glass" and the hilariously zany "Card in Dove". There are also some more conventional card items, two of which have been in Pabular. Simon has taken the trouble to fill in a lot of the presentation details; the little touches that turn tricks into entertainment.

Finally, there is a section on one-liners.

Summing up, I would say that in spite of a modest appearance, these few pages contain more real information than many a highly priced, nicely produced book.

THE MENTAL MAGICK OF BASIL HORWITZ

Published by Martin Breese. Edited by Owen Griffiths & Martin Breese. Illustrations and Layout by Eric Mason. Manuscript preparation by Anne Barclay. Price U.K. £10, Europe £10.50, U.S.A. 20 dollars. All prices include postage.

Basil Horwitz will be no stranger to Pabular readers. Several of his ideas have appeared in these pages over the years. This book of 64 pages contains some of his finest innovations.

The basic problem with any book on mentalism, is that the subject is not one which readily commits itself to the printed word. So much depends on the personality and showmanship of the performer. Methods are frequently interchangeable. Whether a performer obtains a piece of information by means of an impression pad, centre tear or whatever is of little importance. What matters is how he makes use of that information to produce the effect of mind reading.

This is where this book scores heavily. Basil has a knack of latching onto certain key selling points and then devising methods, which will enable those selling points to be cleanly driven home. For example, the first item is a book test, which can be performed with a book that the performer has never touched or handled, or for that matter seen before. It can be brought along to the show by one of the spectators. This is a strong selling point. In another effect a spectator appears to have been under some kind of hypnotic influence. The trick is simply to change one card into another (a card quickie) but the presentation and the way that it is handled create an effect, as the cliche says, out of all proportion to the method.

Do not get the impression from reading the above that there are no novel methods and principles to be found in this book. Such is far from the case. Mr Horwitz is capable of much deviousness on occasion. I particularly liked "Challenge Premonition", which overcomes several technical problems that have often been associated with this kind of effect. Also, for devilish ingenuity "Challenge Thought" would take some beating.

My first impression, on seeing the book, was that at £10 it seemed a little pricey. However, on studying the contents I came to the conclusion this was not true. There are seven routines, fully described, any one of which, if well performed, could be a reputation

ELIZABETH 2nd

Wally Boyce

Many years ago, Davenports sold an effect called Elizabeth's Card Trick. This was a dealer item, involving apparatus. Wally Boyce devised the following method, which achieved a similar effect but required nothing that was not readily obtainable.

EFFECT

The performer shows an unsealed envelope. Lifting the flap he shows the audience that it contains two playing cards. One has a red back and the other blue. The magician removes the blue backed card and shows it to be the joker. It is then replaced in the envelope, which is sealed. The red card is not shown.

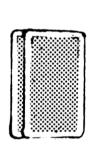

A spectator is asked to call out the name of any card in the pack. Removing a pack from his pocket the magician runs through and locates the named card. This is placed face up on the table.

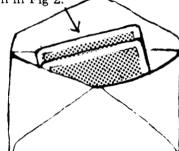

Recalling that the sealed envelope contained two cards — the joker and one other, as yet unknown — the performer tears open the envelope and removes first the joker and secondly the red backed card. When it is turned round, its face matches the freely named card. The envelope can be examined.

PREPARATION

Obtain two packs of cards with red backs. From them make two faked packs in the following manner. One pack contains all the clubs and diamonds from both, while the other contains all the hearts and spades. The cards should be arranged in pairs so that both the aces of clubs are together and both the twos of hearts are together etc right the way through both packs. One pack is placed in the right hand trouser pocket and the other in the left. Obviously you must know which is which.

Make a fake joker by taking any joker from a blue backed pack and gluing half of an extra red backed card onto it as shown in Fig 1. One of the red backed jokers left over from the two packs will do for this. Place this card into an envelope as shown in Fig 2.

PRESENTATION & WORKING

Start by showing the envelope, open the flap and pull out the fake card, just far enough for both colours of the back to show. Explain that there are two cards in the envelope.

Turn the envelope to a vertical position, with the flap pointing directly upwards and the address side towards the audience. Remove the fake card, showing its face to be the joker. Say, "One of the cards is the joker. I will show you the other a little later." Replace the joker into the envelope and seal the flap. Leave the envelope on the table in full view.

Ask one of the audience to call out the name of any card — other than the joker. When a card has been named, remove whichever pack contains the pair of matching duplicates of that card. Do not show the faces of the cards. Simply run through the pack until you find the pair in question. Remove one of the cards and place it on the table. In the process cut its twin to the top of the pack. Hold the pack face down in the left hand.

Now there are no sleights in this trick at all, but the following sequence will require a little handling practise. The movements, although not unusual, must be co-ordinated correctly.

With the right hand, pick up the envelope and remark that it contains the joker and one other card. Then, fixing your gaze on the spectator, who chose the card, say, "And this is the card which you freely named." As you say this, casually pass the envelope into the left hand, which clips it on top of the pack with the thumb as in Fig 3. The envelope should be address side upwards. At the same moment, the right hand picks up the chosen card and displays it. Keep your attention on the card and the person who chose it. Place the card back on the table.

With the right hand, take the envelope as in Fig 4. The fingers go beneath and the thumb on top. The fingertips seize the top card of the pack (duplicate of the tabled one) and hold it against the underside of the envelope. This movement can be facilitated either by allowing the left thumb to push the card slightly off the top of the pack, or by secretly obtaining a little finger break beneath the card during the preceding part of the routine. This latter method is prefered by the editor as it permits a very clean steal. The right fingertips only have to enter the break. There is no additional movement.

Once the right hand has the envelope, the left deposits the pack on the table. Take the envelope back into the left hand as in Fig 5. The card is clipped in place by the thumb. With the right hand begin to tear the envelope open at the upper short end. Reach inside and remove the joker. Place it aside. Remind the audience that there is a second card in the envelope. Place the right fingertips inside the envelope, while the thumb remains outside as in Fig 6. Draw the card upwards, as though extracting it. It will emerge back outwards (a slight discrepancy.

which is never noticed). Turn it around and show that it exactly matches the freely named card.

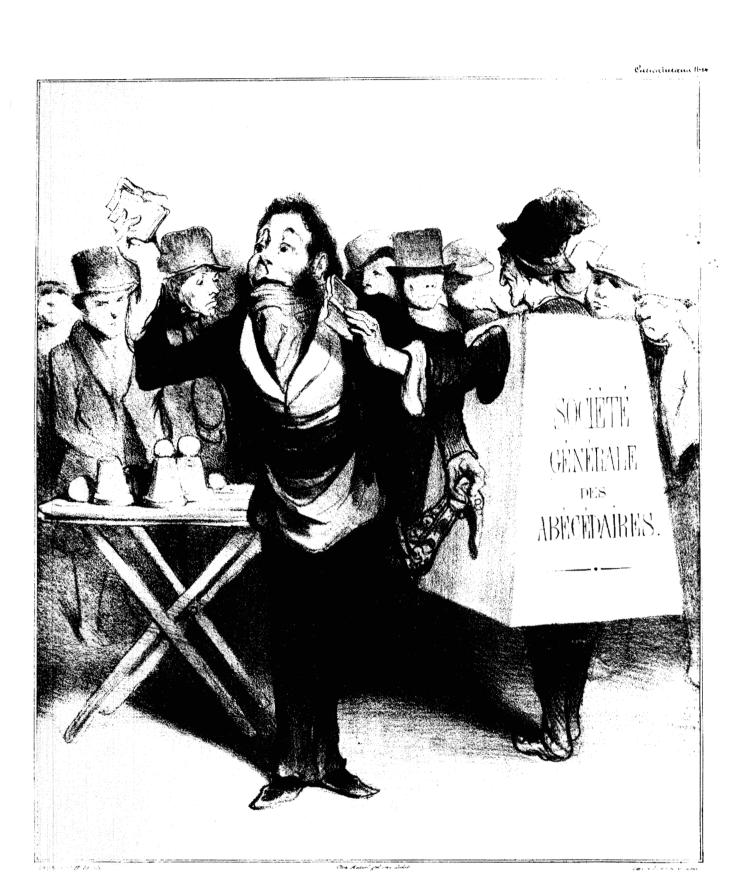

Leave the envelope lying around, where it can be examined later.

EDITORIAL FOOTNOTE

This is one of the best non-sleight of hand effects that I have seen for some time. The method of secretly obtaining a duplicate of any card named is priceless and could be applied to many other effects. The chief problem is to justify the presence of the odd joker, which seemingly plays no part in the trick. This is a hurdle that will need to be got over by presentation alone. If anybody asks about the joker, say something to the effect that it acts as

From The Bob Read Collection. Number three in a second series.

Dear Walt Lees.

I know you read this column first because you said so in the last issue. You went to great lengths in your last writings to explain to our readers what I meant when I said that in The Magic Circle Close-up Competition half the competitors shouldn't have been there. In future I would appreciate it if you would refrain from translating my meanings into yours. If they can't understand what I am saying then they shouldn't be reading this magazine, or, to put it another way, if they don't know what I am talking about, tough luck.

P.P.

In the last issue I mentioned a tip for close-up performers working dinner tables with lots of stuff like bottles etc. littering up the working surface. I am of course referring to the use of a small board placed across two or more upturned glasses.

You could take it a step further and that is for those performers who use some kind of close-up case. Provided it isn't too large or heavy you could place the case on four upturned glasses and work out of, and on top of, the case itself. This would effectively raise your surface still more, depending on the thickness of your case.

I haven't actually done this myself but it would work. The reason I have never done this is that I have an aversion to close-up cases. To me it smacks of "Let's see what other little tricks I have in my box". Don't think I am knocking the use of close-up cases. Albert Goshman is the most successful close-up magician I know and he uses one. It just isn't my style. I prefer if possible to work out of my pockets or with available objects, and if the effect is important enough to me I make sure the objects are available.

My reason for bringing up the subject is that I have had several letters complimenting me on my idea on the boards across two glasses, and for those of you who did write, don't expect a reply, but thank you anyway for your kind comments.

By the time you read this the annual Blackpool Convention will be another pleasant memory. I say pleasant because I can't think of one that hasn't been. It is the largest convention in Britain apart from the I.B.M. shindig and even there one could argue about the attendance figures. The main difference is of course is that Blackpool is a one day event if you exclude the night before party and the all night sessions which follow,, whereas the I.B.M. thing lasts about a week these days.

Blackpool will be a little different for me this time however. As always I will be attending in my my role as a dealer (you do know I sell my routines on sound cassettes and video tapes don't you?) but this time I shall, in addition to taking your money, entertain you, I hope. For those of you who can't attend, I'll tell you how next time round. that is if you really care. (And if you don't care then tough luck to you too).

They seem to have come up with an off-beat situation in Blackpool. For reasons we needn't go into they have had to change their venue for the evening show. They are now using the Blackpool Winter Gardens Theatre Complex. This a very large theatre which holds, I would imagine, upwards of two thousand. This is far too large for the magic crowd which is probably closer to one thousand registrants. So last year they booked Ken Dodd who for the benefit of our foreign readers is a 'star name' in the U.K. who can almost guarantee sellout business wherever he performs.

What appears to have happened was that by billing Ken Dodd the Blackpool crowd managed to fill this vast theatre with a sixty percent non magical audience, which made them a better audience for the magic acts and enabled them to pay the cost of hiring the theatre, which obviosly much more expensive than there prevous venue was.

It could be advantageous to other similar organisations to look into the situation. By booking a name act and filling the theatre they made the public subsidise a major portion of their costs. It's a good idea if someone is prepared to take a slight gamble. All you have to do is find a name act that can pull them in like Ken Dodd.... There aren't many Ken Dodds around but I am sure it could be done in other parts of the country.

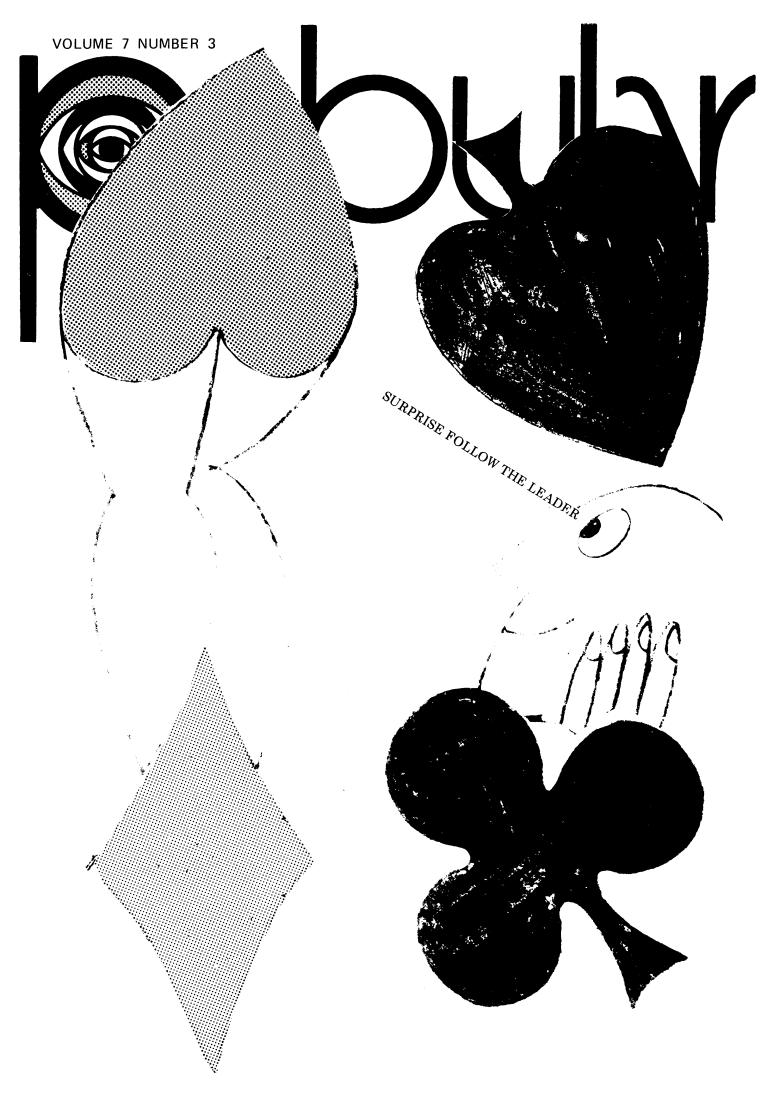

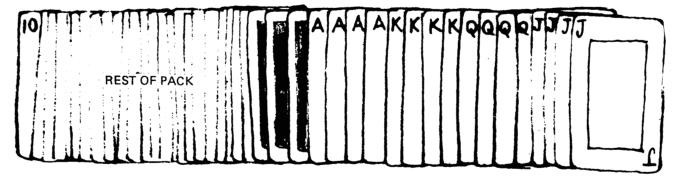

FIG 1 3 TENS REVERSED

SURPRISE FOLLOW THE LEADER

Roxy

EFFECT

The magician removes the kings, queens, jacks and aces from a pack of cards. One card of each denomination is turned face upwards and the three of like value, placed face down on top of it. The face up leader cards are moved around from packet to packet. The other cards mysteriously transpose to follow them. There is a surprise climax, when the aces turn into tens.

SET-UP

Remove all the 10, J, Q, K, A. Place any 10 face up on the table. Put the rest of the pack face up on top of it. Now put on three 10s, all face down. Next put the aces, kings, queens and jacks face up on top. The final arrangement should look like Fig.1. The three tens are reversed in the centre of the pack, followed by the remaining set-up. Put a slight crimp in the tens.

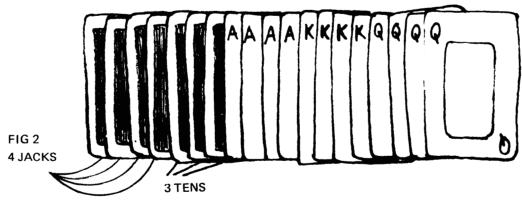

Close up the spread and you are ready to start.

PRESENTATION AND WORKING

Bring out the pre-arranged pack and feel for the crimp. Use this to get a little finger break below the three reversed tens in the face-up pack. Lift off all the cards above the break and place the rest of the pack to one side, face down.

Hold the packet face upwards in the left hand, taking care not to flash the bottom reversed card. Thumb off the four jacks into the right hand. Show them, turn them face down and return them to the bottom of the packet, the position is shown in Fig.2. Do the same with the four queens, then the kings and finally the aces. You have apparently shown all of the cards, whilst secretly concealing the three tens. All of the cards are now the same way round and the tens are on top of the packet. Ensure that the audience are aware that the cards they were shown were all in blocks of four.

Drop the cards face down on top of the pack. Fig. 3 shows the situation at this point. Obviously you do not show the cards as in Fig. 3. Keep them squared up. Pick up the pack and place it face down in the left hand.

Deal the top four cards face down onto the table, one at a time, reversing their order. As you do so, say, "The jacks were first." Time this so that as you make the remark, you are just dealing the fourth card. Turn it face up. Place it beneath the pile as shown in Fig.4. Repeat this three times more dealing out, apparently, the queens, kings and aces. The final position is shown in the picture (Fig.4).

Before putting the balance of the pack to one side, it is necessary to secretly reverse the three aces, which remain on top. The following action achieves this in a very simple manner. Just do the move casually, without looking at your hands.

- Get a little finger break beneath the aces. This is best done, during the actual business of dealing the cards onto the table. Bring the right hand over the top of the pack, taking a hold with the fingers at the outer short end and the thumb at the inner. The right thumb can now take over the break.
- Lift off about half of the pack with the right hand. Maintain the thumb break as you do this. With the left hand, flip all of the remaining cards face upwards. Place them on top of those held in the right hand. In other words, above the three aces.
- Drop all of the cards below the break, into the left hand, which flips them face up and returns them to beneath the packet held in the right.

Turn the whole pack face down and place it to one side. As has already been said, this sequence of actions should be carried out in a very casual, offhand way, with no particular attention paid to them. At the finish, three aces will be face up in a face down pack. The fourth ten will still be the top card.

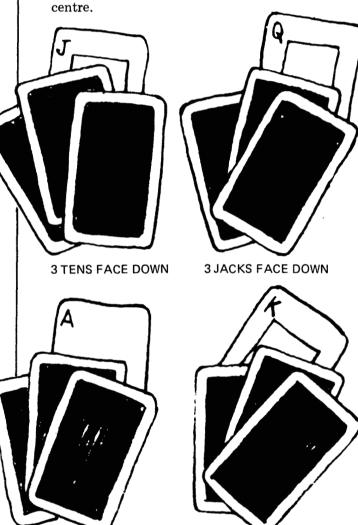

Offer to demonstrate how the cards will always follow the leader. Exchange the face up jack and the face up queen. Immediately turn over the three face down cards on the jack. Show that they are also jacks.

Exchange the queen and the king. Turn over the three cards on the queen. Show that they also are queens. Now exchange the king and the ace. Show the cards on the king.

Turn over the top card of the pack and show that it is a ten. Exchange the ten with the ace, pushing the ace face upwards into the pack. To do this riffle up the side or end of the pack nearest to you with the left thumb. When you spot the aces, which are face up, insert the fourth amongst them.

Turn over the three face down cards on the table, showing that they have mysteriously changed into tens. Finally, ribbon spread the pack, showing the four aces, reversed in the

Since I last put pen to paper, for Pabular, much has happened on the magic scene. I seem to have been rushing around non-stop. Lectures at the Three Counties Society, Scarborough and the Magic Circle. The Blackpool Convention and Martin Breese's day, as well as Merv Cole's convention at Lymington.

I will not say too much about Merv Cole's day. This was a very small convention, which was a thoroughly enjoyable affair. The conditions were so intimate that yours truly did the close-up all alone. There were not many dealers there, but fellow East Londoner, Peter Crush, had made the journey down, taking along some of his coin specialities. The other stuff on sale was mostly bigger magic, and consequently outside the scope of Pabular. Still, one does not go to this type of convention for the dealers. It is more just an excuse to meet old friends and have a chat, without the hustle and bustle of larger "do's". Rex Taylor did the first lecture, which ran the gamut of everything from close-up to kids to mentalism. A good lecture this and ideally suited to a small audience, with mixed magical interests. John Palfreyman was the other lecturer. He gave an enjoyable demonstration of children's magic, which again is outside of Pabular's scope. I would recommend this convention to anybody living within a reasonable distance of Hampshire. I thoroughly enjoyed it.

Blackpool, of course, is a convention at the other end of the scale. It usually has around 1500 registrants and over 40 dealers. The close-up was very strong this year, which was extra good considering that seven of the eight were British performers. Only one American, John Cornelius, made up the numbers. Not that I have anything against overseas performers. It is just that, in recent years, there does seem to have been a tendency by convention organisers to book mainly foreign magicians, thereby preventing the British boys from getting much of a look in. We have got some very good performers on these islands. Bill Lamb is to be heartily congratulated on giving them a chance to be seen. It was especially nice to see Pat Page and Bob Read working at a British convention for once. Nowadays, one gets the impression that you have to cross the Atlantic in order to see them. I tried to see all of the performers. This meant that, as only four came to each table, I had to move around a bit.

I will not say too much about Pat Page, Bob Read, Joe Riding or Mark Leveridge. These people will be too well known to Pabular readers to need any comments from me. Suffice it to say that from what I saw, they were all on top form and gave of their best, which as we all know is very, very good.

I have also had occasion to mention Steve Hamilton and Johnny Johnston before now. Both scored heavily. The former with some of the high class card and coin magic, for which he is fast gaining an enviable reputation. The latter with the coin and trapdoor routine, which featured in Pabular some months back, as well as his Rubik Cube effects and a rope routine.

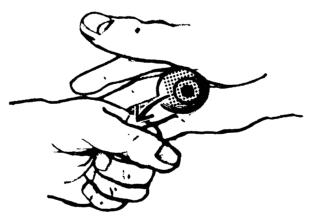

The two performers that I saw for the first time were John Cornelius and Bob Lambert. Cornelius has some novel and baffling magic, which he delivers in that casual and yet forceful manner, that seems to be a characteristic exclusive to Americans. His chief impact, amongst magicians, seems to be due to the "famous" flourish of causing a coin to leap from the palm of his hand into the air. This really has to be seen to be believed. It has become the current craze amongst close-uppers, to try and emulate the feat. Eric Mason and Chris Powers both do very creditable versions. Yours truly has long since given up on it. Cornelius has some very nice things in his act, especially the production of flashes of light under a glass bowl.

Bob Lambert was a performer with a very quiet style. I should liked to have seen more of his magic, which seemed nicely routined and put together. Unfortunately I only caught about a minute of his act so cannot say too much. I will watch out for him elsewhere.

The Martin Breese day, the following week, was really first class. I hope that a separate report will be ready in time for this issue.

Nick Picot mentioned recently that he is very busy working close-up in several clubs and restaurants in the London area. He has got so much work lined up that he cannot do it all himself. He would very much like to hear from people with good, commercial material, who would be prepared to do a spot of table hopping in central London. The address is Nicholas Picot, 91a Rosslyn Crescent, Harrow, Middx HA1 2SA. Do not apply if you do not like hard work!

ONE IN THE EYE

Keith Charnley

This short, but highly intertaining routine, consists of ideas by Henry Hay, Paul Harris and Keith, himself. No doubt similar varients do exist elsewhere, but this particular combination is neat and to the point. It is described here in Keith Charnley's own words.

A glass eye is required. It is in the right hand jacket pocket, together with two coins of 10p size. I start by saying, "Most people think that the hand is quicker than the eye. They believe that is the reason why a magician can bring about his magical effects. Actually, it is not true. The eye is quicker than the hand. Let me show you."

Remove the two coins. Display them, one in each hand. Put the left hand's coin into your eye, like a monocle. Apparently, place the right hand's coin into the left. Really this is a fake transfer. The coin is, in fact, retained palmed in the right.

With the right hand, keeping the palmed coin out of sight, remove the coin from the left eye. Both coins are now in that hand. The audience is aware of one only. They believe the other to be in the left. Allow the visible coin to sink down behind the right fingers. Close the hand into a fist, taking care not to chink the two coins together. Ask the audience if they have been watching the coins carefully. Slowly open both hands palm upwards. Show the two coins in the right, while remarking, "You see! In this case, the hand appears to be quicker than the eye, but watch!"

So far you have just done a very basic coin across. There are, however, plenty of opportunities to build in comedy business. Trying to place the coin in the eye is one. Keeping it there is another. It can even affect your speech!

Offer to repeat the effect. Apparently drop the two coins from the right hand, into the left.

Use a click pass, so that you really end up with one coin in each. Open both hands and show the coins.

Offer to do the trick once more. Say that this time you will make it easier for the audience to follow. Once more, place one coin in the eye, with the left hand. Fake transfer the right hand's coin, apparently placing it into the left but really holding it back in the right. With the right hand, remove the coin from the left eye. Say that you will not use it, this time. Apparently drop the single coin into your right hand coat pocket. Really, you ditch both of the coins and cop the glass eye.

Quickly recap on your previous actions i.e., say "One in the eye and one in the hand. One from the eye, into the pocket, leaving just one." As you say "hand", tap the left fist with the right hand. In this action, load the palmed eye into the end of the left fist as in Fig.1. Immediately, bring the right hand up to indicate the left eye as you say "... One from the eye..." Mimic the action of taking the coin from the eye and placing it into the pocket. When you do so, close the left eye and keep it shut until the end of the trick. Close it as you pretend to remove the coin, making this a part of the mime, as though to indicate that the eye is having trouble holding the coin.

Ask where the coin should be. When they indicate the left hand, open it up, disclosing the glass eye. State that, "The eye is quicker than the hand." Toss the eye into your right hand. Fake transfer it back to the left. Bring the left hand up in front of your closed left eye as though replacing the one, which is supposed to be in the hand. Open your eye and remove the hand, allowing it to be seen empty. Dispose of the eye, palmed in the right.

MORE RECOLLECTIONS OF HORACE SPENCER

As told by his friend and associate Dick Turpin to Walt Lees.

During the days of the depression, when the dole was 15/- (75p) a week, £1 was a lot of money. Nobody would have dreamed of throwing pound notes away in the street. Nobody, that is, but Horace Spencer.

The psychology of the trick was very similar to Max Malini's casually tossing a gold coin into a spitoon and retrieving it later. The scenario was this. Spencer would be in a bar, working. He would ask the barman to lend him a note out of the till. As Spencer took the note, he would pretend to read out the number. In fact, the number, which he read out, would not be the one on the borrowed note. It would be the number of a second note, one which Dick was quietly handing over at the other end of the bar, in payment for a drink.

Spencer would carefully seal the note in a double envelope. He would then make a few magical passes and tear open the envelope to show that it had gone. As final and conclusive proof, he would screw up the envelope and toss it out the door into the street. This was a complete throw-off to the spectators. Nobody in his right mind would have taken a risk like that. Spencer, of course, knew differently. He knew that as far as any passerby was aware, there was just a screwed up bit of paper, lying in the gutter. It would be perfectly safe. The barman was asked to go back and check his till. Sure enough, the missing note would have returned!

Later, either Horace Spencer, or Dick would retrieve the envelope. Dick tells how one day a sudden gust of wind blew the envelope away down the tramlines. The customers were treated to the sight of the magician and the quiet little man, who had been at the other end of the bar, putting down their drinks and running up the street in hot pursuit of their booty.

To be continued. . .

EFFECT

A spectator chooses a card, looks at it and returns it to the pack. The magician states that he will find the position of the card by mathematics. He takes out a pocket calculator. The calculator will not work. The magician apologises and hands the pack to the spectator asking him to remove his card and he will attempt another effect. The spectator cannot find the card. The magician offers to try and fix the calculator so that the whereabouts of the chosen card can be worked out. On removing the back of the calculator a folded card is seen inside. The card is thrown to the spectator with the comment, "That was gumming up the works!" The magician seems more interested in the calculator, which now works. The spectator finds the folded card to be the one that he chose.

REQUIREMENTS, PREPARATION AND WORKING

You need a pack of cards, from which you decide the one that you are going to force. You then need a duplicate of the force card, and a pocket calculator. The calculator I originally used was a small Cambridge Sinclair. The force card, folded up, fits in the space next to the batteries. I now use a bigger Sharp EL-211.

There is no need to fold the card, but I put one fold in it anyway. Place the duplicate of the force card inside the calculator, and put the calculator in your pocket.

With cards in hand, pick a willing victim and force your card on him. When the card is replaced, control it to the top. Patter about finding the card by mathematics and palm it off. The hand, with card palmed, goes to the pocket. It leaves the card there, as it removes the calculator. The calculator is tilted towards yourself and you press any button but the "on" button. You now key in 52 and 1 muttering to yourself "52 cards in the pack — 1 card chosen. Oh! It's not working!" The rest is as described at the beginning; a look through the pack finds the card missing. You discover it inside the calculator.

MENTAL BLOCKBUSTER PREDICTION

Juan Tamariz

In December 1980, Juan Tamariz came over to this country. One of the things which he was doing was an effect involving two pack of cards. The thing seemed to completely baffle everyone. It certainly baffled me, Fred Robinson, Albert Goshman, Roberto and all. Juan said that the principle was an old one, credited to Val Evans, using an ingeniously faked pack of cards. Tamariz has written a book on the subject, in Spanish, and has kindly given permission for this (effect number eight in the book) to be detailed here.

EFFECT

The magician secretly reverses any card and replaces the pack in its case. A spectator is given a second pack and asked to secretly reverse any card in it.

The magician now removes his pack and shows the reversed card. The spectator then spreads his and finds the card, which he turns round. They match.

The effect is then repeated with a different card. Bear in mind that the performer always reverses his card first and always reveals it first. There are no forces and it is a different card every time.

The effect does require two faked packs, both of which are reasonably easy to manufacture. However, the elegant Tamariz handling is full of subtle throw-offs, which seem to preclude any idea of trick cards. I have no doubt that if a dealer were to market this item he would sell hundreds. It really is most clean and baffling. The freedom, with which the spectators can handle the cards seems to rule out all known kinds of possible fakery.

1ST DECK (SPECTATOR'S)

To make the special pack, take a normal deck of fifty-two cards and discard 8D: 8S: 8H: 2C. These cards are not used. The pack consists of 48 only.

Remove the following cards and trim them about 1mm shorter (as in a 'Svengali'). 2, 4, 6, 9, J, K of Spades, Hearts and Diamonds and the 3, 5, 7, 9, J, K of Clubs.

The remainder of the cards are left a normal length. The cards are now paired up in the following manner. The 2S is a short card. It is paired with 3S which is a long one. Similarly 5C a short card is paired with 6C a long. In other words, the value of the long card of each pair is one higher than the short. The long card is always the face card of the pair. When all of the pairs have been assembled (Kings pair up with aces) the pack can be put together by collecting up the pairs in a random order.

Readers familiar with the "Svengali" and "Mene Tekel" packs will no doubt readily understand some of the possible uses of this one. It can be overhand and riffle shuffled in the same way as the "Svengali". It can be freely handled by spectators and yet, because of the long and short arrangement, if the cards are cut and the top or bottom one removed, a glance at the next card will instantly identify the missing one.

2ND DECK (PERFORMER'S)

For this particular effect, you will also need to construct a special "Brainwave" pack. Juan Tamariz's handling of this is typical of his elegantly deceptive style.

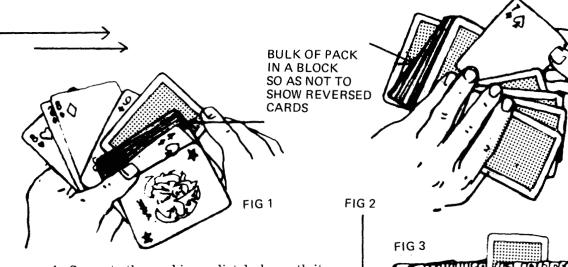

Assemble the red backed pack into pairs, which match the long and short pairs in the Val Evans pack. Rough the backs of these cards and assemble them back to back so that 2S is with 3S and 5C with 6C etc. The cards which match the "longs" in the other pack should all be face up and the "shorts" face down. Take the four odd cards, which are not in the other pack and put them on the back of the "Brainwave" so that they are the same way round as the "short" cards. Then trim a joker short and put it on the face. The order of the pack will be, reading from face to rear, Joker, 24 face up "short" cards paired with 24 face down "long" cards followed by four face up indifferent cards. Place this pack in its case "face down".

WORKING AND PRESENTATION

Begin by removing the "Brainwave" pack. Hold it back upwards and casually spread the top four face down cards between your hands. Care must be taken not to flash any face up ones. Square the pack and turn it face up. Fan the cards quickly. Only face up ones will be seen. Close the fan. Turn the pack back upwards and place it behind your back, saying, "I am going to reverse one card in the centre of this pack." Pretend to do so, really altering nothing. Bring the pack out and replace it in the case "backs up". Close the card case and put it on the table, where it can be seen throughout.

Next introduce the Val Evans pack and give it a few shuffles and cuts a la Svengali. Tamariz does a tabled riffle shuffle, letting it be clearly seen that the two packets are fairly interwoven. Hand it to a spectator, face down. Tell him to place it behind his back and cut it as many times as he likes. Have him turn the pack face up, behind his back. Tell him, without looking, to take the face card off the pack, to reverse it and place it face down in the centre. Have him square up the pack, bring it out from behind his back and place it on the table. As soon as you see the face card you know the identity of the reversed one. It will be the long card of whichever pair it belongs to. In other words, one pip higher than the face card of the pack. However, as a matter of principle, it is better if you avoid looking at the pack immediately. As he brings the cards out, pick up the "Brainwave" pack and say, "I placed my card face down before you! O.K.?" As you say this, look at the spectator and glimpse the card at the same time. Continue, "I will look for my card before you look for yours."

Turn the "Brainwave" "face up" and look for the card, which matches the face card of his pack. Separate the card immediately beneath it, which will be the face down duplicate of his reversed card. Pull it halfway out of the pack, so that it is upjogged for half of its length or more. Continue spreading the cards to show that there are no others reversed. Finish up in the position shown in Fig.1. That is with the joker fanned off slightly and the four bottom cards spread but the rest of the pack in a block.

Turn the fan over to show the reversed card. It will appear to be face up in a face down pack. Actually only the backs of six cards can be seen, but provided that you do not freeze it looks as though the whole pack is fanned. (Fig.2).

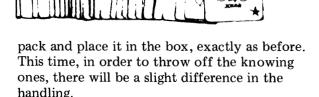

Have the spectator turn his pack back upwards and search for the reversed card in it. When he finds it, it matches.

REPEAT

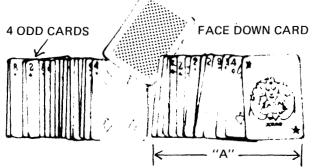

It is a fairly simple matter to reset and repeat. To start with, cut the "Brainwave" at the projecting card, bringing it to the top. Turn it face down. In the process, the audience will see a face down card beneath it, thereby reinforcing the belief that only a single card is reversed. Leave that pack squared on the table for a moment.

Extract the face up card from the spectator's pack. Turn it face down and place it on top. Cut the pack and, if you care to, give it another Svengali-type shuffle. Hand this pack to a second spectator for the repeat. This should make it apparent that you do not use an accomplice.

Offer to repeat the effect. Pick up the "Brainwave" and place it behind your back. Once it is out of sight, turn the face down card, on top, face up once more. With the thumb, riffle up the pack from bottom to top until you locate the short joker. Cut the pack at this point. The joker will be on top, so move it to the bottom and you are reset. Bring out the

When the spectator has reversed a card, pushed it in the centre and brought the pack into view and laid it on the table, emphasise that you reversed your card first and that you will show it first. Ribbon spread the "Brainwave" face up. This will not be too wide a spread, just enough for you to locate the appropriate face down card and push it part way out (Fig.3). Then have the spectator spread his pack, face up, in a similar manner. Because of the uneven way that he will spread it, the pairing of the cards will not be apparent. (I can vouch for this personally, as it was not when I was fooled!) Say, "I will take out my card first" - do so, leaving it face down on the table. Ask him to draw out his card. Then say, "I will show you my card first." Do so. Have him turn over his card. They match.

When you remove your card from the "Brainwave", break the spread at that point. The position will be that shown in Fig.4. Pick up all the cards in section "A" square them and turn them face down. Place the packet in the left hand. Now pick up the "reversed" card and place it face down on top of the cards in the left hand. Next scoop up all of the remaining cards but "accidently" leave the bottom three behind. Square up this packet and place on top. Finally pick up the last three cards. Turn them over in a slight fan and drop them on the rest. To reset, for another performance, you simply have to go through the pack and reverse the one card, which is wrong way round.

The audience have seen a lot of backs and any idea of more than one card being reversed seems unlikely.

Tamariz says that this routine is based on ideas by Vern Chesbro and J.G. Thompson Jr.

The Page boy speakş....

Have you ever gone through a phase in your life when almost everything seems to be going wrong? You have? Good. At least it's nice to know that I am not the only one who it happens to. At this very moment, as I write, I am just recovering from a bout of sciatica. Do you know what sciatica is? Neither did I, but I do now, and if you ever meet up with someone who is suffering from this ailment, don't do anything but sympathise. It is the most physically painful experience I have ever had in my life.

I have actually had to cancel a number of shows because of it, and this in the middle of a lean period show-wise. I have had more cancelled shows in the last couple of months than I could count. Don't write and tell me how to get the money from the clients. I didn't. I can't. And I won't get it.

Did I mention that last week my car burst into flames? With me in it. Would you believe that as I made a dash for freedom I completely forgot my sciatica? I also forgot my keys which meant that I couldn't get into my apartment to call the fire brigade. I banged on the doors of all my neighbours and nobody was in. It looks as if the car will be a total write-off. I have now lost all my no claims bonuses. Oh, what the hell.

Have there been any bright spots amidst all this gloom? Yes, there was one.

The first annual Martin Breese Close-Up Convention. Held in a centrally located London hotel, it can only be described as a stand out occasion. The whole event was hosted by yours truly, and masterminded by Martin Breese. I have no intention of giving you a blow by blow account of the whole affair for the simple reason I didn't see all of it. I was too busy running around making sure that this or that was ready. But there are one or two things worth mentioning.

First it really was an enjoyable day which started around 10am and finished about 6pm. Many visitors from abroad. Bobby Bernard from England did a mini-lecture on dice-stacking, Braco from Germany discussed the use of threads and closed with a short linking ring routine which included a truly amazing ring off arm penetration.

The star item of the day was a lecture by John Mendoza of the U.S. Here was a man with an enormous amount of knowledge who for perhaps a little more than an hour performed card tricks. You name the close-up card trick and he had it in there somewhere, or a variation of it. Not all of it was completely original, but all of it was good. He finished off his stint with a chop cup routine and a cups and balls routine. He had made, or had someone make for him, the chop cup in brass and its shape was a little different to the norm and it looked very impressive. His cups and balls included one which was also a chop cup with you know what in the base. Two criticisms. He made the almost classic mistake of many close-up lectures. Too many card tricks and the assumption that the audience knew more than they did. He would mention moves like the Buckley Double Undercut without explaining them. John, when you talk to a hundred and fifty magicians you MUST explain the moves. Some of them actually don't know them. (For those who don't know the Buckley Double Undercut is the opposite to the Mohammed Ali single uppercut). Having said that I must say that the John Mendoza really was the star item of the day.

With names like Bob Read, Alan Shaxen, Trevor Lewis our editor Walt Lees and Gordon Bruce on the bill, yours truly, and perhaps eight or nine others, the close-up shows were excellent. The dark horse was an Irishman called Dan O'Donoghue. Catch him if you can. He's good, he's young and he'll get better.

I know I haven't mentioned everyone who performed. I didn't actually see all the performers. If you, dear reader, were one of them and I haven't mentioned your name, write to me and complain. See where it gets you.

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

Exclusive Card Magic Series — No.2 "Mindboggler". Price £1.75 U.K., £2.00 Europe, 5 dollars U.S.A. All post free. Obtainable from Eaton Magic Graphics, 5 Friar Gate, Derby, England and Martin Breese.

This is the first to be published of a six part series by Roger Crosthwaite. For various reasons, part two preceded part one. This particular manuscript consists of three twelve by eight printed pages plus frontispiece. There is also a separate sheet with 19 clear photographs. All is printed on glossy paper. The idea of having the pictures on a separate sheet is good. It enables the reader to keep referring to them, without having to turn a page.

The effect described is a straightforward one. A card is chosen by a spectator. Its back suddenly changes colour. Then it changes back to the original colour but the rest of the pack changes.

The method involves the Classic Force, which is covered in detail and a (presumably) original move, the Contrapuntal Switch. Both are described minutely. There is also a switch of the pack, on the lap.

If you are one of that small crowd of elite cardicians who revel in such statements as "...The step can be as fine as five thousandths of an inch but never more than fifteen thousandths or a sixty-fourth of an inch...", then you will no doubt enjoy this handling and the five variations discussed.

Recommended, but not for beginners.

"MORE PROFESSIONAL CARD TRICKS" by Walt Lees. Author's publication, soft covers, 37 pages, 53 photographs, price £4.50.

In the last twelve months or so, Walt Lees has written and published no less than THREE books on the subject of card magic — two of his own material and one featuring the "Commercial Card Magic of Roger Crosthwaite". This present volume brings the Lees total to FOUR. It may well be more by the time you read this! Having set a high standard with the first three books, one begins to wonder just how long the quality can continue. That question is irrelevant as far as this present offering is concerned.

"More Professional Card Tricks" contains four completely routined effects with a regular pack of playing cards, plus a bonus section on the Lees approach to the Frank SHANK SHUFFLE. As ever, Walt admits that what he offers are not brand new tricks, the credits in the book make that quite clear. But what is on offer is the Lees treatment. And that means an individual approach fully explained in such a manner that anyone with half an inclination can learn to perform the routines. Technique is only part of the battle, as we all know, and Walt ensures that he covers all the small seemingly insignificant details that turn tricks and sleights into magic.

The book opens with a variation of Koran's "Matching the Cards" and Cy Endfield's "Gambler Out-Gambled" in which the performer in attempting to cut four aces, actually gets the four kings and the aces reappear elsewhere. A simple and boring description which does not do justice to the finely honed routine that is actually on offer. There's a multiple shift, thrown in; some excellent advice on what to say when culling a group of cards from the deck; a mini-treatise on the much-abused slip-cut, and much more.

The second item, "Another Departure" springs direct from Alex Elmsley's familiar "Point of Departure" plot, in which a selected card vanishes from between two jokers and turns up reversed in the pack. A fairly standard method is given, which at first glance may seem a bit old hat to some. But again, a glance below the surface shows much more. All cardmen will be very familiar with the moves used in this effect, and in all probability will have their own method. But, to dismiss the Lees offering on that basis, is to overlook much that is of value. The Marlo "ATFUS" variation, and the psychology behind the execution of the move is of great value. As is, too, the approach to the Drop Sleight.

Item number three is a reworking of the Hofzinser Card Plot, with more than a passing credit to Larry Jennings. Probably the most difficult effect in the book from a technical standpoint, but since the method of this trick has become more important than the effect in recent years, I'm sure it will please devotees of the premise. If you're looking for a practical approach to the Hofzinser idea, try this.

"Crazy Mixed-Up Poker", the final trick is certainly the easiest technically, but does require some skill in the handling of an assisting spectator. Walt Lees tells you how you can allow a SPECTATOR to shuffle a pack of cards, yet still deal the performer the winning hand.

(Actually, sometimes the spectator gets the winner, but that contingency is well covered).

And, finally, to the SHANK SHUFFLE. A false riffle shuffle that is, like its close relative, the ZARROW SHUFFLE, an out and out fraud. But, as ever, there is a right way to execute the fraud. Walt explains why his method works as effectively as it does.

Expert card handlers will find nothing in this book that they have not come across before. But those who think they are experts, and those who know they're not (which means most of us) will learn much from a study of the contents.

No new tricks, no new sleights. But, a practical method of actually using standard card moves to create strong card magic, and a wealth of advice on how to perform that magic. Add to all this the Lees humour and laconic writing style, and you have a good read as well as everything else.

Recommended wholeheartedly.

YELLOW MAGIC PAGES Compiled and published by Hans Witt, P.O. Box 1350, 4156 Willichl, Germany. Price

This is a small, handy sized directory of magic dealers, collectors, specialist suppliers, libraries, magazines, clubs, schools etc etc. In other words, if there is anything that you want in connection with magic from advertising matter to rare books, you will be able to find somebody in here who can help. Obviously no book of this kind can ever be fully comprehensive. It would, on the other hand, be very difficult to think of any need, which is not catered for somewhere within its pages.

The book covers names and addresses worldwide, but with a strong slant on Europe and U.S.A. It is in both English and German and is well worth keeping to hand.

Coin in Cigarette Lighter (Scott York). Price £12.50. Available from Repro Magic, 46 Queenstown Road, London SW8.

Anybody who was fortunate enough to see Scott York's lecture a couple of years back, will remember this effect. A borrowed, marked coin is mysteriously passed into a transparent cigarette lighter. It is then removed and returned to the owner. The lighter is unfaked and can be passed for examination.

This effect was developed by a working magician for use in commercial performing situations. It is practical, baffling and capable of being worked under almost all conditions.

Editorial Comment on Reviews

Several people have pointed out that Pabular never gives anything a bad write-up. This is perfectly true. We do not have space to waste on saying how bad something is. In other words, if we do a review of anything, then it is good value. It does not automatically follow that if we do not write it up then it is bad. We can, after all, only mention those things which are sent to us. All we do say is, that if it is reviewed, it is worthwhile.

JOSEPH SCHMIDT WRITES

Reference to "DOING THE SPLITS" in the Crosthwaite Issue (Vol.6 No.10)... I'll probably 'get the devil' for messing with a clergyman's routine, but here goes anyway...

If anyone actually did follow the recommendation at the bottom of page 918 "to read Scarne on Cards" — he should have discovered that Black Jack is played EXACTLY OPPOSITE to the procedure described in the Crosthwaite routine, in that. . .

- a) The DEALER is not authorised to SPLIT or DOUBLE DOWN.
- b) The dealer's DOWN CARD is not turned up (unless he has a Black Jack) until AFTER the players' hands have been played out.
- c) Whenever a player splits aces and/or doubles down if the one card he receives with those aces (one per ace) happens to be a 10-count card, making a total of 21, this is NOT A BLACK JACK just a 21-count hand. (Black Jack only occurs when the first two cards received have a total of 21).

The classic theme MAGICIAN VERSUS GAMBLER (Jean Hugard's ANNUAL OF MAGIC, 1937, page 43) can still be retained as in the Crosthwaite handling by making a couple of minor changes in the patter/procedure/set-up.

Argument between gambler and magician about who is the better card man. They agree to settle by actually playing a game of Black Jack — $100 limit.

Gambler deals (as performer deals out cards) cards, first to magician, next to himself FU, next to magician, and fourth to himself. (An extra card above set-up at start can be used to show how, in Black Jack, the top card is first 'burned' - see Scarne).

Gambler peeks at his DOWN card — sees he has (say) KD (here, you show the dealer's (gambler's) down card), making a count of 20.

Magician looks at his cards — sees he has two deuces, starts to turn them up to split them - when gambler sees how weak the magician's cards are - he sneers, "Ha, Ha, I guess this will show who is the better card man - want to raise the bets to $200 limit?"

Magician agrees, saying, "Back home we have a saying DEUCES NEVER LOSES," so he just splits one deuce right down the middle, etc a la Crosthwaite routine. . .

This makes the magician's hand total up to 4 beautiful 21-counts and he wins $800! (NOTE: As stated above these are not BLACK JACKS, just 21-count hands).

Naturally, since Reverend Crosthwaite is "a man of the cloth" he is not expected to know all the finer points of games with "the devil's playthings" - but is it not true that he, Father Cyprian and Brother John Hamman have their Bibles partially hollowed out to hold a deck of cards and a copy of the 'latest card book'????

Phil Goldstein

The following is a multi-phase packet routine, in the presentational guise of a "lesson in magic"...

Required are the ace through four of clubs. At the start of the routine, these are in order from the top: A, 2, 3, 4.

- Begin by fanning out the cards, face up. Explain that you will perform some magic with these cards, and explain things as you go along. Flip the packet face down. Perform an Elmsley Count, as you comment, "Although there are four cards involved, I shall work with them one at a time." The final card of the count goes to the bottom of the packet, yielding an order from the top: 4, 2, 3, A.
- Obtain a break above the two lowermost cards. Perform a Half-Pass to secretly reverse the cards beneath the break, as you continue, "Each card is unique, and requires a specialised technique."
- Remove the top single card, and gesture with it as you say, "What works with one card will not necessarily function with another. . ." Replace the card beneath the packet.
- Say, "For example, to work with the ace. you must snap your fingers." Do so. Now, perform an Elmsley Count. The ace will show face up in the face down packet.
- State, "On the other hand, the deuce requires a completely different procedure, which is this. . ." Here, perform the Vernon Throughthe-Fist Flourish — the variant which secretly turns over the entire packet. Elmsley Count, displaying the deuce face up in the face down packet.
- 6. Continue, "Remember, the action for the deuce was this (repeat the Vernon Fist Flourish, again secretly turning over the packet); whereas the finger-snapping applies to the ace." Here, snap your fingers. Now, Jordan Count. The ace will again appear as the only face up card in the
- Say, "The trey is handled in a totally 7. different manner. For that, a simple tapping action is used." Remove the top single card of the packet, and tap it several times on the balance of the stock. Jordan Count, displaying the trey face up in the face down packet.

- 8. Continue, "Remember, the action for the trey was this (here, remove the bottom card of the packet, and use it to repeat the tapping action. Replace this card on top); whereas the finger-snapping applies to the ace." Snap your fingers. Perform an Elmsley Count, again showing the ace as the only face up card in the packet.
- 9. Say, "To work with the four is easy. You must only consider that four equals two-timestwo, and the obvious action is thus to perform the action we used previously with the deuce—but twice." Here, perform the Vernon Fist Flourish two times—once in each variation, so that the packet ends up having been turned over. Jordan Count, displaying the four face up.
- 10. State, "You're probably wondering what would happen if no special actions were applied . . ." As this is said, perform a Half-Pass upon the three lowermost cards of the packet.
- 11. Continue, "The answer is, if no actions are applied, no effect results. It's really quite a simple causal relationship." Perform a Jordan Count, showing all four cards to be face down.
- 12. Hand the packet to the spectator, saying, "Let's review. Do you remember the original action required to work with the ace?" The spectator will hopefully recall that it is finger-snapping. Direct the spectator to snap his/her own fingers, and then to count through the packet. The ace will be face up, among three face down cards.
- 13. At this point, the packet is clean, so you may leave it with the spectator as you conclude with the comment, "That was very good. Now practice the other techniques, and I'm sure you will be doing the entire routine yourself in no time!"

Editorial Note

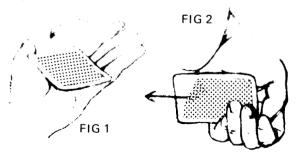

This is a very nice little sequence, which has a lot of entertainment potential. You will need to follow the moves very carefully though. Take care in all of the counts that the last card is placed correctly. It always goes on top unless specifically stated in the text. The Half-Pass, Elmsley and Jordan Counts should require no explanation. All readers ought to be familiar with these. If not get a copy of "Counts, Cuts, Moves and Subtlety" by Jerry Mentzer.

The Vernon "Through the Fist Flourish" is used by a lot of magicians, who probably do not know it under this name. Hold out your left hand as shown in Fig.1 and place a packet of cards on the palm. Close the fingers into a loose fist, while simultaneously rotating the hand back upwards at the wrist. Use the thumb to push out the packet as shown in Fig.2. It will have been reversed. If you wish to apparently carry out the same moves, without reversing the packet, then simply place it on your fingers as in Fig. 3. Carry out exactly the same actions. The packet will do a kind of paddle move as the fingers turn it one way and the wrist movement turns it back again. It will emerge in the Fig.2 position, the same way up as it was originally.

to invent an effect and then perform it better than anyone else. Over the years many effects in the close up field have come from Eric and none better than this. We are proud to have secured the rights to Eric Mason's Golden Retriever which is hand crafted by Stephen Wylie.

The perfect impromptu effect is hard to find but this is as near perfect as you will find anywhere. Simon Lovell has owned one of the early prototypes for quite a while now and says that it is one of his favourite effects. Basically you borrow a lighted cigarette from a spectator but before you take it you ask the spectator to sign his initials on the cigarette using a beautiful brass pen. The cigarette vanishes in front of their eyes and after a little by-play is discovered right inside the pen - the spectator himself is invited to unscrew the barrel of the pen and there inside is the actual cigarette. All the props can be rigorously examined - there is nothing to discover. An absolutely baffling close up miracle for the few who appreciate using the best hand made props. You are supplied with a hand crafted modern pen robust enough to meet professional needs . .

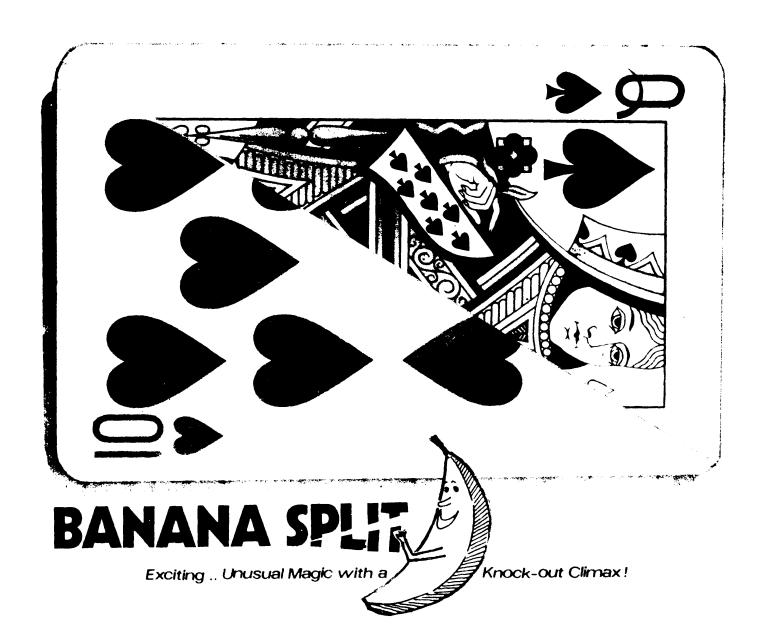

it is in polished brass and come complete with all the extra bits and pieces you'll need to perform the effect. This is a hand made precision turned item that takes over four hours to make on a lathe.

The performer introduces an envelope which he explains contains a prediction - a single 'JUMBO CARD'. He then shows an ordinary card case - which he explains contains two complete decks of 52 cards! This ludicrous statement always brings forth a smile, and when the cards are removed from the case the smile turns to tremendous laughter- for the case is seen to contain a deck of cards-cut into two wedge shaped portions

Both parts of the deck are shown -face up - to be a "regular deck". A card is freely chosen from each and placed face down on the table. The performer explains that the odds of the two halves being of the same card are pretty remote- if they are - and also match the jumbo prediction would be a miracle.

The two halves are turned over. To the performer's horror they don't match. The halves of the two different cards are seen on the table . . . Consternation . . . Panic . But all ends well with application of a little magic- for when the spectater removes the Jumbo Prediction from the envelope- it is seen to have a "Split-face" clearly made up of the two different selected half cards.

After the apparent mishap . . this climax is an absolute knockout that really sets your audience on its ears.

Very easy to do . . . Comes complete and ready to work right away.

METHOD & WORKING

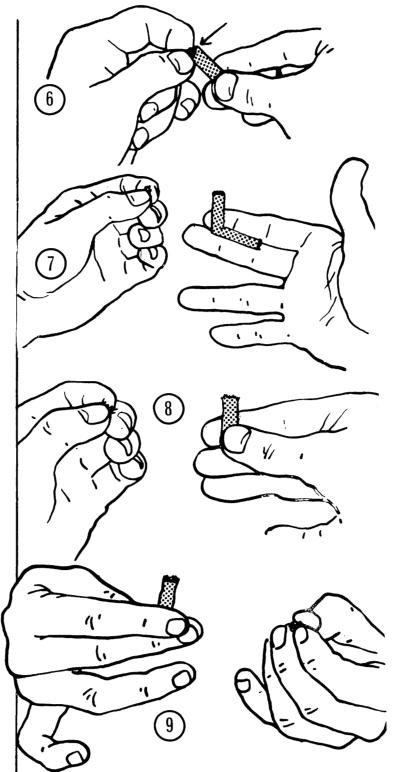

- 1) Secretly Softening the Cigarette. Borrow a cigarette and hold it by the centre, between the right thumb and first finger. Show it around and, in the process, roll it backwards and forwards to make the middle soft. To conceal this rolling action, rotate the hand, at the wrist, turning it palm up and palm down. In other words, do the paddle move with the cigarette, applying pressure all of the time. Continue doing this and talking, until you know that the cigarette is soft enough to be safely bent, without the risk of tearing the paper.
- 2) The Apparent Tearing. Take the cigarette in both hands, as in Fig.2. The position alone, telegraphs to the audience that the cigarette is about to be torn. The next few actions follow on from one another rapidly, so as to simulate a simple tearing action. As stated earlier, no particular emphasis is given to this action. It should be done in a casual, low key manner.

Turn the hands, from the wrists, to the Fig.3 position. This brings the fingers towards the audience. Just for a split second, the whole cigarette is out of sight. As this is a perfectly natural part of the tearing process, it passes unnoticed. As soon as the hands are in the Fig.3 position, the right thumb presses on the centre of the cigarette and draws it backwards, until it is completely concealed behind the right fingers. Fig.4 shows an exposed view of the position, from the performer's view. Because the centre of the cigarette is thinner and softer than the ends, this drawing backwards action is very easy to do.

As soon as the cigarette has reached the Fig. 4 position, the right thumb returns to its original place, behind the fingertips. The left thumb and first finger pinch a tiny fragment of tobacco AND PAPER and tear it off as in Fig. 5. This should be only the minutest portion, which destroys only the very tip of the cigarette. Later as Figs. 8 & 9 will show, this minute fragment appears to be the end of the left hand half of the cigarette. Take just enough to give this illusion and no more. Also, and this is most important, only take the fragment from the front (audience side) of the cigarette. The performer's side should be left intact and appear undamaged.

During the tearing action, before the little bit of paper and tobacco is completely severed, pull the cigarette to the left and upward. This bends it, in the centre, as shown in Fig.6.

When the tearing off of the small portion has been completed, the cigarette will be in the position shown in Fig.7. In the picture the right thumb has been raised, for clarity. In fact, the thumb will occupy the position in Fig.8. An audience view of Fig.8 is shown in Fig.9. Notice how the right third and fourth fingers have been opened out. This greatly adds to the illusion of the cigarette being in two pieces.

As was mentioned at the beginning and is now stressed again, the whole action from Fig.2 to Fig.9 takes about one second to execute.

3) Placing Together The Two "Halves". Pause for about two seconds, in the Fig.9 position. Then place both hands back together again, in a position almost identical to the one shown in Fig.6. The left hand, using the little bit of paper and tobacco, pushes against the end of the eigarette, in the right. The eigarette is pushed backwards, into the right hand, until it reaches the position, shown in Fig.10. During this action, it is allowed to straighten a little, but not completely.

Separate the hands a little, as if to show the severed ends, once more (see Fig.11). Do not stay in this position. Immediately bring both hands together again. This time the left hand is slightly higher than the right. The fragment in the left should almost touch the end of the cigarette (Fig.12).

The next action is not an easy one to describe on paper. However, anybody following the description, with a cigarette in hand, should be able to understand it. The right thumb pushes the cigarette to the left. Simultaneously, the back of the hand is rotated downwards, in a clockwise direction. This will result in the inner end of the cigarette being pivotted into view as in Fig.13. Its direction of movement, in relation to the hand, is indicated by the arrow. The opposite end will be concealed by the left fingers.

The small fragment of tobacco and paper will be directly above the fold, in the centre of the cigarette. Place the tobacco and the bit of paper into the fold. Fig.14 shows how it would look, if the left hand were to be removed, at this stage. For the time being, though, the left forefinger maintains contact with the fragment. The right hand rotates palm down, simultaneously the left turns palm up. During the turning, the left thumb comes up and takes a hold of the centre of the cigarette, gripping it against the left forefinger, which is already there. Fig.15 shows the position at the start of the action, as the hands are about to turn. Fig.16 shows the position, when the turn is completed and the cigarette and fragment have been transferred to the left hand. The right forefinger is not removed until the very last moment. It is very important that, during this turnover and transfer, from right to left hands, that the cigarette be rotated on its axis, thereby keeping the loose tobacco and paper on top. Ensure also that the ragged edge, from which the fragment was torn, ends up on the performer's side of the cigarette and not the audience's.

Fig.17 shows the position of the cigarette on completion of the transfer. It is very important that the bent position be maintained. This is a vital part of the illusion of two separate pieces. It is only fully straightened at the moment of supposed restoration.

4) The Little Touch. With the cigarette in the Fig.17 position, the illusion that there are two pieces is almost perfect. It is hard to believe that it is still whole. This is what makes the effect so convincing. There are several details, which play an important part. One is that the fragment of tobacco and paper should be right in the fold of the cigarette and pressed home as deeply as possible. Do not just let them lie loosely on top. To do so, destroys the illusion.

It is also most important that the little bit of paper be there. Logically it should not be necessary, but in practise it makes all the difference. Without it the illusion is not nearly so strong. However, be sure that it is only a LITTLE bit of paper and a LITTLE bit of tobacco. If you have too much of either, the illusion will not be right.

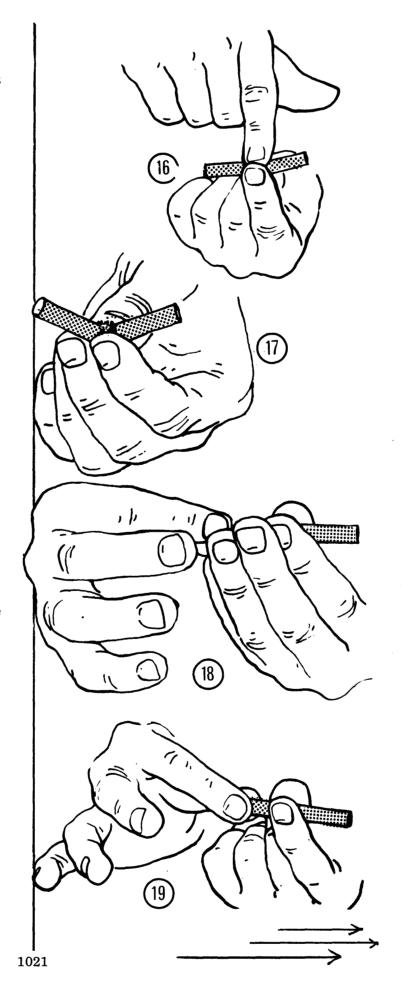

5) The Showing Around. The Fig.17 position can be held for quite a long time. You can really impress upon the audience that the cigarette is in two pieces and that your hands are otherwise empty. Give them time to realise the full implication of this. Now is the time to dramatise and build up the subsequent restoration.

To justify holding the cigarette in this position for some time, press each end, alternately, towards the centre, with the right hand. Act as though you are trying to restore the cigarette. Also, press the right forefinger on the centre, from time to time. Make sure that everyone sees and appreciates that it is "really" broken.

Remember though, to keep the ragged edge towards yourself. The whole displaying process should last about 20 seconds.

6) The Restoration. Take the right end of the cigarette between the right thumb and first finger. The left second finger straightens out, alongside the left first finger. Lightly roll the cigarette backwards, towards yourself, relaxing the left thumb at the same time. This will result in the small fragment of tobacco and paper falling away and dropping onto the left palm. The first and second fingers cover this. Fig.18 shows the position. The cigarette can now be fully straightened.

As soon as the fragment has dropped, the left second finger bends in towards the palm, leaving a clear view of the cigarette as in Fig.19. Pull the cigarette towards the right, sliding the centre into view. Let it be clearly seen that you have restored it. The whole restoration sequence lasts for about 3 seconds.

7) Destroying the evidence. An easy way to get rid of the fragment in the left hand, is to casually turn it palm down over an ashtray. Move the ashtray aside, in the same action, while keeping your attention on the cigarette. Sometimes it is possible to throw it onto an empty plate, where there are the remains of food, under cover of a gesture.

Do not try to drop it directly onto the floor. This is dangerous. The little bit of paper is very visible, especially as it has a tendency to flutter down. If you wish to get rid of it in this way, ensure that it is either below the level of the table top or behind something, before being released.

Place the good end of the cigarette in your mouth and light the ragged one. Keep the good side towards the audience, as you do this.

ADDITIONAL NOTES

This method is only suitable for filterless cigarettes. The idea of putting a fragment of tobacco and paper in the centre, to make the cigarette look torn, can be used with other methods.

Tommy Wonder likes to spring the effect on people, completely unannounced. He comments that there appears to be something wrong with the tobacco of his cigarette. Then, he breaks it, as though to examine the contents. When he is satisfied that there is nothing wrong, he magically restores it and carries on smoking. On other occasions, he will say that it still does not seem right, and vanish it, using a cigarette pull.

The final note, I will leave in Tommy's own words. "When one practises this trick, it is very easy to get discouraged, especially because it costs you many cigarettes. My advice is to buy 30 to 40 packets of cigarettes, of a very cheap brand. If you are a smoker, buy a brand that you dislike. With such a large investment in cigarettes you have no use for, you will have a strong incentive to keep practising.

Each cigarette can be used twice in practising, so after some 40 packets (800 tries) you will probably have mastered the trick."

Quote of the month (cribbed from S.H. Sharpe in "The Linking Ring")

"Sometimes I think that the most successful conjurers are the men, who have given as much thought and labour to the study of human nature, as they have to the study of magic." David Devant in The Strand Magazine, Feb. 1921.

EDITORIAL

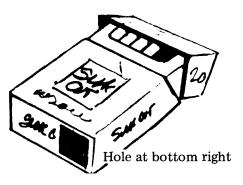

First of all, sincere condolences to Pat Page and Vic Pinto, for the loss of all their equipment, master tapes etc. At the time of writing, I do not know many details. It must, however, have been a severe blow to these two talented people, who do so much for magic. On top of Pat's other troubles, described in the last issue, it does seem very unlucky.

The editorial this month must, of necessity, be a short one. It is important that we keep the total magazine to a certain size, which usually means about 8000 words of copy. The problems arise when there are a lot of illustrations required. It then becomes difficult to assess how big the finished article will be. This month we have two feature items, which require over thirty pictures between them. Both are first class and we are delighted and proud to include them. The problem comes in estimating how much room we have for other things. My guess is, not a lot.

Martin Breese's newsletter/magazine arrived recently. In it are details of his close-up convention for next year. The event this time was a great success and I reckon that next year it will be even more popular. My advice is book early and do not miss it. This country needs a good annual close-up convention, and Martin deserves the full support of every enthusiast, for running one.

The Argentina situation has affected Pabular slightly. We have a good friend out there, in the person of Santiago Nemirovsky, who kindly does translation work for us. It is due to his efforts that the Roxy trick, in the last issue was translated. He has also translated other items by Roxy, which will be released from time to time. Santiago is also working on getting together a South American Pabular with ideas by several top performers in that part of the world. Political events seem to have overtaken us and this project may have to be delayed. A grim reminder that, with the best will in the world, we are all pawns in the hands of politicians.

On a recent visit to Portsmouth Society, Jack Hill showed me one of the new forty pence pieces, which he has made into a folder. Nothing like being bang up to date!

GIANT CIGARETTE PRODUCTION

Richard M. Gamble

This is an updated version of the classic 'Wand from Purse'. The performer opens a cigarette packet and extracts a giant cigarette (about 16 inches long).

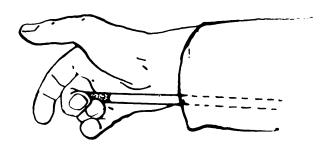

Get a piece of dowel rod from any D.I.Y. shop. It should be the same diameter as a cigarette and about 16 inches in length. Paint it white and stick a couple of pieces of brown paper on each end. These should be of a similar colour to a normal cigarette filter tip. With one on each end, the "cigarette" can be used as a wand, throughout the show.

Take a packet of twenty cigarettes and remove several. Cut a square hole, in the bottom of the packet as in Fig.1. Load the "cigarette" up your right sleeve, so that it can drop to the position shown in Fig.2, when required.

Casually remove the cigarette packet from your left hand pocket. Pass it from the left hand into the right. At this point there is no suggestion of you doing a trick, so there is not likely to be anybody watching. Pass the packet into the right hand and, as you do so, insert the end of the "cigarette" into the hole. Try not to look at your hand as this is done.

When the "cigarette" has been pushed in as far as it will go, flip open the packet and pull the tip out a little. Offer it to somebody on your left as you start to pull it out. They will take a hold and start to extract it. Needless to say, much laughter and interest will ensue.

This is an excellent item to use as an "ice-breaker" and to enable you to get started with your tricks in informal surroundings.

May I introduce ... my first release of 15:2

"MORE PROFESSIONAL CARD TRICKS"

This is another great teaching book. It is written in a similar, humoured manner to my first book, "Four Professional Card Tricks".

This new book will teach you some really great card magic:-

MATCHOCHISM. An effect which I have featured extensively in all of my lectures and performances, for many years. It is a magician makes good item. You attempt to cut the four aces. On the last one, you make a mistake. A snap of the fingers puts things right. Nothing very new so far. But, for a final kicker, you do keep your promise and FIND THE ACES. This routine has earned me a lot of applause over the years. Magicians appreciate the twist at the end. Laymen see it as sheer magic.

ANOTHER DEPARTURE. A version of Elmsley's famous "Point of Departure". A card just vanishes, right under their noses and is discovered reversed in the pack. This version took me ten years to evolve. It uses no fake cards and is the cleanest handling that I have yet seen.

HOFZINSER/JENNINGS. Based on a Larry Jennings routine, this is my own handling of the much vaunted Hofzinser Card Problem. This version will give you no problems at all.

CRAZY MIXED UP POKER. My best selfworking card trick. The spectator shuffles and cuts the pack. Winning hands are still dealt. This is a spoof demonstration of card sharping, crammed with comedy and laughter.

THE SHANK SHUFFLE. This is my own, closely guarded handling. It is one of the most deceptive false shuffles around. For many years I refused to even perform it for magicians, let alone reveal the secret(s). Worth many times the price of the book.

Written and produced to my usual foremat and standard. The photographs have come out very well in this one. Full explanations given of all the moves, handlings and presentation. I do not just tell you how the tricks are done. I teach you how to do them.

Gordon Bruce

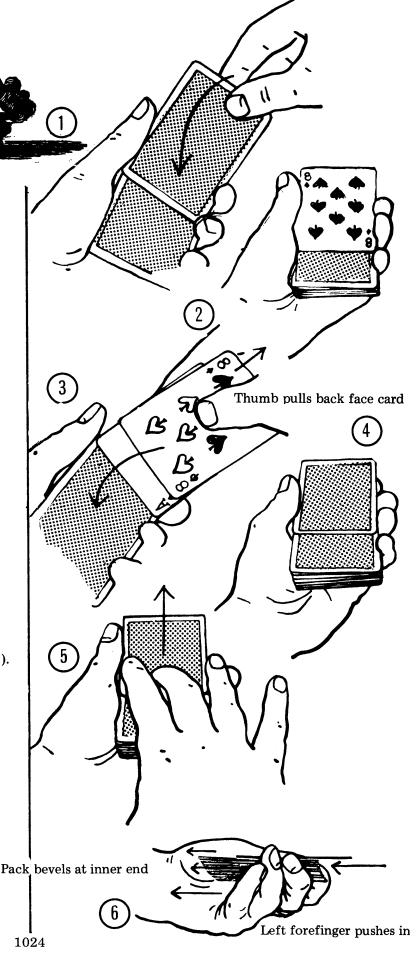

In volume 7 No 1, we published Juan Tamariz's handling of the Double Lift and *Ascanio's variation on the same. Just before publication I happened to mention the move to Gordon Bruce, who was in London at the time. Gordon expressed some surprise, as he had been using a similar move for many years and had developed several variants. I suggested to him that he write up his own ideas and fill in any background details. The following is the result, in his own words.

I developed this move, many years ago and, on the advice of a close friend, showed it to few people. When I performed it for Derek Dingle, he mentioned that he thought Larry Jennings had something similar. A couple of years later, I met Jennings. He said that his was the same. When my friend Peter Duffie showed it to Allen Jamieson some nine years ago, Jamieson mentioned that Stanley Collins had used something similar. The Collins move is described below. It has much the same effect. I have an addition to the Collins move, which I will describe next and then I will detail my own version. Finally, for good measure, I will describe a trick, in which the move plays a key part.

Other items, which relate to this move are the D'Amico Change and a Vernon item described in Daley's Notebooks (possibly No.22?).

The Stanley Collins Replacement

- 1) Collins turned over the double card(s), end for end, as in Fig.1. The double was left outjogged as in Fig.2.
- 2) The right hand approaches the outjogged end of the double: thumb on the face; fingers on the back. As the double is turned face down, end over end, the right thumb pulls the face card inwards for about half an inch as in Fig.3. The right fingers screen this.
- 3) Complete the turnover by placing the card(s) on the pack, so that the top one is outjogged. The face card of the double goes flush with the pack. Fig. 4 shows the result. The single, outjogged card can now be lifted vertically from the pack and used or revealed as you will.

Razor Lift

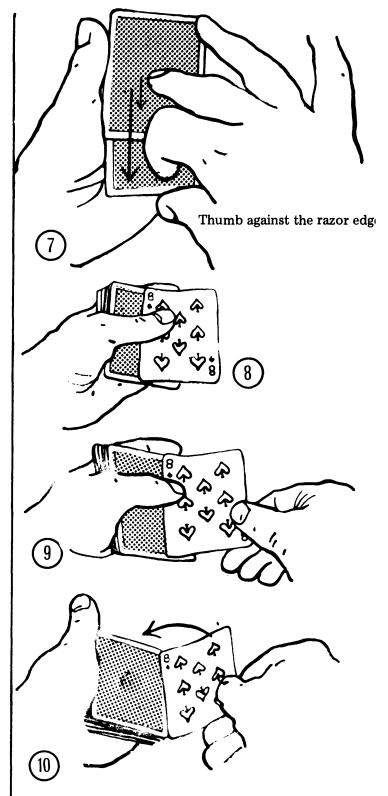

This is a method of doing the Double Lift, which was developed for use in conjunction with the Stanley Collins move, above.

- 1) Hold the pack face down, in the left hand. The right hand comes over the pack, so that the right second finger can push the top card forward, until it projects about an inch from the outer end of the pack (Fig. 5). The pack, by the way, should be held in a natural dealing position. The left forefinger is curled around the outer end.
- 2) The left forefinger pushes inwards, on the outer end of the pack. This causes it to bevel at the inner end, as in Fig.6. The position of the jogged card and the nature of the bevel, prevent the audience from being aware of what is taking place.
- 3) The right hand comes over the pack. The right second finger contacts the outjogged card at a point about one inch from the inner end. The right thumb simultaneously presses against the sharp edge, formed by the bevel as in Fig.7. The left thumb stays at the side of the pack, throughout the move, and acts as a guide to assist in lining up the cards.
- 4) Draw the top card inward with the right second finger. When the inner end of the card hits the right thumb, lift up. You will find that, because of the razor edge, you have two cards, perfectly square.
- 5) The right hand turns the double card(s) face up and places them on the pack, in the position shown in Fig.2. You can now go straight into the Stanley Collins move, described above, from that point.

A Touch for the Double Lift

This is an addition to the Double Lift, which was developed and used by myself for many years. It can be applied to many standard Double Lift techniques.

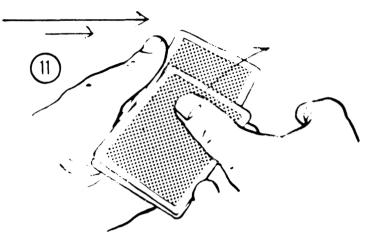

- 1) Assume that you have already turned the double card(s) face up and rested it(them) on the pack, as in Fig. 8.
- 2) The right hand approaches the double, to flip it(them) face down on top of the pack. Place the right thumb on the inner right hand corner of the double card(s), so that it covers the index. The first and second fingers contact the back of the card(s), beneath the thumb as in Fig.9.
- 3) As you start the flipover action, move the left thumb away to the side of the pack. This will leave the way clear for the card(s) to fall.

At the same time, as a part of the overall action, the right hand sweeps the double card(s) across to the right side of the pack as in Fig.10. The long sides of the pack of the double card(s) line up exactly. This is very important.

4) Flip the double card(s) bookwise onto the back and, at the same time, straighten the right first and second fingers. This action will cause the rear card of the double to move forward for about one inch. Fig.11 shows this. The card(s) will land so that the face card of the double is flush with the pack. The rear card of the pair will end up in a similar position to the one shown in Fig.4, above.

Triple Lift Variation

The same moves can be used for a triple lift replacement. Start with the triple held as in Fig.9, above. When the cards are flipped face down, as the Fig.10 position is reached, the side of the right second finger, which will naturally lie along the inner short end of the triple, is able to push forward two cards, instead of one. This will have the effect of "throwing" two cards forward. The result will be that you will finish up with a double card(s) outjogged in the Fig.4 position. These cards will stay in perfect alignment, and appear to be a single, face down card.

The action of the second finger is similar to that in the Victor Double Push Over.

"WAY OUT"

Gordon Bruce

The following effect makes good use of the Triple Lift technique described above. The idea of dealing from an outjogged double belongs to Peter Duffie. It appears here with his permission. He showed me the move a very long time ago. We both worked on various uses and applications. The following is one that I came up with, adding the touch with the face up card for extra effect. It has been one of my favourite quickies for laymen, ever since.

The only preparation is to make sure that the top card of the pack has a value of between six and ten (not a picture) and that the second card from top is face up. This can be any value.

Personally, the way that I get set is to spread the pack, face up between the hands and spot a card of suitable value. Assume that it happens to be the Ten of Diamonds. I then reverse the card, immediately to the right of it, using the method described in Henry Christ's Four Ace Trick in Cliff Green's "Professional Card Magic". This brings the two cards to the bottom of the pack, from whence they can be double cut to the top. This will give the set-up, in a casual manner. The pack can then be placed aside, until needed. There are umpteen other ways of setting up, which you may prefer.

Spread the pack face down and have a card selected. Keep the top few cards bunched, so as to conceal the face up one. Ensure that everybody sees the card, then take it from the chooser and return it to the pack. It is apparently replaced in the centre. Really, it goes second from top. Use the Tilt Move Depth Illusion to accomplish this.

Turn the top card (10 of Diamonds) face up. Say, "The ten tells me that, if I count down ten cards, then your card will turn up." As you say this, the 10 of Diamonds is face up on top of the pack.

Push off the top three cards as one. You can get a break for this as the Tilt Move is executed, if needs be. The third card from the top is reversed anyway, so the natural break that it forms should be sufficient for most people. Perform the Triple Lift Variation, described above, to apparently flip the Ten of Diamonds face down. This will leave you with an outjogged double as in Fig.4. The lower card will be the now face up selected one. The visible card will be an indifferent card (the one which was originally reversed in the pack). The 10 of Diamonds has been off-loaded onto the pack.

The right hand lifts the double, at the outer, short end. The left thumb riffles down the side of the pack and makes an opening, at the outer left corner. The double is inserted, leaving it outjogged for about 2 inches as in Fig.12. The tip of the left forefinger presses upwards, against the double card(s) holding it(them) together.

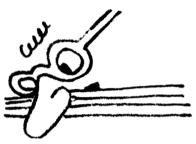

The right hand deals the cards, from the top of the pack, onto the table, face down. Count each card as it is dealt. As each card is taken by the right hand, it moves diagonally, to the right along the arrow shown in Fig.12. This causes it to pass over the protruding double card(s).

Continue dealing and counting, in this way, until No.9 is reached. It is important that an even rhythm be maintained. Without breaking the tempo, the right thumb comes to take card No.10. In fact, it skims over the card, just missing it and sweeps forward, taking the top card of the double. This is dealt onto the pile, on the table. The pressure from the left forefinger helps to ensure that the face up selection is left, protruding from the pack.

Try to focus attention on the dealt cards at this point. If performing for a group, the appearance of the face up card may be noticed immediately. When performing for a single person, you will often find that he/she will turn over the last card dealt. They will not notice the face up one. If this happens, quietly table the pack and wait for the spectator to spot it.

Whatever happens, the effect is very strong. Simply say, "I told you that the card would turn up!"

"THE COIN AND CARD MAGIC OF BOBBY BERNARD"

Written by Val Andrews Available from Goodliffe Publications, C. Goodliffe Neale, Arden Forest Industrial Estate, Alcester, Warwicks. Price In the U.S.A. from Magico Magazine, New York. Price 15 Dollars.

Bobby Bernard is one of magic's best known "characters". He is also a skilled technician, an avid collector, a great authority on magical history and has considerable experience as a teacher and producer of several top class magic acts. In addition to all of this, he finds time to be an actor and student of things theatrical. He is also, privately, a very good mimic. It is high time that a book was written about his work.

This particular book is hard bound with gold leaf lettering on the spine and front cover. There are 116 pages of text, which cover some 37 items.

After the usual foreword, Val has interjected a little section on the differences between British English and American English. This is followed by a brief biography of Bobby, which has been carefully written, so as to avoid saying anything that might give a clue about his age!!!

The first magic section deals with coins. Most of the items described are quickies; a number of quick effects and moves, which have been developed over a period of years. In their creator's hands, they look like real magic. Most are simple in concept but, like so many things, which are, they require absolutely faultless execution, if they are to mean anything. Given that faultless execution, they become miracles. Bobby's forte is his coin work, so it is not surprising that this section is the longest, in the book.

The next section, "On Being Fawkes", was no doubt included for the sake of completeness. Whether it has a place in what is essentially a close-up book, is debatable. It is given just under two pages, so the close-uppers will not feel that valuable space has been wasted. Do not think, from this, that I am slating the Fawkes concept, or Bobby's rendition. I just feel that, if the subject is to be treated at all, then it deserves a fuller discussion than is given here. It should really be a separate book, explaining how the act was conceived, researched and finally put together.

Section three is the card section. Again, the accent is on moves and quickies, rather than on routining and subtlety. Of interest to me was Al Koran's Top-Change. This is very similar to one of Le Paul's, but it is interesting to see Koran's observations on anything. There is also a very good false cut, a deceptive handling of a crimp and several other titbits.

The final section covers Bobby Bernard's thoughts on various aspects of magic. Some of these are rather brief. I would have liked him to expand, in far greater depth on the subjects of misdirection, the actor in magic etc.

I enjoyed this book both as a "read" and with the intention of making use of some of the material. It is not a book of devastatingly original magic, full of deep subtleties, elegantly constructed routines and novel plots. It is however, packed with little hints, tips and bits of know-how, discovered over a lifetime in magic. As such, it is highly recommended to all serious students.

AN APPROACH TO MAGIC - Part 2

Roger Crosthwaite

Magic is, by its very nature, a visual art. If what you are doing cannot be seen, there is little point in doing it! Much of the close-up magic, being performed today, has been "artificialised" by the convention conditions, which have become indispensible for so many of the latest "miracles". The working magician seldom has anything remotely approaching ideal conditions. It is no good expecting a clear tabletop. Indeed, I quite often find that I have to perform standing back from the table, if there is one. Over the years, I have learned to structure my magic so that, if needs be, it can be performed without any working surface at all. At the same time, most of it can be adapted to be performed on the tabletop, if and when one becomes available. As a part of this structuring, it was necessary to get used to holding things (cards etc) so that the audience can see them. This may sound like a trivial point to make, but I have often seen magicians holding up cards with the faces tilted away from the spectators. When you are standing at a table and the audience are seated, the angles will be different to those, when you are also seated. You may have to modify your handling to take this into account.

The foregoing is so fundamental that it hardly needs saying. What is not perhaps quite so well understood is the importance of being visually aware - of making your magic as visual as possible. Long drawn out presentations, which require a lot of non-visual communication, are not usually good entertainment. The best effects are those where it is instantly apparent that something magical is happening. Sight is the sense that conveys the illusion of magic in the strongest way. Magicians should capitalise on this, whenever possible. There are many ways to do so. The appearance of something large and unexpected at the end of a routine with small objects is one. The shower of "baby" rabbits at the end of the multiplying bunnies is another. Colour changes and flourishes with cards are yet another. I often use the colour change of a card as an opener when I move in on a table. It is startling and instantaneous visual magic.

I often feel that a lot of mentalists would be better if they gave a little thought to making their magic more visually entertaining. The same applies to card and coin workers. Often a low visual content can be enhanced by the introduction of a few sight gags, or even elegant, artistically designed props.

One danger, which must be avoided, is to difuse a strong, visual content by excessive movement. If a performer is standing at a table and waving his arms about, while darting here, there and everywhere, the audience will find the strain of trying to follow him too much. To avoid this, try to define for yourself a performing arena, the centre, of which is the focal point, where the magic will take place. The size of this arena will vary. With some performers, it will merely be the tabletop. Others will need more space. I like a large area and will usually move about within a distance that can be defined by my outstretched arms. I will, however, keep within this distance. When I make a large movement, from one extreme of my performing area to the other, I will generally do so slowly, so as not to confuse the audience. There are times when the mechanics of the trick may require a large fast movement. On the whole I make my larger movements slower movements.

Obviously you do not tell the audience that you are defining a performing arena, for yourself. They will, however, quickly become accustomed to watching things happen at a particular focal point. Once they do, you will be able to get all sorts of misdirection by moving one hand to the periphery of the area, while the other is openly doing something in the centre.

BACK TO BACK

Bill Worsley

EFFECT

Bill says that he worked out this effect after reading Jeff Busby's "Royal Backs". He uses it as a primer to an All Backs routine similar to Alex Elmsley's. As we are not at liberty to describe this latter, we will just describe Bill's effect. Five cards are shown to have backs on both sides. The performer states that by giving the cards a "magic tap", it will be possible to print faces. This is not a success. The cards still have double backs.

The cards are turned over and fanned. They have suddenly become a Royal Flush in Hearts. The fan is closed up and immediately the cards revert to being double backs.

SET-UP

Fig.1 shows the arrangement of the six cards, although the Two of Clubs in the picture can be any indifferent card. The remainder of the pack is set up for the Elmsley All Backs routine, or whatever you decide to use. (Personally, I think that the trick is strong enough to stand up as a quickie in its own right — Ed).

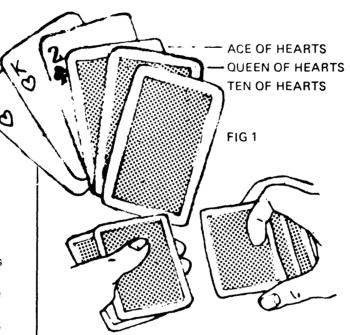

If you wish to begin by removing the cards from the full pack, place the set-up on top. Either crimp or corner short the top card of the pack, below the set-up. Alternatively carry the six cards in a wallet, explaining that you cannot use them, because they are misprints.

ROUTINE

Introduce the cards, keeping them squared and the same way up as in Fig.1. Hamman Count the six cards as five, executing the switchover on the count of three. Turn the cards over and repeat the count. You have, apparently, shown five cards to have backs on both sides, in a very fair manner.

Flick the top card with the right middle finger and announce that this will cause a face to appear. Turn over the entire packet showing a back. Appear disappointed and deal this card, face down onto the table. Flick the packet again. Turn it over. Again there is only a back showing. Place this card onto the table, on top of the previous one. Again flick the top card, turn the packet and deal off the card. Repeat the business once more. You are now left holding two cards, face to face, as one. Flick the card(s) and turn over. Again, only a back is showing. Place the card(s) on top of the tabled pile. The constant turning of the packet has aided the illusion of the cards having backs on both sides. Act as though every time you turn over the packet, you expect to see a face. This will greatly strengthen the illusion.

Pick up the tabled pile. Place it face down, into the left hand. Flick the pile once more. Slowly turn the packet face up. The Ten of Hearts will be seen. Fan the packet in the following manner. Thumb over the Ten of Hearts. This is followed by the Jack and the Queen. Buckle as the King shows, pushing over two cards as one. This will reveal the Ace. Do not reverse the order of the cards, as the fan is made. Pause for a moment. Let the effect sink in.

Close up the fan, in the left hand. Turn the packet face down. Double lift and turn over the top card(s), revealing a double back. Take the double card(s) into the right hand, in the Biddle grip. Thumb the remaining cards, still face down, on top of it (them). These cards are retained in place by the right first finger, as in Fig.2.

You are now set for the Hamman "Flushstration" count. This should by now be known to most readers. The packet is in the Biddle grip. The top five cards are face down. The bottom card is face up. Rotate the hand, palm upwards, from the wrist. This shows the back of the bottom card. Turn the hand palm down again and, with the left thumb, draw away the top card. Rotate the right hand once more. This again shows the bottom card. Turn the hand palm down and draw off the top card. Repeat this action, until only two cards, held as one, remain in the right hand. Place these on the bottom of the packet, in the left. Put the cards away. Bill now picks up the pack proper and goes into his all backs routine.

Ed. Note

None of the counts used in this routine are new. They should be standard knowledge to most readers. If not, Geoff Maltby will no doubt be able to supply you with Jerry Mentzer's book

Why is it that many magicians feel that they have to show off to their magical friends? I keep reading in the magical press that Charlie Magi appeared last week or is appearing next week at so and so place with Mary Topof the Bill. It seems that the moment they are contracted to appear with a star name they want all their magical friends to know about it. As soon as they get a write up in their local paper the first thing they do is to send a copy to some MAGICAL MAGAZINE. As speciality acts that is their job. There few magical acts in this country who can be considered household names. We are supporting acts, and surely our first priority is to get work, wherever it comes from.

The Page boy speaks....

It has been said that all showbusiness people are extroverts, although some people claim that all magicians are introverts who take up our hobby to overcome a sense of inferiority and finish up as introverts pretending to be extroverts. In other words they are really a bunch of nobodies behaving as if they are somebody, just because they can do a couple of magic tricks which their non magical friends can't see through. I don't agree with this theory about magicians being introverts pretending etc., In fact I don't think I'm inferior to anyone, either because I am a magician, small in stature, or a Scotsman living in England, and I will stand up anywhere, on a chair, produce my St Andrews flag magically and sing Scotland the Brave at the top of my voice just as long as someone will pay me to do so.

Ah! Money. We had forgotten about that. Isn't that the real reason why we should be performing magic?? It's the reason I started into this thing we call magic. Truthfully it was. One day I'll tell you the whole story, but for the moment take it from me, it's true. Should we not be thinking more about how to get more work and more money for ourselves rather than trying to impress our magical friends??

I'm going to change tack now. (Now you know I am an ex-seaman). Same subject different angle. How many magicians keep a trick or two up their sleeves that their magical friends don't know about? I remember many years ago I had the great privilege of accompanying the late Al Flosso on a club date in the Carlyle Hotel, New York City. From memory I think that Al's regular act consisted of 20th Century Silks, Lyles Paper Hat, Egg Bag, Miser's Dream and finally a hat production the finale of which was a number of ringing alarm clocks. Al had performed that act before magicians for many years and many magicians, especially in the New York area, could recite his patter backwards. A few days after the aforementioned club date, I was discussing Al's act with a couple of those same magicians and they were amazed to hear me describe several magic effects which Al had performed that night and claimed that they had known and seen Al perform for at least forty years or more and had never seen him perform any of the effects I had mentioned apart from those listed above. Al had more than a couple of tricks up his sleeve that his friends didn't know about, he had a whole bunch of them.

Are you getting the message? Probably not. Extroverts never do. They are too busy listening to themselves when they should be listening to introverts like me. If they come up with a new idea effect or twist, the first place they want to show it it off is at a magical gathering, and it is usually under rehearsed or worse, it is usually the first time they have actually performed it. If it is good why don't they just keep it to themselves????...

Maybe it's because they don't know whether it is good or not. They just figure and hope that it is and think that the only way they can find out is to show it to a bunch of magicians and hope that someone whose opinion they respect will come up afterwards and tell them how much he liked their idea..The real problem is that the guy whose opinion they respect probably works in a bank and doesn't know what the hell he's talking about anyway. (I think I've changed tack again somewhere).

Have you got the message yet??? Recently I mentioned the fact that I have been booked to appear at a Magic Convention in Sweden. Actually it didn't happen. The convention was cancelled so that was that. I also mentioned some somewhere that I was booked to lecture at the F.I.S.M. Convention in Switzerland. That isn't going to happen either. Don't worry, the convention isn't cancelled, I was. A pity really because I was going to lecture and demonstrate ORIGINALITY. Yes that's a fact. I was actually going to perform new magic effects, that magicians have never seen before. Would it have been a first? I was going to show off before my magical friends just how clever I was, and it will never happen. That's right, it will never happen, because I have decided that I don't wish to show how clever I am any more, but will remain content to know that I am clever, without the approval of you and you and you and you.

Message ends.

BASIL HORWITZ SIGNED CARD IN WALLET IN SPECTATOR'S POCKET - £27.50

We sold out within days and have now received the second batch.

'BASIL HORWITZ SIGNED CARD IN WALLET IN SPECTATORS POCKET' has become a cult amongst some of the younger magicians who normally will only buy a pack of cards or a card book. Tim Gan, Stephen Tucker, Paul Brignall, to name just three, not only perform the routine as supplied but have been developing their own routines. As soon as there are enough we will put out a small booklet. The Wallets are made especially for us by Roy Roth. IN STOCK NOW. Jim Breedon purchased one last week and I saw him at the Magic Circle. "How are you getting on with it Jim?" I asked and he replied "Absolutely great Martin. Really pleased". So there you have it folks. One of our finest releases. 'THE BASIL HORWITZ SIGNED CARD IN WALLET IN SPECTATOR'S POCKET'.

MARTIN BREESE

31 RICHMOND WAY, HAMMERSMITH, LONDON W14 Telephone; 01-603 6578

PLEASE NOTE THESE VERY IMPORTANT POINTS

- 1) Keycase may be in the spectator's possession when the ring vanishes.
- 2) Spectator's actual ring appears in the keycase.
- 3) NO REELS USED. No threads to break.
- 4) Keycase may be examined before and after.
- 5) May be performed at any time with no set-up required.
- 6) Perform under any conditions.
- 7) Easy ... Simple ... Direct.

This fabulous new routine and NEW Principle combines all the advantages of Koran's "Flying Ring" with these extra Plus Points: No reel to set or risk breaking. Keycase may be examined before and after; the natural gimmick is innocent and undetected.

I have not been so excited about a new effect for a long time. If, like me, you love and perform the Classic "FLYING RING" you will rave over this Magical new method and Presentation.

DOLLAR DIVINATION

Barrie Richardson

This is a first class example of how a very simple trick can be turned into a spectacular feat by the use of a modicum of showmanship. Barrie has been using this effect for some years now and admits that it has become one of his firm favourites.

Barrie points out that neither the effect nor the method are outstandingly original, however, the routining and presentation combine to produce a piece of mental magic, which is unusual and will be long remembered. It can be used under fairly intimate conditions or before large gatherings. It is not, table top magic but is small enough to work to a group of twelve or more people (anything up to 500 or more). The best way to describe the effect is to give a more or less verbatim account of Barrie's own patter.

Effect

"Would several gentlemen please take out their wallets and remove a pound note (being American, Barrie says dollar bill). Carefully fold it in half and in half again, so that the numbers cannot be read.

"Will you each hold up the note and have a good look at it. Can you see through it? No! You cannot! Locked inside each bill are the eight figures and two letters that give every note its own separate identity.

"I would like two ladies to help me. Would you please go around and randomly collect up a few of the notes!

"Drop the notes onto the table, please! It is imperative that I do not get to touch them. I will turn my back and, while I cannot see, would one of the ladies please pick up two notes. Have you done that? Good! Please drop one back onto the table!

"Madam, you are holding just one note. Would you please come and stand on my left hand side. Would the other lady stand on my right. Please place the note onto my open left hand — but keep a hold of it! Move it slowly! Good!

"I will attempt to reveal the first six numbers. As I say each number, I will point to a gentleman and ask him to stand up. As each gentleman stands up, I would like him to remember the number that I assign to him. At the end of the experiment, I will ask each gentleman to sit down, if he hears his number called. Is that understood!

I will try to read the first six numbers by a sense of touch alone. I thing that the first one is a three. Would you sir please stand up and remember the number three! The second may be a four. Could you (another gentleman) stand, sir, and please remember the number four! And you, sir! Could you, also stand and remember the number seven? Would this gentleman be kind enough to stand, as well, and keep in mind the number nought? I would ask you, sir, to stand and memorise the number nine and this gentleman to help by remembering eight.

"I have tried to read the first six digits, using a sense of touch only. Now, you two ladies are going to do the hard part. You are going to transmit the last two figures, using mental telepathy. Which one of you would like to be the sender? Please take the note, open it, so that you alone can read the number. Look at the last two digits, only. I now want you to send the first number, through me, to the lady on my left.

"(The performer takes hold of the hands of the two ladies) I will call off the numbers. 0..1... 2..3..4..5..6..7..8..9. Madam, (to the lady, who is supposedly receiving the 'transmission') please name a figure! Three, she says. Let us now repeat the process. Madam, will you please try to transmit the second digit. (business is repeated and second number is named).

"We now have all of the numbers. I will ask the lady, who has the note, to read the number aloud for the first time. If the first six digits were devined correctly, each of these gentlemen will sit down as a number is called. Madam, would you please begin!"

The lady reads out the numbers and, as each is called, the men sit down, domino fashion. After the first six numbers have been called and the gentlemen are seated, the performer breaks in . . .

"Ladies and Gentlemen, my accomplishment is a modest one. However, if these two ladies correctly transmitted and received the last two figures, they deserve a thunderous applause. The numbers, which the lady said were three and six. Madam, what are the last two figures on the note? Three and six!"

Audience applauds the two ladies and, of course, the performer.

Method

The whole thing hinges on a subtle bill switch. The manner of switching and the way, in which the routine has been put together, represent a marvellous blend of subtlety and misdirection. It is worthy of the closest study, even by those who will never make use of it. The whole thing is an object lesson in simplicity, subtlety, misdirection and showmanship. In many ways, it is reminiscent of the type of magic that the late, lamented Maurice Fogel built his reputation on. Reading Barrie's manuscript, I could almost visualise the Amazing Fogel presenting it.

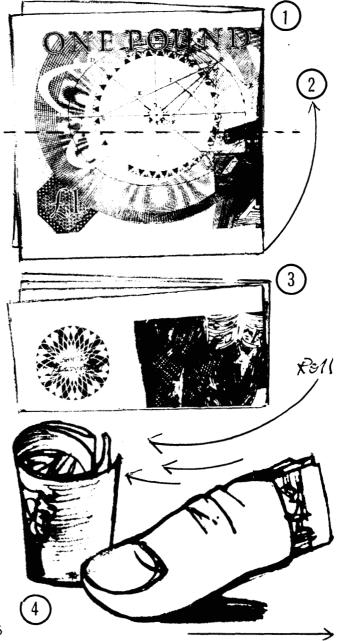

The mechanics of the switch were developed by Barrie from an idea by Al Baker. Some fifty years ago, he described an excellent switch, using a thumb tip. Barrie has adapted this move, in a manner that makes an already good thing into an even better one.

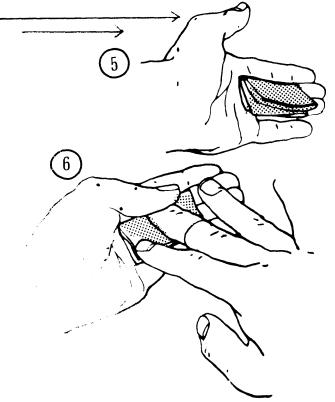

The thumb tip should be a long one and, as it will be worn on the middle finger, rather than the thumb, not too wide.

The bill is folded as in figs 1 to 4. It is then inserted into the tip, which is placed on the middle finger, of the right hand.

Before going any further with the description of the routine, we will describe the actual switch. Later the explanation of how and when it is used, will be given. The move is performed in the following manner:—

- 1) Lay a folded note on the palm of the left hand as shown in fig 5.
- 2) The right hand comes over, as shown in fig 6 to apparently take the note away. As it reaches the position, shown in the picture, the left thumb closes inwards, clamping the tip and the folded note against the palm. At the same moment, the right middle finger leaves the tip, drawing the note out.
- 3) As the note leaves the tip, it springs open (the newer it is, the better it will do this). It is held aloft between the right fingers and thumb.
- 4) The left hand tilts, palm away from the

4) The left hand tilts, palm away from the audience and finger palms the original note and the tip, to be disposed of at leisure.

It is very important that the switch be executed on the "off beat", when no particular attention is being paid to the hands. There are no "moves" as such and the whole thing is covered easily and naturally, in the presentation.

The working of the routine should be more or less self evident, at this stage. Start by having the thumb tip loaded with a note, the number of which has been previously committed to memory.

Have the gentlemen produce the notes and the ladies collect them up. Have one chose, in the manner outlined and have it placed onto your left palm. Let the lady on that side keep her finger on it. This is apparently to preclude the note being switched. In fact, it does not matter because you will not be doing the exchange just yet, anyway.

Start to reveal the first six numbers of your memorised note and ask six gentlemen to stand up and remember them. So far, no trickery has taken place.

The switch comes, when you ask the lady, on the right to be the "sender" and transmit the last two numbers to the other assistant. In fact, you say, "... Which one of you would like to be the sender..." As you do so, look at the lady on the right and, without waiting for an answer, apparently hand her the note. This is when you make the switch. You have asked a question. You have directed all attention towards the lady. The misdirection is complete. The other lady may still have her finger on the note but, if as you turn to look at the right hand assistant, you drop the left hand, quickly, she will have to let it go. The switch happens so rapidly that it seems impossible for the bill to have ever left the sight of the audience.

Hand the switched note the lady on the right. Ask her to hold it so that she alone can see the number. While matters are thus arranging themselves, you have ample time to quietly pocket the original note and the thumb tip.

Take a hold of the hands of the two women and slowly raise them to waist height as you count from nought to nine. Keep your attention fixed on the "sender". When you reach the first number that you want "transmitted", simply press your finger into the palm of the lady on the left. Do this, as you say the number.

With a little experience, you will find that the lady always gets the message and will quite happily say the required number. Repeat this device for the second digit.

If the lady refuses to co-operate or just fails to understand what is required, this does not matter. Simply announce the numbers yourself. This will solve the problem but is nothing like as strong as having the assistant do it.

TRANSPOSITION '71

Roxy

Effect

Two packs of cards, one with red backs and the other with blue, are introduced and spread, face upwards across the table. Two spectators are asked to remove a card, one from each pack. The cards are signed and returned to their respective packs.

Without any "moves" the two packs are spread out, face upwards. They are then flipped over, so that they are face down. In the centre of each pack is seen a single card of the opposite colour. These are removed and seen to be the signed ones.

Set Up

Two packs of cards will be needed. They should be of similar design but contrasting colours. Usually these will be red and blue. Ensure that both packs are in a similar state of newness, so that, when face up, they are indistinguishable from one another.

The packs should be set up as follows:-

a) The blue pack. This is shown in fig 1.
A is a Blue backed Four of Spades.
B is a Red backed Two of Spades.
C is a Blue backed Two of Spades.
D is a Blue backed Five of Clubs.

Cards C and D occupy the 9th & 10th positions from top.

b) The red pack. This is shown in fig 2.
E is a Red backed Five of Clubs.
F is a Blue backed Ace of Hearts.
G is a Red backed Ace of Hearts.
H is a Red backed Four of Spades.

Cards G and H occupy the 9th & 10th positions from the top.

Once the working of the trick is understood, the actual values of the cards can be varied. It is important, however, that card A and its duplicate H be easily confused with card E and its duplicate D. In other words they should be the same colour and of similar value. For instance, if card A were a red spot card (7) then E should be a red spot card of similar value (6H or 8H). The value of B (and its duplicate C) and F (with its duplicate G) are not important.

Nor for that matter is it essential that C&D and G&H are exactly 9th & 10th from top. All that matters, is that they are somewhere where they can be kept under control and out of the way during the trick. Indeed, they could be removed altogether, if desired. To do so, however, would leave the packs incomplete for other tricks. In the 9th & 10th positions, they are near enough to the top to be retained during a casual shuffle.

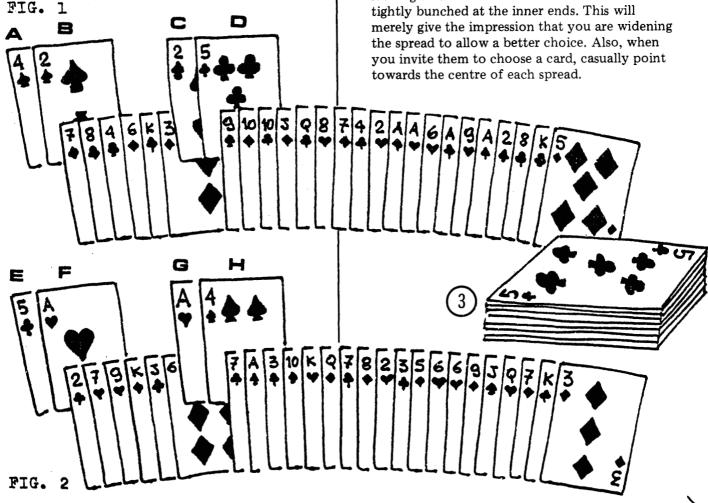

Put the packs into their respective case. Also have a packet of peelable adhesive stickers handy.

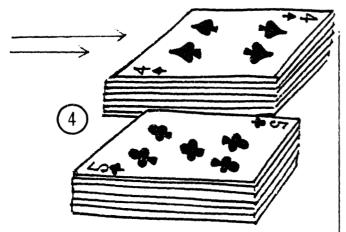

Working

Bring out the two packs, in their cases. Remove the red pack and spread it, face down, across the table, keeping the top few cards bunched so as to prevent the odd blue backed one from showing.

Do exactly the same thing with the blue pack. Flip the red pack face upwards and do like wise with the blue.

Invite a spectator to withdraw a card from the red pack and have another do the same thing with the blue. Ensure that they take the cards from anywhere, other than the stacks. This is fairly easy to do. Simply adjust the spreads, making them wider in the centre and more tightly bunched at the inner ends. This will merely give the impression that you are widening the spread to allow a better choice. Also, when you invite them to choose a card, casually point towards the centre of each spread.

Bring out the adhesive stickers and stick them one onto each chosen card. Have the spectators sign them. While they are doing so, gather up the red pack and casually shuffle it, face towards the audience. Finally square it. face upwards and double cut card E (The Five of Clubs) to the face. Lay this alongside the other pack as in fig 4.

Because of the similarity of the face cards of the two packs and also the fact that attention has been focused upon the two spectators. signing their cards, nobody will know for sure, which pack is which. Each pack has a card of the opposite colour, face up on the bottom.

Pick up the pack with the Five of Clubs on the face. Turn it face down. It will appear to be the blue backed pack. Insert the blue backed chosen card face down into the centre and table the pack. Turn over the other pack and insert the red backed chosen card into it.

Spread both packs, face upwards across the table. Then, so that people know which pack is which, turn the two top cards face down as in fig 5. Pause for a moment and go through whatever presentational mumbo jumbo pleases you.

Finally, pick up the face down red indicator card and use it to flip its entire spread face down. All of the cards will be seen to have blue backs, apart from one in the centre. Do the same thing with the blue indicator card and its pack. Withdraw the odd cards from the centres of their respective packs and show that they are the chosen ones.

Everything is now clean.

Editorial Note

There is little that is new in this effect but I was greatly impressed with the way, in which Roxy has eliminated all of the sleights and reduced the whole thing to an almost self working trick. It is an object lesson in how, with a little thought, a few subtleties can obtain results far in excess of those achieved by many combinations of elaborate moves.

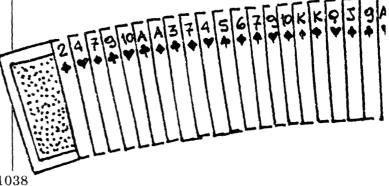

EDITORIAL

August, 1982

Martin Breese, who is a good friend of ours, is currently advertising an effect called "Puzzled" or "What Puzzles Me" or some such name. It is credited in the advert as being my invention (me being Walt Lees). Although I was of some assistance to Martin with the preparation of this item, I am not quite so sure that I contributed sufficiently to be given all of the credit. In fairness to both Bob Farmer and Peter Kane, I would like to give a brief history of the small part that I played in the development of this particular routine.

Some months ago, I was at Martin's studio, when he showed me a manuscript from Bob Farmer, which detailed a novel reworking of Peter Kane's "Gipsy Curse" effect. Bob's routine differed quite significantly from the original and had much to commend it. Being a knowledgable and thorough card man, Bob Farmer had given a detailed description of the workings and discussed several variations. Martin felt and so did I, that this was not the most commercial way to offer the routine to the fraternity. He asked me if I could ghost write the instructions; a service which I occasionally perform for different dealers.

I agreed and took the manuscript home. On going through the routine, I was very much taken with it but felt that the introduction of the Hamman Count would do much to streamline the thing. Also, while toying around with it, I Developed the patter theme. The re-written instructions were returned to Martin, who mailed a copy to Bob Farmer. Bob wrote back to say that he did not like my use of the Hamman Count and that its introduction made the trick a different one. I personally disagreed and suggested to Martin that he put out the two handlings (the one which I had written up and a rewritten one that Bob sent in) as a package.

After that, I thought no more about it. Recently, however, several people have mentioned the trick to me. Whenever they have done so, they have given me the impression that they regard it as my effect. I would like to set the record straight. The routine belongs to Bob Farmer and Peter Kane. My sole contribution being the introduction of the Hamman Count and the patter theme. Much as I would like to be able to take credit for the whole thing (it is a very good routine) in all honesty I cannot.

This month sees a welcome return of Barrie Richardson to these pages. Barrie was over here a few weeks ago. As luck would have it Phil Goldstein also happened to be here, to appear at Bristol Convention. The three of us were able to meet up for a session, one evening.

Barrie, who is no novice, when it comes to mental and memory work was completely bowled over by some of Phil's ideas and magic in this sphere. So was I, but that does not count as it is not a branch of magic that I know much about. I am little more than a layman, when memory systems and mental calculations are at stake. What can I say, as an ignoramus, is that Phil is both impressive and, more importantly, entertaining. He tells me that he is getting more and more in demand as a cabaret entertainer. I only hope that he does not get too busy to give us the benefit of his fertile and highly creative mind.

Barrie has given several items, one of which is in this issue. They are all first class, as one would expect from this talented and experienced performer.

Being one of those eccentrics, who do not possess a T.V. set, the current video boom has passed right over my head, completely, or almost completely, unnoticed. The only time that I ever even see a television programme is when I am visiting friends. Last year I saw two programmes so, as you can see, I have few friends!

The reason that I mention this is because I recently received a copy of the T.A.T. Papers, edited by Pat Page. Even though I do not have, and do not want, a videa, I still enjoyed reading this little mag. If you do not know what the: T.A.T. Papers are, then I suggest that you drop a line to Pat Page at Sound of Magic Video, 5 Back Hill, London E.C.1. You will not regret it.

ALL FOR NOUGHT

Phil Goldstein

The plot here belongs to Howard Lyons. In Ibidem #17 there appeared "Noughty Crosses", which detailed this effect along with two workable solutions. The following is a third approach, which Howard would have surely thought of had the materials been available in 1959.

You explain to the spectator that you enjoy playing the game of Tic Tac Toe, but at times you experience the urge to play when there is no fellow player available. For instance, you claim, just a few hours earlier you developed such an impulse. Producing a card, you state that on the opposite side there is a Tic Tac Toe board, on which you have already played out your own half of the game . . .

The spectator is given a card or paper, on which is drawn the four-line "board" for the game. You explain, "As you get to approach an empty layout, there are over five hundred three-space combinations you can choose to fill in. I think it's only fair, given this advantage, that you not fill in three noughts in a row — that would be too easy for you! Please fill in three spaces, but not three in a line. You still retain a great advantage however — for if even one of my previously determined X's coincides with a space you have chosen for one of your O's, I lose . . . "

The spectator clearly has a great advantage here — and yet, when you reveal your prediction card, it is seen that you have played a winning row of X's, without entering any of the spectator's chosen spaces.

The method here depends on the Velleda Pen. This item is now quite easily obtained. It will produce a line much like any other marking pen, but when used on a special paper (also easily purchased), the line can be immediately erased with a wipe of your thumb.

The prediction card uses just such special paper for its writing surface. Using a permanent (i.e., non-Velleda) marking pen, draw a Tic Tac Toe layout. Now, with the Velleda pen, fill in X's in all nine spaces.

When the spectator makes his/her play, you simply use your thumb(s) to wipe away all but a winning row of X's. No matter how you erase, the layout will not be affected thanks to the permanent ink used in drawing it.

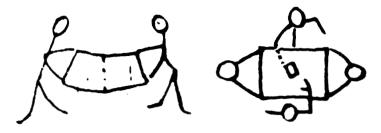

RECOLLECTIONS OF HORACE SPENCER—as recounted by his old friend and associate Dick Turpin to Walt Lees

SMASH AND GRAB

To conclude this short series of snippets out of the life of this fascinating character, here is a brief description of one of Spencer's favourite tricks. Anybody with a modicum of performing experience, will quickly realise that it must have been a highly commercial item, in his hands, being a very striking, spectacular revelation of a selected card, which requires nothing in the way of apparatus or preparation.

Spencer would begin by having a card chosen and returned to the pack. It would then be controlled to the top. Invariably this would be accomplished by means of a straightforward pass. The move, however, could be easily covered by the ensuing business.

A sheet of newspaper would be borrowed and two spectators asked to hold it out, as in Fig.1. During the positioning of the assistants and the paper, there would be ample cover to make the pass and palm off the chosen card. The pack could then be handed out for shuffling. The performer, meanwhile would either fold his arms or lightly grip the newspaper, with the hand holding the card, so as to conceal its presence.

The spectator who had shuffled the pack, would be requested to hold it, underneath the paper, near the centre. He would be told to grip it lightly, by one end only, between the forefinger and thumb. The position of the pack is shown in Fig.2.

Spencer would then patter to the effect that the newspaper was a jeweller's window, the cards were the jewels and the chosen one the most precious jewel of all. "I am the thief!" continued Spencer, "Watch!" With that, he held the right hand, palming the card, as in Fig.3. The card was bent, almost double. Using the forefinger to pierce the paper, he would plunge his hand through, knocking all of the cards out of the spectator's hand, onto the floor. The cover, afforded by the falling pack, gave him ample time to transfer the palmed card to his fingertips, straightening it out, at the same time.

He would finish by slowly withdrawing his hand from the hole in the paper, revealing the chosen card at his fingertips.

Although this effect is by no means new, it is seen very little, if at all, these days.

FOOTNOTE

A few months ago, on Radio Four, there was a short talk about the painter Stanley Spencer, by a man who had lived in the same village when a young boy. One of the recollections, which he mentioned, was a story about the time his own white mice started breeding. He became inundated with the things and stuck a notice outside his gate, offering them for sale. He recalled how a man, who claimed to be Stanley Spencer's brother, came and bought the lot, saying that he intended to release them in the local cinema. Perhaps this was Horace Spencer and perhaps he intended to use them for more magical purposes then he cared to discuss with small boys. No doubt we shall never know. . .

AN APPROACH TO MAGIC

Roger Crosthwaite

If a magical effect is at all complicated i.e., not easy to understand, the audience will become confused. Somewhere along the line, something will happen, the significance of which is diffused or unclear. The magical element will, consequently, be undermined. It is therefore, very important that everything, which happens, is easy to understand. The spectators should be clear, in their own minds, as to exactly where you started from and of what you have led up to.

For a magical effect to be easy to understand, it needs to have a certain logicallity. For example, in one of my own favourite effects, I sprinkle salt on a table knife. The salt is apparently tossed in the air and vanishes. I then pretend to catch it on the knife blade. It does reappear - by magic. There is a logic to this sequence. The salt vanishes and then comes back. If, instead of reproducing the salt, I were to catch a playing card, or a billiard ball, there would be nothing logical about it. It would not make sense and the audience would be confused. They would also feel "conned" rather than baffled. This is because I would have led them to believe that I was doing a trick with salt. I would have encouraged them to be looking for salt reappearing. They would not be expecting anything else. If, instead of salt, a card appeared, they would feel that I had "cheated". They were not looking for that. Nobody had said anything about cards. It could have come from anywhere.

The above argument does not apply to tricks in which a large object is produced as a climax to a routine with small ones, as in the Chop Cup, sponge balls etc. Here the situation is entirely different. The magician has already performed a series of effects using the small objects. There have been a number of tricks and a number of "logical" climaxes. The large object finish provides the kicker at the end. The performer has "earned the right" to use it, in the light of what has gone before. Were he to just perform the final phase of the routine, with-out any of the preliminary effects, the production of the large object would be meaningless; the logicallity would have been destroyed.

It is important that what you do is clear, if it is to be easily understood. Logicallity alone is not always sufficient to ensure this. It is sometimes possible for an effect to be logical but so hedged round with complications that it becomes confusing. The audience can be called upon to retain too much information, or make too many deductions, in order to follow the plot. A lot of card and mental magic is in constant danger of becoming too complex, in this way.

Another minefield, to be trodden with care, is the routine, where several unrelated climaxes take place simultaneously. This is not to be confused with a sequence of climaxes coming, one on top of te other. That type of progression can often build up to a big finish. If too many things happen together, the initial stage of things gets forgotten. The magical element becomes lost.

In commercial close-up magic, it is essential that the plot of the effect moves directly from start to finish, in a straight line. The presentation must not become cluttered with extraneous matters. The temptation to "guild the lilly" must be rigorously guarded against. I sometimes think that the same applies to methods. Although it is by no means a hard and fast rule, in general, a complicated method tends to result in a confusing effect.

* * * * * * *

Nothing, that has been said in this short series, is in print for the first time. It is, however, the result of my own experience. The fact that my experiences have been similar to those of others, merely proves the substance of those experiences.

I would urge anybody, who is going to perform in a commercial situation, to come to terms with the things, which have been discussed. Unless you do so, the money will not be there.

To sum up the three articles, briefly: begin by establishing a rapport. From the very start, the audience must be with you and you must be with them. They must like you; you must like them. The show must be entertaining. The element of challenge must be eliminated. This is achieved by having the inner confidence, which comes from knowing that your magic is worth doing: that the presentation will give pleasure.

Open with something highly visual, which will grab attention. Move from that, through to the finish of the performance, building up a series of climaxes (and additional climaxes) which hold attention and hit them hard.

For commercial work, I mostly use the sort of everyday objects that will be commonly found in the performing situation — table knives, salt pots, sugar lumps etc. I prefer this to the introduction of special props. Not that I am against the latter. There are occasions when beautifully made, expensive looking props can add a touch of class (a gleaming silver Chop Cup etc.). On the whole, I try to keep these things to a minimum and make use of whatever is normally around.

SNAP COUNT LOST ACE

Ian Land

Inspiration and points of reference:

I have developed upwards of one hundred versions of what has become known as Hofzinser's Lost Ace Problem. So far, only one of these has seen print, and can be found in Abracadabra 1889 (10th April 1982) under the title "Surface Tension". Like the routine in Abra, this routine is fairly simple in effect, and does not embody any additional effects such as "Twisting the Aces" or others. In this respect it is quite rare in my collection — most of my versions are fairly complex in structure and contain numerous ideas fashioned into a (hopefully) smooth sequence. However, this item contains several strong points and is very effective for laymen and magicians. In most of my versions I try and vary the standard climax of having the same-suit-Ace reappear face up in the face down deck. Thus this routine has a finish believed to be new in such routines. As the title suggests, it uses a form of Karl Fulves' Snap Count, which will be fully described for clarity.

Procedure:

- 1) Run through the necktied deck and throw out the four Aces face down on the table, in C—H—S—D order from top to face. Have a card selected, noted, and replaced in the deck. Control it to the top of the deck and glimpse it. We will assume it is the 6H.
- 2) Reach for the face down Aces with the right hand and at the same time obtain a left little break below the top card of the deck. As you pick up the packet you must manoeuvre the same-suit-Ace to the face of the packet. In this case it is the AH because a heart was chosen, and you would use the top two Aces to scoop up the lower two. This brings the AH to the required position. Flip the four Aces face up onto the deck and immediately lift off all five cards above the break as four, in right hand Kardyro-Biddle Grip. standard Add-On fashion. Table the deck.

3) Peel the face Ace (AH in this example) into the left hand with the left thumb, Similarly peel the second and third Aces, one at a time. Place the double remaining in the right hand onto the face of all, as one card. As you turn the packet face down you must reverse the AH. This is accomplished by the left fingers pushing the lower card of the packet to the right slightly. This is covered by the right hand, which is holding the packet in K B Grip. See FIGURE ONE for further details. Revolve all the cards above the side-jogged card face down in a side-wise manner as shown in FIGURE TWO. Ultimately the packet is revolved completely face down and onto the side-jogged card, which ends up at the bottom of the packet, square with the other cards. This is a standard move.

Twist or flex the packet and then perform the following variation of Karl Fulves' Snap

- The packet is held in left hand Mechanic's Grip. Buckle the bottom card of the packet. The left thumb pulls the top card of the packet to the left as shown in FIGURE THREE. Note also the position of the index finger. Grasp the three card block between the top and bottom cards with the right hand and pull it to the right and clear of the packet as shown in FIGURE FOUR. Simultaneously the right thumb performs a twocard pushoff, and the left fingers push the lower card of the left hand pair to the right, resulting in a spread as shown in FIGURE FIVE, Grasp all the cards in the left hand and remove the right hand, resulting in a one-hand spread. An Ace has apparently magically turned face up. Ask if the Ace is the same suit as the selection. You will receive an affirmative reply. Square the packet and turn it over.
- Single Buckle Spread showing the situation from the other side. Remove the face down Ace(?) and drop it face down onto the table. Square the remainder of the packet, without displacing anything, and place it face up onto the table. Ask for the name of the selection and flip the tabled Ace(?) face up to reveal the change.
- Pick up the face up tabled packet and perform a Single Buckle Spread to show three Aces once more. Square the packet and hold it face up in the right hand, thumb on face and fingers on back, at the lower right index corners With the left hand riffle up the back end of the tabled deck. Half way through the riffle toss the squared face up packet into the deck. Square the deck and Ribbon Spread to reveal the Aces have "caught" a card. Disclose this card as the missing Ace.

Endnotes:

Instead of the Snap Count at step 4 (which is actually a spread and not a count) you can use a straight Elmsley Count and then continue as written. However, the actions of the Snap Count look magical and fit particularly well to this application.

2) An alternative to the Back End Riffle action at step 6 is to dribble the deck and toss the face up Ace packet through the dribble, the packet landing in front of a spectator in a slightly spread condition. Have the spectator remove the face down card and display it to finish. The dribble action looks particularly good: for other dribble "catches" see "In the Pinch" from Secrets of a Puerto Rican Gambler (1980) and Al Smith's "Asque" from Pabular Volume 6 Number 9 (September 1980).

GETTING LOST IN THE SHUFFLE

Ian Land

Inspiration and Points of Reference:

To demonstrate how diverse methods can be used to achieve similar ends I now detail a riffle shuffle approach to the Lost Ace premise. Such an approach has not been widely exploited: several methods combining Lost Ace with Triumph can be found in Arch Triumphs (1978), these being inspired by Jean Fare's "Criss-Cross Triumph" from Card Tricks, French Style (1977). A riffle shuffle approach was also suggested by Karl Fulves in the booklet entitled Father Cyprian on the Hofzinser Card Problem (1978). This, however, was suggested as a card problem — no solution was given.

The title of this routine is neatly stolen from a Jon Racherbaumer article in Sticks and Stones 4 (April 1977).

Procedure:

- 1) Run through the necktied deck and throw the four Aces face down onto the table, in C-H-S-D order from top to face.
- 2) Have a card selected and noted. Swing Cut the top half of the deck into the left hand and have the selection replaced onto the left hand half, obtaining a left little finger break below the selection. Place the right hand section on top of the left, maintaining your break. Glimpse the selection and then drop all breaks, thus actually burying the selected card in the approximate middle of the deck. If you like you can angle-jog the selection and then use the Neo-Piquant Glimpse from Hierophant 2, although many glimpses can be used. We will assume the selection is the 6H.
- 3) Pick up the four Aces with the right hand, manoeuvering the AH to the face of the packet. See "Snap Count Lost Ace" for more on this. Flip the four Aces face up onto the deck and spread them to show the face of each. Cleanly

- flip the four Aces face down onto the deck and patter that you will lose them into the deck. Double Undercut the top three cards to the bottom of the deck and then perform a full deck false shuffle. I use a Zarrow shuffle. Give the deck a couple of false cuts. Spread the cards face down between your hands, pattering that the Aces are well lost. As you square the deck Half-Pass the lowest three cards. Table the deck for a riffle shuffle.
- 4) Riffle up the side of the deck with the left thumb until you spot the selection. This is easy and quick because you know the approximate position of the card. Cut off the top half to the right, the selection being the face card of the right hand portion. Riffle shuffle as follows: drop one card from the left hand portion followed by one from the right, at least two from the left and then riffle evenly, allowing the top card of the right hand portion to fall last. Square the deck and give it a cut to centralize the Aces.
- 5) Snap your fingers, pattering that this will make the Aces turn face up and gather together in the centre of the deck. Ribbon Spread the deck face down showing three Aces face up sandwiching a face down card. The fourth Ace? Ask the spectator to name his selection as you remove the Ace sandwich from the centre of the deck. Point out that the face down Ace(?) is the same suit as the selection. Snap your fingers again and show that the face down Ace(?) is, in fact, the selection.
- 6) Cut the deck at the point of removal of the sandwich, bringing the same-suit-Ace (in this case the AH) to the top of the deck.
- 7) You now reveal or produce the AH using Vernon's "Triumph" procedure from Stars of Magic. Many other procedures can be used, but "Triumph" fits in particularly well to this routining.

Endnotes:

1) You can add an additional kicker to this effect, if you have to set up. Set up is this: four Aces, rest of red cards, rest of black cards. Perform a Cutting the Aces routine that does not disturb the set up, followed by "Twisting the Aces" or similar. Place the four Aces face down on the table in C—H—S—D order from top to face. Perform step 2 of "Getting Lost in the Shuffle" exactly as written. However, the selection must be replaced into the deck at the separation of red and black cards. Perform step 3 exactly as written. When the time comes to perform step 4 do not riffle shuffle. Instead, perform the following triple cut sequence: Riffle up the back of the deck with the right thumb until you spot the selection. Cut the top half of the deck to the right, the selection being the face card of the right hand portion. At the same time obtain a left little finger break above the bottom card of the left hand portion via buckle or Pull-Down move. As you apparently place the right hand portion beneath the left hand portion in a straight cutting action, actually feed the right hand portion between the bottom card of the left hand packet and the remainder of the packet via the break. As you square the deck maintain a left little finger break between the two halves of the deck. Cut off all the cards above the break with the right hand to the right, and obtain a left little finger break above the lower two cards of the left hand portion via buckle or Pull-Down. As you apparently place the right hand packet below the left hand packet actually feed the right hand cards between the two lower cards of the left hand packet, and the rest of the packet, once again the left little finger break making this possible. Square the deck, holding no breaks and then cut the top half of the deck to the bottom to centralize the Aces. If three cuts seem too many you can use a Classic Pass at the approximate centre of the deck to position the Aces for the Ribbon Spread.

Perform steps 5, 6 and 7 of "Getting Lost in the Shuffle". After you have produced the AH via Vernon's "Triumph" from Stars of Magic remove it from the Ribbon Spread, splitting the spread at the point of removal, thus making two halves. Pick up one half in each hand, turn the hands face down and perform simultaneous face up vertical Ribbon Spreads showing the colour segregation. (IMPORTANT NOTE: Assuming you are using a Zarrow shuffle for Vernon's "Triumph" you must undercut at the separation of red and black cards for the shuffle. The same applies for whatever shuffle you are using.) An alternative to blatently showing the segregation is to insert the selection and the four Aces in to their correct halves, without showing the faces of the cards, and then perform a couple of false shuffles. You are now set for "Out of This World" or any other effect requiring such a set up.

Instead of removing the deck preset from the case you can separate the reds and blacks openly (although the spectators don't know that this is what you are doing) by using a Lorayne idea from his "Out of This Universe" routine from Close Up Card Magic. See also Marlo's Objectives.

REVIEW

The Complete Works of Derek Dingle. Available from Magic Books by Post, 29 Hill Avenue, Bedminster, Bristol BS3 4SN Price £18.00.

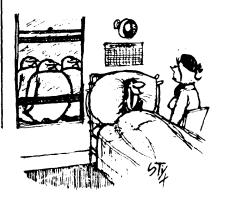

This book, written and illustrated by Richard Kaufman, is one which makes the whole process of writing a review utterly pointless. Before the book arrived in this country we all knew that it would be superb. When you see a copy, it shouts quality. When you read the material, it is brilliant. What more is there to say?

I shall have to say something though, otherwise Donald Wallace may stop sending us books to review. And, as is well known, the chief perk for all magazine editors, is the free books and apparatus we constantly receive. Before you start going green with envy, let me say something about this particular one. Donald did not send it to me. He sent it to one Nick Bolton, who happens to be my boss as far as Pabular is concerned. The said Bolton presented me with the book to review and then, with a shifty look said, "Let me have it back, when you've finished with it!" It is the first time that I have ever heard Nick say that about any book! It is the first magic book that I have ever known him express a desire to possess in ten years. That will tell you more about it than any words of mine.

I have met Derek Dingle and seen his work on a couple of occasions. Both times, it was a breathtaking experience. For deviousness, subtlety, the efficient and effective utilisation of flawless technique, he has few equals. He does some of the most spectacular close-up magic that has ever been seen. The wonderful thing is that his methods are not particularly difficult. He uses the same tools as other craftsmen but somehow or other, achieves more spectacular results. This book tells us how it is all done.

The writing and illustrations are also fantastic. Despite his years Richard Kaufman has already carved a niche for himself in magical literature. His is an outstanding talent.

Buy this book now, before it is too late. You will not regret it. If you waste too long, it will have been snapped up by all of those, who know a good thing when they see one.

Here we go still again. That dreaded word exposure. This time it's Video exposure. As many of you will know, I have more than a little experience of exposure. I was thrown out of the British Ring of the I.B.M. because they decided in their wisdom that I had been guilty of this terrible crime which is second only to rape which, in turn is something which magicians never do to each other. They can copy each other's acts, steal tricks, ideas, gags, bits of business from each other, but rape???

————— Never.

Let's get back to exposure, with video in mind. Many magicians, particularly amateurs, occasionally get on their high horses and start screaming about OUR secrets. OUR secrets? We have never had any secrets, not for a very long time. The methods we use have been public domain since Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft.

It all really depends on one's definition of the word exposure. Some think that the act of writing a book of magic tricks constitutes exposure. If the book is offered for sale to the public, that's even worse. A long time ago I picked up a book by Will Goldston in a second hand book shop. That book got me interested in magic. I know some people who, having discovered this fact, will immediately resolve never to buy another Goldston book. So be it. In turn may I say that I would have strangled my son when he was a child rather than buy him a box of tricks having seen some of the results of that action.

From the foregoing you will realise why I have no objections to magic books as such. There are others who say that magic books should only be published and or sold by magic dealers. If you follow that one through you will find out that the smaller dealers can't afford to produce books of a reasonable standard, because of the cost, so we would finish up with a monopoly situation where the only books we would get would be decided by a few magic dealers or publishers. That would be a bad situation I think because some of the biggest rip-off artistes and exposers I have ever met have been magic dealers. (You're welcome to put my name at the top of YOUR list).

The real secrets of magic have nothing whatever to do with the tricks themselves. A Drawer Box, Dove Pan, Appearing Cane are only magic tricks. It's what you do with them that's MAGIC. Read that again and again. I think that every time a magician produces an Appearing Cane visibly, he is guilty of exposure. He is exposing the fact that it is a trick prop and forever after laymen, who may or may not be interested, can only describe the effect as "one of those walking sticks which appear in the hand".

The late Fred Kaps used to produce perhaps half a dozen canes during his act and no one ever knew where they came from because they expanded under cover of his body. He would perhaps drop a cigarette into a hat with his left hand and when he turned to face the audience there would be a cane in his right hand. He didn't produce it, it was just THERE. He, apparently, didn't know where it came from either. That's MAGIC.

I have made my living from magic for thirty years and I must confess that I used to worry about exposure. Not any more. It isn't worth the headache. There is however, one type of exposure which can be worrying to a professional performer and that is overexposure, and I'm talking about television. Because of most magicians reliance on tricks rather than the presentation of them, there is a tendency for many of them to use the same material, either because they are easy to do or because they are damned good tricks. We CAN, as performers, perhaps do something about that, by trying to avoid repeating effects on T.V. soon after someone else has done them, particularly national T.V. but then, maybe one day, cows will fly.

I really started off by intending to talk about Video. Well, as Video is really only a moving picture book there isn't much point is there?????

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

BASIL HORWITZ SIGNED CARD IN WALLET IN SPECTATOR'S POCKET - £27.50

We sold out within days and have now received the second batch.

'BASIL HORWITZ SIGNED CARD IN WALLET IN SPECTATORS POCKET' has become a cult amongst some of the younger magicians who normally will only buy a pack of cards or a card book. Tim Gan, Stephen Tucker, Paul Brignall, to name just three, not only perform the routine as supplied but have been developing their own routines. As soon as there are enough we will put out a small booklet. The Wallets are made especially for us by Roy Roth. IN STOCK NOW. Jim Breedon purchased one last week and I saw him at the Magic Circle. "How are you getting on with it Jim?" I asked and he replied "Absolutely great Martin. Really pleased". So there you have it folks. One of our finest releases. 'THE BASIL HORWITZ SIGNED CARD IN WALLET IN SPECTATOR'S POCKET'.

Card Trek — Andrew Pargeter

CARD-TREK

Andrew Pargeter

EFFECT

Two cards, pushed through a tunnel formed by two other cards, change places in a startlingly clear manner. The effect is reminiscent of Roy Walton's 'Card-Warp'.

SET-UP

Take two cards and cut each across the centre until about 1/8" past the centre. (See Fig.1).

The two cards, which should be of different colour, value and suit, as in a colour change, are then placed, with the cuts to the right, second and third down in a face down pack.

ROUTINE

Until the trick is performed the pack may be used for other effects as long as the two cards are finally in the positions already mentioned.

Stating that you will use four cards from the pack false shuffle if you wish and then fan off the top four cards to the right. The cuts will not show and the cards appear normal. Remove the fan from the pack (which can now be discarded) and close up the fan. Turn the four cards over end-for-end and fan again showing the faces. Draw attention to the values of the two centre cards exposing as much of them as possible without letting the cuts be seen.

Now close up the fan and hold the cards vertically facing the spectators. Remove the back card (nearest to you) and place it down on the table.

Drawing attention once more to the two cards indicated earlier, separate the rear one and turn it clockwise through slightly more than 180 degrees. This is done with the right hand and, at the same time, the left hand thumb slightly turns the next card anti-clockwise. The two cards should now be slightly fanned either side of the front card. At no time should the cuts have become visible to the spectators.

It is now a simple matter, using the thumbs, to slide one card into the cut in the other and vice-versa. (See Fig.2).

Replace the fourth card at the rear and close up the cards. (The two centre cards will easily close up into each other.)

Still holding the cards vertically facing the spectators, remove the back card, turn it through 90 degrees, and replace it.

Keeping the cards vertical, turn them to face yourself. Take off the card now nearest to you, turn it through 90 degrees, turn it over so that its back is facing you and replace it. Now turn the cards to the spectators again (they will see the top half of the second card facing them). The two horizontal cards now form a tunnel with the two faked cards between them. (See Fig.3).

Gripping the cards at point B, the two centre cards can be separated to show their values and order to the spectators without any fear of the cuts showing.

Now, holding the cards in two hands by gripping with thumb and third finger at points A and C, the first finger of each hand can plunge the two centre cards down through the tunnel. They will be seen to transpose and can once more be slightly separated as described previously.

This can be repeated two or three times.

The two cards forming the tunnel should now be replaced by reversing the earlier actions until the cards are once more all vertical and facing the spectators. (N.B. the two centre cards are still meshed together.)

All four cards, en bloc, should now be torn across the centre. The cuts in the central cards will help in this. The two halves are taken, one in each hand, and placed face up on the table. They are picked up again, from above — one in each hand, so that cards can simultaneously be released, one at a time, from each hand forming a display on the table. As each pair of half-cards is dropped the hands move forward before dropping the next pair.

Each pair of half-cards should overlap each other slightly — this helps to disguise the half-cut, half-torn condition. It might be thought that the cuts will show but I have not had anyone spot this. I think the surprise of the mis-match in the two centre cards distracts the mind from this point. The display should not be left too long, however, the cards being gathered and the next trick introduced or you take your applause and run.

NOTES

- 1. Some might be tempted to tear the cards originally instead of cutting them but I find it often prevents a clean mesh of the cards leading to disaster. I repeat, I have never had the 'cuts' spotted, even by magicians.
- 2. Please don't perform this trick with just four cards taken from your pocket. Always take them from a pack as described.
- 3. The 'fake' of two meshed cards has obvious application in other tunnel effects of the Ken Krenzel-Derek Dingle type.
- 4. It is possible to mesh cards cut in this way face-to-face and back-to-back giving other applications.
- 5. It is possible to mesh more than two cards. It would take too long to go into this here. Experiment if you wish and have fun.

THIMBLE FINGER

Arthur Setterington

Here are a couple of gags which create a great deal of amusement and surprise especially amongst the ladies.

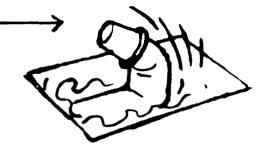

The performer asks a lady if she has a thimble. When she replies in the negative he says that it's a good thing he remembered to bring one. He takes a small box from his pocket, making sure that the lady has a good view of it. Taking off the lid he shows that it contains a thimble. . .attached to a "mummified" finger. He gives a little whistle and the finger springs up. He removes the thimble, replaces the lid, and puts the box back into his pocket.

He then shows some thimble sleights.

Finally he pushes the thimble into his left hand from where it vanishes, only to be produced from some unlikely place. The thimble is pushed into the hand again and the lady is asked to remove it before it disappears again. She does so, only to find that the thimble is attached to a finger.

The mummified finger is the old gag where the performer's finger goes through a hole in the bottom of the box. This should be done in a very off-hand manner as though it was nothing unusual. Presented this way it will register well.

The second "finger" is a novelty eraser which can be purchased from novelty stores. A duplicate thimble is attached to this. It is held in a clip near the lower edge of the jacket so that the left hand can get it quite easily.

The concluding thimble sleight should be the one in which the performer pushes the thimble, open end first, into his partially closed left hand. To do this, he pushes with his right thumb. The third finger of the right hand curls up under cover of the closed left and slides into the waiting thimble. The left hand can then be shown empty. The thimble is retrieved from, perhaps, behind the knee.

At this point the rubber finger is secured from the clip, and is held in the slightly closed left hand. The thimble is on the right forefinger, and is apparently pushed through the left hand until it emerges from the other end. It is the attached thimble that is seen. The lady is asked to remove the thimble, which she does with hilarious results.

At the time of writing the British Ring Convention has just been upon us. Unfortunately this year I could only get to Hastings for one day and this meant missing most of the close up which takes place on the Saturday - the day when I was back home ploughing through the weekly quota of kids' shows and trying to earn a crust.

The reason for my missing the Convention, is one of plain mismanagement. Earlier on in the year, I got the dates muddled and kept the wrong week free. By the time that the error was discovered, several bookings had already been taken and there was nobody to pass these on to. All of the other toddler bashers, in this area, will be at Hastings. Some of you may not be altogether sorry to see the Convention going unreported. Perhaps you are right.

Having read many reports of conventions, over the years, I wonder whether they really convey anything at all, to those who were not actually present. Indeed, I sometimes wonder about the whole business of writing reports of magical events. Is it totally pointless, or does it serve some useful purpose?

We are frequently told that the purpose of writing a report, is to convey to those who could not be there, an idea of what took place and the effect that it had. It is extremely doubtful if many of the reports, that we read in periodicals, really succeed in doing this. If you doubt the veracity of that statement, get hold of a copy of "The Linking Ring" and wade through that vast wasteland of tightly spaced print, under the heading of "Ring Reports". I will leave you to make your own judgements on how much of those doings, in far away places, are brought to life for the reader!

Magic and all of the performing arts, can only exist at the moment of performance. How can the written word convey the impact of Fred Kaps presenting "The Homing Card" or Bob Read suddenly producing a bottle of wine? Will future generations be able to grasp the significance of these magical masterpieces, from anything that is currently in writing? It is extremely doubtful, anymore than the present generation can understand from the printed word, the profound impressions created by David Devant, Houdini or Thurston. Showmanship is, by its very nature, intangible. It defies the printed word. To ask somebody to describe Paul Daniels on paper is about as unrealistic as asking him to be Paul Daniels.

There are, dotted about in English literature, examples of a performance by some great actor, singer or musician, being beautifully described by a great writer. A study of these, however, usually shows that they are mainly concerned with the subjective feelings of the writer. It is nearly always his ideas, opinions and observations, which have become more important than the performance, being recorded. The whole thing becomes an introspective essay rather than a relaying of information.

Frequently, in magazines, there are pleas for reporting to be more factual, or more critical, or more detailed. Really this is just asking for the superfluous. We all know that it is unsatisfying to read "... Harold Taylor was his usual breezy self, presenting those effects, for which he is justly famed..." What is the alternative? Those who were there, and those who know the performer's work, will understand exactly what is meant. Those who have never seen Harold work, would be none the wiser, even if the reporter were to expend ten thousand words describing every detail of his dress, stage technique, sleights, gags and nuances. Only by actually seeing Harold Taylor's act would the reader begin to comprehend.

All that the written word can do is to convey facts, ideas and opinions. Everything, from the Daily Mirror headlines to "War and Peace", is a combination of one or more of these three things. In the performing arts, facts, ideas and opinions are relatively unimportant. Personalities, timing and other intangibles count for much more. Professional television critics understand this. They tend, on the whole, to avoid mentioning experienced entertainers. There is little in the way of facts, ideas and opinions that can be written about the work of Ken Dodd or Frank Sinatra. Other performers can see a depth of artistry that laymen miss. Writing about it would be of little interest to those laymen. On the other hand, there are reams that can be written about plays and documentries. These are vehicles for facts, ideas and opinions; the stuff that journalism grows fat on.

Magic is a performing art. In common with all such arts, the actual work of art can only exist, while the performance is taking place. Because of this ephemeral nature, the artists must take steps to ensure that their work does not become forgotten. They must fight to keep their names in front of their public. Being frequently mentioned in the magical press is one small factor, in this battle. This is especially true for that select band of top international performers, who derive a substantial slice of their income from the work that they do for other magicians. Continually getting their names into print is not just egotism, it is often a matter of bread and butter.

Then there are the reporters. Who are they? Why do they choose to do the job? Some, no doubt, see it as a means of gaining recognition for themselves. It gives them the chance to publicly express their own views and ideas. Some even go so far as to assume the mantle of the critic or commentator. Others even distort the facts, so as to avoid embarrassing a performer, who flopped. (This latter tendency is a somewhat inexplicable one, because everybody, who was there, knows that the act flopped. The performer knows it and so does the audience. As the report can only have any significance to those who know the performer and his work, who is kidding who?)

Having rambled on at some length, I am fast coming to the conclusion that reports of convention events are not written for the benefit of those who were not there, and who do not know the people mentioned in them. They are in fact written for the benefit of the performers, organisers, reporters themselves, those people who were there and those absentees who already know the people involved.

September 6th was Pabular Night at the Magic Circle. I would like to thank Stephen Blood, Tony Brahams, Pat Conway, Sam Gupta, Johnny Johnston, Ian Keable-Elliott, Mike O'Brien, Chris Powers and Phil Wye. Also I would like to thank Ken Ward, who stepped in to fill a gap, when we were a performer short on one table. Well done lads.

Piet Forton was over here a few days ago. While in this country he went to Birmingham and had a session with Andrew Pargeter. Andrew showed him "Card Trek", which is in this issue. It absolutely floored Piet, which is no mean feat. Anyway, Piet prevailed upon Andrew to let Pabular have the effect and such was his enthusiasm and persuasiveness that Andrew Pargeter wrote it up and got it in the post to me within two days!! Piet Forton was greatly impressed by "Card Trek" and very baffled, which, considering that he is an ex F.I.S.M. champion and friend of some of the world's leading exponents, is saying a lot. So if you have passed this one up, go back and take a good, hard look at it.

LOCATION

- Steve Kuske

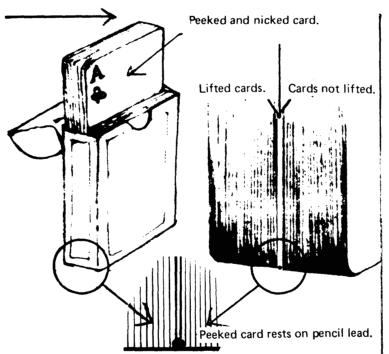

A card peeked at by a spectator is discovered by the magi under the fairest of conditions.

METHOD

Two devices are employed: a nail dent, done by the spectator unknowingly, and what I call the rotary bookmark.

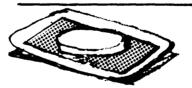

PERFORMANCE

Place the deck in the card case with the backs twoard the flap. The deck should fit loosely, so dispose of cards until it does. Secretly place a 1/8 inch length of thin pencil lead between the flap and the first card and let it fall in. The spectator is told to pull up a portion of the deck, look at a card, and then push the portion back down.

Hold the card case tilted toward the spectator and look away. As the spectator peeks, he should dent the chosen card and allow the rotary bookmark to roll to the correct place. As the portion is pushed down, the pencil lead should end up in front of or behind the chosen card. The lead may be several more cards back in fact. Bow the deck as you remove it to keep the bookmark in place. Get a break at the bookmark and let it fall to the floor. Take a new break two or so cards below the old one and cut the deck there. Spread the cards, showing them all different and find the dented card. Conclude as you wish. . .

COMMERCIAL COIN IN PACK

- Lawrence Frame

Here is a highly commercial and practical method for performing this well known classic. It is the handiwork of Lawrence Frame and was kindly written up for us by Jerry Sadowitz.

PREPARATION

To the centre of the back of a playing card (say, in this example, the Ace of Spades — although any card will do) glue a 2p piece.

Overseas readers will have to sort out a suitable coin of their own currency.

SET-UP

The prepared card is on the face of the pack.

WORKING AND PRESENTATION

Casually shuffle the pack, retaining the Ace of Spades on the bottom. Next force it on a spectator by means of the well known Hindu Shuffle Force. After the force, reassemble the pack so that the Ace of Spaces is somewhere near the centre. Place the pack, face down, onto the table.

Borrow a 2p piece and apparently place it into the left hand. Really it is held, palmed, in the right. Use any method that you do well for this.

Slap your left hand, palm downwards, on top of the pack, opening the fingers, during the action. Freeze for a moment, with the hand on the pack. After a short pause, slowly lift the left hand and turn it palm upwards, showing it empty.

With the empty left hand, cut the pack at the point, where the coin is. Place the cut off cards alongside the tabled portion, leaving them face upwards. The spectator will see what is, apparently, the same coin. Ask for the identity of the card, seen at the beginning (Ace of Spades). As the spectator replies, perform the following actions:-

- 1. Pick off the Ace of Spades with the left hand. It is gripped at the inner left corner only. The thumb is on top of the card. The second finger goes beneath.
- 2. Bring the right hand beneath the card. Turn the left hand palm downwards from the wrist. This will, of course, bring the named card face upwards. At the same time, open the right fingers and turn that hand palm upwards to apparently catch the coin, which is on the card.
- 3. Display the right hand's coin.

This is a very easy and deceptive move, especially as it is well covered by the misdirection, inherent in the fact that the audience are all looking at the face of the card, to see if it is the Ace of Spades.

Drop the visible coin onto the table. Cleanly toss the Ace of Spades face upwards, onto the face up pile of cards. Pick up the face down cards and drop them, face up, on top of all. The prepared Ace is once more in the centre of the pack. Turn the pack face down.

Offer to repeat the discovery. Pick up the visible 2p. Fake transfer it into the left hand. Really, retain it in the right. Repeat the action of slapping the left hand onto the pack. After showing the hend empty, allow the spectator to cut to the coin. He should do this first time. If not, then do it yourself. Ask him to lift off the coin and look at the card beneath. His expression will be quite amusing, as he discovers that the coin is actually stuck to the card. While he is busy with these actions, you have ample time and cover to ditch the coin.

ENDNOTES

There are several strong points to this particular effect:-

- a) There is no chance of the coin slipping out of the pack, during the handling.
- b) The method is easy and the pay-off memorable.
- c) There is plenty of scope for humour. For instance, you could make the force card the King of Hearts and glue the coin, heads upwards. You could then say, at the finish, "...the Queen is very attached to the King!"

ELIZABETH 3RD

- Tommy Wonder

In Volume 7 No.2, we described Wally Boyce's "Elizabeth 2nd". Tommy immediately saw the potential of this item but, like many others, was unhappy about the presence, in the envelope, of the Joker. Readers may recall that this particular card had to be there but, as far as the audience was concerned, played no part in the effect.

The handling, which Tommy worked out, while still using Wally's basic method, enhances the original in two ways. Firstly the Joker is eliminated and in its place is a banknote. A logical reason for the note being there is given in the presentation. Secondly, the card and note are displayed in a transparent plastic folder, rather than an opaque envelope as with the original. Another advantage, with this method, is the fact that you do have a chance to get lucky, once in a while, and bring off a miracle.

EFFECT

A plastic folder is shown. It is seen to contain a face down playing card and a banknote of high value. The magician states that he will attempt to influence somebody and cause them to name the card. So confident is he of success that, should he fail and the named card be any one, other than the one on display, the spectator may keep the money.

The spectator freely names any card. The card, in the folder, is removed and shown to be the correct one.

REQUIREMENTS

You will need two packs of cards. These should be prepared as in the original, Wally Boyce, version. For the benefit of those readers who either missed this, or who do not have access to Vol 7 No.2, here is a brief resume.

Obtain two packs of cards with red backs. From them make two faked packs, in the following manner. One pack contains all of the Clubs and Diamonds, from both packs, while the other has all of the Hearts and Spaces. The cards should be arranged in pairs, so that both Aces of Clubs are together as are both Two's of Hearts. Do this with all of the pairs, in both packs. Place one pack in your right trouser pocket and the other in your left. Be sure to know which pack is which.

Also needed is a transparent plastic folder, similar to that depicted in Fig.1. It should be slightly larger than a banknote and open along one long and one short side. Trim one of the long open long sides a little narrower than the other. This will enable the folder to be easily opened, without fumbling.

You will also need to have a high value banknote. The higher the value, the better. With a little magician's wax, Blue Tack or whatever, attach a Queen of Hearts, face down, to the note. Place the card, so that it is lying haphazardly, near to the centre of the money. You can use the Queen of Hearts from the faked pack for this. If the spectator names that card, you have performed a miracle and the packs will not be used, or seen.

The final requirement is a large paperclip. Try to get one of a bright colour, such as red. This holds the folder closed, as in Fig.2.

WORKING AND PRESENTATION

Introduce the folder, showing it on both sides. Allow the people to see that it contains a banknote and a single card only. Explain that you will influence somebody to name the card, in the folder. Point out that, if you fail and they name any other card, they may be allowed to keep the money.

Toss the folder onto the table, so that it lands with the card on the underside and only the note can be seen.

This introduction is calculated to arouse maximum interest. If the performer does not succeed, which seems more than likely, then he will lose the money and, more to the point, they will win it. It becomes important to watch the trick. For the performer there is something at stake: for the audience there is a chance of easy money!

Have a spectator name a card. If the Queen of Hearts happens to be named, which is very often the case, then you have nothing more to do. Build up the effect for all you are worth, remove the card and the note. Push the card so that it frees itself from the wax, and display it — a perfect miracle!

When a card is named, other than the Queen of Hearts, remove the appropriate pack (the one which contains a pair of the named card). Obviously the introduction of the pack requires a plausible reason. It must be given one, by the presentation. Tommy's approach is, while removing the pack, to say, "Now let's make sure that there is no misunderstanding. . ." Quickly, he locates the required pair of cards and places one openly, face up on the table, while secretly cutting its duplicate to the top of the pack. He continues talking, without pausing, ". . . This is the card that you named? There is no misunderstanding, is there? You have nominated this card and this card alone!" The spectator acknowledges this. As a large amount of money is at stake, it is perfectly logical for the performer to take precautions to ensure that there are no misunderstandings. By placing the named card onto the table, you have prevented the spectator from denying that it was the one that was named and claiming that you misheard. Some people might be inclined to try this, in . order to get the money! This, at any rate, is the impression that you must seek to convey.

The pack is placed face down into the left hand. Quietly obtain a little finger break below the top card. This is, of course, a duplicate of the tabled one. It is necessary to place the folder on top of the pack, in order to cop the duplicate card. A logical reason for doing this needs to be found. This is why the paperclip is there. In order to open the folder, the clip must first be removed. This can only be done if both hands are used.

So, pick up the folder with the right hand and place it on top of the pack, as in Fig.3. This enables the left to hold it steady, while the right removes the clip. Toss the clip onto the table, immediately. As it is large and brightly coloured, most eyes will follow it. This helps to divert attention from the left hand and prevents people from being too much aware of the fact that the folder is on top of the pack. If the clip can be made of brass, or some other heavy metal, the noise of its landing, on the table, will add extra strength to this misdirection.

As soon as the paperclip has been dropped onto the table, the right hand moves across and takes a hold of the folder, together with the top card of the pack. This latter is clipped beneath the folder, by the right finger tips. The left hand, holding the pack, moves away and turns palm downwards. Extend the left forefinger, in a pointing gesture and move the tabled card forward slightly, while saying, "This card should match the one in the folder." Draw the left hand back and deposit the pack onto the table, as inconspicuously as possible. Note that throughout the entire sequence, the actual position of the folder has not changed. It is still in the same place as it was when the paperclip was originally removed. Although it has been transferred from hand to hand and several other movements have taken place, these have all been accomplished without actually moving the folder.

Also, the manner of placing the pack down is important. Make the action as inconspicuous as possible. You do not want people to notice or remember that the pack was ever in your hand.

Bring the left hand up, so that it can take a hold of the folder and the card, beneath it. This latter is clipped against the underside by the left finger tips. The right hand, meanwhile, releases its hold and lifts the upper layer of the folder, sufficiently to enable the banknote to be extracted. Pull the note out. The card will come with it, being attached, as it is, by magician's wax. Drop the note onto the table. The card, which was stolen from the pack, will now be visible. It will look as though it is inside the folder. In fact, it is being held against the underside, by the left finger tips. There is a discrepancy here, as the card will be face down, when in fact it should be face up. Without any hesitation, place the right thumb into the folder as in Fig. 4 and apparently extract the card, tossing it face down on top of the note. Do not show its face just yet. Place the folder aside.

Leave the card lying on top of the banknote for a few moments, while you continue to talk. There is a psychological reason for doing this. The note and card present a picture, similar to the one when they were first shown to the audience. It is a good thing to allow this picture to consolidate itself in the minds of the watchers, thereby establishing that it is the same card and the same note that they saw earlier! When the effect has built up enough, turn over the card and show that it is the one, which was named.

RESETTING

It is possible to reset the trick, immediately after showing. Take the pack, face down, into the left hand. Take the sleeve and hold it on top of the pack. Next pick up the banknote and push it into the folder, keeping the attached card hidden. Pick up either of the matching cards from the table and apparently push it into the folder so that it goes beneath the note. In reality, slide it underneath the folder and directly onto the top of the pack. Replace the paperclip and pocket the folder. Finally, pick up the remaining card and place it on top of the pack. Put the pack into your pocket and you are reset.

If you are table hopping in situations where the same people might see you on several tables, it is a good idea to have three or four folders made up. Take them out in a bunch and place one on the table. Put the others away. This would then explain how you can be successful when other cards than the one(s) they saw named before, are called.

REVIEWS BOOKS

Michael Skinner's Intimate Magic: Written by Jeff Busby and published by Jeff Busby Magic Inc. Available from many dealers. U.S. price 7.50 dollars.

Mike Skinner created a sensation when he came over to this country some years ago. Unfortunately, I missed seeing him then. A reading of this book served to remind me of the treat that I had missed and the beautiful, subtle magic, explained, went some way to compensate for that loss.

Jeff Busby admits, in his advertising, that nine of the eleven items have appeared in Michael Skinner's lecture notes. As these lecture notes have not been widely circulated in the U.K. this is of little consequence. In any case, the whole lot have been rewritten in a much fuller and more detailed manner.

Also, in his advertising matter, Jeff Busby states that "Each (effect) is practical and effective. Any of these effects could make a reputation for you. This is professional magic from a professional magician." For once, in a dealer's advertisement, this is a plain statement of the truth. Every one of the effects in this book is a top class, professional item. My own personal favourites were "The Wonderful Coin Trick Revisited", "The Bewildering Ball Vase" and "Repeat Poker Power".

"The Wonderful Coin Trick" is a tongue in cheek, pretentious title for an excellent comedy item. The performer is about to cause a coin to completely disappear. The audience, however, are not impressed. They can see a piece of elastic, attached to the coin and running up the performer's sleeve. The coin does vanish, leaving the elastic behind. It is dangling from the sleeve with nothing on the end. The performer removes it from his sleeve and the coin is seen to be fastened to the other end. The performer removes it and it promptly disappears, only to reappear on the end of the elastic. Great stuff and, in the right hands, a riot.

"The Bewildering Ball Vase" is a beautiful sequence, using a ball vase from a child's conjuring set. Everybody is completely fooled, especially those who know the working of the vase. "Repeat Poker Power" is a subtle block-buster, in which you still deal winning hands, even after a spectator has mixed the cards.

What really appealed to me about these tricks and all of the others in the book, is the way that they have been honed to razor sharp, professional perfection. The mechanics have been divested of all superfluous complexity, the plots are easy for the audience to follow and comprehend. The descriptions are well written and beautifully clear. My only criticism of the book is that at seven dollars and fifty cents it is really far too cheap. It should be many times the price.

Altogether, one of the best books that I have read for a long time.

Mentalism for Magicians by Larry Becker. Edited and published by Jeff Busby and available from many leading dealers. U.S. price 10 dollars plus postage.

I have a theory that, as a very small child, I must have been badly frightened by a mentalist. Certainly such a theory would account for my aversion, one could almost say paranoia, for the breed. It would seem that I am not entirely alone in this. Just watch the rush for the door, as the curtain rises on the card table and row of chairs, before the slate scratcher even makes his entrance. Having said all this, I must admit, albeit grudgingly, that there are a handful of performers — people like Phil Goldstein and the late Al Koran, who could hold my interest. They are, however, few and far between and, I suspect, it has more to do with their inherent abilities as entertainers than the actual power of the "miracles" that they perform.

Another prejudice that I have and which I have voiced before, is the belief that, in mentalism, methods are totally irrelevent. Given a "Boon" writer and an impression pad, there is really no mind reading effect which cannot be accomplished. So what is the point of writing or reading books on the subject?

Having forced these prejudices to one side, I made myself open this book and begin to read.

Strange to relate, I found, against my better judgement, that it was quite interesting. Interesting enough for me to read a bit more. As I read on, I became more and more interested until, in the end, I had read the whole thing from cover to cover and found it utterly absorbing.

The magic in this book is modern, light and, as much as possible, visual. Most, if not all, of the effects would fit quite comfortably into an act of general magic. Several of the items will readily lend themselves to humour, thus avoiding the heavy handed "dramatic" presentations, which seem to consist of a purple faced maniac yelling into the microphone, while the audience wonder which he will get first, the "message" or a coronary!

The book is well written and laid out, there are over sixty pages of text and some twentynine items, all clearly and effectively described.

Highly recommended.

Polished Polish Prestidigitation by John Thompson: edited and published by Jeff Busby. Price 7.50 dollars in U.S. Available from many dealers.

In his advertising sheet, Jeff Busby says, "John Thompson is well known to the magical fraternity and the lay public as The Great Tomsoni, the Warsaw Wizard. John is also considered to be one of the foremost close-up workers in the world, and certainly one of the top cardmen." Having seen The Great Tomsoni with his gum chewing assistant, hilariously personified by Pamela Hayes, I expected that this book would reflect something of their humour, The title (bearing in mind that in the U.S.A. Polish jokes are the equivalent to Irish jokes in the U.K.) would seem to suggest this. Any such idea is quickly dispelled though, on reading the contents.

That the magic in this book is solid, practical and has been thoroughly tested in commercial situations, I have no doubt. Most of the items do require special cards or gimmicks, some of which will not be readily obtainable by British readers. Those who do take the necessary time and trouble to obtain these and actually work the effects will be well repaid for their efforts. The others will happily toss the book aside and go blithely along their way, ignorant of what they are missing.

Most of the descriptions in the book will need to be read with the necessary items in hand, following the instructions, step by step. This is not a book that you will find easy to just sit down and read from cover to cover. So if you are not prepared to go to this trouble, do not waste your money. If you are willing to make the effort, you will find much of interest.

Recommended but with the reservations expressed in the preceeding paragraph.

Spell-Binder Vol.2 No.15 July 1982. Published by Stephen Tucker, 22 Bodmin Grove, Carr Mill, St Helens, Merseyside WA11 9ST. Annual Subs U.K. £10. Europe £12. U.S.A. 44 dollars (Air Mail) or 30 dollars (Surface).

The opening item of this attractively laid out magazine, is called "Excalibur" and is a colour change knife routine by Stephen Tucker. There is a brilliantly subtle vanish of a knife, which should delight all true enthusiasts.

Peter Duffie's "Arc de Triumph" is a subtle "Triumph" type effect, "Ying +" by Shiv Duggal will take some practise and nerve. "Strange" by David Hamley is a subtle use of a standard glimpse technique. David Britland contributes "A Fourth for Dinner". This is a very novel "Cannival Card" effect, in which the card is eaten in stages. Well thought out and put together is this one. "Off Colour Catchers" by Reinhard Muller is a clever discovery of the four aces coupled with a colour change pack. It is one of those flashy attention getters, which make a good opener in a formal close-up demonstration. "Ethereal Steal" by Ian Land is a sort of combined "Open Travellers" and "Four Ace Assembly". There are no difficult moves but absolute smoothness and strong misdirection are essential. Also needing very smooth handling is Jerry Sadowitz's "Born Free". This is a form of "Ambitious Card(s)", using the Half Pass as the basic modus operandi.

Two quick little items are "On the Other", which is an idea for use with certain brands of playing cards and Wayne Dobson's "T 4 U" an off-beat way of loading a ball under a tea cup.

All in all, a very good issue, containing some first class magic.

Richard's Almanac — Edited and published by Richard Kaufman, 409 East 82n Street, New York City, New York 10028. U.S.A. Annual Subscription Rate 24 dollars U.S.A. 30 dollars Europe and 34 dollars elsewhere.

This is a completely new magazine by the author of some of the best text books to appear in recent years. Richard Kaufman was also one of the founders of "Apocalypse" magazine.

The issue in question is Volume 1 No.1, September 1982.

Firstly, let me say that it is always a pleasure to welcome a new publication onto the scene, especially one which sets itself as high a standard as this one appears to do. The magazine has just eight offset pages and contains four items. This may not sound very much but, when I add that the four contributors are Derek Dingle, David Roth, Peter Kane and Geoffrey Latta, the picture alters dramatically. When I also add that future contributors will be people like Gene Maze, Jon Racherbaumer, Sol Stone, Michael Ammar, Ken Krenzel, Tom Gagnon, John Cornelius, Herb Zarrow and Slydini, those who know their magic, will not be able to get off their subscriptions fast enough.

All of the items are written and illustrated by Kaufman and, if you do not know what that means in terms of clarity and presentation, just take a look at some of his books.

In this particular issue, Dingle describes a version of the Toss Change, which puts this sleight within the reach of anybody, who is prepared to make a reasonable effort. Roth has a lovely, subtle Copper and Silver Transposition, whose boldness is a joy to behold. Peter Kane submits a very subtle Four Ace discovery, while Latta gives a usable coin sleight, which will have many applications.

Finally, under the heading of "Bull", editor Kaufman deals with the usual bits and bobs, which need to be covered.

The Magic of the Cube. Published jointly by Magico Magazine, P.O.B. 156 NYC10002 U.S.A. and Goodliffe Publications Ltd, Arden Forest Industrial Estate, Alcester, Warwickshire, England. U.S. price 5 dollars.

Although the Rubik Cube no longer enjoys the popularity of twelve months ago, it is still a familiar sight; familiar enough to be a reasonably topical feature, if used in a magical trick.

This little, inexpensive book of some 32 pages contains over sixteen ideas by British and American magicians on the cube. These range from simply constructed gimmicks through the gamut of mathematical and subtle principles to straightforward sleight of hand.

There are predictions, divinations, self solving cubes and even a method of using the cube to force a colour. Anybody, who either uses a Rubik's Cube already, or would like to, would do well to read this book. He would be bound to find angles unlike anything that he had ever thought of.

CASANOVA

Phil Goldstein

The following routine was stimulated by a poket plot brought up by Chuck Fayne. There have been various routines of similar ilk developed by Derek Dingle, Larry Jennings, and myself (see, for example, my "Straight Up With A Twist", in Jerry Mentzer's "Card Cavalcade Finale", 1979). This approach requires the use of one gimmicked card. This in turn allows for an extremely clean appearance. Six cards are used: the ten of clubs; ten of spades; queen of spades, king of spades; ace of spades, one double-facer showing the ten of hearts/jack of spades. (This latter card comes with the standard double-faced deck manufactured in the U.S.)

At the start of the routine, the cards are in order from the top: KS; AS; QS; double-facer 10H-side-up; face up 10C; face up 10S.

- 1. Begin by performing an Omega Count to display five face down cards, as you explain that this is an imaginary poker hand.
- 2. Say, "Let's imagine the game is Five-Card Stud. This will be our hole card, and we'll look at it last. . ." Deal the top card of the packet (AS) face down to the table.
- 3. Continue, "Now let's find out what our face up cards are. . ." Perform an Elmsley Count. The 10S will appear face up. Comment, "We're off to a good start."
- 4. To make the second ten appear face up, perform a Push-Off Count: the packet being held in the same Pinch Grip as used for the previous count, the right hand removes the top single card. The next card is taken on top of the first. The left thumb pushes off the next two cards squared as one, this pair being taken onto the right hand stock. The final card in the left hand is taken on top of all. The 10C and 10S are seen face up during this count.
- 5. To make the third ten appear face up, count as follows: the right hand removes the top card. The next card is taken on top of the first. The left hand lays its remaining three cards

- on top of the right hand's pair, slightly downjogged, and as this happens the right thumb pulls the top card of this three-card block down, to display the card now second-from-top. The 10S will thus be seen beneath the "newly arrived" 10H. The face up 10C was the first card of this display. (The order of the packet now is, from the top' 10H; 10S; face down KS; face down QS; 10C.)
- 6. To show four tens face up, simply perform an Elmsley Count, with the last card going to the bottom of the packet. The 10H shows twice during this, but as the colour distribution is correct, it will seem fair. Your patter during all of the above is in the form of self-congratulatory comments as each ten appears face up.
- Say, "This is a very strong hand..." Perform a Half-Pass to secretly reverse the lowermost three cards of the packet. Obtain a break above the lowermost two cards of the packet. Now, perform a simple Slip Cut, as follows: the right hand holds the packet from above (Biddle Grip). The left hand grasps the cards from below in standard Mechanic's Grip, the thumb lying across the face of the packet. Separate the hands — the left hand milking away the two lowermost cards from beneath the break, plus the top single card. The right hand's pair is deposited on top of the left hand stock, resulting in an order from the face: 10S; JS; 10C; QS; KS. During this casual cutting action, still only tens will be seen. Your patter here, as you "toy" with the cards, is, "With four of a kind, it really almost doesn't matter what our hole card is — but let's find out anyway. . . "
- 8. As the preceding sentence is uttered, flip the packet face down. Spread the cards into a wide fan, via a Single Buckle Spread, displaying four backs. Use the fan to flip over the tabled card, the ace of spades.
- 9. Exclaim, "How nice an ace kicker. Four tens with an ace kicker is about as fine a hand as you could ever want in a game of stud. Perhaps the only thing that could be better would be a Royal Straight Flush!" Here, raise the fan to reveal that this is now exactly what you hold.

NOTE

The Omega Count, mentioned by Phil, is the invention of Sam Schwartz. It is a variation of the Elmsley/Jordan/Victor push off type counts and enables five cards to be counted as five but only showing four of them. People who know the Elmsley Count, will find little difficulty in understanding the following description. Those who do not know the Elmsley Count, are really reading the wrong magazine!

Hold the five cards, in the left hand, in an Elmsley Count position. The card to be hidden is second from bottom.

The right hand draws off the top card, as in the Elmsley. As the second card is drawn off, in a similar manner, the left fingers seize back the first one, retaining it on the bottom of their packet.

The right hand returns to apparently draw off a third card. In fact the left thumb pushes off a block of three, using the normal Elmsley Count push off. As the right hand takes this block, the left fingers seize back the card which was originally in the right hand and holds it at the bottom of the packet. The last two cards are then taken normally, by the right hand.

Scandinavia the land of?... The land of what? How would you describe Scandinavia? I think maybe 'the land of blond people' would come close to a description as most people would know it. Perhaps Hollywood is responsible for this image with all those films of Swedish blonds and Danish vikings. I worked in Scandinavia several years ago, Sweden in fact, and a few months ago I was back in the land of 'blond people', but this time to Norway. I was there at the invitation of the Norwegian magicians to attend their annual convention which was called 'Nor-Magi 82'. I was met at Oslo airport and transported from there by car up into the mountains it appeared to me, by a beautiful, wait for it, blond lady by the name of Gererta, who is the wife of Ivardo who was one of the organisers of this convention.

The actual convention took place in a small village called Fagernes. After I arrived there I spent fifteen minutes looking around the town twice, and that was that. Everything took place in two buildings, one the hotel two the local cultural centre which was situated not more than fifty yards from the hotel. The conditions were ideal, perhaps almost perfect. For me something rare happened, because I saw almost everything that took place. During most of the convention they had closed circuit TV, but not actually in the places where they were performing. In other words you could sit in the hotel foyer or dining room and watch the close up being performed on television if you felt you didn't want to the actual room. I saw some things live, and some on the screen.

The one thing that struck me as being different from most conventions I have been to was the very high standard, particularly amongst youngsters. I saw all of the junior section close up competition and was amazed at how young and how good they were. No more little toy tricks from the magic and novelty stores for these kids. I watched twelve year olds doing Slydini type effects, lapping coins, doing Vernon sleights, and the Elmsley count was a must for all those doing card tricks. Remember, we are talking about twelve year olds. One small critiscism. Their junior section covers the age range from perhaps 11 or 12 up to 20. I feel this is very unfair to the actual youngsters because there is no way way that a 13 or 14 year old, unless he is a boy wonder, can compete with a 19 year old. The latter has the advantage of years which at that stage of their evolution is unfair. Perhaps 12 to 16 or 17 would be a better idea..But then who am I to tell the Blond People how to run their convention?

As I have said the standard was extremely high in both performance and technique but it lacked a little in originality. Most of the effects and routines I saw performed are in print somewhere. If you wrote a list of the effects you would be describing things like 'there was this Alex Elmsley routine' or this 'John Mendoza routine' and so forth. The competitions were divided up into sections. There was a close up card competition and a section for general close up. This rule applied for both the junior and senior sections and all of this took place in the hotel.

Usually there is one thing at a convention that one remembers better than others and the same applied to Nor-Magi 82. For me it was meeting a young man by the name of John Houdi who reminded me of a very young Fred Kaps. By that I don't mean he looks like Fred physically - he doesn't. He is perhaps as tall but maybe a little heavier. He is a talent to watch and a name to remember. My reason for likening him to Fred Kaps is that he appears to be into magic in all its phases. He's a very good card man, he's excellent at general close up magic, and he does a first class stage act. This is along the lines of Channing Pollock, being a dove act with card manipulations popped in the middle somewhere. His stage setting was a lamp post, which reminded me of the late Douglas Francis who used this prop for many years. This young man swept the board with the prizes. I can't remember everything he won but think he won the junior close up, the best stage act and probably one other. That I have mentioned he won the junior section tells you he was young. Remember the name, you will hear it again, John Houdi.

Goodbye, Patrick Page

Close-Up

Collection

one

An incredible book of Close-Up Magic written and illustrated by Richard Kaufman with many of the world's greatest Close-Up Magicians as contributors.

The Premiere New York Magic Symposium, held August 19-22, 1982, was a phenomenal success! To keep performing and viewing conditions "ideal" registration was limited, and the event Sold Out. We are sorry to have had to turn away so many magicians who showed up at the event and expected to register there, but this was our only option considering our commitment to keeping conditions "ideal." The 1983 New York Magic Symposium is already set for August 25-28; plan to register early and write to us for details. It will be an incredible event!

If you didn't attend The Premiere Symposium you need not miss out on all the great magic of the event. Richard Kaufman (author and illustrator of Coin Magic and The Complete Works of Derek Dingle as well as many others) collected original, high quality, never-before-published material from the close-up performers of The Symposium. He has written and illustrated the New York Magic Symposium's Close-up Collection One -- an oversized, professionally typeset, hardbound book with over 25 items in it. The material is superb!

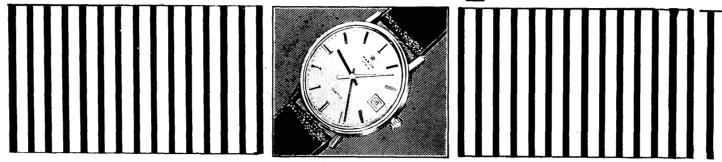

Contributors include Symposium performers Paul Harris, Michael Ammar, David Roth, Daryl, Derek Dingle, John Cornelius, Slydini and some special guest contributors including Tom Mullica, Edward Marlo and Jon Racherbaumer! There is material for every close-up worker to use.

The book is only $20. Please include $1.50 for postage, $3.50 for foreign orders. Send to The New York Magic Symposium, P.O. Box 169, Rockville Centre, New York 11571.

The Symposium is also proud to offer a limited number of our "Premiere Symposium" T-Shirts. We sold out of the few we had at the convention, and now a few more are available. It is a high quality black T-Shirt with special Symposium silk screening on the front--you'll be the envy of the magicians at the club if you get one, so send in \$10 (we pay postage) and your size $(S_{\epsilon}M, L OR XL)$. If we are out of shirts we will return your check immediately.

tell-tale time-piece

arthur emerson

Any time piece is borrowed from a Spectator. It may be wrist watch, a pocket watch or a ladies pendant watch. The spectator shows the performer the face of the watch. The spectator hands the watch to a second spectator who covers watch with a handkerchief and holds it securely.

The performer produces a small notepad and requests the audience to call out any digit from 1 to 12 inclusive. A different spectator calls out a number between 1 and 59. The numbers are written down and handed to a spectator.

The performer designates a different member of the audience to come forward and tell all those within range of his voice the time indicated on the face of the time-piece. The time he tells is the same as the time on the note pad... the time devised from the digits called out by two different members of the audience.

The Performer thanks all of the assisting Spectators, resets the borrowed timepiece to the correct time and returns the instrument to the spectator who loaned it. The trick is over.

A very clever and well routined effect that had its genesis in Koran's Gold Medallion. Comprehensively written, this 44 page booklet is fully illustrated and supplied with the neccessary gimmicks.

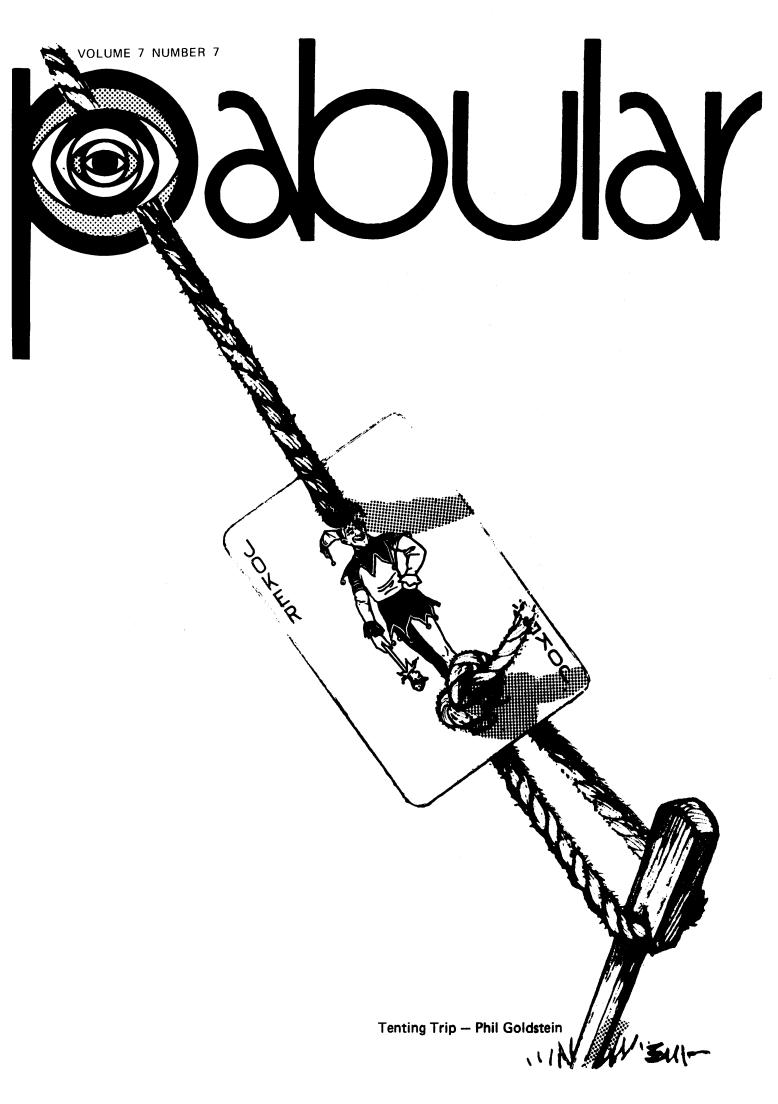

This is an easy effect to perform, no difficult sleights or awkward handling. Spend a little time on the presentation and you will have a strong dramatic effect with a stunning impact.

This is a two-phase routine with a plot that is simple and quick: a chosen card jumps invisibly from the pack to a packet, then back again. You will need a deck of cards with two identical jokers, plus one gimmicked card: a double-facer, showing a joker on one side, the five of hearts on the other. (This latter side can be any card, but the joker/5H combination is the one found in the standard double-faced assortment sold by the dealers).

At the start of the routine, have the normal 5H on top of the pack. The two jokers and the double-facer are in a separate packet, with the DF at the face of the packet, joker side aligned with the normal faces.

- 1) Begin by showing the three-card packet as being three jokers. You may wish to use a Back Count to show backs on all three-cards, but this is hardly necessary. Table the packet face down, as you explain that these three jokers will help you in this trick.
- 2) Force the normal 5H from the pack upon the spectator. Hold the deck face down in the left hand. Retrieve the 5H from the spectator, and position it openly into the grasp required for the Finley Tent Vanish, as shown in Fig.1.
- 3) The Tent Vanish is now performed, as follows: the right hand comes over the angled card (5H) and pretends to palm that card. Under cover of the right hand, the left thumb moves slightly, allowing the angled card to fall flush with the pack. When the right hand moves away, keep the left thumb raised. Nothing seems to have changed, and it will look as if you have removed the angled card with your right hand.
- 4) Make a "crumpling" motion with the right hand, claiming that you are making the 5H invisible. Pantomime tossing this invisible card over to the tabled packet.
- 5) Say, "The selected card is really gone. . ." Here, perform a Double Turnover, showing an indifferent card atop the pack (and establishing the absence of the 5H). Allow the face up double to fall square with the top of the pack. Now, the right hand removes the top single card, as the left hand simultaneously turns inward to prevent the spectators from viewing the 5H face up atop the talon. The right hand turns the indifferent card face down, and replaces it on top of the pack. Thus, you have secretly placed the 5H face up second from the top.

- 6) In the course of tabling the pack, perform a Pass to bring the reversed 5H to the centre.
- 7) Pick up the joker packet. Holding the cards face down, perform an Elmsley Count, three-asfour. This will display a 5H face up among three face down cards the selected card has arrived in the joker packet.
- 8) Square the packet. Turn the packet face up. Mime extracting the 5H from the packet, and tossing it toward the tabled deck. Perform a three-card Olram Subtlety. As the double-facer is in the middle of the packet, you will thus display three jokers, backs and fronts. Tossing the cards to the table in the course of this action confirms the vanish of the five of hearts.
- 9) Ribbonspread the deck, revealing the 5H face up at centre. At this point, all attention is on the pack which is clean.

N.B.

(If you do not know what the Olram Subtlety is use an Elmsley/Victor type count in step 8 to show three backs — Ed.)

NEWSPAPER MIND READING

Barrie Richardson and Eric Mason

This was developed by Eric and myself as a simple bar stunt. The basic idea can, however, be built up into a much bigger and stronger presentation.

BASIC EFFECT

Any sheet of newspaper is torn into small squares (approximately 2" x 2"). These are given to a lady to mix up. When she has mixed them, she is requested to select any piece, at random. She is asked to take the piece of newspaper in her right hand, to close her eyes and turn her back on the performer, so that he cannot possibly see the paper.

The performer then instructs the lady that, when he counts to three, she is to open her eyes, look at a word and then to immediately close them. This she does. The mentalist then exhorts her to concentrate on the word, which he proceeds to reveal in a fittingly dramatic manner.

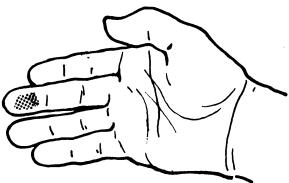

Fig.1 Gimmicked Scrap of Newsprint

REQUIREMENTS

A newspaper to use in the performance. An extra piece of newsprint and some double sided scotch tape.

PREPARATION

From the single, extra piece of newsprint, carefully cut out one word. Stick it onto a fragment of the double sided adhesive tape and trim the tape down to the size of the tiny fragment of paper. If you remove a section of tape, slightly larger than that required and retain the none-adhesive backing strip, this can be used to protect the sticky side of the gimmick until needed.

WORKING & PRESENTATION

The basic method is very simple and bold.

Just prior to the performance, obtain the gimmicked scrap of paper and have it resting on your second finger, adhesive side uppermost (Fig.1).

Invite a spectator to pick up the newspaper (they can use their own, if desired) and to select a sheet, containing plenty of small print. Have them tear it into small squares.

Ask the spectator to mix up the pieces and to select one. When this has been done, just for a moment, take the selected piece from the lady, saying that you do not want her to look at it just yet. Have her close her eyes and turn her back. While this is being done, turn the selected piece of paper upside down and stick the gimmick to it, as shown in Fig.2, so that the latter is right way up.

Place the paper into the person's hand, so that it is upside down and the only word, which is right way up and therefore instantly readable, is the one on the gimmick.

When the lady opens her eyes, which she does for just a fleeting second, to look at the first word that she sees, the only one, which is readable will be the right way up one. Provided that you do not allow the spectator to keep her eyes open for more than an instant, she will be regulations and law regulations and law regulations and social present of the developer. The tag it of the developer. The tag it of the developer. The tag it of the developer and fraught with delicat that and ascial problems. By the first and social problems it is that and ascial problems it is on of the middle class for of the middle class for on the middle class it is that the middle class it is that the middle class it is the middle class.

Fig.2 The only word that can be read insta totally unaware of this fact and will often believe that she was, in some way, hypnotised. This is not one of those stunts, wherein the spectator becomes a stooge. Correctly worked, she will be more baffled than anybody.

EDITORIAL

December 1982

I am writing this while under the influence of a mild dose of 'flu. Not bad enough to stop me from working though, thank goodness. In a couple of hours, I have to face thirty hysterical four-year-olds, if I can reach them — the radiator on my van has started to leak. Nevertheless, the show must go on, as they say (although why it must and who "they" are, is never explained).

It is funny how these sayings come into being; how they are repeated year in and year out, without anybody questioning their basis in fact. Magic abounds with them. How often do we hear it said that "Women do not like Card Tricks", for instance, or that "Exposure harms Magic"? Another hoary old chestnut says, "There is Nothing New in Magic". One of my favourites is, "It does not have to Fool People so long as it gets a Laugh".

There are, of course, many other such proverbs, which will no doubt readily spring to your mind. What interests me is where they came from in the first place and why we are all so ready to take them aboard and pass them on, as accepted wisdom. I can remember when I joined my first magical society, in Lincoln, some twenty-five years ago, hearing many of these things said, by the older members. I took them in, as does nearly everyone and they have coloured my thinking ever since. Some of them, I have later learned to question, but I have no doubt that others have become so deeply engrained that I can no longer see them for what they are.

Some are outright distortions of the truth. For instance, Robert Houdin said that the magician is an actor playing the part of the magician. From this followed the "logic" that a magician must be an actor, therefore (and these 'therefores' are the dangerous part) a trained actor must by definition be able to perform magic better than most magicians. This, as experience will bear out, is patently untrue. Although acting is a part of magic — a very important part — it is not the whole. Unless the actor also had the technical skill and an understanding of the principles of misdirection etc, he would be a failure.

Then again, do women really not like card tricks? Some of my best audiences have been women. Indeed, an audience made up entirely of men is usually (for me) more difficult than a mixed one. Men may, on the whole, be more intrigued by the "puzzle" element but the ladies are usually far more ready to be entertained and to react to the surprises. Of course ladies do not like long, boring card tricks! Who does? Perhaps, if the women are not all that keen on your magic, the men do not like it either!

As for exposure; so much has been written on this subject that we do no longer accept, without question, the fact that it harms magic. If the endless controversy, caused by the various attitudes, expressed in print, has made people rethink (or even just think) their attitudes and the ghost of the old saw has been laid, then perhaps something has been accomplished.

The expression "There is Nothing New in Magic" is just a cop-out phrase. It is best used to annoy your least favourite dealer. Go and see him and ask to see his latest offering. When he has gone right through it, look very knowing and say, with great worldly wisdom, "There's nothing new in magic!" The expression is, in fact, interchangeable with other, similar ones, such as, "It's all been in Tarbell/Greater Magic (or any other big book)." People in magic studios use these and similar phrases, when they do not much want to buy. In the same way theatre agents say, "Don't call us, we'll call you!", or ladies, ringing up to enquire about your fee for a children's party, say, "I'll have to ask my husband!" The expression can also be used, at magic club meetings, to keep the younger members in their place. When junior turns up with some superb piece of skilfull chicanery, which completely dumbfounds the entire gathering, some such utterance, from one of the senior members, can help to redress the balance and restore equilibrium.

Earlier on, I mentioned that one of my favourite proverbs was, "It does not have to Fool People, so long as it gets a laugh/entertains". I would be the last person on Earth to say that a laugh is not worth getting. I believe in getting all the laughs that I possibly can. Early on, however, I did fall into a trap, which a lot of others have also fallen into. I was semi-pro-ing in the Lincolnshire/Nottinghamshire area, at the time. My act consisted of a lot of sight gags and very little magic. Most of the gags were semi-magical quickies; things like sausage guns, turnover candle, clatter box etc. The theme of the act was that every trick went wrongsomething magical happened, but it was not what I expected or anticipated. For instance, I would be about to produce a card in a box. The box would fall to bits and the card would rise out of my pocket or whatever.

I had performed the act for several years, with what I thought was great success. Then, one night, I played a club just outside Newark. The act went well and I got a lot of laughs. Afterwards, I was in a cubicle, in the gents, when two men walked in. One said to the other, "What did you make of that loony magician?" The other one replied, "F----- useless! You could see how it was all done and even then the silly b---- couldn't get it right! They'll not have him back here again!" It was then that I realised that for me, at any rate, it was not enough just to get laughs. I had to fool people as well. Gags have their place in a magic act, but so too do mysteries.

You may disagree violently with everything that I have so far written. I hope that you will disagree with some of it. At least then you will be thinking for yourself, and not merely accepting these time-worn aphorisms as golden rules, which must never be violated or broken.

I wonder, in fact, if a performing art, such as magic, can have any rules at all. Does it not seem more reasonable to assume that every individual must find out, in the light of his own experience, that which works for himself and achieves the desired results? In this way, he will evolve a totally unique, personal approach and do much to freshen up his art. Could it not be that axioms are the property of the less talented and the inexperienced?

Perhaps it is time that some of the more progressive magical societies (if there are any) started a "Stamp out the Aphorism" campaign. All that would be needed is an "Axiom Box". This could take the form of a large container with a slot in the top. Every time a member repeats one of these worn out cliches, at a meeting, he is sent to Coventry, until he puts £1 in the box. The money could be spent on buying all the classic books of yesteryear. Then, next time somebody says, about your latest miracle, "It's all been in Tarbell!" you can slap the complete series on his lap and say, "Show me where!" Failure to do so could also result in a fine. Interesting games could be played, such as "Spot the Saying", where any member could challenge another member during meetings, with the words, "You have just used a cliche!" If the challenger is justified, the offending member is fined on the spot. If not, then the challenger is.

One axiom, with which few would disagree, I suspect, is "Always Leave Them Wanting More." I would certainly go along with this one, however, I might be inclined to add a prefix, which would be "MAKE SURE YOU DO ENOUGH!"

RED FACE DEPARTMENT....

One thing that I am getting used to, in this column, is apologising to different people for taking their names in vain, in one way or another. This month's apology is to Scotty York, Bob Chesboro and Geoff Maltby.

In Volume 7, No.3 on page 1011, I reviewed the Coin in Cigarette Lighter, available from Repro Magic. Geoff mentioned to me that he had these for sale and I offered to review it. I had seen the effect performed by Scotty York, when he lectured in London a year or so back. I had forgotten that, in his lecture, he pointed out that the trick was not his own but was in fact the idea of his friend Bob Chesboro, from Williamstown, Mass. U.S.A.

In my review, I credited the effect to Scotty York, which was an error on my part. Scotty wrote and pointed this out, so I am glad to be able to set the record straight.

PLUG DEPARTMENT

AUDIBLE (FAKE) TRANSFER Keith Charnley

This is a method of simulating the placing of a coin into the left hand. Its chief merit lies in the fact that a slapping noise is made as the coin apparently contacts the left palm.

- 1) Display the coin, lying on the right palm, in a Classic Palming Position.
- 2) Turn the right hand over, as in Fig.1, holding the coin in the Classic Palm. The fingers curl inwards slightly and the thumb is behind them, as though clipping the coin in position. To the audience it will appear that the coin has dropped onto the right fingers and is being retained in place with the thumb.
- 3) Bring up the left hand, holding it so that the palm is vertical to the floor and facing towards the right. The fingers should be pointing more or less directly towards the front.
- 4) Bring the right hand very slightly higher than the left and about a foot to the right of it.
- 5) Bring the right hand sharply down towards the left, with a tossing motion, so that the finger tips strike the left palm, producing an audible slapping sound. At the same time, close the left hand, from the centre of the palm, around the right finger tips as though catching the coin. Immediately move the left hand away, to the left.

FRED ROBINSON IN GLASGOW Report by Gordon Bruce

On Sunday, 27th June, 1982, the Centre Hotel, in Glasgow suddenly seemed to be full of magicians. The reason? A session with Fred Robinson.

Some time ago, Fred was persuaded/cajoled/arm twisted into coming to Scotland and giving a talk. Originally, the idea was to have a small group, in the back of a pub—the the grapevine got to work and so many "Please can I come" 'phone calls were made that, eventually, The Shetland Suite in The Centre Hotel, was booked.

The venue seemed to be ideal for a close-up lecture, in that visibility was not the problem that it usually is. People came from all over. Ron Gorden came all the way from Aberdeen and Shiv Duggal came up from London (Why has not Fred lectured in London?).

Fred pointed out that every magician of note has realised the importance of misdirection and its relative lack of use, amongst most amateurs.

Inevitably, the name of Johnny Ramsey came up: Fred said that, for many years, he and others attended the I.B.M. Conventions PURELY to see Johnny and that EVERY year Ramsey succeeded in fooling everyone COMPLETELY, with his incomparable misdirection.

After the theory came the practise and, with just a pack of cards and a few coins, Fred demonstrated many of his own originations: his justly famous Coin in the Tie and Ambitious Card Routine, to name two. Who in magic has not heard of Fred's skill in false deals? His Middles and Bottoms are all done with deceptive casualness.

Almost as casual were the explanations of techniques, which have taken a lifetime to perfect.

In the interval and after the lecture, Fred could be seen, in his element, performing close-up at the bar and going over some of the fine points with those who cared to ask. We were also given a lesson in The Cards Across, a transposition, using Fred's own, no get ready, angle-proof version of the Curry Turnover — a secret for THIRTY YEARS!

And his amazing Rising Card . . . How many passed this up, when it appeared in an early Pabular? I remember seeing Fred do this as a schoolboy (me, not Fred).

I could go on and on — Colour Changes etc. etc. Some said that his Ultimate Force was worth the trip alone. To sum up; the whole affair was very informal and enjoyable. Its success will lead to other lectures in the same venue.

POINTING THE WAY

Al Smith

Alex Elmsley's "Point of Departure" is a fairly well known effect. This version is my own, and was inspired by a Jon Racherbaumer treatment from his "Lecture Notes (1)" — published also, I believe, in "Kabbala" magazine.

The effect is quite straightforward, though I must admit, the description isn't! A freely selected card is placed between two black jacks, promptly vanishes, and reappears reversed in the deck.

Right: here goes. Thumb through the deck and remove the following three cards — JC, JS, QC. Put them, face down, atop the deck in the following order: QC, JS, JC. You can be fairly open about the removal of the jacks, but take care not to disclose the presence of the QC.

Square the deck and double lift and turn over the top two cards to reveal the JS. Bring the right hand over the deck, Biddle style and lift up the jack — and the QC, of course.

Thumb over the next face down card, and, using the JS as a lever, flip the JC face up to display. Now, thumb the JC onto the JS, in the right hand, and, as you do so, push over slightly the next face down X card. Then, with the two jacks held in a small display fan in the right hand, square the deck with the left hand only, and in the process, take a little finger break below the previously displaced X card.

Add the jacks to the top of the deck, as if to square. Almost immediately lift off the "jacks", but take the X card along, too. Thus, you are now holding four cards as two in the right hand.

With the left thumb, peel off the JC back onto the deck to reveal the JS in the right hand. Place the JS (plus two) atop the JC, square and lift off the top two cards — apparently the two jacks, but in truth, the JS and QC. The JC is hidden below the X card, second from the top of the deck. This sequence is basically an adaptation of Marlo's 'Atfus' technique.

You are now in a position to be able to place the two jacks(?) face down on the table. However, before you do this, as the final clincher that the cards actually are the jacks, spread the two slightly. You will find that if you cover the bottom right index corner of the cards and spread the JS to the left and marginally forward a club pip and a certain amount of "picture" will be seen — obviously(?!) the JC. Finally, turn the duo face down and drop to the table.

All the foregoing tends to read a little complex (I did warn you), but handled exactly as what it is — merely a preliminary to the main event — no suspicion will be attached to the moves. You have simply removed the black jacks, displayed them quite openly, and tabled them.

Now: turn the deck face up and take a little finger break above the two bottom (formerly top) cards — the JC and the X card.

Bring the right hand over the left and take the whole deck in a Biddle Grip, the right thumb assuming the break, and Swing Cut the top half of the deck back into the left hand. The right hand thus holds about half the deck, Biddle style, thumb holding a break above the bottom two cards. And the left hand holds the other half in dealing position.

Start to peel cards from the right half to the left half using the left thumb, and invite a spectator to call "stop" whenever he sees a card that takes his fancy. When he has made his selection, flip the card face down on the left hand section using the right hand cards as a lever.

As the chosen card falls flush with the face up cards, you will find that the right hand section covers the left hand packet completely. At this moment execute the Drop Sleight. That is, simply allow the two cards below the thumb break to fall onto the cards in the left hand.

When the right hand is moved clear, a face down card will be seen, and this will be presumed to be the selection. Actually because of the Drop Sleight, it will be the JC.

Deak the face down card to the table. An indifferent card will be seen, as expected. The fact that the card is NOT the same one that preceded the selection originally will pass unnoticed. The chosen card is, of course, hidden below this face up card.

Drop the right hand cards onto the left hand group, and thus the selection becomes centralised, as well as reversed.

Now: turn the deck face down in the left hand and hold it in dealing position, with the thumb extending across the back of the top card towards the upper right corner. Pick up the face down JC (supposedly the selected card) and slot it beneath the thumb, but leave it protruding well beyond the end of the deck. Just trap the card between the deck and the thumb at the lower left hand corner. Leave the card protruding and turn your attention to the two table cards.

Slide out the lowermost of these two cards and turn it face up. This will be the JS. Place the JS back to back with the presumed JS (QC in fact) and pick up both cards — right thumb on face of JS at right hand edge — and fingers underneath — resting on face of QC.

Slide the "jacks" onto the protruding singleton, JS above and JC below, creating a "sandwich". Then, as if to square the trio, pull all three flush with the deck proper. During this squaring motion, it is a simple matter to pull upwards on the centre card (supposedly the selection, but actually the JC), and lift the top two back to back cards (the two true jacks) as three: leaving the face down QC atop, and flush with, the rest of the deck. (Whew!).

INSPIRATION AND POINTS OF REFERENCE

Vaguely based on Piet Forten's "Chroma-Zone" from Talon 7 (updated). It is a visual and pretty production of the four Aces. Most of the moves are fairly standard and therefore will not be described.

SET-UP

From the top down: black Ace, red Ace, red Ace, rest of deck, black Ace. The cards in "Italic" type are face up. We will assume for purposes of description that the actual order of the Aces is AC, AH, AD, rest of deck, AS.

PROCEDURE

- 1. Give the deck a few shuffles without disturbing the set-up. Off-Centre Faro Shuffles are fine. Give the deck a couple of false cuts.
- 2. Obtain a left little finger break above the bottom card of the deck via a Buckle or Pull Down Move. Transfer this break to the right thumb as the right hand takes the deck from above. Swing Cut the top half of the deck into the left hand and use the left edge of the right hand packet to flip the left hand packet face up. An X card is revealed on the face of the left hand packet, instead of the expected Ace. Bring the two packets together face to face briefly, transferring the "broken" card to the face of the left hand packet. Quickly turn the left hand palm down and rub the left hand packet on the pad. Slowly turn the left hand palm up to reveal the AS on the face of the packet. Timing is important: you should give the impression that you instantly turn an X card into the AS by rubbing the packet on the pad. This is a neat colour change that I first found described in Earl Nelson's Variations (1978) in the "Sleeve Aces" routine.
- 3. Thumb the AS onto the table, at the same time turning the left hand packet inwards to "kili" the X card on the face of the packet. Throw the left hand packet face down on top of the face down right hand packet.
- 4. Produce the top card of the deck in any manner that doesn't alter the rest of the set-up.

- Thus you have produced the two black Aces. Display the Aces and then instantly change them into the red Aces by using Richard Kaufman's Radical Change from CardMagic (1979). See also Kaufman's mild technical variation of the move described in Cardworks (1980). Drop the two red Aces face up to the table.
- 5. Execute Marlo's Cover-Up Cut. Position from the top down: face down X card, face up AS, deck, face down AC. Obtain a break above the bottom card of the deck (AC) and then perform the "Nelson Quickie" from Marlo in Spades (1947) to produce the AC.
- 6. Double Undercut the top two cards to the bottom of the deck and produce the AS via Cervon's Pivot Revelation from The Card Secrets of Bruce Cervon (1976). An alternative here is to use Mike Skinner's "Haunted Card" from Variations (1978). See also Spellbinder Volume 1 Number 6 (October 1981) for a handling of the "Haunted Card" by David Austin (a/k/a "the Spin-Out Kid"). The routine is finished.

ENDNOTES

- 1. An alternative way to produce the two black Aces at steps 2-4 is via Gordon Bruce's "Split Second" from Pabular Volume 6 Number 6 (August 1980). This fits in nicely.
- 2. An alternative to the Cover-Up Cut is to perform an Out Faro Shuffle (in which only the top 2 cards of each portion need interweave) and then Double Undercut the top card to the bottom of the deck. Continue as written.
- 3. By using the instant visual change described in Vernon's Ambitious Card routine from Stars of Magic to change the AC into the AS at step 6 you can create an additional climax. Perform the visual change, bury the top X card into the deck, and then double turnover. Deal the apparent AS face down on the table. Double Under cut the top card of the deck to the bottom, reverse it, and perform the Pivot Revelation of "Haunted Card". The expected AC that is produced is actually the AS. Ask the spectator to turn the card he thought was the AS face up to reveal the AC.
- 4. The routine here described is only an original combination. Since individual cardmen can create combinations of their own, based on the moves they do best, I can hardly claim much originality as far as "Proteus" goes. Its object is to stimulate your thinking: little creative thinking is necessary for such routines as the above. However, I have found my combination to fit together in a smooth sequence, and this is the only claim to creative thought I can make in this instance.

MARTIN BREESE IS PROUD TO ANNOUNCE THAT HE HAS SECURED THE WORLD MARKETING RIGHTS TO ERIC MASON'S AMAZING NEW EFFECT

Eric Mason describes this as the first cigarette in tube in bottle effect. The first time I saw this performed there was a hushed silence in the room and everyone present knew that they had witnessed a modern miracle. I have asked Eric to let me handle the Silver Retriever but until up to now I couldn't get him to commit himself to allow me to have this brilliant item but yesterday we made an arrangement and now Silver Retriever is available exclusively from us and from Eric himself. All wholesale enquiries should be directed to us.

THE EFFECT: The performer borrows a burning cigarette which he asks the owner to mark with a ballpoint pen. The cigarette still burning is placed in the performer's hand and instantly After a while the magician points a distance away to a bottle inside which rests a beautiful silver tube. spectator is asked to give the bottle to the performer. tube is tipped out and attention is drawn to a fine hair-line The spectator is asked to undo the crack around its centre. tube; this takes some time and when the tube is eventually opened, he finds inside his own signed cigarette. Everything can be The props supplied are made by a craftsman thoroughly examined. one by one to last a lifetime of magical use. This is a collector's item that you can actually use and not just keep in a cabinet!

I am very proud to be able to add this fine effect to our growing range of exclusive, hand-made, high quality magical effects. One of the first purchasers of the Silver Retriever is Simon Lovell who dances around every time he uses it. French purchasers should contact Georges Proust of Paris for supplies.

"A BOON FOR ALL SEASONS" Eric Mason and Barrie Richardson. Available from Eric Mason, 39 Dennis Park Crescent, Wimbledon, London SW20 8QH.

Neither of the authors will be strangers to Pabular readers and both have inventive and original minds. Eric, of course, invented the Boon writer, in the first place, so his niche in magical history is as assured as that of Elmsley, Okito and the many others, who have given us utility items, with uses so numerous that only the limitations of the human imagination place restrictions upon them.

So what of the book itself. Its presentation is decidedly up-market. Stitched and perfect bound with high quality paper and softboard covers, it is about the most expensively produced paperback that I have ever seen. The artwork and illustrations are all by Eric and are scattered through the book with the same sort of proliferation as the grafitti in a Millwall lavatory. I am not being derogatory, when I say that. I just mean that there is a veritable abundance of little spot drawings in addition to the textual illustrations, the type that seem to be Eric's stock in trade.

As for the actual magic, I am not really the best qualified person to write about this. My own feelings on mentalism are, by now, fairly well known. Several people, who are into this sort of thing, have told me that it is a marvellous book. Certainly, on going through it, I was struck by some of the ingenious and subtle applications of this simple device. I even learned how to get writing onto a prediction which is sealed in an inflated balloon. Whether this is new or not, it was certainly new to me.

Anybody, who has more than a passing interest in mental magic, would be foolish to pass up this book. It is the most exhaustive and comprehensive study of its subject, so far written. It is eminently readable, well presented and a surprise and delight to all who enjoy subtle ideas and applications.

Highly recommended.

TIPS ON TABLE HOPPING by Kirk Charles. Available is more of a manuscript. It has been cheaply produced and will certainly not sell on sight to those who like a nice looking book for their money. That will be their loss. It is, in fact, a very useful and practical book, which deals simply and unpretentiously with the "nuts and bolts" of working close-up in a commercial manner.

In his introduction, Kirk Charles says, "It is my aim that anyone can take the material offered here and use it, with only a few changes, to fit his or her own experiences and performance needs." In fact, he does achieve this aim and much more. He gives guidance in how to select suitable material, how to advertise and promote yourself, how to negotiate a fee, the type of places to approach for work, relationships with the rest of the staff, drawing tips, moving in on a table, getting started, dealing with drunks/children/difficult customers

The book, being a U.S. publication, is obviously geared up to the American scene. There are bits and pieces, which will not apply to U.K. performers. On the whole, however, the broad principles are the same, throughout the Western world, so for every one piece of information which is not relevant to the British magician, there will be ten that are.

There are no tricks in this book. There is no real philosophy expressed as such - although there are one or two smatterings of one, dotted about here and there. This is essentially a practical handbook, to guide the newcomer to this kind of magic, along the right lines.

If you intend going out and doing close-up magic for money, or even just for kicks, this book could save you a lot of time and heartache. Highly recommended.

SECRETS AND MYSTERIES FOR THE CLOSE-UP ENTERTAINER by Eugene Burger. Published by Phil Willmarth and available from Martin Breese at £7.00.

I have read a lot about Eugene Burger in the magical press recently. All of it has been good. It would seem that everybody who has seen his work, is universally bowled over. Bob Read is quoted as saying, "He's marvellous. Every item's a closer!" Phil Goldstein also spoke very highly of him.

All that I have so far seen of Mr Burger is his photograph. This shows what must surely be, one of the most unlikely looking characters to be a professional magical entertainer. His bald head, long bushy beard and steel rimmed glasses convey the impression of a modern day Shylock, who would be more at home in fifteenth century Florence than 1982 Chicago, However, beneath the beard, one can detect a cheeky grin; an indication that perhaps Mr Burger does not take himself too seriously.

His magic, on the other hand, is a very different matter. It is apparent from this small 98 page booklet, that that is taken very seriously indeed - especially its presentation and entertainment value. That he was guided in his early days, by the inimitable Don Alan, says much. That he has put his learning to good use is born out by the vast numbers of glowing testimonials, that he regularly receives in the magical press and Chicago media.

The book is in two parts. Part One is headed Secrets. In this, Eugene Burger goes deeply into his own philosophy about the professional presentation of close-up magic. This is a philosophy which has enabled him to earn a good living, doing nothing but intimate magic. He does not do trade shows, pitch selling or children's magic. He works exclusively for adults, in cocktail lounges, restaurants and at corporate/private parties. There are not many magicians who can truthfully make this claim.

The second part of the book: Mysteries, details nine of his effects, which illustrate clearly how his philosophy is put into practise.

This is a book that should be read very carefully by anybody, who seeks to entertain close-up, rather than just "do tricks". It is an important book and one from which we can all learn. Highly recommended.

"SPELLBINDER: SPECIAL ISSUE" Review by Al Smith. August 1982.

SPELLBINDER: SPECIAL ISSUE. Spiral bound book; 50 pages; 27 items. Price £6.00 (or £5.00 to regular Spellbinder subscribers). Available from the publisher, Stephen Tucker, 22 Bodmin Grove, Carr Mill, St Helens, Merseyside, WA11 9ST.

Editor/Publisher Tucker has acquired a knack of collecting an inordinate amount of highly usable magic, from a wide variety of sources — some familiar names ride side by side with less familiar names — and, even better, he also has an entertaining manner of presenting it to his readers. Sometimes abrasive, usually quite manic but always lucid and enthusiastic about his subject.

SPELLBINDER concerns itself with Close-Up Magic as a matter of policy and so SUMMER SPECIAL, quite naturally, presents the Close-Upper's stock in trade — tricks with coins, balls, cups, envelopes, cigarettes and (of course) cards. There is even a special section explaining five of Mr Tucker's previously marketed items, each of which sold individually for about £2.50. You will need a few gimmic's for these but nothing outlandish.

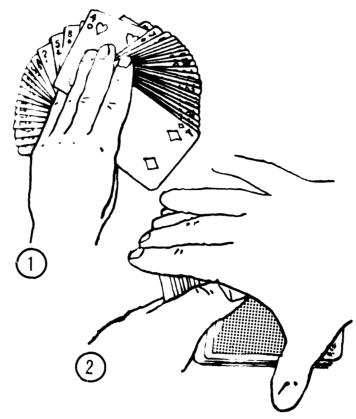

Conclusion: Plenty of material for the enthusiast, varying from easy to not-so-easy. SPELLBINDER: SPECIAL ISSUE is definately Value For Money. Close-Up fans will approve.

DOUBLE REPEAT TURNOVER

Ron Lashbrook

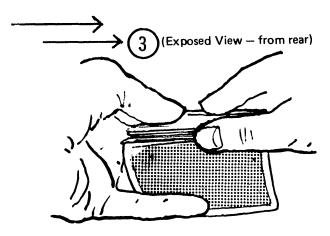

While playing around with a reversed card effect, Ron thought of a quick repeat, to use as a kicker. It can be utilised as a follow-up to any effect, where a card is discovered, face up, in a face down pack.

- 1) Fan the pack, face down, revealing the face up card in the centre.
- 2) Push upwards with the left little finger, on the back of the reversed card, forming a break, at that point.
- 3) Use the right hand to remove the reversed card from the pack, turn it face down and replace it. While doing so, the left little finger continues to push upwards, keeping a slight opening, at the place where the card was removed.
- 3) Replace the single card, in the right hand, back into the fan, at the point, where the little finger is pushing upwards. Push the card in, so that it comes in front of the left little finger as in Fig.1. (This is an exposed view, taken from below, looking directly upwards. From above, there is nothing suspicious to be seen).

4) Clip the card firmly between the left third and fourth fingers, while the right hand comes over the fan, as in Fig.2, as though to close it. The right second finger should be on the left hand side of the fan and the thumb on the right.

1075

- 5) As the fan closes, so the single card will be dragged from the pack by the left third and fourth fingers. As the fan is almost closed, the right second finger and thumb grip the opposite long side and lift the pack slightly. This will have the effect of rotating the single card face up and sliding it onto the bottom of the pack. Fig. 3 shows the action.
- 6) Square the pack, cut and complete the cut. Fan the cards once more, showing the reversed one in the centre.

BLOOMING ACESRichard M. Gamble

This is an unusual method of revealing the four aces, or any other four of a kind. It is a bit of a "knuckle buster" as David Roth would say and will take quite a lot of practise. Richard recommends that it be worked with the left hand, if you are normally right handed and vice versa.

To begin with, the pack is held in the left hand, in a dealing position. Three of the aces are face down, on top. The fourth is face up and is fourth from top, immediately beneath the face down aces. How you get the aces into this situation is your own problem. It will depend on how and when you wish to feature the flourish. You could set the stack, before you start and do a couple of tricks, which leave it in place. Then magically produce the aces, using the flourish. Another way, would be to openly place the aces into different parts of the pack and to control them to the top, by means of a multiple shift — this is Richard's preferred handling. The lowermost ace must then be secretly reversed.

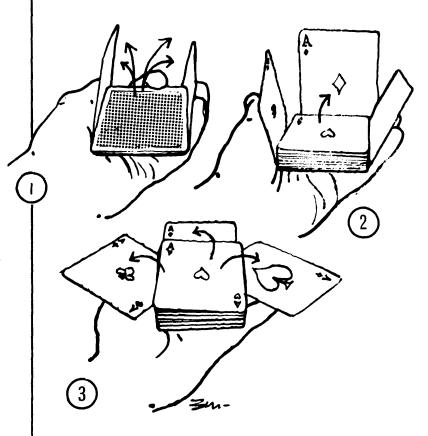

With the pack held, as just stated, begin by using the thumb to push the top card over to the right, for half an inch or so. Bring up the tip of the second finger, so that it can pull downwards, on the right hand corner of the top card, pivotting it into a vertical position, held between the finger and the side of the pack.

The tip of the thumb next comes to rest on the new top card and draws it to the left, until it can be pivotted into a vertical position, on the left of the pack. The two cards are now as shown in Fig.1.

Curl the forefinger over the outer short end of the pack (also shown in Fig.1) and draw the top card forward for about half an inch. A downwards pressure, from the forefinger, will cause the card to pivot into a vertical position as in Fig.2.

From Fig.2, the forefinger draws the card backwards, beneath the pack, using the lower edge as a fulcrum. It will be forced to turn face up and occupy a horizontal position. Similarly, the second finger and thumb draw their cards under the pack and into the positions shown in Fig.3. This is by no means easy. Considerable practise will be needed. When smoothly executed, the effect is rather like that of a flower opening out — hence the title.

boonf are wrightier than the fword

I have no idea of the correct date of this magazine, but at this moment we are about to celebrate the opening of a new year. 1983 that is. is. I thought I'd mention that fact because it doesn't tell you on the front cover.

The Pageboy's travelogue coming up. I was in Ireland recently, attending yet another magical shindig. I think in Ireland they call it a wake . . no I've got that wrong, they have a wake when somebody dies and at this shindig nobody died. It was one of the strangest conventions I have ever attended, everyone enjoyed themselves.

In the first evening I was reminded of Geoff Robinson who tried desperately hard to whip up some sort of enthusiastic response from I.B.Mers in his after banquet show with his singalongs and continuously comes up against what must appear to be a brick wall. In Ireland they don't have this problem. . . they want to join in and sing and they do. On that evening which was of an informal nature, there was probably more singing than magic and nobody cared. They were there to enjoy their convention and they did, right from the the word go. Everyone joined in, men women and children and me.

It was held in Limerick near Shannon Airport and although I had heard a well known dee jay mention the place several times on radio I never really believed there was a pub there called Dirty Nellie's, but but there is. I met many old friends, Paddy, Danny, Michael, Fanny . . sorry . . Frances Sean, . . . wait a minute I think there was one Fanny, yes I'm sure there was, and there was a delightful lady comedienne whose name I have forgotten who also sang traditional Irish folk/comedy songs.

I don't remember what I did. Some close-up maybe, a lecture demonstration and an act on the gala show. There were perhaps a hundred registrants at the convention and maybe four hundred at the gala show. Which means they pulled quite a chunk of people who were laymen. They were a great audience and I'd like to go back there one day.

One incident worth retelling. I was picked up in a car and delivered to the venue where the gala show was being held. My driver who shall remain nameless because I can't remember it it was something like Paddy O'Flynn or Mick Rafferty or some other non Irish sounding name dropped me at the front entrance of a tall building just as it was getting dark. He pointed at the door and said 'In there, anyone will tell you where to go'. In I went and as I went dozens of other people wenting in at the same time. There were perhaps a dozen wide steps and then large glass panelled doors. I walked in and there was a crowd standing around inside the door. Complete with my suitcase I sort of pushed my way through and eventually found myself perhaps a third of the way down the centre aisle of the local chapel.

For perhaps half a second I thought that maybe they were holding the show in a chapel and then I spotted the alter boys and beat a you know what in the other direction. The venue was next door. Now here's a funny thing. I found out that you could get into the hall from the chapel, but to this day I'm not sure whether I was misdirected by accident or design because I also found out that my driver was the local magic club comedian who was prone to 'accidents' of this nature. I hate him, but I do hope that one day they will ask me back again. Did I ever tell you that my paternal grandparents hailed from County Galway? They did.

I forgot to mention Hubert Lambert. I hadn't seen him for many years and if he could write as he speaks we would have another Shaw, Joyce or Behan on our hands. You are retired now Hubert. Take timeout and write something...anything.

Ventriloquist, Terri Rogers.

Effect

Performer shows a small pocket-book, approx the sixe of a pocket diary, He explains that the book contains photographs of dozens of villains.

Spectator freely chooses any one of the pictures without divulging it to the performer.

Performer now asks a few questians to which the spectator may, if he wishes, lie. Questians such as 'On which page is your chosen criminal to be found, 'what is his name' etc. The spectator may sometimes tell the truth, sometimes lie, as the fancy takes him, it makes no difference.

You now may look the spectator straight in the eye and dramatically tell him the name of his selected villain.

Please note these very important points:-

- 1/ Performer does not need to sight the book or see anything - indeed the whole trick could be performed over the telephone if you wish!
- 2/ Suitable for serious mentalists, close-up, comedy presentation of cabaret.
- 3/ Whatever villain the spectator freely choses, you can name it.
- Complete comedy script provided which you may use or adapt as you wish.
- 5/ Very easy to do. May be repeated as many times as you wish.
- 6/ Comes complete with beautifully produced book of "Mug Shots" approx $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches by $5\frac{1}{2}$ inches that slips easily into the pocket. Also supplied the complete patter, presentation, routine and handling, together with the "necessary" to perform right away.

Very highly recmmended. Send at once for your "Mug Shots" price £6.50 Catalogue no: - 421

Fig 1 Reversed Cards (10S) with "Mark" on Back.

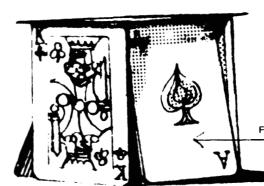

Fig 2 Push Here to demolish "House"

SPLASH

Jan Heins

EFFECT

The magus has just had a card selected, returned to the pack and is about to discover it, when a bird whistle is heard. The magician looks around, trying to locate the source of the whistle. Eventually he discovers a clockwork toy bird.

The performer uses the pack to construct a little birdhouse. However, when the bird is placed inside the house, the house falls apart but not before the bird has had time to "spot" the back of a card. When this card is turned over, it is seen to be the chosen one.

Requirements

A pack of cards with a duplicate of one. This can be any card so to save space we will call it the ten of spades. On the back of this card draw/paint an immitation bird dropping. Realistic ones can sometimes be obtained from novelty shops and glued on, if preferred.

Also needed is a bird warbler. This, if you do not already know, is a small device, which can with practise, enable a birdlike sound to be made, with no apparent movement, on the part of the performer. These are available from novelty shops for a few pence.

Finally, a small clockwork toy bird is necessary.

Preparation

Have the prepared, duplicate ten of spades reversed and second from the face of the pack. The real ten of spades is placed wherever you need it for your favourite force.

Have the bird somewhere, where it can be magically produced. Jan secretly loads it under a chop cup, after having performed that effect earlier on. He then leaves it there, until required. You can use any means that you like to produce it: from a draw box, at one end of the spectrum, to palming it and plucking it from beneath a spectator's coat, at the other. The means of introducing the bird are not important. You could just openly remove it from your close-up case. However, the more magical its appearance, the better.

The bird warbler is already in your mouth. It is so small that you can have it there for a long time, without it interfering with your normal speech.

Working and presentation

Bring out the pack and force the genuine ten of spades onto a spectator. Have it shown around, to make sure that everyone remembers it. Have it returned to the pack, which you now shuffle. During the shuffle, get rid of the bottom card, leaving the reversed ten of spades on the face of the pack. Take care not to flash this card, during the next few actions.

Remove the top three cards from the pack, secretly glimpsing their faces to make sure that the ten of spades is not amongst them. If it is, casually drop them back onto the pack and shuffle some more, leaving the bottom card in place. Then take three fresh cards.

When you are sure that the ten is not amongst them, drop the three cards, face up, onto the table.

Split the remainder of the pack into two roughly equal halves. The right hand should have the original top portion and the left the original bottom half (these have the reversed ten of spades on the bottom). Place the two packets onto the table as shown in Fig. 1. They are standing on their short ends and are angled so that the reversed card cannot be seen. All of the cards, with the exception of the prepared one, have their faces towards your right.

Pick up the three remaining cards and place them as shown in fig 2. They should have their faces outwards. It is quite easy to construct this little card "house" in just a few moments. To the audience it is intriguing and unusual.

Once the house has been completed, you will find that a gentle push with the right fingers, as indicated by the arrow, in fig. 2 will have the effect of causing the structure to collapse, leaving all of the cards face upwards, with the exception of the "spotted" one. This will be quite prominently visible.

The reader should, by now, be able to understand the mechanics of how the thing works. There remains only the presentation to be discussed.

While you are building the "house", use the bird warbler to make a chirping noise. Look puzzled and glance around the room in a quizzical manner, as though trying to locate the source of the noise. Try to avoid making any whistling type actions, with the lips.

When the house is completed, make the chirping louder and more persistent. Look up towards the ceiling as though following the flight of an imaginary bird. When you are in a position, which suggests that the bird is directly over your head, suddenly close one eye and rub it, as though the bird has chosen you as a target.

During the above action, you have ample opportunity to cop the toy bird and palm it ready for production from beneath a spectator's coat. Alternatively, if you are using some other device to produce the bird, you can do whatever get ready is required. If none is, then so much the better, just concentrate on acting the part of the bird's victim. Finally, with your eyes, follow the imaginary flight of the bird to the place, from where it will be produced and "discover" it.

Put the bird on the table and let it walk, flap its wings, peck or do whatever it does. If you can arrange matters so that, during this stage of the proceedings, the bird can, itself demolish the "house" so much the better. Most walking toys will be quite strong enough to push the house over, if pointed in the correct direction.

If your toy will not push the "house" down, simply pretend to try and put it into the house. As you do so, make screaming noises with the bird warbler and simulate a struggle between yourself and the bird. During this struggle, contrive to push over the "house".

As the house falls down and the "spotted" card is revealed, make some remark such as "Eh! He didn't miss!"

Assuming a disdainful look, gingerly withdraw the face down card. Turn it over and reveal that it is the chosen one.

Editorial

February, 1983

This morning, as I write, we are seeing the start of so called "Breakfast Television". Not that this matters in the least to me. I have not got and never have had, a television receiver. I do. however, feel a certain irritation, when the media pundits start calling things names like "Breakfast Television" or "A Book at Bedtime". Who are these people, I ask myself, who presume to tell me when I should have breakfast, or when I should be going to bed? I find their whole attitude rather patronising. Whether I have breakfast or not and whether or not I go to bed and what time, I choose to do these things, is my business. Certainly it is not that of any of the broadcasting authorities and I feel that they should respect this.

What has this got to do with magic, I presume you are asking? Although really it is none of my business, what you are asking. The short answer is, not a lot but, perhaps, there is some food for thought.

To a greater or lesser extent, we all need a certain amount of privacy. Some of us need more than others. We all object to the nosey parker; to the stranger, who stands too close, when addressing us; to the person, who is always touching us during a conversation. These people encroach on our privacy and we do not like it.

By the same token, few if any of us like to be patronised. We all dislike the person, who says, "I know just what your thinking." or "I can read you like a book." We dislike them because, when they make statements like that, they are to some extent inferring that they are our superiors; that they can observe us objectively and consequently have some sort of advantage over us.

Having said all of the above, it might be an idea to take a look at some of our magical presentations. How often do close-up magicians invade people's privacy in this way? How often do we find ourselves (quite unintentionally) patronising our audiences. Could it be that many of the people, who dislike magicians, do so because we have to stand too close, touch them excessively, ask often personal questions and presume to tell them what they are thinking? Perhaps not but, by the same token, do we pay enough attention to respecting the privacy of our audiences and assistants?

In Vol 7 No. 7, appeared a review of "Tips on Table Hopping" by Kirk Charles. For some reason or other, we missed out on saying where it is available and the cost. So, for the benefit of those, jumping about with impatience, waiting to get their order off, the stockist is Martin Breese and the price £5.50 plus postage (about 40p*U.K.)

On the subject of Martin Breese: I have just had a letter from him, requesting that I mention that "Spellbinder Special Issue Two" (reviewed by Al Smith in the last Pabular) is published by him and can be obtained from The Magic Lounge, 31, Richmond Way, London W.14.

One of the joys of being a magazine editor is all the freebies that arrive, for review, from different dealers. Another joy, is to note that a large number of these take the form of books by young British magicians. Many of them are really first rate. Back in the sixties and early seventies of most of the best material published there was little or nothing being produced in this country. There were Roy Walton, Peter Kane and a few others putting out top class close-up. They were, however, the exceptions, who proved the rule. In the last eight years or so, a whole new army of clever, young ideas men and technicians seem to have sprung up from nowhere. Many of them are publishing really first rate stuff. Let us try, in 1983, to give them the help and encouragement they deserve.

On the subject of giving British closeuppers a chance to be seen, it is pleasing to note that Blackpool has lined up a strong contingent this year. This society has provided a good showcase for U.K. table workers over the years, which, when you take into account the size and budget of their convention, is a brave decision. They could easily book a string of "safe" international big names. Instead, they usually book a selection of up and coming, or established but rarely seen talent. This year their line up includes Janet Clare, Harry Nicholls, Ken Hawes, Walt Maddison, Mo Howarth and Jack Henderson. I have not seen Jack working for some fifteen years and it is even longer than that since I last watched Walt Maddison doing anything. He was one of the people, who made a real impression on me, when I first attended a convention. I shall be eagerly watching to see what he looks like twenty years on!

* * * * * *

Being a children's entertainer by profession and a close-upper by inclination, I have often wondered quite why so much close-up magic is adult orientated. Frequently, when I go to a birthday party, I find an audience of less than ten children. This is a situation where, on the face of it, there would seem to be a lot of sense in putting aside the dove pans and the die boxes and doing a few smaller items. I have never tried it myself and would have to admit that most of my close up effects would be too complex for a small child to understand. Is this the reason why nobody bothers? Is there a dearth of children's close-up? Or could it be that there are a few people around, who are successfully working this type of magic for small audiences of the young. I would be delighted to hear from anybody, who has practical experience of this sort of thing.

I have a sneaking feeling that perhaps this type of magic may not in fact be colourful/action packed enough for children. I should love to be reassured that such is not the case.

HUMAN ERROR

David Hawkins

I thought that Pabular readers may be interested in a little gag, which I have been using with some success. I have not seen it written or performed, elsewhere.

The magician introduces a pocket calculator, and states that it is endowed with the amazing ability to read people's thoughts. To prove the point, a spectator is invited to take a card, from a shuffled pack. He is then requested to look at and memorise it.

The calculator is switched on and placed against the person's forehead — to catch his thought waves.

A few seconds later, the spectator is invited to press a key, on the calculator and reveal the "reading". The calculator display prints out "YOUR CARD WAS THE 6 OF CLUBS." The spectator denies that this was the case. The magician mentions that, sometimes, the calculator's psychic powers misfire. The spectator is again requested to press the button. This time, the calculator admits defeat with a message such as "OH! SOD IT!"

The.type of calculator required to perform this masterpiece(!) is known as a PRO-GRAMMABLE ALPHA-NUMERIC model. I use the Casio FX601-P. With this type of calculator, it is possible to program, into the memory, a message of both numbers and letters. There are several such models on the market.

I have programmed my calculator so that, when one button (Print Out Button) is pressed, the calculator will print out "Your Card Was the 6 Of Clubs." It will then pause for five seconds, before changing the message to "Oh! Sod It!" The five second pause, between messages, is most important. It allows for the odd occasion, when the spectator has actually chosen the six of clubs. When this happens, simply switch off the calculator, before the second message appears. You will have performed a perfect miracle.

Editorial Note

As many readers will know; in recent years there have been several ideas published, based on using the memory facility of a calculator, to cause it to "work out" a predetermined number, either as a force or a divination. I think that this version has two strong points, which make it well worth attention. One is the humourous element, the other is the chance that, once in a while, you can bring off a miracle.

REPEAT BLUFF SANDWICH

PAUL HALLAS

This is a variation on and extension of Marlo's "Bluff Sandwich" which can be found in "The Last Hierophant" page 62.

EFFECT:

Two red kings are placed face up on top of a face down pack. A card is chosen, signed by the spectator, and returned to the centre of the pack. The pack is now riffled, and the chosen card is found to be between the two red kings. The red kings are placed on one side and the selection is turned face down and shuffled into the pack. After riffling the cards again, the performer shows that the signed selection is between the two red kings once more!

WORKING:

Remove the two red kings and place them face up on top of the face down pack. As you do so, obtain a break under the third card from the top (the old top card). While doing this you say "I've put the two red kings on top so you can keep your eye on them, I'm going to use them later!"

Your right hand grips all three cards at front and rear edge and you peel the top king onto the pack. The other two cards go on top of it. It looks as if you have just shown the two kings again. As you show them in this way you ask "Do you know what's different about these two kings? Well, I'll tell you, they are face up, while the rest of the pack are face down". Fan the cards to show the rest of the pack face down, then square up. You have place an indifferent card between the two kings secretly.

You now commence to riffle down the corner of the pack and request the spectator to say "Stop" at any time. When he does so, you cut the pack at that point and thumb off the top card of the lower half. Replace the top half of the pack and hand the spectator your pen, asking him to autograph the card across the face for you.

When he has done so you again riffle the corner of the cards until he tells you to stop. This time, however, you perform the "Bluff Pass", and only remove the top king. He replaces the card, and you put the king back. He thinks the card is in the centre of the pack.

Holding the cards from above with the right hand you allow them to dribble into the left hand saying, "Your card is somewhere amongst these". Quit dribbling before you reach the top six or seven cards and square up the pack. "Watch", you say, and riffle the pack. Remove the top four cards together and table the pack. Show the packet both sides and then hold it face up as if you are about to "Glide", saying, "I hope you didn't take your eyes off the two kings in all the excitement". The left fingers reach under the packet and draw the bottom king into view, and then push the top king slightly to reveal a face down card trapped between them (Really there are two face down cards there). The bottom king is pushed back to it's original position. You now transfer the cards from one hand to the other, and as you push the top king back into place the forefinger slides the face down card forward. While doing this you say, "Some people say it's inertia that does this when I riffle the cards, but I assure you it's me. Oh, by the way, what was the card you autographed?" When he names his card, which is now projecting from the packet, you remove it and turn it face up. Place the face up kings (which still have an indifferent card between them) on the table to one side.

Apparently lose the selected card into the pack but control it to the top again. Say, "Watch", and riffle the cards again. Still holding the cards in the left hand, the right hand picks up the kings from the table and spreads them to reveal the face down card. The right hand holding the three cards moves across to the pack and the left thumb draws the face down card on to the top of the pack as you say to the spectator, "You know what the card is don't you?" and you drop the two face up kings onto the table. Because you made his card appear between the two kings just a moment ago he will name his card. You double lift to prove him correct and bring the effect to its predictable but startling conclusion.

This effect is more effective if the card is signed. I did it originally without the signature and eventually the suggestion of a duplicate card was brought up.

THE MAGICIAN'S FOUR ACES

Alf Goodwin

This will not be everybody's type of magic. Fake cards have to be constructed and these will need to be cleanly and neatly made. Those, who do take the trouble to manufacture the necessary items, will have an effect, which will cause considerable consternation amongst their peers.

EFFECT

The basic effect is that of the standard four ace assembly.

Requirements

- 1. A fake ace of diamonds/four of spades as shown in fig 1. To make this, peel the index off a genuine ace of diamonds and glue it onto a four of Spades.
- 2. Take an ace of clubs and, to the back of it, glue the indexes of three other cards, as shown in fig 2. These should have been peeled from other cards via the dry split method.

Set Up

The four aces are on top of the pack, face down. The ace of clubs, with the faked back (fig 2) is in third position from top. The glued on indexes are at the inner right corner.

Immediately below the aces is the faked ace of diamonds/four of spades. The fakes AD index is at the inner left corner and the card is face down.

Working/presentation

Start with the pack face down in the left hand. Use the left thumb to push the top four cards over to the right, in a small spread/fan. Do not spread the cards widely, or you may risk exposing the faked back of the ace of clubs.

Take the aces into the right hand and display their faces, while the left fourth finger obtains a break below the top three cards of the pack.

Once the left fourth finger has a break, drop the four aces, face up on top of the face down pack, while the right hand makes some natural gesture, such as moving an object on the table, to make room for the cards.

Square up the aces and lift them, with the right hand, by the short ends. The hand is above the cards, with the fingers at the outer end and the thumb at the inner. Lift the three cards, which are above the little finger break, along with the aces, keeping the seven cards neatly squared as four.

This is all standard procedure and, although it may fool some laymen, all of the magicians watching will know exactly what you are up to.

You now execute the standard add on move. That is to say that the left thumb draws the ace, from the face of the right hand's packet and onto the top of the pack. Simultaneously the right hand moves upwards, causing the card to flip face down (see fig 3).

This procedure is repeated with the next ace and, strange as it may seem, with the ace of clubs. You will find that, with a little practise the ace of clubs can be flipped face down, in this manner, without exposing the faked back. Timing is important. As soon as the ace begins to turn face down, drop the remainder of the right hand's cards on top of it and, immediately flip the last ace face down.

The above is a standard add on procedure, which is well known to anybody after a few weeks in card magic. The only reason for describing it here, is so that you will realise exactly what is required. Had we simply said "use the standard add on" some confusion might have arisen, due to one of the cards having a doctored back. However, as a few trials will show, provided that the movement is kept reasonably compact, it works perfectly. Magicians of course, will not be watching too closely, anyway. They will think that they are ahead of you and will "see" the backs of all the cards.

Deal the top four cards (supposedly the aces) onto the table in a square as in fig 4. The first card, which is an ace, goes at A. The second at D and so on, in an anti-clockwise direction, until B is reached.

The left thumb pushes off the top three cards, as a small fan, into the right hand. Do not spread the fan too wide, as the faked ace of clubs is the centre one. The doctored portion will still be at the inner right corner, provided that the cards have not been turned end over end at any point.

Obviously you cannot show the faces of these cards, as they are all aces. Simply drop them face down on the ace at A.

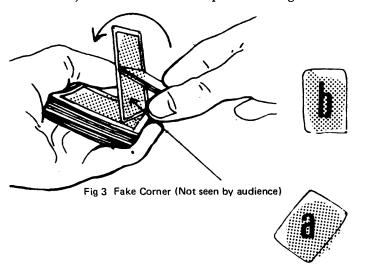

In a similar manner, place three cards on the supposed aces at B and C. Also, do the same with the faked ace of diamonds/four of spades, which is at D. You can show all of these cards a little more freely.

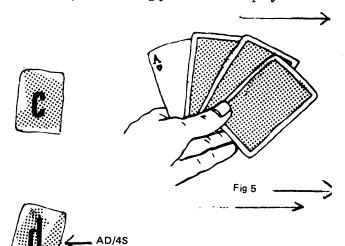

So far, most magicians will think that they know exactly what you have done. This complacency, will have served to misdirect them from the fact you have slipped in a couple of faked cards.

Pick up packet A and say, "Do you know which ace this is?" Take it into the right hand, face down. Pull out the lowermost card, turn it face up and replace it on the bottom. Fan the cards as in fig 5, exposing the backs of the cards, as much as possible, without showing the fake. In this way, show the ace.

Close the fan, then casually remark, "Perhaps you would like to remember the rest of the cards as well!" Do the Francis Carlyle turnover (as used with a business card), which for the benefit of those, who do not know it, will be described at the end.

When the packet has apparently been turned over, it is seemingly fanned to display the other three cards. In fact the packet is kept square and the top card moved aside, in three short steps. The situation will be that depicted in fig 6. The false indexes will be seen and taken for the indifferent cards. Do not hold this position too long; just long enough for the magicians, who think that they have been following you, to start getting a little agitated. After all, they were sure that the packet contained the aces (which it does). Now they are not so sure. In fact they "know" that it does not. They will be beginning to realise that they were not quite so far ahead of you as they had thought and will start to wonder if the whole business of the add on move was just a bluff. In other words, you have got them on the run, now to keep them running.

THE MAGICIAN'S FOUR ACES - Alf Goodwin

Close the "fan". Repeat the Carlyle turnover, to apparently reverse the packet. Remove the face up ace from the bottom, turn it face down, replace it and table the packet.

Pick up packet B. Spread off the top three cards and turn them face up, in a fan. Hold them in the right hand and fan the face down card, in the left. After a few moments, turn the supposed ace face up and show that it has gone.

Do exactly the same thing with packet C, vanishing the "ace" as just described.

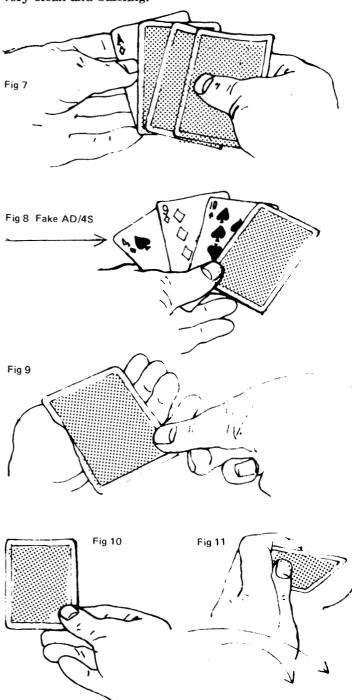

For the fourth packet, the procedure is very subtle. Pick up the top three cards of the tabled pile, with the right hand. Hold them from above, fingers at the outer short end and thumb at the inner. Secure a break, beneath the top card, with the tip of the right thumb.

Gesture towards the face down card, on the table. This is the one which has the fake index, ace of diamonds/four of clubs. Say, "Can you guess, which this one is?" As you focus attention onto the tabled card, so the two hands come together and you half pass or secretly reverse the two bottom cards of the packet. This move, done when attention is away from your hands, is very easy.

Pick up the tabled card and place if face down, on the bottom of the apparently face down packet. The two centre cards of the packet will in fact be face up, at this stage.

Turn the bottom card face up. Do this by sliding it very slightly to the left and taking it by the centre of the projecting long side, between the left fingers (on top) and the thumb (below). Turn it face up, rapidly, end over end as in fig 7. Finish up as shown in the picture, with the ace of diamonds index just visible to the audience.

Square up the packet and say, "Perhaps you would like to see the other cards as well." Execute the Carlyle turnover, with the whole packet. Fan the cards as in fig 8. Remove the face down, apparent ace, fan it with the other cards and turn it face up. The ace of diamonds has apparently vanished. This particular vanish is very clean and baffling.

Finally, pick up the packet at A. Turn it face up and show the four aces. Hold the cards in a fan, which conceals the fakes back of the ace of clubs and show all round.

The Carlyle Turnover

This will be very briefly described for completeness' sake. Hold a packet of cards, face down, in the right hand hand, as in fig 9. They are gripped by the inner right corner, between the thumb and first finger.

The left hand comes up and grips the cards, as in fig 10. They are taken between, the second and third fingers, along the right hand and the base of the thumb, at the left. The thumb, itself, goes beneath the packet.

The right hand, relinquishes its grip. The left thumb, moves upwards causing the cards to pivot on their right long side, until they are held firmly against the second and third fingers. At exactly the same time, the left hand turns back upwards, from the wrist as in fig 11. The larger movement of the hand, masks the smaller movement of the packet. When the fig 11 position is reached, the right hand retakes the packet. The whole thing works rather like the paddle move. An optical illusion is created, of the packet being turned around, when in fact it remains the same way up.

For a more detailed description of the move, see Bruce Elliott's "Classic Secrets of Magic" chapter 4.

REVIEW - BY AL SMITH

MIKE BORNSTEIN'S "TRIUMPH OUTDONE", Written by Walt Lees, illustrated by Eric Mason. Soft Covers, 56 pages. Ten effects on the Triumph Theme, and an extra "bonus" chapter non-Triumph ideas. Price £3.25 post paid (overseas extra) available from Walt Lees.

Magicians who grumble every time "yet another card book" puts in an appearance, will no doubt really go to town on this one, since, not only is it a card book, but the main content is confined to just a single effect! This effect is Dai Vernon's Triumph — a brief description of which follows for the benefit of anyone not familiar with the notion.

Triumph is basically an effect in which a deck of cards is split in half, and riffle shuffled.

However immediately prior to the shuffle, one half is turned face-up, whilst the other half is left face-down. Minus any cheating, the resultant mixture is a deck consisting of face-up and facedown cards thoroughly enmeshed. A few magic words (or similar) soon puts everything to rights. and, without any apparent effort on the part of the performer, the deck magically untangles itself, and the cards are seen to be all facing the same way — just as they were before the riffle shuffle. Usually to embellish this ground-floor effect, a selected card (or cards) is seen to be the only one still facing the wrong way. Sometimes it's not a selected card, but the four aces or kings, or queens, or a poker hand or well, the endings are almost limitless. Suffice to say, the face-up/face-down mix and the subsequent correction are a sub-plot in a larger tableau.

Returning to the Bornstein book, the foregoing is what we have here. As mentioned already, no less than ten variations of Triumph are offered. All require basic card handling ability, and most require familiarity with the basic Triumph approach: Pull Through and Strip Out False Riffle Shuffles. Interestingly none feature the currently popular Shank or Zarrow Shuffles. References are given to assist anyone not at ease with these techniques.

All the effects are eminently practical, mostly of an impromptu, or nearly impromptu nature. Some of the effects, I felt, suffered a little from over-handling, the best example of this being perhaps the first item in the book — "Topsy Turvey Aces". An awful lot of unnecessary proving precedes the main event. This first trick introduces the "M.B. SHIFT", and sets the trend for the rest of the book. The basic effect is there, alongside the style and quality of handling required. Description of individual effects is really superfluous, since our earlier resume really covered the main outline.

The "M.B. SHIFT" rears its head in most of the routines, but is not, as the title perhaps suggests, a version of the Pass or even a Multiple Shift. Rather, it is a subtle, and quite easy, transfer of a card or cards from on half-deck to another.

One of Triumph's most recent additions, the Daryl Martinez "Puerto-Rican Display" pops up a couple of times, but, surprisingly without credit. As most cardmen will attest, the Display is quite strong, and anyone inventing the move would be quick to claim credit (although Martinez was a bit slow doing so). In this instance, no such claim is made, and, in fact no mention of origin is offered. For a book that is really quite strong on credit-lines, this is an interesting omission.

The "Bonus" section of the book is a quartet of unrelated ideas. Quite why it has been added to a book whose very title details the general contents is unclear. The One-Hand Multiple Card Palm is not something anyone will learn in five minutes, but is worthy of study. The same goes for a version of the interlocked fingers card production — a trifle out of place in what is a Close-Up book. 'Your Favourite Ace' is actually a coin trick of the Matrix variety, but highlights an Okito-type Boston Box. Strong stuff, but your classic palm needs to be up to scratch. The Okito Box is a natural for Matrix, but so far has not been overused. The best idea in the book is the "Vanishing Deck". The title says it all. It's the kind of thing magicians love to read, but will hesitate to use, preferring to wait for someone else to fool them with it. Some publishers, I feel sure, would have put this idea out in expanded format in a single booklet — and not without some justification. Here, though, it's almost thrown away.

At the price the book is very good value, but a lot depends, of course, on how interested the reader is in Triumph. Card Nuts will devour it anyway, whatever the content, in the never ending search for new ideas. Clearly written text from Walt Lees, fine illustrations from (Pabular's own) Eric Mason, and, overall, strong card magic make for a good production. Triumph outdone? Perhaps. But the Vanishing Deck gets the real first prize. Verdict: Recommended, but with the reservations already hinted at and actually quoted.

Review

The New York Magic Symposium. Close-Up Collection One. Written and illustrated by Richard Kaufman. Price 20 dollars plus 3.50 dollars for foreign orders or 1.50 U.S. Available from New York Magic Symposium, P.O.Box 169, Rockville Centre, New York 11571 or various dealers.

How does this Kaufman do it? Over the last few years, he has continually bombarded the fraternity with a seemingly endless succession of top quality material, beautifully written, illustrated and presented at very reasonable prices. He must either be a superman, or completely insane.

This roughly hundred page book, with its imposing hard, black and silver covers, contains some twenty six items, by a list of contributors that reads like a who's who of magic.

The contributors, to part one of the book, were all star performers booked for the Premier

New York Magic Symposium, held in August 1982. To these have been added a list of big name guest contributors, making up part two.

The whole thing reads like a sort of up to date "Stars of Magic" (the complete bound volume). It is packed with brilliant, innovative, material. I am not going to mention any of the individual ideas or presentations. If I had to single out one favourite item, I could not. They are all so good that the reader is spoilt for choice.

One wonders how long Kaufman is going to be able to keep up this constant stream of both quality and quantity. In the meantime, buy this book, if you like good magic and value for money. Highly recommended.

Geoffrey Williams' "Two Ring Linking Ring Routine" Published by J & D Enterprises 23145 Bigler Street, Woodland Hills CA 91364 U.S.A. Available from Martin Breese Ltd. 31, Richmond Way, Hammersmith, London W.14. Price £4.25 post paid in U.K.

This is a small book of some twelve typeset pages. It is nicely produced and well illustrated by David Grenewetzki.

Strictly speaking, although only two rings—a single and a key—are used for the routine, it is really a three ring presentation. The third ring being the performer's wristwatch, which somehow becomes embroiled in the actions. The presentation is a comedy one and for larger audiences, there is a bonus section, which consists of linking a ring onto the microphone cable, by cutting and restoring the latter.

Whilst not everybody's cup of tea, this is an off beat, commercial routine, which has obviously been thoroughly audience tested. I could see somebody like Bob Read getting a lot of mileage out of it.

Roxy

When Roxy first sent me details of this effect, the method seemed so simple that I felt sure that it must have been in print before. Perhaps it has but, if so, I am unable to find it. Certainly it was new to me and no doubt will be to many other readers (if not all).

Prediction

EFFECT

Four envelopes are introduced and laid on the table, in a row. A fifth envelope, wallet or whatever, is said to contain a prediction. This is left in full view and need not be touched by the performer again.

A spectator rolls a die and the performer openly counts to whichever envelope falls at the number thrown. This envelope is opened by the spectator, who finds that it contains half of a torn playing card. The spectator then opens the prediction and finds, inside, the other half of the same card. The other envelopes can be shown to contain completely different cards.

Requirements

- Five envelopes
- Four playing cards
- A die

Preparation

Cut or tear the playing cards in half. If you decide to cut them do so with a jagged edge, like that shown in the illustrations.

Select one of the cards (say the five of diamonds) and place one half in the prediction envelope. The other half is placed in one of the remaining envelopes. Mark this envelope in some way, so that you will recognise it.

Into the remaining three envelopes, place one of the other half cards; a different one in each.

Have the die handy and you are ready to go.

Working & Presentation

Remove the prediction envelope and lay it on the table, to one side. The remaining envelopes are laid out as in fig. 1. The one with the card, matching the prediction is second from the left.

The spectator rolls the die. Regardless of what number it shows, the required envelope is forced:—

Spectator throws a two Count from left to right as in fig 5.

This just leaves the numbers one and four. When either of these numbers turn up, say that, as you can see the number on the top of the die, it would be better if the spectator were to look at the number on the bottom. In this way, you will not know the number, until the last possible moment, thereby prevent any opportunity for chicanary! The spectator will thus be compelled to choose either one (if a six were thrown) or three (if a four were thrown). Either of these can be dealt with as above.

WALLET - WITH DRESSING

Mo Howarth

This routine is going to send shivers down the spines of many close-up workers, who will cringe at the idea of using brightly coloured ribbon and two large bulldog clips, to dress up a Card in Wallet. Rest assured, however, that in a cabaret, dinner or standing close-up situation, it adds a great deal to the usual effect.

Requirements

- 1. The Wallet. This should be of the type shown in the illustrations and not of the smaller "hip pocket" variety. Also, it needs to have an internal zip fastener, which opens directly into the innermost compartment. This type of wallet is very common in the U.K.
- 2. Two large bulldog clips. The longer they are, the better.
- 3. A piece of brightly coloured ribbon, about two inches wide and three yards long.
- 4. A pack of cards and a pencil or pen, which will write upon the face of a playing card.
- 5. A smal piece of thin dowel (wooden meat skewer)

Preparation

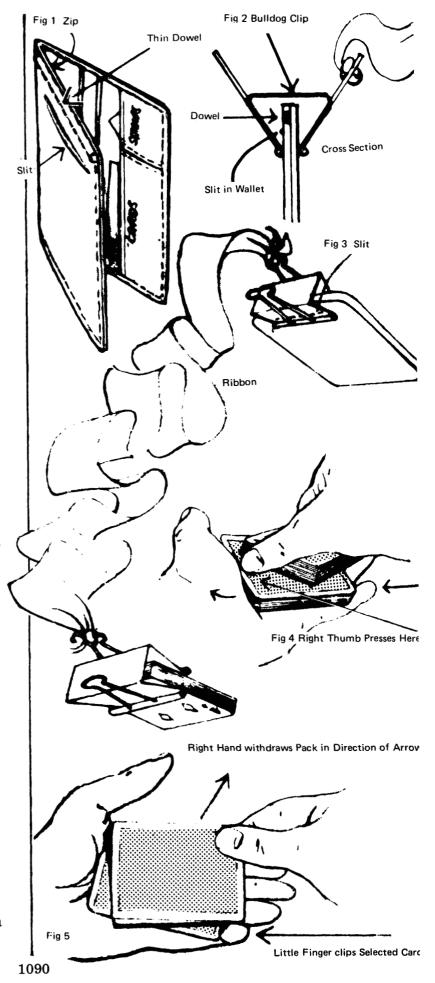

1. The wallet. Using a sharp knife, cut a slit in the wallet, like that in fig 1. The slit should be sufficiently wide to admit a playing card. It should be about ¾ inch from the end of the wallet, so that, when the bulldog clip is placed over the latter, as in fig 2, the slit will be held closed and concealed.

It is best, when cutting the slit, to place a piece of heavy card or thin wood inside, to ensure that only one surface is mutilated.

Having made the slit, cut and insert the dowel into the upper end of the wallet as in fig 2. This will help retain the clip in place, during the handling and prevent it from riding off the end.

The wallet is placed in the inside coat pocket, in whichever position you find it easiest to insert a palmed playing card, through the slit. Some prefer the slit to be towards the body, others manage better when it faces the opposite way.

2. The Clips and Ribbon. Tie, sew or otherwise secure the ends of the ribbon to the "handles" of the clips as in fig 3. Place these in a convenient pocket. Finally have the cards and pencil somewhere handy.

Presenting

THE RAMSAY FINALE

by Andrew Galloway

Author of THE RAMSAY LEGEND and THE RAMSAY CLASSICS

The Definitive Magic of John Ramsay

This book completes the Ramsay Trilogy and contains a wealth of unpublished material for stage or close-up presentation.

STAGE MAGIC

Cornedy Billiard Ball Routine — A sequence of subtle moves make up and entertaining plot devoid of complicated passes.

Paper to Ribbons — The impressive climax to Ramsay's platform act where the Torn and Restored Strip of Paper progresses to the bare hand production of coloured streamers and silver ribbon.

Five Fly Cards — A novel version of the Cards to Pocket where the ingenious method does most of the work.

Miser's Dream - This routine for the old classic has Ramsay's skilful Back and Front Palm.

Also

Ramsay on the Real Secrets - The master's comments on misdirection, technique and practice.

Ramsay Reminiscences - He recalls the great magicians and entertainers he saw over a period of more than seventy years from Charlier and Chapender to Vernon and Slydini.

CLOSE-UP MAGIC

Original Five Thimble Production -His favourite thimble production which baffled Horace Goldin.

Six Card Repeat — An amusing routine which has a typical Ramsay 'twist in the tail'

The Forgotten Card Trick — A clean and clever effect which is virtually self-working.

Coin Acquitment - For years magicians tried in vain to re-construct this brilliant manoeuvre.

The Changeling - Ramsay's handling of Spellbound and the only item in the book to have previously appeared in print, in a magazine. It has been re-illustrated and included here for completeness sake.

Ring Off Rope — A simple, but effective, release of a large ring tied on a length of rope.

Twelve Chapters of Superb Magic and invaluable information — Beautifully produced on art paper. Eighty-six large 8" x 10" pages. Illustrated with 150 clear line drawings and many unpublished photographs. Cloth bound with gold titled spine and coloured pictorial dust jacket. Limited number of de-luxe leather-bound copies available.

Working & Presentation

Have a card selected by a spectator, marked returned to the pack, shuffled in and secretly stolen and bottom palmed, in the left hand (a method of doing this, if you do not already have one, will be described at the end of this explanation.)

Carry out the above actions, as you hand out the pack for shuffling. Hand it to a lady nearby. Reach into the inside pocket, with the left hand, loading the card into the wallet and removing the latter and bringing it into view.

Hold it up, while the other hand obtains the clips and ribbon. Place one clip over the wallet, covering the slit as in fig 2. You can now either place the wallet on the floor, or else allow it to dangle over your shoulder, while you clip the other bulldog clip around the pack, as in fig 3.

Have the lady keep a hold of the pack, while you indulge in a pretence of passing the card along the ribbon. You are at the wallet end of the ribbon — holding the ribbon, not the wallet.

Unclip the wallet from the ribbon. Open it and unzip the inner compartment. Partially pull out the card and allow the lady to remove it completely.

Some byplay here, as you both try to read the signature. Finally have the lady hand the card to the gentleman for verification.

* * * * * * *

Here is a brief description of the method. which Mo Howarth uses to steal the card. He learned it from Gus Southall, some years ago.

The cards are held as in fig 4. The selected card is returned to the top of the lower half, by the spectator.

As the right hand replaces the top half, so the ball of the right thumb touches the selected card, near the inner right corner, pivotting it against the base of the left thumb, causing the outer end of the card to swivel slightly to the right.

The tip of the left fourth finger is next curled upward a little, clipping the card by pressure against the base of the thumb as in fig 5. The right hand, meanwhile, alters its grip to that shown in fig 5 and withdraws the pack. The selected card remains behind, in the left hand, in a classic palm, ready for loading into the wallet.

Question. What is your favourite card trick? Second question. What is your favourite close-up trick? I suppose most performers would answer these questions by naming the effects which they perform most often. In my case it would probably be The Ambitious Card Trick and The Coins Through Table. My reason for using those two effects more than any others is that neither of them require any preparation and each can be done any time, anywhere, and under any conditions. In short, they can be performed impromptu.

Another favourite of mine is The Sponge Ball Trick, but this is not top of my list because, like many other really good effects, it comes under the category of 'if you haven't got them with you you can't do it'.

Although I have always considered the average magic buff to be a little old fashioned and conservative in their approach to magic, it is surprising how fashions and fancies have changed. I remember many years ago one of the magic magazines used to conduct an annual poll trying to discover the five bets card tricks and Paul Curry's Out of This World was always up there in the ratings. To my mind it is still the greatest card trick of all time, but I wonder how many magicians still use it.

The Card Stab is another effect that is rarely seen these days. I wonder why. There are many many other effects which come under the 'rarely seen' category these days. The Three Shell Game. Thirty years ago I can remember every other magician seemed to be doing this effect and now I haven't seen it for years. I wonder why? We could go on and on like this but let's stop there for a moment. Is there a reason why?

Perhaps we may find an answer to this question if we look at methods more than effects. There is no doubt in my mind that the average magician is more interested in the method than he is in the effect. Perhaps it is the advent of all the new methods which are around today which has changed the choice of effects. In the realm of card magic perhaps the Elmsley Count with all its variations, ditto with the Ascanio Spread and many other modern sleights. When I first started doing card tricks everyone used to be talking about the One Hand Top Palm, the Buckley Double Undercut, plus of course the old standards, the force, the pass the top change. Has the advent of the new sleights taught us new effects? I am not sure. If we switch from card tricks to close-up tricks what do we find? Yes there are a lot of new coin sleights. In the old days you could palm a coin, you could switch a coin, and not much more. Today they seem to be doing everything with coins. Bobo's Coin Magic was a revelation when it was first published. In there we had all the coin tricks everyone ever knew. Included within its pages were all the gimmicked coins, the gadgets, the tricked up devices for doing varous effects. Today many of those trick coins are still being sold with many many improvements but have we found any really new coin effects that weren't being done thirty or forty years ago? I don't know either.

I have already stated my choice of card and close-up tricks, and I have named them because they are the ones I use most. But if someone were to ask me the effect which impressed me more than any other then I have to go back to 1966 and the very first time I visited the United States. The man who performed the effect was Heba Haba Al in a bar called The New York Lounge in Chicago. I was in Glasgow a couple of days ago and Gordon Bruce mentioned Heba Haba Al and some of the effects he performs and we had a long discussion about Al's Sugar Cube trick. That's it folks, I have just named my favourite close-up trick of all time. The Sugar Cube Trick. There is one proviso. It has to be Heba Haba Al performing it. With a pencil, a sugar cube and a glass of water this man created not a miracle but a sensation. I have never ever in my life seen anyone create the kind of havoc that this guy does in The New York Lounge in Chicago. He has women laughing, men laughing, he has them screaming he has them jumping with surprise, you name the reaction, he gets it. That's it folks you've got it all now - the Pageboy's Favourite Close-up Trick, cards or otherwise, Heba Haba Al performing The Sugar Cube Trick. What's yours?

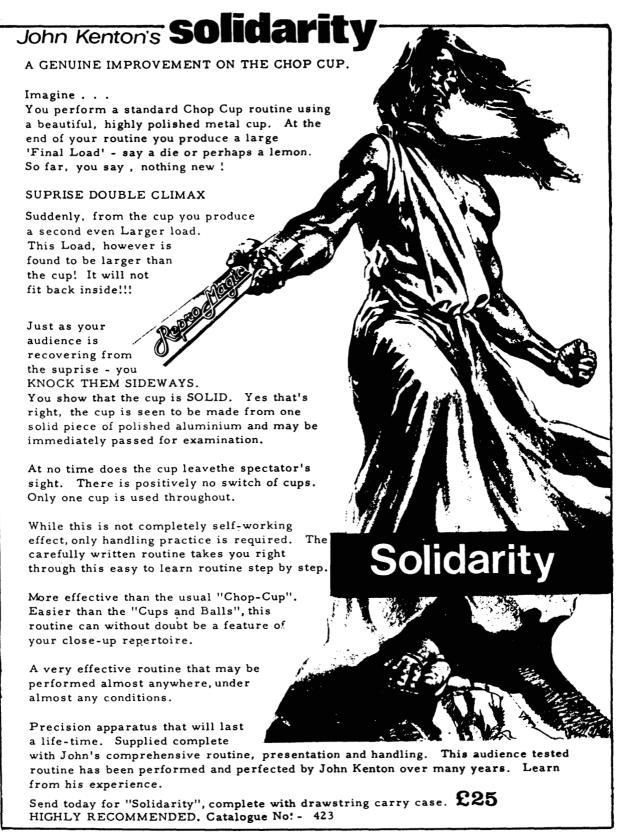

Goodbye, Patrick Page

The Amazing Karroll of Hollywood very kindly gave us permission to reprint his Amazing book which details the method used by KUDA BUX for his Sightless Vision Act. Eric Mason has redesigned the book in his usual brilliant style and we have printed it on a fine Parchmarque Paper which gives it that very exclusive look. Only 500 copies have been printed in this edition and the book is for the working performer who really wants to learn the art of sightless vision; it is also for the collector who appreciates the value of beautifully printed books.

Tricks in which objects apparently move for no apparent reason, are always attention grabbing. In this little quickie by Barrie, the object which becomes animated is a humble key.

It is recommended that the effect be performed as a scientific curiosity — not as a simple bar stunt. In this way, it can be very strong indeed.

Presentation

"A few years ago, I visited the Munich Museum of Science and Industry. They had a display of metals, which had characteristics that were, to this date, inexplicable to contemporary scientists. One of these metals behaved in an extraordinary — almost spooky — fashion, if the molecules were very slightly heated.

"Here is a key that has been fashioned from this unique material. The metal responds to my particular body temperature. Watch this!"

The performer places the key upon his open right palm. Very slowly it turns over (this is an old stunt but one which makes a good prelude to what follows). Next the key is placed on the centre of the palm. Slowly it begins to move against gravity.

There are no strings, wires or magnets to be seen. At the finish, the key can be placed upon the table and left for examination.

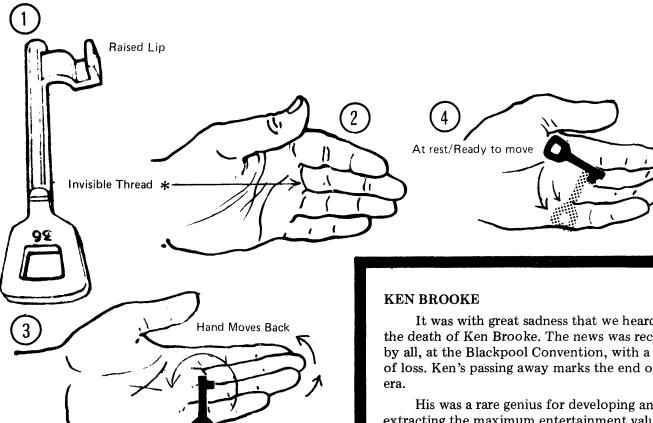

Requirements

The key. Although this is not faked in any way it is a special one. It looks like a skeleton key, insofar as the face is blank. There is, however, a raised lip as shown in the illustration (fig 1). These keys are, apparently, quite common in some European countries, notably Germany. If you are unable to find one, no doubt a suitable blank key could be obtained from a key cutter and adapted. The overall length of the key should be about 3 inches.

Invisible thread. A small loop of this is used. It is tied around the second finger, about as tightly as a ring might be worn. The thread generally on sale in the U.S.A. is better than that obtainable from British sewing shops (although some British magic dealers can supply thread of a better quality). However, Barrie does sometimes make use of the thread available in British department stores. His preferred brand in the U.S. is Clark's Transparent Nylon Thread.

Preparation

Tie a small piece of the thread around the left second finger, as in fig 2. It should be about as tightly fitting as a normal finger ring and should lie in the crease of the lowermost finger joint. This will help to hide it. In this position, it is almost impossible to see the thread, even if you know where to look.

Working

As was mentioned earlier, the turning over of the key is an age old stunt. Most readers should be familiar with it. For those, who are not, simply place any key on your hand as in fig 3. Keep the hand flat but just move it backwards very slowly and imperceptibly. The key will turn over, without any apparent effort on your part.

Next place the key upon the left hand as in fig 4. In the process engage the raised lip underneath the loop of thread. Gently rotate the other end of the key to the position shown. If the left hand is relaxed the key will remain in place. However a minimal, barely perceptible straightening of the fingers will cause the key to move. This movement will continue until the little loop of invisible thread has straightened itself out.

It was with great sadness that we heard of the death of Ken Brooke. The news was received by all, at the Blackpool Convention, with a sense of loss. Ken's passing away marks the end of an

His was a rare genius for developing and extracting the maximum entertainment value, out of almost everything that he touched. For many, many years, the words "complete with routine by Ken Brooke" in a catalogue or magazine, were a cast iron guarantee that the purchaser would receive a brilliant piece of magical thinking. Seldom, if ever, were they disappointed.

Ken was generous and helpful to all, who were sincerely interested in wanting to learn his magic. Many of today's big names are only too ready to acknowledge the sound advice, which they received from this great magician. For that is what Ken was - not merely a good magician but a GREAT one.

In recent years, he was dogged by poor health. This deprived many of the younger generation of the chance of seeing him at his superb best. He may no longer be with us in person but his many magical creations will endure.

EDITORIAL

March 1983

In the January 1983 issue of the British Ring's magazine, The Budget, Jack Griggs, the able and respected editor, made a very interesting point. As not all Pabular readers are members of the British Ring and, therefore do not know the circumstances, leading up to Jack's quotable remark, a potted history might be in order.

John Rhodes, a magician of reasonable ability and a regular columnist in that publication, mentioned that he was not too happy about parts of the act, which Ken Savage performed, on the children's show at the recent Hastings convention. For some reason this brought a torrent of contumely over the head of Mr Rhodes. Various illuminati in the magical hierarchy brought into question Mr Rhodes' own ability (or lack of it) and questioned his "qualifications" to make judgements.

All of this led Jack to write, "..... WHY IS PRAISE, WHETHER JUSTIFIED OR NOT, FREELY ACCEPTED AND YET, AS SOON AS A WRITER IS CRITICAL, HIS QUALIFICATIONS TO BE SO ARE QUESTIONED?"

This is a very good point. Certainly, as a person, who spends much time putting pen to paper, it is one, which I need to consider most carefully. There does seem to be a school of thought, which allows certain people, within the magical hierarchy, to give free vent to their opinions, whilst, at the same time vehemently condemns others, for doing so. Let us create a fictitious example of the sort of thing that I mean. Imagine that a young, unknown magician from the sticks wrote to a magazine saying that he had seen somebody, say Terry Seabrooke or Albert Goshman and was not too happy about the way that the assistants had been treated. This would be his opinion and he should have every right to express it. Obviously, anybody else, who felt like doing so, should be at liberty to jump in and put the opposite point of view. Is this what would happen though? I think not. Much more likely would be the arrival of an avalanche of letters, to the magazine in question. In effect they would all say that Fred Bloggs was a nobody; that his own act was lousy; that he did not know what he was talking about; that he was responsible for World War Two and that he was not qualified to express an opinion.

For some reason, in the magical press, criticism has become a dirty word. There is a fear — almost a paranoia — of the more unflattering truths. Naturally, nobody wishes to see the pendulum swing too far the other way. We would not like to see magazines full of nit picking, carping and abuse. This would be just as distorted and untruthful as the endless torrents of praise and flattery, which are today's norm. On the other hand, people do have opinions and, for that matter, prejudices, which they should be allowed to make known.

Bert Pox, another unknown magician, may go to a convention and see a top international performer, on one of the shows. Bert may be disappointed in what he sees. He may even write to a magazine and say so. His own ability as a performer, is totally irrelevant. He is criticising in his role as spectator and member of the paying public. Those are the only qualifications that he needs, to express an opinion.

I remember meeting a lady once, quite by chance, who told me that she had been roped in, many years ago, to help judge an important magical competition. She, of course, was the "lay" judge. She mentioned one performer, by name. He was one of this country's finest close-up workers. The lady quite calmly told me that she had deducted marks from him, because she did not like the shape of his nose.

If that fact had been reported, in a magazine, there would have been an uproar. Imagine what would happen if a magazine columnist were to say that he did not like Mr X's act, because he found his long nose somewhat off-putting. The lynch mobs would be out in force. The poor columnist would be buried under a welter of abuse. Every one of his own physical short-comings, real or imaginary, would be tabulated.

The above instance is based on a true story. I would name names, if I were less of a coward. It all happened a long time ago and the people involved are no longer around. The matter under discussion here is, why it is assumed that nobody is entitled to criticise, unless "qualified" to do so. What are these mysterious "qualifications"? Colleagues, who have been lucky enough to receive a university education, inform me that none of their colleges had degree courses in magical criticism. I will have to take their word for it. The nearest that I ever came to a university was doing a lecture at the Cambridge Pentacle Club. (Come to think of it, they have never asked me back. Perhaps this shows that they do study magical criticism!)

Once, in my younger days, I asked a certain established performer why he used a particular item. I felt that it flawed an otherwise good act. I was hoping to receive some kind of guidance from the great man and perhaps learn something of his thinking. Instead, he turned a beetroot colour and started to scream and shout. The words came tumbling out so fast that I could not make much sense of them. I did catch a few phrases like "young upstart", "not qualified to have an opinion", and that "when I had 'done something' in magic, I might know what I was talking about". None of which was very helpful. All that I learned was that, in order to be entitled to express an opinion, one has to "do something in magic". The question then arises as to quite what you have to "do in magic" to gain this "qualification". Then, when you have "done it" how do you know? More importantly, how does anybody else know? Do you have to tell them or will they tell you? Perhaps nobody tells anybody. Maybe the whole thing takes the form of some kind of divine revelation.

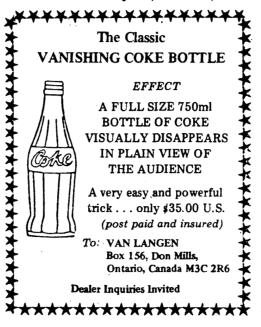

One thing that does seem to entitle the frank and free expression of opinion is becoming a magic dealer. This seems to be a prime "qualification". A casual glance through most magical publications will reveal more strongly worded letters and articles, emanating from this single section of the community than any other. Another way seems to be to get voted onto a committee. One which runs a club or a convention. From that position, you can say what you like. Nobody will argue with you, in case they get barred. Do not, under any circumstances, make the mistake of becoming a successful, professional entertainer. This in no way entitles the frank expression of opinions. The image of the pro is that of somebody dashing all over the world, non stop, to satisfy the demands of the clamouring multitudes. Such people have no time for formulating opinions!

Seriously, I can understand that there is another side to the coin. A performer's reputation could be damaged by an excess of adverse criticism. There is an old saying that, if you throw enough mud, some of it will stick. There is always the chance that a consortium of individuals might get together and try to spoil a particular performer's good name by bombarding the press with adverse and biased accounts of his work. Personally, I cannot see it happening to any serious degree. Even if it did, most editors would quickly sense what was going on.

We get the kind of press that we deserve. They will serve up what we will buy. On the whole, the magical press serves its readers well. There is, however, quite a lot of hypocrisy, in certain sections. There must be a reason for this. I would suggest that a sizeable minority have vociferously campaigned for it, in their own self interest. However, these people would, if they stopped to think about it, realise that, when everyone is always praised to the skies, then the very praise becomes valueless.

Nearly every working performer spends most of his time trying to entertain the lay public. These people have no "qualifications" to criticise him. They do, however, have every right. Every real pro knows that he is the servant of his public and not the master. If somebody does not like him or his act, for whatever reason or however unreasonably, he should be grateful to them if they go to the trouble of pointing it out. No performer will ever be 100% perfect. None will ever be able to please all of the people, all of the time. However, every performer should aim for these goals. If there is something about the performer, or his act, which alienates one person, then in all probability it will alienate others as well. The difference is that most of them will say nothing and avoid or ignore that particular act. The odd one, who does stand up and makes his feelings. felt is doing that performer a great favour. He may not intend it that way but that is what is happening. He is telling the performer why he does not always get the results that he expects. If it is something that the performer can rectify, he has the chance of doing so. If it is not, at least he knows where he stands.

* * * *

It is nice, from time to time, to hear of different people pushing forward the frontiers, of the close-up scene. One such young man is David Eagger. He tells me that he has been booked to tour the country, doing a series of promotional trade shows for Southern Comfort. If this goes well, there may be more to follow and all at very good money.

* * * *

I am writing this in the aftermath of Blackpool. As usual, this was an excellent convention, providing as it does, the chance to meet so many old friends and, hopefully, to make some new ones. I am always amazed at the number of people, who tell me that they read Pabular and, more importantly, use the material from it.

It is not normal practise, in this magazine, to mention the stage shows. We have little enough space as it is and try to use it to give a detailed review of the close-up. This year, however, I feel that I must give a mention to Ian Kent, who compered the gala show. In my humble opinion, he was one of the best comperes that I have ever seen on a magic show, anywhere. He did no tricks and wasted no time on ego trips. When he was required to fill in, he did so, using very funny, well delivered material. When the act was ready, he finished and got off. One act had problems, which he coped with and covered entertainingly.

The show would have been first class without him but his efforts lifted it that little bit more.

AMONG THE GREAT UNWASHED (Close-Up at Blackpool)

They are a tough breed in the North of England. Anybody, staying at the Gables Hotel, soon found this out. The hotel advertises and charges for private bathrooms and showers. However, the notice on the reception desk said that the management "regret" that there is no hot water, owing to a failure in the plumbing. The management may have "regretted" this but their regret did not go deep enough for them to consider any positive action, such as providing kettles in the rooms to heat some water. Anybody, who complained or asked for a discount got short shirft and as for those, who requested clothes pegs for their noses As I said, these northeners are a hardy breed.

With regard to the close-up itself. This was a pretty mixed bag. The undoubted star turn was Dan O'Donoghue. He scored well at the Martin Breese day, last year. I saw him there and have no doubt that he creates a big impact. Quite why this is, I am not so sure. His magic is not unduly spectacular and there are several dead spots-like the time, when he has a spectator count down to a number of cards. While this is being done, nothing is said. There is a certain amount of fumbling going on below the table top. By rights the audience should lose interest. In fact they do not. They watch intently, bear with it, applaud wildly and follow him round from table to table. I suppose that is talent (or do the British just love an Irish accent — witness the popularity of Terry Wogan, Henry Kelly and Eamon Andrews). I shall watch Dan's progress with interest. He has a lot going for him and will be really, really good. He does, however, need to tighten up some of his presentations.

Undoubtedly the performers, who score best, in this type of show, are those with the clearest voices and those, who do "three dimensional" magic (with large, solid objects, rather than cards or coins). Mo Howarth for instance, was very quiet — almost inaudible from where I was, at the back. His magic, on the other hand, was large and spectacular and this helped to get him across. Tricks like the tumblers through coat and vanishing the glass under the newspaper. All good, big, visual magic.

Art Emmerson too was extremely 'three dimensional' and with a good clear voice to back it up. Nice, big, visual effects, all smoothly executed. To me, his penetration, using a small tray and a Rubik's Cube, is a sheer miracle. I just have not a clue how it is done. It is the type of magic, which creates a great impression on this kind of show.

At the opposite end of the spectrum was Ken Hawes. I have known Ken for many years and am a great admirer of his skill and expertise. I also know that he has considerable professional experience. In a commercial situation, he would score very heavily. Unfortunately, close-up shows at conventions are not commercial situations. The performers must work to large audiences, against a background of noise and distractions from the adjoining tables. The performer does not have the undivided attention of his audience. They will not hang onto his every word, waiting for him to produce a miracle. They need to be hit, hit and hit again. Ken sat down and for the first half of his act just cracked gags. This may have been fine for the front row but from where I was, they just could not be heard. As I can only watch half of each act, if I am to see them all, I had to leave the table before I had seen a single trick. This was frankly disappointing, especially as I know how good Ken is capable of being.

Always a favourite at these conventions is Harry Nichols. He has exuberance, enthusiasm and a good clear voice. I have seen him work regularly over the last fifteen years or more. Somehow, during that time, he has never lost his freshness and vitality. His enjoyment of his magic comes across loud and clear. It may not be the greatest magic around but I have no doubt that, in the eyes of any laymen present, it was the most memorable and mystifying.

Janet Clare is a rather difficult act to report. People who know me will know my feelings about lady performers in general. Perhaps, one day, I will get around to putting my thoughts on the subject into print. To me, magic, when performed by a woman, does not seem to be magical. It is like magic performed by a child. It lacks authority. Mind you, having said that, it must be admitted that the same could be said of the performances of a lot of male magicians! However, I think that it is safe to predict that we shall never see a female equivalent to Kaps, Vernon, Marlo or Slydini. Of course, this does not mean that women should not be allowed to have a go, if they want to. In competitions and the like, dressing, spectacle and all the sugar icing, which magical audiences confuse with good presentation, count for more than magic itself. Ladies can compete on equal, if not advantageous terms. However, having to report on a lady performer, for the first time in my life, it is necessary to put those more global considerations to one side and judge this particular one on her merits. The act was tightly routined, well worked out and performed with technical competence. Janet has a clear voice, which as has already been said, is an important asset, on this type of show.

Jack Henderson featured modelling balloons quite heavily. I am surprised that more close-up workers do not do likewise. His magic was mostly small stuff, using cards etc. In other words "two dimensional" but the balloons added that "third dimension" and made the whole thing bigger and more suitable for this type of show. I was very impressed with Jack and for my money he was the dark horse of the day. He also demonstrated himself as a very unselfish performer, by working much more quietly than he needed to. Had he opted to project more strongly, I think that most of the others would have had a hard time.

The final performer, that I saw, was Walt Maddison. He has lost none of his old flair since I saw him, some twenty years ago. He has a lovely line in self deprecating patter, coupled with some very nice card magic. He suffered a little from being inaudible at the back and of course his magic was "two dimensional". I enjoyed it, though, as did a lot of other people.

There is no doubt about it, the performers, who seem to make the biggest impact under these conditions are the ones, who do big solid, "three dimensional" magic. Anybody, who works on the table top, with cards or coins and the like, puts himself at a serious disadvantage. This is a crying shame, because it means that the best performers do not always come over as being the best. This is a fact of life and anybody agreeing to appear on this type of show must take account of it. Brashness and spectacle are the order of the day.

I am told that, for the second session, two of the above performers dropped out and were replaced by Jerry Sadowitz and Richard M. Gamble. Both are regular contributors to this magazine.

Unfortunately, I was unable to see either of their offerings, so cannot review them here. Jerry's work, I have seen on and off, over the years and know it to be good in real close-up situations. I have never had the pleasure of seeing Richard perform but having seen him demonstrate his "Blooming Aces", described in Pabular Vol 7 No 7, I would say that he is somebody, who is going to go places. Watch out for him.

KANING MERCURY John Anders

Effect

A signed card vanishes from the pack and is discovered inside the card case, neatly folded into four. John uses this particular handling to climax his Ambitious Card routine. It can, however, stand up as an effect, in its own right.

Requirements & Preparation

An Aviator pack. The card case is gimmicked in a similar manner to the one for the Ring in Card Case, outlined in "Another Card Session with Peter Kane". That is to say that it has a small, metal flap fastened to the bottom of the inside, by means of a hinge made from adhesive tape. Thus, when the case is rattled, the sound of a small object moving around inside, is created. John uses a paper clip, attached by string.

Also, with a sharp knife make a slit, on the flap side of the case. This slit should run just below the word "Aviator", where the two colours red/blue and white meet. Fig 1 shows the completed article.

Working & Presentation

Contrive a situation where the card case is lying on the table with the slit on the underside. A card has been chosen, signed and returned. Secretly bring it to the top of the pack.

Explain that you are going to cause the card to rise to the top of the pack, while a spectator covers it with his hand. Cut off the bottom half of the pack. Place it on the table in front of your assistant, face down. Have him turn over the top card, check that it is not his and then place his hand flat over the cards.

While all this is taking place, quietly turn the remaining portion of the pack face upwards and execute the Mercury Card Fold. This is described in detail, in an effect called "Mercury's Card", in chapter eight of "Expert Card Technique". It is suggested that readers refer to that work for the full explanation. For completeness sake, however, here is a brief summary.

Fig 2 shows how the first fold is made. The right hand holds the cards, from above, by the short ends. The left, under cover of a squaring action folds the bottom card across the centre, as in the picture. The right thumb acts as a stop, for the folding to take place. When the card is folded in half, curl the left fingers around the right thumb. This will fold the card into four. Place the packet from the right hand, into the left, in a normal dealing position, to hid the folded card. Fig 3 shows this. The misdirection for the folding actions comes, while the spectator is checking the top card of the tabled packet and covering the latter with his hand.

It is necessary, on completion of the fold, to turn the folded card so that the central crease is pointing towards your body. This is to allow for easy insertion into the card case, later.

Once the folded card is in position, lift the packet out of the left hand and place it in front of the spectator. Have him cover it with his other hand, having first checked the identity of the top card.

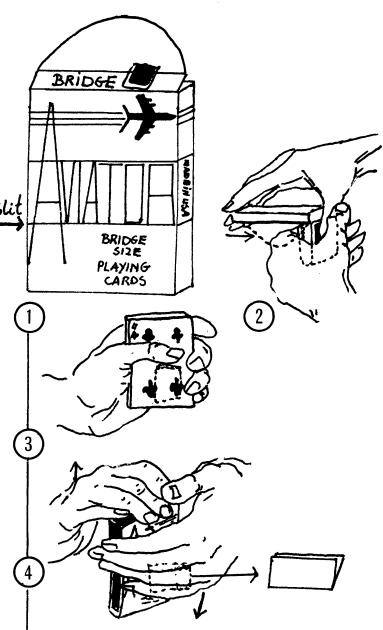

Ask the spectator if he felt the card rise to the top of either packet. He will say no. Slap your right hand on top of his and ask him if he felt anything that time. Have him lift his hand and look at the top card of that packet. It is the same as before. Nothing has changed. The chosen card is not there.

With the right hand, pick up the card case and absently shake it. Because of the fake, it will rattle as though it contained something. Look surprised. Hold the case to the ear of a spectator on the right and shake it. Ask that person if they heard anything.

Place the case, slit towards the palm, deep into the left hand. The central fold of the card should be more or less in line with the slit in the box. If the case is moved slightly away from you and at the same time the left hand moves backwards, towards you, the card will be loaded into the case. The action takes but a second to accomplish (see Fig 4)

Shake the case close to the ear of the spectator, who chose the card. Let him hear the sound. Then withdraw it and open the flap. Hold the case, for a few seconds, in front of the eyes of a spectator, allowing a glance of the card, inside.

With the fingers of the right hand, delicately begin to withdraw the folded card. When it is half way out, extend the box towards another spectator and have him remove the card completely.

While he is unfolding it and checking the signature, pick up the pack and place it in the box.

Editorial Note

Readers will recognise many similarities between this effect and a card in box made popular by the late Fred Kaps. To my mind, the two interesting points about this one, for the commercial worker are:—

- 1) Unlike the Kaps version, you do not need to carry an extra box around, in order to do the trick.
- 2) The card in the box is the actual one and the spectator can himself remove it.

Another point worth mentioning is that Tally-Ho cards and several other brands also have suitable places on their boxes to make the necessary slit.

Kane by Peter Kane. Published by Magico Magazine, New York. Available from Peter Kane at 33, Cedar Grove, Denton, Manchester M34 2BD. Price £15 (Post paid U.K.) Also available from leading dealers.

Once or twice in a generation, nature seems to throw up a complete original — a one-off. Such a man is Peter Kane. There are but few others. The list is very short. They are that select and privileged elite, who seem able to pluck a succession of brilliant ideas out of thin air. Of them all, Peter must be amongst the most outstandingly original. His ideas seem to come from nowhere and owe little or nothing to anybody. He must have sources for some of his ideas, somewhere. When he does, he readily acknowledges them. Most of the time, however, the final concept is so far removed from the original that something totally new emerges.

Peter Kane must also stand as one of the most ripped off inventors of all times. He takes this all in his stride and appears to bear no real resentment. He does, on occasion permit himself a wry dig at one or two people, who in the past have not exactly fallen over themselves to credit him with his own creations. Hence, on page 14 we see "Shrug your shoulders and feign defeat. (This is a Garcia move)."

As for the magic in this book, I am not going to say too much about it. Any comments from me would be superfluous. Most readers will known Peter's work and will have read the various "Card Sessions". If you have not, then shame on you!

My chief criticism of this book is that it is long overdue. I would also have liked to see it printed on a better quality paper. The material warrants it and so do the illustrations by Richard Kaufman, Al Mann and Mitch Dyszel. The book has been edited by Oscar Weigle and is surely destined to become a best seller. I can do no better, than to quote Jack Griggs comments, from his review in the Budget.

"This is a major publication, which should be on every cardworkers' and close-up man's bookshelf. If you do not get this book, you can rest assured that others will soon be fooling you with some of the ideas described".

Jack goes on to say that the book is unreservedly recommended. I agree absolutely. "A visit with Larry Jennings". Review by Al Smith, January, 1983.

Lecture Notes.

8 numbered pages. 9 items, all cards. Plastic comb binding. Published by Jeff Busby. Written and compiled by James Patton and Ron Vergilio.

As lecture notes go, this latest Busby production is a truly sumptious affair, which is a little odd, if, as our esteemed editor informs me, it is to be a limited edition of only two-hundred copies. Larry Jennings' name alone is guaranteed to sell that many copies, I would have thought. And, since, one assumes, Larry will be selling copies at his lectures, he is going to run out of merchandise very quickly. Or, maybe we've been misinformed. Perhaps this is just a first printing. Who knows? But, I'm assured, again by our Ed., that by the time this article appears, the booklet will most likely be sold out. So Of the nine items on offer, I felt particularly drawn to the Jennings Card in Wallet routine -"STRUCTURED". True, a palm is required, as is a card-to-wallet wallet, together with LePaul Envelope and a Conway style cigarette case But, the effect is strong, and will certainly bowl laymen over, and not a few magicians either. Non smokers will have fun working around the cigarette case.

"DIRECT FLIGHT CARD TO CASE" is very interesting, because it requires the performer to execute a pass with just one card — figure that one out. Of course, something else is used, but it isn't the rest of the deck. The "HOFZINSER ACE PROBLEM SOLUTION" is just that; a workable method for those who still think the method of this trick is more important than the effect. "A ROYAL TWIST" changes four tens into a royal flush via some "twisting" procedures, managing to substitute some direct reverses for the more familiar through the fist type of thing. "ALWAYS CUT THE CARDS" allows a spectator to cut aces into the deck, but the performer keeps them under control. Effective, but sounds better here than it perhaps is. Uses a crimp. "A LOGICAL CONCLUSION" is a departure. Four threes and four sevens change into a run of eight heart cards. "IMPOSSIBLE" is one of those spectator dealing items that demand an intelligent assistant, and a performer brave enough to entrust him with the deck, and turn his back at the same time. Handled correctly, it's strong. Probably safest at the local Club Meeting. "UNIFLECTION" is an excursion with four jokers, but gets a bit involved, as does "F.T.L.

& R.T.D. ACES". Both of these suffer badly from the abbreviated writing style of Messrs. Patton and Vergilio — necessary for reasons of space and economy, of course, but making for hard going on the part of the reader. At a glance some of the pages are really formidable. And, one or two of the descriptions, lacking as they are, the assistance of illustrations, will tax even those referred to as "the more erudite card enthusiast".

As a collection of card tricks, the venture is fair with the Card to Wallet and Card Case handlings lifting things. As a Larry Jennings project, however, it's a mite disappointing. Someday — soon let's hope — we'll see the definitive Larry Jennings Opus, for at the moment his material remains scattered far and wide. This latest "Visit" is another sprinkling, keeping the devout interested. But, as a fan of long standing who welcomes anything from Larry, I have to say that it didn't give me the sort of buzz I usually get from Jennings material.

Sefalaljia No. 2. Stewart James. Distributed by Jess Busby Magic Inc, 10329 MacArthur Blvd, Suites 5 & 6, Oakland, Calif 94605 or many leading dealers. 7.50 dollars post paid worldwide.

Most magicians will be familiar with the basic method of putting a ring onto a string à la "Sefalaljia" principle. Tarbell Vol 3 covers the subject extensively. What many will not realise (as I did not, until reading this book), is how the method can be developed into a series of uncanny mysteries.

This soft covered book of some 11 pages of type, measures $8\%'' \times 11''$. It details a complete act.

The routine centres upon a small cabinet, which is not faked in any way. It measures $6'' \times 6'' \times 12''$ and is simple enough in design to be constructed by even the most butter fingered handy man. It is inside this cabinet that the miracles take place.

All in all, eight different and distinct effects are accomplished. In the first, a heavy metal ring becomes threaded onto a bootlace. The ends of the latter have been in full view throughout, being threaded through holes in the sides of the cabinet.

The second effect is more complex as four rings apparently attach themselves to the lace.

The third effect substitutes a metal rod for the lace. This is pushed through the holes in the cabinet. Two plastic bangles are placed into the cabinet and become threaded onto the rod.

Effect follows upon impossible effect. There is a very off beat one, in which a small "Football", placed in the cabinet is kicked out again by an "invisible force". In another, a nail, placed into the cabinet is bent by the same "invisible force".

The final effect is a blockbuster. A spectator signs a dollar bill. This is placed into a small plastic pill box, which is subsequently placed inside a second, larger box. The nested boxes are placed on one side of the cabinet. A tumbler is stood upright, on the other side. A scarf is draped, for an instant, over the open front of the cabinet. When it is removed the tumbler has turned over and is now mouth downwards. The pill boxes have moved and are trapped beneath it! Everything can be examined (although the tumbler does have a minute hole in the bottom) but attention will not focus upon it anyway.

This is not the sort of magic that can be done impromptu. It is however, the sort of thing that wins close-up competitions and scores under convention conditions. It is effective magic, large, showy and three dimensional. Although no skill in sleight of hand is necessary, considerable handling practice will be needed, if the routine is to be given full justice. Assemble the props, give it the necessary practise and you will have a real winner.

Deckade by David Britland. Published by Martin Breese, 31 Richmond Way London W.14. Price £5.25 post paid (U.K.). 20 printed pages. 10 items all cards. Illustrated by the author.

The author has been concerned with several magazines over the years and it is likely that much of this material was intended for publication elsewhere. Certainly one or two of the introductory remarks to the different items would seem to imply this. Neither "Talon" nor "Babel" are around at the moment, so readers should be glad that Martin and David have got together to publish material, which may otherwise not have seen the light of day.

That the material in this book is good and worthy of publication, there is no doubt. I have tried out all of the different ideas and am greatly enamoured to "Disco", "O+W" and the "Bizzare Twist".

"Disco" is a very clean and startling transposition of a selected card, from one half of the pack to the other. The method is clean and the effect instant and eye popping.

"O + W" will go straight into my regular repertoire. This is one of the cleanest and neatest "Oil and Water" effects I have come across. To me it is the plum of the book. Easy, commercial and leaving plenty of time for presenting it well.

"Bizzare Twist" is a series of items based on Marc Russell's variations of a Paul Harris concept. These will require very careful handling if they are to stand up to an intelligent lay public. Given that, they should be stone bonkers (as Ken Brooke would have said).

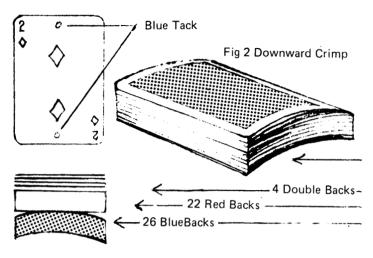

This is very much a book of ideas. The reader is given little assistance with the handling, timing or presentation of the magic. Also, he will be expected to be conversant with the various "standard" moves and techniques. In other words, it is for the experienced card man of at least average ability.

What does scream out from every page is David Britland's fertile imagination. There is a beautiful simplicity in his approach, which eschews complication and creates a sort of airy elegance. This manifests itself in the artwork, the writing style and, mostly in the magic.

Anybody, who is looking for some novel ideas to work on, could do a lot worse than to get this book.

Highly recommended.

KICKER COLOUR CHANGE Richard M. Gamble

In Volume 2 No. 8, we published Doug Alker's "The Useless Pack". This was an All Backs/All Faces routine, with a colour changing pack incorporated. Many readers will have seen this featured in Doug Alker's close-up show.

The following routine is by Richard Gamble. Readers may be interested in comparing the two. In Richard's routine, the colour change of the pack comes right at the end, making the big finish. In Doug's presentation, the colour change occurred during the handling, with the routine continuing afterwards. Both routines were worked out completely independently, by their originators.

Preface

After studying Dai Vernon's "All Backs" routine, described in "Expert Card Technique" and then getting the idea from Earl Nelson's fine book "Variations", I evolved an All Backs routine, which can end with a colour changing deck. This can be done without a packet switch.

The routine will leave you with half of the pack having one colour backs and the other half another. The audience will be unaware of this. You can then, if you so wish, switch half of the pack and carry on doing other tricks.

Effect

1106

The performer brings out a pack of cards, which have red backs. He removes the two jokers, only to discover that they are printed with backs on both sides. Looking through the rest of the pack, these are seen to have backs on both sides, as well. The cards are turned and twisted but no faces show; only red backs.

Suddenly, a face appears. The cards are fanned and they all have faces. Finally the pack is turned face down and, for the knock-out finish, the backs are blue.

Preparation

Required are 26 red backed cards and 26 blue backs. Take eight of the red backed cards and stick them together face to face, in pairs. This will give you four double backed cards. If you do not want to spoil the cards by sticking them permanently, use a small dab of wax or Blue Tack, as shown in fig 1.

Give the 26 blue backed cards a lengthwise crimp as in fig 2. Assemble the pack as shown in fig 3. The 4 double backed cards are on top, followed by the red backed cards. The blues are all on the bottom. All of the cards are face down.

Working

- 1) Remove the pack, face down, from the case. Spread the top half between your hands, showing the red backs but do not call attention to their colour. Take care not to overspread and disclose the blue cards.
- 2) Square the pack and say that you will need to remove the jokers. Take off the top two cards and turn them over, showing backs on both sides. Appear surprised. Toss the two double backers aside.
- 3) Turn over the top card. It too is a double back. Display it on both sides and then push it into the pack, about 12th from top. Get a left hand little finger break below it, as you push it in.
- 4) Turn over the new top card. It too will be a double back. Show it on both sides and replace it on the pack. Maintain a break below it, using the ball of the right thumb.
- 5) With the right hand cut the dozen or so cards, above the left little finger break, to the bottom of the pack. Maintain the thumb break below the top card as you do this. Also, turn the right wrist, so as to flash the double back, on the bottom of the packet, towards the audience.
- 6) Place the right hand's packet below the cards in the left, completing the cut. The left little finger takes over the break held by the right thumb.

With the right hand, cut to the break and twist both wrists together, showing the double backs, on the bottom of each packet. Use the right hand's packet to flip over the smaller left hand packet. Take care not to allow either packet to spread as this is done.

7) Place the right hand packet on top of the left, maintaining a left hand little finger break between the two. Spread off the top ten or so cards, showing them all to be red backs.

- 8) Square the pack, keeping the break. Move the top packet forward, in a block so that it is outjogged for about 34". Turn the pack end over end, with the right hand, using the fingers to mask the jog.
- 9) Having turned the packet over, square it up in the left hand, retaking the little finger break between the two jogged portions. Spread the top ten or so cards, showing all backs.
- 10) Cut off the cards above the break with the right hand. Again twist the wrists, flashing the bottom cards of the packets. Use the right hand packet to flip over the one in the left. Take care not to allow the cards to spread out.
- over, place the right hand packet has been turned over, place the right hand's cards on top. Keep a left hand little finger break between the two halves. Spread the top dozen or so cards, showing all backs. You can, if desired, spread a few cards beyond the break at this point, be careful though, not to flash any blue cards. Square up, holding the break once more.
- 12) Bring the right hand over the pack, fingers at the outer, short end and thumb at the inner. Grip the small packet of cards, above the break and move it to the right for about half an inch. Keep it on top of the main pack and stepped to the right, in this manner, while the right hand grips the entire pack and lifts it clear of the left.
- 13) Rotate the right hand, from the wrist, showing both sides of the cards. Do not try to conceal the step. To the audience it merely looks as if you are displaying a random card, in the centre of the pack, as well as the bottom one.
- 14) Turn the right hand palm down once more. Go to place the pack into the left hand. As you do so, the left finger tips push against the bottom card, moving it over to the right, as in a side steal. Once this card lines up with the upper, stepped packet, the right finger tips seize it and draw it, together with the small packet, away to the right. The left hand, meanwhile, takes the bulk of the pack.
- 15) Separate the hands, causing the single card from the bottom of the pack to merge with the packet, in the right hand. Place all of the right hand's cards on the bottom of the packet in the left. What has happened is a sort of upside down slip cut. The move is part of the original Vernon "All Backs" routine. It can be read, more fully described, in Expert Card Technique.
- 16) If you examine the pack, at this point, you will see, from the top down, about a dozen red backed cards, followed by all of the blue backs, these are followed by about ten more red backs and finally the two double backers.

- 17) Hindu Shuffle the pack, in the usual way, occasionally flashing the bottom card and creating the backs on both sides illusion. Take care not to expose any blue backed cards, when doing so. At one point, during the shuffle, turn the right hand packet completely over and strip a single double backer, off the bottom.
- 18) When you have run out of red cards, in the above shuffle and cannot safely proceed further without risking exposing the blue, re-assemble the pack, placing the right hand's cards on the bottom of the left hand's packet.
- 19) Turn the pack end over end a few times. Contrive to finish doing this with the double backer on top.
- 20) Perform a simple colour change, bringing a card from the back of the pack to the face. Do - not take one from the centre as this will have a blue back. To the audience, the effect will be of a face suddenly appearing.

- 21) Keeping the pack face up, cut to the crimp and complete the cut. This will bring all of the red cards to the front of the pack and leave the blues at the back. Fan the pack showing that all of the cards have faces. Take care, however, not to expose the two double backers.
- 22) Bunch up the front half of the fan, so that the backs of the cards will not show, when it is turned over. Turn the fan over and show blue backs.

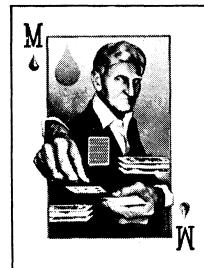

If you have a good method of switching half a pack, you can dispose of the red cards and ring in the other blues, thereby finishing with a normal pack. If not, then just finish as above, it is more than strong enough.

MARLO WITHOUT TEARS By JON RACHERBAUMER

MARLO'S FIRST TEXT ON CARDS FOR THE GENERAL MAGIC PUBLIC IN 30 YEARS

Not since 1953 when the Cardician was published, has Marlo released a text on cards for the general magic public. MARLO WITHOUT TEARS is an exquisite 325 page text with over 60% of its 14 chapters geared for the hobbyist who does not possess a high degree of technical prowess; hence, MARLO WITHOUT TEARS. The remainder of the text will challenge and enrich those of the technical genre. Commercial value and directness is the basic thrust of this outstanding text.

Jon Racherbaumer, acknowledged as our art's foremost journalist, presents each of the 63 effects and sleights with an emphasis on the "tearless" approach. None of the material has appeared in print and there is no padding. MARLO WITHOUT TEARS is one of the best investments any magician could make in the education of entertaining with the pasteboards.

Of particular note, is the full-color dust jacket which features the exquisite artwork of Walt Disney illustrator, Marshall Van Druff. It is the finest frontal piece ever produced for a book on the art of magic, and an appropriate tribute to a man who has given magicians, "a nice shelf" of books over the last 45 years.

Korem Publications and Korem Productions are proud to be associated with this project enabling us to continue to present to the magic fraternity the world's finest texts and educational video tapes for the enhancement of our art. If you are not on our mailing list, drop us a line for future releases.

How many 'big name' magicians have we had in Britain in the last twenty years? There are a few obvious contenders. David Nixon, Al Koran, David Berglas, Tommy Cooper., who should perhaps be in a different category, and of course, Paul Daniels. I think it is fair to say that all of them made their names through television. Although Robert Harbin was quite well known he never quite made it in the same sense as the others.

Is it possible to become a 'big name' magician, with the public, without television exposure? I doubt it. In the U.S.A. they have Messrs Henning, Wilson, Siegfried and Roy,, Copperfield. Again, all national names through television. O.K. I know S and R were giants on the Las Vegas showbiz scene for several years before they did their big T.V. specials, but it was still T.V. that made them better known throughout the length and breadth of America.

The Page boy speaks....

Why am I talking about 'big names'? There is a reason. This month we nearly had another one . . . maybe . . . and without television. The name of the new contender ARTURO BRACHETTI , and it can still happen by the time you have read what you are reading now.

For the past three or four months there have been constant references in the press to a new show scheduled to open at the Piccadilly Theatre, right in the heart of London's West End, withe the title 'I'. Brachetti was to be both director and star of this extravaganza which is costing upwards of one and a half million pounds. They have ripped out the interior of the theatre and rebuilt and designed it to suit the requirements of the show.

The opening date was to be graced by the presence of Princess Anne. Then suddenly everything seemed to go wrong. The leading lady was taken ill; the dress rehearsal over ran by an hour and a half; the producer didn't think the show was good enough etc., etc. And Brachetti is right in the middle of it all and he is only twenty three years old. The people who put up the money for the show must have a lot of faith in him and as I said, it can still happen. The opening date has been postponed and Arturo has relinquished his post as director.

I really hope it does happen because he is a nice guy with real talent. I met him and worked with him about a couple of years ago in Italy, I think. I'm sure I mentioned him in this column at the time as I make it a rule to mention people I like, respect, or admire. (So now you know why YOU haven't been mentioned). Brachetti is a magician turned quick change artist with real flair and showmanship. Class is probably the best one word description.

Both he and his producer were interviewed on T.V. recently, explaining that the pressures on Arturo in his dual role as director/star were too great, and in the course of the interview they showed clips of the show in rehearsal. One short sequence of only a few seconds showed him performing a Carmo (?) type levitation, the one that Jeff Atkins did on the Paul Daniels show some time ago. The make up, the costumes the theatricality of it all can only be described in one word . . . stunning. If the rest of the show compares favourably with this little clip we are in for a treat when it happens. I hope it does.

As a follow on from the above, there hasn't been much in the way of big time magic in the London theatre for quite a time. There was a show at the Pheonix Theatre for a while and John Wade starred in a smaller production at the Mayfair - and of course Paul Daniels' marathon at the Prince of Wales for fourteen months The first two shows were lightweight productions and we all know that although the P.D. show was presented at one of the West End's largest theatres, Paul carried the whole show on sheer personality and not on spectacle.

Apart from anything else the Brachetti production promised lavish costumes and spectacle on a scale rarely seen in London for many a year.

Congratulations to Bob Read who was runner up in a close up magic competition in Las Vegas recently. Paul Gertner was the winner. They tell me that magicians were crawling out of the woodwork to get into this competition because it was the first time that a substantial cash prize had been awarded in such an event. I believe the figure was $9,000. Albert Goshman came in at number five. Maybe he was just lucky.

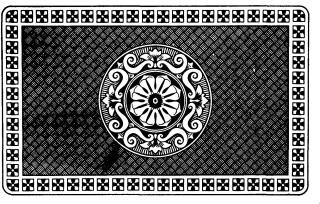

I know in my heart that this column should have been given over to Ken Brooke who passed away recently. I have deliberately avoided doing so because I have already written about just that in another publication and someone else has probably done something on the subject for this magazine. May he rest in peace.

Goodbye, Patrick Page

fake cards

important notice

As many customers will know, the supply of American 'Fox Lake Aviator' fake cards has become increasingly erratic in the past few years. Often certain fake cards have been in short supply or have been temporarily unavailable.

As a result we have been slowly converting many of our special decks to the Piatnic range of 'Classic' cards.

We have now taken delivery of our first consignment of the brand new range of fake cards especially printed by the Piatnic Playing Card Company in Austria. The cards are standard 'English and American' design and size. Standard court cards and indices. These beautifully printed cards are in many ways superior to the Fox Lake Aviator cards. They fan and handle very smoothly, and the fakes are indetectable when inserted in a regular deck. They are printed on better quality stock and do not have a tendency to bow.

Most important of all we have been Guaranteed a regular and continuing supply of these cards and will be able to maintain stocks of matching fake cards, all with the same geometric design illustrated above.

For your convenience I list below details of the fakes currently available. We supply instructions where necessary.

We will, of course continue to stock Aviator, Bee, Bicycle, Tally-Ho, Steamboat, etc. We do, however, feel that our customers will appreciate that we plan to slowly change over all fake decks to the superior Piatnic cards, and we do not plan to replace stocks of Fox Lake fakes as they become exhausted.

Some stocks of Fox Lake Aviator fakes are still available from the studio and customers who wish to 'stock up' on Fox Lake fakes are advised to contact the studio immediately and place their order before current stocks are exhausted.

KEN BROOKE A LIFETIME OF JOY

A TRIBUTE TO KEN BROOKE Fred Robinson

With the passing of Ken Brooke, I lost a friend and magic lost one of its most colourful and popular characters.

Known to countless magicians, throughout the world, who witnessed his unique brand of salesmanship, he demonstrated his wares, both at conventions and at "The Magic Place". He was, without question, the finest demonstrator of magic, during this era and, possibly, any other.

To miss the opportunity of seeing Ken in action, was, to most magicians, unthinkable. His "sales pitches" were among the highlights of any convention. To call them demonstrations would be a misnomer. They were entertaining presentations, by an outstanding performer; as carefully rehearsed as the act of the most fastidious artiste.

Gifted as Ken undoubtedly was, it would be misleading and unjust to attribute his success to inherent talent, alone. Underlying this success was his immense capacity for sheer hard work and attention to detail. Years, as a professional performer, had provided him with the experience to see the entertainment potential in an effect, before deciding to put it on the market. The instructions, accompanying such tricks, provided a wealth of advice to the purchaser, enabling him to extract the maximum reaction, from his audience.

One can see evidence, of this truth, in the number of performers, currently featuring such effects as the Malini Egg Bag, Nudist Pack, Chop Cup, Multiplying Bottles, Confabulation etc. etc. Behind these tricks and many others, one can discern the influence of Ken Brooke.

As far as I am aware, Ken did not invent a single trick. Certainly, he never made any claim to having done so. His great contribution was to breathe life into many effects, by providing them with professional routines. These, he then proceeded to promote by performing them to potential customers. Advertising, through the magical press, also played its part. Punters learned to trust the man, behind those persuasive advertisements, knowing that they would not be throwing their money away, on some "pipe dream".

Ken's influence, for the betterment of our art, extended far deeper than is generally realised. In paying his personal tribute, during the funeral service, John Fisher remarked upon how valuable he had always found Ken's judgement to be, regarding magicians and their acts. For readers, outside of these islands, John is the T.V. producer, to whom we are indebted for the excellent Paul Daniels magic series. Paul himself, when asked, during a radio interview, who had been the greatest influence in his career, replied, "Someone you may never have heard of — Ken Brooke."

Many leading magicians regularly sought his advice. One, to my personal knowledge, was that now legendary figure, Fred Kaps. That these people, at the top of their respective fields, should have taken Ken's advice, is further evidence of the respect, with which his knowledge and experience were regarded.

It is only when one reflects upon the various aspects, of magic and magicians, with which he has been associated, that the total sum, of his valuable contributions, becomes apparent.

Ken Brooke left a legacy — a legacy, from which magicians of today and of the future, will continue to draw sustenance, during the years ahead.

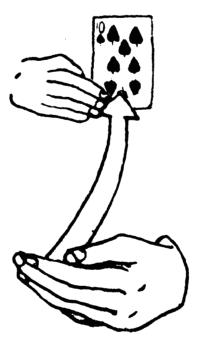

This brief record of Ken's contribution to magic does nothing to account for his popularity. A popularity not only amongst magicians but also amongst those, with whom he came into contact, away from the magic scene. We, who came to know him intimately, can possibly claim to give a few indications.

Hiding behind that bold, confident and sometimes abrasive manner, was a highly sensative and humane person. One, who had sincere compassion for people in trouble and who was quick to show his concern, in a practical way. His generosity was boundless. Giving pleasure to others was part of his normal lifestyle. Utterly unselfish, he shared what he had with his friends. It is impossible to imagine that he was ever guilty of any mean or petty action.

His long and distressing illness revealed, to me personally, that his thought for others remained undiminished, despite his own disability. He was completely devoid of self pity. My last remembrance of him is the broad smile, across his face, as he stood at the door, when I turned to wave, what proved to be, the last good-bye.

The last booklet that Ken published, was a collection of many of the "bits of business", which he used. It was compiled during the latter stages of his illness, when he was severely incapacitated.

That he should have entitled this collection "A Lifetime of Joy" during such a dark period in his life, is more revealing, of the real Ken Brooke, than any words of mine could be. A suitable note to bring this tribute to a close.

NIL SEPERATUM EST Stephen Tucker

I'm sure that all of you are familiar with an effect known as 'The Two Card Trick'. It made use of a double faced card and two normal cards and a series of transpositions were performed using the trio. (Only two cards seemed to be in evidence.) I think, though I'm not too sure that the effect is one of Bert Allerton's. Well, the following are my ideas on the original and uses just two cards, the double facer and one regular card. The effect is a three phase routine that lasts just over 1 minute about 30 seconds are taken up having the cards signed!!

You'll need a double faced card with let's assume Ten of Spades/Ten of Hearts. This card can be found in the Piatnic double-faced deck No: 1300 54. Let's also assume that your regular card is the Ten of Spades and it has a Red back.

Set the cards with the Ten of Spades beneath the Ten of Hearts, both face up. Apparently show both backs to be Red by use of the Hamman All-backs count. (This is done casually and no comment is made during the display Let the spectator's eye's do all the explaining.

Flip the regular Spade card face down atop the Heart card and ask . . . "Which card is on top??" Once the reply is received you lift the top card up and show it's face to the spectator as you say . . "Correct."

Fig: A depicts this display of the card from the spectator's view-point, note that the card in your left hand (Double-facer.) is not visible to the spectator. Study the position of your left hand in the illustration, as you will simulate this with an empty hand in a few seconds

Explain that the Red and Black Ten are lovers and you'll show everyone how lovers behave

Place the Spade card back on the double facer as you patter. You now appear to lift up the Spade card again, but in reality you lift BOTH cards and display the face of the two cards held as one to the spectator in the same manner as illustrated in Fig: A. This time your left hand is completely empty, but it must assume the position depicted, as if it holds the Heart card. Place the apparent single Spade card face down on your close-up-mat. (Handle this card as you would a double lift Explain that the Spade had to go away, place card on table but the Heart card decided to follow, Place you right hand onto your left, as if covering the apparent Heart card thought to be within. Slowly rub the card away?? Show that the Heart card has vanished. After a few seconds, spread the pair on the table to reveal the Heart card back beneath the Spade. Flip the Spade face up to reveal both card's faces.

That takes care of the 1st phase Now pick both cards up again, but as you do so turn them over and spread off the double facer (Spade side up) onto your left hand. The regular card is face down and will be assumed to be the Heart card. This thought is re-inforced by repeating the double lift display to apparently show that the top face down card is the Ten of Hearts. Place the double back into your left hand and thumb off the regular card onto the spectator's hand, as you explain you'll show them again???

The spectator thinks he has the Heart card, but he in fact has the Spade. You have the double faced card Spade side uppermost.

As you hand the spectator his card You push the double facer to your fingertips and as your right hand returns to cover the apparent Spade card, it flips the card over so that it is now Heart side uppermost.

Repeat the rubbing away?? of your card, but when you separate your hands Your Spade card has not flown as before It has changed into the Heart card. When the spectator looks at the card he holds he finds the Spade card. (Transposition complete.) You patter to the effect that the Spade tried to go to the Heart, but the Heart also tried to go to the Spade and they must have past each other in the process Now for the final phase

Place the regular Spade card atop the Heart and repeat the turning over of the two and spreading the double facer Spade side up into the left hand, as before.

You now have the real Spade in your right hand (Face down) and the apparent Spade in your left hand (Face up). Place the face down card on the spectator's hand again and the double faced card into your pocket.

Click your fingers, have the spectator show that he now has both cards again??? He only has one card and it isn't the Heart that he thought it was It's the Spade you just put in your pocket.

Reach in and withdraw the D/F Heart side up, then immediately put it back in your pocket and the other card too!!

"Well you know how impulsive lovers are." You conclude, as you decide to try something else....

NOTES If you like (AND I ADVISE IT.) you could have the two cards signed before you begin. YOU have previously signed the SPADE side of the D/F card, so you now sign the face of the real Spade card. (In exactly the same manner!!) Have the spectator sign the face of the Heart Card and then proceed into the effect.

I am sure that you'll be able to add other phases to the routine, but performed at a brisk pace with good patter the above will serve you well. Try to get a D/F card with a King and Queen depicted You may have to make one!!

EDITORIAL

My comments in Vol 7 No 8, regarding close-up at children's parties, brought a very interesting response. It would seem that quite a lot of readers are already doing this, on a regular basis.

Terry Machin from Southend-on-Sea was one of the first people to let me know his feelings and experiences, on the subject. Terry is a full time professional, who makes a fair living by doing Kid shows in the daytime and table hopping at night. He is one of the team of table hoppers at the Dickens wine bar, in Southend. Other regulars, at this venue include Dick Turpin, Don Simpson, Brian Oakes and Alan Rentcombe.

(So if you find yourself at a loose end, any time that you are in the area, pop along there — there is nearly always some magic going on).

Anyway, to return to the subject of closeup for kids. Terry says that he usually finds this to be most successful with the older age groups (7 to 12). As this is an age range that most kids entertainers shy away from, being beyond the "Run Rabbit Run" level, he has been able to increase his workload, by catering for them. Obviously he avoids the more complex routines—mentalism and esoteric card work are out. The items used must be simple in effect yet thoroughly baffling. His most popular are the Sponge Balls, Haunted Handkerchief (George Blake version), Chop Cup and simple (in plot—Terry is very skillful) card effects.

The show is presented in the following manner. No tables are used. The children sit on the floor in a semi circle. If there are more than six or eight they are formed into two rows. The smaller ones sit in front, the bigger ones kneel behind them, or else sit on chairs. Terry works, sitting or kneeling on the floor. This obviously rules out any lapping or rear of table expedients. The show lasts for 30 to 40 minutes, during which time, every child has an opportunity to participate in something. Children are not called out to assist. They stay where they are and participate from their places. Terry reaches out to them, when he requires something to be held or a card to be taken.

Another reader, who has had some expeience in the field, is Ferry Gerats, from Groesbeek in Holland. He has promised some info on his approach, in the near future. Meanwhile he told me a story, which holds some food for thought.

One of the magic societies, to which he belongs, recently staged a competition for the best children's entertainer. Ferry entered and performed close-up magic. The judges awarded him first prize. This apparently unleashed a storm of controversey. Many people said that children's magic must be stand up magic, done on the stage etc. . etc.

It was interesting to notice that in the January 1983 Magigram Smartie Artie outlined a close-up effect for children, which he uses to entertain the early arrivals at a party and keep them occupied, while the others get there. It was a paddle routine, marketed by Supreme.

Some years ago, before I really went into children's magic, I was called upon to entertain the kids at my nephew's party. There were not many there, so I got them to sit around the table, while I did the Chop Cup, Sponge Balls. Cannibal Cards etc. All of these went down well. Then came the Han Ping Chein Coins Through Table. I really hammed this up, putting my ear right against the table top, to listen for the "soft spot". When I looked up, all the children had disappeared. They had all ducked under the table, to watch the coins coming through!

By now, most readers will have heard, elsewhere (Pat Page mentioned it in the previous issue), of Bob Read's success, in coming second in the all-comers close-up competition, in Las Vegas. It was organised by Joe Stevens, for his Close-Up Seminar. There was some pretty substantial prize money involved, which attracted quite a few international "big names". Al Goshman was one, John Cornelius another. In the event, the winner was Paul Gertner and third place went to Michael Webber. This is, of course, great news for British magic, in general and even greater news for Bob Read, in particular. We are especially pleased, at Pabular, to add our congratulations to the host of others, which he is no doubt receiving.

As I write this, I have just received details from Martin Breese, with regard to his close-up seminar. This takes place during the week commencing May 9th. Unfortunately, I doubt if the magazine will be published by then. When you read this, it will possibly (most likely) be too late. The accent will be on commercial close-up. There will be several lectures/demonstrations by Carl Dreher, of Dallas Texas. Others taking part will be Billy McComb, Brian Sinclair, Rex Cooper, Eric Mason, Terry Machin and Barry Dekker. If I can manage to get along for one or two of the sessions, a report will appear in the next edition.

REPEAT BURNED MATCH Mark Weston

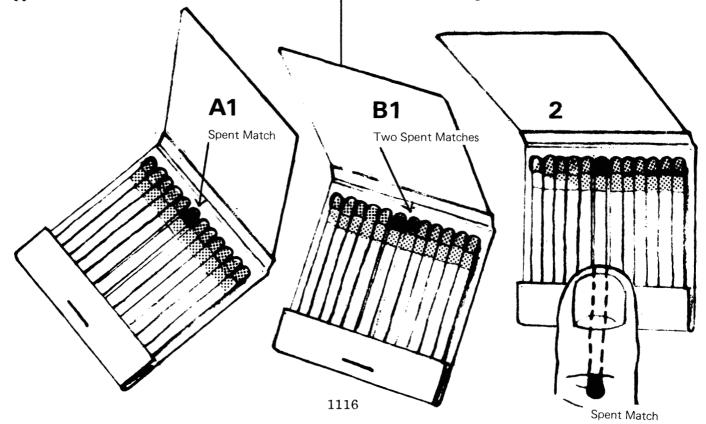

Whilst the idea of burning a book match then passing the burned match back to the book of matches is a very nice item for the layman . . the repeat of the effect is so much better and to the layman a real baffler.

The method is quite simple in operation . . . two books of matches are needed . . . they are identical. Prepare by opening the books then bend one match forward in book "A" somewhere near the middle of the book, this match is lit using a separate cigarette lighter and immediately blown out . . . thus we have a spent match inside the booklet stuck fast at a position about the middle of the match booklet. see Figs. 1 and 2.

Booklet "B" is treated in the same manner as booklet "A", Except that TWO MATCHES TOGETHER IN THE MIDDLE OF THE BOOKLET are lit and blown out . . . thus we have TWO spent matches in Book "B" at the same position as the one spent match in booklet "A".

Presentation

Booklet "A" is placed into the MATCH POCKET of the performer's jacket on the right side, whilst booklet "B" goes into the pocket proper on the right side.

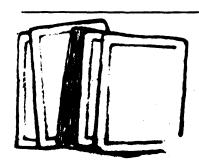

Performance

When performing the routine, the normal burned match effect is presented, as this is generally known to all magicians a brief When ready to perform the magician removes booklet "A" from the match pocket on the right side and opening the book towards himself by using the right thumb.. the thumb touches the top of the spent match in the middle of the book and doubles this match downwards as in Fig. 2, the LEFT THUMB now takes over and covers the spent match from the eyes of the spectators ... timing is such that the magician appears to merely remove a book of matches and to open the book for all to see. Now the magician quite openly PULLS OUT A MATCH FROM THE MIDDLE OF THE BOOKLET as near as possible to the spent match hidden under the left thumb, this is handed to the spectator and he is asked to strike the match on the striker pad at the rear of the packet, during this action the magician first thumbs the hidden match back inside the booklet before closing the booklet and offering the back to spectator so he may strike the removed match on the striker pad. Immediately the match lights it is blown out by the performer who then hands the booklet to the spectator to hold whilst he (the performer) takes the spent match from the spectator. The performer now draws attention to the spent match and the booklet held by the spectator . . he then executes a French Drop with the match and makes a throwing movement towards the booklet . . . the match disappears and spectator opens the booklet to find the spent match has arrived back inside the booklet in it's original position. That is the original routine. I'm afraid I do not know the originator of this.

The Repeat

The above is performed as stated and to the spectators the effect is finished the performer now returns the used booklet "A" to it's original position INSIDE THE MATCH POCKET of the jacket on the right side. After a moment the performer offers to repeat the effect and accordingly removes the booklet again from his pocket except that this time it is BOOKLET "B" that is removed unknown and unsuspected from the pocket proper. Now the same effect is repeated, the handling is exactly as before, one spend match being hidden from view under the left thumb. Now when the spectator is shown the booklet he can see this already contains the spent match just used (or so it appears). Magician removes a new match as before from a central position next to the spent match, this is handed to spectator as before and magician allows him to strike the new match . . again during the closing of the booklet the hidden spent match is thumbed back inside the booklet. Booklet is handed to spectator whilst magician performs the French Drop with the spent match and throws the invisible match towards the booklet. Booklet is opened by the spectator and NOW THIS IS FOUND TO CONTAIN TWO SPENT MATCHES BOTH STUCK FAST IN THEIR ORIGINAL POSITIONS INSIDE THE BOOKLET.

ODDMENT Phil Goldstein

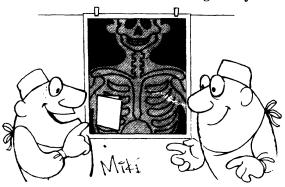

While there have been a variety of similar routines in print, the starting point for this routine is Karl Fulves' "A Curious Problem" (in "Packet Switches, Part One", 1973). This approach follows the plot of that effect, but the handling is rather different.

An eight-card set-up is required: the four jacks above the four aces, in any suit order. The eighth card from the top is crimped.

- 1) Holding the pack face down, Slip Cut the top card to the center of the deck, obtaining a left little finger break above that card. You are ready to begin. Explain that the spectator is about to select a card, and that any card may be chosen except for the four aces. Flip the block of seven cards at the crimp face up. Spread over the top three cards, displaying the four aces (with three jacks hidden behind them), stating that you will leave the aces face up on top of the pack so as to avoid having one of them chosen. Square the spread cards.
- 2) Tell the spectator, "You may choose any card from the balance of the pack." Run your left thumb down the corner of the pack, requesting the spectator to tell you when to stop, Force the jack from beneath the break as per the standard Riffle Force. Cut the deck at the break, allowing the spectator to remove the force card.

- 3) As the spectator notes the selection, obtain a break beneath the fifth card from the top (the first jack in the seven-card face up stack). Take the selection from the spectator, and apparently insert it back into the center of the deck. In fact, utilize Tilt technique to place the selected card face down into the break.
- 4) State that you will use the aces to locate the chosen card. Flip the entire eight-card block atop the pack face down. (This is easily done, thanks to the natural break between the face up and face down stocks.) The top five cards are now lifted off of the pack. The quickest way to do this is to grasp the pack with the right hand from above. The right thumb easily picks up the top three cards, as the third card down (the selection) is reversed. Use the right thumb tip to pick up two more cards, and lift off all five top cards. Put the balance of the pack aside.
- 5) Ascanio Spread, displaying four face down cards. Square the packet. Say that you will cause the selection to fly from the pack to the center of the packet. Snap your fingers. Spread the packet, showing the selected jack face up in the center.
- 6) Extract the face up jack. Turn that card face down, and place it on top of the packet. Perform a Half-Pass to secretly reverse the lowermost card.
- 7) Announce that you will do another bit of magic with the five-card packet. As you say this, perform a Five-Card Jordan Count, displaying five face down cards. (In order to be consistent with previous actions, it is best to do this count from a Biddle Grip).
- 8) Say, "I shall cause the odd card to reverse itself in the center of the packet." Snap your fingers. Spread the cards, displaying an ace face up in the center. You have apparently made a mistake, as the spectators assume that the chosen jack is the odd card, among four aces. Turn over the fan, showing that in fact the reversed ace is the odd card among four jacks.

MICRO MAGIC Les Johnson

David Hawkins item "Human Error" (Vol 7 No 8), prompted Les to send in the following. Using a Sharp PC-1251 pocket computer. This particular model has a liquid crystal display of 24 characters. 18 different programs can be defined and are instantly available, at the touch of a key. They are even retained, when the machine is switched off. No doubt there are other makes with similar attributes.

Effect

A spectator freely selects any card. The computer is introduced and switched on. It flashes up a series of questions/statements, which the spectator answers verbally. Finally, it reveals the name of the card.

This can be repeated several times. The magician does not see the card, until its name has been disclosed. Finally, the spectator is told to merely think of any card. Again the process is repeated. This time, however, the computer gets into an argument with the spectator. The conclusion is that the computer gives in and throws up a humourous message, which incorporates the assistant's name.

Requirements

A pocket computer of the type specified above or similar. A pack of cards.

Preparation

The cards are set up in the Si Stebbins system.

The computer is set up as per the table, below. Five programs are defined — "C", "H", "S", "D" and "X". The first four are similar in structure, with just slight variations in the wording, suits etc. Anybody who obtains one of these computers will easily manage this operation.

Working and Presentation

The computer has merely been set up to read off the Si Stebbins system. This will mean that, if you press the keys, which correspond with the value of any one card, the name of the next card in the sequence will eventually come up on the digital display. What Les has done, is to put in a few questions/statements, so that the computer appears to be reading the person's mind and gradually working towards the card, rather than just naming it outright, as a known fact.

Start off by introducing the computer and explaining its amazing power, to read minds. Do not switch it on just yet. Bring out the cards and give them a false shuffle, retaining the set up. Have a spectator choose any card. Cut the pack, at the point of selection and complete the cut, placing the card, which was immediately above the spectator's on the face of the pack.

Place the pack, on the table, glimpsing the face card, in the process. Ask the spectator to show the card around but to make sure that the computer does not see it (nor you, for that matter).

Assume, for the sake of clarity, that the card that you have just glimpsed is the Five of Clubs. You know, immediately that the spectator's card will be the Eight of Hearts. However, you do not even need to work this out for yourself. The computer will do it for you. All that you need to do is to pick it up and turn it towards yourself, as you switch on. Quickly press 5, press 'def' key and press C. The following will then happen. You place the computer down with the display towards the spectator. Firstly it will say, "Please concentrate" then "A red card . . . let me think." A slight pause, followed by "A medium value card." Another pause and then "The Eight of Hearts!"

Had the glimpsed card been the Nine of Spades, you would have pressed 9 'def' S. This would have resulted in, "Make your mind a blank.. That was quick!.... Definitely red.... A high sort of card... Queen of Diamonds!"

Do this once or twice, naming random selected cards. Finally, choose a likely looking victim and have him simply think of a card. This time all that you need to do is to press the 'def' key and X. This will produce the following:—

Hello there!... What is your name?" Here the spectators name is entered. "Let me think ... Not a picture... Not the joker... Six of Clubs!!... No?... Are you sure?... It must be the Six of Clubs!.../@£&&'()£@/+&& Aw, Sod it, spectator's name!!"

TRIANGLE PREDICTION Ron Lashbrook

Roxy's "Zig Zag Prediction, outlined in Vol 7 No. 8, prompted Ron Lashbrook to send in his version. In this, six envelopes are used instead of four. They are laid out, in a triangular formation as in Fig. 1. The prediction/force is marked with an X in the picture.

A spectator throws a dice and, whatever number happens to land face upwards, is the number to which the performer counts.

The various diagrams explain it all. Simply count as per the numbers marked in on the sketches. The only exception is if a one is thrown. In this case, count backwards, starting at six and ending on the force envelope.

REVIEWS

MARKED Manual of Marked Card Magic compiled by Martin Breese and Ted Lesley. Published by Martin Breese Ltd. 31, Richmond Way, London W.14. Price £4.25 plus postage.

8½" x 11½", Soft bound. Offset printed. 19 pages of text. Designed by Eric Mason, illustrated by Jat. 17 tricks described.

Many years ago, when working in Hamley's magic department, I was given some marked cards to sell. I did not manage to sell very many, purely and simply because I could not find anything much to do with them. There is very little written in magical literature on the subject. This is amazing really. Especially when you stop to consider that the first thing that the layman always suspects a magician of using is marked cards. Really they are like mirrors or the sleeves. The layman explains everything by, "its done with mirrors", "its up his sleeve" or "he uses marked cards". Yet, as we all know, magicians use these things very, very sparingly, if at all.

Such devices can, however, be employed provided that they are used in subtle, devious ways. They should be a small part of the secret, not its entirity. Many of the items, in this book, use the marked pack in conjunction with a stack. This is a lethal combination from which miracles can be made; PHOTOSTATIC REFLEXES by Schybol and Bacia is such a creation. Almost identical in method but totally different in effect, is Rudolph Braunmueller's MASS CLAIRVOYANCE. The former is a close-up effect, wherein the spectator cuts the cards into a number of heaps. The magician names the cards ON THE BOTTOM of each heap by looking at their "photostatic reflexes". The latter is a cabaret presentation, in which the performer names cards, who's faces and backs he cannot see.

DOUBLE THOUGHT by Al Koran is one of the subtlest uses of a marked pack, ever conceived. It has already appeared in print, in "PROFESSIONAL PRESENTATIONS". It is still well worth reprinting here. I saw Koran perform this and can vouch for its sheer impossibility. Not only do you devine which card a spectator selected he also devines the one, which you chose. Very bold and very subtle. Marked cards will never be suspected.

Ted Lesley describes an elaborate but very commercial prediction effect. This is one of the undoubted plums of the book for the stage worker. It is entitled A LETTER BY PUNX. It is more of interest though because of the way, in which a prediction is placed into a sealed envelope, under the eyes of the audience (Very reminiscent, in some ways of Koran's GOLDEN MEDALLION) than for its use of marked cards.

Ted Lesley achieves his finest hour, for my money, with an item called MEMORY. The basic effect, if you boil it down, is that a spectator puts a card, face down on the table. The magician looks at the back and tells him what it is! It may seem childish, when it is put like that. There are, however two things which make it work. One is the presentation story. The other is a throw off, of such devilish and inspired ingenuity that I fell about laughing at its sheer audacity. You could only use it on the same audience once but, as Al Leech said, "Of such bold malarkey is real magic made."

The final item is by Roger Crosthwaite. Quite why it has been included in this book, I am not sure. It does use marked cards but they are E.S.P. cards and only five different designs. It is a first class development of its genre but has somehow found its way into the wrong book (in my opinion).

To sum up, I would say that this is a worthwhile book. I wish, that it had been written ten years ago. I could have made good use of it, in those days and would have sold a lot of marked cards. Perhaps it will inspire one or two other people to develop a few ideas with these much neglected tools of our trade.

In his introduction, Martin mentions that he has some excellent marked packs, made by Ted Lesley. I have not actually seen or handled these, so I cannot pass an opinion. Any kind of marked pack will serve to perform the magic, in this book. Recommended.

Re-Issue: The Last Word on Cards compiled by W. F. (Rufus) Steele. Published by Magico Magazine, P.O.Box 156, New York, N.Y.C. 10002-0156. Price six dollars plus postage.

In these days of cheap, offset printing, when every babe in arms seems to be rushing into print with his latest book of wonders, one is forced to question the necessity of reprinting some of the forgotten titles of yesterday. Does it make sense to add to the weekly avalanche of new publications by throwing in a few old ones? The answer to this question must lie in the quality and availability of the revived material. If that is the case, then there is every justification for reprinting this particular one.

The original first appeared in 1952. There are fifty-seven pages of text; no illustrations and fifty-two tricks are explained. Obviously, some of the items are not as good as others. Some of the descriptions, especially those explaining the few moves, are not easy to follow. Once or twice, one felt that a simple sketch would have been worth several hundred words. However, having said all of this, let it be noted that the book contains several very fine items of card magic, many of which are seldom if ever seen today.

If I had to pick out the one item in the book, which most impressed me, I would plump for THE MAGIC CARD SQUARE by Bert Allerton and Robert Parrish. Consider this for an effect. The magician invites a spectator to cut off half of the pack and to put it in his pocket, without counting it. Nobody knows how many cards he has. The performer then hands him a few more cards, which he either holds or lavs aside. Next, sixteen cards are dealt onto the table in four rows of four, forming a solid square. The cards are turned face upwards, when they are seen to form a magic square, adding up to the same total vertically, horizontally, diagonally and in twenty-two different ways. The total formed by the square is not the same, every time that you do the trick. Finally, for the knockout finish, the spectator takes the cards out of his pocket and counts them. He then adds the small number, which the performer handed him at the beginning. The total of the two is the same as the universal total of the magic square. The whole thing is self working. The spectator's cut decides the total of the square. The performer does not have to know how many card this is.

Having written the above, I am not saying that this is the most commercial item in the book. Far from it. SURPRISE QUICKIE by Don Alan, in which a spectator suddenly ends up holding his own chosen card and DAMMIT by Audley Walsh, where a wrong card turns into the right one, visibly and without any sleight of hand, are both worthy of inclusion in any professional performer's show.

For the person, who likes smut magic, CUPID by Paul Rosini has endless possibilities, while for the mentalist THE ZODIAC CARD MIRACLE of Eddie Fields or Lu Brent's AUTOGRAPHIC MINDS are both blockbusters, in their different ways. Also by Lu Brent is PREDICTION SUPREME. This is a version of Vernon's THE TRICK THAT CANNOT BE EXPLAINED. Brent's approach tightens this up somewhat, by using the sort of dodge that everyone will kick themselves for having overlooked.

For those, who like to give pseudo gambling demonstrations, Rufus Steele's own LECTURE WITH A COLD DECK, is a fine example of a stacked pack routine, in the same mould as the VERNON POKER DEAL and J. K. Hartman's ALL HANDS ON DECK.

There is plenty of other good stuff in the book. Marlo's AFFINITY springs to mind—a very nice idea this. There is also material by Eddie Joseph, Al Leech (several nice ideas), Bill Simon, John Platt, Bob Nelson, Bob Hummer, Jacob Daley and Oscar Weigle.

It is very refreshing, these days, to find a book of exciting, stimulating card magic, which has no Elmsley Counts, Ascanio Spreads, Atfus Moves and the like. The back cover bears the wording "This is a fifty dollar book". Whoever wrote that is dead right. At six dollars it is a give away. Every enthusiast should own a copy of this book. If you have not already got it, then now is your chance.

"Sleights and Swindles" by Jack McMillen. Distributed by Jeff Busby, 10329, MacArthur Boulevard, Suites 5 & 6, Oakland Cal 94605. U.S.A. Price 8 dollars, post paid.

These are really lecture notes. There are approximately 15 pages of typescript, duplicated and staple bound between heavy paper covers. There are ten items in all. Eight are with playing cards.

What I liked best about this material was the fact that, although most of it is devised to fit patter centred around gambling and card sharping, it gets away from all of the stacked pack "I can deal myself a winning hand" type of thing. The other appeal lies in the fact that none of the items require any real degree of digital dexterity. Mostly they centre around simple sleights, self working principles and lots of showmanship. Admittedly a bottom deal is necessary, in one effect. However, a very simple one, suitable for the item in question is given.

To me, the two "plums" of the book are "The San Francisco Shuffle" and "Don't Ever Bet on a Sure Thing". The former is a demonstration of "false" shuffling, where a red and black separation is maintained throughout. The interesting point about this sequence is that, although it purports to be a demonstration of phoney shuffles, in fact the shuffles are genuine. There are no Zarrows, Strip Outs or the like. Indeed, the payoff comes, when the spectator himself shuffles the pack and still the red/black separation is maintained. This is an amazingly subtle routine and, believe it or not, practically self working. No fake cards are involved.

The "Don't Ever Bet . . " routine is a demonstration of the Three Card Monte. It includes a very easy, workable version of the "dog-eared" card and climaxes with the complete vanish of the Lady/Ace.

Despite the abbreviated style of writing, based on the assumption that readers will have seen the author's lecture. I found this to be perfectly comprehensible and had no difficulty in sorting things out. Well worth reading.

The coin in bottle is, of course a classic trick. For the lay public it is just about the strongest effect possible, using coins. There are a few others, of equal imapet - the stack of coins through a spectator's hand for instance - but not many.

Johnny Thompson's routine consists of a neat but fairly standard Coin in Bottle followed immediately by a repeat, in which the coin goes into the bottle, while the bottle penetrates the table. Basically, the principle is the well known one of vanishing a glass, wrapped up in a newspaper.

The two effects sit well together and I have no doubt that the impact of the whole routine is very strong indeed. Before reading this booklet, I would have said that the standard Coin in Bottle was untoppable. Johnny Thompson shows that this is not so. He does it and then tops it, with a finish that will leave the audience reeling.

This is very good magic; it does, however, have some limitation. You will need to perform while seated at a table (there is some lap work). You cannot have anyone behind. You will also need two spectators to assist, one sitting on your right and the other on your left. Obviously this is magic for a formal occasion and not of the any time, anywhere variety. Given those conditions, the effect will be a winner.

For your money, you will receive an 18 page, illustrated booklet which clearly details the whole thing, exactly as performed by the originator. You will also get two beautiful, injection moulded, plastic Bottle Vanish gimmicks. One is for use with brown bottles, the other for green. There is none supplied for clear bottles, so the routine needs to be worked with a coloured one. The gimmicks are perfect in colour and appearance. They also have a peg on the base so that they can safely and easily be correctly placed. They are made by Norm Nielsen and, of course, have hundreds of other uses, apart from this presentation.

No folding coin is supplied.

This routine represents a good investment for anybody, who regularly works under the conditions specified above. I do not think that it would take too much ingenuity to develop a stand up version either.

WARNING

Sending money overseas is a risky business. The risk of loss or damage is considerably higher than within the British postal system. Readers are advised to check with British dealers first. Both Geoff Malty at Repro and Martin Breese have regular overseas trading links. It is very possible that they, or Don Wallace of Magic Books by Post, can obtain many of the books etc, mentioned in these reviews. Maybe they already have them in stock.

COMPRESSION Lawrence Frame

Effect

This is a routine, which Lawrence has used for some time. Basically, it is a version of Dai Vernon's "Twisting the Aces". The climax, which makes it very strong for laymen, is when the last ace shrinks, in the spectator's own hands.

Requirements

Needed are four aces and one miniature (patience size) ace of spades. Try to get one, with a back to match the other cards.

Set Up

With the cards face up, arrange them in the following order. On the face of the packet is the ace of diamonds. Beneath this is the ace of spades. Next comes the ace of hearts and lastly the ace of clubs. Trapped between the aces of hearts and clubs is the miniture card. It is also face upwards.

Working and Presentation

Bring out the packet and fan it, face upwards between your hands. In the process, the left fingers buckle the bottom card (ace of Clubs). This enables the right fingertips to enter into the space, below the ace of hearts and clip the miniture card against its back. During the actual action of buckling, it will be found that the left fingers can feel the edge of the small card and square it up, against the base of the thumb. This will position it correctly for the sequence and also enable the right fingertips to "know" exactly where to find it.

Do not hold the cards in a fan for too long. Just allow sufficient time for the audience to perceive that there are four aces present. The reason for this is that you must next turn the packet face down and, by buckling the bottom card, with the left hand, turn over all of the other cards, as one, disclosing the ace of spades. This is supposed to be the top card of the packet. Had the faces of the cards been seen for too long, the audience would have had time to realise that the ace of clubs should be on top.

When you turn over the block of three cards, plus the small one, the latter will ride along quite happily, inside the others. Place the block face up, square on top of the single face down card, in the left hand. Call attention to the ace of spades and explain that it is a very difficult card to control. As you say this, peel it off the packet, at the same time, turning the left hand palm down, at the wrist. This, of course, turns over all of the cards, in the left hand and hides the fact that more than one has been reversed. Hold the ace of spades, in the right hand, as the left turns over.

The right hand replaces the ace of spades, face upwards on the bottom of the left hand's face up packet. This is exactly the same as in the standard version of "Twisting the Aces". Turn the left hand palm up, once more. The face down ace of spades will be on top, hiding the fact that the aces of hearts and clubs, as well as the miniature card are all face up.

Place the right hand over the top of the packet, as though you were going to palm it. Give it a slight squeeze and then, position it for the Elmsley Count. Do not do the Vernon twisting procedure, as in the standard version. The reason why not will become apparent later. Execute the Elmsley Count. The small card will not interfere with this, nor will it be seen. The audience will be aware of three face down cards and a face up ace of hearts.

Replace the packet in the left hand. Repeat the squeezing business, then execute another Elmsley Count. This time the ace of clubs will appear to have turned face up. Also, during this count, the small card will arrive at the bottom of the packet and lie loosely on the right fingers. This will occur as the left thumb pushes over the block. With the right fingertips, pull the miniture card downwards, so that the fourth card, in the count can be placed on the bottom of the packet but above the little card. This will leave the face up ace of clubs on top.

Carefully replace the packet into the left hand, keeping the small card underneath. Turn over the top three cards as one, apparently putting the ace of clubs face down.

The above moves will leave the miniture card face up, beneath the packet and the ace of diamonds face up, second from the top. Repeat the business of squeezing the cards, then perform a Jordan Count. During the count, the ace of diamonds will show as being face up. The miniture card will automatically end up above the ace of diamonds, which will finish as the bottom card of the pile.

The left hand reaches across and draws out the face up ace of diamonds. This is turned face down and replaced on the bottom of the packet. Care must be taken not to drag out the miniture card with it. This action will leave all of the cards face down, except the little one, which is face up and second from the bottom.

Adjust the packet, so that it is held by the right hand, from above, with the fingers at the outer short end and the thumb at the inner. The left hand comes over and the thumb draws off the top card, while simultaneously the fingers pull off the bottom one. This is not a secret move. The audience should be aware of the fact that there are two cards, being pulled away together. What they should not be aware of is that the left fingertips have engaged the miniture card and are pulling it away as well. At the finish, there will be two face down cards in the left hand with the face up small card between them. The latter is, of course, unseen.

Bring the left thumb over, once more and peel off the top card, in the right hand. Take it on top of those in the left. Finally, take the last card (ace of spades) and, without allowing its face to be glimpsed, place it on top of the packet. You have apparently shown all of the cards to be face down. Square the packet, getting a little finger break below the top card. Repeat the squeezing business but, as you do so, palm the ace of spades from above the break. Do this under the guise of showing the spectator what he is supposed to do. Finally, hand the packet to the spectator and have him squeeze them. Ask him to fan the cards. Not only has the ace turned over, it has also shrunk. Say, "you must have squeezed them too hard.

The Page boy speakş....

Are first impressions always best? I've always thought so. I was looking through an old notebook of mine in which I used to keep notes of the effects I performed. Hold it. Let me start again. When I first started performing an act of magic as opposed to doing the odd trick, I kept a record of every show I did. Things like the date, the place, the fee, and a list of the effects performed at that show.

I never made a note of how the act registered, as long as the act went reasonably well I thought it was a success. The real disasters I will remember to my dying day, and there are a few which I will come to in a moment. Back to the note book. I kept this record of effects etc. because I had read in a magic book that one should always keep such records just in case the act was rebooked at that venue. If that happened all you had to do was to open the book, see what tricks you had performed, and change the the act accordingly. Change the act? I had sweated blood rehearsing the few tricks I had and never realised how difficult it was going to be putting together a new bunch of effects.

I remember once turning up to perform at one place to discover that I had to perform two acts. Two fifteen minute spots, and I had one act lasting that long; but I did it. I had to. I needed the morey.

Back to the notebook. On looking through it I realise I am still performing two of the effects I was doing then, thirty years ago.

Last time out I mentioned The Sugar Cube Trick as performed by Haba Haba Al in Chicago. There is a parallel there with my two tricks. The first time I saw Al do it he knocked me out. As long as I live I will remember the effect he had on me. He was doing something I had never seen before and although I knew the method instantly as it had been around since the dawn of magic, he was doing things with it that were completely new to me. This is why I ask again, Are first impressions always best? I still say yes.

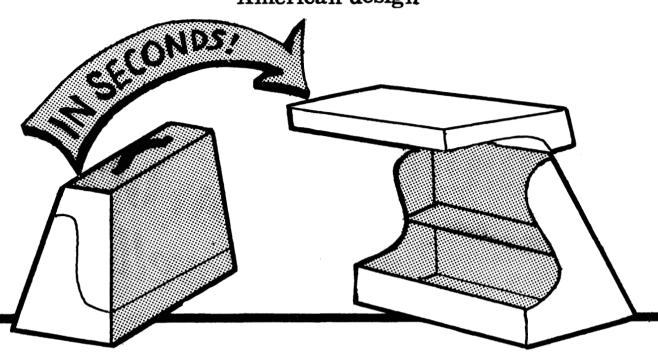

Back to the notebook. One of the effects I did then was the levitation of a glass of beer. It was a very good closing trick. It had a nice introduction to it patterwise, the effect was very visual, and it had a great applause pulling finish as I drank the beer and the pianist gave me a glissando to point it up, followed by a heavy chord in G and then played me off.

One night disaster struck. Halfway through the routine the thread broke. The glass dropped to the floor like a rocket, smashing all over the stage, glass and liquid everywhere. I had no finish to the act. I apologised meekly and walked off. The guy who owned the place was mad. The girl singer who was following me was mad. I must have been mad to think it was a good trick and now I suddenly remember why I stopped doing it. First impressions. Bull . . .t.

close-up case

Brilliant new American design

Direct from the United States, a revolutionary new design of Close Up Case. You can carry this smart black leatherette covered attache style case anywhere.

The ingenious design enables you to open up the case and provides you immediately with a working surface complete with close up pad. All of your props are conveniently to hand in the case below the table top.

When this case is used on top of an ordinary table the working surface is just the right height to enable you to work standing up. The working surface is a generous 19inches by 11 inches.

When closed for carrying, the case measures 13inches by 19 inches by 8inches deep.

Useful for almost any situation and absolutely ideal for Restaurant and "Table Hopping" work.

Very highly Recommended. Available from stock.

INTERLACED JUMP Ian Land

Inspiration and Points of Reference

Jon Racherbaumer suggested a plot, in which three selections, interlaced amongst the four Aces, vanish and appear between four Kings, One of the earliest routines to follow such a line, known to Ian, is Edward Marlo's "Flight of Three". This was described in "Kabbala", Volume 1 Number 10 (June 1972). The Marlo routine was inspired by Lin Searles' "Pre-Cannibal Cards", which can be found in "Epilogue" 14 (March 1972). In this version, the second four of a kind was kept secret, until the climax.

In "Pabular", Volume 6 Number 7 (1980), Steven Hamilton and Peter Duffie outline a version, which gets closer to the Racherbaumer problem. In this, both fours of a kind are seen at the beginning of the sequence. However, one is inserted into the pack and the latter comes into play, to a large extent.

The first published version, known to Ian, which isolates the two packets and does not involve the rest of the deck, is Marlo's "Interlaced Transposition". This appeared in Marlo's Magazine", Volume 4 (1981). It is this routine, which inspired Ian's. Much of the mechanics came from Marlo's "Interlaced Vanish — First Method" from Volume 3 of "Marlo's Magazine" (1979)

Effect

Four Kings and Four Aces are shown. The Aces are placed on the table. Three selected cards are placed between the Kings, being interlaced with them.

Instantly, without any recourse to going near the pack, the cards vanish from between the Kings and appear among the Aces. The whole thing is tremendously clean and very startling.

Requirements

A pack of cards

Preparation

Nil.

Working and Presentation

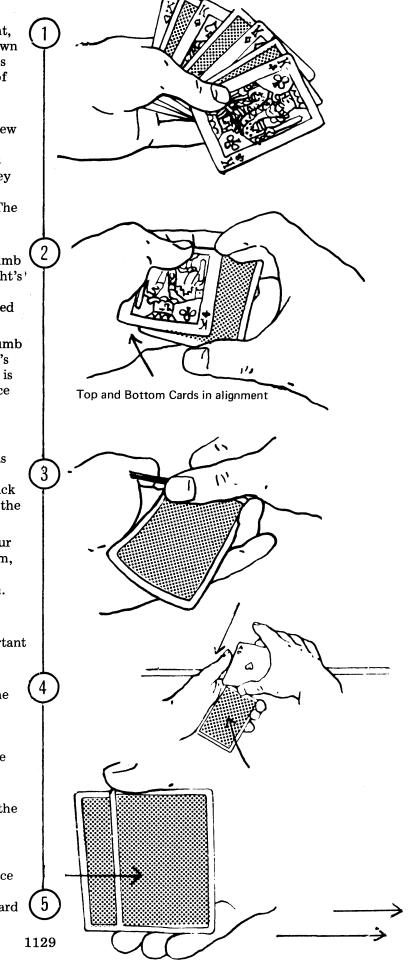

- 1) Run through the pack and throw out the four Aces. Place them on the table, in a face up pile, to your right. The red Aces are on the face of the pile, with the blacks beneath.
- 2) Remove the four Kings. Place them in a face up pile, slightly to your left.
- 3) Spread the pack, face down and allow three people to each remove a card. When the three cards have been selected, place the pack to one side. It is not used any more.
- 4) Take the four Kings, in a fan, face up in the left hand. Interlace the three selected cards, alternately with the Kings. This position is shown in fig 1. Bring up the right hand and hold the packet, spread between the two hands. The three Kings are face up, the chosen cards are face down.
- 5) Close up the packet. In the process, do a half pass with the lowermost card, turning the face up King, face down. The position will now be, from the top of the packet, downwards: face up King; face down selection; face up King; face down selection; face down selection; face down king. The audience believe all of the Kings to be face up.
- 6) Using the left fourth finger, secretly obtain a break, above the lowermost card. Bring over the right hand, to take the packet, holding it from above. The fingers are at the outer short end and the thumb at the inner. The tip of the thumb takes over the break and keeps it, as the packet leaves the left hand.
- 7) The left hand comes below the packet, so that the thumb can be placed on the face, as shown in fig 2. The thumb draws the face King away, into the left hand. At the same time, the left finger tips, beneath the packet, "milk" away the bottom card, taking it along with the King from the face and perfectly aligned with it. It is easy to keep the two cards in perfect alignment, so long as the forefinger acts as a guide, as shown in fig 2. The other fingers line up the long sides of the two cards by pressure against the base of the thumb.

- 8) Once the card(s) clear(s) the right hand packet, the left hand returns to draw off the new face card(first selection) from the right hand's packet. As it does so, the two cards, in the left hand, go momentarily beneath the packet. They are seized à la Biddle move, by the right finger and thumb tips and held beneath the packet. The left hand moves away, with only a single, face down card.
- 9) The left hand returns once more. The thumb peels off the new face card (King) from the right's packet. This is taken on top of the face down card, already in that hand. A break is maintained between the two.
- 10) Return with the left hand, so that the thumb can peel off the next card from the right hand's packet. This is a face down selected card. As it is taken, the right fingers and thumb seize the face up King, above the break and retain it on the bottom of their packet. This is the standard Biddle move.
- 11) The next face up King is treated exactly as was the previous one. It is taken into the left hand. A break is kept beneath it. It is stolen back onto the bottom of the right hand's packet, as the next face down card is drawn into the left.
- 12) At this point, the right hand is holding four cards, which are supposed to be one. Place them, as a block, on top of those in the left. Keep a fourth finger break, immediately beneath them.

All of the steps from 7) through 12) should be executed at a brisk, even tempo. As with most false counts, rhythmn is more important than anything else. There must be no pauses, hesitations or fumbles.

- 13) Under cover of squaring the packet, get the three cards below the break into the Gambler's Cop position (fig 3). The right hand then lifts away the packet and places it down. The left, meanwhile, comes to rest at the rear edge of the table top.
- 14) Pick up the Ace pile, with the right hand and draw it off the rear edge of the table, into the waiting left hand, as in fig 4. This is a standard technique and will place the three selections, face down, beneath the Aces.
- 15) The next few moves are to secretly interlace the three selections with the Aces, under cover of showing the latter. The technique is by Edward Marlo and was first published in Hierophant 2 (see the third method in "Alternatives for the Collectors", for details in depth).

In brief, the packet is held by the right. hand, from above in exactly the same manner as for steps 7) through 12) above. As the packet is taken into this position, a break is obtained above the lowermost card, exactly as in step 6). This is held by the right thumb.

16) With the left thumb, peel the top card from the face of the packet in a manner similar to that shown in fig 2 earlier. The left hand then returns to peel off the second Ace, on top of the first. As this is being done, the bottom card of the packet is also released so that it goes between the two Aces. This is a sort of reverse Biddle Move. Thus the first selection has been secretly sandwiched between the red Aces. The patter for this is simple, say, "Here we have one, two red Aces. .". Do the move and place the three cards as two face up on the table. Continue the patter, "... and two black Aces." As this is said, peel the first black Ace into the left hand, in the same manner as before. In doing so, milk the bottom card from the packet along with the Ace. This is the same move as described in step 7). The right hand will be left holding two cards as one. Place these on top of the double card, in the left hand. Place the four cards on top of red Ace pile, on the table.

To the audience, you appear to have merely displayed the four Aces. In fact the selected cards have been interlaced between them. The position at this point will be. On the table is a seven card packet containing four Aces and three selected cards interlaced. The Aces are face up, the chosen cards are face down. The audience believes this packet to contain only the Aces.

There is also a second packet, containing four Kings. The second one from the face is back upwards. The remainder are face up. The audience believe this packet to contain the four Kings, interlaced with the selected cards.

The next few moves are designed to once more show the selected cards, between the Kings and then to cause them to vanish in a sudden and unexpected manner. It utilises a Marlo count, described in Marlo's Magazine, Volume 3 (1979). To maintain consistency, it is done from the Biddle grip.

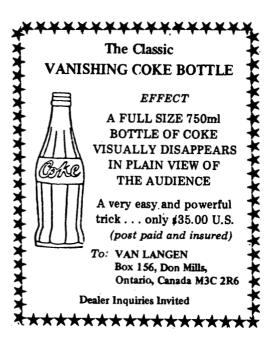

- 17) The packet is held as in step 6). As it is taken by the right hand, the left contrives to slide the bottom card slightly to the right. This is shown in fig. 5
- 18) Peel the top card into the left hand. The next two cards are peeled off as one. This is rendered simple by the fact that the card below them is side jogged slightly. As the second card(s) is (are) peeled off, so the left fourth finger holds a break beneath it (them).

- 19) Peel off the last card from the right hand but, as this is done seize back the two cards, above the break, with the right fingers and thumb. This is a standard false counting technique. Also, keep a left fourth finger break between the two cards, remaining in the left hand at this stage.
- 20) Peel the next card from the right hand. Then as the final card is taken from the right, seize back the two above the break. This is the same move as in step 19). Finally, genuinely peel off the last two cards. Perform this count briskly and the audience will see four Kings and three face down cards.
- 21) Square the packet. Turn it face down. Snap the cards. Perform an Elmsley count. All of the cards will appear to be face down. Only four will be seen.
- 22) Under cover of the startling vanish in step 21), while the audience react, quietly reverse the bottom card. Turn the packet face up showing four Kings only.
- 23) Pause for a moment and then ribbon spread the Ace pile, revealing the face down cards between. Turn these over, one by one calling attention to their identities.

End Notes

Ian does not always use the vanish described in step 21). He sometimes prefers Marlo's "interlaced Vanish" steps 15 to 17, as described in Marlo's Magazine, Volume 3 (1979). Readers may care to check this out.

The Half Pass, which Ian uses is the Christ Twist, as described on page 509 of Lorayne's "Best of Friends" (1982).

EDITORIAL

July 1983

This edition sees the first one-man issue for some time. It is by Ian Land. Ian's work will be known to readers of "Pabular", "Spellbinder" and other publications. He is both a prolific writer and developer of good card magic. He has been a regular contributor to the magical press for several years now, which is surprising, when you consider that he is still at school. Do not let that put you off, though. He knows more about magic than many people of twice his age. I can vouch for that. I am more than twice his age and he knows far more about cards than I do!

Readers will notice the meticulous care, with which Ian traces back and credits his sources. He is very particular about doing this, mainly I think, due to the influence of one E. Marlo, who's every word he avidly devours! However, he does not confine his studies to this one source. He seems to have a filing cabinet of a brain, which can instantly recall names, dates and ideas from just about every book and magazine around.

Anyway, it is nice to know that, with young men like Ian Land around, the future of magic is assured.

The last ten days or so have seen the arrival of The Budget, The Linking Ring, Magigam, Spellbinder, The Magic Circular, a couple of Abracadabras and Scaratika. (This latter is the magazine of the Sheffield Circle of Magicians and is edited by Al Smith. It is a first class read full of straight from the shoulder stuff and few punches pulled: worthy of a much greater circulation.)

The general election is happening as I write this. All the daily so called "news" papers are crammed full of party political clap trap and frankly not worth reading. I personally stopped reading the papers years ago and decided instead to spend the money on books and magazines. In those days, a newspaper cost 10p a day, six days a week. That is over £30 per year. I expect that they cost more now. Think of that, £30 just to buy somebody else's political opinions and to have the truth twisted and distorted to show this or that party in the best/worst light! Is it worth it? Much better to cancel the papers now and spend the money on books and magazines, which are worth reading. Come to think of it, I have for sale...

Barrie Richarson was over here from the States, on his annual visit. We were able to meet a couple of times. He promised me a few more items but, unfortunately had to leave before I could collect them. Hopefully, when he reads this, he will drop them in the post.

Roberto Giobbi, from Switzerland, is over here for a little while. He has some beautiful card magic and has promised us some. Well worth looking forward to.

Only a short editorial this month (no need to cheer quite so loudly). The prolific Mr. Land has pushed/squeezed me out.

SECOND DIRECTION

Inspiration & points of reference:

"Twist"/"Collectors" combinations are becoming fairly popular. The first method to be published was by J. C. Wagner, and appeared in Paul Harris's book, Supermagic (1977). Wagner's method uses a 7-as-4 packet (6-as-4 is passable, but 7-as-4 is, under most performing conditions. a case of one card too many looking and feeling like several cards too many). Robert Walker cleaned this aspect up by adding a gaff. The result was "Collectwist," published in Sticks & Stones 12 (December, 1977). Dave Solomon, working from Walker's method, developed "Collectwist 2" (an ungaffed, 6-as-4 method), which was published in Sticks & Stones 14 (February, 1978). Jon Racherbaumer also published a method, called "Aces Turn to Collect," in Lorayne's Best of Friends (1982), although this method was developed some years before it was finally published. Only having knowledge of the Wagner and Walker methods, I developed a handling called "A Twist of Direction," which was sent to Roger Crosthwaite, Walker and Racherbaumer in December 1981. This version will appear eventually as one of Roger Crosthwaite's Advanced Lessons in Exclusive Card Magic.

The following was the second method I developed for the effect. It was devised at the instigation of Walker & Racherbaumer. It has some similarities to Solomon's "Collectwist 2," although it was developed independently, and also to a routine of Walker's called "The Optical Concept," which will appear in his forthcoming book, Turning Tricks. Again, it was developed independently of Walker's routine.

Finally, you will note that this routine makes a good lead-in to "Interlace Jump."

Procedure:

- 1) Run through the pack and throw out the four Aces face down onto the pad. Shuffle the pack and have three cards noted by three different spectators. Control them to the top of the pack.
- 2) Holding the pack in left hand Mechanic's Grip, reach for the Aces with the right hand. Flip them face up onto the top of the pack, and using the pack as a "table," arrange the Aces in CHSD order from face to back, As you do this, obtain a left little finger break beneath the top two cards of the pack.
- 3) Square the four Aces with the pack, and then lift off the six cards above the break as four, in right hand KB Grip, side-squaring the packet between your extended left fingers. Table the pack to the left.
- 4) Peel the AC into your left hand with the left thumb, followed by the AH, and then the AS. Place the AD (a "triple") on the face of all as one card. Turn the packet face down and perform a Mechanic's Grip Elmsley Count, showing four backs. Try to make this count an "audible" count.
- 5) Perform the Through-the-Fist Move, secretly turning the packet over. Elmsley Count, showing the AC face up. Perform the Through-the-Fist Flourish, not turning the packet over, and perform an Underground Elmsley Count (last card to bottom). The AD & AC show face up.
- 6) Through-the-Fist Flourish, without turning the packet over, and then reverse count the cards one at a time into the left hand, as if doing the Elmsley Count, i.e., do not do this count from KB Grip—this is inconsistent. The last card is a "triple" and the AS turns face up.
- 7) Repeat the non-reversing Through-the-Fist Flourish and then Siva Count, showing all four Aces face up. Do this count slowly, so that all four suits show. Obtain a left little finger break

- above the rear card (a selection) by a buckle or pulldown, and transfer this break to the right thumb as you take the packet from above in right handKB Grip. Peel off the face card into the left hand, pattering, "The AC turned face up . . ." Peel off the AD onto the AC. "The AD turned face up . . ." Peel off the AS. However, as you do so "drop" the "broken" card so that it is stolen beneath the AS. Place the double card in the right hand (showing as the AH) on top of all, as one card, pattering, ". . . and the AH turned face up!" You have interlaced two of the selections. Position from the face of the packet: AH face down selection AS face down selection AC AD.
- 8) Create a left little finger break above above the lowermost card and transfer this break to the right thumb as you take the packet from above in the right hand. Pick up the pack with the left hand and hold it in Mechanic's Grip, obtaining a left little finger break beneath the top card.
- 9) As you place the Ace packet onto the top of the pack the last selection is alternated.

10) Rub the centre spot of the AH with the right index finger in a magical gesture. Spread the top seven cards to reveal the "collection." Finish as usual.

End Notes:

- 1) You can seen from the above that pretty much any "Twist" routine that uses two extra X-cards can be a "Twist"/"Collectors" combo.
- 2) Walker has an idea that eliminates the necessity for the alternation technique at step 9. His routine, "Cutting the Collectors Down to Size," may appear in Turning Tricks:

3) A card problem. In a letter to Walker dated August, 1982 I suggested a "Twist"/" combination (i.e., a version wherein the Aces have blue backs and the pack (and selections) have red backs). I detailed to him a method dated 3rd April, 1982, called "Twisted Ambush." I subsequently developed a method called "Red Chamber Dream," which was described in a letter dated February, 1983. Walker has several methods, one of which, called "beyond the Paleface," will appear in Turning Tricks. You may like to work on a method.

"...A MOUTHFUL OF AIR"

Inspiration and points of reference:

"... a mouthful of air" was inspired by Solomon/Marlo's "Solmar Reversed Acembly" from Marlo's Magazine Vol. 4 (1981). It is an Ace Assembly in which, at the climax, the Aces magically "disassemble" (i.e. return to the faces of their original packets). Allan Ackerman's version of the trick, entitled "Reassembled Finale," is perhaps the most popular version (it appeared in Paul Harris's Close Up Fantasies Book Two). I prefer the Marlo and Solomon methods (which appear in both Vol. 3 and 4 of Marlo's Magazine), and the methods published by Racherbaumer, Castillon and Korem in The Lost Pages of the Kabbala (1981). These lastnamed use four Jokers instead of Aces, which makes for easier handling.

The following is not completely impromptu, since it uses a duplicate card; however, the "return" is made very magical by this simple addition.

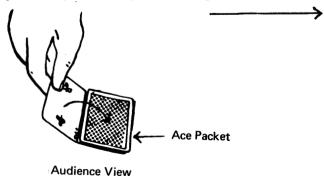

Requirements:

- 1) A pack of cards.
- 2) A duplicate AC, the back of which matches the deck in use..

Procedure:

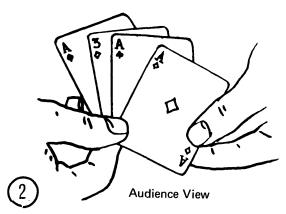

1) Perform several effects with the regular pack. When the time comes to perform this, add the duplicate AC to the top of the face down deck. (Note: Alternatively, you can have the duplicate in the pack from the start.)

- 2) Necktie the pack. Run through the cards, culling the four regular Aces to the face, in H, D, C, S order from face to back. Tilt the hand downwards so that the spectators can see the face of the pack, and then stud deal the four Aces into a face down pile on the table. Turn the pack face down as you patter that you need twelve more cards. Spread off and remove the top fifteen cards, without reversing their order, and table the remainder of the pack. The duplicate card is on top of the fifteen card packet.
- Turn the packet face up, obtaining a left little finger break above the two rear cards, via a Double Buckle or Pulldown. You are now going to count the fifteen cards one at a time into a face down packet on top of the Aces, showing only twelve. To wit: Deal off the face card, taking it into the right hand, which grips it with the thumb on top and fingers beneath, at the right longitudinal edge of the card. Flip the card face down onto the Ace packet as though closing a book backwards (see figure 1). Count "One." Repeat this for the counts of two, three, four, five, and so on, up to ten. For the eleventh card, actually take all the cards above the break (three) as one card, handling it (them) in exactly the same way as the previous cards. The last card is a "double," and, again, is handled in the same way. On the table you apparently have twelve X-cards on top of four Aces; actually, you have fourteen X-cards and a duplicate AC. (Note: This deal-down handling is Marlo's "Double Flip Down." It is a nice casual handling that will be used again.)
- 4) Pick up the packet, turn it face up, and hold it in right hand KB Grip. Obtain a right thumb break above the rear two cards.
- 5) As you peel off the AH into the left hand, steal the two "broken" cards beneath it. Peel off the AD on top of the AH, gaining a left little finger break beneath this card. Peel off the AC onto the AD, increasing the number ofccards above your break to two. As you peel off the AS, steal back the two "broken" cards (AD and AC) to beneath the right hand packet. The left hand cards consist of, from the face, the AS followed by the AH, an X-card, and the duplicate AC.

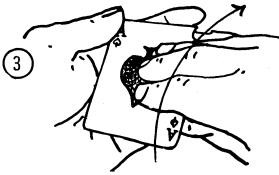

- Table the right hand packet and turn the four Aces (?) face down.
- 6) Deal the top three Aces (?) into a right to left row on the table. Turn the AS ("leader" Ace) face up, and place it below the row, in standard "T" formation. Pick up the twelve X—cards (?), holding them in face up right hand KB Grip. Obtain a right thumb break above the rear two cards.
- 7) Peel off the face card into the left hand, stealing the two "broken" cards beneath it. Peel off the next two cards fairly. Apparently you have merely peeled off three cards. Table the right hand packet and use the right hand to flip the AS face down in position. Turn the left hand palm down and place the left hand's cards face down onto the leader. Pick up the right hand packet.
- 8) Peel the next three cards fairly, and place them face down onto the Ace at the right of the row. Repeat for the Ace in the centre of the row.
- 9) You have four cards in the right hand. Peel the face two cards into the left hand and place the double remaining in the right hand on top of all, as one card. Apparently, you have just three cards. Place these three (?) cards onto the Ace at the left of the row.
- 10) Pick up the leader packet, turn it face up, and spread it (briefly) as four, holding the last three cards as one, as you make explanatory patter. Square the cards, turn them face down, and table them in leader position.
- 11) Pick up the packet on the left of the row. As you say "One, two, three X-cards and the first Ace," execute an Elmsley Count, holding the last card of the count (apparent Ace) in the right hand (assuming that you count from right hand to left, using the Mechanic's Grip). Place the apparent Ace on top of the packet, in position for Findley's Tent Vanish. Execute that move, and "crumble" the first Ace over the leader packet. Turn the left hand packet face up and perform a nice wide Single Buckle Spread to show that the Ace has gone. Square the face up packet, and gain a left little finger break above the rear two cards. Turn the packet face down in a sidewise manner, maintaining the break. This will automatically angle-jog the two "broken" cards to the left. (This is a standard move.) Transfer the face down packet to right hand KB Grip, maintaining the angle jog. As you count "one," nip off the two angle-jogged cards as one into the left hand. Follow up by counting the last three cards normally into the left hand. You have shown four cards, and the AH is now on the face of the packet. Drop the packet face down into its original position.

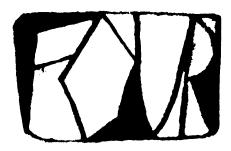

- 12) Pick up the leader packet, turn it face up, and Single Buckle Spread, showing two Aces. Take the AS with the right hand and flip it face down onto the pad, a la the "Double Flip Down" (step 3). Repeat with the second card, and the third card (which is a triple). The last card, the AD, is treated in the same way.
- 13) Vanish the Ace (?) in the second (centre) packet. Since there is no Ace in this packet, this should not tax your ability too much. (however, do not make the vanish look too easy). Table the packet back in position. Pick up the leader packet, turn it face up, and Double Buckle or Pulldown, Now, you are going to do a reverse fan, like this: The AS is dealt over and taken in the right hand at the outer right corner. Take the next three cards as one (aided by the Double Buckle) onto the AS, under the right thumb. Deal over the AC, and then the AD, jamming them under the right thumb, to form a reverse fan (see figure 2). Turn the fan face down as is, square, and place it back in leader position. (Note: The handling of the leader packet at steps 12 and 13 is Dave Solomon's. See "A Change in Handling," Marlo's Magazine Vol. 4, p. 349).
- 14) Pick up the packet at the right of the row. Patter, "One, two, three cards and the Ace." As you say this execute the Elmsley Count, holding the last card of the count in the right hand. This card is apparently the Ace. Place the Ace (?) on top of the packet, again in position for the Tent Vanish. Perform that move, and once more "crumble" the "Ace" over the leader packet. Deal the four left hand cards back into position via Marlo's Olram Subtlety, bringing the AC to the face of the packet.
- 15) Pick up the leader packet, turn it face up, and Elmsley Count showing four Aces. Injog the third card of the count. Square up the packet, obtaining a right thumb break beneath the injogged card as you push it flush. Lift up on one more card, and transfer your break to beneath this card. Now "milk" out the double card beneath the face card in right hand KB Grip, holding the two cards aligned, and place it onto the face of the packet. Apparently you have merely transferred the AS to the face of the packet.
- 16) Turn the cards face down and hold them in right hand KB Grip. As you patter that only three Aces have passed (all except the AS), peel off the top three cards, one at a time, into the left hand. Revolve the triple card in the right hand face up on top of all, showing the AS. Turn the triple face down, and deal the top card of the packet onto the top of the packet at the centre of the row. Table the leader packet.

- 17) Pick up the centre packet, make a magic gesture, and flip it face up. Deal the four (?) cards into a face up packet, handling the last two as one. Pick up the packet, turn it face down, and Elmsley Count. Table the packet back in its original position.
- 18) Pick up the leader packet and Double Turnover, showing the AS has returned. Grasp the double with the thumb on back and fingers on face (figure three) and turn it face down end-for-end, placing it beneath the packet. Turn the packet face up and thumb off the AS to the pad. The AC shows beneath, and everything looks fair. Turn the packet face down and Single Buckle Count, bringing the AC to the top.
- 19) Flip the AC face up on top of the packet, gaining a left little finger break beneath the second card as you do so. As you apparently take the AC in the right hand, actually take two as one, in position for the "'Left-About' Change" (a.k.a. Snap or Sleeve Change). Perform that move, changing the AC into an X—card, immediately bringing the double back to the packet and replacing it on top. Turn the X—card face down, turn the packet face up, and Partial Ascanio Spread (Kabbala Vol. 2, No. 3, and The Ascanio Spread) to show three X—cards. Drop the still-spread cards onto the table. If you do this properly the double card will not spread.
- 20) Turn over the other three packets to show that the Aces have returned. Either ditch the duplicate AC at your leisure or use it in another trick.

BACK PALM

Inspiration and points of reference:

Yet another version of Alex Elmsley's influential "Between Your Palms." This one came from reading Richard Kaufman's "Palms for the Poor," in his book, CardMagic (1979). The magician who has perhaps published some of the best work in this field is Edward Marlo, and some of the handling of the following comes from Marlo's "More!" (in Kabbala Three, 1976). The aware reader will realise that there is nothing astonishingly new in the following, but it flows well.

Requisites:

- i) A red-blue double backed card;
- ii) A red backed 7H;
- iii) A blue backed deck, with its case.

Setup:

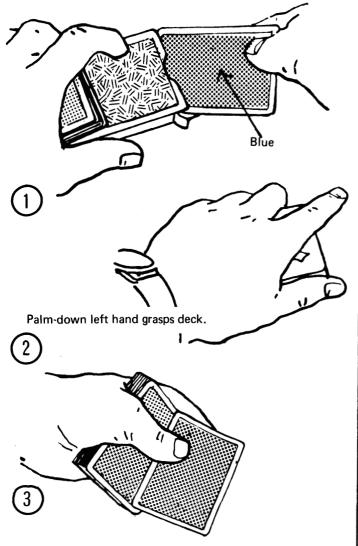

Down crimp the lower left corner of the faceup red backed 7H. Place the double backed card on top of the face up crimped 7H, red side upwards. Place these two cards as a squared unit in a convenient pocket (your shirt pocket is ideal). I prefer not to use a tatty plastic wallet: your pocket is fine.

Procedure:

- 1) Perform a few tricks with the blue backed deck. The card case is to your left, flap upwards and open. When the time comes to perform this, quickly run through the necktied deck and cut the 7H to the face. Hold the face up deck in the left hand, slightly necktied.
- 2) Reach into the pocket with the right hand, and bring out the double card (red backed 7H and double backer) in KB (Kardyro-Biddle) Grip, the red side of the double backer upwards. Patter, "This is a prediction. Notice that it is a red backed card and we are using a blue deck." Place the double card onto the face of the deck as you remove a marker pen from your pocket with the right hand. Table the pen.
- 3) Thumb off the double backer into the right hand, which takes it with the thumb on - the "face" (ie, the blue side) and fingers on "back." Don't worry about the 7H showing on the face of the deck. Turn the left hand and deck palm down, and use this hand to pick up the flap up card case. Tilt the left hand (still back up) towards you, as in fig. 1 (a performer's view) and insert the double backer into the case as shown. The audience are looking at the red side of the double backer, but when the case is placed flap up onto the table, with flap end towards you, the card is blue side up.

- 4) Turn the deck face down (the crimp is on the inner right corner) and shuffle, keeping the bottom two cards in place. Have two cards freely selected, without disturbing the bottom two cards. Get a left little finger break above these two bottom cards, and swing cut about half the cards to the bottom. Thus, your break is in the centre of the deck.
- Riffle Force to the break, cutting the deck at the point at which you are apparently stopped, bringing the "freely selected card" to the top. Do an end-for-end Double Turnover, showing the 7H. Ask a spectator to sign this card with the marker pen. Grasp the double card with the right hand at the inner left corner, thumb on back, fingers on face. Lift the double card and turn the right palm towards you, turning the double card face down end-forend. Riffle down the deck with the left thumb and insert the double card face down somewhere in the middle. Square the cards. The crimp should still be towards you. (Note: So far, all this is the same as Kaufman's original. See CardMagic pp. 117-118 if you want fuller details.)
- 6) Perform a false shuffle, keeping the two cards in the centre intact. An Overhand Shuffle technique is best: I particularly recommend Laurie Ireland's shuffle, which is described in many sources and is well-known.
- Get a left little finger break above the crimped card. Pick up the first selection and insert it face down into the break, from the back, a la Tilt. Square up, and repeat the Ireland Shuffle. Get a break beneath the crimped card and insert the second selection into the break. again a la Tilt. Square, and repeat the shuffle if you like. Get a break above the crimped card, drop one card, and cut at the break, completing the cut; however, as the right hand cards are placed beneath those in the left hand, buckle the bottom card of the left hand portion and feed the right hand cards between the buckled card and the rest of the packet. This brings the blue backed 7H out of play, second from the face of the deck. Square the cards.

- 8) Get a break beneath the top card of the deck, and turn the deck face up, performing the Mechanical Reverse (see Epilogue, The Card Classics of Ken Krenzel, or The Complete Works of Derek Dingle, p. 27.). Alternatively, turn the deck face up and then Halfpass the rear card.
- 9) Reposition the deck for Forten's PopOut Move, keeping the crimp towards you. (The PopOut Move can be found in many places: good descriptions are in The Book of John, Pabular, February 1977, and Walt Lees' The Complete Walt Lees Cannibal Act.) Perform that move to produce the reversed rear card of the deck. Let this card drop to the pad, and reassemble the deck, right hand portion going beneath the left hand portion. Square the deck and hold it in face up in the palm down left hand, as in fig. 2. The crimp is to the left.
- 10) With the right hand, flip the produced card face up to show the first selection. Pick up this face up card with the palm down left hand: the card is picked up beneath the deck. Turn the hand palm up. The face down first selection covers the red back of the 7H.
- 11) Hit Double Lift, moving the top two cards off to the right. With the aid of the left hand (still holding the deck) insert this double card into the card case, beneath the double backer. The flap of the case is towards you and this is an easy matter. Leave the case on the table, flap still open and towards you.
- 12) Produce the second selection (top card of the deck) in any way you like. Try to be as spectacular as possible. The "Pivot Revelation" (see The Card Secrets of Bruce Cervon) is good. Insert the second selection face down into the card case, on top of the double backer.
- 13) Patter, "And now the signed 7H." Fail to find the card a couple of times. Finally, ask the spectator to cut the deck. Turn over the cut to card to reveal another failure.
- 14) You are still holding the face down deck in the left hand Mechanic's Grip. Patter, "I found the first two selections." With the right hand reach for the card case. Keeping the case tabled, and with help from the left hand (and deck) remove all the cards from the case but the bottom one. "To accomplish this quickly your right fingers pull out the bottom card slightly so that it is outjogged. This enables your right fingers to shift, push down and away on the jogged card, and remove all the cards above." (Kabbala Three, p. 23.) The cards you remove are thus being held by the right hand at the inner short end. Place these cards on top of the deck, jogged to the right (see fig. 3). Regrip the cards at the right long side, thumb on top and fingers beneath, a la Elmsley Count grip. Do the double pushoff associated with the Elmsley Count, pushing the top two cards of the three card packet onto the top of the deck as one card. Turn over the right hand card to show one selection. Drop this card to the table. Turn over the top card of the deck to show the second selection. Drop this card onto the table. This is a smooth and quick sequence, and ditches the double backer onto the top of the pack.

3 card packet, clipped on top of deck.

a red backed prediction card into the case, before you even selected your cards. Remove the card and look at it." The spectator removes the prediction card to reveal, astonishingly, that it is his signed selection. As the spectators are recovering (and if your patter properly emphasises what has supposedly happened, this is genuinely shocking) you have all the time in the world to dispose of the gaff. Alternatively, leave it in the deck (it won't interfere unless you are doing effects that require a 52 card deck) and use it later.

Endnotes:

- 1) Alex Elmsley's original routine can be found in Abracadabra 335 (June 1952). The idea of using a card case instead of a spectator's palms appears to be Roy Walton's; see "Card Case" in The Devil's Playthings (1969).
- 2) Latterly, wallet versions of the trick have become very popular (Ed Brown is credited with this notion). Wallet versions appear in Kabbala Three, Jon Racherbaumer's Lecture Notes 1, and The Last Hierophant.
- 3) The interested reader may like to study Marlo's "Signed Card In ---", which is found in Hierophant 3.

TECHNICOLOUR DEPARTURE Ian Land.

Inspiration and points of reference:

Lately, many four card versions of Alex Elmsley's "Point of Departure" have become popular. There was Martin Nash's "Down the Garden Path" from "Ever So Sleightly" (1975); Phil Goldstein's "Palm Off" from "Scattershot" (1977); Earl Nelson's "Between Your Points of Departure" from "Variations" (1978) and Roger Curzon's "Variations Variant", published in "Spellbinder" (Volume 1, No. 8 — December 1981).

This method applies a couple of new conditions. Firstly, the selected card must be signed on both sides. Secondly, the four of a kind, which are used, must have different coloured backs.

Set-up

Assuming that a red backed pack is being used, from the top down there should be:—

- 1) Any card, face down.
- 2) Any card, face up.
- 3) King of Diamonds, face up.
- 4) The balance of the pack, face down.

The King of Diamonds (3 above), should have a small sticker, on the centre of its back. This you have previously initialled. You could write directly onto the card, if preferred. This would, however, deface it.

Also required are three blue backed Kings. These are Clubs, Hearts and Spades; in that order from top to face. This small packet is placed in a convenient pocket, until needed. Also required are a packet of stickers, similar to the one which marks the King of Diamonds and a pen, which writes with the same coloured ink.

Procedure

- 1) Table the pack, face down.
- 2) Bring the three blue backed Kings, from your pocket. Hold them face down and perform a 3 as 4 Elmsley Count., showing 4 blue backs. (A three as four Elmsley Count is no different from the usual one, except that only three cards are used, instead of the usual four. The movements are identical, except that, on the count of "two" a single card is pushed across, instead of the normal two or more. The audience will see four cards.)

Flip the packet face up and do another 3 as 4 Elmsley Count, showing four Kings. The King of Hearts is seen twice but this is never noticed.

Turn the kings face down and place them on the table. Have the spectator place a hand over them. Do not place them between the spectators palms or put them into his hand. If this were done, there would be a danger of the "missing" one being noticed.

3) Pick up the pack. Spread it face down, between your hands, taking care not to expose any face up cards. Visually and verbally emphasise that the cards have red backs.

Turn the pack face up. Reverse Double Undercut the indifferent card from the back of the pack to the face. This means that the reversed cards are now on the bottom of the face up pack.

Spread the face up cards, between your hands, keeping the bottom few tightly bunched. Have a card selected and placed face up, on the table. Square up the pack and place it down, face up, to the right. Take care not to flash the reversed card(s) on the bottom.

4) Get out the stickers and the pen. Take one sticker and place it onto the centre of the face of the selected card. Have the spectator initial it.

Flip the card face down. Attach a second sticker to its back. This should be located as closely as you are able to the position of the sticker on the King of Diamonds. Initial the sticker yourself, trying to duplicate as accurately as you can, the signature, which you made earlier.

5) Pick up the face up pack, from above by the ends. Do this with the right hand. Place it in top of the face down selected card. Pick up the card, on the bottom of the face up pack, then turn the hand over. This will turn the pack face down and bring the selected card, face up, onto the top. Place the pack into the left hand Mechanic's Grip. Tap the sticker, on the face of the card and say, "You have initialled your card, on the face . ." Triple turnover, the top three cards, as you continue, ". . and I have initialled it on the back."

Thumb the top card (apparently the selection but really the prepared King of Diamonds) onto the table. Keep it face down. The real selection is second from the top.

- 6) Place the pack to one side. Pick up the face down King of Diamonds (supposedly the selected card) and ask the spectator to lift his hand from the King packet. Push the King of Diamonds into the blue backed packet, without allowing its face to be seen. It should go in third from the top. When this has been done, have the spectator cover the pile once more.
- 7) Make a magical gesture, do a voodoo dance or whatever. Ask the spectator to once more lift his hand. Pick up the King packet and Elmsley Count it, face down. The last card of the count goes to the bottom of the packet. The latest jargon for this is the Underground Elmsley Count, a term coined by Bob Walker. Anyway, four blue backs will show, the red card having seemingly vanished.

Turn the packet face up and show the four Kings. Use Marlo's Olram Subtlety, while showing the Kings. This will appear to allow the four blue backs to be seen once more. In fact, only three have blue backs and one is flashed twice. Do not verbally mention the colour of the backs. This will be visually apparent to the spectators. Also, do not be tempted to add additional "proving" actions. These will only serve to create suspicion.

- 8) Casually pick up the pack. Give it a false shuffle and cut as you patter, "It looks as though your card has vanished. Let's try and find it." As this is said, the selected card, which is second from the top, is reversed secretly and cut to the centre of the pack. One method of accomplishing this is to double undercut the two top cards to the bottom, thereby placing the card on the face of the pack. From here it can be reversed by means of a normal Half Pass, or, as Ian prefers, Marlo's Bottom Reverse, described in Alton Sharpe's "Expert Card Mysteries. (This is also in "The Card Secrets of Bruce Cervon" (1976), which is number one in the series "The Real Work". A straight cut brings the reversed card to the centre.
- 9) Turn the pack face up and, after snapping your fingers, ribbon spread it across the table. A face down card will show in the centre. The sticker, with your initials, will be plain for all to see. Have the spectator remove the card and turn it over, Have him verify the initials, on the face and remove the stickers. While this is being done, quietly pocket the four Kings. You now have a clean pack, minus the King of Diamonds.

End Notes

a) Ian prefers to use a second red backed pack and to perform one or two effects, prior to this one. The prepared pack is then switched in, at the appropriate moment. He uses Mel Brown's Joker Switch, from an old M-U-M. This is redescribed in "Arch Triumphs" and credited to Frank Pemper. It also appears in "Marlo's Magazine", vol. 4 (1981), in the routine "Commercial Poker", where credit is re-established to Mel Brown.

Of course, the pack switch can be eliminated, by prefacing this effect with a few, which do not interfere with the set-up. Another alternative would be to have the three card stack in a convenient place and palm it onto the pack, when required.

- b) If the spectator chooses a King, have him select another card, instead. Explain that you are using the Kings from another pack and do not wish to create any confusion.
- c) As an alternative to having the card appear face up in the pack you could use any revelation that you care to, within reason. The card is second from top, a position from which endless variations are possible. One natural would be to have another card chosen, which is obviously not the one. Point this out and execute the Kaufman/Krenzel "Secondfromtop Change" from "Cardmagic" (1979). This will visually change the indifferent card into the vanished selection.

You could, of course, contrive the appearance of the card in your wallet, pocket, a cake, Watford . . . etc.

d) In his book "Means and Ends", Jerry Hartman has a "cannibal" type effect, entitled "A La Card". This is also reminiscent of "Point of Departure", using fours of a kind.

ERROR ERROR ERROR

In Volume 7 Number 7 we published an effect by Al Smith called "Pointing the Way". Unfortunately, the last three paragraphs were accidently lopped off. The really horrendous thing is that nobody has written to point this out!!

Presumably some readers must have gone through the item. They must have been left wondering quite what was the effect, which they were supposed to be creating. For their benefit and also to perhaps draw the attention of readers to a very good piece of magic, once more, here are the missing paragraphs.

Actually the foregoing is quite straightforward and very easy. There is nothing for anyone to see — and your next actions confirm what you have apparently just done.

Table the deck, leaving your right hand holding two cards as three. Mention the three, and show all three as follows: Take the two cards in dealing position in left hand. With right hand, point to JS and name it. Turn both cards over, revealing (for the first time in a while) the complete face of the JC. Name this jack, too. Turn both cards over once again, thumb off the (face-up once again) JS and take it in the right hand. Using the JS as a pointer, top the back of the JC and miscall it the selected card, which, since you have seen it, you can name also. Handled casually, no one will deny that the card you are pointing to is the card you call. After the rigourously fair procedure you have gone through, it is to be the selected card. It cannot possibly be anything else! (?).

You are now in a position to conclude. Very openly, and very carefully make a suitable magical gesture, call the spectators attention to "three" cards, and finally, peel the two black jacks apart showing the total disappearance of the selected card. Then, just as openly, pick up the deck, and spread the cards across the table to reveal face-up in the midst of face-down cards the vanished selection, to wind up a very subtle mystery.

Taskenspilleren.

Well, at last it happened. The much publicised show "I" finally opened at the Piccadilly Theatre in London's West End. By the time it opened the title had been changed to "Y". Arturo Brachetti the the star of the show was no longer directing it but he was still the star.

The Page boy speaks....

This is a very difficult show to describe in that it is a very odd-ball type of production with a series of almost totally unrelated scenes broken by either a rather ineffectual M.C. type, or by a girl singer. She was a girl called Nicola Kimber who was Brachetti's co-star, and whilst she was very good I thought she was very badly served by the production in that she had to follow some unbelievable theatrical numbers.

The magical content of this show is minimal, so if you decide to go and see it don't expect to see lots of magic tricks, because there are some, but not many. This show was an attempt to bring something different to the London Theatre and it succeeds in that it is quite different to any other show that you have seen. As I have said it was a series of scenes and inbetween each one there was an attempt to involve the audience which didn't quite succeed.

Let's get back to the magic, because let's face it, that's all you are interested in. Brachetti produced a girl in a cage, and that was that. Later there was a scene from Venice in which Brachetti played the part of Casanova. It was in this guise that he performed a few small magic tricks. As usual I didn't make any notes and this is all from memory. He changed a walking stick into what seemed to be a long feathered thing. He produced one dove, vanished it, or perhaps it would be better to say changed it into a white handkerchief. He then changed the handkerchief back into the walking stick. All nicely done but not exactly sensational. In a later scene entitled 'Horror Story' which was mish-mash between Dracula, Frankenstein's Monster or whatever, Brachetti performed the sword through body on a young girl. This was very very effective, and frankly I didn't catch the switch of the sword but there was so much going on it would be difficult for anyone to spot it unless they watched Brachetti alone during the whole of the scene. Later in the show he performs his own act, a quick change act, and in the course of that there is a little more magic. The Zombie floating ball using a large eye, and there was an illusion that best be described as a 'switch', in that Brachetti in the guise of an old man draws a picture on a large sheet of paper, the old man ducks down behind a sort of dressing table thing and Brachetti in full evening dress bursts through the paper sheet.

Still later in the show came a levitation. Brachetti made his entrance centre stage through a sort of arch in the guise of a clown and he was levitated upwards in an upright position. From there he revolved completely, perhaps more than once, and then started floating about the stage in what must be the most spectacular levitation I have ever seen. I was at the back of the theatre and it looked unbelievable because as he was being levitated he was moving forward and much closer. Because of the lighting the gimmick involved was totally invisible and he floated up and around, all over the stage, almost right up into the flies and almost from side toside of the stage. It was so good that I am tempted to think that most of the audience thought he was actually flying on a wire and not presenting what we would normally think of as a levitation.

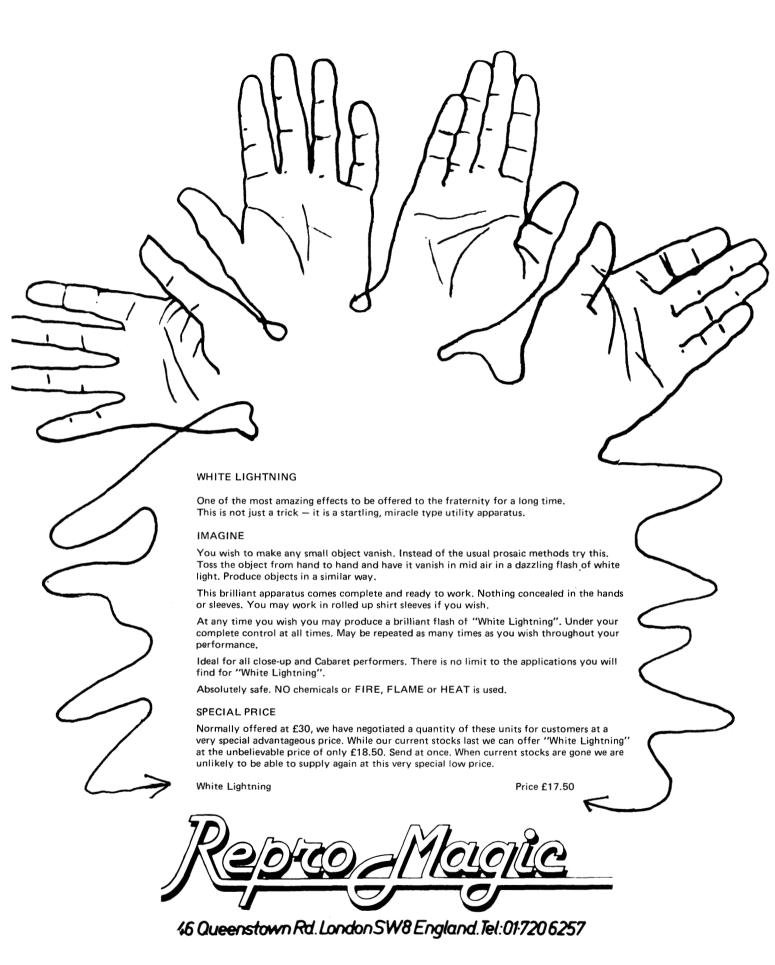

Well, magicwise, that's about it. From there how do I switch to telling you that it is not difficult to see where the money went in this show. Newspaper reports stated that the production was to cost somewhere between £1½ and£2½ million but after something like four months it had escalated to something like four million pounds. The money obviously went in the production, the sets, the scenery and the costumes, the like of which have probably not been seen in a London theatre, at least not since I've been living here and that is a little more than thirty years. The production numbers were sensational and I think maybe this was one of the faults of the show. The only person in the cast who really registers as an individual is Brachetti himself. He is an excellent performer and in his own specific spot, the quick change act, he is quite unique.

A lot of the music and vocals are all taped, though they have a live orchestra there. And perhaps for someone of my age the volume is a little too loud. But that is not a critiscism just an opinion.

If you are interested in theatre or musicals this is a show you must see. The dancers are out of this world and as the evening went on they seemed to enjoy it more and more and get better and better. A show worth seeing and they certainly have succeeded in bringing something different to the London Theatre. I like it.

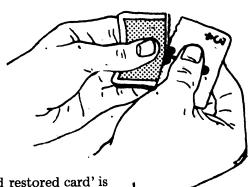

Goodbye,

Patrick Page

AMBIDEXTROUS Stephen Tucker

The origin of the 'Torn and restored card' is sadly last in obscurity. I have my methods, you have your's so why do we need others??.... WE DON'T!! Still, that shouldn't stop you from trying out the following unusual approach. You'll need a regular deck, but with every performance TWO cards will be destroyed. With this in mind I'd advise you to borrow someone else's deck and not use your own.

Have a card selected and control it to the top of the deck. Explain that you are about to perform the amazing 'Two card trick'.

Explain that you will show the spectator two cards, one of which will be his BUT you don't want the spectator to say anything unless you specifically ask him.

Double turnover to reveal a card (Not his.) Flip the double face down and table the top card. Cut the deck and simulate the double turnover by simply flipping the new top card face up, then down and then tabling it atop the other card.

The spectator THINKS that neither of the two cards is his. Pick up the cards and in the process reverse their order so that the actual selection is now atop the other card. Both cards are face down in your hand. With the cards squared fold them in half, then unfold ONLY the outer selected card and tear the card (s??) completely in half. It should appear that you have folded both cards and then torn both in half. Place the single half beneath the other two pieces and the situation is Folded card, followed by the two torn halves of the selected card which are face up. Turn the torn?? packet over and Elmsley count to display 4 apparent half cards all face down.

Appear to now count two of the pieces into your right hand, but in reality you simply perform the Elmsley count again, but retain the last 2 halves?? in your left hand. Explain that you'll place two halves in each hand and show them the 'Two card trick.' Make a suitable gesture with the right hand and then show that the 2 halves?? have mysteriously joined together. "That's the first part of the amazing '2 card trick'." you say and then offer to repeat the miracle with the halves in your other hand. Repeat the magical gesture, then show that nothing has happened, by displaying two halves face down. Repeat the gesture, but the halves refuse to join together.

Apologise and explain that you always have trouble with the second card, so you'll try something different Ask if either of the card was the one selected and when you receive a negative reply say "Well that would have been too much to ask wouldn't it??" continue with . . . " Here, let me try it anyway. What was your card?" Once the name of the card has been given click your fingers and display the two halves face up and somehow they will be seen to have changed into his selection.

NOTES I do have various methods for restoring both cards and indeed I showed one to Phil Goldstein back in December after Ron's day. Some of you may think that the 2nd effect (THE CHANGE.) is an anti-climax, so did I.... Until I tried it out on a Layman!! Borrow a deck from a magician at the next convention, show it to him and just watch HIS reaction!!!!!

EDITORIAL

Readers may notice—in fact are almost certain to notice—that this edition of Pabular is a little different from the previous ones.

A change in style, so to speak. The fact of the matter is that I am writing the editorial under false pretenses. This issue has, in fact, been edited by stephen Tucker.

Stephen will be well known to many readers, already. He is, after all, the founder and editor of "Spell-Binder", one of the most interesting close-up magazines around.

It has long been an open secret that I have been looking for somebody to take over the editorship of Pabular. Not because I do not want to do it myself - I do. Unfortunately, though, there are only twenty-four hours in a day and only three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. I need those hours and days to do other, more pressing tasks; annoying distractions like running my business and earning a living. Editing a magazine is a very, very time consuming affair. Much more so than many people realise.

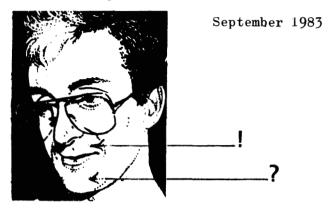

It was around about the end of 1982 I first began to realise that it would only be a matter of time, before I had to relinquish editorship. I also realised that editors do not grow on trees. They are rather like taxis in London. There seem to be plenty when you do not need one, but try finding one when you do!

For six months I went around, dropping broad hints to anybody, who I thought might be interested. However I did not want to just pass Pabular on to any Tomini, Dickini or Harryini. It had to go to somebody who I felt could maintain the standard and, who had sufficient push/pull/nouse to get the right sort of contributions from the right sort of people. Such a person, as already been said, is not easy to find.

The search seemed to be a fruitless one. None of the people who I approached took the bait. I had more or less given up hope of ever finding anybody, when Stephen came on the scene and offered to do the job. I have never thought of him as a potential, simply because he already had a successful magazine of his own. He assured me however, that he would be able to take on another, thereby releasing me from the position.

I would like to thank all those people who have helped with their contributions, and advice behind the scenes, during my three years in the hot seat. If I had to name names, the list would go on for ever. The time has now come to remove the plastic eye shade for the last time; to button up the open fronted waistcoat; to stub out the cigar in the overflowing ashtray. No more will I have to leap from the ancient desk and run to the door shouting, "Hold the front page!"

And so I say goodbye. Also adding my best wishes to one and all. Welcome to Stephen Tucker, under whose guidance, I'm sure the magazine will soar to new heights.

Pleased to meet you, I'm Stephen Tucker and before we go any further I have one or two complaints!!

I'm writing this in my new office at the Pabular Building. Now look I can put up with having the smallest office in the place, I can even put up with continually banging my head on the chain but I draw the line at the never ending flow of visitors!!

I have a few other complaints but my Doctor's taking care of those. A couple of months ago when I first accepted the awesome task of running two magazines at the same time, I was told that I had to change my ways; no more wise-cracks; no more school-boy humour. I was told this by my superiors and after due consideration I decided that I would change my image so the next time you see me, you'll notice that I have shaved off my beard and moustache and my hair is real short now I'm afraid that's as far as I'm prepared to go!!

Further issues of Pabular will obviously be a little different than previous ones. This is not a bad thing but don't get me wrong, I'm not going to turn it upside down and transform it into a magical version of the Beano.

On the contrary . . . The illustrations will still be done by friend Eric Mason, the format and style of the magazine will remain the same and even I will bear hommage to Pabulars of old.

Let me translate the above rantings I'll maintain the high standard of Pabular and, if possible, increase it!

It will take me a few issues to get the feel of things so bear with me and be gentle!! I'd like to thank all the contributors to this issue and I look forward to hearing from you all with any ideas, routines, effects etc. that you might have tucked away in some ageing note-book.

Till next issue

A SWEET CIGARETTE Richard M. Gamble

Whilst playing around with the Polo mint and shell type Jardine ellis ring, (Available from Roy Roth.) Richard found that a cigarette fits exactly down the hole in the mint. He then came up with the idea of producing a cigarette from a packet of Polo Mints cleverly disguised as a packet of Refreshers.

Ed... For those not familiar with these two types of mints, let me explain.... Polo Mints are the ones with the hole drilled through their centers and Refreshers are multicoloured mints that have no holes.

Effect

The performer explains that he has been trying to give up smoking and he finds that if he eats a Refresher, it curbs his need for a cigarette. However, when he takes a sweet it seems that he isn't having much success as a cigarette suddenly appears from nowhere!!

Preparation and working

You'll need a packet of Polo Mints and a packet of Refresher mints. You'll also need a cigarette (Preferably No:6 brand.) and a cigarette lighter in your left pocket.

Start by removing the outer wrappers of both packets, (Richard uses a kettle to steam them off.)

Now open one end of the Polo Mints Silver wrapper and insert the cigarette, tip end first down the hole in the center.

The cigarette should protrude for about ½". Crumple the foil around the end of the cigarette, you may need to trim off any surplus foil.

All that remains is for you to affix the Refresher wrapper around the gaffed Polo Mints.

You now have what appears to be a normal packet of Refreshers. In reality a cigarette is hidden down the center of the Polo Mints that are within. You can introduce the packet of Refreshers and will find it quite a simple matter to hide the ½" of cigarette that is protruding from the gaffed end.

Performance

Explain how by eating a Refresher you don't feel like smoking and as you patter, remove the packet of Refreshers?? and show them. Place the packet into your right hand in such a position that you can grip the protruding portion of the cigarette with your little finger.

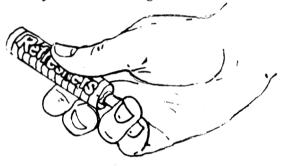

You take the packet into your left hand but the cigarette remains in a kind of finger palm in your right hand. Place the packet into your left pocket but be careful not to flash the gaffed end. At the same time pick up the cigarette lighter.

Put your right fist to your mouth and by keeping the hand cupped around the cigarette it will not be seen.

Light the lighter, (Which seems to appear from nowhere.) and light the cigarette.

Draw on the cigarette and then remove the right hand to show the cigarette, which also seems to have appeared from nowhere.

Ed.... I don't smoke but I can see that this short routine would play very well and should raise a few eye-brows and laughs!!

FORCING A DATE WITH CARDS Paul Hallas

Whilst toying with the Cornelius 'MAGICIAN'S DATE BOOK.' Paul started thinking about forcing dates with playing cards. Although this has been done before, here is Paul's approach.....

Set-up

Set a three way forcing deck so that the three values are repeated ie . . . 8, 2, Jack — 8, 2, Jack etc.

Working

In performance simply take out the deck, false shuffle it and if you like throw in a few genuine complete cuts.

Hand the deck to a spectator and ask him to cut as many times as he likes and then to deal the top three cards face down to the table.

Take the rest of the deck, case it and pocket it. (That's the evidence taken care of!!)

Explain that the three cards freely? selected will be used to form a date completely at random. Explain that the numerical values of the cards will be used and the Jack will have the value of 11, the Queen a value of 12 and the King a value of 13. Due to the fact that there are not 13 months, you explain that the lowest value present will represent the month and the other two cards are to be added together and will represent the date in the month.

As the 3 way force deck consists of the values 8, 2 and Jack this will obviously result in the 2nd month (FEBRUARY) and the total of the other two values is 8 + 11 which gives us a total of 19. The resultant is 19th of February.

Obviously the date to be forced will depend on the values present in your force deck.

Editor's introduction to Fresh Sliced by Al Smith

Al Smith has long been a friend of mine and I would imagine that his list of friends grows less everytime he sets pen to page. Don't get me wrong.... Al's magic is in my opinion, excellent. I am referring to his frank style of writing. This 'frankness' manifests itself in Al's own magazine 'SCARATIKA'. (This magazine should be on the open market and not reserved for the Sheffield magi!!) Al also has a very frank approach to his frequent book reviews both in Abra and Pabular.

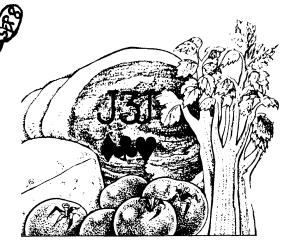

By now you will have worked out that 'frank' actually means TRUTHFUL and the truth is something that not everyone wants to hear!!

The following is yet another offering from Mr. Smith and I for one look forward to many more!!

FRESH SLICED Al Smith

Effect:

A card is selected and returned to the deck (Wow!). Two court cards, say the red jacks, are then lost in the deck — but unlike the selected card the jacks are placed into the deck face-up. Next the deck is split into two halves; one half is turned face-up and riffle shuffled into the remaining face-down half. Card fans will will recognise this as standard 'Triumph' procedure. Almost immediately, the deck is spread face-down to reveal, not a face-up/facedown mixture, but instead, a regular 'all cards facing the same way' appearance. With two exceptions — the red jacks. Somehow, the cards have magically righted themselves, all but the two jacks. To round out the operation, closer examination of the deck reveals one face-down card nestling between the two jacks. It is, of course, the selected card.

Method

Remove the two jacks, and have a card selected, controlling it to the top after its return. Take a little finger break below the card. Pick up the jacks and add them face-up to the top of the deck. Immediately, lift them off again, stealing the selection below them. Thus, instead of just two cards (the jacks), you actually hold three cards. Next:

Slide off the uppermost jack with the left thumb, and replace the jack below its companion. You are seemingly merely displaying the two jacks, but in fact you have managed to sandwich the selected card between the two jacks.

Note: All the foregoing is quite standard card procedure — well used and abused. Hence the spartan description. Now:

Add the jacks to the top of the deck, and square. Proceed to 'lose' the jacks in the following manner. Double-undercut the top jack to the bottom of the deck: that's all. The back of the selected card will come into view after the cut and will serve to convince all and sundry that the cards have been genuinely cut, and that the jacks are suitably ensconced in the centre of the deck.

Cut the deck at the approximate centre, and turn the upper half face-up with a gentle flourish, as if the card you have cut to has some significance. Undercover of this, execute a simple wrist turn with the hand holding the lower section of the deck, and table these cards. A back (jack) will be on view, and the cards will appear to be all face-down. Table the former upper half of the deck — these cards are genuinely face-up and perform a standard closed riffle-shuffle. To all intents and purposes you are shuffling face-up cards into face-down cards — not true of course.

Note: During the shuffle ensure that the FIRST TWO cards of the face-up half (the selection and one jack) are released from the thumb first. And that the face-down jack, the last card, of the other section is released LAST.

When the deck is squared, the order of the cards will be: Face-down jack-face-up deck-face-down jack-face-up selection. Cut the deck as a finale to the shuffle, and the work is done. Spread the cards face-down to reveal, instead of the expected mix, all cards facing the same way, with the exception of the two jacks. And the topper, the single face-down card that is between the jacks is the selection. Retire to tumultous applause and start signing autographs immediately.

Comments: Credits: Chatter:

This is a very simple TRIUMPH effect, but nonetheless very effective. No real effort is required, other than smooth handling. Though having said that, smoothness seems to be one of the few things that would be cardsters bother to practice. The fact that a trick is self-working, or almost so, does not mean that the performer is not allowed to render a little assistance to help the effect along. The whole thing was inspired by a much more complicated idea of Mike Bornstein: See "SANDWICH TRIUMPH" in the book 'TRIUMPH OUTDONE', written by Walt Lees. The Bornstein effect has the court cards placed in the deck face-down, which adds to the problems already referred to, but adds not a lot (I feel) to the overall picture. As usual, you pay your money and take your choice. Bornstein suggests using two kings. The decision to use jacks is an interesting departure entirely original with this department.

"You mean you don't know whether I want the cards, the crystal or the tea-leaves?"

COMB VANISH Mark Weston

Magician enters combing his hair..during this action the comb disappears.

So much for the effect...which can be performed anywhere providing the audience are in front of the performer. Needed is a comb large enough to be seen and colour contrasting with the performer's hair.

Assuming you are right handed it is natural to comb the hair with the right hand...using the left hand at the same time to smooth down the hair. To perform this vanish face the audience front on squarely combing the hair back from the front so that the comb goes to the rear from the front with the comb continuing to comb down the back. At the same time the left palm stroked the hair down on the left side from front to back..... these are natural actions.

Now for the vanish.... Both hands comb and stroke together at the rear of the head ... during this the comb is left in the fingers of the left hand as the right hand continues to comb as if still holding the comb . . . this occurs at the rear of the performer's head. Now the left fingers push the comb down the back INSIDE THE SHIRT . . where it will stay. Still performing the comb action with the right hand, the left continues to stroke the hair after disposing of the comb all in one continuous action . . . then both right and left hand together come forward and BOTH HANDS STROKE THE HAIR WITH THE PALMS at each side of the head . . then the hands come together at the front of the body and the palms are brushed together as if to say "That's that." . . . allow it to dawn on the audience that the comb has disappeared.

ACE SANDWICH Doug Alker

Effect

Four Aces are laid out after being shown on both sides. A card is selected, noted and returned to the deck. The Aces are once again shown and then laid onto the table. Upon spreading out the deck, it is seen that the selection has vanished. The Ace packet is spread and the selection is seen to be sandwiched in the middle. The blockbuster comes when the Aces are turned over and seen to have back designs completely different from the originals.

Preparation

Four stranger Aces with different coloured backs from the deck in use are required. Place them face down on top of the face down deck in the following order . . . (Top down) S,H,C,D. Now place any indifferent card face down on top and make sure that the regular Aces are distributed evenly throughout the deck.

Fan the deck face up and throw the Aces onto the table as you come to them, naturally be careful not to expose the stranger Aces now at the bottom of the deck. With the deck still face up have a card selected. (This can be done with the deck held face down but you'd have to block push over the top 5 or so cards in order not to disclose the odd backed Aces.)

Once the card has been removed, close up the spread and turn it face down. Obtain a break beneath the top 5 cards and cut the deck. Maintain a break below the lowermost odd baced Ace of Diamonds which is now at the center of the deck. You will also need to obtain a break below the indifferent card that covers the odd backed Aces at the center.

The break below the Ace of Diamonds is held by the little finger and the other break is held by the middle finger.

It should merely appear that you have cut the deck and squared it.

Take the spectators card and insert it into the deck from the rear and onto the stranger Aces. When the right thumb has pushed this card home, it lifts off all the cards above the middle finger break and places them below the remainder of the deck.

(Alternatively an easier method may be used As the selected card is shown around, cut the deck and as you place the top half underneath keep a break with the right thumb above the card covering the stranger Aces.

Under cover of squaring up.... lift the odd card up so that you now have a break directly above the stranger Aces. Transfer the break to the left little finger.

Insert the selection into the break from the rear. Cut or double under-cut to the new break which is above the selected card. When you complete the cut obtain a little finger break below the top five cards, (strangers and selection.) by riffle counting with your right thumb.)

At the moment the situation is that the deck is in your left hand and you are holding a little finger break below the top five cards, (Selection atop the four odd backed Aces.)

The regular Aces are still face up on the table and you now pick them up into a face up packet with the Diamond Ace at the bottom of the four face up cards. Square up the Ace packet on the deck and immediately lift off all the cards above the break.

At the same instant the left thumb draws off the face ace of the apparent Ace packet about half way off the packet and towards the deck in your left hand. Flip this card face down onto the deck by levering it over with the rest of the packet in your right hand.

Immediately thumb the card over to the right and take it face down below the face up Ace packet.

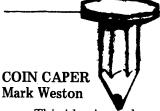

Maintain a break between this face down card and the rest of the Ace packet. Draw off the next Ace onto the deck and take this face down below the Ace packet in exactly the same manner that you did the first Ace, (The break is still held.) Repeat this procedure with the third Ace and then draw the final face up Ace of Diamonds onto the deck. You now appear to take this face down card below the now face down Ace packet in exactly the same way that you did the others but this time you do not remove the Ace of Diamonds under the Ace packet. Instead you release all the cards below the break held by the right thumb in the Ace packet and allow all the cards below the break to add themselves to the top of the deck.

(NOTE I FORGOT TO MENTION THAT EVERY TIME AN ACE IS TRANSFERRED TO THE BOTTOM OF THE ACE PACKET. YOU RAISE THE PACKET AND ALLOW THE FACE OF THE TRANSFERRED ACE TO BE SEEN. YOU THEN LOWER THE PACKET AND TRANSFER THE NEXT CARD ETC.)

The spectators have seen you transfer the final Ace of Diamonds to the bottom of the Ace packet and when you now raise the packet, the odd backed Ace of Diamonds will be seen at the face of the packet and everything will appear capacetic. Table the deck with the deposited regular Aces on top and flip the five card packet in your hands face up. Spread to show the four Aces, keep the last two cards squared as one. Cut the top two face up Aces to the bottom of the packet and table the packet face up on the table.

Pick up the deck and ask for the name of the selection. Spread through with the faces towards yourself and at the same time obtain a break above the four Aces at the rear of the spread. Get them into a Cop position and then flip the rest of the deck towards the spectator and spread so that he can see that the selection is not present. Hand the deck to the spectator so that he can more thoroughly look through. Take this opportunity to pocket the copped Aces and you're clean.

Spread the tabled Aces to reveal the selection sandwiched between them. The spectators think the effect is over but you now show that the backs of the Aces have completely changed. As a final blockbuster Doug carries another deck of cards with the same back designs as the stranger Aces just produced. In the center of this deck he has four Aces that match the back design of the deck just in use. It appears that somehow a strange transposition has taken place between the Aces in both decks. Patter hasn't been supplied as you should have no problems inventing your own.

This idea is used as a gag during a display of coin magic, based on an old spectator con trick. In brief a 50 pence piece is borrowed from the spectator, this is found to be unsuitable for the performer's use and is returned to the loaner in exchange for a Ten pence piece . . . the Ten pence piece is used for the trick. During the above sequence the spectator looses his 50 pence piece without actually knowing, hence the con trick. In this sequence of events the spectator gets his cash back . . . one way or another. Required is a fake 50 pence . . . this is a piece of metal cut to 50p size and near to thickness . . . the metal must resemble a 50p in size and colour (alloy is ideal). The presentation is intimate, at the bar or amongst a few friends, best when all are standing around including the magician.

Presentation

The patter and method of presentation are very important to the result also the timing must be right. During the course of performing one or two coin effects the fake 50p is loaded into the right hand where it is held in finger palm position but across the THIRD AND FORTH fingers only, ask for the loan of a 50 pence piece . . . this is then taken at the tips of the right fingers and thumb, the fingers and thumb turn the coin and twist it around several times as you pretend to weight the coin in the hand as you say . . . "This feels a little bit too heavy" . . next throw the coin into the left hand continuing to feel the weight of the coin the right fingers take the coin and begin turning the coin over several times in the left hand, during this action the genuine coin is exchanged for the fake, the fingers continue the turning action after the switch is made . . . then the magician looks at the loaner of the coin and says "I wonder if you have a TEN PENNY PIECE . . . I think that could be better?" the loaner of the 50p will feel in his pocket and usually produce a 10p piece look him straight in the eyes and as you take the 10p from him give him the fake 50p back. If this is done correctly. . . he will pocket the coin without looking . . . especially as he can feel the coin is the right shape.

So now you perform a trick with a 10p piece then in conclusion as you hand him the coin back you say to him . . "I have just thought of another trick with a 50 pence piece, give me your fifty pence and I'll show you a trick." He will go to his pocket for the coin and remove the fake and before he has time to register that he has been conned you say to him "THAT'S THE TRICK." conclusion.

* * * *

Just to clean up.... Should the spectator give you a second 50 pence piece back instead of the fake.. then you will have to perform a trick with this first then ask him for another 50p in the hope of getting the fake from him.

Should he notice the coin has been switched in the first instance he will take this in good part and recognise that you are just having a little leg pull with him . . . so there is no problem.

For those not acquainted with the origin in the days of real money one could borrow a Shilling piece and switch for a halfpenny. The performance is as follows:—

Magician says . . "Can you loan me a Shilling and I'll show you a trick.?" Coin is loaned and magician places coin on the back of his hand (the magician's hand that is) . . the magician then asks "Is the coin on the top of my hand or the bottom?" Whatever the reply the magician says "Oh wise guy . . . you have seen the trick before.".... spectator denies this . . . so magician continues by turning his own hand face up and placing the coin into his palm . . . again he asks the question "Is the coin on the top or the bottom?" During the above the coin to be switched is in the finger palm position . . this is the half penny and is held by the third and forth fingers of the right hand only thus enabling the first and second fingers to handle the coin on display. At the switch stage the magician drops his right hand to his right side . . looks the spectator in the eye and says "You have already seen the trick . . I can tell." during this the Shilling is exchanged for the halfpenny . . using the BOBO "One hand switch" from Modern Coin Magic chapter Two or any similar switch .. then the halfpenny is given back to the spectator instead of the loaned Shilling. As the spectator is thrown off balance by the patter he will generally pocket the coin without looking even though the colour of the coin is different it is rarely noticed.

Editor's introduction to Alpha Minus by Ian Land

I hope that you've all sufficiently recovered from the last outLANDish issue I haven't!! I'm sure one or two of you will be ready for another smattering of Ian Lands mind shattering card-magic.

You are??.... Good, then take your seats for

ALPHA MINUS

Inspiration and points of reference:

In 1980 I sent several Monte-type routines to Fred Robinson (then editor of Pabular). Most of these were fairly appalling, but the following version (which was not sent to Fred) is the most acceptable of those I devised. You need a regular pack of cards with two identical Jokers.

Procedure:

- 1) Run through the necktied pack and upjog the two Jokers and the QH. Strip out these cards and table the pack. Arrange the cards in Joker QH Joker order. Patter, "I carry a duplicate QH in this pack so that I can show you an interesting quessing game."
- 2) Double Turnover showing a QH. Turn the double card face down and thumb off the top card to the pad. Single turnover showing a second (?) QH. Turn the single card face down and deal it onto the first tabled card, slightly overlapping it. Turn the single card remaining in the left hand face up to show a Joker.
- 3) Patter, "You have to follow the Joker." Place the Joker face up between the two face down tabled cards, forming a "sandwich." Carefully pick up the sandwich and square the cards. Slowly reverse count the cards, asking the spectator to follow the Joker. Ask him to guess where the Joker is. He will probably say, "In the middle" (unless he is a very suspicious type). Spread the cards to show that the Joker is indeed in the middle. Nothing magical has happened yet.
- 4) Patter, "That was too easy." Remove the face up Joker and table it. Quickly Flushtration Count (Brother John Hamman) the two cards remaining in your hands, showing two QHs. Spread the two cards face down with the left hand. With the right hand, pick up the tabled Joker, turn it face down, and insert it between the two QHs (?). Patter, "I will mix the cards slowly." As you say this, mix the cards very rapidly; however, keep your eye on the QH and bring it back to the top at the end of the mixing.
- 5) Ask, "Where is the Joker?" The chances are that the audience will be confused. Whatever they say, turn the packet face up to show the Joker on the face. If they got it right, congratulate them. If they got it wrong, say that you will make it easier by turning the Joker face up again.
- 6) Thumb the face Joker onto the table. At the same time, wrist turn to "kill" the Joker now showing at the face of the packet. Turn the packet face down and spread the two cards. Place the Joker face up between the two cards and square. Make a suspicious move (don't go over the top) and ask where the Joker is. Spread to show it still in the middle. Now, perform a move that is used in Walker/Solomon's "Dunbury Sandwich" (The Last Hierophant (1980), pp. 63-64), to wit: Close the spread and quickly do a Double Turnover as you simultaneously turn your left hand palm down to execute the Through-the-Fist Move. When the cards emerge from your "fist" a face up Joker will show on the face: apparently, the Joker has jumped to the face. Immediately spread the cards, showing a Joker on the top as well. This is the first time the audience has seen two Jokers and they will be confused.

7) Patter, "Well, what on earth is this card (the face down "sandwiched" card) then?"
Turn the sandwiched card face up to reveal the QH.

A CARD TO BE THOUGHT ABOUT Roberto Giobbi

A few months ago I had the pleasure of meeting Roberto and he waisted no time in demonstrating to me that he is a very fine card-man.

Whilst editor of Pabular Walt Lees managed to pursuade Roberto to part company with three other routines — these will be released in future issues

This effect was inspired by an Anneman effect in an old JINX magazine. This version consists of old and more or less well known techniques, principles and subtleties. The overall handling and management however make it a very deceptive trick for laymen . . . and sometimes also for magicians.

Effect

A spectator thinks of a card in a shuffled deck. The magician reveals it in a very clean and direct manner.

Requirements

An ordinary deck of cards.

Preparation

None.

Management and Handling

- 1) Give the deck to a spectator on your right for shuffling. Take the deck back and ask another spectator on your left to cut it.
- 2) Ask the spectator on the right to ribbon spread the cards face down on the table.
- 3) Ask the spectator on the left to draw three cards from different parts of the deck.

- 4) Take these cards and fan them faces towards the spectator on left turning your head away as you do so: "Just think of any one... and please do not forget it. "Display the cards only for about two seconds (you do not want him to memorize all the cards).
- 5) The left hand picks up the deck face down and holds it in dealing position. The right hand inserts the three cards it is still holding together into the middle of the deck. Perform a Diagonal Push-In and follow with a Marlo All Around Square Up. Pause. The left little finger pushes the protruding block flush at the same time obtaining a break above it. Form a step and immediately execute a two handed fan (see Dai Vernon in Ultimate Secrets of Card Magic p. 128).

"You are thinking of one of these 52 cards, do you still remember it?" Close the fan and place the deck face down on the table (the step remains undisturbed).

- 6) Pause. Pick up the deck with the right hand, place it in left hand dealing position the left little finger immediately obtaining a break above the step. Shuffle off all the cards above the break thus bringing the three cards (one of them is the thought of card) to the top. False Shuffle retaining top stock.
- 7) Obtain a break with the left little finger under the top card. Transfer the break to the right thumb as this hand takes the deck from above in biddle position. The left hand cuts the bottom half to the top, the thumb still keeping its break.
- 8) Dribble off all the cards below the break and turn the top card of the lower half face up using the right hand packet as a lever as you do so glimpse the face card of this packet. "I will turn over just one card of these 52 cards . . ." Pause. The spectator's reaction will immediately. show you whether this is his card or not. If he doesn't react continue: ". . . which will indicate your thought of card." "Would you be so kind, Sir, and make everybody in this room the witness of your thought by naming your card."
- 9) There are now two possibilities: either he names the card you glimpsed or he names any other card. In the first case simply lift off the packet above the face up card and show its face. In the second case slide the face up card and the cards above it aside and turn over the top card of the bottom half.

Note

The above handling is not making a simple effect more complicated — on the contrary: it makes it more convincing (IF THE TECHNIQUES ARE SMOOTHLY EXECUTED) and therefore more magical!

Sit de Marlet.

L'Escamoteur, sur le boulevard, près le Chateau d'Eau

Many years ago, Frances Marshall wrote a book called "You Don't Have To Be Crazy", which was a collection of reminicences about magicians. I liked it when I first read it, and recently I read it again and liked it even more. Maybe I have matured a little and understand it now better than I did first time around. It really points up just how nutty we magicians are. She did another one called, "With Frances in Magic Land", which emphasies even more the lunatic fringe of the magic scene.

After attending the British Ring I.B.M. convention in Llandudno I'm convinced she is right. We should all be locked up and hidden away away forever. No one in their right minds should be allowed to talk to us, hear us, and more important, see us. If a person can be sadistic and masochistic at one and the same time we are it. We can inflict and suffer great pain like no other group on earth.

At the aforementioned magical shindig from which I still haven't recovered, I had a dealer's booth, which for the benefit of anyone who has been fortunate enough never to attend one, means that I was tied up all day and was unable to see any of the events which took place during "working hours". But I did see everything which happened in the evening.

The highlight for me is always the Shield Competition on the Thursday evening. Usually there are one or two outstanding acts or effects, and a similar number at the other end of the scale. This year the overall standard was very good, which was a pity, because it is usually the one or two stinkers which make you realise just how much work the others have put in to achieve an acceptable standard.

As we all well know, certain magic effects suddenly "take off" and become so popular among magicians that we get sick to death of them. This year, the gala show, which should be the main event was all balls. Literally. We had them appearing, disappearing, multiplying, changing colour, floating, expanding, and falling apart, all in the same show, many times over.

The best act of the convention for me was Mark Raffles with his dove act. He appeared on the after banquet show, which for me was the best show I saw. Ali Bongo compered this show and had the best gag of the convention, and I only say that because I was involved in it.

My spies tell me that for them, the best thing of the convention was Trevor Lewis doing his ring routine. He tells me the next time he performs his act at a convention hes going to do it in Welsh so the rest of us can't steal his gags. Can you imagine the frustration of all the notebook gang sitting there laughing their heads off at his material in Welsh and knowing full well that they can't lift one single line?

As far as I can gather, most, but not all of the dealers caught a cold. Punters weren't exactly throwing their money around. I had one new effect, which is an almost pocket version of the coins to glass effect or "copenetro" as our U.S. friends call it. I sold out and took orders for mailing. It is called Patrick Page's MONEYBAG and sells for £15.00. Just thought I'd mention it. Can't think why.

If I can revert back to the beginning of this trivia, do you want to know why I think we are all "out of this world" mentally? Because I really enjoyed the convention. I did, and I just can't wait to get to Eastbourne next year. With luck George Orwell might turn up. His Big Brother was barely visible at Llandudno. Will he show in 1984?

INTRODUCING

The New York Magic Symposium is proud to offer its Collection Two to the magical fraternity. This all-new Collection features both Close-Up and Stage material — never-before-published, original, professional routines contributed by the performers of the '83 Symposium, as well as a number of Special Guest Contributors! Once again, Richard Kaufman will display his expertise in writing and illustrating this tome.

The book is oversized, hard bound, professionally typeset, printed on the best of papers and about 150 pages! The price remains at an incredibly low $20!

Please add $2 for shipping and handling ($4 foreign). Allow 4-6 weeks for delivery.

P.S. The Symposium's Close-Up Collection One is still available. The price is $20. Written and illustrated by Richard Kaufman, with contributions by Harris, Ammar, Roth, Daryl, Fantasio, Dingle, Cornelius, Slydini, Marlo, Mullica and many more!

Send you order to The New York Magic Symposium, P.O. Box 169, Rockville Centre, New York 11571. Not just another card trick . . . but a Thoroughly Entertaining Piece of Magic . . .

VOLUME 8 NUMBER 1

Welcome to the 8th Volume. I hope that the next 11 issues will live up to the high standards set by all 84 past issues.

Quite a lot has been happening recently Martin Nash gave a couple of lectures, one in London and the other in Birmingham.

I was unable to attend either lecture but I have heard mixed reports from the attendants of the one in London and indeed I've been promised a review of the London lecture for the next issue.

By the time you read this, the I.B.M. convention will be over and you'll have met all your old friends, exchanged ideas and generally had a good time.

A couple of days ago I was told that a new Marlo book was out. I haven't had chance to see a copy yet but I'll try and get my hands on one and review it next issue.

In early November I might be off to Sweden for a short lecture tour of Scandinavian countries. This should give me plenty of opportunity to solicit effects etc for the magazine . . . can't be bad ehhh?

I say 'might' as I'm still awaiting confirmation etc. I'll keep my fingers crossed. I expect we'll see an influx of Walt Lee's books hitting the press quite soon. I can comfortably predict this as I know that Walt needed the extra time, that Pabular wouldn't allow him, to complete many publications that he's had in the pipe-line for ages. Hopefully I'll receive copies as soon as they're available.

Two weeks ago Nick Bolton and I met to discuss Pabular. We met at Charing Cross and began our search for a nice quiet pub where we could talk.

About an hour later we settled for a busy wine bar in Convent Garden. Nick told me what was expected of me and I explained what I was capable of and before we knew what had happened a full bottle of white wine had vanished and an extra glass each was ordered. Between us we decided it would be a nice idea to get Pabular ready and published at a rate of one a month.

It remains to be seen if we can keep to this schedule but we'll try!

Nick also plans to re-release past issues, starting from the very first issue, in bound volumes and from what he told me... they should look fantastic.

In the mean time I'll be on the look out for routines, ideas, effects etc. and this is where you come in.

If you have that rare quality that so few of us seem to possess and find that you have several original items on your hands, then where better to deposit them than here in the pages of Pabular. If we consider the idea to be worthy of inclusion and radically different from anything else available, we'll be only too pleased to immortalise you in print. I'll even send you a copy containing your offering so that you can take it round to all your friends and show them how famous you are. Seriously . . . if you do have an item or two for publication, simply write with details to Stephen Tucker at the P.O. Box number on the back of this issue.

All subscriptions or enquiries should be addressed to Nick Bolton at the same P.O. Box number.

Before I go I'd like to personally thank all the contributors to this issue and I look forward to receiving your routines in the near future.

Till next month all the very best!!

Stephen Tucker.

BLUSHING JUMPER
(An off colour card to wallet routine — on the Table.)
Roberto Giobbi

Effect

Spectator takes a card and signs it on its face. It is replaced and the deck shuffled and cut. The magician cuts to the Joker and tells his audience that this Joker will now change into the selected and signed card. For this purpose it is placed into the magician's wallet. Upon closing it and reopening it nothing has happened. The magician gets angry and explains that each time he wants to perform this trick the same thing happens: saying this he opens the zipper-compartment of the wallet and extracts the signed card from it. "Well, I am starting to understand this but I will never understand why all other cards are blue-backed while you picked and signed the only red backed-card in the deck!"

Requirements

A Bendix type wallet.

A blue deck with two Jokers.

An additional red backed card (say the 4H)

Set-up

Load the Joker into one side of the wallet (transparent compartment.)

Have the red backed 4H second from the bottom in the deck. It may be advisable to remove the blue-backed 4H, although not really necessary.

Management and Handling

1) The wallet has been introduced in one of the foregoing tricks (e.g. you took out an envelope containing a prediction, or some bills with which you performed some tricks using bills as a main or as secondary props, etc.) For a more detailed description of the physchological importance of this step see my thoughts in "How to Introduce Your Wallet — an Approach to Logical Magic".

- 2) Spread the deck face up on the table and say something concerning the cards.
- Pick up the deck, still face up, and cut the 4H to approximately the middle.
- 4) Spread the deck between your hands telling a spectator that he is later supposed to take a card. As you do this spot the odd backed 4H and obtain a break above it as you close the spread and approach the spectator.
- 5) Spread again and force him the 4H by means of a face up classic force. The procedure is exactly like the classic force but of course much easier—the selection is given less importance than to a face down force; the spectator will relax and pick the right card. Alternatively use the Hindu Shuffle Force (note the handling Phil Goldstein describes in the Linking Ring Vol. 62, no. 10 in "A Logical Approach to the Hindu Shuffle").
- 6) Place the deck on the table. Open the wallet, take out some stickers and have the spectator sign one of them. He is then asked to remove the sticker and place it on the face of his selection (actually the red backed 4H).

Let him do everything, relax, he has no reason to look at the back of his card, it would not give him more information. By implicit logic he is convinced that his card is from the deck and has absolutely no reason to turn it face down (remember that everything so far happened with cards face up, so . . .)

7) Now control the 4H second from the top with the Joker immediately under it (third from the top) as follows: Fan the deck face up and spot the Joker (it should be approximately in the middle; cut if necessary). Place the 4H face up to the left of the Joker. Close the fan and get a break one card to the left of the 4H. Cut, thus the 4H becomes the second card from the top with the Joker immediately under it.

Details of Handling of step 7:

Before inserting the 4H fan the deck faces towards yourself (use a pressure fan in your left hand). Spot the Joker and push it out of view under the card immediately on top of it. The reason: afterwards you are going to show the Joker and an attentive spectator who saw that you placed the 4H next to the Joker, may suspect that you controlled his selection. This subtlety does not take much time nor does it involve additional handling (it looks as if you were merely adjusting the fan) but you prevent an over-wise spectator to interrupt the flow of the routine.

8) Hit triple lift and turn the top three cards face up on top of the deck. For the management of the double lift (which applies as well to any kind of multiple lifts, of course) refer to Tamariz'

- approach in Pabular (vol. 7, no. 1) this sublimely also calls attention to the colour of the backs.
- The wallet rests still open on the table (remember: you took out the stickers which are still on the table - you are going to replace them only at the end of the trick. This also justifies the presence of the wallet . . .). The right hand picks up the top two cards (Joker plus selection hidden under it) from above in Biddle position. The left hand must do a wrist turn to cover the face up card still on top of the deck. To justify this move the left hand reaches for the open wallet and draws it towards yourself. While the right hand inserts the double Joker into the transparent compartment, the left hand places the deck aside, face up of course and to the left of the mat (reason: the left hand must help the right hand to get its card into the compartment).
- 10) Make a magic pass over the open wallet. Nothing happens: "Maybe it changes if we don't look . . ." . Close the wallet, give it a quarter turn to the right and pass your right hand over the wallet. Turn the wallet back opening it on the other side the Joker still shows (this handling of the Himber wallet is by Al Schneider and can be found in 'Al Schneider on Close-Up.' (Page 118.)
- 11) Take out the Joker, look at it back and front, then drop it face up on the table, slightly to the left in front of the deck.
- 12) As per "effect" open zipper compartment and show the signed card, leave it face up on the table, towards the front of your mat.
- 13) Replace the stickers in the wallet and place it closed aside or back in your pocket.
- 14) With the left hand pick up the face up deck placing it on the face up Joker on the table (this covers the face up indifferent card now second from the top).
- 15) The entire deck is now turned face down and ribbon spread on the table, without of course exposing the face up card. Call attention to the colour of the backs.
- 16) Show the signed card to be the only red backed card in the deck.

Editor

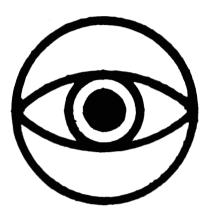

The following 5 part Oil and Water routine comes courtesy of Magic Ronnay from Vienna. I'm sure you've all heard his name before and I suspect that many of you own a packet effect or two originated by this prolific inventor.

This routine is well structured and incorporates certain false counts that I believe you may have not encountered before. Everything is fully explained so let's get on with it

When you thumb over 5 cards a red card will appear beneath the black card and everything will appear as it should.

Square up the red packet and turn it face down. Reverse count the card into a face down pile next to the other tabled pile but bottom deal the 1st card!

The order of the face down pile should be ... R, R, R, R, B, B, B, R.

THE NEW OIL AND WATER ROUTINE Magic Ronnay

You will need 8 identical red cards and 8 identical black cards. We'll assume, for the sake of description that your cards are the 5 of Hearts and the 5 of Spades. They should be set as shown in Fig: 1.

This depicts two separate face up packets. The left hand packet contains 9 cards and from the face downwards they are in R, R, R, R, B, R, B, B order.

The right hand packet contains only 7 cards and its order from the face down is . . . B, B, B, R, R, R, B.

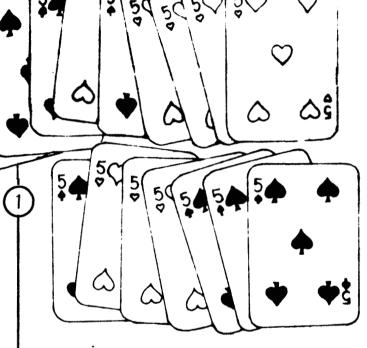

Fig: 1 represents your view of the cards just before the effect commences, though the packets would of course be squared and not spread as illustrated!

Performance

Pick up the left hand packet and Hamman count it in order to display 9 cards which are seen to be all red with the exception of one black card.

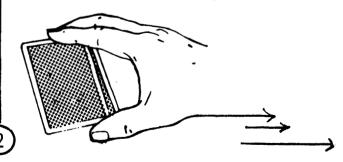

During the Hamman count you execute the switch on the count of 5 and under the misdirection of the unexpected appearance of the black card. A little acting pays off here!

Apologise for the error and explain that the black card shouldn't be there. Thumb over the face five cards and throw the black card from the packet and onto the black packet to your right.

Pick up the other face up pile and prior to a Veeser count, push the lowermost card about 1 cm. to the right with the left fingertips. (See Fig. 2).

The Veeser count is quite similar to the Hamman count Slide off the top card into the left hand. Slide off the next card onto the 1st. Repeat this with the 3rd card and on the 4th card you execute the following switch; the three cards in the left hand travel beneath the right hand's packet as they did before and it appears that you simply slide off the 4th card onto the other three. In fact you allow the three cards in the left hand to square up with the side-jogged card at the bottom of the right hand's packet and these three cards are left beneath the side-jogged card as the left hand takes all the cards above the side-jogged card to the count of 4.

The four cards now in the right hand are counted onto those in the left hand to the counts of 5, 6, 7 and 8.

The count has apparently displayed 8 black cards but in fact three of the black cards have been counted twice and the three red cards have remained hidden throughout.

The order of this face up packet from the face downwards is . . . B, B, B, B, B, R, R, R. Turn the packet face down and table it to the right.

You are now about to mix the cards . . .

Take the top card of the left packet and table it. Onto this place the top card of the right packet and on this, the next card from the left hand packet etc. At the end of this mixing you should have one face down pile which is assumed to run in B, R, B, R etc. order.

Pick up the pile and thumb off the top three cards and show that they do run in B, R, B, order as was expected.

Replace the three cards onto the packet and deal the top card face up to your right and deal the next card face up to your left.

Now count 7 cards onto the black face up card and count the remaining 7 cards onto the red face up card.

Make a suitable magic gesture and show that the red cards are all with the face up red card and the black cards are all with the face up black card!

You have mixed the cards and they have magically unmixed! You are now about to repeat this but under strickter conditions.

Mix the cards again into one pile but this time leave the cards face up. Deal first from the the red pile then the black etc.

Pick up the completed pile and deal the top 8 face up cards into your right hand, reversing their order in the process. Fan the remaining 8 cards in the left hand. This merely displays that the cards are truly mixed.

Flip the right hand's cards face down and place the left hand's card face down on top of these. This is a subtle displacement and in fact the 8th and 9th cards are both the same colour. (Black.)

You now start to divide the cards openly into their respective colours by taking the top card, flashing its face and dealing it to the left on the table. Remove the next card, show its face and table it face down to the right.

Repeat this procedure with the next 6 cards and then comment that they should realise that this is an extremely easy method of sorting the cards.

The remaining cards are dealt into the two packets but their faces are not flashed during the deal but you still call out their supposed colours as you deal!

Pick up the left hand pile and cut the top 4 cards to the bottom. Repeat this with the other pile and then turn the top card of each packet face up and table it in front of their respective packets.

Exchange the positions of the two face up cards and then place the face up cards face down onto the packets they now lie before.

After another suitable magical gesture above the packets, pick up the left hand packet and turn it face up. A black card will be seen at the face. Show that all the 8 cards are black by performing a 'Double-Elmsley Count.'

This count is relatively new and begins with the packet held in the usual Elmsley count grip.

Take the top card into the right hand and take the 2nd and 3rd cards on top of the 1st. Each time a card is taken, the right hand packet travels beneath the left hand's cards.

The switch occurs on the count of '4'.... the left thumb pushes all the cards above the lowermost one to the right as with the usual Elmsley count and the right hand deposits its three cards beneath the lowermost card in the left hand and without pausing takes all the cards pushed over by the left thumb instead.

It appears that you have merely taken the 4th card on top of the other three. The remaining 4 cards are counted onto the cards in the right hand to the counts of 5, 6, 7 and 8.

Table the packet face up and repeat the rusewith the other packet to show it apparently contains 8 red cards.

The situation now is that the left hand packet is assumed to contain all the black cards and in fact the order from the face is B, B, B, B, B, R, R, R,

The right hand packet is assumed to contain all the red cards and its order is R, R, R, R, R, B, B, B. Both packets are face up.

Pick up the red packet and deal the face two cards face up onto the table. Deal the 3rd card face up in front of the 1st 2 cards dealt and finally place the remainder of the packet face up on the two cards 1st dealt. (Only red cards have been seen and the single face up card is explained to be a leader card.)

Pick up the black packet and repeat this procedure. Finally turn both packets face down behind their respective leader cards.

Explain that you will now show them a demonstration of follow the leader and prove that the colours can not be separated.

Take the top card from both face down packets and deal them face up onto their leader cards. Repeat this with the next card from each packet and explain that nothing magical has happened so far.

Exchange the positions of the leader packets and when you again remove the top card from each of the face down packets and place them face up on the leader packets the colours refuse to separate!!

Take the new top cards from each of the face down packets and deal these again face up onto the leader packets to prove your point.

Repeat this once more and then offer to exchange the positions of the face down packets, now containing only two cards each.

Do this but the cards still match the leader colours. Show this by dealing both cards from the face down packets onto the leader packets.

You are now set for the final phase

On your left are the black cards and on your right are the red cards, both packets are face up.

Mix the cards as you have done twice previously. The order will be B, R, B, R etc. Hold the packet face up in your left hand and thumb over 9 cards into a fan in your right hand. Fan the remaining cards in your left hand as you once again display that the cards are well mixed.

Pass the right hand fan beneath the left hand one and immediately steal the red card from the left edge of the right hand's fan beneath the left fan with the aid of the left fingertips. Flip the right hand cards face down and place the left hand cards face down on top of them.

You have succeeded in once again making the 8th and 9th cards the same colour. (Black.) With the packet still face down once again begin to openly sort out the cards by dealing the top card face up to your left, the next card face up to your right and continue this until you have dealt the 6th card.

Continue dealing the rest of the cards alternatively to the left and right packets but deal the card face down onto the packets from now on.

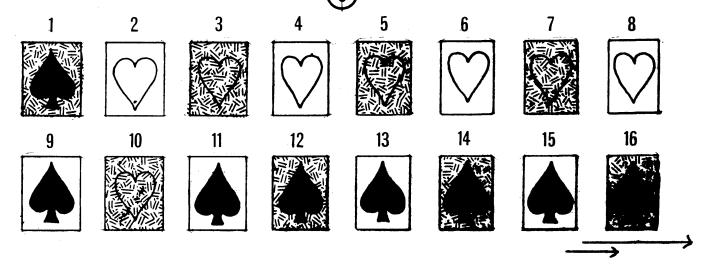

Pick up the 4 face down cards lying on the face up black cards and flip them face up. A black card is seen at the face. Place the cards face up on the 3 face up black cards and pick up the entire packet. Deal it to the table but bottom deal the first card. Pick up the four face down cards from the 3 face up red cards and flip them face up, a red card is seen at the face.

This time pick up the 3 red cards and place them on top of the other 4 face up cards. Flip the packet face down and deal it to the table without any false deals. The situation is that both packets have 4 red cards atop 4 black cards. Explain that you will mix the cards with a shuffle like this Table riffle shuffle the two packets together.

You now follow with a display that further convinces everyone that the colours are mixed.

Pick up the packet and deal it out as follows.... Bottom deal the 1st card and show that it is black. Deal it face down to the left on your table. Continue dealing by dealing the next (TOP) card to the right of the 1st card face up. The next card is dealt face down, then face up etc. until 8 cards have been dealt in the row.

Everyone assumes that the face down cards are the blacks.

Deal another row beneath the 1st one.... Bottom deal the 9th card and place it face up beneath the 1st card in the upper row. Continue dealing the cards beneath the 1st row in face down, face up, face down etc order.

This display really does give the impression that the cards are well mixed. Start at the right end of the upper row and collect all the cards together. Once the upper row has been formed into an 8 card packet you up-jog all the face down cards and strip them out.

A black card will show at the face of the stripped out face down packet once the squared packet has been flipped face up and placed onto the face up red cards. It appears that you have four red cards on top of four black cards but in reality you have seven red cards atop one single black card.

Collect the other row together and repeat the above procedure.

Place the packets once again side by side and face down on the table.

Remove the lowermost card from each packet and show their colours. Exchange the positions of these cards and finally show that they have acted like magnets and the respective colours have once again found each other.

Notes

No patter has been given to accompany the various mixes and un-mixes and at times the actions may seem a little strange but if you work out a suitable patter theme to cover the various phases, you will have an excellent routine on your hands.

'You say you get a burning sensation after meals?'

Correction to Ian Land's 'TECHNICOLOUR DEPARTURE' (Vol: 7 Number: 11 Page: 1137.)

I have a correction to make to "Technicolour Departure" - the opening I gave in my original write up is I think unsatisfactory. The following makes it much easier to intergrate the routine into a performance

The red pack is set-up exactly as in the original. Now, case this pack & place it in a pocket. You will also need a blue backed pack, which is not set-up in any way.

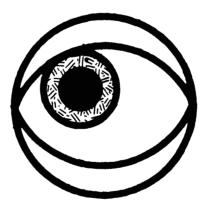

- 1) Remove the blue pack from its case & perform several card effects. When you want to perform this, quickly run through the face up pack & cut it so that the KD is about 12 cards from the back (rear). Make sure there are no other Kings between the KD & the top of the pack.
- 2) Patter, "I need the four Kings." Run through the pack & up-jog the four Kings. The KD will be the last King that you come to, & should be up-jogged for slightly less of its length than the other three Kings. Square the pack, leaving the Kings up-jogged. A side view would look like this:

Your right hand now comes across and pivots the Kings clockwise & to the right. As you do this your left index finger pushes the lowermost King (KD) flush with the pack, so that only 3 Kings are pivoted out & into the right hand. Table the pack, turn the Kings face down, & table them. (Note: Unsurprisingly, this is a Marlo technique. This description is adapted from one in Sticks & Stones 5.) If you wish, before tabling the Kings you can give them a threeasfour Elmsley Count, although it is not necessary.

3) Patter, "I also need a red pack." Remove the red cards from your pocket, uncase them, & begin "Technicolour Departure" from step 3 of the original.

Additionally, you may like to mention that the idea of using the Olram Subtlety to show a vanish (with only the secondary purpose of reshowing the backs), as in step 7 of "Technicolour Departure," Comes from Gene Castillon's excellent "Colourful Cannibals," in Kabbala Three (1976).

RING ON STICK Keith Charnley

Sorry about the unimaginative title but I can assure you that the following routine will more than make up for it!

You'll need the customary wand, stick, pencil etc. Keith points out that it's a nice touch to borrow a drum-stick from the band, depending on where you're performing.

We'll assume that you're using a wand and by now you've coaxed two spectators from their seats and one is standing on your right and the other on your left. Ask for the loan of a finger ring. You should have invited a spectator wearing a ring onto the stage so we'll assume that you're all set to go

I almost forgot . . . You'll require a small snap-shut purse with a key ring attachment as illustrated in Fig: 1.

This type of purse can be easily opened by squeezing the opening and it closes automatically when you release the pressure.

Borrow the ring and assuming that it has come either from the person standing on your right or from a member of the audience on your right, slip it onto your right hand finger.

The wand has been examined by both spectators and should now be under your left arm. Make sure that the end of the stick is pointing downwards slightly as this will make the loading of the ring onto the stick much easier when you later attempt it. Display the ring to the spectator on your right and if you like use your hoard of 'ring' gags.

Remove the ring and show it to the spectator on your left. You now appear to toss it into your left hand but in reality you fake the action and retain the ring in the finger palm of your right hand. You may prefer to retain the ring in the classic palm, it's entirely up to you.

The misdirection for the move is covered by talking to the spectator and not paying any attention to the ring.

The left hand has formed into a fist apparently around the ring. Take the wand from beneath your left arm and allow the ring to slide onto the wand but keep a grip around the wand and ring and use the wand to point to the left fist as you explain that you will attempt to pass the ring onto the wand.

This next move is cheeky but very effective.

You allow the tip of the wand to actually contact the left fist and this gives you the opportunity to slide your right hand along the wand to a position just short of centre.

The ring is already on the wand and covered by the right fingers.

You now toss the wand into the left hand, which opens slightly in order to catch it. During this action the wand is heard to strike the ring and the illusion is perfect that the ring was in the left hand.

Ask both spectators to take hold of an end of the wand and you're all set for the penetration.

Rotate your left hand so that the knuckles are uppermost as when you lift your hand from the wand it looks much more effective than dropping your hand away from the wand.

Open your left hand and the ring is seen to have somehow passed onto the wand. You are now about to follow the penetration with a release of the ring from the stick.

Editor

Keith informs me that he uses a Ken Brooke method, which is to be found in the book 'Ken Brookes's magic.'

Briefly Place the palm of either hand against the ends of the wand and by raising one hand the ring will slide along the wand and onto the palm of the other. Cause this to happen a few times as you have the ring identified.

Now for the move . . . You appear to form a fist around the ring and slide it back to the centre of the wand again but in fact you allowed the ring to come off the end of the wand and you have actually mimed the action of sliding it along the wand as the ring is merely slid against the wand on the outer surface of the ring. The situation now is that your left hand is formed into a fist apparently over the ring which is assumed to be still threaded onto the wand. In fact the ring is free in the left hand and you now work it out to the rear of the fist until it is clipped by the fingers against the heel of the fist.

Ask one of the spectators to grab hold of your left wrist and under the action of showing what you mean, you steal the ring into the right hand.

Remark that you have a second ring and so saying, reach into your pocket with your right hand, open the purse and drop the ring inside. Close the purse and remove it. Place your finger through the key-ring attached to the purse and ask one of the spectators to release his hold on the end of the wand for a second.

Slip the key-ring onto the wand and allow it to enter the left fist.

Ask the spectator to once again hold onto the end of the wand and after a suitable build up...remove your left hand to show that the finger ring has vanished. Where can it be?

Ask the spectator to remove the purse, open it and remove what he finds within.

the main focus of the patter is in the removal of a pair of scissors from the rope and the eventual restoration of the rope is not even mentioned!

You'll need the time honoured 1 metre length of best washing line and a pair of sharp scissors.

Begin by threading one handle of the scissors onto the rope and explain that it is absolutely impossible to remove the scissors without passing one of the rope ends through the handle.

Further explain that you will show them two methods of removing the scissors and proceed with the legendary method for the cut and restored rope effect. Take hold of the centre of the rope and appear to place it up in your left hand together with the rope ends. In fact you have switched the centre in the usual manner and the situation is as depicted in Fig. 1.

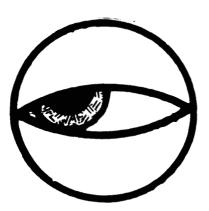

Ask for the loan of a pair of scissors and after a few seconds realise that you already have a pair on the rope. This is known as humour

Take the scissors and cut the rope at the assumed centre. Handle the scissors exactly as you would if they were not threaded on the rope.

Allow the end to drop from the left hand and slide the scissors off the rope as you take a bow.

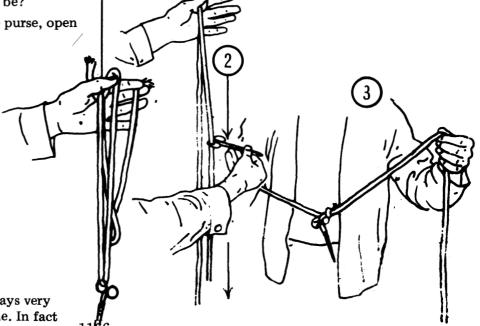

Fig: 2 shows the situation. This stunt will amuse but definitely not amaze the audience.

Explain that you will demonstrate the second method and so saying, thread the handle of the scissors onto one of the lower ends of the rope. Pass the scissors up the rope and into the left hand and without pause pass one of the upper ends through the same handle.

SHEAR MAGIC Stephen Tucker

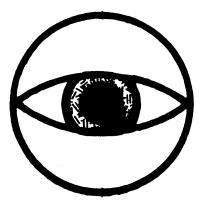

This short sequence of events plays very well in a cut and restored rope routine. In fact

This effectively transfers the scissors from the long piece of rope and onto the short piece.

Explain that you will further trap the scissors by knotting them to the rope. Tie a knot in the upper ends and you have succeeded in tying the short length around the long length in exactly the same manner as you have done thousands of times before prior to the restoration.

Take an end of rope in each hand and the situation is as depicted in Fig: 3. You are about to free the scissors from the rope once again. Simply take hold of the handle which has the small piece tied to it and quickly slide the scissors along and off the rope. Hide the small piece of rope around the handle and then pocket the scissors. Finally comment that you understand how the scissors came off the rope but you can't understand how the rope has become restored!!! This point will not have been noticed by the audience and by drawing it to their attention, another round of applause will result.

THE FLIP SWITCH Douglas Cameron

This is an extremely easy coin switch but if you master the timing and general feel of the thing . . . you'll have another method of switching a coin at your disposal.

Begin with a copper coin finger palmed in your right hand and a silver coin on your table. Pick up the silver coin with your right hand and display it held at the fingertips.

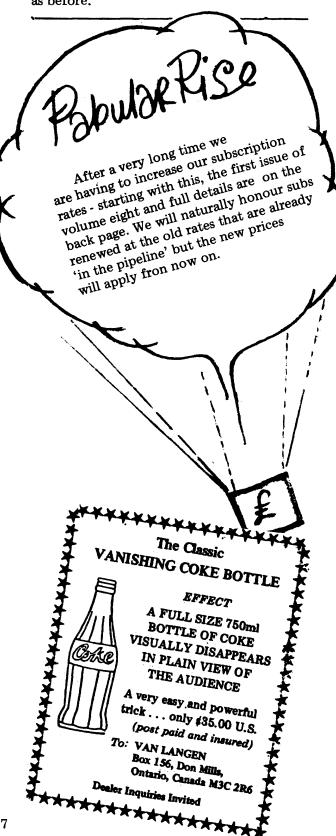

Now for the move . . . Simply flip the silver coin backwards, over the copper coin and onto your palm. With a little practice you should be able to make the coin land in such a position that it can be immediately classic palmed.

Assuming that you have the silver coin in classic palm position, classic palm it as you tip your right hand towards the left and release the the copper coin, which falls into the hand and the switch is complete.

You can use the switch as you would any other and if instead of tossing the coin into the left hand and showing the change you simply push the copper coin up and into view, a startling instant change is achieved.

You now drop the copper coin into your left hand, retaining the silver classic palmed as before.

Lide Describes Los I walls Por Parce

Is the world changing too fast for me? Am I getting too old? If so, too old for what? Have you ever had the experience where you just know you are right and the rest of the world is wrong? This is not a new experience for me in that I am always right, but I am sure you understand.

The question I am trying to pose is, "is it only as one is growing older that one realises that some things are more important than others"? Or do young people have similar experiences? I no longer read magic magazines. A simple statement, to which no doubt you will reply Why?

I will allow you that one question. Why do you no longer read magic magazines? The funny thing is that I can't answer that question at least not easily, because I have no reason for not reading magazines anymore. Once upon a time I subscribed to several and I just seem to have let them lapse gradually.

I remember reading in the Pete Biro column in Genii Magazine that there perhaps forty magicians in the wild are world who are doing the thinking to rest of us, and that most of them would be contributing to his column. Maybe he just said that a number of them would contribute. I think I probably know most the forty he would list. I know how they think, I count some of them among my friends, and if they do some up with something good everyone jumps on it and I get to find out about it anyway.

The really big trick in our little game is to find something that everyone knows about but doesn't give credit to. I'll give you a simple example. The late Cecil Lyle's Tissue Paper to

Hat. Most magicians wouldn't give it cupboard space but those of us who have used it know its value. By discovering a simple or cute way to present a standard effect which most performers have discarded is, to a performer, like having an orgasm.

I didn't mean to change the subject. I was talking about not reading magazines anymore. There was a time I used to wait for the mailman to deliver my weekly fix, but no more. I'm immune, but I still want to know why I have become immune. I'm still just as nutty as I ever was about magic. I am still making my living from it, I still love to go see a magic show. I wath a Paul Daniels' T.V. show every week. I visit the Magic Circle as often as I can, so why can't I raise it for the magazines?

Do you think it's because there are too many of them? Have they changed maybe? Is it that everyone thinks they can publish a magazine and after a couple of issues realises that it takes a little more than enthusiasm. (Please don't write to me about the TAT Papers). There is one possible reason, or at least a contributory factor and that is the amount of stuff that turns up in the modern magazines, and I'm not just talking about the tricks or articles which are submitted and accepted for publication. Some of the dealers must shoulder some of the responsibility for my disillusionment. Some of the ads read as if they were especially written for morons. I won't pursue that line because they could be right.

There was a time when Abracadabra used to review professional acts regularly. I used to love to read them. I was younger then. I can't remember who the reviewers were, probably Goodliffe and Fabian, both of whom had a certain style. What happens today is that the reviewer is usually a friend of the artiste and the whole exercise is a public relations device to make the performer known to the magic fraternity.

Holdit. BY George, I think I've got it. (I'm sure someone has already said that). Do you think that the magazines have become incestuous? They have forgotten that there is a great big world out there beyond the perimeter of that magic circle which encloses all of us so tightly that we have no room to stretch our toes to peep over the wall. This has resulted in a lack of desire to peep over the wall and in some extreme cases they don't know the wall is there. Who cares? The mags don't seem to care. Their readers don't seem to care. The contributors don't care.

I can't believe that I'm the only one who cares. And if I am ? ? ? ?

Goodbye Patrick Page.

Not just another card trick . . . but a Thoroughly Entertaining Piece of Magic . . .

Please read the effect very carefully . . . Performer shuffles adeck of cards (showing faces and backs.) A card is selected face down in the normal way . . then returned to the deck.

NOW THE FUN BEGINS! With the help of the 'Joker' the performer tries to name the selected card . . but he fails hopelessly. The performer says, "The Joker had a feeling that I wouldn't name the card so he turned it face up in the deck . . look'.

Performer spreads out the cards face down, and sure enough . .the selected card is found FACE UP.

But just in case "something went wrong" the Joker gives the performer another chance to discover the chosen card. The performer turns over the selected card . . . It's the only card with a completely different back design . But there's more . . . The performer says . . . "In case I got in a hopeless muddle, the Joker made it really easy for me to find your card . . . look"

THE PERFORMER NOW RIBBON SPREADS THE REMAINING CARDS FACE UP EACH CARD IS SEEN TO HAVE A COMPLETELY BLANK FACE:

TRIPLE CHANCE is a sure-fire Eye Popper with TRIPLE IMPACT Grand Comedy Business and Three Tremendous suprises in one routine.

Dead easy to perform . . . No sleights or Tricky moves and the biggest suprise of all . . . at the end of the routine EVERYTHING CAN BE EXAMINED.

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED.

The name Phil Goldstein needs no introduction from me. Phil is one of the most prolific inventors of fine magic on the scene today. The following four effects could have easily been spread out through four issues but Phil requested that they all be published together as there is a developmental progression involved.

He also promises more material in the near future and indeed we may see a one man issue from him in the next few issues.

I, for one, can't wait but for the time being, here's Phil's latest offerings to whet your appetites.

AVANTURN Phil Goldstein

It is, for most of us mortal card-handlers, no easy task to display two surfaces as four by means of a straightforward counting action. However, showing two-as-three within a fourcard count is a simple, common activity in contemporary card magic. The following series of related effects grew out of this observation. Actually, the initial effort involved five-card counting. You will require five cards: two identical jokers, and the aces of spades, hearts and clubs. At the start of the routine, these are in order from the face: joker; joker; face down AC; face down AH; face up AS.

standard Hamman Count, the contents of each hand are exchanged: all three of the right hand's cards are taken into the left, while the initial pair is stolen back into the right. On the count of "4", the top card of the right hand's pair is taken into the left, while at the same time the trio in the left hand is stolen back beneath the final card in the right. On the count of "5", the four-card block in the right hand, squared as one, is placed onto the left-hand stock. This counting action will display four face up jokers with one face down card at center. The resulting order is, from the top: joker; face down AC; face down AH; face up AS; joker.

- 2) Your patter during the above is to state that you hold a packet of five identical jokers. Upon conclusion of the counting action, flip the packet face down. Obtain a break beneath the top two cards. Perform a Half-Pass to secretly reverse the three cards below this break. You will have ample cover for this sleight, as the spectator will be in the process of telling you that he/she did not get to see the center card, as it was face down.
- 3) Comment, "Just because it was face down doesn't mean it wasn't another joker..." Fan the packet, displaying a face up joker in the middle of four face down cards. Openly extract the joker, and table it. Close up the fan.
- 4) Continue, saying, "You were wrong to suspect the reversed card . . . it is the other four cards you should have suspected!" Flip the four-card packet face up. Perform a Jordan Count, displaying four aces, for an unexpected climax.

The ace of hearts will be shown twice during this final count, but as the color distribution is correct (two red, two black), the display will play acceptably. In order to be consistent with your earlier counting actions, this final count should be done from a Biddle Grip. This will be true of the other routines I will describe in this article.

AVANTURN II

This routine makes use of the same set of five cards. However, in this version the spectator believes there to be only four cards in play. At the start of the routine, the cards are in order from the face: joker; joker; face down AC; face up AS; face up AH.

- 1) Hold the packet face up. State that you hold four identical jokers. Perform a Jordan Count, which will display three face up jokers and one face down card.
- 2) Flip the packet face down, and obtain a break beneath the top two cards. As in the first routine, the spectator will comment on the unseen face of the reversed card. During this comment, Half-Pass the three cards below the break.

- 3) Count the cards from hand to hand, in the same manner as your earlier count. This time your actions are almost legitimate: the cards are taken one on top of another, with the last two taken squared as one. You will display one face up joker among three face down cards.
- 4) Square the packet. State, "The reason I isolate that particular joker is so that I may do a trick with it." Make a mystical gesture. Perform an Elmsley Count. This will display a face up ace of spades among three backs.
- 5) At the conclusion of this count, perform a Single Buckle Spread, again displaying the AS among three backs. The right hand removes the top two cards of this spread, and uses them to flip over the face up AS (really two cards squared as one) onto the lowermost card in the left hand. Return the right hand pair onto the left hand stock.
- 6) Say, "That was the easy part. The hard part is to transform the other jokers!" Make a mystical gesture. Flip the packet face up. Perform an Elmsley Count, displaying four aces.

AVANTURN III

The preceding effect can be strengthened by the application of a gaffed card: a double-facer, showing the ace of spades on one side, a joker on the other. You will require, in addition to this special card, the other three aces, plus a normal joker. At the start of the routine the cards are in order from the face: double-facer, joker-side-up; face down ace; face down ace; face up ace; joker.

- 1) The presentation is as before: you claim to have four identical jokers. Perform an Elmsley Count, displaying three jokers and one face down card.
- 2) Immediately following this count, the hands come back together. The right hand holds the packet from above, Biddle Grip. The left hand grasps the cards from below (thumb on top, fingers underneath). The left hand now pulls away to the left, milking off the top and bottom cards. The right hand's cards are deposited onto the left hand pair. Only jokers will show during this, and it appears to be no more than a puntuational cutting action.
- 3) Flip the packet face down, obtaining a break beneath the top two cards. Again, the spectator will comment on the unseen card. Under cover of the banter concerning this point, Half-Pass the lowermost three cards.
- 4) Perform a Back Spread, displaying a face up joker among three backs. Square the cards.
- 5) Make a mystical gesture. Ascanio Spread, showing the ace of spades face up among three cards. Strip out the face up ace (actually a double card: the double-facer with the normal joker squared behind it). Rotate your hand to display both sides of this, then table the card(s) face up. With appropriate patter, turn each of the three remaining cards face up, dealing them to the table, displaying four aces.

AVANTURN IV

This routine employs the same set of cards as the last version. However, in this presentation the effect is extended. At the start of the routine the cards are in order from the face: double-facer, joker-side-up; face down ace; face up ace; face up ace; joker.

- 1) Prior to displaying the cards, explain that you will work with four identical jokers, and that the idea of the trick is to make the jokers magically turn over. Elmsley Count, displaying three face up jokers and one face down card.
- 2) Flip the packet face down. Obtain a break beneath the top two cards. Half-Pass the three cards below the break. The spectator will comment on the reversed card. Respond, "Oh I guess the cards got a head start . . . they're supposed to wait for me to make my mystical gesture."
- 3) Perform an Ascanio Spread. This will display three face down cards and a face up joker. Strip out the double card, replacing it on top. Retain the packet in spread condition, with the left hand alone. With the right hand, extract the face up joker from the spread. Turn that card, turning it face down and replacing it on the bottom of the packet. Square the cards.
- 4) Make a mystical gesture. Ascanio Spread, displaying three face down cards and one face up joker. Strip out the double card with the right hand. The left hand squares its three-card stock. The right hand uses its card(s) to lever the left hand stock face up. Deposit the right hand pair on top of the left hand stock. Only jokers will show during this.
- 5) Say, "The reversal can also be done with the cards starting face up..." Make your mystical gesture. Perform a Jordan Count, showing three face up jokers and one face down card. The face down card is outjogged during during this count.
- 6) Hold the packet with the left hand. The right hand extracts the outjogged face down card. The left little finger obtains a break beneath the top card of the packet. Drop the right hand's card on top of the packet for a moment. To justify this action, hold up your empty right hand and comment, "It's all in the mystical gesture . . ." Now, the right hand again picks up the face down card from atop the packet. However, in truth a Double Lift is made—both cards from above the break, squared as one. Use the right hand's card(s) to flip the left hand stock face down. The left hand spreads its three cards as they come face down. Thus, you are cleanly displaying four backs. Add the right hand stock on top of the left, and square the cards.

- 7) Make a mystical gesture. Ascanio Spread, showing one face up joker and three backs. Strip out the double card, replacing it on top.
- 8) Comment, "Of course, I don't have to turn the reversed card over each time... I can simply make it reverse itself again. "Openly transfer the bottom card to the top, covering the face up joker. Make a mystical gesture, then perform a Back Spread to again show four face down cards.
- 9) Say, "Making the cards turn up and down is actually the easy part of this trick... Here's the hard part..." Raise the fan to display four aces, which can be cleanly shown backs and fronts.

EDITORIAL

November 1983

Hello again. Hope you're well and looking forward to trying out all the miracles in this issue. This month we have four effects from Phil Goldstein that string along into a great routine. Roberto Giobbi offers a novel presentation to the card in wallet effect. I present an outstanding card routine . . . aren't they all?? and a hoard of other magic mad enthusiasts offer their pet effects. All in all, it sounds like a really good issue.

In a few days time I'll be off to Copenhagen, Gothenburg and Stockholm for the lecture tour I mentioned last month.

I've also just completed work on my latest book . . . 'CARDIAC PACEMAKERS' (See full advert within.)

Yes it's all happening folks!!

I've just received the review of the Martin Nash lecture held here in London a few months ago. David Britland supplies the review and after reading it . . . I wished I'd have gone myself!

Recently I had the pleasure of seeing a copy of David's latest book/manuscript 'CARDOPOLIS'. This is a 30 page treatise on the card magic of David Britland and Marc Russell. The production and general layout is excellent and my only criticism is that none of my effects are to be found within! (Only joking.)

If your love is for pasteboards, you will not be able to hold your head up in knowledgable company unless you have a copy.

Only £5.00 Direct from David Britland, 33A Steeles Road, London NW3. England. Ohhh by the way, Dave informs me that 'CARDOPOLIS 2' will soon be ready and will be the same price so you may like to order both at the same time.

As a matter of interest . . . Some of my effects will be in the second offering!! Before we go any further . . . I'd like to thank Eric Mason for all the help he's given me with Pabular and for the excellent illustration above.

It looks like we're getting back on schedule and should be getting the magazine through your eager letter-boxes at a much faster rate. Can't be bad ehh?

I'd be grateful it you would address any personal letters direct to me at David Britland's address above as I am no longer to be found at the Martin Breese Magic Lounge . . . Long story!

At the moment I'm sharing a place with Dave so you'll know where to reach me in future. Any routines, ideas etc. can also be forwarded to me at that address and need not be sent to the PO. BOX Number on the back cover.

If you need to reach me urgently . . . my telephone number is . . . 01-586-1459. See you next month. Byeee!

REVIEW OF THE MARTIN NASH LECTURE (London 1983)

Reception to the Martin Nash lecture was mixed. There was the group who thought Martin was one of the finest card men they had ever seen and there was the other extreme, the group that wondered what all the fuss was about. Attendance did not seem to be too good at the London venue. One of the hotel employees was inveigled to assist Martin Nash and represented (as indeed she was) a laywoman in the audience. Consequently many of the presentations involved the girl who after twenty-five minutes of card tricks seemed to be a little dazed. Martin Nash says that he does a lot of magic in shopping malls in the U.S.A. and all his acts last approx twenty minutes or more of continuous card magic. I assume that in a shopping mall most of the public will only stay for a little while and that the crowd changes during the performance. Either this or the Americans have a lot more stamina than we do. It's only a personal opinion but the performance was far too long.

Martin performed and explained an act which he calls 'Jacks or Better', an act which is also on video from Hans Zahn. He opens by cutting four Aces from a deck which he has shuffled, unfortunately he only managed to cut to three, which obviously marred the opening. A version of Daley's Last Trick followed and then a simple poker deal. 'Any Way That You Want It' (published in 'Sleight Unseen') gave Martin an opportunity to demonstrate his Delayed Action Centre Deal. This routine went down well although I have seen the deal done better. For me the best item was 'A Fast Stack', dealing the Aces to yourself after the spectator calls the number of hands and you use only one shuffle. He presented a very confusing combination of the Hofzinser 'Ace Problem' and the 'Trick That Cannot Be Explained'. Frankly I feel that the effect is also difficult to explain so I won't bother. Martin finished with a five stage sandwich routine which alone would have served well as a complete act. Following the 'This Goes Further Than That' patter five selected cards ended up sandwiched between two Jacks. The methods were varied and the conditions were made more difficult each time the trick was done. The final card was merely 'thought of' as they say in the dealers catalogues. Martin has the card peeked but uses that amazing subtlety whereby you keep repeating the phrase 'thought of card' and this induces amnesia in the spectator who of course forgets that the card was peeked at not really thought of. I didn't ask the lady spectator what she thought of the performance as she was ushered from the room before the explanations commenced so I can't really say whether she truly believed she had seen a mental miracle of incredible proportions.

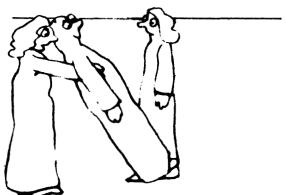

The explanations followed and Martin explained each item thoroughly and answered questions from the audience. Lecture notes were on sale both for this act and the act which followed. Admission to the lecture was £8.00 and lecture notes were £6.00 each which meant that your potential outlay for the evening was £20 which is very steep indeed. I can understand the price of the lecture notes when sold through the mail as they are very detailed though lack illustrations. However, it is most unfair to be expected to pay £6.00 for a transcript of a lecture you have just seen.

Having said this many were no doubt pleased to pay this for the notes on Martins 'Castle Act'. This routine consisted of items that Martin uses at the Magic Castle in Hollywood.

Following an Ace cutting routine and one shuffle Triumph there is an excellent matching the cards routine by Edward Marlo. The routine is very strong, self working and guaranteed to get a strong reaction from the spectators. No explanation was given at the time but the notes explain everything and the routine is available on video from Hans Zahn.

As I say I was not overwhelmed by the lecture indeed some items looked worse than I had envisaged them. Martin Nash is very professional, word perfect in his presentations but lacks spontaneity and this makes lengthy card routines hard to take. I know that other people loved the lecture and were in no way disappointed obviously it is a matter of taste. What does disappoint me is that the attendance was poor for a man of Nash's reputation and I would have thought more people would have given their support to this event. If this attitude continues in England we will be very lucky indeed if we have any more lectures from magicians abroad. Even your editor, Stephen, failed to put in an appearance having lost the combination to his wallet.

DAVID BRITLAND

UNDER CONTROL Stephen Tucker

This effect has been in my notes for years and I believe that the method is probably a simplified version of something someone showed me during a session . . . somewhere. In other words I do not claim originality for the actual effect but the method is my own.

You'll need a regular deck and the Aces should be set on top in the following order . . . B, R, B, R.

Explain that you will try and locate the four Aces. Explain this as you false shuffle.

Double turnover to show a red Ace, flip the double face down and table the top card, black Ace, to your left.

Cut the top card to the bottom and repeat the double turnover etc. to show the second red Ace but you really table the other black Ace atop the other card. Cut the top card from the top to the bottom and the situation is . . . The two tabled Aces are assumed to be red but are in fact black. The red Aces are together at the face of the deck.

Act as if you have forgotten something and then realise that two spectators should have selected cards. Have two cards selected, returned and control one to the top and the other to the centre with a break held above it by your left little finger. This is much easier than it sounds . . . Have both cards removed from the deck, then take back the first card and control it to the top. You can relax at this point as you are holding no breaks etc.

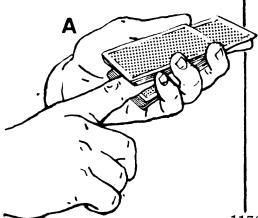

Lift off the upper half of the deck with your right hand and ask the second spectator to replace his card. Once the card is atop the lower half in your left hand, simply place the upper half back in place but maintain a break between the halves with your left little finger.

You are now about to seemingly produce two cards at random from the deck via a move of Englands Al Smith. Al described the move in his first book 'CARDS ON DEMAND.' (If you have the book, look up 'Perpetual Ginsberg.' for a complete explanation.)

Briefly... With your right forefinger push some of the cards below the break forward and toward the spectator. Fig: A shows this in action.

Remove your right forefinger and release the little finger break.

Reach over the packet with your right hand and grasp the cards pushed out of the deck and pull them further forward and completely out.

Place the cards onto the rest of the deck in the left hand but maintain a little finger break between the halves as you did before.

Deal the top card to the table but to the right of the other two cards. Immediately repeat the procedure by pushing some of the cards below the break forward again etc.

Once this packet has been removed the little finger break can again be released and need not be retaken even when the packet is replaced atop the left hand cards.

Finally deal the top card onto the other tabled card at your right.

Explain that these two cards are the black Aces but don't show them!!

The two cards are in fact the selections.

You haven't actually explained what you are about to do with the Aces and the spectators should be suspicious, to say the least, of the apparent black Aces, which you have explained to be the two cards to your right.

This suspicion is mainly due to the fact that they haven't seen the black Aces!

Ask the spectators to name either the red Aces, point to the cards on your left, or the black Aces, point to the cards on your right.

Explain that whichever colour they choose, you'll show them a trick with them. You can almost guarantee that they will name the black Aces and point to the cards on your right.

Explain that you will cause the black Aces to change into the selections. Click your fingers over the cards and flip them face up to reveal that they are the selections.

Immediately flip them face down and drop them onto the assumed red Aces to your left. Before the spectators can accuse you of cheating, comment that they are probably wondering what you would have done had they chosen the red Aces.

Tell them that you would have changed the red Aces into the selections, like this . . . Flip the packet face up and quickly separate the two black Aces into your right hand and the selections into your left hand.

It appears that you have changed the red Aces into the selections!!

The effect is really strange and you'll have to perform it in order to see what a great reaction it gets.

Note

You may like to try this variation. Set up is . . . King, red Ace, King, red Ace, rest of deck.

Perform the double turnovers etc and they'll assume that you've tabled the two red Aces to your left but really you've tabled two Kings. Force one of the two spectators to select one of the other two Kings still in the deck and allow the other to select any card.

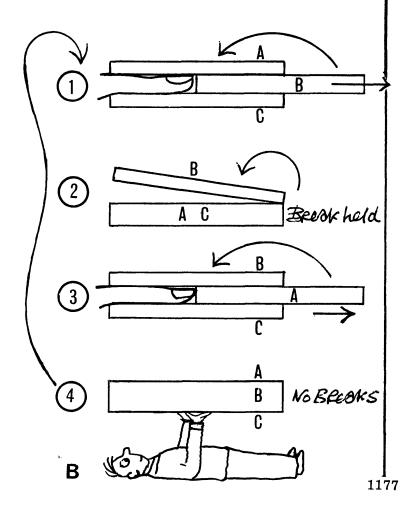

Produce them as before and continue up to the point where you ask if they're wondering what you'd have done if they had named the other Aces. Explain that you would have probably panicked and shown them the four Kings trick instead. Flip the packet face up and Elmsley count to display four? Kings . . . END.

Note

You of course placed the selections onto the assumed Aces with the forced King on top. This sets the packet in the order K, K, X, K when the packet is flipped face up.

Take a look at the illustrations below for further details.

ALPHABET MENTALISM Barrie Richardson

The following demonstration is a routine which I developed for function programs specifically with women in mind.

Women are far more inclined to accept the power of intuition than men. The routine makes use of old ideas but the end result is a 10 minute demonstration which utilises several people from the audience in an entertaining and perplexing manner.

Presentation

You ask the audience how many of them have played Scrabble and display a small, plastic bag containing numerous Scrabble letters.

A spectator is requested to remove a handful of letters from the bag, call them out loud and then drop them, one at a time, back into the bag. This simple act demonstrates that the letters are not all the same.

She is now handed the bag and asked to take it to the back of the room and allow another member of the audience to remove a small handful. This person is instructed to allow all the letters to dribble back into the bag, with the exception of one. The letter remaining is memorised and tossed back into the bag with the rest. This is repeated with two other audience members and at the end of this procedure three people will each be thinking of a letter of the alphabet.

You now take back the bag and ask yet another person to remove a handful of letters and hold them in a clenched fist. You also reach in and remove a handful.

You now perform the Koran/Victor number force

Comment that the spectator doesn't know for sure how many letters she removed. Ask her to quietly count her letters and you count yours. You now make the famous statement...

"I predict that I will have as many letters as you, plus three more and enough left over to make thirteen letters when added to yours."

Ask her how many she has . . . SEVEN. You now count seven letters, one at a time, into a drinking glass. You point out that the first part of your statement is correct, you do have as many as her. You count another three letters into the glass and point out that the second part is also correct, you have three more. Finally you point out that your final statement was that when the remainder of your letters were added to her letters, the total would be thirteen.

Slowly you open your hand and six letters are seen!!

This final point can be milked by having her count her letters into the glass up to the count of seven and then you continue, ending on thirteen and showing your hand to now be empty.

Now for the next effect . . . Ask her to reach into the bag and remove a good handful of letters. You remove a handful too and comment that it would be miraculous if you had both removed the same number of letters. She counts her letters into the glass and so do you.

Impossible as it seems, you both had the exact same number of letters!! You now remind the audience that three people in the room are still thinking of letters and you offer to attempt an experiment in mind-reading.

You explain that the three people should stand. Now you instruct them as follows . . ." In a few moments I will name the letters each of you are thinking of. When I do so you must simply sit down. You are not required to answer my statement in any way. If I call out the letter you are thinking of, simply sit down." After a few seconds concentration, you call out three letters and all three spectators sit down!!

The audience applaud and the routine is over.

Explanation

The plastic bag is in fact a variation of a clear plastic change bag. In this case the bag is a shoe-bag with draw strings. A second clear bag, which is slightly shorter, is taped to one side.

The free side of the inner bag has one or two dabs of Blue-Tac.

The letters O, N and E (20 of them in all.) are placed in the inner bag. The remaining letters from your Scrabble set are placed in the outer bag. When the 1st spectator takes a handful, it is from the outer bag and the letters are obviously seen to be assorted. The letters are returned to the outer bag and the bag closed momentarily. This gives you the opportunity to glue the inner loose side to the outer bag.

The assistant is shown how to hold the bag open and she proceeds to force one of the letters O, N and E onto three members of the audience.

The Koran/Victor number force now follows . . . You take a good handful of letters from the outer bag, then allow the spectator to remove a handful from the same bag. You count your letters and he counts his. Let's assume that you have 36 letters. You will later state that you have as many as him, plus 6 and enough to make his letters equal 30. In other words, depending on the number of letters you have, you will state different values.

A simple rule is to state the last digit of your total as the number more than her letters you will have and the first digit, in this case 3 which represents 30, as the total of her and your remaining letters.

I'm sure that you will all be familiar with this age old principle anyway. The next stage is to remove the same amount of letters as the spectator and this is even easier.

Open the bag at the inner section containing the 20 letters and ask the spectator to remove a handful. You now remove and count as you do so the remaining letters in this section. This will allow you to calculate the number of letters the spectator has.

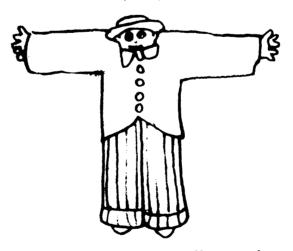

Explain that you will remove a few more and do so but from the outer section. In fact you remove a number that will give you the same amount as the spectator. It only remains for you to count your handful into the glass and she count her letters and it is seen that you have somehow removed the same number.

Finally you reveal the three letters that are being thought of.

This is in fact the Doc Daley (ALSO DAVID HOY.) subterfuge of the tossed out deck. You simply name the three letters represented in your force section O, N and E. Obviously all three spectators will sit down and the audience thinks that you have named the actual letters that all three spectators were thinking of, which in a way . . . You have!

The presentation gets away from cards and ESP symbols and the routine leaves a lot of scope for showmanship. Up to 300 people can be entertained with props you can carry in your pocket. (Fig: A depicts the construction of the bag.)

THE TREVOR LEWIS CARD TO WALLET Roberto Giobbi (1983)

The basic idea of this effect was shown to me by my good friend Kurt Freitag of Vienna in Böblingen (January 1983). He credited it to Trevor Lewis.

Requirements

- An Ed Balducci wallet, also known as the Kaps wallet
- a sheet of stickers, inside the wallet
- a pen
- an ordinary deck of cards with a corner short (CS)
- a £20.00 note.

Preparation

Stickers and bill are placed in the wallet. The latter goes into the left inner pocket of your coat.

Management and handling:

- 1) Hand the deck to a spectator to your right for shuffling. Take it back and as you address your audience with some introductory remarks on the effect to follow cut the CS to the bottom:" This may easily become your favorite card effect of this evening... because you have the possibility to win 20 pounds!"
- 2) Take out the wallet and take out the note showing it. Take out the sheet with the stickers and place it in front of a spectator on your left. Replace the bill and place the wallet back in your pocket pulling up the loading device. Beforehand you have handed the pen to the spectator with the stickers and asked him to sign one of them. The attention will therefore be on him as you pull up the gimmick.
- 3) Spread the deck face down on the table and have the spectator on the left take any card, show it to everybody and eventually have him put the sticker on the face of his selection. Request him to check that the sticker cannot possibly be removed nor slid off.
- 4) As he is doing all this, gather the face down spread in left hand dealing position. The right hand seizes the deck from above in biddle position and immediately spin cuts the top quarter into the left hand. Ask him to replace his card on the packet in the left hand. Drop the remainder of the deck from the right hand on top of all and instantly ribbon spread the deck face down on the table.

5) Tell them that you will now explain how the spectator can win the 20 pounds. "I will afterwards hand you the deck whereupon you will cut it into four portions approximately alike. You will then have to decide on any one of these four packets. If your selected and signed card happens to be among the cards of this packet the 20 pounds will be yours. You don't risk anything and if you loose you can always say you tried it and we had some fun together, O.K.?

As you are saying this cut the top quarter of the deck to the left on the table. Then cut about a third of the remaining cards from the top and place to the right of the packet which has already been tabled. Cut at the CS and place this packet to the right of the other two. Finally drop the last packet to the right of all. The selection will now be on top of this last packet. All this serves apparently as a demonstration of what the spectator has to do. Actually it allows you to control the selection in a subtle way.

- "Is this fair?" As you ask him this question pick up the packets from right to left — the selection will now be on top. As you casually square the cards palm the top card in the right hand and immediately hand him the deck in order to be cut into four packets. Withdraw the right hand and rest it on the edge of the table (if you are standing or sitting at a club table rest the hand on the hip, leg etc.). As he is cutting the packets take out your wallet loading the palmed card in the process. Turn to a spectator on your right: "May I hand you the wallet with the money for safekeeping?" Request him to place the wallet in the inner pocket of his coat. The revelation of the signed card will be greatly enhanced in this way because the wallet has apparently been all the time in a spectator's pocket.
- 7) Have the spectator on your left choose any one of the four packets. Pick it up and start to deal the cards which you are holding face down in left hand dealing position face up in a row on the table. When you have dealt approximately half of the card deal one face down but immediately deal the next card face up. All cards must be visible. This should bring a laugh because they think the face down card is or at least, might be their selection. Let the audience react and after some byplay turn the card face up revealing of course an indifferent card.
- 8) Tell them that you couldn't afford to loose, this is why you had to cheat a little. "You know, quiet honestly, I cheated . . . do you really think I can afford to lose 20 pounds!" Have them name their card. Look at them. "I thought you were going to take the (name of card) . . . that's what happened to me the other night and I lost my 20 pounds . . . that's why . . ." Start to look for your wallet in your pockets, then look up and apparently remember that you gave the wallet to a spectator to hold. ". . oh, I gave you my wallet before we started . . . please take it out and open it . . ."
- 9) Wait until he has opened the wallet. "There is a zipper compartment . . . here, may I show you . . . "Take the wallet from him. You must give the impression that he could have done everything, but you just want to make things easier for him. Act accordingly. Open the zipper compartment and draw out the card until the index shows. Pause. Take out the whole card and keep it motionless for at least three seconds as near as possible to the zipper. Let them see the signed sticker. Patter: "What was your card... I thought so, that's why I removed it before I started to perform this experiment for you... but what I don't understand...how did you signature get on this card!"

MODIFIED MASTER GRIP Roger Crosthwaite

This is the grip devised by Marlo for false deals. The grip enables you to, with the minimum of movement, shift the positions of your fingers ready for the various deals.

Most of these positions necessitate a movement of the forefinger along the front edge of the deck from the mechanic's grip, at one extreme, to the natural dealing position at the other.

It is also necessary that the inner end of the deck be raised or lowered for the various deals. The Master grip will enable this to be done inconspicuously, with minimal finger movements.

The grip can be shifted without any change in handling being apparent to the onlookers.

I have modified Marlo's grip very slightly to suit my own needs. I think it important to realise that people's hands do differ in size and shape.

It follows that a grip, which is perfect for Marlo, may not be right for everyone else. One should always look at the basic thing described and then make any adjustments that may be required in order to adapt it to the size and shape of your own hands.

To quote Vernon, "Use your head." Do not always try to slavishly copy the original. For the sake of clarity, I am going to describe the original Master grip and later detail my own modifications.

In usual descriptions of the grip, you are told to place the inner left corner of the deck just below the base of the left thumb.

In Marlo's grip, this same corner is brought down to a lower position, nearer the edge of the palm itself. The deck is placed down into the left hand so that the two diagonal corners of the bottom card touch the lower base of the palm and the tip of the left first finger.

The left thumb lies diagonally across the deck with its tip near the outer right corner. The tips of the remaining three fingers press against the right side of the deck. The tips of these three fingers should be low enough to allow the top card to pass over them during the deal.

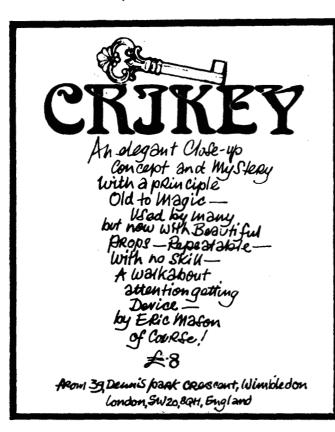

This, so far, is the Marlo Master grip position. To change this to, what I call, the modified Master grip, the left forefinger, which is at the outer right corner of the deck, presses down slightly.

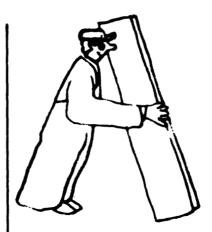

This causes the inner left hand corner to be slightly raised, into the Mechanics grip position.

I have spent some time explaining this grip as I find it extremely useful for second dealing, centre dealing and bottom dealing and also for the pull back count.

A consistant grip is maintained throughout. It is suggested that anyone wishing to pursue the matter further, should study Marlo's 'SECONDS, CENTRES AND BOTTOMS.' This book details many applications for the Master grip.

Editor... Roger's variation is extremely slight as he points out but it is often the finer points that make a move, routine etc. workable!!

MORE DANGEROUS? Paul Hallas

I loved Jarry Sadowitz's "Prone To Live Dangerously" in Pabular Vol. 7 no. 9, and now use it as part of a three phase routine. Although this routine contains nothing original it may be of interest.

What Happens:

A card is chosen and returned to the pack. A second card is introduced as a locator card. The spectator, while holding the cards behind his back, inserts the face up locator card into the pack. It is found that he has inserted it next to his selection. The performer offers to repeat the effect and to show what happens behind the spectator's back. A second card is selected and returned to the pack. Using the same locator card go into "Prone To Live Dangerously". After offering to repeat the effect a third, time the locator card changes into the spectator's card while he holds it in his hand!

Credits, sources, methods, etc:

Credit for the first part goes to Annemann. I cannot remember where the effect is in print but I know it is Annemann. Briefly, the selected card is controlled to the top. A locator card is introduced and placed face up on top of it. As you place the pack behind the spectator's back for him to hold, you do a Charlier cut bringing the selection and locator card to the centre of the pack. He places the top card into the pack and loses it, thinking it to be the face up locator card. The rest is self explanatory. For the second phase look up "Prone To Live Dangerously", and use the same locator card as in the previous phase. At the end of this phase, shuffle both the selection and locator card back into the pack and relax for a moment as if you had finished.

Thank Ted Annemann again for the third phase. "A Card in Hand" can be found on page 98 of "Annemann's Card Magic", or in a copy of "Annemann's Miracles of Card Magic.

Follow "A Card in Hand" up to the point the selection is on top of the pack. Ask the spectator to stick the locator card into the pack. He cannot comply because you have shuffled the cards. Double turnover the top card and say this card will be the new locator card. Double turnover again and give the spectator his own card to hold face down, asking him to insert the card into the pack but keep hold of it. After checking the cards either side you ask him to name his card. You than ask him to turn over the card he holds exclaiming that you cannot get any closer than that!!

The three effects go together beautifully and always get a good reaction. If you take the trouble of looking up "A Card in Hand" and try this you will see it does not weaken Jerry's effect but builds on it.

The Page boy speaks....

Over the festive season (Xmas that was) I worked club acting as M.C. and doing a spot. On the bill was an act I hadn't seen for a number of years. A husband and wife team, they used to be a song and dance act. They are no longer youngsters and have since cut out the dance part of the act which was at least half the act.

They learnt to play several musical instruments between them and added some comedy routines and impressions. This, added to Lord knows how many costume changes now constitutes the act. Did I mention that they also carry their own P.A. system which is suitable for use in very large venues? I didn't? Well they do.

Got the picture? From a straightforward song and dance act, with one costume change, they have become a truckdriving caravan towing self contained showbiz unit capable of putting on a one hour show under almost any conditions. They have put in a lot of hard work and invested a considerable amount of hard cash into the venture and they make a living. They can, will, and do, travel anywhere.

We had a long chat before the show and he asked me how I was doing. So I pointed to my little bag, and said, "It's still more or less the same act". He looked at the bag and at my suit hanging above it in amazement and said, "Is that all you have to carry?" He was even more amazed when I told him that as a general rule I refuse to travel more than sixty or seventy miles outside London. He just couldn't understand how I make a living.

The answer to that is that I have learnt how to keep my overheads low, like not eating too often, smoking O.P. cigarettes etc. Actually the main point I am trying to make here, is not money, but the act itself. Maybe I'm lazy. I'll rephrase that. I am quite lazy. For the last few years, I have been trying, not too successfully, to expand my performing repertoire, the effects I earn money with.

I probably know just as many tricks as the next guy. But I don't see why I should lug around a large box or table or cageful of animals or a female assistant to help me earn a living when, with a bit more care and long time thinking about it, I can probably achieve a satisfactory result with a vanishing and reappearing cane or some other similar prop which can be popped into the same little bag I'm using now. Is that a logical argument?

I keep thinking of Amadeo, Max Malini, Al Flosso, Keith Clark. All of them, and there were many others, were both good performers and good magicians, and all of them used small props.

When I say small, I mean small in the sense that they didn't have much to cart around. Amadeo used to open by tearing up a newspaper and producing a paper tree perhaps fifteen or twenty foot tall. That isn't exactly a small prop by any standards, but a couple of newspapers isn't a lot to carry.

What these guys did do, apart from entertaining audiences, was to make them sit up and say to each other "How the hell did he do that?", which is a lot more than my truckdriving caravan towing trumpet blowing music loving impressario friends can do.

Can you do it? I don't know what kind of an act you do, you may even transport it with a coach and four rabbits, but can you make your audience say, "How the hell etc?"

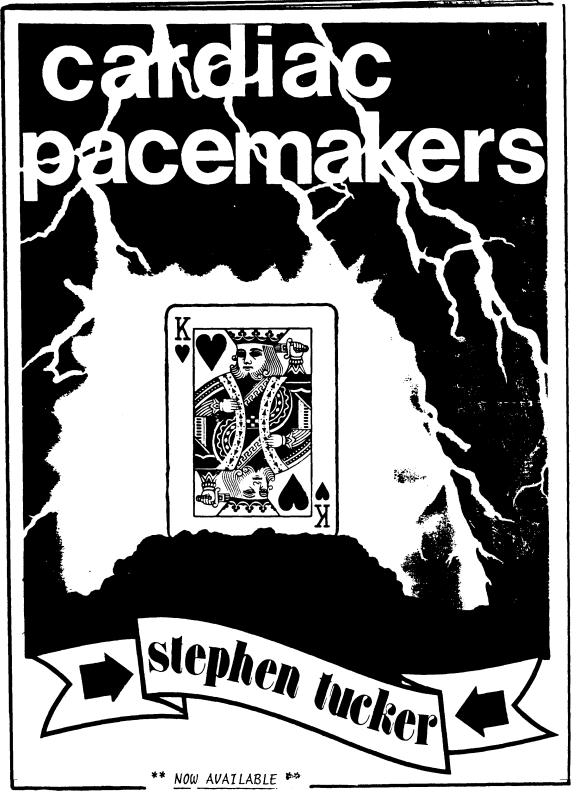

Remember, I didn't say "How the hell was that done?", but "How the hell DID HE DO THAT".

Try it sometime, what ever kind of act you do. You'll know the difference.

EDITORIAL

December '83/January '84

Hi there! You won't believe this but I'm actually typing this in Sweden! I've just completed a series of lectures in Copenhagen, Gothenburg and Stockholm. In four days time I fly back to London so in the meantime I thought I'd jot down all the effects that have been shown to me by the Swedish and Danish magicians I've met.

If you think England is cold, you should be here at night. At the moment it's six below Zero Brrrrr.

My good friend Gay Ljungberg, pronounced Yunberg, has donated two excellent routines within this issue and I too release an effect that I worked out whilst over here. The famous and the not so famous rub shoulders in order to bring you this Scandanavian issue.

El Duco is probably the most famous of all the contributors, and Gentleman Jack comes a close second. Both these excellent magicians are now regular attendants of our own English conventions.

Whilst in Stockholm for the one-day convention I was awarded the badge worn by members of the Swedish Magic Society and also a tie with the insignia of the society.

I'd like to take this opportunity to thank all the magicians I met, I can't even begin to pronounce their names!

I'd like to extend my warmest thank you to Gay Ljungberg and his family for making my stay so enjoyable.

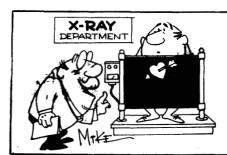

Quite recently I received some material from Phil Goldstein for future publication. With a bit of luck we may see a one man issue from him in a month or so.

In next month's issue Roy Walton heads the all star cast and from what I've seen so far, It's going to be great.

David Britland has also promised me a oneman issue in the near future and I know that this will please most card toting magi.

Let me just thank all of you for your kind letters and good wishes on my new editorship. Till next month . . . Byeeee!

"Your heart condition would seem to have been brought on his an unique time."

'Tommy Wonder entertains' By Jos Bema. This book is published and distributed by Jeff Busby Magic Inc. 10329 MacArthur Boulevard, Suites 5&6, Oakland, California 94605. USA. ($12.50 $18.00 inc. Air-Mail to Europe.)

This book, written by Gene Matsuura, edited by Jeff Busby and illustrated by John Elferink, outlines three Cups & Balls type routines.

Jos Bema alias Tommy Wonder is fast gaining a reputation as one of the world's leading thinkers and performers of fine close-up. Watching him work, one is aware of high class entertainment, coupled with technical skill and originality. However, it is not until you study his writings that you become aware of the depth of thought and analysis that underlie the entertainment he creates.

His magic is based on a solid foundation of acutely observed audience psychology. It is the kind of magic that can only be developed by a thinking performer with considerable, practical experience.

In this book, three presentations of the Cups and Balls/Chop Cup are dealt with. All are covered in the minutest detail. The reader is taught every aspect of their presentation and the psychology behind it. The first routine is called 'Canned Craziness'. It involves a can of soup, a tin-opener and a meat-ball. The accent of the routine is on comedy, however, it is also very baffling. Firstly the can is opened and found to contain a solitary meat-ball. The ensuing routine contains a penetration, where the ball gets stuck half way through the bottom of the can. Finally, after the production of a giant ball, the can is found to be unopened and in tact. Like most of Tommy's stuff, the whole thing is reset in seconds, making it perfect for the table hopper.

The second effect is called 'Cough Cough' and is more of a gag than a trick. In effect, the performer, feigning a slight cough, removes a tin of cough sweets. On opening the tin, only one sweet is found inside. As the performer puts it in his mouth it vanishes, only to be discovered under the lid but in a surprising and hilarious manner, which involves a series of diminishing lids appearing in rapid succession. As always, with Jos, the presentation has been carefully put together and described in the minutest detail. Again the whole thing is reset in seconds ready for the next demonstration.

The final item is the Tommy Wonder 'Cups and Balls'. This is a two cup routine and features the famous open loading techniques, for which the author is justly famed. Having seen this routine worked several times I can vouch for its effectiveness. For the benefit of those, who have been less fortunate, I will mention its most salient features.

At the beginning the cups are brought on in a cloth bag, which has a large pom pom attached to the draw string. This bag is left on the table, in full view of the audience. In spite of this, the large pom pom is stolen off the bag and produced from beneath one of the cups. It is then refastened to the draw string.

The routine continues until the climax when the pom pom once again appears under one cup and the bag itself arrives under the other. This is magic by misdirection par excellence. It should be studied minutely by every real enthusiast. There are many other subtle touches in the routine but Jos Bema's analysis of open loading is a major contribution. on the subject of the classic. Its importance can not be too highly stressed. For the student of advanced close-up magic this book is a must. For the practical performer it will prove invaluable.

'SPELL-BINDER SPECIAL No:3'

It was a couple of years ago that Joe Riding told me about a Uri Geller type watch routine, shown to him by Martin Breese. According to Joe it was real magic. Well that routine, the one that completely floored Joe, is just one of the 25 items in this issue.

Twelve of the others are by Stephen Tucker, four by David Britland and one by Tucker and Britland. What is more, they are all good!

I particularly like Stephen's spoon bending routine and 'Coineto'. This latter is a coin passing from hand to hand, a bit at a time; sounds wierd but looks good.

It would be impossible to mention all of the 25 items in the space available. All are first class and favourites are purely a matter of personal preference and prejudice. I liked Britland's 'Zennerism' because of the simple yet subtle way, by which it overcomes the basic drawback of previous versions. (You will have to buy the book to know what I'm talking about.)

Other contributors include Phil Goldstein, Reinhard Muller, Pascal Monmoine, Justin Higham, Daniel Kalinowski, Paul Brignall and Ian Land.

All in all, a worthwhile issue, packed with some really good, off beat magic.

Henrik Specht is both Swedish and Danish close-up champion and on my final day in Sweden a letter arrived from him containing three fabulous effects for future publication. The following is my favourite. It is completely void of sleights, yet the effect is fantastic.

I suggest you adopt the Stewart James 'Further than that' patter theme and the effect is thrust into the miracle class.

Henrik is what we call in England, a cardnut! He never moves without a deck of cards in his hands. So with this in mind, get yourself a deck and set the top 8 cards so that they run from the top down in Ace to Eight order. Suits don't matter.

Obtain a break under the 16th card from the top and have a spectator select a card from the portion of cards below this break.

You can of course spread the cards for a selection and visually count to the 16th card and obtain your break as you close the spread after the selection.

Have the card remembered, take it and insert it into the break.

False shuffle without distrubing the top 17 cards and set the deck down for a few seconds.

Explain that you'd like him to give you any number from 10 to 15. Count the required amount into a face down pile on the table and place the rest of the cards to one side.

You now state that you think his card is amongst the cards just dealt and you have a fantastic new method for finding it. Perform the Australian deal, or DOWN-UNDER DEAL as it is sometimes called.

Simply take the top card and deal it down onto the table. Place the next card under the packet and deal the next onto the other tabled card. Place the next under the packet and continue in this way until you are holding one card and the rest of the packet has been dealt into a pile on the table.

Proudly flip the card face up and act as if you expect it to be the selected card. The spectator will quickly point out that it is not his card and you must act a little upset and apologise that it must have gone wrong. Hand the rest of the tabled packet to the spectator and ask him to remove his card. He will now point out that his card is not even amongst the cards used.

Apologise again and explain that you will have to use plan: B.

Point to the card which you had left in your hand at the end of the Down-Under deal and state its value.

Ask the spectator to pick up the rest of the deck and remove the card which is that number of cards down from the top.

He does so and will of course find his previously selected card.

Example... The spectator names the number 11. You deal 11 cards in a face down pile on the table and set the deck aside.

Perform the Down-Under deal with the 11 card packet and you will be left holding the 6 spot. When he deals down to the 6th card in the deck it will be his card.

This is a very simple card effect but don't underestimate it. It has all the properties of a good SUCKER routine and the final pay-off is extremely satisfying.

CHRISTMAS CARDS Gay Ljungberg

This little effect is ideal for performing at your Christmas party. You'll need three blank faced cards and one card which is blank on both sides.

Got the cards? Great! now jump on the number 36 bus and go to your local stationary shop. You'll need some adhesive Christmassy stickers depicting Santa Claus and the usual greetings of 'MERRY CHRISTMAS' and 'HAPPY NEW YEAR.'

On the faces of the three cards with backs stick a Santa Claus sticker.

On one side of the double-blank card stick the 'HAPPY CHRISTMAS' sticker and on the other side stick the 'HAPPY NEW YEAR' sticker.

Set the four cards with the double-blank card third from the top. All the other cards are face down.

Performance

Wait until all the people who are usually bored to tears with your card tricks are assembled in the room. Introduce the cards and Jordan count to show four backs. Ignore the yawns and place the last card of the count under the packet. Flip the packet face up and Elmsley count to show four Santa Claus. (COULD BE CLAUSES?) Ohhh what's this? No spades, no Hearts.... could be interesting.

You borrow a paper napkin and fold it in half. You place the four cards into the fold as you explain that Santa Claus and his brothers are having their own party.

After a few seconds you explain that they've finished.

Reach into the napkin and remove any one of the cards with Santa on and place it face up on the table. Reach in and remove another and then another. You point out that these are Santa's brothers but Santa has completely vanished.

The spectators waste no time in pointing out that a small portion of the fourth card is hanging from the napkin.

You ignore them but they still insist.

Finally you remove the fourth card with the 'MERRY CHRISTMAS' side facing them and explain that this is in fact a Christmas card that Santa left behind.

They will insist that you turn the card around as they believe Santa is on the other side.

After a few seconds of banter.... Flip the card round and the words 'HAPPY NEW YEAR' will be seen!

Everything can now be examined.

Gay informs me that this effect plays just as well with children as adults.

PICKPOCKEYT Gentleman Jack

During my stay in Sweden I had the good fortune to be invited to the home of the world's greatest pickpocket . . . Gentleman Jack.

Jack showed me countless miracles and gave me permission to include a couple in this Scandanavian issue.

This first effect is nothing short of fantastic. You'll need to put your hands to work on a little D.I.Y. but nothing too demanding.

Obtain 9 Poker chips. Jack uses 3 white, 3 Blue and 3 Red.

On the White chips Letraset the numbers 1, 6 and 8.

On the Blue chips Letraset the numbers 3, 5 and 7.

On the Red chips Letraset the numbers 9, 4 and 2.

You can of course use adhesive numbers or any other means to affix the required numbers to the chips.

NOTE. As the numbers run from 1-9, you may be lucky enough to find chips already printed with the numbers at your local Games shop.

In addition to the chips you'll also need a door-key attached to a key-fob which has the number 165 printed on it. (The fob not the key.)

Have the fob in your breast pocket with the key hanging outside.

Introduce the chips and stack them in their respective colours. Ask two spectators to each choose a colour as you explain that each and every chip has a different number printed on it.

Assuming that one spectator selects the Red chips and the other the Blue chips, you can comment on their political interests . . . ; if you like.

Point out that the White chips have been eliminated and show that they have different numbers on than the other chips.

Pocket the White chips and ask each spectator to shuffle his 3 chips. Ask them to decide between them who shall go first.

Ask the spectator who has decided to go first to place any one of his chips number side up on the table. Ask the other spectator to place one of his chips to the right of the tabled one also number side up. Explain that this simple procedure has generated a random two digit number. Ask the spectators to repeat the procedure beneath this first two digit number. Finally have them make another two digit number beneath this and they are finished.

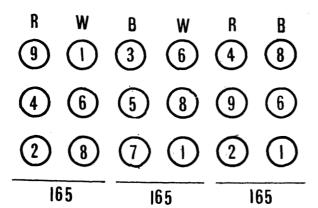

Have one of them mentally add the three numbers together or if you like you could hand him pen and paper or calculator.

He will arrive at a total of 165!!!

Due to the very old mathematical principle on which this routine is based he will always arrive at the total of 165. I know it sounds fantastic it is!!

Fig. 1 depicts some of the possible combinations of the layed-out chips and you can see that 165 is the only total possible.

If you are working to ladies you explain that you happen to be staying at a Hotel quite near to here and you also happen to be in room number 165.

Ask one of the ladies to remove the key and fob from your pocket and hold it up for all to see Applause.

If you think you can get away with it, you can let the lady keep the key and fob, look at your watch and end with the statement, "I'll meet you there in 5 minutes."

The second effect from Jack can be found later in the issue . . . It's well worth waiting for!

SYMPATHY Gay Ljungberg

Gay informed me that he based this effect on Gentleman Jack's SIDE BY SIDE effect from his lecture notes. You'll need one Rainbow deck which is minus one indifferent card, the same indifferent card but from a red backed deck, a deck of blue backed blank faced cards, two Court cards that are the same ie. King of Hearts with blue backs and finally a pencil and paper.

Preparation

The Rainbow Deck should be in a red card case and the 10th card from the bottom should be one of the blue backed King of Hearts. The bottom card of the deck should be the indifferent red backed card.

The blank faced deck should be in a blue card case with the other King of Hearts face down on top. (On top of the deck that is, not the card case!)

Performance

Start with a spectator on either side of you and the cased decks on the table. Have each spectator pick up a deck.

Take the blue card case from the spectator, remove the deck and force him to select the top card. I use the 'CROSSING THE CUT' method. Simply hold the deck face down in your hand, ask the spectator to cut off some cards and place them on the table. You now place the rest of the deck onto his half so that a cross shape is made.

You now need to patter for a few seconds so that he will forget the cards a little. I sometimes perform a short thumb-tie routine at this point.

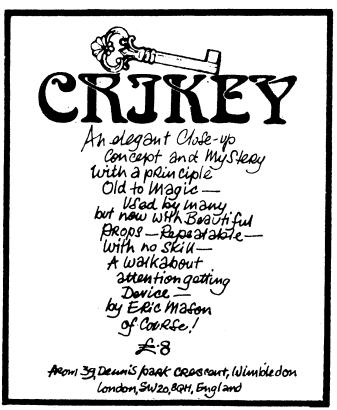

Turn to the other spectator and ask if she has a favourite or lucky number. Usually you will receive a number between 10 and 20 but if you don't, ask her to name a number between 10 and 20.

In the mean time, you have removed the deck from the red case face up.

You now force the King of Hearts on this spectator using the 'BETWEEN 10 AND 20' method. Assuming that she says, "14"... hand her the pencil and paper and have her write the number down. You now deal the same number of cards from the face of the deck to the table in a neat pile. Pick up the pile and place it back onto the face of the deck. Take the pencil and draw a + between the numbers 1 and 4 ie. 1+4.

Ask her to work out the answer to this difficult problem and when you receive the answer '5', deal off 5 cards again from the face onto the table and hand the spectator the 5th card, which is of course the King of Hearts!!

Patter to the effect that it's a very lucky card for you and turn to the other spectator, lift off the upper half and remove the top card of the lower half and place it face down in front of him. This card is the other King of Hearts! Place the deck down and take a King in each hand. Slowly turn the face up card face down and the two blue backs will be seen. Triumphantly point out that you have succeeded, both cards match They're both blue!

Act surprised that the spectators don't seem too impressed and then slowly turn both cards around to show the matching faces, wait for the applause!

The effect appears to be over but you continue" Perhaps you are wondering why I was so pleased when you selected the King of Hearts from this deck." point to the blank faced deck. "Simply there are no other cards in the deck!"

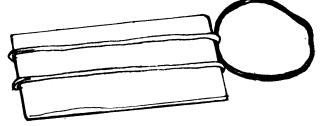

Flip the deck face up and ribbon-spread it to reveal all the blank faces.

"You might also be wondering why I was so amazed that you both selected the blue backed cards. This is simply because your card was the only blue backed card in this deck!" Pick up the Rainbow deck, flip if face down and spread it to show all the different back designs.

I usually perform a normal spread with the blank cards but completely wipe out the Rainbow deck so that they can see the design on the back of every card and no two cards have the same back designs except the chosen ones!

Editor

Gay prefers not to shuffle the decks before performance as this tends to slow down the pace of the routine and is not really necessary. You can of course work out your own false shuffles and apply them to each deck . . . IF YOU MUST.

FANTASTIC ELASTICS El Duco

El Duco, who needs no further introduction, has very kindly given me permission to detail one of the two methods for performing his excellent marketed effect. Should you wish to add the effect, which comes complete with a fully illustrated 11 page booklet, to your collection . . . simply write to El Duco's magic, Box 31052, 20049 Malmo, Sweden and he'll forward you details of this and his other items.

Before we go any further you'll need to obtain three identical elastic bands of reasonable thickness. Cut one of the bands and Super-Glue it together again but first thread one of the other two bands onto it so that the end result is a two band chain.

You'll also need a stiff piece of card and you're almost ready to perform but first wrap the bands around the card as depicted in Fig:1. Notice that the single band is at the bottom and the normal band of the chain is wrapped around the card at the top. The prepared band is held in place as shown but no stress is placed upon it.

NOTE. Never stretch the elastic with the joint!!

In the illustrations to follow the gimmicked elastic is depicted black so you can keep track of it.

Performance

With the elastics wrapped around the card and in your pocket, you can always get the right grasp on them prior to performance. Fig:2 shows how the card is held as you openly remove the lower elastic with your left hand. The elastic with the join is hidden in the right hand. Once the left hand has removed its elastic, it keeps hold of it as the right hand removes the other elastic from the card. Notice that the right thumb and forefinger grip has not changed throughout and the other elastic of the chain is still within the right hand.

Fig:3 shows the removal of the upper elastic. Place the card to one side and hold both elastics as shown in Fig:4. Hold the hands about 20cm apart over the table top. Sit calmly, leaning backward so that the distance between you and the table is 15-20cm. Don't lean forward over the table!

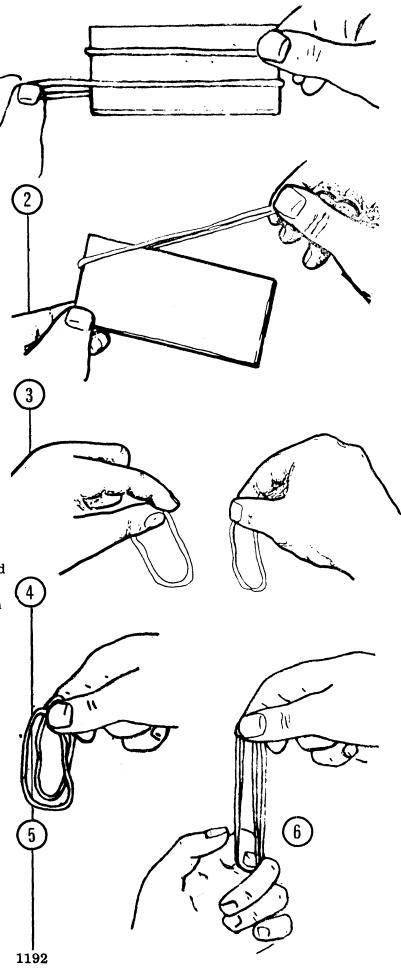

Now the left hand places its elastic between the right thumb and forefinger but make sure that it is placed behind the elastic previously held in the right hand. Fig:5 shows this position.

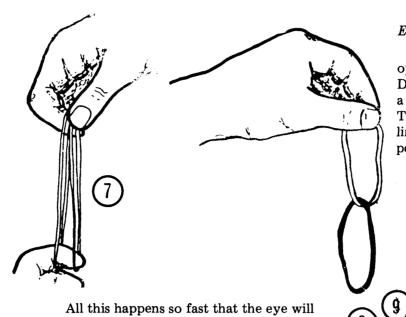

Remember that the single elastic is nearest you in Fig:5 and it is slightly to the left of the other one.

Now place your left forefinger through both elastics and you'll be in the position shown in Fig:6. Check to make sure that the elastics are not twisted around each other. Stretch the elastics (Fig:7) Note that the elastics are at the tip of your left forefinger but the single elastic is at the very tip!

Hold the elastics vertical between your hands and release your grasp with your right thumb and forefinger. At the same time, take hold of the elastic which is further up the left forefinger in Fig:7.

The result will be that the loose elastic shoots into your lap and in the same instant the other elastic from within your right hand will fall into the position shown in Fig:8.

All this happens so fast that the eye will not realise that one elastic has shot into your lap. The falling elastic from your right hand will add to the illusion that somehow both hands have instantly linked!

When you hold the linked elastics in your left hand, be sure to show that your hands are otherwise empty.

Drop the elastics on the table. Sooner or later someone will pick them up and take a look. It is quite possible that he will see the joint. Don't try to excuse it, just point out that there must be a joint for the miracle to happen.

Point out that you caused the two separate bands to link. After all that is the effect!

You may be asked to repeat the effect. Generally this is not a good idea but you can, by explaining that you first need to unlink the bands.

Place them beneath the table, pick up the single band and get the other chain into the starting position and continue as previously explained.

Just remember to practise the stretch and loose move. Stretch the elastics once and loose the grasp. Don't stretch them again and again before releasing your hold. If you do, the audience will concentrate on this movement and the risk of exposure is increased.

Further ideas

Instead of presenting the effect on its own, you can intergrate it into other routines with different objects.

You can wind the elastics around your deck as in Fig:9. Have the deck in your pocket, when you take it out you palm the elastic in your hand. The audience expect a card trick so no one will pay any attention to the bands. Remove them and hold one in each hand. Now call attention to them and

Editor

I'd like to thank El Duco for allowing us the opportunity of seeing this miracle free of charge. Don't forget that the original manuscript contains a second method that only uses the linked pair. The manuscript also comes complete with a linked set and indeed everything you need to perform both routines.

THINK Stephen Tucker

I thought up this next effect whilst staying in Halmstad at a friend's home.

You'll need two blank faced cards and an Ace and Three of the same suit. All the backs are the same colour.

Let's assume that by now you've rumaged through your drawer of loose cards and found an Ace and Three of Clubs and the two blank faced cards. Set them from top down in the order . . . blank faced card, Ace, Blank faced card, Three. (The cards are face down with the Three at the bottom.)

Have the cards either in a small plastic holder an envelope or even your pocket and you're ready to perform.

Begin by having a card freely selected from your regular deck. Any card can be selected so long as it's the Three of Clubs!! (Force it.) Have the selection tabled face up to one side and place the deck away. Introduce the four card packet and explain that you have only four cards as you patter, reverse the order of the cards and count them from hand to hand.

So far, four backs have been seen.

Explain that in a few seconds you will try to print a replica of the selection with the aid of these cards.

Buckle-turnover three cards as one and the Ace will be seen. Flip the trio face down and deal the top card face down to the table.

Buckle-turnover two cards and the Ace will be seen again but the spectator will assume that you have two identical Aces. Flip the duo face down and again deal the top card from the packet and onto the other tabled card. Buckleturnover one card and yet another? Ace will be seen. Flip it face down and deal it atop the other two cards.

Finally flip over the fourth card and it is seen to be completely blank. Explain that you will print the replica of the selection on the face of this card but first the card has to be tested in order that its magical potential can be assessed. (Load of garbage!!)

Place the blank faced card face up on your table to one side and pick up the three cards from the table. Remove the centre card, without showing its face and explain that you will place one of the Aces to one side. Pick up the blank faced card, flip it face down and place it to the bottom of the other assumed Aces. Quickly reverse the order of the three face down cards and comment that the blank card is somewhere amongst the three cards. Click your fingers, wave your wand or whatever else takes your fancy and then show that you have in fact got three Aces in your hand. You do so by use of the Hamman Flushtration count, sometimes referred to as All-backs count.

This in effect reverses the order of the three cards and shows that they are all Aces.

Explain that it seems to have worked and so saying, flip over the tabled card and it will be the blank faced card.

The illusion is that the blank faced card somehow changed places with the assumed tabled Ace.

Offer to repeat the strange transposition. Thumb off the lower card of the three in your hand to the table as an apparent Ace and position the blank faced card face down between the other two cards.

Slowly reverse the order of the cards and ask where the blank faced card is. The answer should be . . . "Between the two Aces."

You now show that the bottom card is an Ace and so is the top card. The blank card must be in the middle but when you remove it, it is another Ace.

This ruse is the well known Marlo 'QUICK-3-WAY DISPLAY'.

Replace the Ace between the other two cards and flip the tabled card face up to reveal the blank faced card again.

You are now set for the finale.

Explain that the blank faced card has proven itself and now you will attempt to print the selected card.

Suddenly realise that, in a way, you have already predicted the card he selected as the three Aces equal the value of his selection and the suit is the same.

Explain that you have thought of an easier way of printing his card, you simply have to cause the Aces to merge together like this.... Place the blank faced card face down at the bottom of the face down packet, flip the packet face up and Elmsley count.

This will display one printed card amongst three blank faced cards and the printed card is the Three of Clubs!

Up-jog and remove the card during the count. Table it face up next to the selection. Victor count the three face up cards as three blank faced cards, flip them face down and deal them one at a time to the table displaying the backs and finally, pick up the two Three of Clubs one in each hand, show the backs and the effect is over.

You can obviously use a Two and a Six or even a Three and a Nine but the cards must be of the same suit.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN Gentleman Jack

For this effect you'll need three cards depicting the illustrations shown in Fig:1.

If you are gifted, you may be able to make these cards yourself using regular Blank-Faced cards. For those who aren't . . . Supreme Magic Co. have a set of cards which are ideal. I don't know the name of the trick they are used for but I think Ken DeCourcy provided Supreme's routine.

Take a look at the designs in Fig:1 and you'll recognise them as the symbols normally found on loo doors.

The lady symbol should be red and the gentleman symbol black.

You'll need two Blank-faced cards and one Double Blank card. (Blank on both sides.) On the two Blank-faced cards draw one of each symbol and on the Double-Blank card draw one of each symbol on either side.

Note* If you like you could write the words "Gentlemen' and 'Ladies' on the cards instead of the designs.

Set-up

From top-down. Lady card face down, Gentlemen card face down and finally the Double-Blank card with the Lady side uppermost.

Moves

The main move in the routine is the Victor count. This shows two surfaces as three and is quite similar to the Jordan count. Briefly Hold the three cards face down in your left hand in Jordan/Elmsley count position. Draw off the top card into your right hand, then appear to draw the next card onto this but in reality, place both cards from the left hand onto the single card in the right hand and immediately draw back the single card into the left hand. It appears that you have counted the second card onto the first. Finally count the remaining card from the left hand onto the two in the right hand and the count is over.

It appears that you have reverse counted three face down cards from your left to your right hand. The Double-Faced card is hidden throughout and the order of the cards is the same as when the count started.

Flip the packet face up and repeat the count to show three Gentlemen cards. The next move is easy to perform, though difficult to describe. Hold the packet in dealing position in your left hand.

Thumb off the face card, cards are face up, into your right hand. Now, with your left thumb, pivot the other two cards face down and thumb off the top card of the face down pair onto the single face up card in your right hand. Flip the final face down card face up and place it onto the other two.

This has the result of reversing the centre card of the three. Finally flip the upper face up card of the three face down and end with a Victor count to show all three cards face down. This is of course not what should be seen as the lower card should still be face up but if you patter before the Victor count for a few seconds, this discrepancy will go unnoticed.

Let's call this series of moves the revolve sequence.

That's all you need to know in order to perform the routine.

Performance

Start with the cards set and comment that you'd like to tell them a short story about a man in a foreign country who was trying to find the toilet in a large, exclusive restaurant.

Explain that the man was told to go down three flights of stairs and he'd find three doors clearly marked 'Gentlemen'.

To accompany these words, you victor count the cards face down and then face up. So, you continue, he went down the three floors and found three doors.

Perform the revolve sequence followed by the Victor count with the cards now face down. Continue . . . But when he looked at the signs on the doors, he found that they were all 'Ladies'. Victor count the cards face up and three 'Ladies' signs are seen. So, he went back up the three flights of stairs and told the man that all three doors were for Ladies. This is the revolve sequence again with a face down Victor count.

The man was amazed and he repeated that at the bottom of the stairs were three doors all marked 'Gentlemen'. Victor count again face down, flip the packet face up and Victor count and three 'Gentlemen' signs are seen.

You now continue that he again went down the stairs etc. etc.

Repeat the procedure about 3 or 4 times, each time increasing in speed.

Finally explain that the man offered to take him to the toilets and end with the statement . . . " It's too late, I've already been!!"

Notes

You could combine this routine with your 'Pea-Can' routine. Just thought 1'd mention it!

* * * *

Just how long is it since I told you a tale of woe? You've heard about my sciatica, my car, a dog biting me etc. Well here's a new one. A couple of nights ago, accompanied by my wife and Ricky Jay from California, I went to see a show at the Shaw Theatre here in London. After the show we went to collect my car which was parked opposite the theatre, to find that one of the windows had been smashed in and a large cardboard carton and plastic shopping bag was missing. They had been lying on the back seat in full view and were probably too tempting for a car thief.

I called the police and while we were waiting for them to arrive we had a look round the area, within a hundred yards or so. My wife found the plastic shopping bag which contained a few magic props. It had been discarded in an alley. Ricky Jay found nothing, and I just stood there crying. I had remembered what was in the cardboard box.

I have a lot of stuff in private storage in London, and about a week ago I collected some of it and took it home. The box was part of it and I left it in the car until I decided what I was going to do with it. That box contained original, unedited reel to reel tape recordings. There were perhaps four or five hours of Fred Kaps talking to Cy Endfield, Ken Brooke, Vic Pinto and yours truly. There were tapes of Charlie Miller talking to Jay Marshall, Jay Marshall rapping with you know who, you know who with Vernon, and lectures by Finn Jon and Johnny Thompson. Unreleased Trik A Tape routines and Lord knows what else. Some of them I had not seen or heard for several years. I just can't remember all of the contents of those tapes, There were interviews with David Roth and many others who had attended the Ramsay Reunion. All original recordings and all unreleased, and they were gone.

The police arrived, took details and advised me that the chances of ever getting them back were remote. They departed, and we drove around for ten or fifteen minutes hoping we could find them, but we didn't. We had a meal, then I took Ricky back to his hotel, and my wife and I drove slowly home, with me cursing myself, car thieves, London and anything or anyone else I could lay my tongue to. And that was that. And as Mrs Lincoln once said, "I didn't like the show either".

There was no way that my insurance claim could compensate me for what I had lost. I was a fool for leaving them on the back seat of the car, I was a fool for not having unloaded the car initially, I was a fool I was a fool I was a fool. I was sad, I was angry, I was going out of my mind. It didn't help when I remembered there was around eight or nine hours of material by my late close friend Maurice Fogel. The more I thought about it the worse the situation became.

The first thing I did when I got home was to dig out another large box of tapes I have. I wanted to go through them to see If I could figure out exactly what tapes had been stolen. You kow what? I found two large boxes of tapes. That's right. I had found all the tapes I have just been talking about. I still had them.

So what was in the large box in the back seat of my car? That's the most frustrating thing of all. I don't know. I've been making wild guesses ever since. I have pretty good idea idea of what it could be but I am still not sure. I don't know. I never will know.

INTRODUCING

The New York Magic Symposium is proud to offer its Collection Two to the magical fraternity. This all-new Collection features both Close-Up and Stage material — never-before-published, original, professional routines contributed by the performers of the '83 Symposium, as well as a number of Special Guest Contributors! Once again, Richard Kaufman will display his expertise in writing and illustrating this tome.

The book is oversized, hard bound, professionally typeset, printed on the best of papers and about 150 pages! The price remains at an incredibly low $20!

Please add $2 for shipping and handling ($4 foreign). Allow 4-6 weeks for delivery.

P.S. The Symposium's Close-Up Collection One is still available. The price is $20. Written and illustrated by Richard Kaufman, with contributions by Harris, Ammar, Roth, Daryl, Fantasio, Dingle, Cornelius, Slydini, Marlo, Mullica and many more!

Send you order to The New York Magic Symposium, P.O. Box 169, Rockville Centre, New York 11571.

Pabular is published after the second week in every month and is printed in England. EDITORIAL

February 1984

This month we have some really top name magicians filling these hallowed pages. Names like . . . Stephen Tucker, Phil Goldstein, Stephen Tucker, Roy Walton, Stephen Tucker, Roberto Giobbi, Stephen Tucker, etc. etc.

Before the etceteras get too upset, let me just mention that Henrik Specht unleashes the second of his terrific trio from Denmark and John Aukes, one of Holland's leading close-up workers, allows me to detail his 'Four Card Trick' from his lecture notes titled 'It's Magic'.

John is probably better known for his inimitable demonstration of the Ted Biet rising cards, which he continues to sell out of every time he brings it over here. Barrie Richardson makes the Mentalist's day complete with an excellent book test routine.

Finally I, the great Tuckerini, tease your taste buds with yet another of my prize winning card routines. Can't wait? Well neither can I!

Before you all turn the page and leave me here talking to myself, let me review the booklet 'It's Magic' by John Aukes. It is available from him at the following address . . . Goochelaar-Magician, Zuiderkruis 138, 3902 XC Veenendaal, Holland. I would think that the price would be around £3 or £4 including postage.

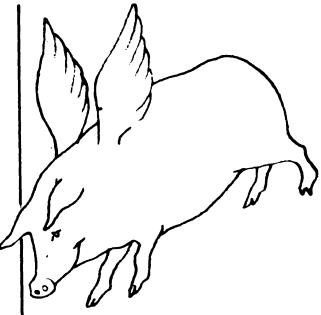

This is a 20 page, spiral-bound publication and contains 8 routines. Four are off beat card routines, three are coin effects and the final routine is with rope. The work is fully illustrated throughout and although the English is not perfect, the effects more than make upfor this. I can thoroughly recommend this item.

Get your grubby hands off that page! How dare you, I haven't finished yet. David Britland has recently completed and published a totally new torn and restored card routine 'Tearing A Lady In Two.' Available direct from the master himself at 33A, Steeles Road, Chalk Farm, London NW3. Priced £3.00.

The instruction booklet is extremely well produced and takes the form of a 6 page, fully illustrated work, heat bound in an attractive plastic cover.

The original card problem was one of my own and it took Dave an unbelievable 30 seconds to come up with this solution. The routine is both entertaining and completely baffling. I can guarantee that you've never seen anything like it before.

Okay, now you can turn the page.

THE FOUR CARD TRICK John Aukes.

Ed... I assume, though I'm not certain, that John based this effect on Bob Hummer's 'THOTO' from his book 'COLLECTED SECRETS'.

This effect can be performed with a borrowed deck but you need to be able to spot some small mark on the back of one card. In most decks you will find the odd scratch, blemish etc. that will allow you to do this.

If you are using your own cards, scratch a small mark on the back of any card. The effect is that you introduce four cards, one of which is your marked card and the others are any three cards of a different suit colour.

Let's assume that your marked card is the Ace of Spades and the other three cards are any red cards.

You ask the spectator to think of any one of the three red cards. Hand the Spectator the Ace of Spades and ask him to put it between the two red cards he didn't think of. He now cuts the four card package as much as he likes and upon taking the cards from him, you deal them in a face down row on the table.

Immediately you can push the thought of card forward from the row!

Secret

The four card packet is cut as often as the spectator likes but not shuffled. Once the cards are in a face down row on the table you simply count three cards to the right, including the marked card. You do this with your eyes so that the spectators don't realise. Push the third card to the right forward and it will always be the thought of card.

Editor

If you ask the spectator to think of any card and then remove any three cards of the same colour containing his card and hand him the Joker as you explain it is a mindreader you can find the card he is thinking of.

The overall effect is that you found the card he was thinking of from all the 52 cards. Once you have spotted the thought of card, you could slowly eliminate the other three instead of simply pushing the card from the row.

There is no need to have the three cards of the same colour. You could use the four Aces and have your marked card as the Ace of Spades. Ask the spectator to think of any Ace but the Ace of Spades as this is your mind reader. Have the spectator put the Ace of Spades between the two Aces he didn't think of etc.

If you take the trouble of marking the backs of the Ace to King of Spades, you could have the spectator think of any card but a Spade. Have him remove all four cards of the same value as his and place the Spade card between the two cards he didn't think of. If you use a marked deck, you can have the spectator remove four cards of the same value, think of one and you simply point to one of the four face down cards. If it's his card you've got a miracle and if it isn't you ask him to push it between the two cards he isn't thinking of etc. (You can easily spot the card due to its markings).

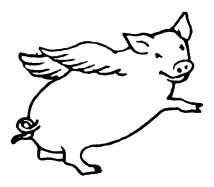

SHORT CIRCUIT Phil Goldstein

By golly, another printing routine. This one has the virtues of speed and efficiency. You will require a pack of cards, plus four gaffs: two blank-backed Kings of Spades; one blank-facer; one double-blank. At the start of the routine, these four specials are in order from the top: blank-backer, blank-side-up; blank-backer, blank-side-up; blank-backer, blank-side-up; double-blank.

- 1) Begin by forcing the King of Spades from the deck upon a spectator.
- 2) Introduce the four-card packet. Perform a Flushtration Count to display the cards as being four double-blanks.

- 3) Explain, "I shall exchange one of these blank cards for your selection." Remove the top card openly displaying it on both sides and hand it to the spectator. Take the spectator's King of Spades, and drop it face up on top of the packet. Obtain a break beneath the top two cards.
- Perform a Double Lift, turning the squared 4) pair from above the break face down. A back shows atop the double card, so all seems correct. This face down double is held with the right hand in a Pinch Grip at the right side. Gesture with the right hand's card(s) as you state, "When your card comes into contact with these three blanks, something interesting happens." In the course of this gesture, perform a K.M.Move. This secretly unloads the lowermost card of the right hand pair (the selection) beneath the left hand stock. The single card in the right hand (the blank-facer) is placed on top of the packet. The order of the cards is now, from the top: face down blank-facer; face down blank-backer; face down blank-backer; face down King of Spades.
- 5) Turn the entire packet over. Perform a Jorback Count, displaying four identical Kings of Spades, printed backs and fronts. At the conclusion of this count, a minor displacement is necessary. Hold the packet with the right hand from above (Biddle Grip). The left hand milks off the top and bottom cards, and replaces these two cards on top of the right hand stock. This action takes but a moment, and seems to be a casual cut. Only kings show during this. Alternatively, you can accomplish this same result by performing an Elmsley Count to re-display the four kings. In this case, to be consistent with previous actions, the count should be done from a Biddle Grip.
- 6) State that you will trade cards once again with the spectator. Remove the top card (the normal KS), and give it to the spectator, retrieving from him/her the double-blank. Place the double-blank on top of the packet.
- 7) Say, "The minute this blank comes into contact with the packet, the king faces disappear ..." Extract the bottom card of the packet which shows blank and gesture with it. Replace this card on top of the packet.
- 8) Continue, "In fact, the backs disappear, too." Here, perform a Takagi Turnover Count; turnover the packet; deal the top card to the table. Turn over the packet; deal the top card to the table. Turn over the packet; deal the top card to the table. Turn over the single card remaining, and deal it on top of all. Only blank surfaces will show during this, giving you a convincing finish.

I'D GIVE MY RIGHT HAND Roy Walton

The following routine is a variation on my 'AMBIDEXTROUS' from issue: 12 Vol:7. Roy has modified the handling and overall effect of the original and I believe improved greatly upon it.

Fan the pack for a card to be taken and remembered. Have it pushed back into the fan and as you close up the fan, obtain a little finger break one card below the selection. The selected card is immediately above your left little finger.

Bring your right hand over the pack, thumb at the rear short end and fingers at the far one and pick up the break with the right thumb tip. Drop two cards from the right thumb and retake the break with the thumb at this point. Maintain the break with the left little finger also.

Remove all the cards above the left little finger break with the right hand and use the right hand group of cards to flip the top card of the left hand section face up. State the name of this card and flip it face down again with the right hand section, doing the drop-addition move so that the face two cards from the right hand section are added to the top of the left hand section. Thumb off the top card of the left hand section face down onto the table.

Flip the top card of the left hand section face up with the cards in the right hand and again name it. Fairly flip it face down again and flip it off with the left thumb onto the card already face down on the table. Place the remainder of the pack aside.

Look toward the spectator and point to the two face down cards on the table and ask, "Was either of these cards the one you selected?"

The spectator will answer, "No."

Pick up the two cards taking care to keep them face down and square them up. Bend them in half across their width so that the top facehalf of the lower card kisses against the lower face half. If you do this neatly, there is no chance that the face of the lower card will flash and once you squash the fold flat, the face of the lower card is conceiled completely. Pretend to unfold the two layers of cards but really only unfold one as in the original instructions. Tear the cards across the fold and place the single half on top of the remainder. Elmsley count the four sections into the right hand and then replace them in the left. Using the Elmsley technique again, apparently count off the top two cards into the right hand, really ending with the whole card in the right hand and the torn sections in the left.

Close each hand into a fist and turn them palm down, extending them towards the spectators. Ask a spectator to touch either hand. If he touches the left hand, show the two pieces it contains and say, "Thank you, we will discard these."

Do so by placing them in your pocket. If he touches your right hand say, "Thank you, we will use these two pieces." Show the two sections in your left hand and put them in your pocket. This is of course the standard conjurer's force technique and you always end by using the contents of the right hand and discarding those of the left.

Say, "Watch closely." Place your right hand palm down on the table, using your right thumb to open the card by pressing between the sections and ending with the right hand pressing the now unfolded face down card onto the table. Slowly remove the right hand to show that the two sections have joined together. This is your first surprise.

Ask the spectator who remembered the selection to name it. When he does so say, "Watch very very closely." Place your second fingertip on the crease of the face down card and move it around in a circle a few times. Slowly turn it face up and show that it has become the selected card.

October 1983 Roy Walton.

THE KANGAROO SPOTS Henrik Specht

Effect

The performer shows five cards: the Ace, two, three, four and a Blank faced card. He explains that he will cause the spots from the four cards to vanish and assemble on the blank card. The blank card is placed on the table face down and as if by magic, the four spot cards become blank. When the blank card is turned over, it is seen to be a ten spot.

The effect is repeated backwards. The ten is placed on the table face down and the four blank cards change back into the Ace, two, three and four. When the assumed ten is examined, it has changed back into the blank card.

You'll need four cards with blank backs ie. the Ace, two, three and four of any suit. You'll also need a normal ten spot of the same suit and a Blank faced card with the same back design as the ten.

Set them from the top down . . . four, Ace, two, three, blank, ten.

Performance

Backcount and show the four, Ace, two, three and a blank card. In fact the last card is a double.

The blank card, double, is placed on the bottom and the packet is turned face down. The top card is dealt to the table, without showing its face. The spectator's think that it is the blank faced card but really it is the ten.

Turn the packet face up again and show the three, two, Ace and four, via the Backcount. Ascanio spread and suddenly the Ace has become blank on both sides. Place the blank double card on the bottom, turn the packet face down and deal the top card to the table. This is assumed to have been the Ace and is now thought to be blank on both sides. Flip the packet face up again and repeat the Backcount to show the four, two and the three. Perform a three card Ascanio spread and the two suddenly becomes blank on both sides. Once again put the blank double to the bottom, flip the packet face down and deal the top card to the table, onto the other blank card.

Turn the packet face up, Backcount and the three and four are seen. Perform a two card Ascanio spread and the three spot vanishes. Put the double to the bottom, flip the packet face down and deal the top card to the table, onto the other two.

Show the last card in your hand to be the four spot with regular back design. Place it face down onto the three blank cards on the table and pick up the packet.

Reverse count three cards from hand to hand but place the last two cards held as one onto them. It should appear that you have simply reversed the order of the four cards. Backcount yet again and this show all four cards to be blank. Place the double to the bottom, flip the packet over and table it.

Point to the assumed blank card, flip it face up and the ten spot is seen! Like small kangaroos, the spots have jumped onto it? ED ...

Are you kidding! You are now set for the return to normality, hope you bought a return ticket! Put the face up ten spot onto the tabled packet, pick it up and turn the packet over by revolving the wrist. Perform the Glide as you apparently replace the ten face down to the table but in reality you have dealt the Blank faced card instead. Keep the packet that way up and reverse count, holding the last two as one as you did before. Place the double onto the other three and flip the packet over. You are now about to show that the spots have returned. . . . Hold the packet in Biddle-grip in your left hand, with your right fingers remove the lower card but be careful not to allow the back of this card to be seen as it is blank. Deal it face up to the table and show the next three cards on both sides via the Back count all the spots have returned!

Finally flip the ten spot face up to show that it has returned to its blank state.

Let me draw your attention to the effect '4 BLANK CARDS' from Walt Lee's excellent book, 'THE IMMACULATE CARD MAGIC OF WALT LEE'S.' (Not the most modest of titles I might add.)

Walt's routine is quite similar to Henrik's and I think both are worthy of your attention.

THE JOKER FOLDS UP Roberto Giobbi

This routine is based on an effect which is usually associated with the late Fred Kaps. This handling has one point in its favour . . . only a Joker is destroyed with each performance and can therefore easily be replaced afterwards.

Effect

A signed Joker changes into a freely thought of card. The Joker is found folded up in a small box, which has been in full view all the time.

Requirements

An ordinary deck of cards with at least one Joker. A pen and a small box with a folded card inside. This card is fastened within by a thread and therefore moves freely in the box so that it can be heard rattling within when the box is shaken. If the box is tipped over when the lid is removed, the card within will stay in place due to the thread. The box has a removable lid and is similar to a small ring type box.

Performance and handling

As you are making some introductory remarks, run through the deck and bring the Joker to the top. Place the small box to your right on the table and explain that everyone know that a deck of cards always contains a Joker. The Joker is present just in case another card is damaged or lost. The Joker is the only card that can replace another and therefore can take on the identity of any card in the deck. This fact alone makes the Joker a very special card and you are about to demonstrate just how special it really is.

Ask the spectator to give the Joker in your deck any identity he likes. We'll assume that the spectator names the King of Clubs. Remove your pen and set it on the table. Explain that you will write the name of his card on the face of the Joker and so saying, run through the deck, remove his card and place it on top of the Joker, which is already on top of the deck.

It appears that you have looked for the Joker, found it and placed it on top of the deck. This belief is increased by squaring up the deck and flipping the top two cards over and face up onto the deck. (Double lift.)

The Joker is seen. Pick up the pen and write the name of the 'King of Clubs' over the face of the Joker. Hand the pen to a spectator on your left and ask him to sign his name on the face of the Joker. It is still resting face up atop the face down deck and you hold the deck steady for his signature.

Turn the double face down and deal the top card to the table using Martin Nash's Ghost Switch.

Draw attention to the box on the table and point out that the spectator named any one of the 52 cards in the deck and he in fact named the King of Clubs.

Ask if the spectator would consider it to be a good effect if his card happened to be within the box. He will of course say that it would indeed be a good effect. During this question, you pick up the box with your left hand, shake it and something is heard within.

Comment that you want the effect to be even better, you want to show them a miracle. Make a magic pass from the deck to the box and then back again. Pause.

Look at the spectator who named the card, turning the deck face up and point out that he could have named any other card from the 52.

Spread the deck face up between your hands, without exposing the Joker at the bottom of the face up deck. Ask him to turn the Joker face up and point to the tabled face down card as you request this.

Immediately fold the Joker at the bottom of the deck in the manner described on page 305 in Hugard and Braue's 'Expert Card Technique' (ALSO SEE PABULAR VOL:7 PAGE 1102 IN ISSUE 9.)

This results in the Joker being folded into a face down packet a quarter of its original size.

Palm the folded packet in your left hand finger palm as the right hand spreads the deck face up across the table. Comment that there are no other Jokers in the deck. Pause. Look at the box. Pause. Pick it up with the right hand and shake it again, producing the rattling sound heard earlier. Pause, their brains will start to work. Look at them, smile and then nod. As you are holding the box in your right hand from below, ask the spectator on your right to remove the lid. Show the folded face down card within, shaking it as you do so and the card is seen to move.

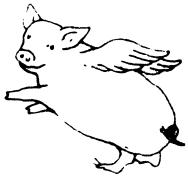

Apparently dump the folded card from the box and into your left hand but in reality, the card in the box remains in place and the folded Joker in your right hand is seen. Hand it to the spectator on your left and have him unfold it. Climax!

Notes

The lid can be replaced on the box and then pocketed. You can, if you wish, switch the lower section of the box containing the folded card for another empty section on your lap. This leaves you with everything apparently examinable. The card in the box can of course be loose and later lapped after the switch, again leaving you clean.

You can of course replace the initial switch of the Joker for the thought of card with a Top-change or a Curry turnover change etc.

POCKET DICTIONARY BOOK-TESTS Barrie Richardson

Yet another awe-inspiring title but fear not . . . the routine makes up for it! The routine is a close-up demonstration of mind-reading which can be performed anytime with no preparation.

An un-gimmicked pocket paperback dictionary is needed. Mine is a Webster's pocket dictionary, which can be found in most stationary shops for a small sum. You'll also need a couple of pens or pencils and paper upon which to write.

The Effect

I'll set the scene "Will you please think of any word in the English language. Make it a difficult word but not a proper noun. Will you please look it up in this dictionary. If it is not there, please think of another word. I will turn my back while you do this."

"Have you found your word? Good! The pen on the table writes with a disappearing ink. I'm sure that you've seen this before and as a child you may have even used it yourself. After a few seconds or two the ink will vanish from the paper and this will prevent anyone, including myself, from stealing your thoughts.

Will you please write the word you have thought of on this little scrap of paper. Don't let anyone see it. Fold it in half and in half again. Hold the paper like this in your left hand and blow on it. This will accelerate the chemical reaction." The spectator does this.

"Sir, will you help me also. You will thumb through this dictionary, while my back is turned and you will stop somewhere. Take the dictionary and choose a page.

Now look at the very last word at the bottom of the right hand page. Please say it to yourself over and over again, in your mind. Now cover the word with your right hand, look up at the ceiling and spell the word to yourself in your mind. Close the book and hand it to me."

"Sir will you please help me. Just stop me anywhere as I thumb through the dictionary. Are you sure you want me to stop here? We can go further it you like. Okay, just look at any word at the top of the page."

• The performers head is turned away during this procedure.

"Let's try an experiment in thought transferance . . . First I would like you, (THIRD PERSON.) to pretend that your left hand is a piece of paper and that your right forefinger is a pencil. Print the word on your hand while my back is turned. Now let's see your hand. I see a letter 'C' and a letter 'A' I can't quite make out the third letter but the fourth is a letter 'T'. Are you thinking of the word 'CART'? You are!! That's fantastic. Thank you very much.

Now you sir, (SECOND PERSON.) please put your hand on top of mine. Now close your eyes. I will move this pen around the sheet of paper and I'd like you to concentrate on the word you're thinking of. What word are you thinking of?

CHEMISTRY? Take a look at the paper, what have we written?

CHEMISTRY! Thank you.

One last word word to find. We will do this the hard way. I won't even touch you. Pick up a pen and when I count to three, I'd like you to write your word on this piece of paper. I will write on my paper at the same time."

Needless to say, when the two papers are compared both words are identical!

Method

There is plenty of room for showmanship as the methods are all so simple. The first person follows your instructions. The bit about the 'Disappearing ink' is just a little ploy that I personally like. The paper that the spectator actually holds and blows on is completely blank as you have previously switched his paper for an identical looking blank paper. (See Pabular for the Dollar Bill divination on how a thumb tip can be used to make a quick and subtle switch.)

The virtue of this approach is that you don't need to perform the centre-tear or even burn the switched billet as you have already told them that the ink will vanish.

The information on the original slip of paper is read when you later turn your back.

The word which the second person selects is in fact glimpsed by you in a very subtle manner. Few people know that the last word on the right hand page is the same as the top word on the right page in the corner.

When the spectator looks up to the ceiling you will have ample opportunity to spot the word and remember it. The spectator is in fact covering the word with his right hand but you sight the upper word.

The third word is a force and is in fact the 'Jim Ryan Card Force' applied to a small dictionary.

You need only remember the top four words on your force page or better still, glimpse the first two words on the page you will force. Place your little finger into the page about to be forced and you're all set . . .

Flip through the pages slowly and when the spectator calls stop, raise the book and open it apparently at the point stopped at but in fact you open it at the force page by simply opening the pages at the little finger break.

Make sure that you time your flipping through the pages so that the spectator stops you in the vicinity of the force page.

Ask the spectator to concentrate on one of the words at the top of the right hand page.

Editor

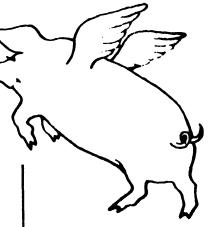

You must point out that the words you'd like the spectators to think of are in fact the ones in bold print and not part of the actual definitions.

"The good news is you've got the job. The bad news is you're on strike"

Despite the title of this routine, there is little resemblance to Alex Elmsley's 'Point of Departure'. The ending though, was influenced by his premise.

Start with the black Kings atop your deck and have two cards selected and signed. Having the cards signed saves the spectators any embarassment when they'll later forget which cards they have selected.

Control the selctions so that once they are returned and you apparently loose them in the usual series of cuts, shuffles and minor flourishes, they reside atop the deck in the following order Selection, black King, Selection, black King etc.

Ask a third spectator to merely think of any card in the deck but not one of the black Kings as you will be using them later.

Explain that you'll demonstrate the invisible cut. Make a fast movement with the deck and follow with a double-turnover revealing one of the black Kings. Flip the double face down and deal the top card, actually a selection, face down to the table. Offer to repeat the invisible cut and again perform the above actions this time revealing the second black King and apparently tabling it on top of the other card on the table. In fact you flip the double face down and lift off both cards, placing them on top of the other tabled card.

It should appear that you have merely located the two black Kings, shown them and tabled them atop each other on your table before you. In fact the situation is that on the table you have the two selections with one of the black Kings between them.

NOTE* Slip-cut the top card to the centre prior to the second double turnover. Now for the spectator merely thinking of a card . . . Ask him to name the card and explain that you will remove it for him. With the cards facing you, run through the deck, apparently looking for his card but in fact you cull the card to the top of the deck.

Apologise and explain that the card is missing. Keep hold of the deck in your left hand in a dealing position. Obtain a little finger break beneath the top, thought of, card in readiness for the Marlo 'Visual Retention Change.'

Look in the card case and then smile, pick up the assumed black Kings and spread them. Three cards will be seen and you point out that somehow the thought of card has taken refuge between the black Kings.

Up-jog the centre card and switch it for the top card of the deck using the Marlo Switch.

This has the appearance of simply pulling the centre card out from between the Kings and allowing it to fall to the table.

Place the deck to one side and use your free left hand to turn the tabled card face up to reveal that it is the very same card thought of!"

The effect appears to be over so take this opportunity to half pass the lower card of the two in your possession. These are the selections, assumed black Kings, just in case you've forgotten.

Comment that you will repeat the effect with one of the other thought of cards. Make a magic gesture as if invisibly taking a card from the deck and tossing it between the two Kings.

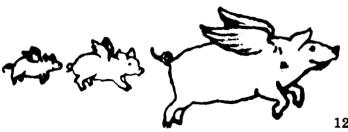

Show that a selection has appeared between the Kings by Victor counting the two cards as three. This shows a face up selection apparently between the two face down cards.

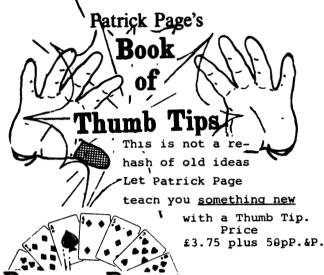

This will achieve more response from the audience so once again make use of the misdirection, square up the two cards and turn them over in your hands.

Ask the other spectator which card he is thinking of. Explain that you will attempt to change the molecular structure of the other spectator's card and make it appear as his card.

Repeat your gesture and repeat the Victor count. Once again a face up card appears between the two face down cards but this time it is the second spectator's card! Finally comment that the Kings have outlived their usefulness so you don't need them any more.

End with the Elmsley 'Between The Palms' vanish of the Kings only to reveal that you are left with the two selections.

BLACKPOOL, the land of sand, sea, sunshine and showbusiness. I have been to Blackpool many times and have seen very little, if any, of the above mentioned attractions. My dealings with this northern entrepreneurs' Eldorado have been confined to the Blackpool Magicians Club's annual One Day Convention. Once, many years ago I was offered six weeks work there as a childrens' entertainer in the Blackpool Tower Complex and turned it down. The Golden Mile in full swing is something I have never experienced. I have never visited any of the ten (?) theatres which are open from perhaps Easter to October every year, and have been for as long as most people can remember.

I have probably seen every act of note who has ever appeared there, but, alas, not at Blackpool. My only regret is that I have not actually been to the famous Tower Circus, and there have been a few of the lesser known acts there I would have liked to have seen. Jugglers, acrobats, clowns etc. are one of my secret hobbies.

As I have stated, my only experiences of Blackpool have been confined to the Magicians Convention held there every February, when it is cold, damp, windy and closed. Having said that, I must add that I have probably enjoyed myself more than those hundreds of thousands of people who MUST visit there every year on their annual vacation. The Blackpool Convention has something going for it that few other shindigs of this type have. Don't ask me what it is, I don't know, but there are few people who go there regularly every year who come away disappointed. There is ALWAYS one act, one trick, one item, lecture or simple happening which it memorable.

This year it was a young man called Wayne Dobson. On a gala show which was very good he stands out as being the winner. He did my type of act. Sorry, he did the type of act I like. Big stage, big theatre, small magic and lots entertainment. I'm not sure I liked the blond hair with dark roots, but then I freely admit to being old fashioned. Compared to many of today's young entertainers he was positively conservative. His dress, style, magic, material can all be summed up in one word: immaculate. I did hear he was criticised for using a four letter word beginning with S and ending with T, but as the word had already been used by another act and he was simply commenting on that fact in a humourous fashion, I consider it to have been quite permissable, and to his critics may I say two things. First, he got one hell of a laugh. Second, if you say that someone used a four letter word make sure that your readers are aware that it is not one of the stronger variety.

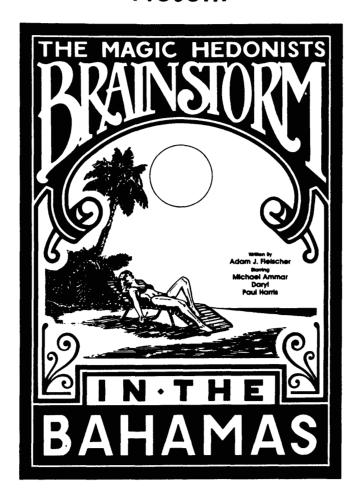

As always I missed probably everything during the day, being confined to my dealer booth, but I wasn't unhappy about it. Business was good and I hope to be there again next year. One other thing makes this convention appealing, and that is the night-before gettogether at the Gables Hotel which is the sort of headquarters for the whole affair. This is when you meet those old friends you haven't seen for a while. I like it, and there is usually an almost informal type of show taking place in the not large enough lounge. It is because the place isn't large enough you enjoy it. If you want a drink or refreshment you have to fight your way out and back again. If you pop out for some fresh air you can't get back in again, and when you try all you hear is laughter and applause and you wonder what you are missing, and hope that it isn't something you could have stolen for your own act. Magicians are like that.sometimes.

One tiny niggle. Both last year and this year there was a lecture held at Cyril Critchlow's Coronation Street Theatre at the same time as the get together at the Gables. Last year it was Joe Riding, this year it was a double header with Val Andrews and Bobby Bernard appearing. They are an excellent innovation for this convention but couldn't someone fix it so the lectures are put on a little earlier so that conventioneers can attend both venues one after the other please. Surely I am not the only masochist there every year.

This is a card variation on the mathematical principle used by Gentleman Jack in his 'Pickpockeyt' effect described in Volume: 8 Number: 3.

The trick requires an eleven card stack at the top of the pack and the title of the trick helps you to remember the arrangement with ease. Think of 229 as representing the cards from 2 to 9 and this is followed by 224.

The actual stack would be ... 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 2, 2, 4. (i.e. 2 to 9 followed by 2, 2, 4.) Suits are of no importance, although they should be mixed.

Have pen and paper handy and you are all set to perform.

Give the pack a false shuffle and a false cut, then deal out two hands of four face down cards. We will call the hands A and B and the first card dealt was to hand A. Request a spectator to cut the remainder of the pack into two approximately equal heaps, side by side on the table. Both heaps are face down.

Explain that you are going to make a random addition sum by using the values of the cards just dealt. Have a spectator slide out any card from hand A and flip it face up. Now have him remove any card from hand B and flip this card face up also. The second card is placed face up alongside the first card on the table. Thus, a two digit number is formed, the first card representing the tens value and the second the unit value. We'll assume that the number formed is '85', though it could be any one of 16 possible totals.

Say . . . "You have formed the random number of 85."

This is a verbal form of misdirection that will lead the spectators away from the principle used in the trick and should not be omitted from the presentation. Use exactly the same procedure to form another two digit number which is placed beneath the first. Continue this procedure until four two digit numbers have been formed. At the conclusion, you should have something resembling Fig:1.

While the spectators are busy watching and participating in the operations, quietly and casually place the lower section of the main pack onto the upper section but at right angles to it as in the standard 'Cut force' handling.

When the cards have been arranged to form a four line sum of two digit numbers, state the numbers formed in each line again. For example you might say . . . "You have formed the numbers 85, 69, 27 and 43." Explain that you will now add them to find the total. Do this yourself, stating outload your adding procedure as you do so, so that the spectators can add along with you. (Not as popular as 'sing a long' but there we are.) The total you will arrive at will always be 224. Write this figure on the piece of paper.

Build up the haphazard nature of the method used to form the numbers and then lift away the upper section of the main pack saying.... "Remember that you cut this pack where ever you wished."

Place the upper section aside and repeat that the total arrived at was 224. Slowly turn the top three cards of the lower heap face up one by one and placing them alongside each other to form the number 224.

Make sure that you arrange them correctly from the spectator's viewpoint!

Roy Walton. February 1984.

Ed.... I would advise you to have a spectator check the addition or some members of the audience might suspect that you have simply invented the total.

I wrote back to Roy and asked him why he had changed the total from 165 as in the Jack's method to 224. He replied that he had a lousy memory for stacks, hence the 229, 224 idea. I prefer Roy's stack but you might like to note that using the eventual total of 165, you can cut the stack down to 9 cards by using a stack of 5, 6, 7, 8, 3, 1, 1, 6, 5. In this event you would deal only three cards to each hand and the total will always be 165.

If you consider that your eventual prediction could reside outside the deck, you can cut the stack down to 6 cards i.e. 5, 6, 7, 8, 3, 1.

Hello again and welcome to the next issue of Pabular, just in case you thought your eyes deceived you!

This month's issue has been delayed due to the recent ill-health of our resident artist, Eric Mason. You'll all be glad to hear though, that Eric's out of hospital now and well on the road to recovery.

This month we brush shoulders with Alex East, Barrie Richardson, Henrik Specht, Roy Walton, Roberto Giobbi, Martin Breese and Stephen Tucker (Me).

99% is card magic with a few non-card effects thrown in for good measure. Bad news about the Phil Goldstein one man issue I'm afraid this will be set back a little due to the recent upheaval into a new apartment in America. He promises to get the material to me in the not too distant future as soon as he finds his typewriter amongst all the packing crates!

The David Britland one man issue has also been set-back due to lethargy on Dave's part. I keep kicking him to get it finished but so far to no avail.

Several people have acosted me at various conventions about missing Pabular issues. In future, all enquiries re: subscriptions, missing issues, in fact anything other than actual contributions, should be forwarded direct to Nick Bolton at the address on the back cover.

Did you manage to get to the Blackpool convention last February? If you did, we probably met at the Pabular stand. This year I was asked to perform in the close-up arena. I enjoyed it, though conditions were much the same as in previous years bad lighting, . terrible acoustics (I was nearly hoarse at the end of the day!) and the fact that all 8 tables were performing in unison made it almost impossible to be heard.

Still, taking all these gripes into consideration, I wouldn't have missed it for the world!

I couldn't help but smile at the cover of last month's issue is Eric trying to tell us something?

Anyway, I've rambled on long enough. Now for the reviews

Wonder Material.... This is in fact the lecture notes on Tommy Wonder. 8 x A4 sized pages of text with no less than 96 accompanying illustrations by the author.

The toss up paddle move is a nice, flourishy method of showing a fake penknife to be the same colour both sides but the move's a little hard to master and one wonders (No pun intended) if there aren't enough such moves already available.

Thanks to Paul Harris is Tommy's handling on Paul Harris's Ultimate rip off from his book Supermagic. About a year ago Tommy showed me this and I was quite stunned. He mainly concentrates on the restoration of the torn card and believe me . . . it's good!

Lighter to matchbox basically speaks for itself. A cigarette lighter refuses to work as you attempt to light your cigarette. Instantly it changes into a box of matches, which you open, remove a match and triumphantly light the cigarette. Pure logic! It's just what a real magician would do if he could!

Shrinking box is just another shrinking card case for you to make up. It's no better or worse than any other I've seen.

Falling Pips is described though I don't see why as the routine with special cards has been marketed and is available from most leading dealers. The effect is cute, not a mind blower but it will raise a few eyebrows... You spread through the face up deck and the cards appear quite normal. Tapping the cards square on the table results in the pips literally falling to the bottom of the cards in a heap. The magician apologises, taps them the other way and they are back to normal. You could make the fake cards using card-Letraset.

2 second card fold again speaks for itself. It's another method of folding a card into a small packet right under the spectator's noses. I like this!

Squeeze is for me the highlight of the notes. I've seen Tommy perform this many times and the audience react the same every time applause!

The card case shrinks and you comment that you can't understand how the cards came from the box in the first place. You now attempt to squeeze the Poker sized deck back into the miniature case and you succeed!

Recalcitrant is a non-DIY man's nightmare!

The effect produced far out weighs the effort needed to make the various fakes. The routine is ideal for opening a manipulative card routine and there are no back palm card productions, so often used to open such an act.

You remove the cards from the case and the case vanishes but it keeps reappearing throughout your performance repeatedly! and much to the annoyance of the performer.

Diminishing cards would you believe that this is a diminishing card routine? Well, it is! Using a most ingenious set of fakes, the performer gradually shrinks his deck into nothingness.

Balls This is not the most apt of titles for the routine, though is quite accurate! Basically it is the production of the first three billiard balls in a much longer routine. It embodies many colour changes and can be performed on stage or close-up.

The big one is the production of a big ball up to 10 inches in diameter! This is a very clever idea and is in fact a collapsable ball that can be fully opened instantly.

Tails Topit is the final item in the notes and details Tommy's design for a Topit fitted into a Tail coat. With this clever design, which not everybody will want to use, he has solved the problems of bulging loads and incorrect hanging.

I thoroughly enjoyed the notes and can attest for the effectiveness of most of the items detailed. You can order the notes direct from the author at J. Bemelman, 116, 2161 RS Lisse — The Netherlands. (Cost is £5.00 S7.00).

Review

When at the recent Blackpool convention I managed to get my hands on a copy of the Paul Harris Video tape from Martin Breese.

This is the second in the Tannen's Magic Manuscript Video Series. (Cost is £50.00.)

I have always been a Harris fan and was really looking forward to getting the tape home and jamming it into the video. I thoroughly enjoyed the entire tape, which consisted of prepublished routines from the myriad Harris books.

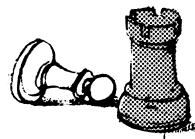

The effects performed were . . . Super Swindle, The Bizarre vanish, The side winder card, the ultimate rip-off, Micky mouse math, Reflex, Cards across, Solid deception, The Bizarre Twist, A visual card transportation from Close-up Kinda guy, finally . . . Overkill, which was performed by Frank Garcia at the conclusion of his tape just to whet our appetites. Like I say . . . I really enjoyed the magical content and Harris comes over as a shy but extremely humorous individual. Just as I expected he'd be!

Martin has recently received a new master copy from the States and the quality is excellent. He tells me that if anyone has one of the inferior original copies that were sent out to avoid delay, they can return them together with £1.00 to cover postage and he'll send them a new replacement.

If you are a follower of Harris you will be well pleased with this tape. The patter presentations alone are worth the price.

The playing time is 55 minutes, including explanations and the cost is £50.00 post paid. It is available from Tannens in the U.S.A. and exclusively from Martin Breese Ltd. in England. Write to , . . 31 Richmond Way, London W14, or 'phone 01-603 6578

THE MAGICIAN'S NAME Alex East

This routine is based upon Stephen Tucker's 'So These Must Be' from the 3rd Spell-Binder Special issue. (Page:41.)

This in turn was heavily based on Roy Walton's Oil and Queens from Devil's Playthings page:15.

You'll need 9 blank faced cards. On three of the cards place a red adhesive circle on two of them place a green adhesive circle and on the remaining four, place the letters of your name. My name is Alex but if yours spells with more than four letters... you can place a message such as... Stephen Tucker Magical Entertainer or some other such lie.

Just use your imagination and you'll be able to think of something.

Set the cards . . . From the face, Red, Green, Red, Green, Red, four letter cards.

Performance

Hamman count the cards, switching on the 3rd red card and place the final two cards onto the packet squared as one.

This displays 8 cards to be alternated red/green throughout.

Flip the packet face down and deal the top four cards into a face down row on the table. These are assumed to be red/green circle cards but are in fact the letter cards. Flip the top card of the remainder face up and it will be seen to be a red circle card, use it to flip the next card face up and this is a green circle card.

Take the two card fan into your right hand and use them to flip over the rest of the cards in the left hand. A green circle card will show at the face.

Push over this single card beneath the two card fan in the right hand and finally place the two cards squared as one atop the fan from the left hand.

These final cards are both red circle cards.

It appears that you have simply sorted out the red cards from the green and at the moment you have a four card fan in your right hand with what appears to be two red circle cards atop two green circle cards. In fact, the top card is a double and the actual order of the cards is three red cards followed by two green cards.

Comment that you are going to break the golden rule and actually tell them what you are about to do... Tell them that you are about to vanish the two green cards. Square up the fan and hold it in biddle grip in your right hand.

Ask the spectators if they would like the green cards to vanish one at a time or both at once.

If they say both at once . . . Perform a Hamman count switching on the 3rd card and placing the final two cards onto the packet squared as one.

If they say one at a time Reverse the order of the packet holding the final two green cards squared as one and this displays three red cards and only one green. Place the double beneath the red cards and perform the Hamman count as in the first event.

Either of these two avenues leaves you holding apparently four red cards and no green ones.

The obvious location for the missing green circle cards is in the face down row on the table but when you flip these cards face up, there is your name (Or message.)

Ed... Instead of the Hamman counts near the end of the routine, I prefer to use the Elmsley or Jordan style counts as these are much easier and less awkward.

I can see why Alex has stayed with the Hamman count throughout Uniformity!

THE TEST TUBE CHILD Henrik Specht

This trick got its odd name due to the fact that I invented it on the very day that the first Test tube baby was born here in Denmark, October 18th.

Effect

8 cards are shown; the four Aces and the four Kings. The Kings are placed on the table in a face down packet and the Aces are held in the hand.

One at a time the Aces change into Kings but not for long they eventually change back into Aces and the Kings are found to still be face down on the table.

Set-up

From the face of the packet, the Kings in red/black alternated order, followed by the Aces in any order.

Performance

With the packet held in the left hand dealing position, with the cards face up Buckle the bottom card and obtain a little finger break above it. Take the packet in biddle grip in the right hand and take over the break with your right thumb. With the left thumb drag the top card onto the left palm. You now appear to drag the next King onto it but in fact you release the card below the thumb break so that it falls onto the first King and ends up sandwiched between the two Kings just counted onto the left hand. During this action, you should obtain a little finger break above the deposited card (Ace).

Now drag across the third King onto the assumed Kings in the left hand. When you appear to drag across the final King, you steal the two cards above the break beneath the right hand packet.

Situation is... In the left hand you have only three cards and these are an Ace between two Kings. In the right hand you have five cards and they are in the order... Ace, Ace, Ace, King, King.

Table the assumed Kings from the left hand in a face down pile to the left of the table. Jordan count the remaining cards and they appear to be four Aces.

Flip the packet face down and show that the top card is an Ace. Replace the Ace and make a gesture over the packet, flip the top two cards face up as one and the Ace appears to have changed into a King. Flip the double face down and table the top card to your right. This is assumed to be the King but is in fact an Ace.

Drag the top card of the packet into your left hand, then flip the remaining three, assumed two, cards face up and drag the top card onto the face down card already in the left hand. Place the remaining two cards squared as one onto the left hand packet. This has displayed two face up Aces atop a face down card. Repeat the gesture and lift off the top three cards into your right hand, drag the top face up Ace onto the face down card in your left hand and this reveals that the other Ace has changed into a King. Use this double card to flip the face up Ace face down onto the other face down card and finally flip the double card face down and deal the top card, assumed King but really Ace, onto the other tabled card to your right.

You now have a three card face down packet in your left hand and the spectators assume that the packet contains only two cards.

Double turnover to reveal an Ace, flip the card(s) face down, make the gesture and remove the top card into your right hand.

Flip the two cards held square as one face up to reveal a King and finally flip the single card face up to reveal another King.

Place the single face up card onto the double, flip them face down and drop them onto the two face down cards to your right.

The obvious question now is "Where are the Aces?" and the logical place to look would be the face down packet to your left but before they can pick the cards up from your right, flip them face up and Elmsley count to reveal the four Aces once again.

Flip the packet face down and obtain a little finger break below the top card.

Pick up the packet from the left and drop it onto the cards in your hand as you ask the spectators what cards they think are here.

Regardless of the reply, pick off all the cards above the break, flip them face up and Elmsley count and the elusive Kings will be revealed!

THE DELUXE CHINK BOX Martin Breese and Stephen Tucker

For this routine you'll need the deluxe model of the Chink-box. The mechanism of the box is identical to the one used on the cheaper, inferior models. If you own one at all, it is quite likely that yours is one of the cheaper types. They are generally painted Yellow and Black and the secret compartment can not be closed unless the lid of the box is opened.

On the other hand if you possess the deluxe version, you will have a craftsman made box which is inlaid and varnished to perfection. As soon as your audience see the box, they will recognise it as being a thing of beauty and it will captivate their attention which is after all what you want!! Fig:1 depicts the outward appearance of the box, the other illustrations detail the secret wall that can be swivelled open any time you desire. You will see that there is a small square of glass within the box and this prevents a coin inserted into the slot in the lid from falling out of the other slot in the base.

Any size coin can be used that will pass through these slots when the sheet of glass is not present.

Now that you are familiar with the construction of the box, let's take a look at how it can be used to apparently perform magic

The basic effect that the box was constructed for was that a coin inserted in the upper slot was seen and heard to strike the glass within and was thus prevented from passing through and out of the slot below. The magician explained that glass is actually made of sand and by concentration The coin is caused to sink down through the grains of sand and fall free from the slot in the base. The box is immediately handed to the spectator who upon opening it . . . finds the glass sheet still within!!

The impossible has happened or has

FIG:1 THE BOX.
Within the circle is detailed the revolving to slide out and the coin falls through the slots.

FIG: 2.

Let's deal with this effect first.... Begin by showing the box and placing the glass sheet within. Now as you close the lid, you revolve the movable wall and close the box. Introduce the coin and place it into the upper slot, it will stand in place atop the glass sheet within.

Position the box so that the open side faces you and the box is held at the finger-tips of your hands at eye-level.

Fig:2 depicts this position, note that the thumbs are positioned at the open side. Shake the box a little, causing about 1/4" of the glass to emerge from the open side. Immediately grip the sheet between your thumbs as shown in fig:3. By drawing your thumbs towards your body, the glass sheet is dragged out of the box but not completely out!!

The coin will appear to sink into the box and eventually will fall out of the lower slot. Push the sheet back into the box and close the revolving side. (With the deluxe version of the box this can be done easily whilst the lid is still fastened shut.)

Hand the box to the spectator who opens it only to find the glass sheet still within!!

It is possible to hand the box out for examination, as the method used to revolve the side open is that of pushing inwards on the upper point of the side and you will find that most people tend to pull and tug at the box in order to unearth its secret. Just keep an eye on them and be ready to take back the box if they are heading in the right direction.

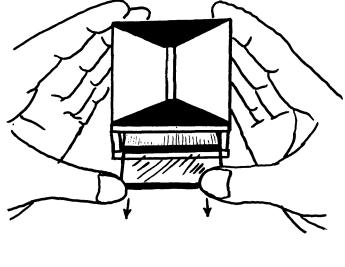

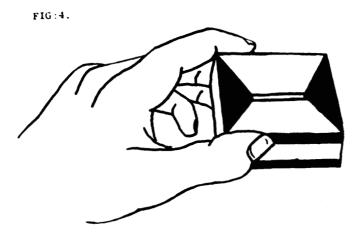

FIG:3....The body of the box is supported by the fingertips and the thumbs drag the glass sheet out. Due to the position of the box in relation to the spectator's eyes...the sheet is not seen.

Well, the above effect is the one normally supplied with the box and should you encounter another magician performing the effect, you can bet your last penny that he'll do an almost Xerox performance of the above.

About 3 or 4 months ago Martin Breese gave me another method that he uses with the box and it goes something like this

For this version you don't need to revolve the side open and indeed it is possible to perform it with an un-gaffed box!!

Hold the box with glass sheet within between your fingers and thumb as shown in Fig:4.... Show the coin and insert it into the upper slot but don't let go of it!! Tap it down on the glass sheet and immediately remove it and place it under the box and into the lower slot. Tap upwards on the sheet, now is where the dirty work comes in!!

Appear to remove the coin in your right hand but in reality your left 2nd of 3rd fingertip has wedged the coin in the slot below the box and your empty right hand emerges and mimes the action of still holding the coin at your fingertips. Pretend to carefully place the coin in the upper slot and quickly (BUT SMOOTHLY.) separate your right fingers over the upper slot to reveal the coin gone!! At the exact same instant ... release the coin from the lower slot and allow it to fall onto the table or the spectator's cupped hands.

The coin has apparently penetrated through the glass sheet'!!

NOTE... This approach will take more practice than the other, as you have to convince yourself that you are really placing the coin into the upper slot etc.

* * * *

About a couple of months ago I was toying with the deluxe model and suddenly realised that when viewing the box both the correct way up and upside down, there was very little difference.

This is not the case with the cheap nasty models as the top is Yellow and the base is Black. The only real differences that I could make out were.... The lower slot was slightly wider than the upper one and the lid of the box is about 4mm thick whilst the actual base of the box itself is some 10-15mm thick. This latter difference can only be noticed when looking at the box from one of the four sides.

The move to follow should be viewed from above by your spectator Introduce the box, show the glass sheet etc.

Assuming that you have placed the sheet into the box . . . Ask for the loan of a coin. While everyone is searching their pockets, you have ample time to change your suit, lead in the Elephant etc.

Luckily for you all you have to do is . . . Turn the box over in your left hand. The position should be that the base is uppermost.

Take the coin and insert it into the upper slot (Really the slot in the base.) Let go of the coin and hold the box exactly as you did in Fig:4 in your left hand. You now appear to lift the lid, just enough to allow the coin to drop into the box and you then close the lid.

What you actually do is Unfasten the catch and hinge up the BASE of the box just enough to allow the coin to drop onto the glass resting on the lid of the box within.

Immediately lower the BASE and fasten the catch shut again.

That's all there is to it!! You'll find that the fingers of both hands should provide enough cover to kill the bad angles. PLUS.... You are holding the box in such a position that the spectator is looking down onto it. PLUS.... He doesn't know what you're about to do anyway!!

Your only task now is to turn the box right way up again and this is a simple task to accomplish. By simply placing the box onto the table you flip it over. Make sure that no bright light is shining directly onto the lid of the box. If it is . . . position the box in the shade.

Lift the lid slightly just enough for the spectator to see the coin within. Explain that you will cause the coin to vanish. Keep lifting the lid several times, every time the spectator tells you that the coin is still there.

Ask him to remove the coin and hand it back to you... He lifts the lid and goes to pick up the coin but ZONK!! He can't pick up the coin. He suddenly realises that it has somehow got under the glass sheet!!

Okay, so let's routine these three effects...
I find that if I open with Martin's fast penetration it catches their interest. I then perform the under the glass sheet phase which throws them off the scent of an expected penetration.

Finally I perform the standard penetration first described and usually walk off to thunderous applause??

You may like to juggle the 3 effects into your own order of preference. The patter I use goes something like this . . .

"Hey fat face, wanna see a great new piggybank that's just come in?? See it has a slot in the top for you to put your money in and a slot at the bottom for you to take your money out. It's great for people who don't really want to save!!

For those who do want to save we supply a small glass sheet that prevents the coin from falling out of the bottom of the box.

As a special bonus you can test that the glass sheet hasn't been stolen by tapping it through the top slot and through the bottom slot.

Did you know that glass is mainly made from sand and it is possible to drop the coin into the top slot, through the sand and out of the bottom.

I don't know how it works either!!

There is one small problem though It's impossible to place a coin into the box through the top slot, because the glass stops it sometimes!!

We solved this problem by simply opening the lid and the coin drops inside, like this

You're probably worried about burglars?? No need, imagine you're a burglar and you've found my box, try stealing the coin See, it hides under the glass'!. Yes I know that the burglar could easily slip the box into his pocket sonny but we'll solve that problem too eventually!

So let me show you how it works once more Just place the coin into the top slot, wait a few seconds for the coin to slowly sink through the sand particles and voila one coin.

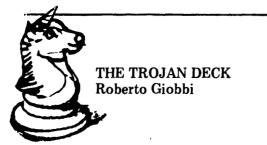

Here step inside and see what you think!!

You could explain that glass is in fact a liquid (TRUE) and if you placed an object on top of a sheet it would eventually sink right through!! (ALSO TRUE.) By using your time machine (WATCH??) you can speed up this process

At the second I type this the DELUXE CHINK BOX (ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES!!) is available direct from Martin Breese at a cost of £10.00.

Why not give him a call on 01-603-6578 and check on the price and if they are in stock. Tell him you're a Pabular Subscriber (IF YOU ARE) and he'll let you have it post free!!

The purpose of this short effect is to switch in a "cold deck". The basic idea was shown to me by Carlhorst Meyer in 1979. I worked on the handling and added the idea of having two decks with different coloured backs. I use it to introduce a stacked deck after having performed some other miracles (?) with another deck. As you will readily recognize the advantage of this method is that you do everything very openly, no lapping, palming, topitting etc.

Effect

A card is selected from a red deck and without looking at its face is replaced face down in the face up deck. The magician introduces a blue backed deck. Upon spreading both decks face up on the table they are seen to both have one face up card in the centre. Needless to say that these two cards match. The blue deck is replaced in the pocket. During the performance of this short effect the two decks have been deceptively switched.

Requirements

2 red decks

1 red card case

1 blue card case

1 blue backed card (e.g. 6D)

Preparation

Take the complete red deck and place it into the red card case (deck A in card case A). Take the second red deck (deck B) and place the blue backed 6D face down into the face up deck. Insert this deck into the blue card case (case B).

Management and Handling

- 1) Perform a couple of effects using deck A. Place card case A at position B in Fig. 1.
- 2) Bring the 6D to a position known to you and force it onto a spectator. I use the riffle force (s. The Riffle Force A Study On The Management And Handling Of A Classic Sleight).
- 3) Have the spectator insert his selection (?), without having looked at it, face down into the face up deck. Immediately spread the deck face up at position A in Fig. 1.
- 4) Introduce blue deck B. Take deck B out of its card case (face upthus not revealing its red back) and place the case at A in Fig. 1. Spread deck B face up at B in Fig. 1.
- 5) Each face up deck is seen to contain one face down card. Remove these two cards. Pause. Turn both cards face up to reveal that you have correctly predicted the spectator's choice.
- 6) Now comes the dirty work: take the blue backed 6D and use it to scoop up deck A. Turn this deck face down and place it at A in Fig. 2. Pause.

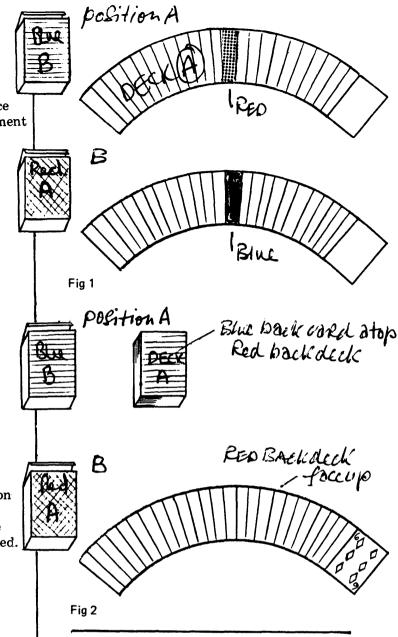

Comment: The actions in step 6 have gone unnoticed as the climax of a strong effect (for laymen) has occured in step 5. The placement of the card cases is a subtle point which plays an important part in the psychology of deception of this trick. After this effect your audience will have forgotten that the two card cases were not placed according to the decks they contained. You are therefore now following the path of least resistance by placing each deck into the card case next to it.

- 7) With the left hand pick up card case B as the right hand takes the face down deck A and places it into this case. The blue card shows on top of the pack thus emphasising visually up to the very last moment the apparent condition. Put case B containing now deck A back into your pocket.
- 8) The red 6D has been dropped onto the face of spread B which is now picked up and squared.

Comment: If deck B was a full deck you will have now a duplicate 6D in it. Leave it there and use it, otherwise get rid of it by palming it off.

Alternatively the 6D of deck B could have been removed previously thus leaving you now with a complete deck.

THE INCOMPLETE DECK Stephen Tucker

This effect makes use of the incomplete faro shuffle and a 51 card deck, hence the title.

Place the Queen of Diamonds face down 4th from the face and you're ready to do battle. Execute the incomplete faro shuffle so that the upper section contains 25 cards and the lower contains 26 cards. The reversed Queen of Diamonds is within the lower section. Riffle through the upper section and have the spectator call stop and remember the card he has stopped you at. Strip out the upper cards, place them onto the lower section and cut at the break previously taken in the lower section.

I am assuming that you are familiar with the original control that sends the peeked card to the 26th position from the top.

At the moment the spectators card is 26th from the top and the reversed Queen of Diamonds is 8th from the top.

Flip the deck face up and half-pass the lower, really top card.

Spread the cards a little but don't expose the reversed lower card or the reversed Queen.

Hand the deck to the spectator face up and ask him to place it behind his back, then flip it face down, remove the top card, turn it face up and insert it into the deck. He is then to cut the cards several times, still with the cards behind his back. Finally he brings the cards forward again and spreads through them to locate the reversed card.

He will find the Queen of Diamonds to be the only face up card in the deck. Ask him to cut the cards in order to bring the Queen to the top. Take it from the deck and ask him to deal the cards face up one at a time to the table as he spells.... T-h-e-Q-u-e-e-n-o-f-D-i-a-m-o-n-d-s.

Two things can happen and these depend on whether he inserted the apparent reversed card between the Queen of Diamonds and the selected card, or if he didn't. If he did . . . the next card on the deck will be his.

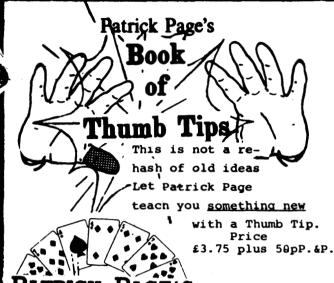

If he didn't the card dealt on the letter's' will be his!

Either way, you have revealed the selected card.

Notes

It isn't necessary to use the Incomplete faro shuffle, you could use any control that will position the selection 18 cards from the reversed Queen.

Trouble trouble. No matter what I do or say these days I get into trouble. I mentioned that I never read magazines any more, and the phone didn't stop ringing. No letters. Just abusive phone calls. Most of the people who know me, also know that I have an aversion to getting involved in long correspondence courses with anyone. The result is that few of my friends ever write. They phone. Or if they are close friends, they just turn up knocking on my door, usually bringing gifts or food parcels. So if you think you are a close friend???????

I suppose by now you are thinking that I am going to try to justify or maybe qualify my remarks about the mags I don't read anymore. I suppose I should. I read in the Budget which is the monthly mag of the British I.B.M. that the line I used which was "I don't read magic. magazines anymore" was used by Eddie Dawes as his quotation of the month. I don't think it deserved such prominence. I know just what you're thinking at this moment. How come he knows about the Q.O.T.M. if he doesn't read magic mags. The answer is simple. As a member of the I.B.M. and the Magic Circle (actually, The Inner Magic Circle, with Gold Star I think) they both send me their monthly magazine. As a columnist for this thing called Pabular I get a free copy every month.

Are you getting the pic? I get three mags a month for free, more or less. I have been offered others. Various publishers have offered to send me a free subscription to their publications and I have always turned them down. I know a few guys who, get free copies of several magazines sent to them regularly and I've often tried to figure out why. With me there have always been strings attached, like, "write something", "lend me your library", "sleep with the wife", "I know a girl who wants to learn magic," etc.

Meanwhile, back at the old homestead. I get three mags a month. In addition to them there is the occasional visitor who may happen to have the current issue of whatever his fancy is, with him, plus, once in a while I have been known to visit another magician and while he is searching around in his cupboard to find something with which he hopes to impress me, I will steal a look at his magazines.

So you see, all in all, by and large, I don't do too badly for some one who claims he doesn't read magic magazines anymore. I just don't read the tricks anymore. Ah! Is that what he means? He doesn't read the tricks anymore. He's bigheaded? He knows it all? He doesn't have to know what the others are doing because he did it all himself before they did?

While most of that is probably true, they aren't the sole reasons. It's just that . . . well . . . hang on . . . I'll find the right words in a minute. It's just that there appears to be so many magic magazines that are full of drivel, that I don't want the trouble of reading them all to find out the good ones. So I have decided to do without them. Everything clear now?

Now dealers lists and catalogues. They should be required reading for all magicians, but we will save that for another time.

I don't think I have commented on the fact that we have a new editor, one Stephen Tucker, I will I will. I'll wait until he decides who he wants to live with and when he has settled down I will welcome him officially.

Dear Eddie Dawes. Would you like another Q.O.T.M.

WHEN IT COMES TO PERFORMING MAGIC, MAGIC MAGAZINES DON'T PLAY A VERY IMPORTANT ROLE.

A new routine and Presentation

photo-call

with Flash Gimmick for close-up & Stage

Performer now displays an ordinary Flash Cube. Holding the envelope of photographic paper above the cards, the spectator passes along the line. Suddenly, as if of it's own accord, the cube flashes above a card. This card is turned over and seen to be the selected card. Envelope is opened and photographic paper is seen to still bear the spectator's signiture, BUT ALSO IT BEARS A BLACK AND WHITE print of THE CHOSEN CARD.

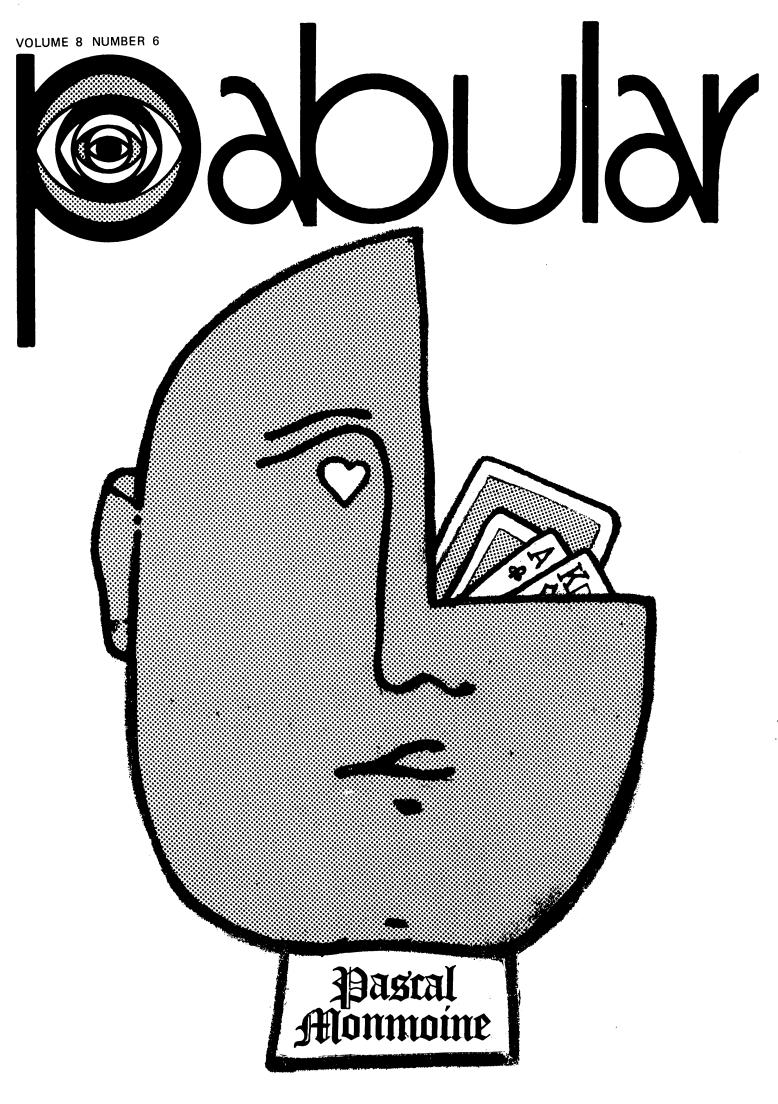

Effect may be repeated and a different card be photographed each time. Any deck of cards can be used. No connections, wires or batteries. Completely self contained. Flash Cube may be passed for examination. Very easy to do. No sleights, moves or difficult handling to learn. Generous supply of "Photographic paper" supplied. Sufficient for dozens and dozens of performances. Flash Gimmick is capable of dozens of applications, both closeup and stage. Many alternative ideas and applications

Send now for this exciting new effect. Guaranteed to be a sensation every time it is performed. Send today on our Money back Guarantee. You have nothing to lose and Price £5.00

May 1984

So what's new? I hear you ask..... sadly we saw the final performance of Tommy Cooper on the 'Live from her Majesty's' show last month.

I never knew the man personally but I'll never forget the laughter he gave us all every time he appeared on T.V. When I used to work at Martin Breese's Magic Lounge, he used to pop down every now and then and he was as jovial off stage as he was on. His passing is a sad loss to the comedy and the magic world.

The magic this month is supplied by one man and one man only. Who can it be? Is it Phil Goldstein? David Britland? No! This month's one man issue is from Pascal Monmoine.

Pascal has had items published in the Apocalypse magazine, the Spell-Binder magazine and many of the leading French publications.

I had the pleasure of meeting him a few weeks ago and managed to cajole him into parting with enough material to fill the pages that follow.

I have seen all of the routines performed and can attest for their impact and practical methods. Some of the items may, at first, seem ludicrous but until you actually try them. . . you'll never know!

During his short visit in London Pascal showed me a most startling colour change of a card case. He simply held a Blue card case, flicked it and instantly it changed to a red case. It looked like pure magic. Apparently it is available direct from George Proust in France and the cost is approx: £8.00.

Pascal makes them for the above French dealer and uses the effect superbly in his colour change deck routine described within. Pascal reserves the copyright and manufacturing rights on all of the enclosed items.

Before we start with the magic, I'll review a couple of books that have come my way over the past month.

Review.

Patrick Page's Book of Thumb Tips. °£3.75 plus 50p postage and packing.

This is a 40 page book, spiral bound within an attractive card cover. Illustrated throughout by Eric Mason.

You will find no less than twelve excellent routines within and all are extremely easy to perform.

Just a few small gripes.... The Lighted Match Vanish has appeared in print before. See page: 171 of 'The Big Book Of Magic.'

No mention of 'Hartz' is made throughout the book, though the origination of the thumb tip is discussed and mention made of Hoffmann's Later Magic. On page: 214 Hoffmann clearly credits Hartz with the origination of the tip.

All of the twelve routines are practical, though some could be said to be "bleedin obvious." You will also encounter a few humerous anecdotes related to the thumb tip and these alone are worth the price of the book!!

I thoroughly enjoyed the entire work and highly recommend it to anyone possessing the ingenious device!

The Art Of The Grafter (A Pitchman's Guide To Selling.) By Walt Lees. £4.75 inc postage.

This is a 28 page publication. It is stapled within an Astralux board cover and the entire contents are type set.

The production is excellent and the layout and graphics are courtesy of Jat's Graphics. The book deals with the art of the pitchman, that lowly creature who stands on the street corner bellowing his head off to the assembled multitude of punters.

By reading the book you will become familiar with a new language as used by the pitch man. You will become familiar with words like.... Punter-customer... Flashmoney and such useful statements as... Coming to the bat-naming the price.

All this will be of little or no use to you, unless that is.... you're thinking of becoming a pitchman!

Due to the economic climate at the moment, this doesn't seem so absurd.

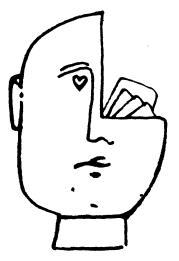

Walt points out that your income won't be very high, only about twice the average earnings of a genuine worker. (Remember those, they're the ones with a job!)

I had to laugh at Martin Breese's opening remarks, where he states that one of his friends gave the audio cassettes, on which this book is based, to his son-in-law who was temporarily out of work.

Some months later the phone rang, and Martin was told that the young man had saved the sum of £5,000 pounds and managed to support himself selling magic using the methods that Walt had described in the tapes!!

So what are we all waiting for?.... I'm ordering my copy now!

Available from Martin Breese Publishing Ltd; 31, Richmond Way, Hammersmith, London W.14 England.

THE DOMINO EFFECT...

This first offering from across the channel is based on Paul Harris's 'Flap Jacks' see page: 31 of his excellent book... Close-Up Fantasies Book One.

Pascal has reduced the number of revelations from four to two and increased the amount of audience participation.

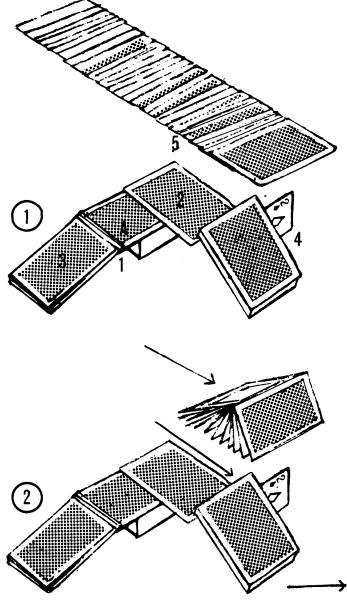

You'll need a close-up mat, a deck of cards and its case.

Place the case in the centre of the mat, then have a couple of cards selected. Take them back and control them to positions 1 and 3 from the top.

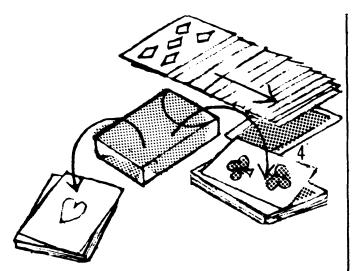

Double turnover and ask if this card is one of the selections, upon receiving a negative reply.... flip the double face down, remove the top card and set it atop the card case at position: A in Fig: 1.

This is in fact one of the selections and the other is now 2nd card down in the deck.

Lose the top card either by slip cutting it to the centre or double undercutting it to the bottom. You can palm it off and eat it if you like... just get rid of it!

1227

Repeat the double turnover display as you ask if this card is one of the two selections.

Once again you receive a negative reply and flip the card(s) face down. Remove the top card only and place it atop the first card already on the card case but in the position: 2 depicted in Fig. 1.

Give the deck a good shuffle, thus losing the two indifferent cards previously shown.

Now cut off or count off approx 10 cards and place them squared and at position: 3 in Fig: 1. Note that the very edge of the upper short edge is resting on the lower short edge of the card at position: 1.

You will need to be careful when placing this pile in position but you should be able to place the pile without toppling the single cards.

The weight of the single card at position: 2 will prevent this.

Now cut off approx 15 cards and table the rest to one side. Remove one of these cards and use it to prop up the rest of the packet at position: 4 in Fig. 1.

This packet is placed so that if the single card was removed from position: 4, the packet would fall and land on the narrow edge of the single card at position: 2.

A little more care must be taken when propping up this packet at position: 4.

Finally... take the remainder of the cards and spread them on the mat at position: 5. Once the cards are spread, start to flip the spread over in the time honoured manner but stop when a tent like shape is formed as depicted in Fig. 2, which shows the final result of the set-up.

You can now step back from the strange set-up and leave the rest to the spectator.

Explain that the two single cards on the card case are unfortunately not the ones previously selected but due to the strange lay out of the cards, hidden forces will remedy the situation.

Ask one of the spectators to simply place his finger on the card at the face of the tent of cards and request that he slowly push the tent over.

Once he does this several things will happen in quick succession.... The tent will collapse into a face up spread and this will knock over the single card at position: 4.

Once the single card has gone, the pile of cards that was propped up by it will fall and collide with the single card at position: 2 and literally flip this card face up onto the face down pile at position: 4. This has revealed one of the selections!!

Almost immediately after the first selection has been revealed the weight of the pile of cards at position: 3 will flip the other single card, at position: 1, face up onto the pile at position: 3 and the domino effect is over.

The whole procedure looks like a domino rally!

FORCEFUL REVELATION... April 1983

This ingenious move can be used to either force a card or even reveal a previous selection.

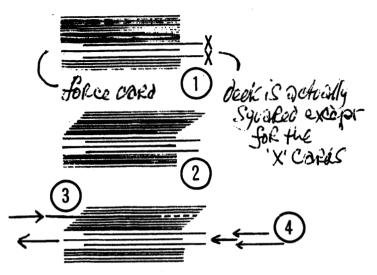

Assuming that you are about to force a card.... have the force card second from the top of your deck.

As you patter to the spectator, make the following actions. . . . Cut off about 2/3 of the deck and slip cut the top card onto the lower 1/3 so that it is in-jogged for about 3/4".

Next slip cut the force card onto the in-jogged card but in such a manner that it is squared with the rest of the lower section.

Finally, slip cut the next card onto the force card but this time in-jogged and in line with the other in-jogged card. Replace the upper section onto the three displaced card r from the front, the deck appears to be squared.

You must now bevel the upper 2/3 of the deck towards you as shown in Fig: 2. This serves to cover the in-jogged cards from the spectators.

You now riffle downwards and through this bevelled section as you ask the spectator to call stop at some card during the riffle.

When stop is called, you pull the card stopped at up and out of the front of the deck for about 3/4" in the manner shown in Fig. 3.

You are now set for the switch of the up-jogged card for the force card, which is at this moment between the two in-jogged card in the lower portion of the deck.

The fingers of the right hand rest on the upper narrow edge of the up-jogged card and the right thumb rests on the lower narrow edges of the in-jogged cards.

Two things take place at the same time....
The thumb pushes the in-jogged cards flush with the deck and the right fingers push the up-jogged card flush with the deck.

The result is that the up-jogged card is lost and the force card is pushed out of the front of the deck for about 3/4".

These two actions are covered by raising the deck so that the faces are towards the spectators. This allows them to see the new up-jogged card, which will be taken to be the card previously up-jogged at the spectator's request!!

If you perform the actions smoothly, the illusion is perfect that the spectator had chosen the force card.

Fig: 4 shows this final stage and as with the other illustrations, the hands are ommitted for clarity.

If you substitute the force card for a previously selected card, you can use the move to reveal this selection and the inference is that another spectator has somehow found it!!

A very light touch is needed when pushing the first up-jogged card flush with the deck.

If you allow the tips of the right fingers to extend beyond the edge of the card, they will contact the upper edge of the force card and will accidentally push it flush too!!

If you have decent finger nails, you can use the fingernails of your right fingers to push the up-jogged card flush with the deck.

Ed.... The principle used here is the age old Plunger principle but it's a nice application.

CARD THROUGH THE TABLE

... FROM A DISTANCE October 15th 1983

This little beauty fooled the pants off me ... I hadn't got a clue!

The effect is that a card is selected, returned etc. The deck is now placed into the centre of the table and a small piece of flash paper is rolled up and placed directly over the centre of the top card.

The performer now steps a few yards away and asks the spectator to light the paper. The paper is consumed by the flame in an instant but that's not all... Just prior to the paper being ignited, the performer asks the rest of the audience to watch the floor directly beneath the centre of the table.

Just as the paper is consumed and vanishes into nothingness, a single playing card flutters to the floor directly beneath the centre of the table!

Needless to say it is the card previously selected.

Once you have read the method employed in this wonderful effect, I doubt if you'll ever try it. It's just one of those effects where you read it, think that it's a really clever idea but never ever get round to trying it. Having seen the performance I urge you to give it a go!

You'll need a complete loop of invisible thread, the finer the better.

This must be looped around your table as shown in Fig:1. You will have to make this set up prior to your performance.

Once the loop is set, you can perform the routine at any time in the evening. If you are performing at home, you can gimmick a suitable table and forget about it until you are requested to show a trick.

Assuming that you are ready to perform... Have a card selected, signed and returned to the deck. You must control the card and finally palm it from the deck as you hand the deck to a spectator for shuffling.

Place the hand containing the card below the table and quickly position the card so that it is pinned against the underside of the table by the thread. A knot in the thread will aid you in this task.

If you don't think that you can set the card in this manner, try this . . . Explain that the table isn't in quite the right location and simply move it to another. During this moving, you have ample opportunity to load the card!

Or . . . Use the knocking the table top ruse to load the card. Ie . . . Pretend that you are searching for a soft spot on the table top. Tap on the top of the table with your empty hand and on the underside with the hand containing the palmed card. Again you should have ample time to load the card.

Assuming that the card is loaded . . . produce the flash paper and hand it to the spectator for examination. This gives you a few seconds to position the deck of cards so that the thread runs over it and effectively pins it to the table top as also shown in Fig:1

You are now set for the finale . . . Have the spectator roll the paper into a small loose ball and take it from him.

Place it onto the deck so that it is in contact with the thread. You can now walk away from the table and request that a spectator touch the paper with a naked flame. Before he does so, ask the rest of the spectators to watch the floor beneath the table. As soon as the paper burns, it will melt the thread and the card pinned against the underside of the table will fall to the ground!

It only remains for you to have the signature verified and the routine is over. Patter along the lines that the flash paper is a new invention that can burn with such an extreme heat that it will burn through the deck, the table and allow the selected card to fall through. Not only can it do this but it also seals the holes in the deck and table as soon as the selection is free.

You can of course use some other garbage

SHATTERED!

January 1983

Before you try the following unusual approach to the coin through glass effect, you'll need to make a new fake coin . . . Don't panic, it's easy to make!

Take any coin and glue a small length of elastic to it, about 1½" should be enough. You can also construct the gimmick by jamming the elastic into a locking shell coin.

You will also need a small glass tumbler about 2½" high. This height is not critical so just try a few and you'll hit the one most suited for the effect.

Introduce the glass and have it examined, if you wish. Borrow a coin and switch it for your gimmicked duplicate. This isn't essential, you can simply introduce the gimmick and conceal the elastic within your fingers.

Rest your right hand, containing the coin on the close up mat and allow the coin to rest on the surface.

Now take the glass tumbler and place it over the coin. If your audience are very close, you would be advised to use a clouded glass or at least one that will disguise the presence of the elastic. Another point to bear in mind is that the elastic should be as clear as possible. Completely uncoloured elastics are available from stationary shops. Once the tumbler is over the coin, you should manoeuvre it so that the end of the elastic is jammed against the close up mat by the rim of the glass.

Once this is done, reach under the glass, by pivoting it away from the mat but maintaining pressure with the rim on the end of the elastic against the mat.

Remove the coin and move it into the position shown by Fig:1.

Note that your left fingers cover the interior of the glass from the spectator's view, they also hide the elastic!

Raise the coin off the bottom of the glass and tap it against the surface a few times.

Explain that you will cause the coin to penetrate through and beneath the glass.

Due to the fact that a pull is exerted on the coin by the elastic, you only have to release your hold on the coin and it will be dragged off the bottom of the glass and back beneath. Prior to the release of the coin, the left fingers should allow the interior of the glass to be seen as much as possible, thus also allowing the apparent penetration to be seen also!

The illusion created is that the coin simply passed right through the base of the tumbler! You will need to raise the inner rim of the glass a little after the coin has been released, in order to allow the coin entry. Don't actually lift the glass away from the elastic, simply tilt it upwards at the inner end as you did when removing the coin from beneath it. Once the coin is back beneath the glass, shake the glass to and fro on the mat, allowing the coin to rattle against the inner walls.

It is a simple matter to secure an ungimmicked coin in the right hand, lift the glass away from the gimmicked coin and appear to scoop the coin off the mat and hand it back to the spectator. You of course do nothing of the sort! You scoop the gimmick into your lap and simply hand the palmed straight coin back to the spectator.

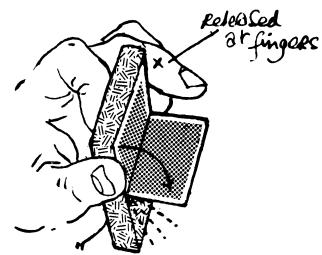

CHAMELEON

This is the colour change deck routine that was mentioned in the editorial. It will be described briefly here as it makes use of two special gimmicks, which you will have to buy or make.

Those of you familiar with the construction of the 'Acrobatic Card.' will have no problems understanding this explanation. Briefly . . . An Acrobatic card is made from two playing cards which are hinged together with a substance known as dental dam.

This dam is used to create a spring hinge on one or more surfaces of the card.

Example . . . The face of the card is shown to be the Ace of Spades but when the card is dropped to the table, the pressure maintained on the card is released and the hinge springs shut. This causes the surface of the Ace of Spades to be covered by another playing card face.

I hope that you understand what I'm talking about!! (Mind you. I'm not too sure if I do myself!)

I can only refer you to the Edward Marlo book on the Acrobatic card if you are still in the dark. Said book is published by Magic, Inc.

You will need to gimmick the card case so that the red printing on one face will instantly change to blue printing when the flap is released and allowed to spring closed.

In other words . . . You'll need to gimmick a regular blue card case by adding a spring flap that, when open and held in place by the fingers, will appear to show a red card case. The gimmicked case would be held as shown in Fig:1.

With your empty hand flick the case, and at the same time, allow the flap to be released from the fingers and spring closed.

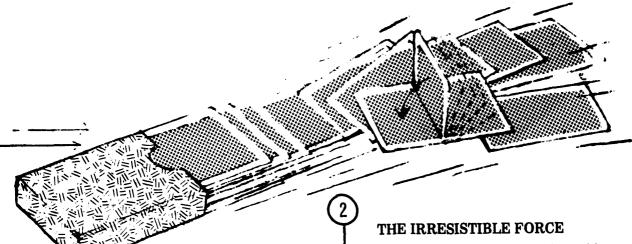

The result is that the case appears to suddenly change from red to blue.

The other 5 sides of the case are also blue but this fact is not noticed prior to the change!!

If you look at Fig:1 you'll see that the spectator can only see the gimmicked face of the case and will automatically assume that the entire case is red!

As previously stated in the editorial . . . the gimmicked card case is available from George Proust in France.

Assuming that you understand the mechanics of the case, we can go on to the cards within. Inside the deck should be a blue backed deck with a gimmicked Acrobatic card on top. This Acrobatic card should appear to be red backed but if the flap is allowed to close, the card would instantly change and become blue backed.

Still with me? . . . Good!

Now we can describe the routine...
Introduce the apparent red card case and exclaim that you have brought the wrong deck, you really need your blue backed deck. Offer a change the card case to blue.. flick it and... it's blue!

Allow the case to be seen all round, then open the flap and pull the cards out for about half their length, this allows the spectator to see the red back of the Acrobatic card which is atop the blue backed deck. Apologise once again and offer to now change the deck so that it too is blue backed.

Simply shake the deck out of the case and onto your close up mat so that it lands face down and spreads across the mat.

The instant the cards are free of the case, the Acrobatic card will visibly change from red to blue and as soon as the rest of the cards are seen in the spread, the effect is that the entire back has changed!

You can pocket the card case and get rid of the Acrobatic card as you remove and pocket the Jokers.

I'm sorry for the rather brief description of the gimmicks but I think most of you will understand their construction and will be able to get your hands on them.

I have seen the routine performed and can assure you that it is worth any effort necessary to acquire the gimmicks.

Fig:2 shows the change as the deck is free of the case.

Note: The special card-case is available from George Proust, Academie De Magie 47, Rue Notre-Dame-De-Lorette 7500g Paris.

The cost of the case is £7.00 including postage. Pascal informs me that if any readers would like one of the flap-cards he will be pleased to make one for you. Requests should be forwarded to me at the address on the back cover and I'll pass them on to Pascal.

When Pascal first described this to me, I was a little hesitant in including it in this issue.

I later tried the effect on an unsuspecting layman and now agree with him that it's a very powerful force. I pointed out to Pascal that it is quite similar to the force used in the Svengali routine.

In fact you will require 27 duplicate cards and 25 mixed cards.

I'll describe the force first and then we'll discuss how it can be applied to a straight deck.

Cut off the top 27 duplicates and faro them into the remaining 25 cards. Don't complete the shuffle just yet!

Fig:1 shows the position of the two half decks with the hands ommitted for clarity. You now move the duplicate packet to the right for about half an inch as shown in Fig:2 Finally push the card foward so that the inner narrow ends are squared and you will have reached the situation shown in Fig:3.

If you now pressure fan the deck and look at the faces of the cards, you will only be able to see the mixed cards as the duplicates are all hidden.

If you now lower the fan and ask a spectator to select any one of the cards from the fan, he will be forced to remove one of the 27 duplicate cards!!

You can now close the fan, square the cards and continue with the revelation that you knew which card he would select. If you want to end clean, switch the gaffed deck for a regular deck minus the forced card.

The reason that we used 27 duplicate cards is that the faro used must be a straddle faro.

If you are willing to use such a deck, all well and good but there are many who will not lower themselves to perform with anything less than a straight deck!!

For them let us consider the following... Separate the Clubs and Hearts into one pile and the Diamonds and Spades into another pile.

1232

Shuffle one into the other and make the fan as before. If you look at the face of the fan you will see only two suits present but if they had been shuffled together prior to the faro and the fan . . . the mixed face of the fan would appear quite normal.

When you lower the fan and have a card selected, you will have forced one of the other two suits.

Prior to all this you have written a prediction that the spectator will not select a card from either of the two suits that were present in the face of the fan. This prediction might read . . . You will not select either a Heart card or even a Club card!!

Place a large denomination bank note on the table and ask the spectator to take any card from the fan. Square up the cards and place them before him. Point out that no one could have known which card he would select but you have played a game of monetary Russian roulette and you point out that if your prediction is wrong...he can keep the money. He reads your strange prediction, looks at his card and you pocket the money. The nice thing about this routine is that the deck is in front of him and he will grab it and make sure that all four suits are present and ... they are!

Nothing remains that might give the game away!

Other possibilities are . . . separate the cards into odd and even values. Force an odd card and use the patter presentation that you think the spectator is an odd type of person. Providing that you back up your statement with a large banknote, the larger the better, the effect will be quite strong!

Why not shuffle 27 red backed cards into 25 blue backed cards. Show that the fan consists of all blue backed cards but explain that you would like the spectator to remove any card but to make things fairer . . . he removes a card with the fan face up.

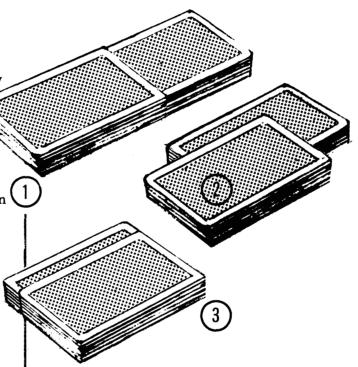

This forces him to remove one of the red backed cards.

Hand him a magic wand and have him wave it over the card . . . he flips it face down and low and behold, the card now has a red back!!

In the meantime you have pocketed the rest of the deck.

I'm sure that you'll be able to find other applications for the principle.

 $Ed\ldots$ I know that Alex Elmsley once applied the principle to his impromptu Brainwave routine!

CARD IN PEN

This is nothing new but the routine is logical and extremely entertaining. It makes use of old principles such as the tearing off of a corner from the card, apparently in order that the spectator will be able to later verify which card was selected.

Confused? You won't be after reading the complete routine . . .

You'll need a duplicate card from which you tear a corner. Take a ballpoint pen, remove the ink cylinder and replace it with the rolled up duplicate.

Place the pen in a suitable pocket and place the extra corner in the same pocket also. You are now ready to perform . . .

Force the duplicate of the card in the pen on a spectator and ask that he sign his name across the face of the card, just in case he later forgets which card was selected. Remove the pen and hand it to the spectator but at the same time, fingerpalm the corner.

Rest the hand containing the corner at the edge of the table as you patter to another spectator. The spectator trying to sign his name on the card will soon tell you that the pen does not work.

Apologise and, as an apparent afterthought, tear a corner from the card and hand it to the spectator as you explain that it will later identify the card.

You of course switch the corner actually torn from the card for the one you had finger palmed!

I'VE SEEN A RUBBER BAND

It is now a simple matter to vanish, destroy or otherwise get rid of the remainder of the card and later have it reappear within the pen, which has been lying on the table throughout! Pascal points out that he occasionally changes the card into the ink cylinder. As soon as the change has taken place, he looks at the spectators, then the pen etc.

A simple comment that . . . If you have the inside of the pen, then . . . will be enough to make the spectator open the pen and find the card within. He has only to place his corner against the card and will discover that somehow it is the card he previously selected.

Ed... I liked the touch where the pen failed to work and thus the tearing of the card seemed to be quite logical.

72 pages containing 46 fantastic card and coin routines. £10.00 Post paid. From Stephen Tucker, 33A, Steeles Road, Chalk Farm, London NW3. England.

This idea isn't really a trick, it's a gag that you can pull on your fellow magicians. You'll need the smallest rubber band that you can lay your hands on. The type used on folding coins are ideal but even some of these are too large!

For this first idea you'll need a small object that would normally fit into a thumb-tip. A small coin is ideal.

Before you begin, you should slip the rubber band over your thumb so that it occupies the position that the edge of a thumb-tip would occupy if you were wearing one. Fig:1 shows this position.

You should be wearing the band for a few minutes prior to performance. This results in the thumb growing red above the elastic and the result is that it appears as if you are wearing a thumb-tip!

I know you don't believe me but you'll have to try it!

Show the coin to the magician/spectator and explain that you'll show him a new vanish. During your opening remarks you make no attempt to hide the appearance of your thumb, in fact you want him to see the thumb!

Vanish the coin either by sleeving, lapping etc. but make it appear that you are using a thumb-tip.

It only remains for you to show the absence of the coin and wait for his cry of, "Thumb-tip, thumb-tip!"

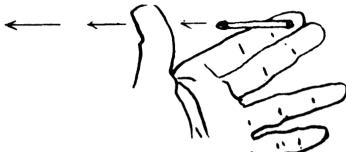

Finally you reveal that you are only wearing a rubber band!!!

It doesn't sound like much of a finale but I can assure you that any magician will laugh his socks off when he sees what fooled him!

If you wish to make it a complete mystery, you could slide the elastic off and allow it to fall unseen to the floor!

If you do this, don't forget to wait a few seconds for your thumb to return to normal!

Another strange use for the small band is . . . Take a match and, with a penknife, cut a small notch into the head of the match. Be careful when doing this or the match may ignite!!

Now encircle the match with a band as shown in Fig:2.

From a short distance the band is completely invisible. Now offer to demonstrate a strange experiment in static electricity.

Remove the gimmicked match from the box, plus an ordinary match as well.

Extend your left forefinger and position the gimmicked match onto it as shown in Fig:3. Ask a spectator to hold the match box as you strike the ungimmicked match. You now comment that, due to static electricity, a strange thing will happen when you light the other match.

With the burning match light the gimmicked one and you'll be amazed to find that the instant the match ignites . . . it is hurled, still burning, across the room!! It really is a strange sight to see and I strongly urge you to give it a try. Pascal points out that he sometimes uses it just as a stunt but usually uses it to start the Domino effect, previously detailed in this issue.

When using the match missile, he simply props up the pile at position:4 with the single card, aims the match at the single card and lights it.

just riffled off. The card is up-jogged as before but this time the card is up-jogged for about 1".

Finally . . . pick up the third card and appear to insert this directly beneath the second but, as before, you riffle off two more cards and this third card is inserted directly beneath these. It is up-jogged for about ¾" and the situation is as shown in Fig:1.

Fig:2 shows a side view of the situation.

If you now push the upper card flush with the second card, nothing will happen but if you continue and push the two upper cards flush with the lower card, a card will be plunged out of the other end of the deck and towards you. The card will be pushed out for a distance of approx 1/4".

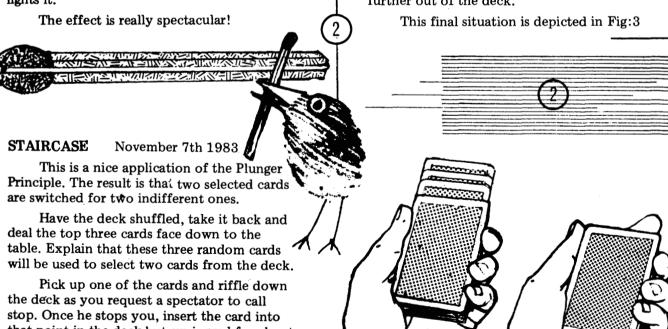

In fact this card is a double. I.e... two cards squared as one!

Finally you push the upper three cards square with the deck and a second card emerges from above the first at the inner end of the deck. As before, this card is in fact a double and will be in-jogged for about½". As this second card emerges, it will push the first in-jogged card further out of the deck.

THE PROPERTY OF

double

the deck as you request a spectator to call stop. Once he stops you, insert the card into that point in the deck but up-jogged for about 1/2". As you pick up the next card, riffle off two more cards and insert the card apparently directly beneath the previously up-jogged card but in fact it is inserted beneath the two cards and both of these cards are in fact doubles. You explain that these two cards will be used for the effect and you remove the lower card(s) squared as one, show their face and flip them face down onto the deck. Immediately deal the top card face down to the table and this selection has been switched for the indifferent card just dealt.

Repeat the procedure with the other double and the result is that the top two cards of the deck are the selections and the two tabled cards are indifferent.

A simple application of the event would be to insert the tabled cards into the deck and show them to have apparently risen to the top.

The application will of course depend on the effect you wish to perform.

Ed... The method of selection is a little strange so I suggest that you use the Stewart James 'Further Than That.' patter theme.

I.e... Have the cards shuffled, deal off the top three cards and explain that most magicians would use these three random cards but you go further than that. Insert the cards into the deck at the point stopped at by the spectator and explain that some magicians might use the cards above and below the three cards in the deck but you go even further than that etc....

AND FINALLY February 20th 1983

Pascal also showed me a few other routines and ideas but space prevents me from detailing them in great depth so I'll try to give you the bare bones and hope that you can understand them.

Ace cutting... Place a face up Ace at positions 10, 20, 30 and 40 from the top of the deck. Note... These positions can be approximate so long as the Aces are equally scattered throughout the deck!

The four Kings should be on top of the deck and you're all set to perform . . .

Explain that you'll try and cut to the Kings, then perform four false cuts, dealing the top card face down to the table at the completion of each cut. Flip the four cards face up and they are the four Kings. Obtain a little finger break above the lowermost face up Ace, pick up one of the Kings and place it face up onto the deck. Slip cut it onto the lowermost Ace and assemble the deck again.

Repeat this with the other three Kings but slip cut them one above each of the face up Kings remaining.

Explain that you have buried the Kings face up so that the spectator can see that you really are cutting to them.

Transfer the deck from the left hand dealing position to the right hand Biddle grip and allow small packets of cards to drop from the bottom of the deck and onto the left hand. Eventually a packet with a face up King on top will land on the left hand cards, you now table the rest of the cards from the right hand and flip the face up King, with the face up Ace beneath it, face down anddealthe new top card face down to one side.

Repeat this for the other Kings, each time switching in the Aces.

The dropping of the packets from the right hand is something that you will get the feel for after one or two practice runs.

Hand the rest of the deck to the spectator for shuffling and explain that you will now find the Aces. End by picking up the four face down cards, flipping them face up and revealing the Aces!!

Another idea of Pascal's is to use Flash Thread. Simply take a length of flash rope and tease away a single strand, in much the same way as you do with regular thread.

Pascal occasionally uses the flash thread with his Card through the table routine, just to make sure that no thread remains to give the game away.

He also uses flash thread but of a thicker variety to apparently pull a loose thread from his jacket. He comments that it is very dangerous to smoke when wearing the jacket as it is extremely combustible. He now lights the thread and whooosh!!

Pascal fooled me again with a one way deck but not on the backs, on the faces!!

He showed me that on most decks the faces of the cards are not printed in the exact centre of the card. This means that by looking at the distance from the index to the edge of the card you can determine if the card has been turned around as in the usual one way principle. Simply set all your card faces so that they are the same way round, then have a card selected and returned the other way round . . . End as you would with a regular one way deck.

"I'm going to make one more attempt at the four minute yard!"

A couple of weeks ago I had a wander around London's Covent Garden area, and was pleasantly surprised to see a street magician performing. From memory, he did Stick to Silks, a Ring and Rope routine, Professors Nightmare, Card Manipulations, a Three Ring Routine and closed with Zombie. The whole bit lasted somewhere between ten and fifteen minutes, and was very well done except for angle problems with the cards and Zombie, which was a pity. He didn't seem to care that perhaps seventy-five people were standing behind him and could see everything they shouldn't see. He was young, perhaps twenty five years old, and with his ability I would have thought he was capable of replacing the cards and Zombie without too much trouble. One of his problems perhaps, was the fact that he performed silently to taped music. If he is afraid to talk, he has the problem of replacing five or six minutes of material, silent. I still think it's a pity.

Having said that, imagine my surprise to receive a phone call a couple of days later asking me to do just that. Busk. I did busk, once, many years ago, for fun, but this was the real thing, and these days I wouldn't even look at a trick unless someone was going to pay me. It was the local council, (City Hall to U.S. readers) who said they would pay me a nominal figure and allow collections from the crowd.

There were two of us, the other one being a friend of mine who does a bit of clowning and magic, and we were to do our bit as and when we felt like it outside the Fulcrum Theatre in Slough, a small town a few miles outside London. It wasn't a raging success, although it did pay the rent that week. One of the major problems, was the fact that it wasn't a tourist area, it was more or less in a shopping mall. Mel Harvey & Presto the Magic Rabbit were performing a one and a half hour kid show inside the theatre and the parents were obviously dumping the kids in the theatre and dashing around the stores to get back in time to collect them at a time which coincided with our packing up.

I don't envy anyone who has to make a living that way. They earn every penny, although as I have already said, a tourist area where people have more time to spend just looking around would obviously be a much better bet. But then, I don't gamble.

A thought. You probably want to know what I did. Yes?....O.K. Miser's Dream, Sponge Balls, Balloon Animals (one actually) and Chinese Rings. Want to know something? I could have earned a lot more if I had just made one balloon animal and sold them direct. Everyone who had a kid there wanted one. There's a lesson in there somewhere. Now go and make yourself some money.

Recently I also did a job in a house at a private party. It was a birthday party for a forty year old man. They booked a conjuror, (their word) because they had discovered that the gentleman in question had never had a birthday party in his life and he asked specifically for a conjuror because he had envied all his school friends when they had birthdays complete with conjuror. It was a roaring success.

About a week later I read an article in the newspaper in which a trendy young lady was giving advice on how to entertain your guests at a party. After all the usual advice on what to feed them with etc. she suggested several ideas on how to occupy or amuse them and right at the end of the list she suggested, "or you can even book a conjuror". She then went on to explain that she had been to a birthday party for a forty year old and was amazed to discover that a whole room full of adults were fascinated by, and were completely entranced by this conjuror. She couldn't believe how silent they were for the entertainer. I don't know who this conjuror was, it could have been me. As she never mentioned his name we will never know. Another pity.

Why did I bother to mention this? I'll tell you. I have a gut feeling that, in London anyway, we are about to see a revival of house parties for adults, where they will book entertainers, and there aren't too many acts who can fill the bill. Jugglers don't go down too well. Singers need accompaniment, tap dancers are out. We are almost the only acts who can do it successfully Be prepared.

Terry Seabrooke's New SIGNED NOTE IN WALLET

an action packed comedy routine

The Smash Hit Comedy Routine — now available again only from REPRO 71. But now it's better than ever, for the first time you get the actual routine that Terry Seabrooke performs! This is what Terry has to say about the new routine and the top quality apparatus:

".... This is the very first time I've ever sat down and written out the routine I perform, word for word. You will notice certain alterations in the handling plus additional Bits of Business and New Gags"

ABOUT THE APPARATUS

".... Now available exclusively from REPRO 71, as a matter of interest (for those who purchased the wallet originally from Harry) the new wallet, apart from looking terrific, makes the working of the effect even easier (the old wallets were too limp). Get one and see for yourself, I'm certain you will be delighted with it!"

For the few who don't know - here's the effect in brief -

A borrowed note is signed and sealed in an envelope, which is mixed with 3 identical envelopes. Spectator freely selects one, the remaining envelopes are burnt. The spectator opens his envelope and to his dismay finds a blank piece of paper! The trick has apparently gone terribly wrong! But fear not — at the conclusion of this hilarious effect, you take out a wallet, from it you produce a SEALED envelope which is ripped open and spectator himself takes out his marked note.

If you are looking for an EXCELLENT effect with STACKS OF COMEDY and AUDIENCE PARTICIPATION that can be worked under ANY CONDITIONS, the new NOTE IN WALLET is an absolute MUST — by the way it's dead easy to do. You receive a DELUXE WALLET in REAL leather in JET BLACK or REDWOOD BROWN (state preference) PLUS Terry Seabrooke's Great New Routine PLUS the Signed Card in Sealed Wallet plus notable number.

DO YOU WISH TO CONTINUE?? Barrie Richardson

Presentation

"I'm about to show you a most perplexing enigma, something that will cause you endless nights of lost sleep! The more logical you are, the more analytical you are, the more impossible the feat will appear. Do you wish to continue?"

"Yes?... Good! Now, I want you to imagine that you are walking along a beach and someone has left a deck of cards lying in the sand. You reach down and pick up two of the cards, both are face down so turn them face up in your mind. Before I ask you to reveal the name of one of the cards I must ask you again, do you really wish to continue?

There is still time to stop! No... then reveal the name of one of the cards to me. Eight of Clubs. We can stop right now or... we can continue I must warn you again that you are on a path that will result in insomnia.

Now, you can keep the card just named or you can throw it away and we'll use the other card. Okay, you want to stick with the Eight of Clubs, throw the other card away.

The performer now points to two decks of cards on a nearby table. One is Blue backed and the other is Red backed, both decks are in closed cases.

"Please watch what I am doing and follow my actions."

The performer opens the Red case and pulls the cards out face down, the spectator does the same with the Blue cards.

"Please deal the cards in a row, face up next to my face up cards."

The first card of each deck is now dealt out and then a few more cards.

"Do you notice that none of the pairs contain identical cards. You dealt the 4 of Spades and I dealt the 3 of Hearts etc. Let's continue until I call stop."

After several more cards have been dealt and are seen not to match, the performer calls stop.

"Please deal the next card face down in the row and then continue dealing a few more cards face up. Look at the array, we've dealt nearly 20 cards each and none of the pairs contain matching cards. Do you wish to continue? You can almost guess what is going to happen can't you!

The dealing is stopped and the spectator is invited to flip the two face down cards face up and just as he expected . . . they are both the Eight of Clubs!!

The Solution

Both decks are arranged in the same sequence. The set-up used must be such that you know the position down from the top of any card named. John Cornelius sells an excellent method but for practise purposes

Arrange the decks in any order . . . (Both the same of course!)

Now make a crib sheet which will clue you the position of any card named ie . . 4C-23...9C-15 etc.

The stack you use should consist of an odd value card followed by an even valued card etc. Throughout the deck.

Place the Blue backed deck in the card case and carry out the following procedure with the Red backed deck . . .

Deal the deck into two face down piles, this results in a 26 card packet containing all the even value cards and the other containing the odd value cards.

Flip the even packet face up and exchange the top card of the odd packet for the 26th card in the same packet, then place the odd packet face down onto the even packet. Case this deck and you're all set to perform.

1240

Performance

Assuming that the named card is the Eight of Clubs, a quick glance at your crib sheet will tell you the position down from the top of the Blue backed deck. We'll assume that it's 12 cards down.

You know that the Eight must be in the even section of the Red backed deck and it must be 6 cards down. (12 divided by 2 equals 6).

Pick up the Red case and remove the deck so that the odd stack is uppermost.

The spectator removes the Blue deck. Start to deal cards face up in a row on the table but allow the spectator to deal one of his cards face up above each of your cards. Continue dealing until you have dealt the 6th card face up, then drop your hand to your side, turning the deck over in the process as you comment that so far, there have been no matching pairs.

Continue dealing again but this time from off the even stack. Stop the deal at the 11th card and deal the 12th card face down into the row, the spectator does likewise. Continue dealing about four or five more cards face up in the row, then place the deck aside.

The two face down cards are flipped face up and they match and they're both the Eight of Clubs!!

The trick is almost automatic. Just follow these rules . . .

- Card freely named. 2) determine whether it resides in the even or the odd stack. 3) Pull deck from case with opposite side uppermost. 4) Deal half the number of cards face up in the row. Note . . If the card resides at an odd position in the Blue deck, ie: 21 cards down. First subtract 1 from 21 20. Divide by 2 10 and deal this number of cards face up in the row.
- 5) Turn the deck over, which is really not a move at all! 6) Continue dealing to one less than the known position, then stop the deal and deal the next card face down. 7) Continue dealing a few more cards face up in the row. 8) Reveal the face down cards!

Not many people will try this routine because it reads too complex. It isn't complex, it's remarkably simple and those who learn and perform it will have a perplexing enigma that will drive the onlooker crazy!

EDITORIAL

July 1984

Well, what can I say? I can only apologise for the delay with the past few issues. It seems that we have been ill fated all round recently.

What with Eric's ill health, a close bereavement in Nick's family and a little misunderstanding over one of my reviews we've been set back quite a bit!

Don't worry though, we're back on course now and with a bit of luck should be ahead of ourselves in a month or two.

This issue sees some really top-notch magic from Roy Walton, Bill Worsley, Roberto Giobbi, Barrie Richardson, John Aukes and of course myself (Stephen Tucker.)

About two weeks ago Stephen Hamilton paid a visit to the great city and we spent quite a lot of time together. Steve showed me some really excellent magic, which is destined to appear in a future issue. Shiv Duggal was also present at this meeting of the minds and has also promised me several items for publication. Trouble is He's so lazy, we'll probably never see them.

Shiv informed me that he is planning a book on some of his more workable ideas. It will be titled 'A Sorcerer full of secrets.' so keep an eye out for it!!

Steve Hamilton has also been planning a book for quite some time. It was about two years ago when he first told me about it!

I've seem most of the items that will be in the book and strongly urge you to secure a copy, should it ever see the light of day!

I met up with Terri Rogers and Walt Lees a few weeks back and learned that Walt has recently taken over the Repro magazine, 'Club 71.'

I've only seen the first issue but I can tell you that the production is excellent, though the actual magical content is a little lacking. (better sticking with good old lovable Pabular:)

Seriously.... The new magazine is a handy size and contains the usual hoard of adverts but as a special bonus Each issue has one or two drastically reduced items and this fact alone should endear it to the performers out there. (Well worth a read.)

Terri was telling me that she's going to have a really hectic few months ahead of her. I can't remember the exact details but she's off to the States to do some filming and from there she's hitching a ride on a major cruise, where she'll be performing her Vent act and a Mentalism spot.

When I was rummaging through my drawers the other day, I happened upon an old review sent in by friend Peter Brunning.

Here it is

The Card Puzzle Book (Compiled by John Racherbaumer. Edited by David Goodsell.)

This is a 25 page book and sells for $6.00. (I would imagine that it is available from Magic Books by Post here in England. Everything else is!)

This is an interesting and well-produced book, which is warmly recommended. It's a collection of material, which recently appeared in an issue of the American Magazine M-U-M.

There are four items on the card puzzle effect, an Aces and court cards assembly scheme, four other Marlo items and, somewhat surprisingly, two coin items and four other card routines.

There is also a well argued historical survey by Jon Racherbaumer, which traces the card puzzle theme from the contribution of Charles T. Jordan, via Ed Marlo to Alex Elmsley and Peter Kane.

The essay exemplifies the books rather daring sub-theme, also present in the section on riffle-shuffle moves, which is to seek to demonstrate that much of Vernon's published card material is derived pretty directly from Marlo.

In those methods for the card puzzle published, here, which use double-facers, there are ideas which might be applicable to the McDonald's Aces plot.

Perhaps someone could work these out in detail.

FOR SUSAN Roberto Giobbi

This is my handling of the "Reverse Assembly" theme done with cards. It will become clear through the text that its direct inspirational source is John Racherbaumer's "Disassembling Jokers" which appeared in The Lost Pages of Kabbala" on pp. 39. I have added some details of handling and made some changes on the structure of the climax; this might be of interest to some.

Effect

Disassembly done with four Jokers.

Requirements

a deck of cards

a wallet containing four Jokers with backs matching the deck proper

Preparation

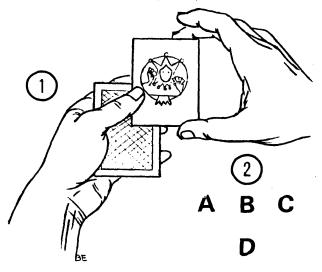

None

Management and Handling

1) Take the 4 Jokers out of the wallet and deal them face up in a row on the mat. The faces of the Jokers should point towards the spectators — this has more appeal than if they were standing "on their heads.". Take the deck face up in left hand dealing position. Drop twelve cards from the face of the deck in a face up pile on the table counting aloud. Do not deal the cards, drop them; making the initial situation crystal-clear: just four Jokers and twelve indifferent.

I like to use a large mat for my magic and I think it is particularly important with any kind of assembly effect where objects travel from A to B. The longer the distance from A to B the stronger the transposition.

- 2) Lay the deck aside. Pick up the twelve cards and place them face up in left hand dealing position, the left 4th finger obtaining a break below the top card on the face. With both hands simultaneously (left hand starts on the left and the right hand on the right) pick up the face up Jokers. As the hands come together (each one holds two Jokers) the right hand squares the four Jokers against the left thumb picking up the face card.
- 3) The right hand holds the Joker packet from above in Biddle position and lifts it up while the left thumb goes on the bottom of its packet in order to flip it face down. The cards are held as depicted in fig. 1.
- 4) You are now going to deal the Jokers face down at positions A, B, C and D—the card at A being an indifferent card (fig. 2), to wit: the left hand peels off the first Joker which is turned face down onto the left hand packet by using the cards in the right as a lever. The left thumb deals this cards at D. Repeat for the next two Jokers dealing them at B and C respectively. You are left with a face up double card which is turned face down onto the left hand packet. The top card only is now dealt at A. The patter here is merely explanatory: "... the four Jokers..."

5) Turn the cards in the left hand face up: "... and 12 indifferent cards." As you are saying this spread the cards between your hands faces towards the audience. When you come to the last card which should be a Joker simply tilt the spread towards yourself but keep looking at it miscalling the cards as 12 indifferent ones. In a gesture separate the spread so that the left hand holds 4 cards and the right hand the remaining 8. Square the cards bringing the cards in the right hand in front of those in the left. The stolen Joker has thus become the fourth card from the face. Turn the cards face down in left hand dealing position.

6) Count off 3 cards, show their faces briefly and drop them on top of the Joker at C. Repeat for B. Using the same counting action deal 2 cards as 3 at A. You are left with four face down cards the top of which is a Joker. Show 3 indifferent cards by means of a double buckle then drop them on top of the Joker at D. In all these counts the order of the cards is not reversed.

Situation: packet C has one Joker on the face and 3 indifferent cards; B same as C; A consists of only three indifferent cards; D, the leader packet, has a Joker at its face followed by three indifferent card and a second Joker on top.

This position has been arrived at with a minimum of handling and using natural actions.

- Pick up packet C and perform an Elmsley count from dealing position (for the fingertip technique you will have to alter the handling slightly) keeping the last card in the right hand (apparently a Joker): "Three indifferent cards ... and a Joker ..." Rub the single card on the table - pause - then show its face. Turn it face down on top of the packet. Turn this four card packet face up and Elmsley count to show four indifferent cards. Drop the cards singly face down back at C apparently again showing their faces by means of a subtlety which Tamariz tells me was used by the late Fred Kaps, to wit: the right hand extracts the bottom card of the face up packet and immediately turns it face down and drops it on the table (fig. 3 shows your views of the move). The same action is done with the remaining 3 cards only that the faces of these are exposed for a fraction of a second as they are being dropped. This reverses the order of the cards thus the packet on the table has again a Joker at its face.
- 8) Pick up the leader packet at D and turn it face up. Peel off the Joker on the face into the left hand then the next card on top of it. Push off the next two cards as one and eventually drop the last card the second Joker on top of all. You have thus shown two Jokers and two indifferent cards. Display the situation again by means of a buckle count without changing the order of the cards.

9) Pick up packet in Elmsley count position. Count off 3 cards (without actually doing the Elmsley) and show the last card — a Joker — in the right hand. Execute a Hofzinser top change as the left hand points to the spot on the table where the right hand rubs its card revealing the change, Turn this card face down on top of the cards in the left hand. Turn these face up and show them to be four indifferent cards by means of the Elmsley count. Drop them face down on the table as before using the Kaps technique.

- 10) Pick up the leader packet and with an Elmsley count show 3 Jokers, last card on top (order from face now: 2 Jokers, 3 indifferent cards). Drop the packet back face down at D.
- 11) Pick up packet A and Elmsley count 3 as 4 retaining the last card in the right hand. Rub it on the table and reveal the change. Drop it face down on the cards in left hand, turn the packet face up and show four indifferent cards by means of the Elmsley. Drop them back face down at A without using the Kaps handling (would be difficult with three cards, eh?)
- 12) For the last time pick up the leader packet holding it in right hand Biddle position. With the left thumb peel off the 3 cards on the back each time flashing in different ways the Joker at the bottom (flustration move by Bro. John Hamman) do this move smoothly and in a dynamic way. When you drop the last card, which should be a double, on top of the cards already peeled off maintain a break. Turn the top card, a Joker, face up and say: "Each time this last Joker arrives all the others are so scared that they vanish completely!" With the right hand take the face up Joker plus the hidden card beneath it as the left hand moves to the left with 1st 3 cards. The left thumb goes under these cards flips them face up and spreads them (fig. 4). 13) You are now going to turn the packet A, B. C face up with the help of the Joker you are
- holding in the right hand: during this action the hidden Joker is added to the face of packet A which consists of only 3 cards, to wit: place the middle finger of the left hand on the middle of the left long side of packet A and press down. Thus the right long side of these 3 cards are slightly allowing the double held in the right hand to enter for half its width. With the help of the double, lift up the packet on the table into the hands ending up in a situation as shown in fig. 5. In this position the fingers of the left hand touch the hidden face down Joker and immediately draw it to the left squaring it up with the other 3 face down cards. Without noticeable pause the left hand takes all four face down cards, moves forward turning back up and spreads the four cards face up on the table towards yourself. This add-on move was shown to me by friend Tony Mantovani of Italy.
- 14) Using the single Joker repeat the same actions with packets B and C. Drop the Joker on the face of the face up cards at D for the final display.

PHILIPPE SOCRATE LECTURE

To Birmingham to see Philippe Socrate (pronounced Sock-rat), best known for his superb stage act of a zombie routine with a rose that turns into a woman's head. This though was his close-up lecture which was divided into two parts — the first in the main consists of items from his own close-up act (first seen in England at Ron Macmillan's International Day of Magic in December last year).

I must admit to some bias towards Socrate: his entire manner reeks of a suave and sophisticated Frenchman. One can easily imagine him working in the top Parisian restaurants. Debonair, stylish, elegant, supremely courteous with Continental charm oozing out of every gesture and word. The effects, as in all the best magic, are supremely simple: a spoon penetrates a coin, a pound note floats, a rope is cut and restored, a cigarette lighter, rapidly followed by a cigarette, disappear. His humour arises from the magic and his presentation (acting, if you like). There are no obvious gags, no remarks out of context. Because the humour is an integral part of the whole presentation it is all the more memorable and never, for an instant, detracts from the magic that is taking place.

He clearly thinks in detail about his magical technique and skills as well as his presentation. For example the timing on the disappearing cigarette was analysed in great depth: the hand containing the cigarette should move from the mouth to the table (ready for lapping) in two distinct steps: the first step on the misdirection of the cigarette lighter vanishing, the second on the surprise from the performer at its disappearance. Similarly the effect of a spoon penetrating a coin, as well as being completely angle proof, had a logical presentation that made it far more magical than its counterpart with a cigarette.

For Pabular writers (if not readers) obsessed with technique, Socrate's card work would be disappointing. However for those who have had the good fortune to witness his short scenario of cards mishandled and falling everywhere, the selected card shooting out of the pack everytime the spectator replaces it and various other clumsy attempts to handle the deck whilst telling the audience how important it is to be slick and professional, have seen something worth infinitely more than intricate sleight of hand and, incidentially, something that is far more difficult to achieve.

The second half of his lecture was wholly devoted to threads: how to make them, how to use them in all lights and in all situations, how to easily pick them up and get rid of them, the various gimmicks needed to keep them untangled and free from snapping: and, of course, the numerous floating and moving effects that can be done with them. From his detailed exposition it was clear that Socrate uses them continually and with great success in his commercial close-up. I wish anybody luck who tries to duplicate his achievements — they'll need it!

There was, as might be anticipated after the pathetic attendance for Martin Nash's London lecture, a poor turnout. I understand that the other lecture in Liverpool did better in terms of numbers. I only hope that Paul Stone (who organised the tour) made enough to make it financially worthwhile. As for me, I just quietly despair for the future of close-up in England.

RAINBOW ROAD Roy Walton

This is an easy to do handling of the Colour change pack trick. In addition to a standard pack you will require two other cards, each with a different coloured back to the pack in use.

For ease of explanation, let's assume that the pack is Blue backed and the two extra cards are Red backed and Yellow backed.

Place one of the extra cards at the top of the pack and the other at the face and you're all set to perform.

We'll assume that the Yellow backed card is atop the pack and the Red backed one is at the face. The deck is cased and you're ready to go.

Performing details

Remove the cards from the case and after accidentally flashing the Yellow back, hold them face up in the right hand in Hindu-shuffle position.

Use the left thumb to pull off the face card into the left hand and then continue to pull off very small packets from the face one by one, turning the right hand to flash the Yellow back after each group is pulled off, in the well known sequence.

Do this until you reach the approximate centre of the pack and then throw the remainder of the cards from the right hand on top of those in the left and pick up a left little finger break between the two sections.

Give the pack a single cut, cutting at the break and retake a break with the left little finger as the halves come together. Whilst the right hand is still over the pack, use its thumb to drop one card from the bottom of the face section onto the face of the lower section and retake the left little finger break at this point.

Carry out a standard riffle force with the pack face up and thumb off the card stopped at? Thumb the card face up to the table, then reassemble the main pack and place it face down on the table, carefully squared.

Pick up the chosen card and hold it face up in the right hand. Move it towards the main pack and make a slow circular motion with it about two inches above the cards. Say, "Did you see what happened to your card?" Pause and then say, "Look!" Turn the card face down to reveal the Red back design.

Explain that magicians should never repeat their tricks but on this special occasion, you will break the golden rule and give them another chance to see how it's done.

As you are saying this, quietly place the chosen card away in your pocket. Pick up the main pack and place it face up in the right hand and repeat the procedure already explained for showing the yellow backs, ending with the face up Riffle-force of the Yellow backed card.

After the card has been tabled, place the rest of the pack face up next to it. Pick up the single card from the table and hold it face up in the right hand. Move it towards the main pack and repeat the circular motion above the cards. Turn the card over to reveal the Yellow back design and appear a little puzzled that it is still Yellow. Turn it face up and repeat the circular motion once more but to no avail! Finally flip the entire deck face up and make a long ribbon-spread across the table to reveal the Blue back designs, as you say . . . "Look, this time the whole pack has changed colour!"

Variation with a Rainbow backed pack.

If you own one of the special packs with 52 different back designs, available from Piatnik, you can perform a stronger version of the previous effect.

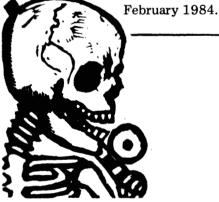

Open by removing the cards face up from the case and performing a face up Hindu-shuffle, flashing the back of the original top card as you did before. Continue this display until you have about a quarter of the cards left, then throw these cards onto the ones in the left hand, holding a break between the portions as they come together.

Cut at the break and table the deck face up. Spread the cards face up across the table and invite a spectator to slide a card out from the spread. Whilst he's doing this, note and remember the name of the top card of the pack.

Square up the rest of the pack and leave it face down to one side. Wave the selection over the cards and show that its back has changed colour, exactly as you did before.

Place the chosen card in your pocket and offer to repeat the trick... Pick up the pack, turn it face up and give it a single complete cut. Spread through and toss out the card you remembered, trying to make its selection seem as unimportant as possible.

Table the face up pack and repeat the circular motion over the cards with the card just removed. You apparently fail, finally flipping the deck face up and spreading to reveal all the different coloured backs!

Sorry about the title, I couldn't think of anything else.

This brief interlude was one of the first items I forwarded to past editor Walt Lees. It never saw the light of day for some reason or other. Quite recently I discovered it in a crumpled state at the bottom of the Pabular waste-basket.

My devotion to the furtherance of magical knowledge compelled me to salvage it so here it is

Requirements

One regular Five of Diamonds, one blank faced card and one Fifteen of Diamonds card. All three back designs should match that of the deck in use and you may like to note that the two fakes can be found within the Piatnik 'Trick deck'.

Set-up . . .

Top down . . . 15, blank, 5. (Cards are face down.)

Performance

From your regular deck force the Five of Diamonds, have it signed, returned and control it reversed to a position 15th from the top. (The reversal is optional!) Table the deck to one side and explain that you're a bit of a Klutz when it comes to predicting which card from the 52 will be selected so, just to be on the safe side, you've taken the liberty of making 3 predictions.

Introduce the three cards and comment that his card might be on the bottom, top or even the middle.

You now perform Marlo's 'Quick three way sequence', which shows that the top, bottom and middle cards are all the Five of Diamonds.

I'm not going to describe this well known sequence but here's a clue . . . It's the main move in the Emerson and West packet card effect, 'Colour Monte'.

Drive home the fact that all the cards are the Five of Diamonds by now performing the Hamman 'Flushtration Count' (Or 'All backs count' as it is sometimes referred to.) You are now set for the finale...

The spectator confirms that all three of your predictions are correct and bowled over by this coincidence . . . You offer to locate his actual selection in the deck.

Explain that playing cards can be used in much the same way as a pocket calculator, first we need to make the display BLANK.

Perform a double turnover and the apparent top card of the three is seen to be blank faced. Flip the double face down, remove the top card only and pocket it. Now flip the next card face up and it too is blank, flip it face down and pocket it. Comment that the cards are adding themselves together and as you flip over the final card the 15 of Diamonds card is seen. (Three fives being 15!!)

Comment that the cards seem to be telling us that 15 has something to do with your selection.

It only remains for the spectator to deal down 15 cards and find his actual signed card at that position!

The whole routine isn't a mind-blower but I can assure you that it plays extremely well to living flesh laymen!

INTRIGUE: 2 Bill Worsley and Archie Palmer.

Ed.... With the recent influx of Bicycle card fakes, available from M. Breese LTD., I think more cardicians will be willing to try the various packet-card effects that require the odd fake card.... or two.

Requirements

Two Blue backed cards, two Red backed cards and one double backer Red/Blue.

Set up

Place the two red backed cards between the blue backed ones, then place the doublebacker on top with the Blue side uppermost. (All cards are backs up.)

Performance

Elmsley count the packet to show four Blue backed cards. Repeat the count and one of the cards suddenly changes to a Red backed one. Repeat it once more and you have two Blue backers and two Red backers.

Double turnover the top card(s) and rub the back of the face up card onto the card below. After a second or two, remove the face up card and show that it too is now Red backed. Place this card face down to the bottom of the packet and buckle spread to show that you do indeed have three Red backed cards and a single Blue backed one.

Finally Elmsley count again and all four cards are Red backed.

You now appear to flip the cards face up but in fact, you flip all the cards below the top card face up and onto it. At the same time you perform the 'Through The Fist Flourish.' and the cards emerge face up.

Spread over the top three cards and hold the lower two cards squared as one. Take the upper two single cards in your right hand and the lower two? (Really three.) in the left hand. Insert the left hand cards between those in the right hand and square up the packet. Flip it face down, Elmsley count and all the cards have reverted to their original Blue backed state.

Ed....Obviously logical patter to accompany the moves will help things along. Quite recently I was shown Phil Goldstein's 'Cycle' effects and they are quite similar to Bill's idea. To be honest, the Goldstein variations are better structured and well worth a look. The gimmick is the same as used above and, to the best of my knowledge, is supplied in Aviator card stock. In fact all the cards necessary for the 'Cycle' routines are supplied with the M/S.

1, 2, 3 AND 4 QUEENS Roberto Giobbi

Introduction

The general idea of combining the Ace, Two, Three-plot with a final four-of-a-kind production was shown to me by friend Shiv Duggal of London. This is the result of my study on the effect he showed me.

Effect

The spectator selects a card from a shuffled deck and puts it back after having shown it to everybody. The magician produces the Ace, 2 and 3 of hearts giving the choice of any of these three cards to the spectator. This card then turns face down in the packet of three cards and eventually changes into the spectator's selected card (e.g. a Queen). As an additional kicker the other three Queens are produced in a quick and magical way in readiness to be used for the next routine.

Preparation

From top: $Q, 2, A, 3, Q, Q, \ldots, Q$.

Management and Handling

1) Take the deck in left hand dealing position. Slip cut the top Queen, which is going to be forced in a few instants, to one third down into the deck and slap the cut off top half (now minus the slip cut Queen) on top of the lower half injogged as shown in fig. 1. Place the deck in this condition to the right on the table as you make some introductory remarks to the effect. This has been done in preparation of my handling of the riffle force (s. "The Riffle Force - A Study In The Management And Handling of a Classic Sleight").

- 2) Pick up the deck and riffle force the slip cut Queen onto a spectator.
- 3) Have the card replaced controlling it to a position fourth from the top by means of the Bluff Pass. For details of handling of this sleight you might want to look up my thoughts on the subject in "The Bluff Pass Study on a Standard Sleight".
- 4) You are now going to produce the Ace, 2 and 3 of hearts. Table the deck and hold as for a riffle shuffle. Your right thumb riffles halfway up the deck; with the right hand cut the top portion to the right while the left forefinger retains the top card (slip cut). Replace the right hand portion on top of the lower half maintaining a break with the left thumb.
- 5) Now cut the deck at the separation, the left hand holding the top portion and the right hand the bottom. In this cutting action, which has to be swiftly executed, the right forefinger presses onto the top card of the left hand portion thus spinning it (the Ace) out on the table (s. M. Nash in Ever so Sleightly "Spinning the Aces"). The situation as it presents itself to the spectators is depicted in fig. 2.
- 6) The right and left hand respectively each take, the top card of their portion and use them to lever the ace face up onto the table, the face down ace revolving on its front short end face up as the two cards lever it up from the back short end. As you say: "The Ace... two and three of hearts!" snap first the right hand card and then the card in the left hand face up in coordination with your patter. The display is now as in fig. 3.
- 7) Assemble the two face down halves putting the left half on top of the right half.

Situation from top of deck: Q (selection), Q, Q, deck, Q.

Take the deck in left hand dealing position as the right hand picks up the three face up cards and ask the spectator to name one. As you are doing this your left pinky obtains a break under the top two cards. Still holding these three cards face up bring the chosen one to the face by moving around the cards in what seems to be a haphazard order.

8) Square the three cards on top of the deck picking up the two separated cards secretly underneath. As the right hand holds this five card packet in biddle position the left second finger pulls down the bottom card of this packet and allows the fourth finger of the right hand to catch an Erdnase break above it.

- 9) You are now about to get rid of the top face up card (say the spectator chose the two of hearts) by means of ATFUS. Execute ATFUS which leaves the two face up under a Queen on top of the deck while your right hand holds a three card packet: face up Ace, face down Queen, face up three.
- 10) Table the deck to the left. Pause. Reveal the card of their choice to have turned face up. Turn the face down card face up to reveal that it has changed into their selection. The display of the cards on the table is as in fig. 4 Climax. Apparently this marks the end of the effect.

- 11) Your left hand picks up the deck in left hand dealing position. The right hand takes over the deck from above in Biddle Position in order to allow your left hand to pick up the face up three of hearts on the left. Apparently put the three face up on the bottom of the deck, but in reality it goes second from the bottom as you separate the bottom card from the deck by means of the Kelly Bottom Placement technique. Leave the face up three side-jogged to the left as your right hand places the deck on the open left palm in order to go to the table and pick up the face up Ace which it places on top of the deck. Let this visual image sink in (fig. 5, hand removed).
- 12) Square the deck and give it a slow Charlier or Spin Cut. Pause.
- 13) Ribbon spread the deck on the table revealing the ace, 2, 3 face up with two cards trapped between them. With the right forefinger push all the cards above the 3 to the right while the left fingers push all the cards under the first card to the left of the face up two to the left. Display as in fig. 6. Pause.
- 14) Turn the three trapped face down cards face up revealing the 3 Queens. Display as in fig.

Comment on the construction

For the spectators the climax occurs after step 10. It could therefore be argued that the actions up to and including step 14 are of an anticlimatic nature. This, however, is not so if step 11 to 14 are handled as lead-in to a following routine utilising the four Queens.

General Comment

This effect is an exercise in display of the cards and of pauses. Study carefully the impact of the visual images on the spectator's mind. Compare your results with Henning Nelms'

STRAIGHT AND ROUND John Aukes

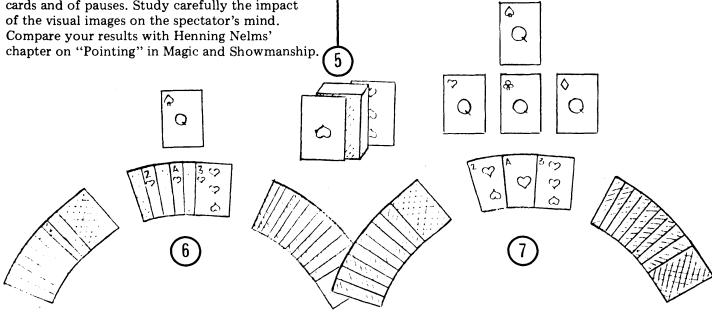

Remember in last months issue I described Pascal Monmoine's method of making a face up one way deck. Space prevented me from going into great detail but I strongly urge you to read it again and try it out . . . It's ingenious!

The following method from John Aukes of Holland is equally clever!

Effect

A regular deck is cut in half, one half flipped face up and then riffle shuffled into the face down half. This results in a mess of face up/face down cards. You hand the deck to a member of the audience and request that he remove any of the face down cards, turn it face up and replace it back into the deck.

The magician now takes back the deck and is quickly able to locate the selection. You can even have two or three cards selected in the above manner and so long as they are returned face up, you can find them!!

Solution

As previously stated, the one-way principle applied to the faces of the cards is used here. In fact upon closer scrutiny of John's M/S, I notice that it isn't really a one way principle!

John is using the fact that some of the values of the cards are made up of straight lines A, K, J, 10, 7 and 4's (For some reason John includes the 10's in this section.) The other cards contain round numbers 2, 9, 8, 6, 5, 3 and 2's.

There are 28 round value cards and 24 straight value cards.

You can quickly separate out the various values, then cut at the division and perform the face up face down shuffle.

When a face down card is selected and returned face up, it is a simple matter to spot the odd value amongst the others.

As John points out . . . It is just as easy to spot two or even three such cards in the spread.

Here's another idea of John's and anyone whos seen him perform this at one of the conventions will confirm that, in his hands, it looks like pure magic!

Double-Lift With One Card

This is really more of a top-change than double lift. Hold the deck in the left hand with the cards slightly fanned as shown in Fig:1.

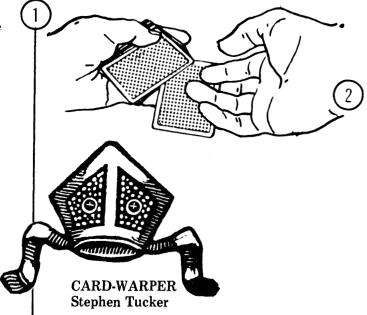

Remove the top card of the deck with your right hand and hold it as depicted in Fig:2. With the left thumb raise the upper right corner of the top card on the deck so that it is slightly away from the rest of the cards. This is not easy to do but a little practise will pay off.

Show the face of the card in your right hand and appear to simply place it back on the deck but in such a way that it rides beneath the top card at the upper right corner. Square the replaced card and immediately move the new top card forward and all will assume that this is the card just placed on the deck.

You can now insert the top card into the centre of the deck and cause it to rise back to the top in the usual 'Ambitious' manner.

This move is not easy to get the hang of but if you could see John perform it, you'd put in an unlimited amount of practise to perfect it!!

The whole move is performed with grace and smoothness and the illusion is perfect that the card was simply replaced atop the deck.

This is an extension of Roy Walton's Card-Warp effect, which in turn was based on Jeff Busby's 'Into The 4th Dimension.' routine.

The Card-Warp instruction is still available from Davenports here in London. This prevents me from explaining a full handling on my variation but I think that I can safely assume that any card-worker worth his salt will be familiar with the original.

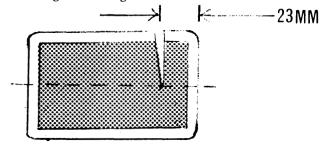

I wrote to Roy detailing my idea, he liked it and kindly gave me permission to publish it within these hallowed pages, so here goes

I'll assume that you are using Poker size cards... Fold one in half lengthways and the other in half widthways, as in the original.

In the one that is folded lengthways cut a slit exactly 23mm up from the lower right hand corner, with the card face down as depicted in Fig:1.

This is the main feature which is different from the original, which had a slit in the same card but at the centre.

Fold this card so that the back design is concealed and fold the other card in the same manner. Place the ungimmicked card within the gimmicked one, making the secret move, then unfold the cards so that they are both back designs showing.

Now push the gimmick through the tunnel formed by the ungimmicked card and it will exit face up, in exactly the same manner as the original.

A point to notice here is . . . Don't push the gimmick all the way into the tunnel, stop when the actual back design of the card is within. The white border of the gimmick should still protrude.

You can push the face up section back through the tunnel for its entire length and it turns face down again. This face up/face down sequence can be repeated till the cows come home but once or twice is enough!

Remember that everytime you push the face down section through the tunnel you must allow the white border to protrude!

Now for the finale... Turn the package into the position shown in Fig:2 and pull the gimmick card out of the other card for almost all its length. Stop when about 23mm of the gimmick is still within the tunnel.

The majority of the gimmick is seen to be face down and this is the point in the routine that is different from the original. The spectator has seen the card pushed through the tunnel and seen it flip face up and face down.

He now sees you almost completely withdraw the card from the tunnel and he clearly sees that it really is face down.

Hold the package as shown in Fig:3 and completely remove the gimmick card.

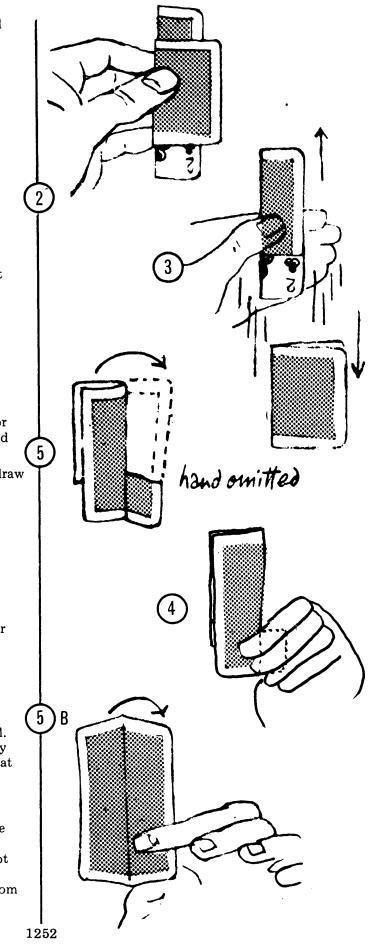

What will happen is the small flap at the front of the card will spring open and be concealed by the left fingers. The spectator's view is shown in Fig:4.

It is now a simple task to unfold the upper 3/4 of the card with the left hand only and display the face up card as shown in Fig. 5.

Notes

As far as performance is concerned this variation is no better or worse than the original. If fact I've shown it to a few card men and they respond . . . "What's the difference between that and the original?"

I merely wanted to bring the concept to your attention and allow you to be the judge. Those familiar with the original version and the subsequent handlings that have appeared throughout the various magazines will no doubt discover that the displacement of the slit allows you to perform many of the displays from the original and the variations in a much more convincing manner.

If this piece of literary trivia turns out to have more errors than you can count, please forgive me. You see, I have just finished a T.V. marathon. No, you're wrong. I mean I have just come to the end of a session of watching T.V., two weeks to be exact, and I am weary. I am talking about the Olympic Games from Los Angeles. Because of the time changes from one country to another, we in the U.K. that is, have to sit up until all the hours of the morning if we wanted to see it happen as it happened, and it so happens I did happen to watch it happening.

The result is I haven't had a good night's sleep for a couple of weeks, and like I said etc. etc.

I remember a few years ago a Swis magician by the name of Fuggi Fuchs (Hi, Fuggi) who at that time was and probably still is, a member of the International Olympics Committee, or whatever they call the governing body, had the idea of a Magic Olympics. No doubt F.I.S.M. would be mad, but it is still a cute idea. No shows, just competitions. No lectures. Just competitions. No dealers, just competitions.

I wonder what form the competition would take. Dr Elliot used to advertise himself as the World Champion Card Manipulator. He claimed he could do the pass more often than anyone else in one minute flat. He didn't ever say they were invisible passes. Supposing they did have such a competition and one guy got up and did a hundred and twenty invisible passes in one minute. If no one could see them how could they count them? Imagine a competition for the best invisible pass. Would the the competitors cheat? Like some guy using a one way forcing deck to show that the card really does come to the top? And then another guy gets up and does it three times in a row using a three way deck so that he uses a different card each time.

How about giving participants a six foot length of rope and have them cut and restore as often as possible until it is obvious that the rope is getting shorter - or c. and r. a rope until there is no rope left?

How about a competition to see who can throw Ricky Jay the furthest?

Or a prize for the first person to steal Mark Raffle's wallet?

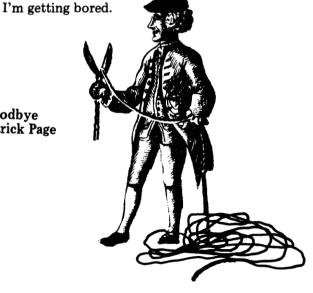

Maybe you could give them hurdles to overcome. A thimble routine wearing boxing gloves?

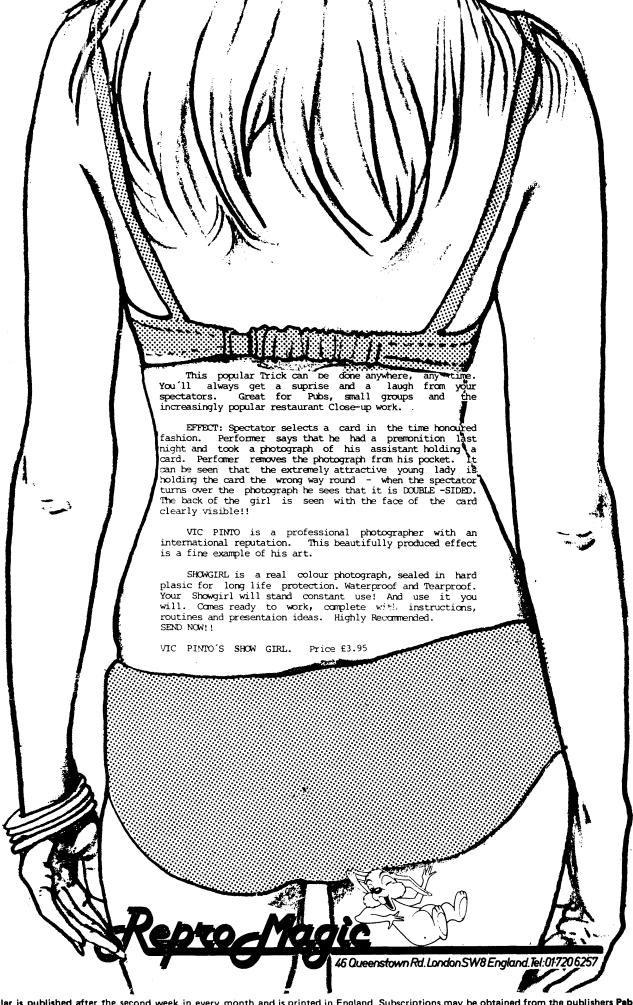

Let's forget the whole idea. It wouldn't work. None of the competitors would pass the dope test.

Mention of Ricky Jay reminds me that he was over here recently to attend an auction at Sothebys among other things. I thing it was theatrical posters and prints and apparently most of the really good items went abroad. A pity. I know that we do have a theatrical museum in this country, but they seem to be more concerned with the legitimate side of the business than the variety or circus angle. Meanwhile the real historical gems are being sneaked out of the country quite openly. (I did say I might make a mistake or too).

I have been attending the Magic Circle most Monday nights recently, which will give you an idea of how busy I've been. Nothing seems to have changed except the faces. I am amazed how many people there are whose names I don't know. They probably don't know me either, but an awful lot of the old faces seem to be missing. I hope they are still with us.

Well, this month's issue was very nearly taken over by the Scottish contingent. Luckily one or two sassenacks turned up at the last moment and saved the day.

My thanks go to Roy Walton, Andrew Galloway, Steven Hamilton, Douglas Cameron, Shiv Duggal, M. B. Grierson and Alf Goodwin.

Quite recently I had a chance to take a peek at the new Paul Harris book 'Close-up Seductions'

This is a 153 page hard bound publication, containing some 18 fabulous routines. Unlike the previous flop, 'Close-up Kinda guy', the Seductions book is a winner!!

In my opinion, there is something for everyone here. Harris has returned to the style that sent him to the top with his earlier books, 'Las Vegas Close-up' and 'Close-up Entertainer.' There is a humerous build up to the modus opperandi and even the patter that Harris uses is supplied with the effects. In many cases, the patter alone is worth the price of the book!

My favourite effect is the 'Seductive Switch'. This, for me, was the gem of the book. A self working switch of a card that will leave your audience breathless.

There are one or two items that I can't even see me performing but these are far outweighed by the barrage of new principles and plots.

The cost of the book, here in England, is around £17.00 and, I would imagine, is available from all leading dealers.

This year I received a letter asking me if I would perform Close-up at the I.B.M. international close-up performance. It sounds good but it is the one that takes place around midnight. Remember the one?

I wouldn't be surprised if you fell asleep half way through!

TRIPLE ALLIANCE Roy Walton

Roy had forwarded a few effects prior to this one but for obvious reasons I have given this preference over the others. I'll let Roy explain things in his own inimitable style. . . .

This effect is based on 'Spelled Prophesy:2' by Charles Hudson.

Charles Hudson's 'Card Corner' continued to appear in the Linking-Ring for many, many years and was consistantly of a high standard. The following trick is a variation of one of his that appeared in the March 1984 issue and having learnt that Charles has recently died, I would like to dedicate this trick to the memory of the man whose writings have given me so much pleasure over a long period of time.

Before performing the trick, a fifteen card stack is required at the top of the deck. Only values are important, though the suits should be well mixed. Reading from the top of the face down deck the values should read 4,9,8,7,6,10,4, 8,7,6,5,10,2,9,3.

Talk about the strange link between numbers and words and as you do so, give the deck any false shuffle which keeps the stack intact. Deal 12 cards from the top to form a face down heap on the table and then deal a further 3 cards alongside them to form a second heap. Pick up the 12 card heap and give it a couple of reverse faros. Now run through them and flip a few cards face up. The cards can be any at all but they must be flipped over singly so that they don't change position in the packet. As you do this say. . . "Let's really mess these up." Finish with a reverse faro, if you wish. There is no restrictions to the number of reverse faros or normal faros but the packet must never be cut.

Count off six cards from the packet into your right hand, reversing their order, then turn this packet completely over and place it on the table. Place the remaining six card packet alongside the first, without turning it over. Say "Let's explore the strange relationship between words and numbers." Turn the top card of the three card group face up and it will be a three spot. Explain how you will spell the word T-H-R-E-E by taking cards singly from the two six card groups in any order, switching from one to the other at will, one card for each letter of the word T-H-R-E-E. Demonstrate this action by removing cards from the two six card packets and placing the cards into other packets directly in front of the original six card packets as they are removed. Now take the top cards from the original six card packets and point out that in the case of the T-H-R-E-E, these two cards would have been arrived at.

If you take a look at Fig:1 you will see the present situation. The resultant four packets have been numbered A,A1 and B,B1. Drop the card in the right hand on top of packet B1 and drop the other card atop packet A. Reassemble each six card group by picking up packet B1 with the right hand, fingers above and thumb below, turn the cards completely over and use them to scoop up the packet at B. This procedure is repeated exactly with packets A1 and A. Remember that packets A1 and B1 are turned over prior to scooping up their other packets. This rule is followed throughout the remainder of the trick!!!!

Request that the spectator spell out
T-H-R-E-E as you did but point out that he can switch from packet to packet as he pleases. When he has completed his spelling, take the top cards of the remainders (A+B) and place them as a pair, face down to the table. You may, of course, have to adjust them to a face down condition, depending on their orientation. Assemble the groups again by turning the spelt cards over and placing them below their respective packets, as previously explained.

Turn the face up three spot face down and place it to the bottom of its packet. Turn the new top card face up, which will be a nine spot. Repeat the spelling procedure with the nine and you should end up with two face down cards which are placed to one side and next to the first tabled pair. Assemble the six card packets as before and finally flip over the last card to reveal a two spot. Repeat the entire procedure with the two and the final situation will be three tabled pairs, which were formed by taking the final cards of the spells and placing them face down to one side. Leave the three cards used for the various spelling phases, the 3,9 and 2, on the table. Leave also the three pairs of cards just mentioned but all other cards should be replaced in a squared pile to one side. Flip the three cards face up and point out that, when added, they total 14. I.e. . . 3+9+2 equals 14. Turn over the three face down pairs to reveal that they too all have a total of 14!!

April 1984

Ed. . . The routine reads quite complex but I can assure you that it's really simple and the procedures are easy for the spectator to follow. Due to the various shuffles and mixes administered to the cards, there seems no way that the outcome could be predicted. Add to this the fact that the spectator has a free choice of which packets to deal from and the finale is quite staggering. You could of course guild the lilly by showing that you have another prediction outside the deck that proves you knew that the total would be 14. Ideal for 14th birthday parties!

VERNON'S INDICATOR Andrew Galloway

I am sure that there are no readers who haven't heard of Andrew Galloway. The following routine was originally destined for his excellent book, 'Diverting Card Magic.' For various reasons it did not appear in the book but is produced here by kind permission of the author. . . . I will pass my typewriter over to Andrew so that he can explain things in his own words.

"It rates a place in any card man's repertoire The feat is one of the best impromptu self-workers over devised." So wrote Jean Hugard in the July 1946 issue of his fine magazine 'Hugard's Magic Monthly.' about Dai Vernon's 'Infallible Indicator'. In the original effect, the performer would remove a four spot from a borrowed deck announcing that it is the infallible indicator and replacing it face up in the deck. A card was then freely selected and replaced at any position desired. A calculation was now made using the reversed four spot and another card taken by the helper to reveal the position of the chosen card in the deck. I would hesitate to claim that my version is more effective or simpler in method but the spectator actually chooses the indicator and it alone locates the selection, also the calculations involved are, if anything, even easier than in the original.

Effect

A member of the audience shuffles a deck of cards, then touches one which the conjuror turns face up, declaring it to be the infallible indicator. To prove it, he has the spectator choose a card, remember it and return it to the deck at random. The reversed indicator is now used to reveal the position of the selection.

Routine

- 1) "Would you have to touch a card as I run through them?... Thank you, let's have a look at it.... The Five of Diamonds! Congratulations sir, you have touched the infallible indicator. You don't know what that is, do you? Never mind, I'll show you in a few moments." Take the shuffled deck from the spectator, then start spreading them (face down) from the left hand into the right and when he touches a card, flip it face up without changing its position in the deck.
- "Now touch another card and this time take 2) it out of the deck yourself, look at it, show the card around if you like but don't let me see it." Continue spreading the cards by pushing the face up indicator card under the card to its right so that it is hidden, then run three more cards and press the tip of the right forefinger (under the spread) onto the face of the third card and fan the rest of the cards to the left fairly widely and have a card selected. When the card has been taken, separate the cards at the point where the right forefinger is pressing against the cards, the upper portion of the deck being held in the right hand and the remainder in the left hand. Make a gesture towards the audience with the right hand as you ask the spectator to let everyone see the card, then put the cards in this hand under those in the left and square up. The face up indicator is now the fourth card from the bottom of the deck.
- 3) "Will you replace your card anywhere you like." Hold the cards in your right hand and perform a Hindu-shuffle as you would when using the Hindu-shuffle force. Have the spectator replace his card onto the cards in the left hand at some point during the shuffle and once his card is replaced, place the remainder of the cards in the right hand on top of it. Square up the pack openly and fairly.
- 4) "Do you agree sir that I couldn't possibly know the name of your card or where it is in the deck? . . . You are right, I don't but the infallible indicator does — and I'll prove it." Spread the cards until you come to the reversed indicator, then cut the deck at this point, bringing the reversed card to the top. To locate the chosen card procees as follows If the value of the indicator spells with four letters ie . . . a Four, Five, Nine, Jack or King, place the indicator aside and spell its value by dealing a card from the top of the deck for each letter and stopping on the final letter of the value. You now ask for the name of the chosen card and slowly turn the last card face up to reveal it! The indicator was indeed infallible. If the indicator spells with three letters . . . Ace, Two, Six or Ten, put the indicator aside, spell the value and flip the next card face up to reveal the chosen card. If the indicator card spells with five letters Three, Seven, Eight or Queen, leave it on top of the deck and include it in your spelling. As you can see, no matter what card they choose as the indicator, it will always locate the selection. (I first saw this clever principle described in Harry Lorayne's 'My Favourite Card Tricks' where he also suggested that in the case of the Three, Four or Five, you can count rather than spell the value but I prefer to keep the method consistant and spell everything.

Comments on misdirection . . . There is really only one move, if you can call it that, in the effect, which occurs in step:2 when the cards held in the right hand are placed under those in the left. At this moment you are looking around the audience as you instruct the spectator to show his selection to them. The move will go unnoticed because the attention of the audience is divided between your face and the spectator, as he selects the card.

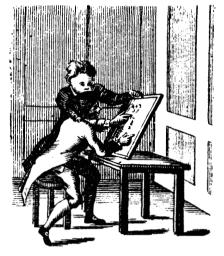

Ed... This is a very simple routine and the actual mental workings shoulds be common sense and should not trouble you at all.

For some time I have performed the following slight variation Have a card touched, flip it face up and note its value. Now push over more cards as follows If the face up card is a six spot, push over five more cards and press your forefinger against the face of the fifth card. Have a card selected from below this position and separate the cards at the point marked off by your forefinger, then place the right hand's cards under those in the left hand. Finish with the Hindu-shuffle replacement of the selection and you can now simply count down from the face up indicator card and the final card of the count will be the selection.

The actual mechanics of the above variation are exact duplications of the Galloway version. The only difference is that you will always count down to the selection.

I have never liked the act of spelling a value. A value is a number and as such should be counted.

SUM TRICK Roy Walton

This is a second offering from Roy Walton. Any objections?... I didn't think so! Over to Roy....

The following idea occured to me after reading 'One more chance' in a recent issue of Pabular. No stack on preparation is required and the deck does not need to be complete. This latter qualification is useful if you are borrowing a deck.

Performance

With the deck face up in the left hand, state that you are going to remove a card that will help you should anything go wrong. A sort of insurance card. Start to spread the cards from the face, counting to yourself until you reach the 8th card. Remember the value of this card and continue spreading and look for any other card that when added to the sighted card at the 8th position from the face, will give you a total of 11.

Court cards have a value of 10. Example . . . The card at the 8th position from the face could be a five spot, in which case you would continue spreading and look for any six spot. Once you have spotted the required value card, up-jog and remove it. Place it face down to one side and explain that you may not need it but it's just in case.

Turn the deck face down and start to spread it from hand to hand for a selection to be made. As you spread, push over five pairs of cards and mark off the position of the 10th card by pressing your fingers against the underside of this card. Continue to spread and request that a card be removed.

Once the card has been selected, square up the deck but maintain a little finger break beneath the 10th card from the top.

Have the card returned by simply lifting off the cards above the break and having the spectator replace his card atop the lower section. Keep your fingertips over the edge of the 10 card packet in order to disguise its thickness. Once the selection has been replaced, replace the upper section on top of it and square the deck.

You have effectively controlled the selection to a position 11th from the top of the deck. Now for the revelation Flip the deck face up and ask the spectator for any number between 8 and 16. Assuming that he names 13 . . . deal thirteen cards from the face of the deck and onto your right hand, reversing their order as you do so.

Table the rest of the deck face down for a moment and place the dealt cards into your left hand for the following elimination procedure, which was devised by Karl Fulves. Run through, they should be face down by the way, and without altering their order, up-jog every alternate card starting with the second card down.

Strip out the up-jogged cards and table the rest face down next to the deck. Repeat this procedure two more times, each time placing the discarded cards atop the ones previously tabled and next to the deck proper. You should be left with a single face down card in your left hand. After the final discard, quietly pick up the deck and drop it onto the discarded cards.

Ask for the name of the chosen cards and then turn the card you are holding face up to reveal total failure.

Mention your insurance card and flip it face up with the one you are holding, leaving both cards face up on the table.

Have the spectator add the values of the two face up cards, pointing out that court cards count as 10.

He will arrive at a total of 11, if he doesn't, hand him a pocket calculator and tell him to try again.

Pick up the deck and slowly and deliberately count down to the 11th card. (We don't want them thinking that you're using your middle, second or bottom deal, do we?)

Turn the 11th card face up to reveal anat your insurance was well worthwhile.

Don't make me laugh"

GOING, GOING GONE! Steven Hamilton

Ed... This is one of the effects that Steve showed me a few months back. I can only say that the routine looks freat and I strongly urge you to hunt out the required cards and follow me....

Preparation

Take a miniature King of Hearts and glue an even smaller Nine of Clubs cards to its back design. In addition to this, now faked, miniature card you will require a duplicate Ace of Clubs to match the deck in use.

Set up

Arrange the two Ace of Clubs, the Ace of Spades and the miniature card in the following order; (From the face.) Ace of Spades, Ace of Clubs, Miniature card, Ace of Clubs. (NOTE... The underlined cards are face up cards.)

Place this small packet face up on the table. The spectators should assume that these cards are the black Aces. (Set-up is shown in fig:1).

Set the following cards at the top of the deck... King of Hearts, any indifferent card, Nine of Clubs, the rest of the deck. All cards are face down.

Performance

Cut the deck and take a break as the halves come together. Riffle force the King of Hearts on the spectator. Reassemble the deck with the Nine of Clubs second from the top.

Place the deck aside for the moment and pick up the assumed Ace packet. With your left fingers, slide out the lowermost Ace of Clubs so that it is side jogged for about half its width to the left. This allows the right hand to get a hold on the miniature card and hold it in place.

Take the side jogged card into your left hand and use it to scoop up the spectator's King of Hearts face up on top of it.

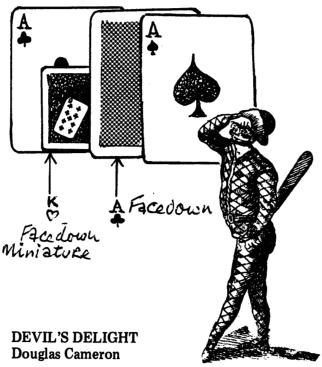

Explain that, if the spectator concentrates on his card it will vanish!

Using the right hand's cards, perform a paintbrush change on the regular King of Hearts atop the Ace in the left hand.

(NOTE The paintbrush change is detailed on page:155 of 'The Complete Walton.') The result of the change is . . . the regular sized King of Hearts appears to have shrunk to half its original size! Deal the small King from the left hand and to the table face up. At this point you can, if you wish, flash the backs of both Aces in either hand. Place the Ace of Spades below the Ace of Clubs in the left hand, then take the packet into the right hand as the left hand picks up the deck and takes a break below the top card. Flip the right hand Aces face down onto the deck and deal the top two cards face down to the table. Double cut all the cards above the little finger break to the bottom of the deck and you should find that the top card is the Nine of Clubs. Force this card by tabling the deck and asking the spectator to cut the cards into two piles. You now assemble the cuts by placing the original bottom portion cross-ways onto the original top portion. No doubt you are well ahead of me as you are simply about to perform the ancient 'Crossing the cut force.' Perform the force, then cut the force card to the top of the deck. This card is of course the Nine of Clubs. Pick up the two face down cards from the table and show that they are the black Aces. Explain that the spectator did not concentrate hard enough with the King of Hearts so you will allow him to try again with the new selection. Square up the Aces face up and half pass the lower one. Take a break between the cards with your right thumb at the rear. The two cards are held in Biddle grip in the right hand in readiness for a drop switch Flip the Nine of Clubs face up atop the deck and when you flip it face down again, allow the lowermost face down Ace to fall on top of it. Deal the top card face down to the table and place the deck aside. The spectators assume that the tabled card is the Nine of Clubs but in reality, it is the other black Ace. Pretend to insert the tabled card between the assumed Aces in your right hand but in fact you simply insert the card below the single card. Now finish with Alex Elmsly's Squeeze action and drop the two black Aces face up to the table. The Nine of Clubs has completely vanished. By way of explanation tell them that the Nine of Clubs simply shrunk so small that it couldn't be seen and hid beneath the King of Hearts. Flip the miniature King of Hearts face down and the even smaller Nine of Clubs is seen stuck to its back.

Notes

Steve points out that the routine is mer a commercial handling of Alex Elmsley's 'Point of Departure.' The initial shrinkage of the King of Hearts is quite startling and has to be seen to be appreciated!

Douglas informs me that the basic idea for this routine was inspired by another in the Gene Maze Card Book. Pop Jump Aces was the original Maze effect, you may like to look it up and compare the two.

Effect

Four face down Aces are interlaced between eight face up indifferent cards. This results in four sandwich's, which are placed one at each corner of the table. One at a time the Aces vanish and only the eight indifferent cards remain. The deck is spread and the Aces are found reversed at its centre.

Performance

Take a little finger break above the lowermost three cards of the face up deck, then spread through and up-jog the Aces. Now perform the Vernon strip-out addition move by stripping out the Aces and at the same time, secretly adding the three face up cards below the break behind them.

Flip the deck face down and flip the Aces face down on top. Immediately spread the top four cards and remove them to the table, without reversing their order.

Situation is

An Ace on the table with three indifferent cards atop it and the other three Aces are atop the deck.

Reverse the top three Aces on the deck by using the Braue reversal move . . . Take a break below the top three Aces and undercut about half the deck and set the cards face up on top. Now undercut the rest of the cards below the break and place these face up on top as well. This results in a face up deck atop three face down Aces.

Cut off about half of the face up cards and place them, still face up, at the centre of the table. Place the rest of the deck, with the face down Aces beneath it, to your left for the moment.

This is, of course, after you have dealt off eight face up cards from this pile and to the table before you.

Pick up the eight cards and fan them in a face up fan as you explain, that you will place a face down Ace between each of the four pairs of cards.

Pick up the top card from the assumed Ace packet and insert it between the 7th and 8th cards. Place the next card between the 5th and 6th cards, the next between the 3rd and 4th cards and finally the real Ace, which you may flash, between the 1st and 2nd cards. The assumed Aces are face down between the four pairs of face up indifferent cards. Drop the cards atop the face up pile to your left, with the real Aces face down at the bottom, and pick it up in Biddle position in your right hand. You are about to count the four sandwiches off this half deck and into your left hand but the following actions take place during this The first face up card is slid from the right hand pile and ontothe left palm, then the next card, which is a face down Ace but a break is maintained between these two cards and when the third card is taken atop the other two, the face down card is Biddled back and is effectively stolen below the right hand packet. The first sandwich has been transferred into the left hand but the centre card has been stolen back.

You continue

Peel off the fourth card normally onto the cards in the left hand but when you peel off the fifth card, all the cards in the left hand are stolen under the right hand packet and only the fifth card is within the left hand. The rest of the 7 cards are peeled off the right hand packet and onto the left hand as normal and the final situation should be You have only eight cards in your left hand and they are in the order; Face up, down, up, up, down, up, up, down. In your right hand you have a face up half deck, which you now place onto the other face up half deck at the centre of the table. This has the effect as assembling the deck with the four Aces face down in the centre.

You are now about to apparently place the four sandwich's at the corners of the table. Take the eight card packet in your right hand again in Biddle grip. Peel off the top face up card into your left hand but when you peel off the next face down card, Biddle the first card back beneath the right hand's packet. Continue by peeling off the next face up card onto the face down card in your left hand and everyone will assume that you have removed one of the sandwich's. Table it at one corner. Repeat this twice more tabling two other assumed sandwich's at the other corners and finally place the remainder of the cards at the last corner, without showing them. These final cards are in fact two face up cards. It only remains for you to now vanish the assumed Aces from between indifferent cards. Do this using the Elmsley spread vanish with each pair except for the final cards, which you can simply spread. End by spreading the face up deck to reveal four face down cards at the centre, these turn out to be the elusive Aces.

Ed.... In my humble opinion, there are several weak points in this routine. First, I don't like the repeated showing of the sandwich's. They are made, placed atop one of the half decks, then counted off and finally shown again before being placed at the four corners. I also don't like the need for three Elmsley spread vanish's at the end of the routine especially when the same handling is not used for the final sandwich. Add to this the need to switch three of the Aces at the beginning and well, you see my point. I prefer to use the following handling Actually remove the four Aces and interlace them between eight indifferent cards. The deck is face down in the centre of the table and the indifferent cards are face up, with the Aces face down in a squared packet in your right hand ready for the Biddle steal-backs Peel off the first card, then the second but when the third is peeled onto the cards in your left hand, Biddle back the face down card from between them. Place these two cards, squared at one of the corners. Repeat this twice more and place two other assumed sandwich's at the other corners. This will leave you with six cards held as three in the order . . . face up indifferent card, face down Ace, face up indifferent card, three face down Aces. Reverse the order of this final sandwich by simply peeling off the first and second cards and placing the final four cards, as one, atop them. This leaves the cards in the new order of . . . Two face up indifferent cards with the four face down Aces between them. Immediately place this packet squared atop the deck and ask that the spectator cut and complete the cut, effectively sending this final sandwich into the centre of the deck. This done . . . A simple gesture over the three assumed sandwich's on the table and you can spread them to reveal that the Aces have vanished from between them. It only remains for you to spread the deck to reveal that there are now four face down cards between the two face up cards in the deck and these prove to be the Aces.

Notes

Yes I know that the effect isn't exactly the same but most of the weak points have been eliminated You don't need to switch the Aces out, no need for the Braue reversal, No excess showing of the sandwiches etc. Try both routines and use whichever suits you best!!

Shiv has only ever had one other effect published in Pabular and that was some years ago. Well, to cut a long story short, he came up for parole a few weeks back and the governors here at the Pabular high security wing decided that Shiv was once again able to resume his position in Society. All the best shiv!

No set up is required and the deck need not be complete. Have two cards selected, returned and control them to the top of the deck. The second selection should be uppermost. Flip the deck face up and half pass the lowermost card, second selection. Hold the deck in Biddle grip in your right hand and take a thumb break above the reversed card in readiness for a drop-switch. Swing cut about half of the face up cards into your left hand, then peel off single cards from the right hand packet onto the left hand cards. Ask the spectator to call stop at any time. Once he calls stop, point out the card now atop the right hand section and ask the spectator to remember it. Start to peel it onto the left hand section but use the right hand cards to flip the card face down on the left hand section. At the same time, release the card from below the thumb break so that it falls onto the now face down selection on the left hand cards. When the right hand moves away with its cards, a face down card is still seen atop the left hand section and everything looks as it should. Up-jog the assumed third selection by placing the right hand cards onto the left hand ones but down-jogged for about half their length. Push the two halves square but allow the right forefinger tip to press against the back of the face down card atop the left hand section and the result will be that the deck will be squared with the exception of a single face down card up-jogged at the centre. Remove this face down card and table the deck face down for the moment. Name the assumed card and explain that you will use it to locate the other two selections. Flick the back of the card, then ask for the name of the second selection . . . slowly flip the card face up to reveal the change. Spread the deck and the missing card is seen to be reversed in the centre. Their are two possible avenues that you may like to travel here...1) You can simply explain that the card has travelled to the deck and is resting atop one card. Remove the face down card beneath the face up one and ask for the name of the first selection. Flip it face up to reveal it. 2) This is a better effect ... Pick up the deck and spread through to reveal the face up third selection in the deck. Remove it but also remove the card beneath it at the same time. This is merely a double lift. Immediately place the face up card atop the other face up card on the table and the result is a sandwich. Unknown to the audience the first selection is now trapped face down between the other selections. Pick up the trio and hold them at the very edge of the inner narrow end, thumb on top and fingers below in your right hand. Riffle through the tabled face down deck with your left hand and at the same time pass the cards in your right hand through the riffle and spread them to reveal the sudden appearance of a face down card between them. It only remains for you to remove the face down card, flip it face up and the final selection is revealed.

Ed.... I would advise you to only have two cards actually selected and simply perform the drop switch as you point out a prominent card in the deck, such as a court card or the Ace of Spades. I would also advise you to reverse the order of the two selections atop the deck so that the selections can be revealed in the order that they were selected.

Eric Mason's Beta Wallet

The Signed and Thought of Card in Wallet with a Borrowed Pack.

Wouldn't it be wonderful to know what was going to happen in the future? Is it possible to consider such an event? Would you like me to try? Please take these cards into your own hands - spread the cards to yourself and commit one to memory - tust into your own hands - spread the cards to yourself and commit one to memory - just think of it .. would you close them up and pass them to this lady - Madam, you also choose a card and remove it completely from the pack - you keep it and I'll take the cards. cards. Now please write your name on the card. Show it to everyone and then return it to the pack. O.K? My first question to both of you - do either of you want to change your minds? My second question. Is there any way that I could know before I gay you the cards what card, you Sir, would the form you want you have wad my would take out? think of and you Madam would take out? ... Good. I'll put the cards down. Look - my hands are empty and in my pocket I have a wallet. I'll put the cards down. Inside this wallet is a card that exactly matches the card that you are thinking of Sir. Will was your card? The Five of Hearts? Please confirm this is true. Yes? Wonderful. young lady, I have another pocket on this side of the wallet. I will undo the zip. Can you see it? And inside this pocket there is another wallet. And inside this wallet there is another pocket - and inside this pocket there is a card that exactly represents your card too. Look it is the Joker.

You appear disappointed. Did you not know that the Joker can assume the identity of any card in the pack ... ?. ? But wait there is another card here - that not only looks like your card - it is your card. This routine is unashamedly Eugene Burge 's based on his wonderful procedure for presenting this effect. Everyone who performs close up should read his book The Secrets and Mysteries for the close up entertainer. Practically every word he uses emphasises the strength of the effects he performs and makes them unique. The method is not - it is based on my wallet which it will be possible to acquire in the near future. This wallet will also enable you to perform all the standard versions of the Card in Wallet currently in use (I think) - Take your pick.

Take your pick. In this effect the cards are on the table or in a person's hands before the empty hand reaches for the wallet. Like others it is reset automatically when replaced into the pocket. Unlike others it can be a back/hip pocket one too. It has a zipped compartment which houses a second wallet - also with a zipped compartment. It will also enable you to perform any card-in-envelope-in-wallet effect (see N.C.R.) and any fast palmed card to wallet effect you fancy for those times which occur at the odd impromptu moment in close up company, It will also load a card straight into the inner wallet - and also you can dispense with the larger wallet and use the smaller one only without the use of sleight of hand. It will duplicate the uses of the Himber wallet. But more importantly it serves to expand the methods of performing this classic effect with a very natural prop. The wallet has been designed to handle poker or bridge sized cards. Price ±75.00/$100,00 postage extra.

LITERALLY SPELLING THE ACES
Stephen Tucker

This is really one big con but if you present it at the right time . . . who knows!! You'll require a Lexicon deck or any other alphabetic deck. Set the following cards from the top down A-C-E-S-Rest of deck.

Introduce the deck and explain that you'd like to show them a great new card trick that you learned recently . . . Perform any false shuffles and cuts that retain the top stock in place and don't show any of the card faces!

Table the deck at the left edge of your close up mat, from your view point and request that the spectator cut off about 3/4 of the cards and place them next to the original bottom portion. You, of course, would simply point to a spot to the right of the deck and ask the spectator to place his cut off portion there.

Congratulate him on his accuracy and further request that he now cut about 2/3 off that portion and place the result to the right of the other two portions.

Finally he is requested to cut off 1/2 of this third packet and place the resultant cards to the right of the third packet.

This age old procedure has resulted in four approximately equal 1/4 deck packets in a face down row on your mat. The original top section, with your set up, should be the one on your right.

Ask the spectator if he would be amazed if he had somehow managed to cut straight to the Aces. He will of course reply to the affirmative.

Pick up the packet with the set up on top and push the top card over the edge of the packet slightly to your left. You are holding this packet in your right hand. With your left hand lift off the top card from each of the other three packets and one by one, insert them beneath the top card of the packet in your right hand.

The result should be a fan of four cards atop the right hand packet, the uppermost card being the original top card of your set up.

Square up these four cards atop the right hand packet but maintain a little finger break beneath the four cards. Immediately lift off the top card, flip it face up and replace it. This shows the letter 'A' and for the first time, they realise that you are not using a regular deck of cards. Once the letter 'A' card is face up atop the packet in your right hand, lift off all four cards above the break and deposit them as a single face up card atop the tabled packet to your right.

MASON, 39 DENNIS PARK CRESCENT, WIMBLEDON, LONDON SW20 B

Return your empty left hand to the packet in your right hand and flip the next card face up to reveal a letter 'C' card. Lift this card off the packet and place it face up atop the packet to the left of the 'A' packet.

Repeat this with the next card on the right hand packet, placing it face up on the packet to the left of the 'C' packet. This third card is a letter 'E' card.

Finally flip the new top card face up to reveal a letter 'S' card. Leave this face up atop the right hand packet and place the entire packet to the left of the 'E' packet.

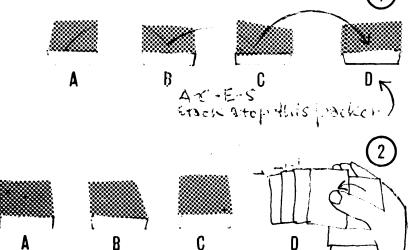

From the spectator's view point . . . From his left to his right, the four letter cards spell the word . . . ACES!!

Somehow, he really did cut to the Aces! Notes... The cards should be placed atop the tabled packets so that, from your point of view, they are upside down.

If you have a regular deck of cards whose back design matches that of your Lexicon deck, you can perform a few regular card effects, switch in the Lexicon deck and perform the above. The actual handling of the routine has been stolen from Marlo and was published in Racherbaumer's lecture notes.

Any of the handlings for 'September cuts the Aces' can be used but I prefer the one detailed.

Illustrations 1, 2 and 3 depict the cutting procedure.

LOST FUMBULATORS M. B. Grierson

A few weeks ago I was cleaning out the vaults below Pabular Buildings and I stumbled upon a letter addressed to past editor Fred Robinson.

It contained four or five stunts, not tricks that, to put it politely . . . are a bit near the knuckle. I can see why Fred decided not to publish them but times change and I think that you lot are ready for them now. I'll only be describing two of the stunts here as the other three are physically impossible!

The first is an ideal stunt to pull at your next stag night. I've been using it for years and it always gets a great response. The actual actions are quite within the bounds of the law but the spectators minds do the rest!

At some time during the evening, bring the conversation round to impersonations. Explain that you have made a study of the animal world and over the years have mastered a perfect impersonation of the rare, white eared elephant.

Offer to demonstrate it for them as you empty your trouser pockets.

Take a deep breath and reach into both trouser pockets at the same time. Pause for a second and then pull the linings completely out.

Without hesitation, unzip your fly and ... stop!!

Look up at the audience and say ... "Ohhh, you've seen it before!"

Make yourself decent again and enjoy the laughter that will ensue!

The second stunt makes use of an envelope as depicted in fig:1 A white envelope is preferable.

During the conversation ask your audience if they have heard about the Vicar in the village down the road.

Explain that you've heard that he's a bit of a ladies man and continue that . . . the other day he was paying a visit on one of his female parishioners but unfortunately she was out. The Vicar wanted to leave her a note but all he had was an envelope. He couldn't write anything on it as he didn't even have a pen with him.

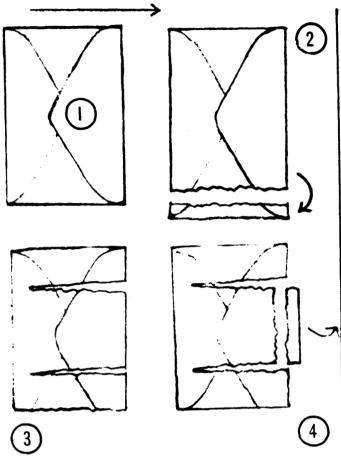

He sealed the envelope, tore off the upper edge.. (As in fig:2)... then made two tears in the enveloped like this... (See fig:3).. and finally tore a ay this piece. (See fig:4).

He then popped the torn envelope through the letter-box and left.

Several hours later, the housewife returned and found the envelope on the floor. She wondered who might have left it, then she opened it out and said . . . "Ahhh I see that the Vicar called!"

Ask the spectator to open out the envelope and just watch his face!

I won't tell you what he/she saw, I'll leave it to you to try out the stunt for yourself.

Obviously both of these stunts must be presented at the right time and to the right kind of audience. If you think these are raunchy, you should have seen the other three!!

... I MET A CARD THAT WASN'T THERE Stephen Tucker

This brief description is of an effect that I thought up a few weeks ago at the Marlborough Arms, the pub opposite the Magic Circle.

I discovered that I had two identical cards in my deck and when no one was looking, I sneaked one into my card case and placed it to one side on the table. I later forced the duplicate of the cased card on an unsuspecting and extremely inebriated conjuror. I handed him the deck and asked him to riffle it at the card case. Due to the draft caused by the riffle, the case jumped as if receiving the selected card. I asked another spectator to open the card case and remove the contents, needless to say he removed what appeared to be the selection.

I apologised for the fact that I had forgotten to have the card signed, purely an oversight on my part I assured them.

Everything seemed to have gone well, when suddenly the spectator holding the deck said ... "Hic, I bet there's another Queen of Clubs in here burp!!"

All the others explained that I was an expert at sleight of hand and wouldn't lower myself to the use of duplicates. It was all I could do to prevent them from lynching him there and then!

To cut a long story short . . . The spectator found the other Queen of Clubs in the deck and my reputation took another kick in the groin.

It was at that point that I had the idea that ... If I had opened the card case and removed the duplicate card from within, showed it and apparently replaced it in the case but really slipping against the outer wall of the case and closing the flap ... I could easily allow the pinned card to fall free and into my lap, once the heat was off me.

I could then point out that it would have been a really great trick if there wasn't another Queen of Clubs in the deck.

I would then have the spectator look through the cards and one of two things would happen ...1) He might spread past the duplicate card and not notice it, making the previous trick quite effective or ...2) He will most likely find the duplicate card and hold it aloft in triumph.

I would then simply state that the whole effect was an illusion and there never was a card in the card case at all. They would then open the card case and discover it empty. The overall effect would be quite weird and I'd be left with a straight deck with which to continue.

Notes... Instead of pretending to place the card in the card case and later lapping it. You could actually replace the card in the case, close it and later switch the case for an empty one as you toss it to the spectator.

You might like to try slipping the duplicate card between the sellophane wrapper and the card case but I don't think this would pass later examination?

A slit in the card case could also aid its escape?

If you have any ideas on the strange effect ... drop me a line!

THE MANEATERS Alf Goodwin

I would imagine that this routine has been at the bottom of the contribution box for quite some time. In fact, if I hadn't accidentally dropped the contents the other day, I doubt if you'd have ever seen it!

I have a feeling that it was sent in when Fred Robinson was editor.

I will type the description exactly as it is written here before me . . .

"Basically this is a means of finding two selected cards reversed between the four Queens, which were earlier shown and placed aside.

This can be, I find, coupled with an effect very recently shown to me by Pat Page called 'The Cannibals.' The effect being that the chosen missionaries are gobbled up by the Cannibal Kings."

Performance

The four Queens are removed and momentarily squared face up against the top of the face down deck. During this action, the top two face down cards are stolen beneath the Queen packet and the deck is tabled for the moment.

You are now about to interlace the two face down cards between the Queens... Hold the Queen packet in your right hand in the Biddle grip and obtain a thumb break above the lowermost face down card. You now appear to reverse the order of the Queens as they are passed, one at a time, to the other hand.

With your left thumb slide off the face Queen onto the left hand, then slide the next Queen on top of it but as you do so... allow the card beneath the thumb break to fall between them.

Continue by sliding off the next Queen on to the previous two? and finally place the last Queen, with the face down card still hidden beneath it, on top of the others. It appears that you have merely counted the Queens into your left hand but the actual order of the cards is . . . face up Queen, face down card, face up Queen, face up Queen, face down card, face up Queen.

Square the Queens and obtain a thumb break above the lower two cards as you pass the packet back into your right hand again and pick up the deck with your left hand. Explain that you will have two cards selected from the deck and as you say, "From the deck." you drop the two cards below the break onto the top of the deck, under the action of tapping the deck with the Queen packet.

You can now table the assumed Queen packet face down to your right and continue with the selection procedure . . .

Your opening patter should be along the lines of the Queens being maneaters... Turn the deck face up and undercut the bottom card to the top. This leaves the previously unloaded Queen face down beneath the face up deck.

You now perform the slip-around reverse as you turn the deck face down again. This leaves the Queen face down at the bottom of the face down deck.

Note . . . Any other procedure can be adopted to set the Queen in the required position.

Have two cards selected and control them to the bottom, below the Queen.

Half pass the two selections and as you table the deck, palm the lower three cards into your right hand so that the Queen is face down against the palm.

Palm the three cards onto the face down Queen packet and pick it up.

Flip the packet face up and explain that you will use the Queens to locate the selections. Wave the face up packet over the deck and finish by showing that the two selections have interlaced between the face up Queens . . .

Buckle count the 7 card packet as 6 and you will display a fan of four face up Queens with a face down card interlaced between the 1st and 2nd Queens and the 3rd and 4th Queens. The lower face down card is in fact two face down cards squared as one. During the Buckle count or to be more precise . . . Buckle spread, the face down cards should be up-jogged.

Strip out these face down cards and flip them face up onto the Queen packet. If you now spread the top two cards only, the two selections will be revealed and they will be assumed to be the ones that were separated in the Queen packet.

Ed... The above handling is Alf's original and I'm sure that it looks like a miracle in his hands but I am but a mortal being and decided to work out a simpler handling for my own use. Firstly I didn't like the idea of the central position in the Queen packet being vacant. I also didn't like the idea that you can't deal the two selections off the Queens, due to the other indifferent card beneath them. Add to this barrage of dislikes the fact that the presence of the extra indifferent card left the Queens unusable and the following handling was devised...

Arrange the Queens from the top down ... red, black, red, black. The underlined black Queen is face up in the face down packet.

Set up

These four cards can be at the face of the deck and removed as a unit. Table the deck face down for the moment and flip the Queen packet face up. Immediately perform an Elmsley count and four? Queens are displayed. Cut the face two cards to the bottom, flip the packet face down and table it.

Explain that you will only use three of the Queens for the following routine and so saying, remove the top face down card from the packet, place it atop the deck and perform any quick false shuffle that will make it appear that the card has been lost.

Spread the deck face down and have two cards removed and, if you wish, signed. Square up the deck and set the top card in the Marlo 'Tilt' position. Take back the first selection, flip it face up and explain that you'll bury it face up in the centre. Insert the card into the Tilt break, then repeat the action with the other selection.

Situation is... Top card is a face down Queen, followed by the two face up selections, followed by the rest of the face up deck.

Flex the deck, putting a downward crimp into the cards... The inner and outer narrow edges will be slightly higher than the centre of the cards, which will be slightly bowed.

This crimping of the cards allows you to perform a one hand top palm of the upper three cards as a single unit. This is not difficult, just try it!

Table the deck and immediately pick up the Queen packet, at the same time adding the palmed trio onto them.

Perform the Buckle spread and up-jog the two face down cards from between the three Queens.

Strip out the face down cards and flip them face up onto the face up Queens. You can now deal the two selections face up to the table and a Queen will show at the face of the packet.

This Queen is a different one than was on the face prior to the removal of the face down cards, it is even a different colour but these facts will not be noticed if you patter for a few seconds before dealing the selections off the packet.

The situation is . . . all four Queens are in your hand but the spectators assume that one is still in the deck.

Explain that the Queens somehow sucked the selections out of the deck and between them, they will now attempt to find their sister.

Wave them over the deck again and end by dealing the four Queens onto the table. You are now in a situation to perform further effects with the Queens and there are no extra indifferent cards to dispose of.

Eastbourne again, I thought as I drove into this small seaside town. You see, I had been working there only a matter of days before, the I.B.M. Convention from which I have just returned.

So what have I to say about Eastbourne? Well, the first thing that comes to mind is the winning act of the Shield Competition, Richard Kyall and Diana. Well performed, well presented, well rehearsed. I think it's the first time I have ever seen a five handed act in this competition. It can best be described as an Illusion Act, in that all of the effects were of the larger type.

It was a pity so many of them were of the standard variety. Not just the effects but the presentation of the first illusion looked almost like a carbon copy of a well known which is currently riding high. The act was head and shoulders above any other that evening. A lot of time trouble and money had been spent on it, but (?)

What else? Yes it was the debut of a new magic dealer, one Miss Debbie McGee. If the name sounds familiar, she is the young lady who assists Paul Daniels in his TV shows. On the dealers stand their roles were reversed. He appeared to be assisting her, off and on, throughout the day. Needless to say whenever Paul stood up to demonstrate their trick, a large crowd gathered immediately. Yes you read that correctly, their trick. Debbie appeared to be selling and demonstrating one effect only. A tea mug with the name of a card printed on the outside which actually changed. Paul had it nicely routined and no doubt they sold a lot of them. I wish I had been selling it.

As usual for me I didn't see anything that happened during the day, being strapped to my stand by my wife who spent the whole week gallivanting around Eastbourne spending it before I actuallyhad it. I hear that business for most of the dealers could have been better. I have no complaints, because, as dear old Percy Press used to say "Whatever you earn, it's better than sitting at home burning coal". He's right. I think. Or maybe I'm just a magic nut who never will be, doesn't want to be, and can't becured.

Apart from my own items, which, being Patrick Page originals, were received with complete indifference, I didn't see anything in the dealers hall which set the place alight. I hesitate to use the phrase 'same old items', because, as any performer knows, it's those same old items which seem to register strongest with the audience.. but once in a while a Ribbon Fountain or a Coin Thru Rubber Dam crops up which does create a certain amount of excitement.. In that respect this was one of the less exciting conventions. The competition for the Shield was of a good s standard, with no real stinkers as there often are. The Gala Show was good. I hear that the Mike Caveney lecture had an astounding variation on Corinda's Powers of Darkness. The best thing I heard was a short gag come effect for childrens shows from the Eric Sharpe book. I haven't seen the book yet, but if this one item is an example of the material, I will, when I can afford it. For the record, the name of of the book is 'Eric Sharp's Specialised Childrens Routines With Funny Patter And Situation Comedy Using Standard Props. You're right, I didn't believe it either. It's his second book and with titles like that you don't have to write many. But like I said it could be a worthwhile investment for anyone interested in that particular subject.

Vic Pinto had a display of magician's business cards which included a photograph of the performer and it looked real classy. Come to think of it, this was one of the best items in the Convention. I wonder just how many people realised that fact and took advantage of it. The overall cost includes taking the pictures, designing the layout and printing the cards. If you are interested give him a ring on 01-405-6048 and if you think that's a plug you are right. They're great. Ask Terri Rogers, Alan Alan, Joe Elman, Bobby Bernard, me or any of the other non magic acts who can see their possibilities for the working performer. (He'll send you samples).

Bob Little a dealer from the U.S of A. was there as usual, plus Magic Hands from Germany, Fantasio from Mexico, Timmerman from Holland, Dominic Dante from Italy, Banshee Magic from Eire, Mike Caveney from the U.S.A. There were upwards of forty dealers there and as you can see six of them were non British, which I think must be a record. Most of the old faces were there, and sadly, one of them, Alf Moore, has seen his last convention. He collapsed and died at the event.

I heard dealers complaining that there so many events taking place that they didn't have time to demonstrate and sell their wares. Someone said that the Dealers Demonstration should be cut out altogether on Thursday morning and some bright spark in the council suggested replacing it with another lecture, which surely defeats the object of the exercise. One of the council took a straw poll to find out their reactions but I couldn't find out what the result was. It would be interesting to know. As for me I'd hang on to the Dealers Dem. But then who am I? The last time I tried poking my nose into magical politics I had it cut off. Now I don't care what the hell they do. I'll go along with the cowd. If you have something worthwhile to sell you'll sell it. If you haven't you walk home.

January, 1985

Once more my Typewriter obliterates yet another page of introduction. This month's issue is devoted entirely to the ingenious contributions of Phil Goldstein alias Max Mayen.

I'm certain that not one of our readers will be muttering. . ." Who??"

I think that Max must be the most well known mentalist of our time. His contributions to the myriad magazines when added to the deluge of fine material in his manuscripts, would easily fill a telephone directory!

I have already had the pleasure of trying out the enclosed items on living flesh and can assure you that every one is a winner. My personal favourite must be 'TAG TEAM'. It is simple to perform, direct and easily followed by the viewer. Anyway, I'll leave you to sing their praises and I'll get on with telling you what's new.

Quite recently I've had some correspondence from Ian Land and indeed he's forwarded a review of the Card Puzzle book by John Racherbaumer.

Those who are fleet of mind will remember that this item has been previously reviewed a few issues back by Peter Brunning but I thought you might like to hear a second opinion. The review will foll my giberish. Ian also forwarded a copy of his latest and first project titled... 'Five Knuckle Shuffles.' This is the first of a series of, wait for it.... FREE manuscripts. Yes, all you have to do is send a stamped S.A.E. to the following address and Ian will forward you the manuscripts.

The address to write to is.... Ian Land, Alcuin College, York University, Heslington, York, England.

In the first issue of F.K.S. Ian details two versions of, what he calls, 'Diminishing Twists'. The idea being that you start with the Ace through 4 of a suit and, with the cards face down, you twist the packet, count through it and the Ace has flipped face up. The Ace is removed and tabled, then you repeat the experience with the other three values, after each flip-over the card is removed and tabled.

More details of F.K.S. next month.

A few days ago I received my copy of the new book. . . . 'The Best of Close-up' (by Britain's leading magicians.)

I am a little biased to give the book a review so here's a little background information. It costs £19.00 ($25.00) and contains 188 pages of type-set material from the following contributors. David Britland, Gordon Bruce, Roger Crosthwaite, Peter Duffie,

Shiv Duggal, Andrew Galloway, Mike Gancia, Steven Hamilton, Peter Kane, Ian Land, Mark Leveridge, Simon Lovell, Eric Mason, Chris Powers, Fred Robinson, Al Smith, Stephen Tucker and Dick Turpin. The book details 22 routines by the aforementioned and is illustrated throughout by the master pen pusher Eric Mason. I almost forgot to mention that it was written by Walt Lees and one wonders why his name does not appear in the list of contributors. A little bird told me that modesty prevented him from including any of his own material?

The book is produced by the Magico Magazine of New York and is hard bound and topped with a gloss dust-jacket.

I was a little dismayed not to find material from either Roy Walton or Alex Elmsley and quite a few others. It would seem to me that many of the best have been omitted and perhaps a second volume is in the making?

The standard of the effects is extremely high and I can't recommend 'The Best of Close-up Magic' highly enough. This is definitely the best buy of 1984!

THE CARD PUZZLE & OTHER DIVERSIONS by Jon Racherbaumer Available from Magic Books by Post, price £4.20).

This short manuscript contains material by Racherbaumer, Marlo, Solomon, Castillon, & Aronson. Some of it appeared in the M-U-M last year, and some is previously unpublished. Pick of the crop is Dave Solomon's 'Casolomon Olram Aces' - a version of Gene Castillon's version of Jon Racherbaumer's version (...) of the classic Ace Assembly. Solomon's routine uses the same gaffs as Castillon's (which appeared in the Last Hierophant) and is very strong indeed. Many performers (both so-called 'purists' and those who are just plain lazy) will be put off by the preparation required — the manufacture of three gaffed cards — but those who bother to make or steal the gaffs needed will have one of the most magical Assemblies extant (along with Solomon's version of 'Succession Aces' from The Lost Pages of the Kabbala). There are no fiddly shenanigans in the formation of the initial layout of the Aces, and the vanishes are impressively clean and direct. If you wish to find a routine that best expresses the Assembly concept, you will be hard-pressed to find an ungaffed method that does it better.

What else? — Lots of good material by the Marvelous Mister Marlo, including versions of the 'Card Puzzle' and 'Interlaced Transposition,' coin material by Castillon & Dan Garrett, and a Racherbaumer handling of Elmsley's 'Point of Departure' that uses Jokers with holes punched in their centres, allowing for a very visual vanish of the selected card. Altogether, this 25 page booklet contains 15 items and is excellent value for money. Racherbaumer is one of the few magic writers who knows how to put a sentence together, and one of the few who takes an interest in the minutiae of magic. His books and magazines are of consistently high standard, and the fact that he has access to some of Marlo's best material is a definite plus. The Card Puzzle is as stimulating as we have come to expect; it is highly recommended.

Ian Land.

The performer displays five pairs of cards. Each depicts a different famous team. One set features the comedy team of Laurel and Hardy; another shows the romantic team of Romeo and Juliet; a third pair has the fairytale team of Hansel and Gretel; another, the dance team of Astaire and Rogers. The final pair features the detective team, Holmes and Watson.

The detectives are placed aside. The other eight cards are shuffled, and while the performer's back is turned, one is removed from the packet by the spectator, who places the chosen card out of view. The Holmes and Watson cards are then set to work . . . and they successfully track down the mate card to the one retained by the spectator.

There are no gimmicks involved; merely the ten cards described above. For impromptu circumstances, these could be written out on business cards. For more formal situations, drawings would be preferable.

Begin by displaying the cards in pairs, discussing the "team" nature of the two-card sets. Explain that, of these five famous teams, it is the detective team that will have the most bearing on the demonstration about to be shown. Place the Holmes and Watson cards aside.

Gather up the four remaining pairs, in any order (but, keeping the paired cards together). This eight-card set is now shuffled, using an in-the-hands Milk Build: hold the packet in the right hand, as if for an Overhand Shuffle. The left hand milks off the top and bottom cards. The hands come together again, and the left hand again milks off the top and bottom cards, depositing this two-card stock on top of the first stripped-off couple. Again, milk off the top and bottom cards, finally tossing the final two cards on top of all. The resulting situation is that the mate of any given card will now be exactly four cards away.

You may wish to give the packet a further shuffle, in which case you can Overhand Shuffle by running off three cards, singly, and tossing the balance on top; then, running off five cards, singly, and tossing the rest on top. This does not alter the positional relationships, and this shuffling sequence can be repeated as many times as desired.

Hand the packet to a spectator. Turn your back. Instruct the spectator to give the face down stock as many complete cuts as desired. Then, the spectator is to remove the top card, putting that card in his/her pocket for safekeeping. Depending on your presentational inclinations, the spectator may be directed to note the selection, or to keep it unseen.

The mate of the selection is now fourth from the top of the remaining seven-card stock, though the spectators are unaware of this fact. Direct the spectator to take the Holmes and Watson cards, placing those cards face up on the top and bottom of the face down packet. Explain that the great detective and his companion have thus surrounded their suspects . . . and now they must close in on the proper one.

The spectator is instructed to give the packet an Under/Down Shuffle (i.e., the top card is transferred to the bottom; the next is dealt to the table; next to the bottom, and so on, until the stock is exhausted).

At the conclusion of this "random sorting procedure", the spectator is asked to spread out the nine-card packet. It will be seen that the face up Holmes and Watson cards are sandwiching a single face down card — which will prove to be the proper suspect, as it is the mate to the previously selected card.

Obviously, there are many other famous teams that can be used for this routine, from sports, music, politics, cartoons, theatre, and so forth. Depending on the audiences you are working for, you may wish to gear the choice of teams toward appropriate patter vehicles.

QUEENS & WATER Phil Goldstein

The following is a variant handling for Roy Walton's classic "Oil & Queens". The reader will note a relationship between this handling and my "Brackets", elsewhere in this issue. As in the Walton routine, nine cards are employed: three red spot cards, two black spot cards, and the four queens. Arrange these in order from the face: R,B,R,B,R,Q,Q,Q,Q.

- 1) State that you will perform with eight cards. Hold the packet face up, and Hamman Count to display eight cards, alternating in colour. The switch action of this count is done on the count of "5"; the last card taken is actually a squared pair. At the conclusion of this, the order of the cards will be, from the face: B,R,R,B,R,Q,Q,Q,Q.
- 2) Flip the packet face down, and say that you will deal the cards into two piles, thus separating the colours. Deal two piles, starting at your left. The final card dealt will be a squared pair. (Note that you can flash the faces on the final four deals.)
- 3) Make sure at this point that the spectators have followed, and understand the (presumed) situation. Pick up the right-hand packet. Say, "Obviously, if I reverse the procedure, the colours will become mixed once more." Here, you seem to do this. Remove the top card of the tabled packet, Flash its face (red), and table it face down at centre. Double Lift the top card(s) of the packet in your hands, to flash a black face. Drop this double face down onto the packet for a moment, as you reach over to adjust the red card which was moved to the centre. Now, apparently re-take the black card from atop the packet in your hands. You actually take a single card this time — a red. This is deposited face down onto the central card.
- 4) Again, remove the top card of the tabled packet, flashing its red face, and deal it face down onto the central group. Perform a Double Lift, from the stock in your hands. Flash the face of this squared pair (black), and deposit the pair on top of the central group. You have, seemingly, made an open, deliberate alternation with four cards.

- 5) Drop the remainder from your hand onto the remainder from the tabled pile. Pick up the central pile. There should be no doubt in the spectators' minds that you hold an alternating mix of red and black. Make a mystical gesture. Flip the packet face up, and perform a Jordan Count, displaying four reds.
- 6) Say, "If the reds are together over here, then what must be there on the table?" The spectator will naturally tell you, the blacks. Invite the spectator to turn over the tabled pile, for the surprise appearance of the queens.

STAND UP AND BE COUNTING Phil Goldstein

The following routine is somewhat unusual, in that it is a packet effect designed for a large audience. The development stems from a time last year, when Earl Nelson was performing in the Parlour at the Magic Castle. One of the routines he was using in that show was his variation on Jerry Sadowitz' version of the Vernon "Travellers" effect, "The More Things Change" (from "Alternative Card Magic", 1982).

The handling Earl devised was extremely good. However, the Parlour seats 56 people, and for that size audience I felt it to be somewhat awkward to use standard counting procedures, with the cards held horizontally. Thus, I set out to create an approach which looked more normal in that context. The handling I will describe here is one of several I worked out. In this write-up, I will apply the procedure to a simple transport transposition effect. If the reader cares to look up the Sadowitz reference given above, it will be quickly observed how my display procedure can be applied to that routine.

Eight cards are used: the four kings and the four aces. At the start of the routine, the aces are on top of the kings, with the red aces first and fourth, and the colours of the kings alternating. To make this write-up to follow, easier we will say that the specific order is, from the top: AD, AC, AS, AH, KS, KH, KC, KD.

The routine will be performed standing up. You should have a table, set to your right.

1) Start by holding the packet face down in the left hand. The right hand approaches the left, and the top card (AD) is thumbed off into the right hand, which raises that card to a vertical position to display it to the audience. The hands come together, and the next card (AC) is thumbed off in front of the right hand's card, and again raised to display. Continue with this mode of display, cleanly showing all eight cards as you comment that you will work with the aces and kings. As the cards are taken into the right hand, they do not need to be precisely squared. The final two cards (KC and KD) are down-jogged about half an inch.

- 2) The display completed, the eight-card packet is re-taken into the left hand, face down. The hands come together, and square the cards, keeping the lowermost pair in-jogged. During this squaring action, the top single card is also down-jogged, to line up with the lowermost pair.
- 3) The right hand now apparently removes the top portion of the packet, as you state that you will place the four aces aside. What actually happens here is that the right hand grasps the three in-jogged cards, as shown in figure one. The in-jogged stock is pivoted to the angled position shown in figure two, then pulled away from the left-hand stock, and placed face down on the table.

Two factors aid in this gambit. First, the packet is tilted slightly forward, so that the stock being removed appears to be coming directly off the top of the packet. Too, as the right-hand stock is tabled, the left hand raises its five-card packet to display the KH at the face of that stock. This cements the idea that you are retaining the kings. (Note that the face card of the stock has changed, from the KD to the KH, but as it is still a red suit that shows, this change will not be discerned.)

- 4) At this point, there will be a three-card packet face down on the table, in order from the top: AD, KC, KD. The five-card stock in your left hand is, from the top: AC, AS, AH, KS, KH. Lower the left hand, returning the packet to a horizontal position. The right hand removes the lowermost card of the left-hand stock (KH), and uses that card to gesture toward the tabled group as you explain that you will cause the tabled aces to transpose, one at a time, with the kings in your hand. Replace the card from your right hand on top of the left-hand stock.
- 5) Make a mystical gesture. State that the first transposition has taken place. The packet is now counted in a display fashion, similar in appearance to the initial display of step one. We will refer to this procedure as a Vertical Ghost Count: the packet is held face down in the left hand, rather deep in the thumb crotch (refer to figure three), clipped at the join of the thumb and forefinger. The remaining fingers of the left hand are not actually holding the packet. Thus, there is a gap between those fingers and the bottom of the packet.

On the count of "one", the right hand descends to the packet, and removes the top single card (KH). This card is raised to a vertical position for display. Now, the right hand returns to the left-hand stock, seemingly in order to take the next card in front of the first. In fact, as the hands come together, the left thumb does a Push-Off of the top three cards of its stock. The right-hand card goes beneath the packet, into the gap above the left fingers. That card is retained by the left fingers, and the right hand comes away with the three-card block that was pushed over by the left thumb. The right hand raises its stock to a vertical position, displaying the AH at the face of that stock, on the count of "two".

On the count of "three", the right hand returns to the left-hand stock, and the top card of the left-hand pair (KS) is taken beneath the right. Again, the right hand raises its cards to a vertical position to display the face card of its stock.

On the count of "four", the right hand stays raised. The left hand moves up to show its card vertically (KH), snapping that card to indicate its singularity. Now, both hands move down to bring their cards to a face down horizontal position, and the left-hand card is placed on top of the right-hand packet. The entire stock is again taken in the left hand.

This count is rather difficult to properly describe in print. There is a rhythm involved. Done correctly, it will seem to be a very fair sequence of actions, as if you are doing no more than thumbing the cards over, one at a time, from the left hand to the right. During this display you will have shown three kings and one ace. (The KH will be shown twice, but the duplication will not be realized, if your actions are fluid.)

At the conclusion of this count, the order of the packet is, from the top: KH, AC, AS, AH, KS.

6) Make a mystical gesture, and announce that the second transposition has taken place. The packet is now counted in a manner which has the same appearance as previous displays: the first card (KH) is taken by the right hand, raised and shown. The next card (AC) is taken beneath the right-hand card, raised and shown. The left hand does a Push-Off of the top two cards of its stock, and that pair is taken beneath the right-hand stock, raised and shown (AH). As before, the final card (KS) is raised by the left hand, and displayed. As the hands move back to horizontal display, the left-hand card is replaced on top of the right-hand packet.

You will have thus displayed two kings and two aces. The order of the cards at the conclusion of this phase is, from the top: KS, KH, AC, AS, AH.

7) Make a mystical gesture, to effect the third transposition. The packet is counted as follows: perform a Double Lift, so that the right hand takes away the top two cards, squared as one. This squared pair is raised to a vertical position, displaying the KH. The next card (AC) is taken beneath that pair, raised and shown. The next card (AS) is taken beneath the right-hand stock, raised and shown. The left hand raises the final card (AH), and displays it. The card is replaced on top of the right-hand stock.

You have now shown one king and three aces. The order of the packet is now, from the top: AH, KS, KH, AC, AS.

- 8) Make a mystical gesture, to complete the transposition. Now, perform the Vertical Ghost Count described in step five. The last card of this display (AH) goes to the bottom at the conclusion of the count. With this action, you will have displayed four aces. The ace of hearts will be seen twice, but again, a proper handling will allow this to pass, as the correct colour quantity (two red, two black) will be shown.
- At this point, the transposition is finished. It is possible, however, to show that the four kings are now contained in the tabled packet. The packet you hold reads, from the top: KS, KH, AC, AS, AH. Take that stock into the left hand, obtaining a break beneath the top two cards. The right hand contacts the packet, and palms off the two kings above your break. Now, the right hand goes to the table, picking up the tabled cards and loading the two palmed cards on top. At the same time, the left hand tosses its stock onto the table, face up. An ace will show at the face of that stock, as expected. In fact, it does not matter if the packet spreads a bit, as only aces will show. (Take care not to allow the cards to spread too much, or the fact that there are only three aces will be evident.)
- 10) Your are now holding a five-card packet: the four kings, with the AD at centre. These can be displayed as four kings only, using the counting action described in step six to hide the ace.
- 11) If you feel it absolutely necessary, at this point you can cut the packet to bring the AD to the top, then palm that away and add it to the tabled group in order to end with two complete and separate sets of cards. A far simpler solution is to conclude by pushing the packets together. By this merging, the evidence is destroyed.

Describing this approach to false counting has not been easy. However, if the reader will experiment with cards in hand, the idea should eventually define itself comfortably. Do realize that the routine just described is nowhere near as long as it seems in print. The sequence covered in steps five through eight can be applied to many other routines, allowing for performance before far larger groups than would be viable with standard counting actions.

GREETINGS Phil Goldstein

In Pabular V8 #3, Gay Ljungberg's "Christmas Cards" offers a routine in which an Elmsley Count is used to bring about an ungaffed close-up version of the old "Stung Again" plot. The idea has merit, and need not be restricted to the year-end holidays.

One very practical application would be for those performers working in restaurants, table-hopping. It is not infrequent in such a venue to come across a group celebrating a birthday. Therefore, why not perform the effect using cards bearing birthday cakes. When the final card is withdrawn from the napkin, it reads, "HAPPY BIRTHDAY"... and on the other side the message concludes, "TO YOU!"

This makes for an inexpensive give-away for the birthday subject. If the idea appeals, it might be worth having the cards printed up in quantity, with your name and address in small type on each card. In a normal evening at a restaurant, most performers would be able to give away several such cards to different parties. Surely one would be remembered, and subsequently contacted for private shows.

You can increase the number of uses for this idea by also having on hand cards for anniversaries, and a general "CONGRATULATIONS" message to cover any other sort of party.

For the presentation, refer to the article referenced above. I would add, however, that I think the initial false count used in that routine to show four backs is quite unnecessary. In this instance, it is actually to your advantages if the spectators assume you do not have four normal backs on the cards. Such an assumption only intensifies the surprise of the second message.

Peter Warlock's "A Matter Of Design", from the Willane "Methods For Miracles" series, is a superb effect. In that routine, the performer predicts which of several designs is freely chosen by a participant.

The method makes use of a predictive drawing made with permanent ink, modified with extra lines drawn with "It's A Pip" fluid. The mentalist is thus able to erase various parts of the prediction, to alter that picture so as to duplicate any of the shown designs.

The effect has been re-invented many times. Recently, versions have made use of commercially available erasable marking pens (for example, Velleda) in place of the pip fluid.

There is one small problem with the Warlock routine: in order to have any of the designs covered by the one prediction, it is necessary to make all of the designs somewhat similar. Here, I will describe a new presentational dressing which offers a logical reason as to why the designs are similar, thus turning a flaw into a presentational advantage. Too, the version about to be detailed alters the effect from a demonstration of the performer's precognitive abilities into a test of the spectator's intuitional skills.

The mentalist asks whether his spectators are familiar with a common puzzle, wherein a group of deliberately similar designs are shown. Two of them are identical; the challenge is to locate the matching pair, in as little time as possible.

The audience will, for the most part, be familiar with this type of puzzle. The performer goes on to discuss the nature of the game; that it is a test of visual observation skills, and that different players will take very different legnths of time in spotting the matching designs. He does on to explain that he has come up with a new approach to this type of puzzle — which depends not on one's powers of visual observation, but rather on intuitive abilities.

Ten squares of card stock are introduced. The performer explains that he has taken one of the puzzles under discussion, and cut it up into separate units. One square is placed aside, undisplayed. The performer states that this discarded piece bears one of the matching drawings. The other nine designs are shown, and a spectator invited to try his/her intuitive efforts toward guessing which of the remaining nine mates the one placed aside. Of course, the spectator is successful, bringing the routine to a happy conclusion.

You will need ten squares of card. The size is determined purely by your own desires. Obviously, the larger the audience you intend to be working for, the larger the squares should be. For informal close-up performing, they can be pocket-size.

The squares must be laminated with a material appropriate for use with erasable ink. (Stationery shops can supply adhesive-backed sheets of white laminate, perfect for this.)

The designs I use for this test are not the same as for the Warlock routine, although those will serve well. They are shown in the illustration. These designs are drawn onto the squares with a permanent ink pen. Now, on a tenth square, use the permanent market to draw the basic cross-and-circle design shown in figure B. Then, using an erasable marker, add the four lines indicated by the broken lines in figure C:

You will note that, with a maximum of two erasures, your tenth drawing can be made to match any of the nine options.

PAPER CHASE Phil Goldstein

This routine is a version of the classic Living & Dead Test, incorporating both precognitive and telepathic demonstrations.

You will require a Himber-style wallet. Into one side of this, place an index card, upon which you have written, "The dead name will be third in the row." In the other side of the wallet, another card is placed, with the message, "The dead name will be fourth in the row." A pencil, plus five pre-folded billets, complete the list of materials. Your only further preparation is to mark one of the folded billets. (A nail-nick is probably the simplest, most functional mode for this.)

At the start of the routine, the four un-marked billets are handed out to as many spectators. One is asked to write down the name of someone who has passed "into the spirit world"; the others write down living persons' names. Turn your back while the names are written onto the slips of paper. Once the writing

Bring the wallet into view, held in the right hand with the thumb on top, fingers below. The marked dummy billet is held beneath the wallet, with the right fingers.

Use the wallet as a tray, to collect the billets from the four spectators. Carry the collected papers to the table. The quartet of billets is seemingly dumped onto the table. In fact, press your right thumb onto the dead-name billet. As the right hand turns palm down, the three other billets are tossed to the table — along with the hidden dummy billet from beneath the wallet. (My thanks to T. A. Waters for suggesting this most appropriate method for switching out the target slip.)

A spectator is directed to mix the billets. While this is being done, the dead-name paper is secretly opened, under cover of the raised wallet, and the name read and remembered. Re-fold the billet. (Some performers may prefer to turn their backs while this mixing is being done, which of course affords yet more cover for this secret reading.)

Explain that, inside the wallet, you have a document; a prediction concerning the outcome of the spectator's mixing. The spectator is asked to arrange the slips, in any other, into a row on the table.

Note the location of the marked dummy billet. It will either be at one end of the row, or second from the end. Thus, depending on which end of the row you count from, the dummy billet, can be either third or fourth in line. Open the wallet to the appropriate side, and have the statement on the card within read aloud.

Say, "Let's see if I'm correct . . ." Pick up the first slip, and open it. Read the name out loud, and inquire as to whether it is the dead name or not. Continue with the remaining live-name billets. Your precognitive "hunch" is thus proven correct.

Pick up the final paper (the blank dummy, thought to be the dead name). Offer a further test. The still-folded slip is raised to your forehead, and in the course of that action, switched for the actual dead-name billet. Toss the dead-name paper to the table, and with proper histrionics, reveal the name.

This multi-phase packet routine takes as its starting point the Fulves "Black Out" plot, which is in turn a variant on the Marlo "Oil & Water" premise. I have published two related routines in the New Tops ("Broil", November 1983; "Broker", December 1983). This latest version employs gaffed cards, which allow for a rather strong climax. Of interest is the extent to which surfaces are able to be kept hidden during the first two phases of the routine.

Material such as this runs a certain risk: that of confusing the spectators. The reader is thus advised to present this routine clearly and deliberately, taking enough time to let the various pieces of information establish themselves prior to continuing. For related reasons, I suggest that you obtain the necessary cards before attempting to read the rest of this write-up.

You will require, from a blue-backed deck, three medium-value red spot cards, and three medium-value black spot cards. You will also need two red-backed blank-facers, one blue-backed blank-facer, and a red/blue double-backer.

At the start of the routine, the cards are in order from the top: black; black; black; double-backer (blue-side-up); red-backed blank-facer; red; red; red; blue-backed blank-facer; red-backed blank-facer.

- 1) Hold the ten-card packet face down. Obtain a left little finger break beneath the fifth card from the top. State that you will work with eight cards. Now, deal a pile of (apparently) four cards onto the table, face down. In fact, the fourth card dealt is actually a double (the two cards above the break, squared as one). In the same fashion, deal a second pile of (apparently) four to the right of the first pile, the final card being a squared pair. Eight blue backs will show during this dealing.
- 2) Pick up the first pile at left. Flip the cards face up. Perform a Jordan Count to display four blacks. (A note here: in this routine, the display actions will be Jordan Counts and Ascanio Spreads. To provide some consistancy of handling, I suggest that the Jordan Count be done from a Biddle Grip.) Flip the packet face down. Perform - an Ascanio Spread as you reiterate that the pile contains four black spot cards. Strip out the double card from the Ascanio Spread, replacing the stripped-out card(s) to the bottom of the packet. Table this pile, face down, well off to your right.

- 3) Pick up the other packet. Perform a face up Jordan Count to display four reds. Flip the cards face down. Ascanio Spread, stripping the double to the bottom. Retain this pile in your hands.
- 4) Explain that you will form a combined pile. Perform a Double Lift of the top two cards of the packet in your hand, flashing the face of the card(s) to display a red. Deal this squared pair to the table, in a central position. Remove the top card of the tabled packet, flashing its face (black) and placing it on top of the central card(s). Remove the top card of the packet in hand, flashing its face (red), and place it onto the central pile. Remove the top card of the tabled pile, flashing its face (black), and drop it on top of the central group.
- 5) Pick up the balance of the "black" packet on the table, and drop it on top of the remainder of the cards in your hand. This combined pile is placed off to the side.
- 6) Pick up the combined pile from the central position. Jordan Count the face down packet, as you say, "Black-red-black-red." Make a magic gesture . . . Flip the packet face up. Jordan Count, showing four reds.
- 7) Offer to repeat the effect. Flip the packet face down. Ascanio Spread as you remind the audience that you have the four reds in hand. Strip out the double from the spread, transferring it to the top. The packet is tabled.
- Pick up the other packet. You will again form a combined pile. This time, it is important that the packet in your left hand be held in a rather deep grip, for reasons which will be explained momentarily. To form the combined pile, this time start with the top card of the tabled packet. Do not flash the face of this card. Next, remove the top card of the packet in your hand, flashing its face (black) and dealing it onto the first central card. The top card of the tabled group is removed, unshown, and dealt onto the central pile. Now, the top card of the packet in hand is dealt onto the central pile. However, as the right hand takes this card, the left wrist turns inward, to conceal the red back which is now atop the left-hand packet. Here is the reason for holding the packet deep in the left hand: you don't want to expose that the face card of this packet is blank.
- 9) Having dealt this fourth card onto the combined pile, the right hand picks up the remainder of the tabled "red" pile, and deposits

- it on top of the remaining stock in the left hand (the left wrist turning forward as this is done, to bring the cards back to horizontal position). This set of cards is placed off to the side.
- 10) Pick up the central pile. Jordan Count, face down, saying, "Black-red-black-red." (In the interests of saving time, you can dispense with this count, if you wish, and simply proceed to the next step.)
- 11) Flip the packet face up. Jordan Count, to show four blacks.
- 12) At the conclusion of this count, obtain a break beneath the top two cards. Perform a Half-Pass, to secretly reverse the two cards below the break. Table the packet; a black spot card shows on top.
- 13) Pick up the other pile. Say, "If the blacks are there, what must be here?" The spectators will say, "red". Make another mystical gesture. Flip the packet face up, and Jordan Count showing four blank faces the red surfaces have disappeared.
- 14) At the conclusion of this count, hold the packet in your left hand. The right hand extracts the lowermost card of this packet, and gestures with it to display it cleanly (blue-backed blankfacer). At the same time, the left hand obtains a break beneath the top two cards of the packet. The right hand card is now inserted into this break, and a break is taken above this inserted card, held by the left little finger.
- 15) The right hand picks up the tabled "black" pile, grasping the packet with the right hand from above (Biddle Grip). Gesture with the right hand toward the left, saying, "If the red surfaces have vanished, where do you suppose they've gone?" As this gesture is made, the top two cards of the left hand stock (above the break) are stolen beneath the right hand group, via a "kissing" action. As a blank face still shows atop the left hand packet, nothing seems to have changed. The left hand turns palm down, and spreads its packet face down onto the table. Four blue backs will show, as expected.
- 16) Answer your own question, by flipping the packet in the hands face down. Jordan Count, displaying four red backs for the final kicker.

Well was George Orwell right? We have had 1984 and I don't feel any different. Apart from one or two isolated instances magic has not become automated. No one has invented a machine to do an invisible pass. I am convinced that audiences still prefer an assistant with big boobs to a magic table which moves around on command. I think that as a race magicians are pretty safe for a while yet. I see another magicienne is getting her slice of national publicity by trying to join the London Magic Circle. I wish luck but privately (?) hope she doesn't make it. If women are going to talk about equality I want a room at the Y.W.C.A.

Did you get your share during the December/ January rush? There seemed to be lot of work around. One thing was notable, I had more work for close-up magic than ever before and the money was better than average.

I was talking to a nameless friend of mine recently. He does a stand up act, but has been trying for years to build up some kind of connection for close-up magic at which he is probably better. Like me, he seemed to do a lot better this Christmas/New Year season doing close-up and he made a discovery.

He was working in restaurants, office parties, dinner-dances whatever, and as there was a festive spirit around the audiences tended to be a little noisier and perhaps more outgoing than usual. It follows that they will be a little less attentive than usual as well, which in turn meant that he had to curtail some of his routines. Over a period of weeks he has had to revise his whole outlook on the presentation of close-up magic and in his own words he discovered after a couple of weeks that he was presenting

A SERIES OF CLIMAXES

Read it again. A Series of Climaxes. Out went the beautiful Cups and Balls Routine, followed by Out of This World, the Coin Assembly etc. He didn't leave out the Cups and Balls, but all the prelims disappeared and he got to the punch as fast as possible. He thinks that this whole approach has improved his magic.

Interesting.

Change of subject. A thought. I have just started re-reading the Hofmann Trilogy, Modern magic, More Magic and Later Magic. The more I read it (and I am still just on Modern Magic) the more I am convinced that when it comes to straightforward out and out conjuring the Hofmann books have it all. There are many other books which I like. I love encyclopedia type books, Ropes, Silks, Coins etc. because they usually give you a variety of methods and incorporate some of the latest routines by well known performers, which is all food for thought, and that is all that it should be, Food for Thought. There are so few of us (US meaning that I am one of THEM) who try to bring something of ourselves to an existing effect or routine.

We have just had a series on TV which featured magic exclusively. It was good. It was very good. Each week thy closed the show with one classic illusion, using actors and actresses as the presenters. They did a great job but it was as if they had read the instructions, did their rehearsals, performed the effect, filmed or taped it, and showed it on TV. There no little extras, hidden or otherwise, to lift them above whatever level one judges these things by.

Let me try and explain the point I am trying to make. If Albert Goshman decided to include the Hippety Hop Rabbits in his act do you think he would do it exactly as we know it? Or would he try to improve or change the effect or presentation? If Dante the illusionist was still around, would he be doing Harbin's Zig Zag illusion just like everyone else? I doubt it. We can't all be Goshmans or Dantes or Cardinis, but we can at least try. Can't we?

Have you noticed the tendency on childrens' television shows recently for the presenters to scream and shout and encourage the studio audiences fo children to do exactly the same?

I don't like it. We all do routines where we encourage the children to yell out, but at least there is a sort of discipline to it. With the new breed of children's TV presenters it is almost a case of anything goes. Gunge is the magic word. The more mess they make and the more children involved in making the mess the better. Buckets of slosh, mud, spaghetti slime etc. are tossed aroud with abandon.

A clown friend of mine did a kid show over the festive period. He did his forty five minutes, came off, got changed and collected the bread, all of which took at least five minutes. On his way out he noticed another entertainer was on. The show was in a hotel ballroom. In the five minutes it had taken him to change the second entertainer was on and had succeeded in getting all three hundred of the kids out of their seats and gathered around him. It was chaos. The children on the fringe of the melee were mostly the smaller ones. Some of them were crying. Others were playing with toys. Some were standing around talking.

And what exactly was our entainer (?) doing? He was passing around paper plates, filling each one with a custard pie type mix from a barrel. He also had a young dolly bird assistant who was also surrounded, and she was painting the kids faces and passing around the paint for the kids to do likewise. Honest. This is a true story. Who was this entertainer? He was avery well known childrens' TV presenter.

And his fee? Six hundred pounds.

BETA WALLET by Eric Mason £75.00 plus postage

There have been many wallets on the market! Far too many in my opinion but there have been few that can be used to perform virtually every known kind of wallet trick. You need a Himber Wallet, you need a signed Card in Wallet you need a ... well you know what we mean!

Eric's Wallet consists of a Wallet with a zippered inner compartment. Inside the zippered inner compartment is another wallet. When this is opened it is seen to have a zippered inner compartment and inside this can be found the signed card. Yes, a wallet inside another wallet. Additionally the effect can be performed without palming and without any sleight of hand either. You can load into an envelope inside either wallet. You can load a palmed card into either wallet. You can switch item - a card or a note - with the wallet. In fact there is little that you can not perform with this wallet set. wallet is made to hold either bridge or poker cards and it is of a size such that it can be kept in a hip pocket. It is neither too large nor too small. It is made from the finest leather and is so intricate that you will wonder why it is not priced at £150.00 when you receive it. The instructions comprehensive that they took me 5 hours to type. illustratons are copious and elaborately and concisely explain every move. A number of ideas and routines are supplied with each set. The number of wallets are limited in supply and as they take months to manufacture do order now whilst we adequate stocks.

EDITORIAL

May 1985

Hi there again and welcome to yet another star studied issue of Pabular. So Why has it been so long since the last issue, I hear you ask.

Well, lot's of things have been happening recently. I've been uprooted yet again and am now living in Great Malvern in Worcestershire. Your letters can still reach me at the usual address on the back cover.

Nick Bolton, has also had his fair share of turmoil over the past few weeks and once again, we can only apologise, bear with us for a short time, until we get things running smoothly again.

The last issue saw the Phil Goldstein solo feast delivered as promised and this issue contains delicacies from such names as . . . Ian Land, John Carney, Jerry Sadowitz, Gay Ljungberg, Paul Hallas and of course your host on the ivory, typewriter, keys Stephen Tucker.

And as if the above weren't enough, I've just received a last minute offering from Barry Richardson of the USA. If nothing else, this issue could be deemed an International one.

So, what's been happening to good old Stevie? I hear you ask?

Well... I trecked half way across the world, 250 miles to be exact, up to the Harrogate Easter Parade hosted by the Northern Magic Circle. I decided to enter for the Close-up competition, only later realising that friend Janet Claire had also entered. To cut an extremely long story short... Janet snatched first prize with her fabulous Jet-Vanish act a la David Copperfield and I managed to hobble over the line just in time to receive the second prize of the John Pye trophy, a very unusual piece of modernart sculpture in wood.

I was extremely pleased to do as well as I had done, having seen many top flight close-up workers toppled by the undeniable skills and professionalism of Janet Claire. At the convention Janet also opened the Gala show with her stage act and virtually received a standing ovation for her splendid performance.

It was a fantastic four days made even better by the unbelievably good food served by the Hotel restaurant. I can heartily recommend the event to anyone.

I also managed to get up to the B.M.S. dinner/dance do in Birmingham a few months ago. Again the food was fantastic and the entertainment even more so. The two outstanding items of the evening, to my eyes, were the performances of both Philip Theodore and Wayne Dobson in the Cabaret spots. Nothing need be said of Wayne's performance, it's already been said in countless reviews by now . . . He was superb.

Philip Theodore on the other hand is a far less known name amongst the usual performers. His act, which reminded me much of Vito Lupo, was spellbinding and the Dove production at the finale had everyone blinking their eyes in disbelief. I predict in these hallowed pages that Philip Theodore will go far.

A few weeks back I received a letter from Aldo Colombini, Fabian, asking if I would be interested in a lecture tour of Italy. I replied telling him that I was frothing at the mouth at the though of such an expedition and quoted my usual, reasonable, fees. It's just a matter now of sitting it out and waiting for the thumbs up or down sign from over the water. I'll let you you know the result in a future issue.

Nothing much else happening to me at the moment. Malvern is a little cut off from the hot and running magic supply that I was used to in London.

Before I go let me tell you that I have an article and effect in the Ben Harris, soon to be released, magazine 'NEW DIRECTIONS' Keep your eyes peeled for it in the coming months. That's all for now folks. See you in the next issue.

EL DUCO'S SIMPLE IDEAS IN MAGIC No. 1

This is an excellent 38 page booklet. Staple bound between a high gloss card cover. Illustrated throughout by the author and containing 11 fabulous effects with many unusual items. You even receive the special cards required for the effect 'SWEDISH SANDWICH'. This small publication is highly recommended £5.00.

BEN HARRIS — ITEMS.... 'BEYOND THE BLACK HOLE'

This is a pleasant change from the usual barage of card and coin effects. Armed with four clear plastic bags, each containing a strange black circle, you proceed to entertain your victims. Cutting a long description short, one of the circles completely vanishes from its bag only to appear at a place of your choosing. On the back of a selected card maybe?

The instructions for this effect are second to none and the small manuscript is photographically illustrated throughout.

'PRIME HOLE CARD'

Again this is produced in the usual Ben Harris style 11 pages, 23 photographs make this torn and restored card routine very easy to perform.

This is a two part routine, which is computer justified and every detail you need is found within.

To be quiet honest, not having seen the routine performed, I can't see how the thing would fool anyone. I don't like the actual series of events but no doubt it will be another story when I see it demonstrated.

'NEEDLED'

This is a novel idea using the coin-fold. To be quite honest, I think this would have been better released in one of Ben's books as it doesn't really rate marketing. It's the kind of thing that you might brand 'OBVIOUS' but then again, you never thought of it, nor did I.

You receive everything that you need in order to perform 'NEEDLED' right away.

'PEN-NOTE-TRATION'

This is another cute idea, using a small plastic wallet and a currency note. The effect being that the note is penetrated by a pen, which is inserted through a hole in the wallet. The pen is then slid across the wallet and into another hole a few inches away. The pen is withdrawn and the wallet opened. Needless to say the note is completely unharmed!

Once again, everything is supplied.

Should you be interested in any of the 'Harris' effects, write for full lists and details to

POOR MANS CARD MANIPULATION John Carney USA

The above name will already be extremely well known to most close-up workers in this country. Let me just give you a brief intro taken from the Genii magazine and written by Faucett W. Ross.....

That time flies is an ancient saying but it applies most forcibly to those like myself of declining years.

Although my first meeting with John Carney must date back a dozen years, it now seems much less than that.

Well do I recall one lovely spring afternoon when there came a timid knock on my front door, and upon it being opened. I beheld a most personable youth who introduced himself as John Carney of Des Moines, Iowa. He further stated an intense interest in close-up magic and hoped eventually to join the ranks of the professionals.

So our first session started without further ceremony. He surprised me with his handling of cards and coins. However, I was able to make numerous suggestions from which he took notes.

This was our first session, but it was followed by many others over a period of several years. There was a remarkable thing involved in all this. Our sessions rarely lasted over three hours, and to make them possible, John had to drive over one hundred and fifty miles to my abode, which meant three hundred miles of driving to spend a mere three hours.

Since those days, John has made incredible progress in our noble art. Among other engagements, he presented close-up magic in the lounge of a leading hotel in Houston, Texas, for several years. Later, he was a featured performer at the ill-fated Magic Island Club in Newport Beach, California. He now performs frequently, with great success at the Magic Castle.

I most not omit that at the present time he is busy framing a new stand-up act which will involve a number of novel notions.

Genii readers have enthused over several recent contributions from the talented Mr. Carney and they have elicited praise from such notables as Dai Vernon and Charlie Miller.

John is still a young man (24) with many magic years ahead, and I have every confidence that he will take full advantage of them.

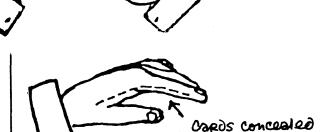

Whether you are an amateur or professional you will gain knowledge and inspiration from Mr. Carney's work. This young man has the happy ability and genius to impart it.

Three cards disappear very cleanly, then reappear in a fan.

Hold the deck from above with the right hand. The deck is face up and held with the fingers at one short end and the thumb at the middle of the other. You are about to execute a side steal (from the bottom) under the cover of passing the deck into the left hand.

As the deck is placed into the left hand, the left fingers naturally contact the bottom card of the pack and push it into the right palm. The left hand continues to the left, while the right hand (with its concealed card) drops naturally to your side. It is important to realize that this action is performed on the offbeat, before the audience has realised the trick has actually begun.

Call attention to the face card and prop it up with the left thumb in preparation for Arthur Findley's 'Tent Vanish'. In a nutshell, the palmed card is placed on top of the face card of the pack, and both cards are allowed to fall flush. Do not move the left thumb. The right hand imitates the action of carrying away the face card. Since an indifferent card shows on the pack, the audience will assume you have 'palmed' the face card (Figure 1)

The right hand continues to the right and assumes the position shown in figure 2. Make a rubbing motion with the fingers and thumb then show the card has disappeared.

Pick up the deck from above in the right hand making some plausible excuse for the transfer then transfer back into the left hand, stealing a card from the bottom as before.

Repeat the procedure for the second card, making it disappear. The vanish of the third card will not require a side steal simply obtain a break (without creating suspicion) below the three face cards of the pack.

Prop up the three cards as one as you approach the deck with the right hand. Palm all three cards and turn to the right, assuming the position shown in figure 2. Rub the fingers and thumb together as if making the card disappear. Due to the position of the hand, the cards remain hidden this is a classic position for producing a fan of cards. You have conditioned the audience to believe your hand will be empty. They see the hand apparently empty, and discontinue their attention on that hand to all appearances, you have vanished another card.

Riffle the deck sharply with the left thumb, three times, then produce the right hand's three cards in a fan. It will always be met with a startled reaction when neatly performed.

"It's another coachload of tourists back from the Tower."

QUATERNITY

The following routine was not inspired by any effect in particular, but was deivsed whilst experimenting with the Faro Shuffle. It is a quick 'magician's failure' type trick, vaguely reminiscent of 'The Perfect Stop Trick.' It fits into that category of card effects that Harry Lorayne invariably calls 'foolers.'

Procedure

- 1) Run through the necktied pack & quickly cull the four Fours to the top of the pack. The fourth Four should be face up. This set-up is easy to achieve during a performance. For the sake of this description, we will assume that the Fours are in C-H-S-D order from top to bottom, the 4D face up.
- Turn the pack face down & give it a few shuffles & cuts, retaining the top stock. Patter, 'I want you to select a card.' You will force the 4D using a version of the Henry Christ Force (cf. Kabbala Three (1976), pp. 32-35), as follows: Holding the pack in face down Mechanic's Grip, riffle down the left long edge of the pack with the left thumb, asking the spectator to say 'stop' at any point. (Obviously, you start the riffle below the face up 4D). When you are stopped, turn all the cards above the point of stoppage face up, placing them onto the face down lower portion. However, you must catch a left little finger break between the two halves. Now, spread through all the face up cards, pointing out that the spectator could have stopped you at any one of these card. Keep spreading until you reach the first face down card. This will be the 4D. Do not spread the 4D, as there are three face up Fours beneath it. Split the spread so that all the face up cards are in the right hand, & the squared lower portion is in the left hand.
- 3) Now, you want to show the spectator the face of his 'freely selected' card; however, if you simply push it across & ask him to take it, the face up Fours will be exposed. So, tilt the left hand backwards, so that the face of the left hand packet points towards the spectator, simultaneously pushing the 4D to the right with the left thumb. Ask the spectator to remember his card. Now, reverse the actions you have just performed, i.e., pull the 4D back flush with the left hand packet as you tilt the hand back downwards. This way, the spectator sees his card yet no reversed cards show.
- 4) Place the face up right hand portion, loosely squared, onto the cards in the left hand. Immediately pick up all the cards above your break from above with the right hand, & revolve this entire packet face down onto the lower packet, as if you were closing a book backwards. The 4D is apparently lost in the centre of the - pack; in fact, you have brought the set-up back to the top in exactly the same order as it was at the start.

- 5) Give the pack a quick false cut. Now, shuffle the cards by performing two Out Faro Shuffles. Note that these shuffles need not be perfect, & you do not have to worry about cutting at 26. For the first shuffle, the top four cards of each portion have to mesh perfectly; for the second shuffle, only the top eight cards of each portion must mesh, Do not cascade the cards flush after each shuffle, as this might expose the face up card: simply push the two portions flush.
- 6) Patter, 'I'm going to cut to your card.' Produce the top card of the pack (4C) in any spectacular way that does not disturb the remainder of the set-up. 'Is this your card?' The spectator will tell you that it isn't. Look momentarily crestfallen. 'Ah, but did you choose a Four?' The spectator will say that he did. Now, count four cards off of the top of the deck one at a time, reversing their order. Turn the fourth card counted face up to show the 4H. Ask, 'Did you choose this Four?' The spectator will say no. Place the face up 4H aside, along with the 4C.
- 7) Repeat the count, counting off four cards, turning the fourth face up. This time, the 4S shows. The spectator denies that it is his card. Patter, 'Well, at least we now know that you chose the 4D.' Place the 4S aside with the first two Fours.
- 8) Patter, 'Watch carefully.' Count (slowly) the top three cards onto the table, one at a time. The 4D appears face up in fourth position to end the effect. Place the 4D with the other three fours. You can now perform any trick using a four of a kind.

Ed.... There now follows another article/effects by Ian. Titled 'Five knuckle shuffles'. I'll let Ian explain exactly what F.K.S. is in his own words.

FIVE KNUCKLE SHUFFLES the final fix . . .

Number One - Release Date: 23/July/84

'Five knuckle shuffle' is a quaint Yorkshire expression for a certain unspeakable activity:

SPONDULICS PLUS MENTALISM Stephen Tucker

The following coin effect makes use of a locking Ten pence/Two pence coin. Obviously any similar coin ie. of different currency will suffice.

The initial credit for the actual effect should go to India's Subir Kumar Dhar (Probably spelt wrong!).

He published the original premise in a bygone issue of the Magigram.

End of credits, on with the show

Separate the two parts of your gimmick, we'll assume you're using the 10p/2p coin, and place them onto your right palm so that, if you wished to, you could assemble the coin again giving the impression that you only have the 10p coin.

On the other hand, if you wished to, you could show that you have two coins, a 10p and a 2p.

Either of these required displays will be shown upon opening the clenched right hand after the required banter.

Practise either opening the fist to show just the 10p or to show both coins present.

Now for the presentation and method combined

Your right fist is clenched and you explain to the victim that you are about to demonstrate an experiment in the power of imagination. Continue that you would like the spectator to IMAGINE that your clenched fist is in fact open and he can see three coins resting on your outstretched hand. These coins are a 50p. 10p and 2p. Point out that the hand is NOT open and neither does it contain the three coins just mentioned but you would like him to IMAGINE that it is so!

Explain that, in his imagination, he is to reach across and remove ANY of the three coins. Caution him that, for the sake of this experiment, the values of the coins should be ignored. He may IMAGINE that he has removed any one of the three coins named.

The outcome of this experiment depends on which coin he now states that he has removed. Ask him which coin he has removed then proceed down one of the following, easily memorable, avenues A) He states that he has the 10p Assemble the two parts of the locking coin and point out that you have already told him that the fist does NOT contain three coins open the fist to show that it only contains the coin that he named'

B) He states that he has removed the 50p do NOT assemble the two parts of the coin, simply open your hand and display that you are left with the 10p and 2p coins. Patter goes . . . "If you have removed the 50p. which coins should remain?" He answers and you open your hand to reveal that they do indeed remain! If you would like to end this eventuality on a cheeky note, you can allow him to keep the 50p as a souvenir of the experience.

C) He states that he has the 2p coin Ask him to now remove one of the two coins remaining and depending on his 2nd choice proceed as follows 1) His 2nd choice is the 10p coin. Open your hand to reveal that you have PREDICTED the two coins, the 10p and the 2p. 2) His 2nd choice is the 50p coin . . . nest the two parts of the locking coin and ask which of the three coins should remain. He will answer that the 10p should still be within the hand. Open the hand to reveal the 10p. Again, you may allow him to keep the imaginary 50p and 2p coins.

Although the avenues that you must take may at first appear complicated to remember. You will find that upon your first attempt common sense will LEAD you down the correct one everytime.

I have published another variation on this effect in the defunct Spell-Binder magazine. That method made use of a hollowed out dice and a number of small coins to fit inside. The presentation this time being that the spectator had to imagine that my fist contained a Poker chip, some coins and a dice.

I could either show the dice and the coins or nest the coins within the dice and just show the dice. Hope you can make sense of this brief description.

If you take the trouble to set your mind to the problem I'm certain that you too will be able to work out other variations using other items.

The use of the 10p/2p locking coin is almost ideal as in some of the above eventualities you are virtually clean and even when you are showing the 10p and 2p together They're just coins so why should anyone suspect anything?

Just for the record, as I'm sure you'll never track down the original Magigram version, Subir used normal coins, thrusting the effect into the impromptu as follows He used a 10p and a 1p coin and simply opened his hand to reveal the 10p only, 1p simply lying beneath it. OR showed both coins in the regular way.

Whichever method you care to use USE ONE!

LESS IS MORE Barrie Richardson USA

Each Spring I attempt to invent a card trick which will puzzle my two good friends Eric Mason and Fred Robinson. Generally the stunt makes use of an old idea but used in an unexpected way. The following trick did perplex my friends but not for long. After all, they are Master magicians!

For the reader who is interested in general principles in magic there is a good lesson Fewer moves or fewer steps are generally superior to more. Hence the title.

Effect and method . . .

From a shuffled deck obtain a break below the 21st card and riffle force the spectator to stop you at the break. Lift off the seemingly-random amount of cards and discard the rest of the deck. Hand them to the spectator for further shuffling, then ask him to fan the faces of the cards to himself and to think of a card. He then squares up the cards and hands them to you. You now deal the cards into three rows from left to right as if you were dealing out three hands of cards in a card game.

At the finish of this deal you should have three piles of cards before you, each containing 7 cards.

The principle upon which this effect hinges is that you are hoping that the spectator, during the 'thinking of a card phase' will have thought of one of the centre 7 cards. This is a fair assumption to make, as he will keep clear of the ends in the hope that you will be unable to discern which card he is looking at and its position in the spread. Once you have dealt out the 21 cards into the three rows. The original 7 centre cards will be dispersed thus . . . In the row that is to your left there will be two of these cards at positions 4 and 5 from the top.

In the centre row there will be three of the cards and they will be at positions 3, 4 and 5 from the top. Finally in the row to your right there will be two cards and they will be at positions 3 and 4 from the top.

Armed with this information you are ready to blow their brains out

Pick up the row at your left and fan the faces to the spectator asking him if his thought of card is there. If YES---you know that it must be either 4th or 5th down in the packet. Cut the packet bringing the two possible cards to the top, then false shuffle. Add this packet to the top of the centre packet, then to the top of the right packet. False shuffle again and the two possible cards are still on top of the assembled 21 card packet. You now ask the spectator to hold his hand out, palm up and you deal the top face down card onto it. Explain what has taken place and as you do so, allow the top card of the packet to be thumbed off and into your lap. All attention will be on the spectator with the single card at this point so don't worry about the lap.

One of two things will happen . . . 1) The card on his hand will be the one he thought of, which is a miracle.

.2) it won't be the thought of card but the though of card is no longer in the packet. If this is the case you act amazed and ask which card was thought of, then slowly deal the rest of the cards from the face down packet so that they fall face up onto his hand one at a time. His card has vanished and that too is a miracle!

If, out of the two possibilities, the first outcome becomes reality you must retrieve the lapped card and offer to repeat the effect. This too is easy as everyone assumes that the effect is now over and will relax their attention.

On this second performance you are hoping that the second outcome will happen as this gives you a different effect and makes for a nice short routine with a very strong and unexpected climax.

NOTE.... If the thought of card is in the centre packet, you immediately know that it must be either 3rd, 4th or 5th from the top. During the false shuffles etc. get the three cards to the top, deal the top card onto the spectators hand and thumb off the next TWO cards to your lap and proceed as previously described.

The procedure is the same should the thought of card be within the right hand pile. You know that it must be either 3rd or 4th and your proceed as already detailed.

The effect starts out as the standard 21 card trick and finishes completely different!

MURDER GAME Gay Ljungberg, Sweden

Mental magic is too often not thrilling enough, but what could be more thrilling than a murder? Here is the story:

You start talking about the latest book you read; a fantastic thriller about a murder on an English country estate. The poor butler had been killed, all the quests had both reason and opportunity to kill him. The local police had no idea who did it, and what was the weapon. That was the reason why they turned to a local psychic, who promised to solve the puzzle for them.

You then hand the book to a spectator to keep, as you are going to show how the psychic did. You invite a lady from the audience to play the part of the psychic. You open your bag and bring out six deadly weapons E.G. a knife, a rope, a metal bar, poison, a pistol and a hammer, telling how to use them when you want to kill someone. You have to really work hard on the story-telling, as this is 99% of this effect. Your assistant chooses one of the weapons (method see below) and you continue. You show six or more visiting cards, reading the names out loud and telling a little story about everyone; who they are, what were their reasons to kill the butler etc. Remember you are telling a murder story, not just performing a magic trick! Your assistant now selects a visiting card and you and the audience know 1) Who is the murderer and 2) What was the murder weapon!

You ask the spectator who holds the book, to open it at the last page and read the last sentences of the book. I don't have to tell you that what he reads matches the selections made by your assistant!

Props....

You need a detective story, not wellknown, and with a rather general title. You then write the clue to the murder on the last page of the book, after the last sentence that was printed. E.G.: "... and after a long investigation the local police finally concluded that Lord I.M. Broke strangled the poor butler with a rope." Write it clearly so it can be read! You also need the six weapons. I try to put some comedy in here; I have a large fork which I hold over my head saying "... or a knife!" and then I look at the fork: "Sorry, a FORK!". I also have a Bang Gun which I refer to as a pistol with a silencer, I then pull the trigger and let the banner fall out. Try to use your imagination to find some unusual weapons to get a giggle or laugh here. You also need six or more visiting cards. I have typed mine on card and cut them out to visiting card size. You could also use Letraset. Try to put some comedy in here by using funny (silly) names E.G. Bishop C. Above, Lord I. M. Broke, Lady B. Good etc. You can make all the visiting cards the same size, if you are a good double lifter. I am not, so I have made the visiting card of the murderer 1mm longer than the rest.

Method

You start by handing the book to a spectator. You then proceed with the weapons. You have one force weapon; E.G. the rope. You place the weapons in two piles and ask your volunteer assistant to choose one of the piles. If she chooses the one with the rope, you dispose of the other one. If she chooses the other one you just put it away, leaving you with three weapons, including the rope. You then ask your assistant to select one of the weapons. If she selects the rope you stop there. If she selects something else, you ask her to appoint someone in the audience to assistant psychic. The spectator now can select one of the two items. If he selects the rope you stop. If he selects the other weapon, you put it away and let your assistant hold the remaining weapon over her head to show everyone that she had selected the rope! This is commonly known as magicians choice. Their are many variations, please use your favourite fashion!

Now to the murderer: You show your assistant all the visiting cards, telling a little story about everyone. Put them down on the table, face down, mix them, but keep track of the force card, E.G. Bishop C. Above. Ask your assistant to put her finger on the back on any of the cards and leave it there. Collect all the cards, face down and make sure that you get the force card on top. You finally pick up her selection (which usually is another card) and put it on top of the force card as you patter along. You then perform a double lift (which is easy if you have a 1mm longer force card!) turn the rest of the packet face up and place the two lifted cards face up on top of the pack. You then ask your assistant to read the name of her selected card (Bishop C. Above) and show her that all the other cards were different. At this point you are clean, so you can leave the cards in her hands as you go along.

You state that your psychic assistant has randomly selected one weapon (The Rope) and one murderer (Bishop C. Above). You then ask the spectator to open the book on the last page of the last chapter (that is the place I always start to read thrillers!). When he has found the page you state very clearly; "Would you now please be so kind and read out loud THE LAST SENTENCE, THAT WAS WRITTEN IN THIS BOOK!" And I can promise you that he will!

however, it seemed in some way apt for this, a series of single-effect manuscript sheets (to be released at erratic intervals) on the subject of card magic. All the effects will be the work of Ian Land. There is no copyright on this publication, & it may be reproduced by anyone in any form whatsoever; indeed, I hope you will distribute copies of this sheet to anybody you think might be interested. The technical — as opposed to the performative - side of card magic has become a Spectacle (in the Situationist sense): magic has become a commodity consumed by passive individuals who do not realise how, & to what extent, they are being exploited. Books are sold at ludicrously inflated prices; in the main, they contain ludicrously poor material. It's time that magicians stopped consuming & became creators. Some books are 'important', in their own way, & these are the books that should be read. However, the vast majority (FKS perhaps included - I leave that up to you) are immediately forgettable. We could all do without them. Important books break new ground; the rest are written either by amateurs over-sure of their own worth, or are simply produced for profit. By producing FKS in a crude way, I am able to make it almost a free sheet. This is the way magic should be: not a business, but an enthusiasts' circle.

FKS number one is dedicated to a plot that could be dubbed 'diminishing twists': The magician removes the A-4C from a pack. One at a time the cards turn face up (FU), in sequential order. As each card reverses, it is removed from the packet, which thus gets progressively smaller. Additionally, there is a surprise ending. When I came across the idea, I thought it was original with me, but Bob Walker informed me that it has been around for a while. He has some versions from a 1976 ms. called Turnstiles. I will give 2 methods more & 2 more in FKS 2. The descriptions will be very brief.

1) ONE BY ONE 6th August 1983

(1) Quickly run through the pack & cut the AC to the top. Have a card peeked & hold a break beneath it. Perform the following Marlo running cut sequence: Cut off about half the cards above the break & dump them on the pad, cut off all the cards above the break & deposit them on the tabled portion, cut off half the cards remaining in the LH & drop this portion onto the tabled cards, & place the remaining cards on top of all. This positions the selection above the AC./(2) Run through the necktied pack, throwing out the A-4C into a FD heap on the pad & culling the selection to the top of the pack. Turn the pack FD & hold it in LH Mechanic's Grip (MG). Pick up the Clubs with the RH & flip them FU onto the pack./(3) Using the pack as a

'table,' arrange the Clubs into 2-4-3-A order from face to back. As you are doing this, gain a left little finger break beneath the selection. Square the Clubs with the top of the pack & lift them off from above in RH KB Grip, stealing the 'broken' card beneath them. Table the pack:/(4) Peel the Clubs 1 at a time into the LH, reversing their order. The last card is a 'double.' Turn the packet FD & cut the top card to the bottom as you say, 'The order doesn't matter such.' Quadruple Turnover as you patter, 'I could turn a card FU this way - but that wouldn't be very magical.' Thumb off the FU card (AC) into the RH & snap its upper left corner with the left thumb as you speak. Flip the AC FD onto the packet./(5) Elmsley Count (EC) to show 4 FD cards. Perform the Through-the-Fist Move to turn the packet over (hereafter this will be referred to as the TTFM). EC, retaining the last card of the count in your RH (all counts use MG handling). The AC appears FU. Thumb off the AC onto the pad, & replace the RH card on top of the packet. Patter, 'Three cards left.' As you say this, perform the following Victor-type count (using MG technique): pull off the top card into the LH. As you come back to take the second card, the LH card goes under those held in the RH. Immediately block push-off the top 3 cards with the right thumb & take them into the LH, retaining the first card counted in the RH. This is the action of the Jordan/Flexible Count. On the count of 'three' take the RH card on top of all. In future I will call this the Victor Count or VC for short. (cf. Victor's 'E-Y-E.') The cards remain in exactly the same order as they were before the count./(6). Perform the Through-the-Fist Flourish, not turning the packet over (hereafter referred to as the TTFF). Now do a push-off count to show the 2C FU, viz: pull the top card into the LH, double push-off with the right thumb & take this double on top of the LH card, & place the FU 2C on top of all. Thumb off the 2C onto the AC, forming a tabled 2-card spread./(7) Patter, 'Just the three & 4C left.' As you say this, single buckle/pull-down, & transfer the top 'double' to the bottom, showing two backs. TTFM, & transfer the top single card to the bottom, showing the 3C FU. Single buckle. Lift off the top two cards as one from above with the RH, & place it/them onto the right end of the A-2 spread, leaving you with a single card in the LH (apparent 4C). Take care that the double does not split./(8) Patter, 'The 4C doesn't turn FU - it does a trick of its own. -What was your card?' Rapidly TTFF the card a number of times in quick succession, finally performing the TTFM to make the card emerge FU from your fist, showing as the selection. Toss it onto the pad to end.

2) ONE BY ONE (ANOTHER ONE) 17th June 1984

I sent Bob Walker the above routine some time ago, & he sent back his Turnstiles versions, some of which use the pack as a 'dump' so that one isn't left with a double card on the table at the end of the trick. I then came up with the following.

(1) (1) Perform steps 1-2 of the original. With the RH, flip the Clubs FU onto the pack & arrange them in 4-2-A-3 order from face to back. Lift them off from above with the RH, stealing the selection beneath them. Table the pack FD to the left./(2) Peel the Clubs one at a time into the LH, reversing their order & gaining a left little finger break above the 2C. The last card is a 'double.' Turn the packet FD, performing the Mechanical Reverse at the break (cf., for instance, Dingle's Complete Works or Ken Krenzel's Card Classics./(3) TTFF & EC. The AC is FU. Injog the last card of the count & extract the AC via the Christ Annemann Alignment Move (AM). The AC is pivoted out & placed FU on top of the packet. Immediately lift off the top 2 cards as 1 from above with the RH (via a facilitating left little finger break below the top card of the packet), & deposit it/them FU on top of the FD break./(4) 3-as-3 Opec Count (cf. Marlo's Magazine Vol. 3, or Tribute to Ed Marlo) to show 3 FD cards. TTFM & VC to show the 2C FU. Pull back the top card with the RH & extract the 2C via the AM. Deposit it FU onto the pack. (5) TTFM & reverse count to show the 3C FU. Place the 3C FU onto the pack./(6) End as in step 8 of the original.

The next issue of FKS will contain 2 more versions: one using just a 4-card packet, & a colour-change version, Feel free to write & comment. Contact: IAN LAND/ALCUIN COLLEGE/YORK UNIVERSITY/HESLINGTON/YORK/ENGLAND.

SLOW MOTION PENETRATION El Duco (Sweden)

From his book Simple Ideas.

Effect

A playing card and a big die are displayed. The die is placed on the table. The card is then placed upright in front of the die, supported by it.

You show your hands empty, take a glass (also empty) and put it under the table top with your right hand. With your left hand forefinger you now slowly press down the card. Step by step it comes closer to the table top and finally when it lies flat on the table you hear a loud clinking sound from the glass. The die has penetrated the table top! Pour out the die from the glass and hand both out for examination.

Material

Two playing cards, a sewing needle, a big die (at least 1 inch square) and a glass are what you need for this miracle.

Preparation

Fix the needle to the long edge of a card with a piece of cellotape. Have the needle project about 3mm. Glue the two cards together with the needle inside. See FIG. 1 for this preparation. When you perform this trick you should use a close-up pad with rubber back.

Performance

Show the card and die. Hide the needle with your fingers. Place the die on the table with your right hand and then the card in front of it.

It should look as if you leaned the card against the die. Actually you press the needle into the pad and at the same time you finger palm the die in your right hand. See FIG. 2.

Lean backwards and drop the die in your lap when your hands reach the edge of the table.

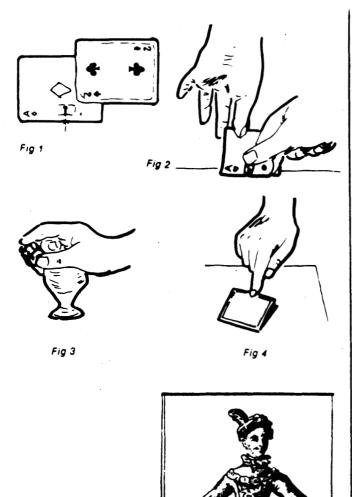

Pretend to adjust the card by leaning forward again touching the card with your fingers. This is just misdirection but most important. The audience will and must think the die is behind the card.

Show your hands empty. Take the glass in your right hand. Under the table you adjust your grip round the glass to be able to grasp the die with the same hand. See FIG. 3.

With your left hand forefinger you slowly press down on the card which step by step goes down until it lies flat on the table. See FIG. 4.

At this moment you drop the die into the glass. This creates the illusion of the die penetrating the table top. Show the glass and roll out the die on the table. You have performed a fantastic penetration in slow motion!

MEXICAN SPECTATOR CHANGE (A new twist on an oldie!)

Effect

Two cards on the table change places. The actual effect is not new, and neither is the modus operandi, but if you try it this way it's guaranteed to knock the lay person helping you for a six.

Set Up

You need a duplicate of one of the cards in the pack, say, the seven of diamonds. Place a black card between the two seven of diamonds and place the three cards on top of the pack.

Working

Shuffle the pack retaining the top three cards in position. Tell the spectator that any card will do for this particular experiment and double lift to show the black card. Put it back on top of the pack, explain that this will be his card, and then place the top card face down in front of him (the seven of diamonds) telling him not to touch it yet. Say you are going to choose a card at random yourself and false cut the pack. Double lift to show the seven of diamonds. Place it back on the pack. Say the seven of diamonds will be your card and you will place that on the table also. Deal the top card (the black one) face down onto the table in front of you. Now you take the top card of the pack yourself and hand the next one to the spectator telling him that these two cards are unimportant, it doesn't matter what they are, and you are going to demonstrate what you want him to do with it in a moment. (No suggestions please!) The pack is placed to one side.

You explain that in a moment you want him to use the card in his hand to flip over the card in front of him. You do it with your card as a demonstration, but what you actually do is the "Mexican Turnover" so that the card face up in front of you is the seven of diamonds that was previously in your hand. Flip the seven of diamonds face down, look the spectator in the eye and ask if he thinks he has got the idea. The reason for this, you explain, is so that the moment the magic occurs the cards are untouched by human hands! Say this time you will do it together on the count of three. As you both turn the cards over, you do the "Mexican Turnover" again. He finds in front of him the card that was in front of you a few seconds previously, and his card in front of you. The face down card in my hand I casually place on the top of the pack and then with the same hand I first point to the black card enquiring if it is the spectators, and then retrieve his turnover card and place it on top of the pack.

The cards could be signed, it would just mean already having your signature on the top seven of diamonds, and then during the trick signing the other seven across the face in the same position. When you double lift to show the black card you would rest it on the pack for the spectator to sign.

PAUL HALLAS

Originality? Yes I know I have discussed this before, but it does seem to have raised its ugly head again recently. My spies tell me there has been quite a bit of correspondence, if that's the right word for it, and I am not too sure about that, in more than one magazine.

I say ugly head, because while there is nothing actually ugly about originality, there is if you are using someone else's. The reason I have brought this subject is that someone, somewhere, has been writing about someone else, somewhere else, using someone else's material.

The Page boy speakş....

O.K. Before we start throwing stones, let me plead guilty. Many times over I have used other peoples' material, and as we are on the subject of confessions now, I'll admit to something else. If I am performing with several other acts on a variety type bill I will do my act as known. The usual tricks effects and gags I always do. But, if I am booked at a function where I am the only act and I have more time than normal. . I'll do anybody's act just to fill in time.

Let me expand on that a little. I still use my regular material, plus a few other items I always carry in my bag, but if I have to, then I am not averse to using someone else's card trick or gag. It is somewhat akin to the professional foul in football. If an opposing player is in a scoring position, the theory is that the defender simply has to stop him, any way he can. If I have to perform for a certain length of time, then I will, whatever or whichever way I can.

Now if we all go back to our early days when we first started performing, I am sure that most of us used material which we had seen other magicians perform. A lot of it would be standard material like the C & R rope, Evap. Milk Jug, Sliding Die Box etc., but I am sure that more than occasionally we used material, because of our ignorance, was in fact the rightful property of the person we had seen perform it, and not, as we had assumed, standard.

So what happens now? I'll tell you and you are going to hate me for this. If we see a young performer who is not very good. No I'll rephrase that When we see a young performer who may not be very good and he is using other peoples material, or material which is associated with another more established performer, we don't give it much thought. It is only when we see a young performer who is good and may be using such material that we start screaming.

I remember, many years ago, seeing a young magician called Johnny Hart. He was natural, he looked good, he dressed well. I have no idea who taught him, but he didn't really need teaching. All he required was experience. He was only seventeen years old at the time, and I can remember the impact he had on me. Sensational was the only word for it. The powers that be must have thought the same, because within a very short space of time he was hitting the really high spots. You name it he did it. T.V., the London Palladium, the Savoy Hotel etc.

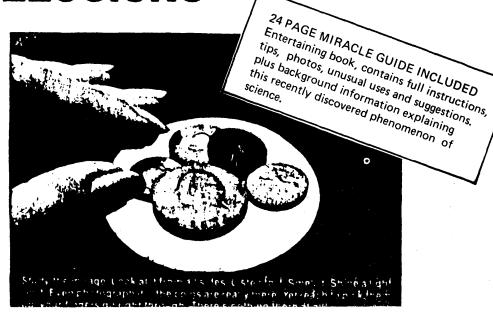

What happened then? All the magicians started complaining that he was using bits of Channing Pollock's act, Jack Kodell's act, Cardini's act. It was probably true, but at seventeen what do you expect. You did the same yourself. I know I did. The difference between Johnny Hart and the rest of us was that at seventeen years of age he was a GREAT PERFORMER, and that got up a lot of peoples' noses

To get back to present times, it appears that history is repeating itself. We have another natural performer of a fairly tender age beginning to make good and the critics are at it again. He's stealing other peoples' material, they say. Well it may be true. I don't know. What I can say is that the few times I have seen this performer he has certainly used material we have seen before, but I'm not quite sure whose material it is, because I have seen so many people use it over the years.

Are the critics screaming again because someone is gettig successful. Someone who is both young AND good? I agree that it is desirable that every performer should be as different as possible from all other performers but that really is wishful thinking. All of us had to start somewhere. If the particular performer I have in mind has suddenly got lucky, good luck to him. I wish it had been me. Having said that, I hope that in years to come he will find his own feet, his own style, and confound the critics, who will by then be telling everyone just how good he is

A scientific phenomenon lets you create mirages —on your desk or right in your hands!

Experiment! You'll find the amazed amused reactions growing with each 3-D mirage you devise.
What you see in the mirrored circle isn't really there at all!
It's a MIRAGE. So true to life, so alive, with depth most people refuse to believe it when they can't touch what they see before them!
Spring one on curious unsuspecting eyes. Even your closest friends will be unprepared for the elusiveness of these mysterious 3-D illusions. People will practically grab the device away from you for a closer look.

Scientists call the mirages "three dimensional real images". Literally contradicting a lifetime's experiences they defy - and yet demand - explanation. Never has the line between sensory perception and reality been exposed with such startling clarity.

The effect is not holographic. Indeed each fun-to-make vision surpasses holography in resolution. Make one appear anywhere, in any light, even candlelight! There are no moving parts, no batteries, cords, dials, knobs or switches. It's simple enough to fool anyone.

Optical Illusion

This is probably the nearest thing to real magic you will ever see in this Practical World. Imagine. An object -say a ring - is seen quite clearly to be resting on a plinth. The ring appears to be real and solid and may be closely inspected from every direction. YET when a spectator attempts to pick it up - HIS FINGERS PASS RIGHT THROUGH THE OBJECT!

Absolutely must be seen to be believed. No phoney set up or Peppers Ghost principles. Uses very cleverly disguised scientific principles. Works with any small object. No waxes, threads or lasers used.
